Thanks God that his wit and body serve him as they did when he was last with Wolsey, but he trusts he does not think he will ride about the country this winter season for the subsidy. His Chancellor has had to do not only with the subsidies, but also with the priests which the King has had of the clergy. They have always been assessed before Christmas, soon after levied, and paid before all others. His Chancellor can return to Wolsey to answer any complaint, but Fox hopes Wolsey will find him what he said in his last letter. Marwell, 1 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. : To, &c., my lord cardinal of York, legate and chancellor. Endd.

1 Dec.

Vil.B.18.187°

R. M.

3624. HIPPOLYTUS DA ESTE [ARCHBISHOP OF MILAN] TO HENRY VIII.

Desires credence for Hieronymus Ferrofinus. Ferrara, 1 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

1 Dec.

R. O.

3625. NORFOLK TO WOLSEY.

Since coming home, has had with him some of the most substantial men of Colchester, Ipswich, Hadleigh, Bergholt, Manyngtre, Harwich, Stratford, Dedham, Boxford, Wayland, and other smaller towns within eight or ten miles, and has told them that Wolsey offers them 200 out of 800 moyes of wheat, which the French king has licensed him to import from Pleadry, at the price at which his factors will buy it, if they will send agents thither to convey it to England. Notwithstanding the scarcity, they are loth to lay out money, and expect part of the provision made in France by Coe and others to be brought to them. The substantial people have provided for themselves, and would rather the poor should buy for themselves than lay out their money at a venture. They hear that wheat is a mark a quarter in France,—which, they think, would leave little profit. Has, however, persuaded them to speak again to their neighbours, and they doubt not to be able to make shift to pay by New Year's Day for the amount in the enclosed schedule. They wish to know the price per moye, and how much it contains. Colchester and Bergholt are in great necessity, and he thinks they will shift for the money.

Most of the commissioners for this part of the shire have been with him today, and have put everything in order according to the instructions. The privy search shall be made on the 9th, and the search for corn on the 11th. It cannot be done before, as many of the commissioners are in London. Stoke, 1 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. : To my lord Legate. Endd.

1 Dec.

R. O.

Rymer, xiv
233.3626. FRANCIS I.

Acquittance by Francis I. for the sum of 64,444 crowns of the sum to be paid by Hen. VIII. for his share of the war in Italy in Nov. and Dec., and delivered to the lord De Montmorency, with specification of the sums deducted. Paris, 1 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Fr. Vellum. Sealed. Endd.

1527.

2 Dec.

R. O.

3627. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

Since the receipt of the King's letter to him, Lautrec has shown himself more willing to set forward, but has not yet been able to follow his purpose. He is waiting for certain lanceknights, 5,000 or 6,000, as he says, though Jerningham thinks they are not more than 4,000, whom for greater speed he is causing to come by water. Lautrec has shown the King's letters openly among the Council, and in presence of the Cardinals here, much to the King's honor. We expect shortly to win over the marquis of Mantua to the league. Parma, 2 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

2 Dec.

S. B.

3628. HENRY EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Commission as warden general of the East and Middle Marches towards Scotland, with power to array all men between the ages of sixteen and sixty in such places as Sir Henry Percy and Henry late earl of Northumberland, grandfather of the present Earl, or any other warden of the said Marches, did.—Cites a similar but more ample commission by patent, 24 July 17 Hen. VIII., to Henry duke of Richmond, as warden general of the East, West and Middle Marches, with power of array extending to Cumb., Westmor., and Northumb. Del. Westm., 2 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 28.

2 Dec.

S. B.

3629. HENRY EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

To be bailiff of Tynedale, Northumb. Del. Westm., 2 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—S. B.

Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

R. O.

2. "Articles to know the King and my lord's Grace's pleasures in concerning the ordering of Northumberland."

1. What they shall do about English outlaws in Scotland if they come in and submit to the warden. 2. Whether the warden is to invade Scotland if the outlaws commit felonies in Northumberland and flee thither. 3. What is to be done with Tynedale and Ryddisdale men, who have committed robberies before the coming of the warden, if they will not submit, or with their pledges if they do. 4. Whether the warden shall punish offences committed before his coming. 5. How he shall order disputes between parties. 6. How he shall be paid his 1,000*l.* a year. 7. Concerning John Norton, Rob. Bowes, and others that should be of counsel with the said warden. 8. To know my Lord's pleasure if the warden may have his castle of Norham, as Sir Chr. Dacre had. 9. And touching the sheriffship of Northumberland, which the warden ought to have.

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O.

3. A remembrance to my lord of Northumberland.

1. The instructions are to be strictly executed by advice of counsel. 2. The proclamations to be made at once, where most necessary. 3. It is to be considered whether Sir Wm. Evers is meet for these borders, or will serve for a less fee than before, seeing that he, being late vice-warden and lieutenant of the Middle Marches, and officer of Tynedale and Riddisdale, and in receipt of the following fees, viz., 33*l.* as vice-warden, 65*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* as lieutenant, 40*l.* for Tynedale, and 40 marks for Riddisdale, and being besides sheriff of Northumberland, acknowledged that he was not able to rule the Middle Marches. 4. Sir Ralph Fenwick was long officer of Tynedale, with 40*l.* fee, and could not rule the country. Cannot see how he can do so with less. 5. The men who have not done well should be refused, and those who have been chosen, or else others likely to favor justice and repress theft, who will not "patosse" between true men and thieves, with making detestable and foul redress by maintenance and concealment. 6. Good rule will never be had till Tynesdale and Riddisdale be kept under such obedience that any inhabitant suspected of burning, murder or robbery may be brought in immediately to answer to the King's laws, without excusing himself by old customs or pretended privileges. 7. No enterprises should be made upon Tynesdale or Riddisdale, nor upon Sir Wm. Lisle and his accomplices, till word come from Leonard Musgrave what the earl of Angus will do, "when and where, &c.," that all things may be ready.

1527.

In Magnus's hand, p. 1. Endd.

R. O.

4. "These be the nay[m]es o[f] those gentylmen within Northumberland which ar not retolned in the King's service by] patent, with a declaration of what ability they are of to do the King service by e[st]imation], and of other their qualities."

Paper roll.

3630 H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thanks him for this augmentation of his "perseverant nobleness" towards the Earl. Desires credence for his old bedfellow. Lekyngfeld, the —* day of —*.

Idol, p. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal.

3631 [SIR W. EURE] to [WOLSEY]

R. O.

At my Lord's coming to Northumberland, it was resolved to lay a company at Felton "for avoyding the rancours of the utlaws from thens quych dayly runnynt thar afor my Lord's coumyng," and robbed travellers. I accordingly lay at Felton with forty men twenty-five days, "to the utlaws coun in and was at rest." Was then appointed my Lord's officer of Tynesdale, when all others refused to meddle with it, and has kept it in good rule to this time. Took Nich. Lisle, one of the principal outlaws, and brought him to my Lord; "and he is justifit acording to the kirkes lawys." Took Hob Dod alias Lousborn, who was killed in taking; also Percival Dod and Jo. Stokke, Tynesdale men, for "resetting" outlaws; also John Merwood, of Redysdalle; who were justified at the last assize at Newcastle. Took also Matthew Foster, now in prison at Newcastle, who killed his servant in taking.

In Eure's hand, p. 1. Kudd.: A bill mentioning the taking of certain outlaws in Tynesdale and other places of the Borders.

3 Dec.

3632 SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to [HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. ix.

1528.

R. M.

Mons. Lau[tree] informs him that today a messenger has arrived from the Pope, to tell him that his Holiness has bound himself to pay to the Emperor 102,000 cr. immediately, a like sum in three weeks, and 96,017 cr. in three months; that he has granted a crusade in Spain, licensed the Spaniards to sell benefices in Naples to the extent of 6,000 cr., and granted the Emperor the tenth of all his countries; for the performance of which he has given hostages. He, however, desired Lautrec to continue his march, but sent no word of any assistance he could give him. Nevertheless, Lautrec intends to march on with all possible speed. Lautrec also says that he has written once or twice secretly to the Pope, urging him, on leaving Rome, to come towards the army, and, if he can, entice the lanceknights to desert the Spaniards, and join Lautrec as he approaches Rome. He has already a person in those parts who is practising for this. Parma, 3 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2.

1527.

3 Dec. 3633. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect. Parma, 3 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

3 Dec. 3634. [LOUISA OF SAVOY] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. xi. 85.

B. M.

"autres choses . . . assure que vous en finerez . . . I en esperance de vous escrire . . . toutes choses par ledit Sieur de Bresse . . . me recommandant treshumblement a vostre . . . Suppliant nostre Seigneur vous donner, Monseigneur, [bonne] et longue vie. De Paris, le troisieme de Dec. . . . Signature burnt off. †

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.: Mons. le legat d'Angleterre. Endd.: Montmorancy.

3 [Dec.] 3635. [TAYLOR] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 392.

B. M.

"[P]leas it your Grace, the xxii . . . the court to Madame the . . . [G]raunte Master, and on the . . . Grace the which showed unto . . . Master, hath made marvellous . . . great cheer and costely enterter[yment] . . . had in England, wherefore and for . . . [the French] king should shortly send a ge[n]tleman unto the King's highness and your Grace f . . . accordingly. The Great Maist[er] . . . offertes to me, and commanded m[e] . . . him, for in all things that he m[ay] . . . [he] will be true servant to your G[race]. And on the last day of November, St. Andrew's d[ay] . . . the King after he had heard mass [went] . . . six leagues from Paris a-hunting; h . . . erly showed me that he was much b[e]holden to his dear brother and to your Grace fo[r the Grand] Master's entertainment, and [that he would] send a secret servant of his to the [King's] highness and your Grace for divers [causes. He] will do nothing without your couns[el and] advisement, and commanded me to [write unto] your Grace in the meantime tha[t the duke] of Ferrara had made and published [a treaty of alliance] with him, and that Mons. Jochym . . . down to the Marquis Mantua t . . . he should have from him good ty[dings] . . . and that Mons. Lautree should w[ithin] . . . days have 3,000 S[wiss] . . . with him, and then to march . . . Florence, for it was said that . . . and lanceknights would come . . . they might have had such mo[ney] . . . for of the Pope's appointment . . . [ca]nnot be performed up . . . came letters to my hand. . . . [w]hich I send unto your Grace . . . [new]es we have none but that . . . [Kin]g hath lost a good servant old . . . [Ro]bert Tette, whose soul God par[don]. My Lady r[e]with much his death, and is no[t yet well healed] of her old chiragra." Paris, 3 . . .

Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

3636. [— to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. xi. 6.

B. M.

" . . . que loblige de se rena . . . endroit, mais la malladye don . . . [m]esmelement la goutte qui la tient en . . . contrainct de me donner ceste charge la[qu]elle il a vol[untiers] et de bon cuer acceptee." Thanks him for the kind and honorable words used in his letters to him, and for the confidence which the king of England and he place in him. The King is sending to the King his brother and to Wolsey the news he has received from Spain, by which they will see that matters are approaching reason, and there is the king of England's remonstrance and declaration to be added. He also sends what has come from Italy [written] by Lautrec, and in four or five days he will despatch Brosse, a gentleman of his chamber, to visit the King, and to hear from Wolsey what he considers suitable "pour l'accroissement et ..... congnouissant [l]a prosperite de leurs affaires tacion de ceste perpetuelle allian[ce] bien plantee et encommencee entre l leur est chose plus chere et plus pres font plus grant cas que d'autre chose qui advenir; vous advisant, Monsieur, que lui et [l'autre,] assavoir le Roy et Madame, men on tant et dune si grande et bonne affection que je ne [le jamais] sauroya représenter ne declarer par ma lettre et na ce propos que lon nait fait le cas de vous et intervention tel que dignement vous le meritez et noble present de cuer dor auquel est ampm[is] et ymaige du roy d'Angleterre que Madame nayme que le Roy son filz luy aeste a merveilles agrea[ble] croiez, Monsieur, que son cuer est tout entier en ceste affaire], et que voyant l'amitie telle quelle la voit e[n]tre ces deux grans Roys quelle ayme et estyme [comme] ses deux filz, elle est assourye du plus grant aise quelles ait jamais eu ne pour l'advenir espere quelque chose que Dieu luy envoie. Elle avo"

† The subscription "Vostre treshumble," &c., is certainly in Louise's handwriting.

1527.

Fr., mutilated, pp. 2.

3 Dec.

3637 The CARDINALS at Parma to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Are sending to the King a Latin [secretary], for whom they desire credence. Have great confidence that Henry will assert the liberties of the Church at this unhappy time. Parma, 3 Dec

Signed: A. Car. [Farnesius.]

Syl. Car. Co[r]tenensis.]

J. [Car. Cybo.]

Lat., p. 1. Badly mutilated. Sealed with three seals. According to a modern endorsement, which seems to have been made before the mutilation, this letter was signed by the Cardinals Farnese, Como (sic), Cibo, Ridolf (?) and Gonzaga.

4 Dec.

3638 KNIGHT to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

82. P. vii. 16.

Has received his letters by his servant, and "a chaplain of my Lord of Rocheford,"* containing a minute for a new dispensation. Perceiving the King's fervent desire, started for Rome, and advanced to Narny. Came on to Monterotondo, 12 miles from Rome, where we were set upon, and nearly slain. Next morning entered Rome about 10. Procured lodging at a Roman's house, where were many Spaniards. The Pope being advertised of my arrival sent Gambara to me, but he dared not enter my lodging, so I went to him, and was informed that if he had offered 10,000 crowns he could not have got for me admission to the Pope; so I wrote as much as I would have said on your behalf to the Pope, enclosing it with a letter of credence, and the last minute for your dispensation, directing the packet to the Pope, which was delivered to him by cardinal Piss. At night the Pope sent me word that as Alarcón had knowledge of my being there, he advised me to withdraw, sending me word that if I would stay at Narny or thereabouts "he would send unto me all your Grace's requests in as simple form as they beth desired." He has made arrangements with the Spaniards; I trust therefore in a short time to have in my custody "as much perfect sped and under lead as your Highness hath long time desired." I have written to the Pope to be secret about the dispensation. If I perceive any delay, I shall venture to enter Rome. Fuligolo, 4 Dec.

* Cranmer?

1527.

KNIGHT to HENRY VIII.—cont.

Hol. Add. Endd.

5 Dec.

3639. RICHARD FOSTER.

Harl. MS.
421, f. 7.
R. M.
Strype's
Mem. i. 70.

Recantation of Richard Foster, of the diocese of London, before Cuthbert bishop of London, Thomas cardinal of York, Nicholas bishop of Ely, Henry bishop of St. Asse, John bishop of Lincoln, and John bishop of Bath and Wells, commissaries.

Confesses that he believed that a priest could not consecrate the body of Christ, that he accompanied with persons of the manner of living of Martin Luther, and that he ate flesh on a Saturday. Renounces these heresies, and swears that he will not return to them, nor conceal heretica. Signed.

Attested by Matthew Greflon, 5 Dec. 1527, at the Chapter House at Westminster.

Pp. 3. Endd.

5 Dec.

3640. WOLSEY to CLEMENT VIII.

Theiner, p. 559.

Consols the Pope under his affliction with the hope of the Church being restored to greater splendor than ever. Could not have done more if his own life had been at hazard. The King will not fail in showing his affection, and sends for that purpose Gregory Casale, who will supplicate his Holiness in matters of great moment pertaining to the King. London, 5 Dec. 1527.

Lat.

5 Dec.

3641. WOLSEY to [SIR GREGORY CASALE].

Vit. B ix 189.
R. M.
Barnet, iv. 19.

After you left me last I wrote to you that, for very sufficient reasons, you should defer acting on your commission respecting the King's business until further information. On my return to the King I explained to him your great anxiety to devote yourself to his service, and your willingness to encounter any danger or trouble in that behalf. On my giving assurance of your fidelity, he has consented to employ you on his most secret affairs; and I doubt not, when you consider how much they concern the relief of his conscience, the safety of his soul, the preservation of his life, the continuation of his succession, the welfare and repose of all his subjects now and hereafter, that your proceedings in this business will redound to your honor, and after the late calamities the occasion has arrived for the aggrandizement of your family, and the King's gratitude towards you.

I have told you already how the King, partly by his assiduous study and learning, and partly by conference with theologians, has found his conscience somewhat burthened with his present marriage; and out of regard to the quiet of his soul, and next to the security of his succession, and the great mischiefs likely to arise, he considers it would be offensive to God and man if he were to persist in it, and with great remorse of conscience has now for a long time felt that he is living under the offence of the Almighty, whom in all his efforts and his actions he always sets before him. He has made diligent inquiry whether the dispensation granted for himself and the Queen as his brother's wife is valid and sufficient, and he is told that it is not. The bull of dispensation is founded on certain false suggestions, as that his Majesty desired the marriage for the good understanding between Henry VII., Ferdinand and Isabella; whereas there was no suspicion of any misunderstanding between them. And, secondly, he never assented or knew anything of this bull, nor wished for the marriage. On these grounds it is judged inefficacious. Next, when the King reached the age of fourteen, the contract was revoked, and Henry VII. objected to the marriage. To this the King attributes the death of all his male children, and dreads the heavy wrath of God if he persists. Notwithstanding his scruples of conscience, he is resolved to apply for his remedy to the Holy See, trusting that, out of consideration of his services to the Church, the Pope will not refuse to remove this scruple out of the King's mind, and discover a method whereby he may take another wife, and, God willing, have male children.

1527.

As his Holiness is now in captivity, and there are some who will use their efforts to interfere with his wishes, he has devised a method whereby his Holiness may be dexterously instructed in this matter, and induced to grant the King's request. Trusting in your faith and dexterity, he desires that you should change your dress, and, as if you were in some other person's employ, or had some commission from the duke of Ferrara, obtain a secret interview with the Pope, "omnibus arbitris semotis;" and you shall promise to those who have the management of these matters any sums of money requisite for the purpose, to any person whatever who can secure you the interview. 10,000 ducats will be paid to your credit to the bankers at Venice, to be transmitted to you by your brother the Prothonotary.

When you gain admittance to the Pope you shall exhibit to him the King's letters of credence, in which there is an energetic paragraph written by the King's own hand. You shall tell him how grievous it is to the King and myself to hear of the misfortunes of his Holiness and the Cardinals, and the loss of the Church's patrimony; and you shall enlarge upon the zeal and services which the King and myself are willing to offer for removing these evils. In the second place, you shall dwell upon the insufficiency of this marriage, the King's scruples, and the vehement desire of the whole nation and nobility, without any exception, that the King should have an heir; that the more thoughtful consider that God has refused us so great a blessing, from the illegality of the marriage; and, unless some remedy be provided, worse evils will arise; for if this business be left undecided, factions and controversies will arise after the death of the King, and will plunge this nation into a civil war,—a result against which the Pope ought to provide as the Father of Christendom.

Thirdly, you shall set before him the evils of the Church at the present moment, the contempt for its authority, the avowed purpose of extinguishing the dignity of the See Apostolic; and you shall urge that there is no prince on whom so much reliance can be placed for refuge and defence against these evils as on the king of England, who has hitherto shown himself so good a friend to the Pope. Even if a man of inferior merit suffered from this remorse of conscience, he would have a claim on the Pope's consideration, and therefore the King expects no less, and that without any doubt, difficulty, contradiction or delay. The business is this: that when the Pope knows the insufficiency of the dispensation, he ought to offer, unsolicited, some relief for the King's conscience.

You shall then request the Pope, all fear and doubt set aside, to consider the state of the case, the infinite advantages which are likely to arise to the Apostolic See, if, without disclosing this affair to any one, without tract of time or circumstance, he will freely grant a special commission to this effect, in form of a brief directed to me, granting me a faculty to summon whom I please to inquire into the sufficiency of the dispensation according to the tenor of a bill enclosed, which I herewith send, so written and arranged as not to require transcription, or occasion any delay if the Pope's officials are to take a copy of it. But to avoid all peril on that behalf, the Pope may affix his signature and seal, thus openly testifying that it is his mere will and pleasure, and then I can proceed to take cognizance of the cause. I send you also a dispensation, drawn out in the due form of a brief, to be expedited by his Holiness affixing his signature and seal. And though the King does not fear the consequences which might arise, yet, remembering by the example of past times what false claims have been put forward, to avoid all colour or pretext of the same, he requests this of the Pope as indispensable. He firmly trusts that the Pope will grant him the said commission in the form that the King desires it, and so he will be bound to the Pope for ever, and use all his efforts for his liberation; for which purpose he has sent a sum of money to the king of France to support the army in Italy, and will make war on the Emperor if he refuses to liberate his Holiness. No temptation, however strong, shall interfere with this filial resolution.

1527.

WOLSEY TO [SIR GREGORY CASALE]—cont.

When you have expounded all this to his Holiness, it is not to be doubted that the Pope will freely at once consent to the King's request, and grant the commission without making any one privy to it. But if this cannot be done, you are to urge the Pope not to refuse to make the concessions required by briefs or bulls in the most ample manner, taking care that it does not come to the ears of those who can offer any obstacle. Rather than that, you shall be satisfied with his simple signature to the aforesaid drafts, which he may afterwards confirm by subsequent instruments.

As the Pope may possibly have regained his liberty before your arrival, and then not think so much of the King's friendship, or if he should allege that in consequence of his arrangement with the Emperor he cannot do for the King what he would have done, you shall set before him the uncertainty of the Emperor's promises, and the inevitable tendency of his party to exalt the Imperialists at the expense of the Church. You shall remind him also how he granted the Emperor dispensation from his oath for his marriage with the princess Mary without regard had to the King, and therefore he ought now to do more for the king of England. If his Holiness shall make a difficulty of granting a commission to me, as one of the King's subjects, for taking cognizance of the cause, you shall urge it strongly, asserting that I will do nothing foreign to my duty as a Christian and a cardinal. If he will not consent, urge him to grant it to Staphylæus, dean of the Rota. I send you a form for that purpose. If he attempt to nominate another than myself to act with the Dean, you shall firmly oppose it, requesting him to appoint Staphylæus alone; not that the King would have any suspicion of the partiality of the Papal nominee, but that he had mentioned the dean of the Rota as a person in whom the Pope and the King would agree. Urges Casale to insist strongly on this point.

If the Pope will not grant the commission and dispensation without communicating with some of his officials, you shall point out to him the danger of this course; for which purpose I have sent you another letter you will receive with these, in which I have urged many weighty reasons for granting the King's petition. You must get the Pope to read this letter, which is strongly penned, and, I think, is sufficient to remove all difficulties. You shall explain to him the contents in private, if possible. If the Pope will consult others you must endeavor to obtain their good graces by promises and remuneration. With these you will receive my letters to Card. St. Quator and the College, delivering them as you think fit, applying the money sent to you at Venice at your discretion.

If there is any doubt of your gaining admission to the Pope under present circumstances, and delay should arise, the King has commissioned his secretary, who is now not far from the city, so that one or both of you shall endeavor to gain admission; but neither of you are to wait for the other; and if both gain admission, the one unknown to the other, that will not matter ; but if one has succeeded it will not be necessary or opportune to employ further labor or expence.

1527.

I understand that Lantree is surprised that the King's agents do not communicate with him. I have written to him and to Sir Rob. Jerningham about the duke of Ferrara, saying that you were sent for that purpose, and to procure the Pope's liberty, and you must act accordingly. If you obtain admission to the Pope, do not forget to speak highly in favor of the Datary, and our desire for his advancement. He is a person in whom the King places much confidence, and if he will employ his interest in this matter the King will not forget to be grateful. London, 5 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Lat. Add.

3642 HENRY VIII. to CARDINAL ———.

VII. B. 2. 52 b.

B. M.

Relies on his friendship, and will seek every occasion of repaying him for his assistance in his cause. Desires credence for Gregory Casale.

Draft, Lat., p. 1. In Vannes' hand.

[6 Dec.]

R. O.

3643. The DIVORCE.

I. [Copy of the bull to be submitted to Clement VII.]

As the steward and dispenser of the Lord's household, is bound to listen to the prayers of the faithful, especially to one like Henry VIII., who has distinguished himself in the defence of the Church, and by his accession to the crown of England has reconciled the dissensions of York and Lancaster ; whose succession, therefore, ought to be protected against the designs of the ambitious. To take away all occasion from evil doers, "de potestatis nostre plenitudine, nostramque in ea parte absolutam potestatem et quam habemus summam et maximam exercentes," we suspend (hoc vice dumtaxat derogamus) all canons respecting the non-contracting of marriage in the fourth degree, and pronounce all those "qui de impedimento publicæ honestatis justitiæ ex sponsalibus clandestine contractis nata matrimonium impediunt et dirimunt contractum, aut de præcontractu matrimoniali clandestine inito non consummato secundum matrimonium impeditore et dirimptore, ac etiam illos qui de affinitate ex coitu illegitimo in quocumque gradu, etiamsi primo, proveniente, matrimoniorum irritatori, impedimento extant, ad matrimonia per te contrahenda non pertinere, sic ut virtute aut vigore illorum canonum matrimonium per te contrahendum impeti aut impugnari possit."* And furthermore to avoid all ecclesiastical objections, "cum mulierem quam propter [præcontractum per verba de præsentî clandestinæ aut secrete factum, impedimentumve]† publicæ honestatis justitiæ ex clandestino contractu provenientia, aut affinitatis [in quocumque gradu, etiamsi primo,]† ex illicito coitu contingentia, gradumve consanguinitatis modo [secundum aut]† tertium excoesserit, tibi [alioqui per canones]† matrimonio copulari conjungique non posses, licite accipere [posteris]† uxorem, ac te et illam hujusmodi [mulierem]† vosque et quemlibet vestrum cum data contrahendi facultate accipere [eam]† velis [ducereque]† uxorem," free from all ecclesiastical censures. Removes all possible objections as granting this dispensation, "[ex certa scientia et mero motu nostris]† misericorditer in Domino." Legitimatises the children "tanquam ex matrimonio legitimo," against all objections that can be drawn

* Originally thus : "qui de impedimento publicæ honestatis justitiæ ex sponsalibus in septennio aut alias clandestine contractis nata matrimonium, et impediendo et dirimendo illicitumve contrahendo extant, et etiam illos qui de affinitate ex coitu illegitimo proveniente hujusmodi ad matrimonia per te contracta aut contrahenda virtute aut vigore illorum canonum impeti aut impugnari possent." The expression "in septennio" has reference to the præcontract of Ormond with Anne Boleyn in 1526. See vol. III. preface, p. cccxxxii.

† Added in another hand.

1527.

The Divorce—cont.

from the aforesaid disqualifications, and exempts the King's conscience from every scruple in that behalf, "ac etiam quavis de non expressione causæ qua movemur, de nostra captivitate, de impetratione per importunitatem, de eo quod tempore præsentis concessionis a matrimonio liber et solutus non fueris; quas omnes pro frivolis et inefficacibus judicamus."

Lat., pp. 15.

- R. O. 2. Copy of the commission desired by cardinal Wolsey, giving him plenary Pocock, i. 28. power to proceed in dispensing with the King's marriage, and joining with him in the commission the archbishop of Canterbury; with plenary and absolute authority.*

Lat., pp. 23. Endd.: Minuta commissionis missæ per Thadeum cursorem.

- Vit. B. xii. 133. 3. Commission of Clement VII. to Wolsey and Campeggio to examine
B. M. the validity of the dispensation granted by Julius II. for the marriage of Henry and Katharine, dated Rome 1503, 7 kal. Jan., Pont. 1, and to finally decide the cause.

Draft. Lat., pp. 21.

6 Dec. 3644. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

- R. O. I have written fully in my other letters. In this I will state what I
St. P. vii. 18. wish you to lay before the Pope:—first, my great grief at the calamity which has befallen him, and my desire, even at the cost of my life, to remove and repair it. Among all the arguments that I can think of, none is stronger than the friendship with which I have inspired the King towards his Holiness,—a friendship which will be permanent, unless some occasion should be offered for alienating the King's mind, in which event it will never be in my power to serve his Holiness. 2. You shall represent to him how much this affair concerns the King's conscience, the prosperity of his kingdom, and the security of his succession. 3. That this concession will be honorable to his Holiness and agreeable to God; that there are secret reasons which cannot be trusted to writing, certain diseases in the Queen defying all remedy, for which and other causes the King will never live with her as his wife; that the King's friendship is of the utmost moment to the Pope, as his enmity is fraught with the most terrible consequences. If the Pope is not compliant my life will be shortened, and I dread to anticipate the consequences. I am the more urgent as the King is absolutely resolved to satisfy his conscience; and if this cannot be done, he will of two evils choose the least, and the disregard for the Papacy must grow daily, especially in these dangerous times. Considering the premisses, I am a humble suitor to the Pope to grant this request, not so much as an English subject, as one who has certain knowledge of what the result must be; and therefore I urge him, by obliging the King, to bind him also to the protection of the Holy See, the support of the confederate League, his own liberation and that of the Cardinals. If he refuses, I can do nothing hereafter in his behalf. London, 6 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Lat. Add.

3645. [WOLSEY to JOHN CASALE.]

- Vit. B. x. 47. To the same effect. [No date.]
B. M.

Lat.

Barnet, iv. 53.

* In substance this is the same as the commission published by Barnet from Vit. B. xii. 178. (Pocock, iv. 48.), where, instead of the Archbishop, space is left for the insertion of some legate to be sent by the Pope, and either legate is empowered to act with plenary authority.

1527.

3646. [WOLSEY to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 71.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 166.

His duty to his Holiness impels him to write what he wishes to be kept secret, viz., that if he desires to keep the King and England devoted to him,—if he desires the restoration of the Holy See, he must send a decretal commission in the amplest and strongest form, which Wolsey will keep secret.

Draft by Vannes. Lat., p. 1.

6 Dec.

Theiner,
p. 559.3647. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Sends Gregory Casale to offer consolation, and to request the Pope's indulgence in a matter of great moment. Greenwich, 6 Dec. 1527.

P.S. in the King's hand.—The matter which Gregory has to speak about is of the deepest interest to the King, and therefore he implores the Pope's prompt kindness.

Lat.

Vit. B. x. 90.

B. M.

2. Draft of the same by Vannes.

Pp. 2.

7 Dec.

R. O.

3648. GHINUCCI and LEE to HENRY VIII.

Nicholas Wilford, John Shaa, Thomas Traves, and other English merchants at Bilbao, represent that, considering the danger of war, they would gladly despatch all they have into England, but can only do so by help of Biscayan mariners, as there are no English sailors here. They accordingly asked one Ordon de Arassa, of Plasencia, to convey their goods in a ship of their own, who consented on condition that they would be bound in their persons and goods that he and his fellows should return safely, without being stopped by the King. The ambassadors, being applied to, have taken it upon them to say they might give them this assistance. Burgos, 7 Dec. 1527.

Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

7 Dec.

R. O.

3649. DUKE OF NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

While at Framlingham, lord Willoughby, the abbot of Sypton, Sir Anthony Wingfield, Sir John Hennyngham, and other gentlemen, with above 20 of the most honest yeomen in the county, asked him to obtain from the King permission for them to export cheese, butter, sparkling, red herring, &c., to Flanders, as they were wont, or else the rents will be unpaid, and the whole country impoverished. Inquired of Thos. Roushe and Thos. Alford, the customers, and was told that a restraint came for all manner of victuals, and some time after Palmer of London, or his brother, the King's servant, got a licence for a certain quantity to pass, and allowed only those who would pay him to send, whereby the King loses a great sum in his customs, and the subjects are impoverished.

Hears also that a ship came from Flanders with salt, expecting to return with cheese, &c., and went away saying that they would prevent any other ships coming; and none have come since. Will show him more complaints when he goes to him in about 12 days. Stoke, 7 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace.

8 Dec.

R. O.

3650. GREGORY CASALE and SIR RICH. JERNEGAM to WOLSEY.

The marquess of Mantua has entered the League and proclaimed peace, promising an aid of 100 furnished men-at-arms. Mons. Lantrec has heard that the hostages given by the Pope to the Spaniards have fled, and the Pope himself has escaped, and is on his way to Urbyet (Orvieto). Lautrec would be pleased to have letters at times from the King or Wolsey. He will leave in three days towards Bononya. Parma, 8 Dec. Signed.

1527.

GREGORY CASALE and SIR ROBT. JERNEGAM to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

9 Dec.

R. O.

3651. SANDES to [SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD].

Understands that he has complained to my lord Legate, that though he has written most urgently, both to Sandes and the treasurer of Calais, of the danger in which the town stands for lack of wheat, malt, and oats, the ports of England will not allow him to depart with the provisions already bought by the victuallers of Calais; also that Sandes' officers at Guisnes will not allow any rent-corn to be brought to Calais till the landowners have paid a year's rent due last Michaelmas, which Wingfield declares has not been used before this time. Wingfield has, therefore, caused the mayor and staplers of Calais, with the constables, to meet him in the council chamber, who have thought it best to open the county of Guisnes as before. Writes to say that he and Mr. Treasurer have done their utmost to procure a remedy. As to the restraint made by Sandes' officers at Guisnes, Sandes thinks, his responsibility being as great as Wingfield's, his authority should not have been interfered with, at all events without a friendly notice in the first place. Has, nevertheless, commanded his officers to search what grain there is in the county, and, if it be found sufficient for the castle and county, is content that Wingfield shall have the surplus. Wonders that Wingfield, who knows the weakness of the Castle of Guisnes, had no more regard to his honor, seeing that Guisnes is exempt from his jurisdiction. The walls of the castle could not resist a sudden surprise. Wingfield and Master Porter have disobeyed Wolsey's command not to provide grain within the English pale, and the corn taken by them was the King's only security for rents which were due last Michaelmas. Hopes Wingfield will henceforth interfere as little with his jurisdiction as he has done with Wingfield's. The Vyne, 9 Dec. *Signed.

Pp. 4. Endd. erroneously in modern hand: To Sir Arthur Plantaganet, afterw^{ds} visc^t Lisle.

9 Dec.

R. O.

3652. JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

St. P. VII. 22. News has come that the Pope has escaped, as well as the hostages given by him to the Spaniards. Lautrec will be glad to hear from you. He intends going to Bononia. Parma, 9 Dec. Signed.

Add. Endd.

11 Dec.

R. O.

3653. LEONARD MUSGRAVE.

"Bill" made 11 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII., witnessing that he has borrowed 100*l.* of Magnus in order to pass into Scotland with the more haste, instead of receiving it from the abbot of St. Mary's, as authorised by Wolsey's letter, to be paid to Angus. Signed.

P. 1. Endd.

12 Dec.

R. O.

3654. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

Asks for letters of safe-conduct for David Falconare and Robt. Gardinere, of Leith, to trade in England with a ship of 100 tons or less, for one year. Edinburgh, 12 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: 12 Dec. 1527.

* The signature is not in Sandes' hand.

1527.

12 Dec.
R. O.3655. SIR ROBT. WINOFIELD, SIR CHRL. GARNEYS, and SIR WM. HUSKY to WOLSEY.

Wrote on the 11th of the want of corn. Thank him for the commissions for his supply sent to Southampton and Kent. Ask him to allow grain, and specially wheat, to be procured by licence from the French king, considering the great price of wheat in England, and the insufficiency of the produce of this country. Remind him of it, because they fear the price will rise. Caused the mayor to examine the bakers and brewers as to the grain in their possession, and what money they have to provide it, of which the report is enclosed. They have been in the habit of buying wheat and malt from Englishmen on credit, paying for them at the pay days of the retinue, but now the price is so high that the dealers will not serve them without ready money. Ask him to make provision, for they fear what may happen. Enclose the examination or confession of a man whom they have discharged and committed to prison. Fear that many of the town are infected with extreme poverty. Calais, 12 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace.

R. O.

2. A view of the store of the bakers of Calais, 10 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.

Ten bakers named, whose stock, including quantities coming in, amounts to 352 measures wheat and 145 meal.

P. 1.

R. O.

3. The store of the brewers, 10 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.

Five brewers, whose stock amounts to 230 qr. malt, 95 measures barley, 385 measures oats, and 31 measures wheat.

P. 1.

12 Dec.

R. O.

3656. NAVY WARRANTS,

Warrants from the King, Arthur lord Lisle, and Wm. Gonson, to Sir John Daunce, general surveyor, for payment of money to Th. Jermyn, clerk of the King's ships, to be expended on the Henri Grace de Dieu, Mary Rose, Gabriel Royal, Peter Pomogranate, Great Bark, Lesser Bark, Great Galley, Mary George, Katharine Galley, Sweepstake, Minion, and Swallow, on building the Stern House in Porchester Castle, and for other naval purposes at Portsmouth and in the Thames; with Jermyn's receipts.

Dated from 1 March 17 Hen. VIII. (1526) to 12 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII. (1527.)

17 documents: some on parchment.

13 Dec.

R. O.

3657. SIR ROBT. JERNINGHAM to WOLSEY.

St. P. VII. 20.

Further news has come since his last, that the Pope and hostages have escaped. The Pope is at Orvieto.—Reminds Wolsey that the effect of his commission, for which he was sent hither, is expired, and he is the worse regarded now that Gregory has a commission to the duke of Ferrara and the marquiss of Mantua. Parma, 13 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "Messr. Jernegan, the 13th of December 1527."

14 Dec.

3658. CLEMENT VII. to WOLSEY.

Va. R. ix. 202.

R. M.

Pocock, i. 33.

Sends the Prothonotary Gambara to inform the King and Wolsey of his having regained his liberty. Expresses his gratitude to them for their exertions in his favor. Orvieto, 14 Dec. 1527.

Lat., vellum, mutilated. Add. Endd.

1527.

14 Dec.

R. O.

3659. [SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to SANDES.]

Has received his letter, dated at the Vyne, the 9th inst., remonstrating with him on matters written to my lord Legate by Wingfield, the mayor of Calais, and the constable of the Staple. Will answer every article, hoping Sandes will take all in good part, as from one who will honor and serve him as a poor gentleman should a great lord.

1. He wrote to Sandes and master Treasurer of this town about the scarcity of corn and money here, hoping they would speak to my lord Legate, as he has no doubt they did.

2. As to the restraint of corn made by Sandes' officers, would be loth the Castle of Guisnes should lack anything, but would have been glad, after the accustomed manner, to have sent out archers on horseback, who, with the sergeants of Guisnes, might have taken a view of all corn in the county, so that we of Calais might have known how much we could reckon upon. But if Sandes' grant be larger than those of former captains, and Wingfield's less than those of former deputies, Sandes' officers might have suffered the view to take effect, according to precedents, of which there are no few records in the council chamber. Were not only disappointed of the corn they had expected by the stopping of carts laden hitherward, but the price of corn rose in the market 2s. a rasor above what it should have been, and is now hard to re-adjust. Has this day caused wheat out of the soldiers' garner to be sold at 8d. under the market price on Wednesday, and will do the same every market day till Christmas.

3. Does not wish to dispute the extent of Sandes' authority, but would do wrong to the King if he left anything undone which was done by his predecessors. Does not think Sandes responsible for the county of Guisnes, but only for the castle. Sandes has no reason to accuse him of being unfriendly. Never yet lost a friend in his own default, nor will.

4. What Sandes writes about my lord Legate's decree is the first any one here has heard of it. Hopes the corn bought by himself and Mr. Porter will not raise the price of wheat, for they find plenty of eaters.

5. Wonders how Sandes could have been informed that Wingfield had deprived the King of all security for his rents. The truth is he and the mayor enjoined all who had rent corn in Guisnes to pay their rents with diligence, that they might bring in their corn. Calais, 14 Dec. 1527.

Copy, pp. 6. Add. in Wingfield's hand: To the right honorable doctor of both laws, Master Stevyn Gardyner. Endd. erroneously in a modern hand: From Sir Arthur Plantaganet afterwards lord Lisle.

14 Dec.

3660. WM. MYLSENT, the elder, of Great Lynton, Camb.

His will, 18 Oct. 1523. Proved 14 December 1527. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 617.

15 Dec.

3661. [WOLSEY to LAUTREC.]

Vil. B. ix. 206.

B. M.

The King is glad to hear that the duke of Ferrara has joined him, and he thinks that "nullo nunc labore marchio Mantua pro viribus [juva]bit," and Italy is in such a state that victory depends upon Lautrec's diligence and fortitude. The King, and all others who wish well to the expedition, advise an attack on the enemy, who are few and in disorder, thinking more of booty than battle. A march to Rome would result in an end to his labours and a victory, "modo tanto cum damno rei promovenda nequitiam desinit maximum (?) nunquam emolumentum regis Chr., cuius nunc causa agitur, actionibus hac procedendi diligentia asse [Ca]sar adigetur ut summa rei consulat, et de concordia serio tractet, confederati omnes in fide cont[ra]nebuntur, et omnis ex hac cunctatione concepta suspicio tollatur.

1527.

Dux Ferrariæ, qui non alia causa inivit, quam ut illæ hostium superstities copias ex Italiæ visceribus ejiciantur ad susceptum fo obcedendum negotium animabitur, et Chr. Regis cunctibus ea accedat existi-matio, ut nullo tempore curiale imperio deleri queat, adeoque firmum Ser. hæc Regia M^{tes} rerum omnium fundamentum. Ita exitum sint habitura, et ut in tam salutari fovenda expeditione, null [p]ræter summam ex conventionibus contributa, nunc quoque liberalissime addidit secundum veterem [Novem]bris et Decembris contributionem, providet rex Chr. quoad potest, contribuant Veneti, [Dux Ferrar]iæ et Florentini. Scio præterea Cardinales istos in propria sustinenda causa . [et] quot [et] pecunias ministraturos."

Affairs now require the speedy setting out of Lautrec, as Francis promised the king of England. "Posthac [i]n abscessu, sumptus, [peric]ulaque summo
. mala, publica die perpetuoque [a]nimo
. pta videntur. scio excellentiam vestram nobili et nio est animo nullam dili[gen]tiam omiss[uram e]ssæ, quo nomen immortale reddat
. tam principi suo fidem comprobet que tandem opera et virtute Christiana respublica in portum reducat." The More, — Dec.
1527.

Lat., pp. 2, mutilated. Draft in Vannes' hand, altered from the draft of a letter to the Great Master.

15 Dec. 3662. WOLSEY TO SIR GREGORY CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 24.

I have learned by your letters of the 23rd the present state of Italy.
The King and I are glad to hear that the duke of Ferrara has joined the Confederates, and I think a better opportunity has been offered to Lautrec than ever before. I trust he will advance against the enemy. The French king, at my intercession, has made fresh provision for the army, on condition that Lautrec goes straight to Rome without delay. I must earnestly beg of you to proceed with the utmost diligence in the affairs of which I wrote to you by Faldeo on the 6th. From your information of the proposed liberation of the Pope by the intercession of Guido [Rangone] we are in good hopes that we shall succeed, and there never was any matter of greater moment. Use Guido's influence, if you can, at any cost. I have written to Dr. Knight and the protonotary Gambara; but I should be glad for you to have the whole reward. If the Pope is at liberty, urge him to retire to the ranks of the Confederates, or to some place of security, and tell him that the King and I will do all that is possible in his behalf. The More, 15 Dec.
1527.

P.S. in Wolsey's hand: Apply all your efforts to the contents of this and my other letters, as the King's life and safety depend upon them. Signed.

Lat. In Vannes' hand. Add. Eudd.

VIT. B. ix. 203.

R. M.

2. Draft of the same, with a few verbal differences.

Lat., pp. 5. In Vannes' hand.

15 Dec. 3663. NORFOLK TO [WOLSEY].

R. O.

Has received his letter, dated Westm., 5 Dec., with thanks for his advice. Reminds him that he promised to send to these parts some of the corn that Coe shall bring, before it goes as far as London. Wishes to know the good news that he trusts Frances Poyntz has brought from Spain.
Stoke, Sunday night, 15 Dec.

Hol., p. 1.

1527.

15 Dec.

R. O.

3664. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

The secret search was made last Monday night through Suffolk and Norfolk. A great number of vagabonds were punished, and treated according to the instructions, at which the people are very joyful. The search for corn began on Wednesday last, and he hopes it will be done in Suffolk before Christmas, though not so soon in Norfolk, as there is more there. Has heard of two people who were occasioners of the affair at Stow Market, of which Sir Thos. Tyrrell informed Wolsey, and has sent them to prison at Ipswich, where they shall stand in the pillory next Saturday, market day, unless Wolsey orders otherwise. At Ipswich was taken a poor Fleming, who has made two false groats, which are enclosed. He will not confess that he has any accomplices, or that he has made any more; but prints of pence and halfpence graven in cuttle bones were found at his house. He might confess more if he were "put to some pains," but the Duke dares not do this without the King's licence. Stoke, 15 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate. Endd.

3665. CORN SURVEY.

R. O.

1. Essex, hundred of Hynkford.

"The certificate of all the corn sold and unsold in all the towns underwritten within the hundred of Hynkford, in the county of Essex, searched and viewed by Will. Clopton, Esq., one of the commissioners of our sovereign lord the King, over and above the allowance and sufficient sidd (seed) of barley, pease and oats and harres to sow the lands of every husbandman there this next seed time to be sown, as nigh as all the same corns could or might be by me extenyned and numbered; with the number of people inhabitants that are to be found and sustained within every of the said towns undermanned. The same view and search beginning the 15th day of December, in the 19th year of the reign of our sovereign lord King Henry the 8th, in manner and form as hereafter ensuingly doth appear."

Belchamp Otton:—In men, women, and children, 113. In wheat, "myxtelon," and rye, 26 qrs. 3 bush.; barley and malt, 196 qrs. 2 bush.; pease, oats, and "harres," 63 qrs. 5 bush. Accounted to serve and sustain the said number of people in bread corn, after the rate of a bushel for every 6 persons a week during the space of 38 weeks, that is to say, from the 15th day of December to the Nativity of Our Lady next coming, 88 qrs. 3 bush. Accounted likewise to sustain the people in drink corn, after the rate of a bushel and a half to every 6 persons for a week, for the same time, 112 qrs. Thus there is a lack of bread corn for the town of 62 qrs.; of drink corn a surplusage of 84 qrs. 2 bush. Sum of the surplusage in pease, oats, and "harres," 63 qrs. 5 bush.

Brandon:—Inhabitants, 19. In wheat, &c., 15 qrs.; in barley, &c., 50 qrs. Bread corn allowed for the inhabitants, 15 qrs. 1 peck; drink corn, 22 qrs. 4½ bush. And so there lacketh, of bread corn, 1 peck. In surplusage, of drink corn, 27 qrs. 3½ bush.

Belcham St. Paul:—Inhabitants, 131. Wheat, &c., 16 qrs. 2 bush.; barley, &c., 41 qrs.; pease, 10 qrs. 5 bush. Bread corn for the inhabitants, 103 qrs. 5 bush. 1 peck; drink corn, 134 qrs. 4 bush. Lacketh in bread corn, 77 qrs. 3 bush. 1 peck; and in drink corn, 113 qrs. 4 bush.

Borley:—Inhabitants, 104. Wheat, &c., 19 qrs.; barley, &c., 60 qrs. Bread corn allowed, 82 qrs. 4 bush. 1 peck; drink corn, 103 qrs. 2 bush. Lacketh, in bread corn, 63 qrs. 3 bush. 1 peck; and in drink corn, 63 qrs. 2 bush.

Belchamp William:—Inhabitants, 106. Wheat, &c., 24 qrs. 4 bush.; barley, &c., 123 qrs.; pease, &c., 13 qrs. 6 bush. Bread corn allowed, 83 qrs. 5 bush. 1 peck; in drink corn, 105 qrs. 4 bush. Lacketh, in bread corn, 1527.

59 qrs. 1 bush. 1 peck; and in drink corn, 18 qrs. 2 bush. Surplusage in pease, &c., 13 qrs. 6 bush.

Pentlow:—Inhabitants, 81. Wheat, &c., 19 qrs.; barley, &c., 40 qrs.; pease, &c., 7 qrs. Bread corn allowed, 67 qrs. 1 peck; drink corn, 112 qrs. Lacketh, in bread corn, 48 qrs.; and in drink corn, 72 qrs. In surplusage of pease, &c., 7 qrs.

Foxberth:—Inhabitants, 126. Wheat, &c., 20 qrs.; barley, &c., 110 qrs.; pease, 10 qrs. Bread corn allowed, 99 qrs. 3½ bush.; drink corn, 126 qrs. 4 bush. Lacketh, bread corn, 89 qrs. 3 bush. 1 peck; of drink corn, 86 qrs. 4 bush. In surplusage of pease, 10 qrs.

Lytton:—Inhabitants, 60. Wheat, &c., 15 qrs.; barley, &c., 40 qrs. Bread corn, allowed, 47½ qrs.; drink corn, 70 qrs. 3 bush. Lacketh, bread corn, 52½ qrs.; and in drink corn, 50 qrs. 3 bush.

Baldon:—Inhabitants, 223. Wheat, &c., 15 qrs.; barley, &c., 87 qrs.; pease, 16 qrs. Bread corn allowed, 153 qrs. 4 bush. 3 pecks; drink corn, 220 qrs. 6½ bush. Lacketh, bread corn, 138 qrs. 4 bush. 3 pecks; and in drink corn, 153 qrs. 6½ bush. In surplusage of pease, 16 qrs.

Mediton:—Inhabitants, 89. Wheat, &c., 9½ qrs.; barley, &c., 74 qrs.; pease, 3 qrs. Bread corn allowed, 71 qrs. 1 peck; drink corn, 117 qrs. Lacketh, of bread corn, 61½ qrs. 1 peck; and drink corn, 43 qrs. In surplusage of pease, 3 qrs.

Sum total:—Inhabitants, 1,055. Bread corn, 119 qrs. 5 bush.; drink corn, 732 qrs. Lack of bread corn, 572 qrs. 1 bush. 2 pecks; and of drink corn, 451 qrs. 7 bush. Total of pease, &c., 112 qrs. 5 bush. Signed: Wylliam Clapton.

Parchment roll of 2 memb.

R. O.

2. Northamptonshire, hundred of Clayley.

Certificate of Robert Chauntersell, one of the commissioners for the hundred of Clayley, Northt. Total grain in certain persons' hands, besides the finding of their houses and sowing of their ground, 160 qrs. Many within the hundred have not more than sufficient for these purposes, and many others lack grain. Have commanded them to send corn weekly to market, to sell to those that have need. Since the beginning of his first view, the markets have been sufficiently supplied.

P. 1.

R. O.

3. "Wilt. — [The report of the commission for corn by Sir [John] Bourghchier, knt., and Charles Bulkeley, of the hundreds of Amysbury, Elstubb, and Everley.]

"In the hundred of Ambresbury, this book the 19th year of the reign of King Henry th[e V]III. fy wheat, barley, and malt, &c."

Enumerates the persons in each parish having grain to sell, notifying the number of quarters each has over and above the allowances for his household and for sowing, and the number of persons in the parish having no corn. In some cases, the latter number is not directly stated, but the total population of the parish is given:—

Parish of Boscum: 3 persons have grain; pop. of parish, 80. Alyngton: 2 persons have grain; pop. 70. Newtontony: 6 persons have grain; pop. 125. Choberton, 3 persons have grain; pop. 57. Northetsdworth, 7 persons have grain; pop. 140. Signed by Bourghchier and Bulkeley.

Parish of Fiddeldene: 7 households, consisting of 114 persons, have grain; and there are 60 persons who have no corn.

Brignton: 1 household of 16 has corn; 30 persons have none.

Doryngton: 5 households (47 persons) have corn; 100 persons have none.

Ambresbury: 3 households (45 persons) have corn to sell. Will. Nottynge-1527.

CORN SURVEY—cont.

ham, an innholder, has 60 qrs. of barley, but he has made a bargain "to serve my lady of Ambrosbury and the convent of ale," and must buy more. 300 persons have no corn.

[B]ulford: 3 households (of . . . 8, and 6 persons respectively) have corn; 60 persons have none.

Westambrosbury: 4 households (40 persons) have corn; 30 persons have none.

Normanton: 2 households (53 persons) have corn.

Dorneford: 11 households (95 persons) have corn; 55 have none. Signed as before.

Pp. 11.

ii. Hundred of Elstubbe and Everley.

Overton: 6 households (64 persons) have corn; 30 have none.

Wroften: 15 persons (households) have corn; 30 households (180 persons) have none.

Busheton: 3 persons (households) have corn or beans to sell; 40 persons have none.

Feyfylde: 7 persons (households) have corn; 3 households (16 persons) have none.

. 13 persons have corn; 4 households (20 persons) have none.

Colyngborne Duke: 12 persons have corn; 14 households (160 persons) have none.

. 10 persons have corn; 6 households (30 persons) have none.

Feyttilton: 10 persons have corn; 1 household of 6 has none.

Longstrate: 6 persons have corn; 8 households (46 persons) have none.

Comme: 7 persons have corn; 3 households (18 persons) have none.

Netherhavyn: 18 persons have corn; 18 households (80 persons) have none.

Stowell: 4 persons have corn; 3 households (18 persons) have none.

Aulton Priors: 8 persons have corn; 3 households (18 persons) have none.

. Deloffoly: 4 persons have corn.

Chesynghery Priors: 10 persons have corn; 5 households (30 persons) have none.

Pp. 14.

16 Dec. 3666. CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P., vii. 27

We have received your letter, and given your secretary audience. You will learn from him how important we consider your request. Your services need no testimony, and we shall be glad of an occasion to oblige you. Fail not in your efforts, which we share with you, for the good of Christendom and the Holy Church. Orvieto, 16 Dec. 1527.

Hol., Lat. Add. Endd. by Wriothley.

16 Dec. 3667. MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

In behalf of Mons. de Brosse, a gentleman of the King's chamber, whom Francis is sending to the king of England. Paris, 16 Dec. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.

3668. JO. DU BELLAY BISHOP OF BAYONNE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The seigneur De Brosse is coming to England with good news from the French king. Asks when he can have an audience. London.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: Ill^{ms}, &c., Car⁶ Ebor., legato, &c. Endd.

1527.

16 Dec. 3669 MONASTERY OF ST. WERBURG, CHESTER.

Assent to the election of Thos. Marshall, as abbot. Le More, 16 Dec.
Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 8.

18 Dec. 3670 MONASTERY OF WENLOCK, Heref. dioc.

Writ to the escheator of Salop and the Marches of Wales for the restitution of temporalities on the election of John Bayly, as prior. Le More, 18 Dec.

ii. Similar writ for Middlesex.
Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 27.

18 Dec. 3671 [CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.]

VII. B. ix. 207 Desires credence for the bishop elect of Tortona (Terdonensis). Or-
 B. M. vieto, 18 Dec. 1527.
Proc. 1. 34 Hol., Lat., p. 1.

18 Dec. 3672 GREGORY CASALE to [WOLSEY.]

VII. B. ix. 208. Arrived here today with Paolo Camillo Triulzi. Has prevailed with
 B. M. the Florentines to do what they wish, and they are sending two ambassadors to Lautrec. They are content that the army shall pass the way he thinks best, though they are of opinion it should go by Romagna. They have determined that if the Imperialists come towards Florence, the marquis of Saluzgo shall be admitted with his army into Florence or any other city he wishes. They desired to be assured that the Pope would not molest them.
 Told them he knew the Pope intended to leave them free, and urged them to send an ambassador to his Holiness, because, when the papal ambassador came to them, they refused to hear him. Is informed that the leaders of the allied army are going to the Pope, and that the three Cardinals who were expected have been to him. The lords of Florence have told him that the Pope has not only given the hat to those whom he created Cardinals according to his agreement with the Emperor, but that he has since confirmed their creation.
 Florence, 18 Dec. 1527. Signed.
Lat., pp. 2.

19 Dec. 3673. TAYLOR to WOLSEY.

R. O. Wrote last on the 12th. On Monday 16th, the King was at the St. P. VII. 77 Palace, and asked a great subsidy of his subjects, spiritual and temporal.
 Respite was granted to make an answer, and the King rode out hunting.
 "Madame daily hath a sermon before her in her chamber during this time of Advent." Both the King and my Lady were much pleased that Wolsey sent a post to Italy in so much diligence. Tonight news has come of the escape of the Pope and his hostages, as Wolsey will see by the letters conveyed by the bearer, Mons. Brosse. The Grand Master has desired him to write that when he was in England he took by exchange of Antony Vivald 4,000 skutes, and now he is informed that he must pay seventy-six skutes for the King's right, viz., 1*l.* for every skute. He says no such duties were ever paid by ambassadors. The King in three or four days goes to St. Germain's to keep his Christmas. Paris, 19 Dec. Signed.
P. 1. Add. Endd.

Dec. 3674. [TAYLOR to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 467. " [P]lease it your Grace two daye[s] t]he
 B. M. which maketh no grent has[t]e bringer heretof

1527.

[TAYLOR to WOLSEY]—cont.

shall be shortly w diligence by post, he cometh from came by Mons. Loteryk and ca the state of the affairs of Italy
. King hath been in the pales and t
. granted to him 24,000 scutes thr
. spiritually three parts the lords a . part the officers men of law of merchants. The King was deli morrow to St. Germyns, but th rheum in the one part of his head worse than a rheum wherefore it not so shortly depart. This nygh[t home Mons. Morret from the A . . .
. is in secrets with the King and . it is not known what tidings
"

Paris Dec.

Mutilated.

19 Dec.

R. O.

3675. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CROMWELL."In Christi nomine, die 19 Desemb. (sic) anno 1527." *

Worshipful Sir, at my departure from London I met with Mr. Crane, who asked me how I used my business with Jasper [Penn]. From him I perceived that Clarencieux hath a protection, or some other means to defeat me; for he said, that if I had troubled Clarencieux he would immediately show "that thing for him whereby I should be simply satisfied of my purpose." He has evidently prepared somewhat, for once he told me in great anger that he had provided a remedy against me. Be pleased, after your best advice, to give order in any pretence against Clarencieux. I shall sooner obtain my purpose by fair means, if he have any such advantage. If when Clarencieux comes home you learn from him his intentions, you will do me a great pleasure. You may tell him he has put me to great hindrance, and I owe money in the city, and am not able to pay, but am forced to go into Flanders, and so am utterly undone; and he will thus conceive the more pity. I understand that Jasper Penn is in the country with a young man, by whose advice he has sold 20*l.* land; so he will have money. When you hear he has come home, speak to him, and induce him the best you can. I trust to be with you before Candlemas, though I leave my business in Flanders "incommended" to some friend. If you have anything to command write to Barro.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the worshipful Thomas Cromwell, in London, beside the Friar Augustines. Endd.

19 Dec.

R. O.

3676. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Receipts and payments for Cardinal's College, Oxford, from 16 Jan. 16 Hen. VIII. to 19 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII., Nicholas Towneley and Rowland Messenger, controllers.

Receipts by the bishop of Lincoln, Thomas Cromwell, Thomas Heneage, and others; in all, 9,828*l.* 11*s.* 4½*d.* Expended for stone, timber, slates, and glass, of which the specialities are given; also for purchase of the house

* It is uncertain whether this date is 1527 or 1522. Apparently the last figure more resembles a 2 than a 7, and the handwriting varies considerably from that of a letter by the same writer dated 7 Aug. 1528. On the other hand, the same persons, and apparently the same affair, are referred to in this letter as in that; and in 1522 Cromwell resided in Fenchurch Street.

1527.

of Black Friars, "called Buashopp Johnny his house," Oxford, valued at 70*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*; in all, 8,882*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Signed by Hyden.
Parchment roll.

19 Dec. 3677. WILLIAM KNYGHT, clk.

To have a canonry or prebend in St. Stephen's, Westminster, vice John Taylor, resigned. Del. Westm. 19 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—S. B.
Pat. p. 1, m. 10.

20 Dec. 3678. MONASTERY OF MALMESBURY.

R. O.

Proceedings at the chapter house of the monastery of St. Mary and St. Aldelm, Malmesbury, 20 Dec. 1527, before William abbot of St. Peter's, Gloucester, commissary or reformator.

The abbot of Gloucester exhibited a commission of John abbot of the exempt monastery of St. Peter's, Westminster, president of the Black Monks of the Benedictine Order in England, which he had received on 4 Dec. at Frynkemarsch, in the presence of John Trye and Thos. Hale, notary public, for the visitation of Malmesbury. He made Thos. Grenow alias Baker, LL.B. his registrar; and the Word of God being placed before him in Latin by Gabriel Moreton, S. T. B., of the monastery of Gloucester, and a constitution read touching the Order of St. Benedict, and a certificate exhibited by Richard abbot of Malmsbury, he commenced proceedings, taking Thos. Phellis alias Taylor, notary public, to act in place of Grenow, who was otherwise engaged.

i. Deposition of the abbot Richard Cam, complaining of the rebellion and contumacy of these monks: Thomas Gloucester, John London, Thomas Purton, William Bristow, Will. Bisley, Rob. Sodbury, Will. Wynhecombe, Thos. Froceter, Rob. Elmore, with their abettors, Rob. Cisceter and Richard Glastonbury; Richard Ashton and Walter Bristow. The sub-prior Philip Bristow is unfit for his office; the prior John Codryngton keeps hunting dogs.

ii. Deposition of the said John Codryngton, accusing the Abbot of mismanagement,—of the chapter being held in the English, not in the Latin tongue, and other disorders.

iii. ——— of John Combe, that the juniors are disorderly, and Dom. Thomas Gloucester uses a hat under his hood in the quire.

iv. ——— of Thomas Tewkysbury, precentor, accusing the Abbot of detaining a silver cup, the gift of Dr. Drayton and Thomas Shewell; and that he is irregular in the administration of discipline.

v.—viii. ——— of Raph Sherewolde, of Philip Bristow, sub-prior, Robert Cisceter, John Gloucester, then prior and sacristan, on the same subject.

ix. ——— of Robert Frampton, seneschal, infirmarer, and gardener, to similar effect; and that one Alice Taylor, living in the town of Malmesbury, tells the Abbot tales against the monks.

x. ——— of Richard Pilton, of Anthony Malmsbury, sub-sacrist and sub-almoner, of similar disorders; and that Alice Taylor is often in the Abbot's kitchen and brewhouse.

xi. ——— of Richard Glastonbury, under-cook, against the same Alice Taylor, who sows discord in the house;—and that the tailor and laundress do not keep the clothes in good order.

xii.—xvi. ——— of John Calne, cook, of Thomas Gloucester, of John Horsley, of Thomas Stanlegh, sub-sacrist, of Thomas Puryton; to similar effect.

xvii. ——— of Robert Sodbury, W. Wynhecomb, Will. Bristow, William Lee, Roger Herthury, W. Bisley, John London, Th. Froceter, Rob. Elmore, in one; to the same effect.

1527.

MONASTERY OF MALMESBURY—cont.

xviii. Draft sentence of the visitor, pronouncing A, B, C, D, &c. to have incurred the crime and guilt of contumacy.

xix. Draft instrument delegating the power of visitation from the abbot of Westminster to the abbot of St. Peter's, Gloucester.

xx. Injunctions laid upon the abbot of Malmesbury by the visitor.

xxi. A list of monks belonging to the house, 34 in number. (Vellum.) Endorsed "Rebeldes," with the names of the refractory monks, in the above list.

Lat., pp. 12. Endd.

20 Dec. 3679. JO. CARD. OF LORRAINE to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. L. H. 2.] In behalf of John Le Baillif, merchant of Rouen. Paris, 20 Dec.

i. 145.

Signed.

B. M.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: "Rmo., etc., D. Card. Ebor., &c., legato."

21 Dec. 3680. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. ix. 109.

B. M.

Received yesterday his letter by Thadeus. Has provided for the safe conveyance of Wolsey's letters to Gregory, and has caused Lautrec to write to him and Paule Camyne, whom he has sent to the Pope.

He told Jerningham, as a secret for none but Wolsey, that he has heard that the Pope is fully determined to keep his appointment with his enemies; and the duke of Ferrara fears his Holiness will not incline unto him, according to the League. Lautrec hopes, however, that the Pope will before long enter the League. The King's and Wolsey's advice will influence him more to do so than the French king's, or any other person's. Has told Lautrec the purpose of the visit of Mr. Secretary and Casale to the Pope, and promised that he shall hear from time to time of the progress of the King's affair. He said that the importance and secrecy of the affairs was manifest to him, and that it had been shown to him by cardinal Cibo. Wonders at this, unless Casale told the Cardinal. Knows that they are often in company. Dares not write very important news, as his letters pass through so many hands, and he has no cipher. Lautrec asked yesterday if he had a cipher, as he wished to send some important news. Bologna, 21 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2.

21 Dec. 3681. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to SIR JOHN RUSSELL.

R. O.

Thanks him for his letter, dated London, 6th inst., directing him to set about the accomplishment of my lord Cardinal's letters, which he has endeavoured to do. Lautrec arrived on the 19th at Bologna, where he is waiting for 6,000 lanceknights. After their arrival, when once he has sure knowledge from the Pope of his entry into the League, he will set forward with diligence. Bononia, 21 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "Mr. Jernegan, the 21 day of December 1527."

22 Dec. 3682. GREGORY CASALE to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. ix. 210.

B. M.

Found the Pope miserable and alone, few of his household remaining. The archbishop of Capua is at Capua; the bishop of Verona has gone to Verona to lead a solitary life there with the bishop of Chieti, which has greatly displeased the court. The protonotary Gianbara has gone to France, carrying the hat for the Chancellor; he will then go to England, and finally to Spain. The French secretary will go with him. They have well performed Wolsey's wishes. The Pope says that he has been expecting Lautrec's arrival, and for that reason prolonged the negotiations with the Imperialists, and endeavored to produce discord amongst them, not without great danger to himself and the hostages. He says he would have feared nothing if he had been taken to Garetta, for that would have caused the ruin of the Imperialists; but when he knew that Lautrec was waiting for the Germans, he thought it best to agree to those conditions, which, heavy as they were, he could not escape, as the Spaniards said he would have to give nothing of his own, but only what was theirs, for they asked for the tenths of Naples, and the creation of four cardinals. His Holiness now seems to desire nothing but peace.

1527.

Candillo and Casale declared to him all that Lautrec had ordered them. To ascertain his intentions, offered him the services of Lautrec, and showed him what power he had to resist the enemy. Advised him to give no more money, and to make void the creation of the cardinals, or at least delay it until Lautrec was in Sienna, and before the Spaniards could get out of Rome, which would ensure victory. He answered that the first payment could not be delayed, as part was already exacted. As to the rest of the money, he said nothing distinctly, but that he would consider further before he altered what was already fixed. Have obtained no help from him, only good advice. His intentions are good, but he dares not show them. He would not write in his own name to Lautrec, except to promise assistance in treating of peace. Believes that if Lautrec advances, the Pope will do all he wants, but if not, he will do nothing. Has written three letters to Wolsey, and has not heard of their arrival. Orvieto, 22 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Lat., pp. 4.

22 Dec. 3683 ITALY.

Vr. Rix. 212.

R. M.

Pocock, i. 35.

Extract from the letters of Gregory [Casale], dated Orvie[to], 22 Dec.

The Pope sends the bishop of Manfredonia (Spartianus) to Venice, to demand Ravenna, Corvia, and the salt. He has also charged Gambarà to speak on the same subject to Lautrec. He will not confirm the agreement with the duke of Ferrara, but promises his ambassador that he will not deny the confirmation. He wishes the money to be demanded which is due from the city of Piacenza to Lautrec. Has procured the sending of ambassadors from Bologna, to desire the Pope to go thither. There is great scarcity here, and they fear the Imperialists will besiege the town. His Holiness has such dread of the Spaniards, that he dares not go thither for fear of their suspecting him.

A Roman noble has just come with the news that the Spaniards will never leave Rome, and intend to fortify it; and he therefore begged the Pope not to pay the money promised to them, for they will observe nothing. He also described a safe method of killing all the Spaniards in the old town (burgo), which could be done by 4,000 foot. Only two things hindered it, the cowardice and sloth of our army, and the unwillingness of the Pope to declare against them. Without him it could not be done, for they must pass through the castle of St. Angelo. Will again urge it on the Pope.

Lat., pp. 2.

3684. LAUTREC to [FRANCIS I.]

V. R. R. xiv 2

R. M.

"Le conte Hug[ues] des deux lettres qu il ma rapporte que les princes ses allies . .
. et que de son couste il sera contre loy vous ne pavez avoir la paix. Sire, il fant . .
. essient, affin d'abaisser votre ennemy et q messigneurs voz enfans.

"Notredit Sainet Pere a entre autre choses expr Conte 1527.

LAUTREC to [FRANCIS I.]—cont.

Hugues, si vous, Sire, ne sachiez sa delivra[nce] naviez point envoye devers luy, non faisant ca que y avez envoye."

(Memorandum in the margin, in the same hand, that the King has already sent the Sieur de Longueval, his master of the household, to visit the Pope since his deliverance.)

"Tout ce que le Pape craint, Sire, est que vous a et a envoye le prothonotaire de Gambre devers v[ous avec] propos de faire la paix, afin den sentir votre inten[cion] . . . Sire, encores que feussiez en bon propos de la dite paix conclusion d'icelle, que luy devez tenir parolles a entendre que vous voulez pousser ceste emprins[e] et ne luy en declairer entierement votre intenc[ion] jusques a ce] que votre cas soit du tout assuree."

Mutilated. Endd.: "Deschiffrement de la lettre de Mons. de Lautrec."

22 Dec.

3685. ANGUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Hopes he will second the request of James and his mother, who have written to the King "by direction" of Archibald Douglas, the treasurer, Angus's uncle, for a licence to Alex. Kay to buy grain in England. Edinburgh, 22 Dec. Signed: Ar^d erl of Angus.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

23 Dec.

3686. The DIVORCE.

R. O.

Herbert, 118.

1. Proposed bull of dispensation for Henry VIII., in case his marriage with Katharine, his brother's widow, be pronounced unlawful, to marry another, even if she have contracted marriage with another man, provided it be not consummated, and even if she be of the second degree of consanguinity, or of the first degree of affinity, ex quocumque licito seu illicito coitu; in order to prevent uncertainty in the succession, which in past times has been the occasion of war. Orvieto, 10 kl. Jan. 1527, 5 Clement VII.*

Copy in Knight's hand, pp. 3. Add.: To the King's Highness. Endd.: A conditional dispensation for the King's Majesty from the bishop of Rome.

R. O.

Pocock, t. 22.

2. Another copy, similar to § 3, with comments in the margin, in the same hand as the text, complaining of the preamble, and desiring it should be expunged as reflecting unworthily on the King.

The writer contends that the dispensation should be unconditional, without reference to the dissolution of the present marriage, &c.

Pp. 11, in Gambard's hand. Endd.

Tib. C. x. 72.

R. M.

Wilkins, 111.
707.

3. Modern copy of the bull, dated inaccurately 16 kal. Jan., as in Herbert, with variations from § 1.

24 Dec.

3687. JERNINGHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 28.

Count Guydo and the gentleman who was last in England have arrived at Bologna from the Pope. Neither I nor Mons. Lautrec can perceive that the Pope will enter the League, nor has he urged Lautrec to go back or advance. The King's secret, committed to Mr. Secretary and Signor Gregory, has not been so covertly kept but that it is known to the writer and others. It is also known to the Emperor, by a servant of the Queen's who went from England to Spain, and he has written to the Pope in no wise to consent. Bologna, 24 Dec. Signed.

Add. Endd.

1527.

25 Dec.

3688 DARECY.

R. O.

Sold to Mr. Darcy, 25 Dec. anno xix., a frontlet of crimson velvet, lined with black satin, 9s.; another of black velvet, lined with tawny satin, 8s.; a gold front, 26s. 8d.; a black velvet cap, 13s. 4d.; a gold caul, 6s. 8d.; a gold fillet, 12d.; a black velvet frontlet, lined with tawny satin, 6s. 8d.; a black velvet frontlet, lined with crimson satin, 8s.; three "koveys," garnished with gold, 10s.=4*l.* 9s. 4d.

P. 1.

26 Dec.

3689 H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

At his first coming to Yorkshire, went to my lord of Richmond, then at Pomfret Castle. Was so well received that his dulled wit cannot disclose how much he was gratified with the Duke's good qualities. Showed Magnus Wolsey's articles, who said they were so well devised that it was hard for him to find that anything had been omitted likely to advance the object of the Duke's charge. After leaving him, however, Magnus sent him a little memorial, which he encloses. Went, as instructed, to Newcastle. Arrived on St. Thomas' Even, and was met by lord Dacres and those whom Wolsey had appointed to be of the Duke's council. Declared the King's pleasure to the gentlemen, who promised to advance it to the utmost. Caused proclamations to be made throughout Northumberland, and took recognizances of every gentleman and headman. Sent Sir William Evers to make proclamation in Ribblesdale, and Thomas Erington in Tynedale, for their coming in within eight days. Came to Alnwick on Christmas Eve. Desires Wolsey to send thanks to Master Chancellor, Sir Thomas Tempest, and Master Bowes, who have remained with him, studying what was to be done for the reformation of justice. Has not yet heard from Leonard Musgrave. Does not send the book of the fees that he should give within this country, because he has set every gentleman where he can do most annoyance to the King's outlaws. Will make the book as he sees how they acquit themselves. Alnwick Castle, 26 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

26 Dec.

3690. LEE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The time has not yet served to speak of your pensions. If De Bouclans had not helped, your Grace's money of Palence could not have been levied. I shall need a special proxy for the 30,000 ducats for the King from Milan. There will be no necessity to speak to the Emperor if Francis Sforza be restored. In the proxy to be sent, let my lord of Worcester's name be inserted. Wishes to know if the peace be concluded. Burgos, 26 Dec.

Hol., cipher, deciphered by Tuke, p. 1. Add.

26 Dec.

3691. DU BELLAY to the GREAT MASTER OF FRANCE.

Le Grand, III.
73.

Is awaiting the coming of De Brusse. On Tuesday Sansac arrived with his three terrelets and a falcon, which have evidently been admirably trained. Yesterday the Legate had much company at dinner, but Du Bellay had a cold, and could not go. Sansac was present, and after dinner made your recommendations, and got leave to go today and present the birds. Carvoisin also returned four days ago. He will go to Canet (Kent?), and afterwards take his departure with his beasts, which he has had great difficulty in obtaining, there are so few.

Expects news both from Spain and Italy. Wolsey heard six days ago of the Pope's liberation by letters of Dr. Kenit (Knight), written at Rome on the 2nd inst. You know what importance he wishes to attach to this matter; and I think it would have been well, if, in communicating this news, you had made demonstration of joy. The ambassadors here are very anxious to hear from Spain, hoping for peace. Those of Venice never go to the Legate without consulting me, and I think it as well to entertain them as best I can. After your departure I began to lay the foundation of a negotiation (chaffaulder ung propos) with the Venetian secretary, and have got him to confess to me that, the Signory not being compelled by the treaty which was made in Spain to give the Emperor, besides the arrears of 60,000 crowns a year, a considerable additional sum, for which the Emperor had pressed them, he is sure they are not bound to deny Francis a loan for the deliverance of his children. He suggested 100,000 crowns, and showed himself willing to go still further.

1527.

DU BELLAY to the GREAT MASTER OF FRANCE—cont.

Has mentioned in other letters the arrival of Staphileus, who was very well received by the King and Wolsey, and has done good service in promoting the amity with France. Believe they will send him to Rome. He will return to you after these feasts. I hear Master Roussel (Russell) will go shortly to Rome. There are not many noblemen at present about the King, most of them being at home, keeping order in the country. The earl of Northumberland has gone against this banished man,* who has done so much mischief. I fear he is terribly young, and little experienced in arms. There is some talk of making viscount Rocheford duke of Somerset. Sansac takes your book to him. The marshal of Calais is put in the chamber (mis en la chambre). Bryand is not yet replaced (remys).

Does not write to the King or Madame, that his despatch may not excite too much attention. Sends a cipher which he has come upon by accident, to which Nicholas doubtless will be able to find a key. London, 26 Dec.

P.S.—After closing his letters this evening Carvoysin returned from Greenwich. Sansac remains till tomorrow to exhibit the flight of the birds, which the King has been much pleased to see, and has shown to the ladies.

French. Add.

3692. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. i. 188. Sends the minute of a letter to be written in Henry's own hand to the French king, in answer to those he lately wrote to Henry. Thinks as things stand the King should not write to him otherwise. Requests that on being written it be sent to Wolsey, for the expedition of the French king's servant. Westminster, Friday. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the King's most noble grace, Defensor of the Faith.

ii. [Henry VIII. to Francis I.]

St. P. i. 188. Has received by the bearer the birds sent by Francis pour le vol du heron. Thanks him for remembering his pleasures. Will endeavour to recompense his good will, Francis being so well disposed to the continuance of the amity.

Draft, Fr., p. 1.

27 Dec.

3693. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 29. In my other letters by Taddeo, I have instructed you fully of the King's wishes and the dispensation to be obtained, of which I send you a clean copy in the form in which it is to be expedited. I also send you a clean copy of a commission directed to me in the form and style you will see by the copy. They will require nothing more than the Pope's signature. How you are to conduct yourself, you will learn from my letter, taking with you the King's and my letters to the Pope, to the bishop of Verona, and the cardinal S. Quatuor (Pucci). The King considers how important it is in these proceedings to avoid all occasions of suspicion and scandal, and exclude all evil reports. For this reason he thinks it would be advisable, and confer some additional gravity on the process, if Campeggio, Trano or Farnese were sent into England with sufficient commission to determine this cause. So all objection which might be urged by the Queen against me as the King's subject, and all evil surmises, might be avoided; and I doubt not but his Holiness, for various prudential reasons, will consent, considering especially that, in the state in which this kingdom now is, the King could not be in equity compelled to have his suit referred to a place to which none of his subjects could have safe access. Moreover, the proofs must depend upon witnesses, who must be examined in England. I cannot believe that his Holiness will offer any obstacle; wherefore the King and I earnestly request that, whether the previous commission directed to me, and other matters sent by Taddeo, be granted or not, the Pope will by all means send some legate hither.

1527.

Should it so happen that you have made no motion to the Pope of the first commission before you receive these, then first of all propose to him to send the legate. If there be any delay on the part of the Pope or the Cardinals, or an intention to send one not favourable to the King, then urge the prior commission. Tell the Pope that haste is of the utmost importance, and delays are dangerous. If you have got the first commission, send it with all speed, and urge that a legate be sent without revocation of the prior commission. So it will be in the King's power to proceed according to the speed of the legate or otherwise. He intends to put off till the coming of the legate the final decision, which can then be given conjointly with me according to the form of the commission; and this mode of proceeding appears more honorable and impartial, and satisfactory to all parties, and the King is much inclined to follow it, except it occasion great delays. Consequently, unless you have already obtained the former commission, urge that the legate be sent with all speed. But get the commission by all means, and send it here, and write frequently, sparing neither money nor couriers. But do not let an Imperialist cardinal be sent, but ask that the legacy be given to Campeggio, or some one like Trano or Farnese. Assent to no other.

If the Pope proposes to send a legate to inquire of the facts, and reserve sentence to himself, without conceding a commission, tell him that the cause has been duly discussed and examined already, and the King cannot assent to this course without the greatest prejudice to the jurisdiction of the Church. You must follow strictly these instructions, and avoid delay. Urge the Cardinal, who is appointed, to make diligent speed, and tell him he shall be liberally provided for. Let him not excuse himself for want of money. The despatch now sent to you has been sent also to Knight and the prothonotary Gambara, that either may act as he sees his opportunity. Strive who can do best, and by all means get the dispensation, of which I again send you a copy. If you cannot obtain an interview with the Pope, consult with Gambara.

London, 27 Dec. 1527. Signed.

P.S.—Suggests other cardinals who might be sent,—as De Cesis, De Monte and Sienna, as favorable to the King.

Lat. Add. Endd.

3694. The DIVORCE.

Bull proposed to be submitted to the Pope for his signature, touching the dispensation. As the King of England 18 years ago was married to Katharine at the persuasion of the counsellors, and on the force of a pre-

VULG. XII. 178.

R. M.

Burnet, IV. 48.*

* The references are taken from Mr. Pussok's edition of Burnet. It will be seen that I differ both from Burnet and his recent editor as to the dates of some of these documents.

1527.

The Divorce—cont.

tended Papal dispensation; on a further examination of the ecclesiastical canons, and as the dispensation was granted on false pretences, and for this and other reasons appears to be invalid, &c. &c., we, considering these things, the anxiety of the King's conscience, and his services to the Holy See, appoint cardinal Wolsey for his justice and his virtue, with ————• to proceed conjointly in this cause, with a proviso that if one cannot act the other may. You are to proceed summarily sine strepitu et figura judicii to inquire into the said bull, and if you jointly or severally are satisfied of its invalidity, to declare the marriage between Henry and Katharine null and void, allowing the parties so separated to enter upon a new marriage citra omnem recusationem aut appellationis interpositionem. By authority of this present you are to override all canonical defects and objections, declaring the issue of the first marriage legitimate, if you think fit, as well as that of the second. Whatever is done in this matter by you, judicially or extrajudicially, we shall ratify in the most valid and efficacious form, and never infringe it.

*Lat. Draft.27 Dec. 3695. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received divers of his letters, dated Greenwich, 30 Nov., for the apprehending of Sir Wm. Lisle and others. Will do what he wishes, as he has written at length by Leonard Musgrave. Edinburgh, 27 Dec. Signed.
P. 1. Add. Endd.: The king of Scotts, 28 Dec. 1527.

27 Dec. 3696. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received his letters of Nov. 30. Has caused his wardens and officers to take pains for the apprehension of Sir Wm. Lisle and his accomplices, but they have not been successful, as they do not make continual residence in Scotland, and are favored by the people of the English Border. Will cause the officers to make fresh efforts. Edinburgh, 27 Dec. Signed.
P. 1. Add. Endd.: The King of Scots, 26 Dec. 1527.

27 Dec. 3697. GEO. DUKE OF SAXONY to HENRY VIII.

Titus, B. 1. 237.

R. M.

Received on St. Thomas's Day, 21 Dec., his letters, dated 31 Oct., at Greenwich, with his answer to letters from Luther, which were sent from Cologne by Herman Rinck. Thanks him for his approval of his plans. Intends to do what he can to preserve religion against the Lutheran heresy. Is glad the King has not listened to his endeavors to draw him into his sect. Many of them will change their opinion when they see that he cannot be persuaded, and so zealously opposes them. Sent the King's answer to Luther at Wittenberg, on the 23rd Dec., with letters from himself. He merely answered that he had nothing to write back. Hopes this impious doctrine will be removed or restrained. Dresden, St. John the Evangelist, 27 Dec. 1527. Signed.

*Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.27 Dec. 3698. JAMES BUTLER to the EARL OF ORMOND.

R. O.

Wrote of the peace he had taken between his brethren-in-law, Sir Jas. Fitz Piers and Thos. Butler. Six days after it was taken, Sir Jas. practised with Desmond. Would not believe it, till he heard that some of Desmond's retinue were in Sir James's country. On trying the matter out, found a gentleman of the Earl's in a pile of Sir James's. Took him prisoner, and commanded Sir James, on his allegiance, to deliver the rest; which he refused. He then began to break the peace with Thos. Butler, notwithstanding the King's command. Expects he will soon take open part with Desmond, with whose kinsmen he daily communicates, promising that the Earl will abide his award between him and them. He receives letters from Kildare, who says the King is better lord to him than ever. Sir James expects Kildare will be deputy, when he will be sure of pardon. Kildare's privy councillors have been soliciting Ormond's friends of the Irishry to make war on the English pale, "in hope that he should the rather come home." This some of them confessed to the writer in presence of my Lady, the baron Grace, and Sir Philip Grace. If so, "it is but folly to you or any other t[hat] intenes to do the Kinges grace trew servyce to dwell out of this] land." Kildare, before he went to England, took oaths of each of the Council apart, none of them knowing that the other was sworn, to write in his favor; but till his balance weigh up or down no one will testify the truth. Cannot write for shame the reports they make of Ormond in Kildare's country. "The cause of my coming into this country was prevented afore, specially in to[w] things] that conserved therll of Desmond, by whos means y[e may] judg as please you. How be yt the Observant Frere that was in England with therll of Kildare at my comyn[g] was sathens at Asckytyn with therll of Desmond." His business is hard to make out, except by conjecture from the example of friars in past time. "Your lordship knows what I mean." Begs him to remind Wolsey of his instructions sent by Jas. Whytt. Waterford, St. John's Day after Christmas.

1527.

Hol., pp. 3. Add.: To my right honorable lord and father the Earl of Ormond. Endd.: Jamys Butler, the 24th^e day of December 1527."

28 Dec.

R. O.

3699. JAMES BUTLER to HENRY VIII.

In revenge for his sundry roads upon the earl of Desmond, the latter on the 4th Dec. invaded his father's land, and took away a great number of cattle. Some of Butler's retinue pursued and skirmished with Desmond's rear. On hearing of it, Butler rode to intercept the Earl's retreat, who took flight into the castle of Dongarvan, "a large strong garrison," and barely escaped him. Laid siege to the castle, hoping to starve them out. "And thither came to me Cormoge Ooge, and Sir Thomas and Gerot of Desmond." The castle is invincible, without a great army and great ordnance; nevertheless Butler and his retinue daily assaulted it, and skirmished with those within. One day his horse was shot dead under him. Another night went privately reconnoitering with five others, when he intercepted a party attempting to escape, took their captain, Desmond's uncle's son, and another horseman, prisoners, and chased the rest back into the castle, taking from them most of their horses and harness, and slaying their footmen. After this Desmond and 40 of his company managed to escape by sea to Youghal. The rest offered to surrender the castle to Sir Thomas of Desmond, the Earl's uncle, but by advice of his council Butler refused; on which Sir Thomas left him and went to the Earl. Heard next that Desmond had procured the Brenes to come over the Shenyn to destroy his father's lands, so that he was obliged to remove the siege. The Brenes are the strongest band of Irishmen in the land, and would desist if the earl of Kildare wished them, being his "waged men," but it is evident he means them to remain in confederacy with Desmond. Has never been assisted by Kildare, but the reverse, in these enterprises against Desmond. Sir Jas. Butler, whom the King commanded to desist from his confederacy with Desmond, is now more troublesome than ever, owing to Kildare. He receives Desmond's spies and guides in his castles. Found some of them in a pile of the said Sir James, and has proved

* St. John's Day, however, was the 27th.

1527.

JAMES BUTLER to HENRY VIII.—cont.

against him the succouring of others, whom he refuses to deliver. Waterford, 28 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 3, mutilated. Add. Endd.

28 Dec.

3700. JAMES BUTLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect. Desires credence for Jas. Wite and Rob. Cowly. Begs Wolsey to move the King to despatch his father home without reproach. Waterford, 28 Dec.

Hol., pp. 4, mutilated. Add. Endd.: "Jamys Butler, the 28th of December 1527."

28 Dec.

3701. JOHN CASALE, the Prothonotary, to WOLSEY.

Nero, B.VII.79.

B. M.

From his brother's letters Wolsey will see what answer the Pope gave to him and Paulus Camillus. He thinks he cannot avoid making the first payment to the Imperialists, as the money is already in their hands. About the rest he said nothing certain, except to promise his aid for treating of peace; from which they conjecture that he is still afraid of declaring himself more openly, as he does not see that Lautrec has advanced further, but, if Lautrec will do this boldly, that he will obtain all he desires from the Pope, and gain the victory. The Venetians (hi) are displeased that Lautrec will not proceed as he ought, not knowing the cause of his slowness, and earnestly desire the kings of France and England, and Wolsey, to urge him on. He says he means to wait for the Almaines coming out of France, who, it is said, have come by the Po to Bondeno, near Bologna and Ferrara, where they will disembark, and immediately receive their wages. He wishes also to have with him Camillus Ursinus, a noble Roman, and leader of the Roman troops, on account of his knowledge of the neighbourhood of that city; and wishes him to be general of the soldiers with him, "sub his D. p^{mo} merentes." These Lords, however, refused this, as they are using his assistance in Lombardy, but Casale has obtained it from them. As an agreement has lately been made with the duke of Ferrara and the marquis of Mantua, and a garrison has been left at Milan, there is nothing left but for Lautrec to proceed. In his last letters he said he wished to wait for Frederic de Bozolo, who was in the camp of the duke of Urbino in Tuscany, to consult with him, and it is expected he will arrive during these festivities.

Hears from Hungary that the Vaivode has a triple army, composed of Tartars and Valachs, but that he was delayed by the death of the king of Poland, who left him protector, and he therefore went to see the sons of the said King and the kingdom. The Archduke has returned from Buda to Possonia, a state on the borders of Germany. Many of the Hungarian nobles daily desert him. Venice, 28 Dec. 1527. Signed.

Pp. 2, Lat. Add. Endd.

3702. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Transmits a letter received 15 days ago from Sir John Heydon, on which Norfolk wrote him his mind how he should order himself. Sends also another letter just received from him, "after I had sent forth certain does to your Grace," by which Wolsey will see how many of the thieves are taken. Learns from Thos. Leche that there are 12 still untaken. Has written to Heydon to attach them all, and expects most of them will be had within five days. Thinks if two were sent to London, and put to pain in the Tower, Wolsey would hear of a good number. Leche thinks two of the King's guards, having a groat a day, are of the band. Advises him to grant Sir John a good delivery, that, when a good number of the thieves are taken, they may be put to execution ; all but those Wolsey would like sent up. Heyden has done his part well. Wolsey should order Elys, baron of the Exchequer, to apprehend his servant, Robert Coke, so that he may be examined. He knows several of the thieves, and enticed some to rob his master's own house. Stoke, this Saturday.

1527.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. : To my lord Legate's good grace.

29 Dec.

3703. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received the commission addressed to himself, the abbot of Bury, and others. Sent this day for Sir Rob. Drury and Sir Will. Walgrave to consult what should be done about it. Examined under oath of secrecy seven of the most substantial men of Lancham, whether there were any persons in that neighbourhood who used seditious words or secret assemblies. They all said they knew of none who had misbehaved himself since Norfolk was there last, except one John Porter, whom they had put out of the town. They had never known the young people better conducted or better set in occupation, and they trusted no disorder should ever again be heard of. Sent, as directed, serjeant Wentworth to the vicechancellor of Cambridge, for the priest, Sir Lewes, that dwelled some time with Colt ; who sent word that he had fled to Wales. Will endeavor to find out who were in his company "at the lewd deeds done." Will also send for Porter, and, if he find him culpable, send him up to Wolsey. Begs him to send "an enlargement of the last restraint for butter, cheese, red herrings, sprats, tallow, and tallow candle" to the customers of the ports in Essex, Suffolk and Norfolk ; otherwise many a poor man will be undone. Tells those who complain that Wolsey meant the restraint only for grain. Stoke, St. Thomas's Day in Christmas.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. : To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

29 Dec.

3704. ANGUS to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received his letters, dated Greenwich, 30 Nov., and has heard the report of Leonard Musgrave, by which he learns the King's desire for the repressing of trespassers and the preservation of peace. Will do as he wishes about Sir Wm. Lisle. It is reported that Albany is trying to procure a safe-conduct from Henry to return to trouble Scotland. James desires him to inform Henry that he does not wish him to return. Edinburgh, 29 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. : The chancellor of Scotland, 29 Dec. 1527.

29 Dec.

3705. ANGUS to WOLSEY.

Cal. II. vii. 93.

B. M.

St. F. iv. 484.

Has received his letters, dated Westminster, 3 Dec., commending his good will towards amity, as, now that perpetual peace is established with France, they who would sow discord between James and his uncle are the enemies of all three kingdoms ; and desiring reformation to be made touching the Lises. (Will follow in the steps of his ancestors, who have always fostered peace. Has little cause otherwise to favor France, where he only found collusion and deceit. Albany is said to be soliciting Henry for a safe-conduct to return to Scotland, pretending he has James's consent ; whereas the contrary is true, as James has declared before Leonard Musgraiff. Assures Wolsey he will do his utmost in the matter of the Lises, simply for the King's sake, and leave the reward to his Highness. Holyrood House, 29 Dec. 1527. Signed : Ar^d Chancellor.

Add. Endd.

1527.

29 Dec. 3708. ANGUS to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Is glad to hear of his having come to the Borders, considering the great amity between their ancestors and his late acquaintances with the Earl at London, which may well continue now they are such near neighbours. Hopes to put good order on the Borders. Will observe any diet he pleases for good rule. Desires credence for the bearer, Leonard Musgrave. In the King's palace beside the abbey of Halyrudhouse, 29 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. *Add.*29 Dec. 3707. [WOLSEY] to GHINUCCI and LEE.

R. O.

Hears from Wm. Dickinson, late of Bourdeaux, and others, that one Wm. Yerdylley, late of London, merchant, has fled from Bourdeaux, intending to go to Spain. He owes large sums to several Englishmen, and about 800*l.* to one Ric. Reynolds, of London, who says he cannot pay certain debts to the King till he recovers his money from Yerdylley. Asks them to speak to the Emperor for his arrest if he arrives in those parts. Yorks Place beside Westminster, 29 Dec.

Pp. 2. *Add.*29 Dec. 3708. TAYLOR to WOLSEY.

R. O.

After sealing his letter, these news came by the ambassador of Florence, which impute great blame to the Venetians, for letting 2,000 Spaniards escape from Milan and take Navar (Novara). The Venetians were against Lautrec's marching forwards till he had recovered all the territory of Milan. Paris, 29 Dec. Signed: Jo. T. Mr. of the Rolls.

P. 1. *Add.: To my lord Legate.*29 Dec. 3709. ITALY.

Vit. B. ix. 213.

B. M.

Extract from a letter of the duke of Ferrara, dated 29 [Dec.]

The Duke, on hearing of the Pope's liberation, immediately sent a nobleman to congratulate him, to declare his fidelity, and ask for a ratification of his treaty with the League. Lautrec has asked the Duke for the stipulated money and men, which he has promised to supply when the other articles are performed. His houses at Venice and Florence have not yet been restored to him, nor have those conditions been observed which the Pope was bound to perform on his liberation, nor have the signory of Florence given the ratification. He begs for the influence of the King and Wolsey in obtaining his due. He supposes they will send some one to the Pope now that he is liberated, and requests that the envoy may speak in his favor. It was reported that the Imperialists intended to leave Rome on the 20th Dec., and go to Lombardy. The French fleet has suffered much from the weather. It is not known where the greater part of it is. The same is said of the Venetian fleet. The prince of Orange has returned to the Imperial camp, and the marquis of Guasto, who was in Naples, would not return, as he did not wish to be under the Prince. The Pope insists that the forces of the Holy League shall leave the States of the Church. Lautrec wishes to go towards Orvieto. Scarcity of bread increases.

*Lat., pp. 3. Endd.: Ex literis D. ducis Ferrarie, 9 Dec. 1527.*30 Dec. 3710. HENRY VIII. to LAUTREC, Lieutenant General of the Army in Italy.

R. O.

For the better transmission of news sends Sir John Russell to reside with Lautrec. Begs credence for him. He may also be employed in any other manner that the times shall demand. Will be happy to do whatever is necessary to advance the common cause. Greenwich, 30 Dec. 1527. (Not signed.)

1527.

Fr., p. 1. Add.

30 Dec. 3711. [HENRY VIII. to LOUISA OF SAVOY.]

R. O.

Credence for Russell, whom he is sending to Italy, and who will declare his charge to her and her son.

Draft, Fr., p. 1. Endd.: Matiere in French.

10 Dec. 3712. CORN.

R. O.

Session held at Marham, in the hundred of Nass Burgi (Peterborough), Northt., 30 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII., before Sir William Fitzwilliam, sen., John Turnor, and George Quarles, the King's commissioners, for the view of corn, &c. Here follow four lists of constables.

i. Certificate of the above commissioners and John Mollesworth and Edward Grenchall, for the two hundreds of Nease of Burgh, and Wyllowbrock, giving a list of the owners of grain in those districts, notifying the total amount in each owner's hands, allowing him a certain amount for seed, and for the consumption of his household for 36 weeks (which consumption is reckoned at 2 qrs. 2 bushels for each person), and showing how much remains to be sold weekly during 32 weeks following. The number of owners in the Nease of Burgh is 54. The total amount of corn to be sold is 1626½ qrs. and 1 bushel. Three persons are presented as engrossers and regraters of corn, by the constables of Helpston, Makesey, and Peykyrek. One of them is the vicar of Makesey. Signed by Fitzwilliam, Turnor, and Quarles.—The number of owners of grain in Wyllowbroke is 38, and the amount of corn to be sold is 310½ qrs. 1 bushel. Signed by Mollesworth and Grenchall.

The commissioners have made the night search in all inns and ale-houses with the utmost secrecy, and examined and punished all suspected persons. They have commanded officers and other discreet persons to search twice a week or oftener, in inns, "blind hostries and suspect houses," and bring suspect persons before the commissioners. They have enquired if any suspect persons have gone away without being apprehended. They have punished and expelled all valiant beggars and idle persons. They have bound all keepers of blind and suspect inns to keep good rule in their houses, and not receive any persons but such as they shall answer for. They have enquired of all offenders against the statutes about keeping hand guns, crossbows and greyhounds. They have searched all barns and garneries; and after deducting the amounts necessary for the sustenance of the owners' households, have commanded them to bring their corn to market within the county in which they reside, or near to it. They have examined all head officers as to grain they supposed to be concealed.

Pp. 29.

31 Dec. 3713. [WOLSEY] to LAUTREC.

Vit. B. ix. 201.

R. M.

Congratulates him on his success. The King is determined to give him all the assistance possible. He sends Sir John Russell to remain with him. Westminster, 31 Dec. 1527.

Fr., p. 1.

31 Dec. 3714. ALBANY to CLEMENT VII.

Theiner, p. 559

Expresses his regret at the troubles of the Pope, and his delight that the Pope has escaped his enemies. Details the sufferings of the niece of the duke of Urbino, Albany's relative, who has been expelled from Florence.

1527.

ALBANY to CLEMENT VII.—cont.

The family of Douglas have taken the king of Scots prisoner, and killed many of the Scotch nobles, applying the state revenues to their own purposes. Has explained the state of affairs to cardinal Salviati and count de Carpi, for whom he begs credence. Paris, prid. kl. Jan. 1527.

Lat.

31 Dec. 3715. The DIVORCE.

Vit. B. x. 195.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 37.

"Ex g[ra]tis D. Gregorii, u[ltimo] Decembris,"* ex Orvieto."

The Pope has expedited the second commission, with which the Secretary was content, as we write fully to the Legate. Great labour had to be used to get the Pope to grant it; not because he does not wish to please the King and the Legate, but because he never was in greater fear of the Spaniards, who hold all the lands of the Church, "et suo judicio Ga[lli] non videntur quicquam boni velle agere." The Friar General forbade the Pope to grant this to the King. [He fears] that when the Emperor knows of it, the Imperialists will ruin and even kill him, unless the King helps him. When he was advised not to hesitate, and to put himself entirely into the hands of the King and the Legate, he replied that he did so, for he had exposed himself to death, unless the King helped him; that is, if the Emperor is allowed to possess more of Italy than the kingdom of Naples, he will be master of everything. The present is the best opportunity for resisting him, and the French will take it, if the King will help them. The Pope thinks that, if it is determined to act, money must be contributed, on condition that the French proceed to liberate the States of the Church, and do not hesitate at the crossing of any river, or at the siege of any town, saying that they have not a sufficient force. In that case, Sir Gregory would not advise the contribution to be paid. For the sake of more security, and to show the Pope that nothing is omitted in his favor, it would be advisable to do nothing without consultation between him and the French. Truly it is a pitiable thing to leave this miserable Pope "in potestate canum." Unless Lautrec does all that he has so often been warned to do, the Pope and all Italy will be immediately in the Emperor's power. Advises that a reward should be given to card. SS. Quatuor, who acts most kindly, and has great influence with the Pope. "Ait quod postquam res fuerit confecta quascunque dispensationes declaratoria[s] quas] voluerimus petere, et omnia efficiet, modo extra manus Hispanorum, et omnia intellige a secretario tum de cardinalis SS. Quatuor con tum etiam de ceteris omnibus."

Promises to do all he can to serve Wolsey, and asks assistance for himself and his family in their misery. If peace is made, the Pope [wishes Ravenna] and Cervia to be restored, and also Modena (Mufina), as he will not ratify the capitulation with [the duke] of Ferrara. He begs the King not to compel him to give up these towns, on the plea that it is for the good of peace. During the day, spoke only of this; but at night, lest the Spaniards here might suspect anything, conducted the Secretary to his Holiness.

Desires his correspondent to tell the Legate that he can have the commission brought by the Secretary, under lead, if he wishes.

The Pope will remit to the King his difference with the Florentines. Although he cares much about it, he says it is not of great importance. About the other towns, he earnestly asks the King's help.

The Pope, before granting this brief, had many altercations about it; and said, weeping, that it would be his ruin, for he was living at the mercy of the Imperialists, who hold all the State; he had but little hope from the

* Supplied from modern marginal note.

1527.

* f. 189 b.

French: the Florentines desired nothing more than his destruction; his sole hope of life was from the Emperor, which will now be destroyed, and the Imperialists will seek a cause to destroy him; they will say that he moved the King to this from hatred to the Emperor,* in support of which he produced many reasons. Answered and encouraged him as well as he could. He then asked Casale to swear to him whether the King would desert him or not. Satisfied him about this, and then he granted the brief, saying that he put himself in the King's hands, and that he knew he should be drawn into perpetual war with the Emperor, in whom he will never more trust.

His Holiness desired him to write separately to the Legate, that he had incurred this danger, trusting in his goodness, otherwise he would not have dared; and that in all things Wolsey might dispose of his Holiness and the Papacy as if he were Pope himself. Is a useful assistant in this, for the Pope considers that he has done good service in the wars.

Lat., pp. 5, mutilated. In Vannes' hand.

31 Dec.

R. O.

3716. KNIGHT and SIR GREGORY CASALE to ———.

"Reverendo Monsignore," you shall send, with all diligence, by the couriers of the Signory, to the proveditor of Pisa 2,030 scudi, with orders that they be given to Marco Antonio Giustiniano, with whom we have left orders for its disposal. Orvieto, 31 Dec. 1527.

Ital., p. 1. In the hand of Sir Gregory, who has also signed for Knight. Endd.: A bill of Doctor Knyght and Sir Gregory de Casalis.

31 Dec.

3717. MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 415.

B. M.

" (au Roy m)on maistre, et pareillement a madame vostre ayens d'en entendre le contenu, et m'ont commande ex-pres[s]ement vous dire quilz vous remercient si tres affectueusement qu'il leur est possible de la [bonne et] loyalle affection et amytié qu'ilz congnoissent que continuellement [vous avez portees tant] a eulx que au bien, repos, honneur et augmentation de leurs affair[es] que vous vueillez estre content de perseverer a leur faire entendre to[ut] ce que vous congnoistrez qui pourra servir a la conduicte de leurs dites affaires. C[ar] en toutes les autres choses qui leur pourront toucher et cy apres survenir, ilz [desirent] eurtout d'avoir vostre bon conseil et advis, plus que d'homme qui soit [au monde] vivant, pour selon cela eulx conduire et gouverner. Et de ma part [je] vous supplie qu'il vous plaise me faire tant de grace et d'bonne[r]
. ordinairement de ce qu'il vous semblera que je devray faire pour lentre[tenement et] conservation de l'amytié de ces deux princes. Enquoy faisant outre lobl[igation] que j'auray perpetuellement envers vous, vous povez estre seur, Monseigneur, [de] mon vray et loyal devoir, tout ainsi que si costoit pour gaingner Parad[is] de combien importe et est utile et profitable a toute la republique chr[estienne] dentre lesdits deux princes, estre sur toutes les choses mortelles en ce mo[ment]
. et inviolablement gardee et observee; vous suppliant, Monseigneur, que s[i] jamais vous voyez que je vous puisse faire service qui vous soit agreable en que vous me vueillez faire ceste grace que de m'y employer, et vous le feray d'aussi bon cueur que homme de mon estat qui soit vivant

"Au demourant, Monseigneur, quant a ce quil vous plaist me [demander la raison du sejour] que a fait Mons. de Lautrec a Parme, lequel sejour le [Roy vostre maistre et vous] trouve et trouvez tres estrange, pour les causes et r[aisons] qui sont la dessus dites] et declairees en vostre dite lettre, entendez me que si ledit sieur de Lautrec, durant le te[m]ps que 1527.

MONTMORENCY TO WOLSEY—cont.

les ennemis tenoient] nostredit St. Pere en leurs mains, eust fait sem[blant de marcher en av]ant avec son armee quil na fait la finalle et derniere
. [e]stoit pour eulx mieulx asseurer de la personne de sa dite Sainctete et le de despence de le mener dedans Gayette, et si cela eust eu lieu v[ous pouvez tenir] Monseigneur, pour chose veritable que la delivrance et liberte dicell[uy Saint Pere] ne se fust pas ensuivy si facile-ment quelle a fait; laquelle liber[te nostredit Saint] Pere ne recognoist ne tient estre venue ne procedee ainsi que avez pe[nse] ledit brief, sinon des deux roys nos sieurs et maistres, et pour la craincte que lesdits ennemys ont eue deladite armee. Et quant a faire
. ledit sieur de Lautrec en avant, je vous advertys, Monseigneur, que en cela i[1] heure ne temps, comme il a dernièrement escript au Roy mon maistre, e sinon responce de nostredit St. Pere de ce que sadite Sainctete luy manderait Paul Camille de Trevoise et par Messire Gregoire de Casal quil avo devers elle, car vous savez, Monseigneur, quil est requis sur toutes ch[oses que] ledit sieur de Lautrec se conduise et gouverne en partie doresennavant [selon ladvis] et oppinion de nostredit Sainet Pere, actendu mesmement qu'elle est a present Et quant a envoyer argent audit sieur de Lautrec pour le fait de son empr[inse, entendez,] Monseigneur, quil a toujours este fait jusques icy, et se fera de sor[te] faulte de cela il ne tumbra en aucun dangier ne inconvenient. E lon est presentement apres pour luy envoyer 120,000 escuz e que en actendant le demourant de l'argent qui luy est necessaire, leque[1] nen puisse avoir aucune necessite, et ay ceste ferme esperance en
. t yssue de ceste dite emprinse sera telle que noz sieurs et mais[tres] s, dont ilz rapporteront gloire et louange perpetuelle] choses.

"[Au] surplus, Monseigneur, nous navons encore riens que lesleu Bayard y est arrive, mayns nous en actendons [nouvelles] et de ce qui en viendra serez incontinant adverty, et ce p[orteur] recommanderay tres humblement a vostre bonne Grace." St. Germain-en-Laye, Dec. 1527.

Mutilated. Add. Endd.: From the Great Master, 31 Dec. 1527.

3718. FRANCIS I. to [WOLSEY].†

Cal. D. x. 429.

B. M.

" [h]ostel du Roy d'Angleterre vous dyre toutes les [paroles que] j'aye eues avecques Monsye[ur de B]athe et luy, je ne vous feray [pour c]este foys plus longue lettre, may[s] que y fayre fyn vous mercyray [tres] cordyalement de la peyne que [vous] avez prynse et prenez, non seule[ment] a lentretenement de la bon[ne amy]tye, fraternyte et aly[ance]

"Vostre bon amy, Francoys."

Hol.

3719. MARQUIS OF DORSET.

R. O.

Memorandum of the bond for 1,000*l.* between the marquis of Dorset and lord Hastings, to abide by the award of Wolsey, the duke of Norfolk, bishop of Bath, lord Rocheforde, the two chief justices of either Bench, the chief baron of the Exchequer, Sir Humfrey Conysby, justice of the King's Bench, and Sir Thos. More, chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, to be given on the morrow of Ascension Day; and an account of the arrangements of the † Probably this refers to the beginning of the year. See No. 2800.

1527.

keepers, &c. in Beaumondeles, Frithie, and Birdsest, Barneparke, Toly Parke, and Hethely Lodge, until the award is made.

*Two copies; each one page.

3720. JOHN COWPLAND to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Wishes to see him about Thos. Somer's debt, who is anxious to come to a point with Cromwell.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To Mr. Cromwell. Endd.

3721. The DUKE OF NORFOLK.

Add. MS.
27449, f. 23.

B. M.

3½ yds. black satin for a jerkin with sleeves, 8s. a yd.; making it, 20*d.*
1 yd. black velvet for shoes and slippers, 10s. 6*d.* 7 yds. white satin delivered to Master Peryent for a kirtle for my Lady, 7s. 6*d.* the yd. Translating a black velvet gown for Mr. Barkeley, 20*d.* 2 yds. of buckram to line the upper sleeves, at 6*d.* a yd. 1½ q. purple satin for my Lady's garters, 5s. 3 yds. black satin for a doublet, 8s. a yd.; lining and making, 3s. 4*d.* 3 yds. tawny satin for a doublet, at 8s. 4*d.*; lining and making, 3s. 4*d.* Making a new partelet of a tawny velvet gown. 1½ yds. black satin for a partelet, at 8s. 9 yds. kental for a coat for my Lord, at 16*d.* 8 yds. taffata sarcenet for a gown, at 8s.; making the gown with Burgundian guards of black velvet, 5s. 3½ yds. of green cloth for a riding coat, at 5s. 4*d.*; for making the coat, bordered and welted, three borders in the middle of the base, and three on the skirts, 4s.; 3½ yds. green velvet for bordering it, at 12s.; 4½ yds. of cotton for lining the base, at 6*d.* 1½ yds. black satin for a hat, at 7s.; for a felt, and making the hat, 2s. 4*d.*; ½ yd. of sarcenet for lining it, and for a tippet, 2s. 3½ yds. gray cloth for a base and a short coat, at 6s. 8*d.* ¼ yd. Lukys black velvet for a bonnet, at 16s., &c.

For Mr. Barkeley: 2½ yds. black satin for a doublet, at 7s. 1½ yd. of black satin for the placard and foresleeves, at 7s. Fustian for lining 2 skins for a partlet, 6s., &c.

Total, 42*l.* 18s. 7½*d.*

Pp. 7. Endd.: Mawtes bill. Alloc. super compotum Georg. Peryent. aº xix. H. VIII.

3722. ROGER BASYNG.

R. O.

Account of Roger Basyng of money received from the King by way of prest, for the purchase of 90 tuns of Gascon wine at Bordeaux, during Sept., Oct., Nov. and Dec. 19 Hen. VIII., and of its expenditure.

The purchasing prices are from 17 to 21 crowns and 40 to 48 franks a tun. Total for purchase, 4,509 franks 6 sous 3 deniers. Costs at Bordeaux, 172 franks 3 sous a month=390*l.* 8s.; at London, 89*l.* 18s. 6½*d.* a month. Total (monthly), 480*l.* 1s. 6½*d.*

Pp. 6. Endd.

— Dec.

3723. MONASTERY OF WENLOK, Heref. dioc.

Assent to the election of John Bailey as prior. Addressed to Thomas cardinal, &c., archbishop of York. Le More, — Dec.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 27.

* See vol. III. p. 103.

1527.

3724. LORD MONTEAGLE.

R. O. 1. Money paid by Ric. Bank, Ric. Ward, and others, to Sir John Husy, of the revenue of lord Monteagle's lands, from 14 to 19 Hen. VIII.
Total, 1,641*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*

Various sums in the hands of lord Darcy.

Pp. 4.

R. O. 2. Revenue of lord Monteagle's lands in 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 Hen. VIII.
Total, 2,244*l.* 9*s.* 4½*d.* Paid thereof to Sir John Husy, 1,768*l.* 17*s.* 8½*d.*

Pp. 6.

3725. RICH. CURWYN.

R. O. Bond by which Ric. Curwyn, of St. Katharine de Caton, Lanc., Esq., is bound to keep the peace for one month after Easter.

Jas. Jerrard, London, gent., and Wm. Deland, of Spaldyng, Linc., gent., sureties. Westm., Monday, "in quindena Sci. Johannis Baptistæ, 19 Hen. VIII.

Lat., copy. Endd.

3726. HOGKYN SUN AND OTHERS.

R. O. Bail given by Wm. Hogekynsun, John Barlow, Wm. Moreock, and others, for their appearance before my lord Cardinal or his council, before the "next" day of March next coming, to save harmless Master John Varname (Vernon), sheriff of Staffordshire, for the return of a writ against them.

P. 1.

3727. EDMUND DUDLEY.

R. O. Petition to the Lord [Chancellor] by John Maryng, showing that twenty-eight years ago Edmund Dudley, now deceased, attainted of high treason, craftily attempted to disinherit him of certain lands in Newport and Norwood, in the Isle of Wight, and a place called Manwod, in Sussex, by covin between him, Sir — Fowler, and John Wynsor, by inducing Fowler to lend the plaintiff 10*l.* on mortgage to be repaid within a year; shortly after which he was imprisoned in the Tower; and Dudley, being at that time in high favor with Henry VII., redeemed the lands out of the hands of John Wynsor, although the plaintiff had the redemption money ready himself. Also during his imprisonment Dudley obtained possession of the title deeds, which the plaintiff had left in the keeping of his brother-in-law, William Beverle, and forged a conveyance of the lands in the name of the plaintiff. After his release the plaintiff was unable, by reason of poverty, to sue Dudley, who was still in high favor; but Dudley, after his fall, wrote a supplication to the King to do him justice. This writing, however, the plaintiff mislaid, and could not prosecute his suit before the Council for fifteen years, until within these two years, and Sir John Dudley has all along kept possession of the lands as inherited from his father.

Pp. 9, large paper.

3728. EARLDOM OF ORMOND.

Ashm. MSS.
No. 1547.

"Articles of the agreement made by Wolsey, betwene Thomas Vis. Rochford and his comparceners, and Sir Pyers Butler, for the inheritance of the earldom of Ormond."

1527.

3729. STORES.

R. O.

" anno 19th [regni regis Henrici] VIII."
 " . . . [T]he stuff that is remaining at the . . . unto John Haykyn, purveyor, at the . . . Count[roller] of the King's works [and] his deputies."

Stuff remaining in the Storehouse:—Wainscots, new batens gilt with antique work, great and small gilt balls, old and new plate locks, with and without keys, pulleys, rubynettes with braces, gyns, "gablos," basten ropes, wainscots ready sawn for "selyng borde," doors of wainscot ready made, iron "balous" (bellows), weights of lead, old kettles of [iron], iron sko . . . iron wyn . . .
 cokes of bra[ss], an old organ . . . and leade, an old sound board [for the] same organ, pipes . . . batens . . . old hokes . . . for a dore . . .
 . . . the other pair . . . old hinges . . . iron ladles, old cases of iron, clappoll, lathes and lime. "In the Painters chamber in images, which is set forth to be gilt for the White Tower in the Great Garden, 4." In the "plumry," lead, soldering irons, soldering knives, an old coffer full of old glass, two pair of scrucos and old hardells.

Stuff remaining in Thos. Forster's chamber "by the banes":—Painters' gold, quires of silver, "byate" and other colors, great bolyens gilt, small balls gilt, gilt antique works . . . wrought with byste and gold, which contey . . . two foot of length and a foot and a half of breadth, &c.

*Pp. 2, mutilated.3730. LADY SALISBURY.

R. O.

Receipt by Wm. Wyntryngham, deputy to Oliver Frankelyn, receiver general of lady Salysburys lands, to John Stanton, woodgrave of my Lady, for 4*l.* 4*s.* 11½*d.*, due to my Lady for 19 Hen. VIII.

3731. LORD EDM. HOWARD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Ellis, 3 Ser.
 i. 160.

Is utterly undone without his help. He is so much in debt that he is obliged to absent himself from his wife and family. If Wolsey will assist him in the bill he is laboring for, it will set him out of debt. Would rather be in the King's service at the furthest end of Christendom than live thus wretchedly. Were he a poor man's son, might dig and delve, which he cannot do now without shame to all his blood. Would be glad to be employed in the expedition to be made to Newfoundland, and so find his wife and children meat and drink. Would have visited the Cardinal, but dares not stir abroad.

Hol. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. *Endd.3732. LORD EDMUND HOWARD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is so sore oppressed with poverty, and the execution of the King's laws, that he dare not go abroad to urge his suits to Wolsey, but is obliged to send his wife to his learned counsel, whom he begs Wolsey to hear. The protection granted to him by the Cardinal is of no use against a writ of execution upon a statute staple. Would have been arrested last term in the hall if he had not been warned. Unless Wolsey help him, will have to take sanctuary or fly the realm.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord Cardinal's grace. *Endd.3733. ABBEY OF BUCKFAST.

R. O.

Complaint of Philip Brayne, of Exeter, to "your mastership" [Cromwell], against Sir John Resle, abbot of Buckfast (Buckfast), Devon, who, when Sir John Cleugger, vicar of Dene, fell ill, and was shriven on Whitsun Eve 1527.

ABBAY OF BUCKFAST—cont.

1527, sent some of the monks to his house, who bound him to a bier with cords, and carried him to the abbey, where he died in three days. The abbot now withholds the goods of the deceased from Richard Cleugger, his brother and heir, pretending that he holds them by a deed of gift. Witnesses have been examined in my lord Chancellor's name. Begs [Cromwell] to help his petition in the Star Chamber.

P. 1 (large paper). Endd.

- R. O. 2. A second petition on the above subject. Sir Will. Cortney and Sir Thos. Denys, who were commissioned to investigate the matter, would do nothing for fear of the Abbot.

P. 1 (large paper). Endd.

3734. HORSES.

- R. O. A bundle of documents relating to horses.

Expences of 200 horses brought to Aylesbury, Sunday, 7 May 6 Hen. VIII., to the sign of the King's Head, and for conveying them to Sandwich and Dover. With warrant by Wolsey to Daunce for its payment. N.B. —Signature, "T. Lincoln," but not in Wolsey's hand.

- R. O. 2. Expences of the King's horses, taken at Henley, Monday, 24 May, 4*l.* 1*s.* 1*d.* for the night; and at Reading, for those taken in Berkshire, Thursday, 26 May, 4*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.*; paid by John Wheeler, auditor of our conduct money.

P. 1.

- R. O. 3. Expences of 312 horses provided in Oxfordshire, and for 558 in Oxfordshire and Berkshire, lying at the seaside till they were shipped.

P. 1.

- R. O. 4. Extracts from certain bills of expences connected with the horses and stables [of lord Abergavenny], including several entries for dressing the wounds of particular horses.

For the black genet, "for all (oil) and butter for ys legges whan rened (when he ran?) agaynt Mr. Karey geldyng for a wager," 2*d.* Mending a saddle for Davy when he went into Devonshire, 4*d.* Mending a pair of velvet reins for my Lady, the covering of her saddle, Mrs. Constance's pillion, and Mrs. Jane's saddle, 8*d.* Hire of a horse at Howselowe, riding to Windsor for my Lord's robe against St. George's feast, 17*d.* For my Lady's horse meat, 13 March, when she was with my lady Princess at Richmond, 6*d.* For going and coming between Grynnysches (Greenwich) and Soakelle. For a man helping to break open "the bordes and gyches yn Mr. Perce stable to brynge to the Sowenne (the Swan?) at Grynnysches," 4*d.* For a boat from Greenwich to London and back, 2*d.* For shoeing horses from 8 June to 10 Oct., 83 horse shoes, at 2*d.* each. For "butter, all (oil), and eggys for Morell coursar legges agaynt the comyng of the Franche ybassadours at Grynnysches," 4*d.* For shoeing horses from the time the King came to Greenwich to the 26 Jan. To Pety John, 21 Dec., when he went to my Lady in Devonshire with two great horses, for their charges by the way, 6*s.* 8*d.* For horse meat at Paris Garden, when my Lord took horse to ride to the King at Croydon, 4*d.* My Lord's horse meat in Southwark, 31 Jan., 14*d.* 4 Jan., for horse meat when my Lady went to Halywell, 6*d.* For baiting my Lord's horse at Retlyff when the King and my Lord went to Waltham Forest, 3*d.*

Ellis' bill.—9 Sept., for cleaning the stables at Birling against the King's coming, 6*d.* For 9 doz. horse bread for the King and other strangers, 9*s.*; horse hire from Rochester to Byrlyng for bringing it, 8*d.* 15 Sept., for bauling at Dartford, bringing horse cloths from Byrlyug to Greenwich, 4*d*.—Another bill of Roger Ellys, dated 22 Sept., of expences at Basingstoke, Salisbury, &c., when my Lord went into Devonshire.

1526.

Accounts of Rich. Paulet.—Payments to Toller, of Lewsham, 4 Dec. 18 Hen. VIII., for hay; for building my Lord's stable at Greenwich; and payments made by Master Dawbeney, by commission of Sir Will. Paulet. Bill for oats, 18 and 19 Hen. VIII., &c.

A file of 9 separate papers.

R. O.

5. Account of John Walynger and Brian North, commissioners for taking horses in Buckingham and Hertford shires, showing the price and color of each horse, and of whom it was bought.

The following numbers were bought and marked for the King: in the three hundreds of Bucks, 16; in the three hs. of Cottyslowe, 65; in the h. of Borneam, 32; Dysborowe, 46; the three hs. of Aeshenden, 16; the three hs. of Aylesbury, 51; the three hs. of Newportpanell, 42; Brawghyng, 57; Hertford, 20; Edmystre, 64; Hechen, 20; Dacorum, 42; Oscey, 52; liberties of St. Alban's, 69.

Pp. 25.

R. O.

6. Expences incurred in the provision of the King's horses in Buckinghamshire.

For horse meat, dinners, &c., at London, Saturday 5 May, Sunday 6th, at Oxbrige, and Monday to Wednesday at Aylesbury, where 53*s.* 4*d.* was paid for the meat of 160 horses on Tuesday; Thursday [10th], at Uxbrige.

Pp. 2.

3735. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE.

R. O.

Receipts of the bursars for one year.

Pp. 2, fragment, mutilated. Endd.: The names of the books called Doomsday, belonging to the monasteries suppressed, and now united unto Cardinal's College in Oxford.

3736. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE.

R. O.

Indenture dated ——— 19 Hen. VIII., between Wolsey and John Higden, dean of his college, of the delivery to the said Dean of all evidences connected with the suppression of St. Frideswide's, Littlemore, Lesnes, &c.

Draft, corrected by Cromwell, pp. 6.

3737. JOHN GOSTWYK.

R. O.

Lease by Wolsey as commendatory of St. Alban's, and the prior and convent there, to John Gostwyk, of the manor or priory called Bedlowe, Beds. Dated ———, 19 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 2, with corrections in Cromwell's hand.

3738. The GOLDSMITHS.

R. O.

"The names of the quest of goldmythes that were upon the quest, an^o xix^{mo}."

Sir John Moundy. Wardens: John à Deane, Robt. Trappia, John Palterton. Jury: John Pykke, Wm. Brokett, Roger Moundy, Nic. Bull, Thos. Wastell, Thos. Calton, Robt. Spendley, Robt. Draper, Hen. Averell, Rauffe Latheham, Heugh Walshe, Gerrard Hewia, John Frende, Roger Horton, Thos. Spinner, Robt. Redde.

Edmonde Lee, general surveyor of the citie of London.

P. 1.

1527.

3739. WM. KEYLL.

R. O.

Order from Sir Henry Wyat to John Jenyns for the payment of fifty to Wm. Keyll, towards making New Year's gifts.

2. Similar order for the payment of two hundred [pounds] to Robt. Fenroder and Vanutryth's wife.

Hol., mutilated.

3740. LORD SCROOPE.

R. O.

Fragment of an indenture between Lord Scroope on one side, and Sir Thomas Andeley, Bryan Tuke, Thomas Crumwell, Christopher Hales, and Baldwin Malet, on the other side.

3741. [CROMWELL] to [VISCOUNT ROCHFORD].

R. O.

Your Lordship's sister* has desired me to be of counsel with her husband, Sir Rob. Clere,* in a dispute with lady Feneux, widow of Sir John F., late Chief Justice of the King's Bench. A writ of execution has been issued against Sir Rob., also directing the sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk to extend his lands in satisfaction of a debt of 400*l.* to the late Chief Justice; whereas it appears by indentures made between Sir John Paston, deceased, and the above parties, that the "said" statute staple was only for assurance of a jointure to Eliz., now widow of the said Chief Justice, and late wife of Will. Clere, Sir Robert's son and heir at that time. Sir Robert has always been ready to fulfil the covenants, though Sir Jo. Paston in his life, and now his son Sir William, have refused to pay him a sum therein agreed on. Sir Robert, however, has no remedy at common law, unless your Lordship will move my Lord's grace (Wolsey) to grant a writ of injunction to lady F. no further to prosecute the execution; and to allow no writ of liberate to go out of Chancery till the whole matter be heard.

Draft, pp. 2, with corrections in Cromwell's hand.

3742. JOHN KEALL, priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Desires him to get "the indentures out of Mr. Westcote's hands, one of the executors of Sir Richard Fowlers." The dean of St. Frideswide's, Oxford, will require them by Michaelmas, else he will make no indenture to the writer. If the matter of our college go not forward, "I have a matter of mine own, that ye shall have as much money for, if ye bring it to pass." At Stoke College, in haste.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Master Cromwell, by the Awsten Freers in London.

3743. THOS. BENET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends to him one Maturyn Bensart, a Frenchman, who has been practising physie in Shyrborn for four or five months, and is suspected of necromancy, for divers reasons, and especially because his servant had caused four images of men and women to be cast in metal. Searched his house for them and his books, which he had sent away to another house, where they were found with certain knives and divers instruments. Examined him before some of the canons resident at Sarum, but he would not answer, either in Latin or French, except that he confessed that he had made aurum potabile in France, and intended to do so again. His practise in physio is with distilled waters, which are still at Sherborne. His servant has fled.

* Alice, daughter of Sir William Boleyn, was second wife to Sir Robert Clere.

1527.

Hol. p. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate's grace. Endd. : Dr. Benet of Sarisbury, in a matter concerning nigromancie and arte magike.

3744. CHRISTOPHER COO.

R. O. Bond given by Chr. Jenye for payment to Chr. Coo, of Saham Tony, of 2*l*. 10*s*. according to a pair of indentures. Dated ——— 15 Hen. VIII.

P. 1.

3745. HACKET to WOLSEY.

R. O. Would not advise Wolsey to allow any money to be sent from England to Hungary, or to any other place, this winter.

Hol. p. 1. Cipher, deciphered by Tuke. A postscript. Add. : To my lord Legate.

3746. ACCOUNT OF JEWELS.

R. O. A carkeyn, blue and yellow, with an emerald, a ruby, a kuzenge [diamond], and a hanging pearl. A black carkeyn, with a blas[k] having in his breast a rose of diamonds, a pointed diamond, "which was the price (prize?) in Flanders at the justs, and a fair hanging pearl thereof." A carkeyn of gold.

Pointed and table diamonds. A balas hanging by a lope. A balas set in a jaumee, with three hanging pearls. A cross of diamonds. An ouche of gold, with a man garuished with diamonds and white and red roses. A Saint Andrew's cross, with a rose of diamonds in the middle, four table diamonds, two rubies, and two hanging pearls. Upon a fingerstall, seven rin[gs, one] a ruby, another an emerald, and a turquoise, another a table diamond, another a triangular diamond, another a rocky diamond. Bagues with diamonds, a ruby, emeralds, pearls, and a crown of diamonds. A goodly bague, set with a diamond holden by angels and three hanging pearls.

On the first page, in a different hand: [Delivered to the] King, the 20 day of June, table diamond."

Imperfect, pp. 2.

3747.GRANTS IN DECEMBER 1527.

Dec.
—
GRANTS.

3. Arthur viscount Lisle, vice-admiral of Henry duke of Richmond and Somerset and earl of Nottingham, great admiral, Robt. Norwich, serjeant-at-law, Ric. Lyster, attorney general, John Tregunwell, LL.D., Chr. Middleton, bachelor-of-law, and Ric. Clarke. To make inquisition concerning and punishing all treasons, murders, rapes, &c. committed at sea within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. Westm., 2 Dec. — Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 6d.

3. Ric. s. and b. of Roland Bakley. To be sheriff of Carmarvon, S. Wales, with the usual fees payable by the chamberlain of North Wales; on surrender of a patent 26 March 15 Hen. VII., granting the office to Sir Hugh Vaughan, then spouse of the Bedy. Pat. Westm., 3 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 26.

3. Chas. duke of Suffolk. Grant of the reversion of the hundred of Waynesford and Illythyngs, Suff., which were leased to Hugh ap Howell, yeoman of the King's chamber, for 21 years, by patent 27 July 2 Hen. VIII. (p. 2, m. 3). Del. Westm., 3 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 3, m. 27.

3. Maurice Birchinshe. Lease of lands in the village of Arlodd, comote of Ughallt, lordship of Denbigh, Wales, lately in the tenure of Howell ap Jevan ap Trg; Bleth ap Jevan, Bleth ap Atha ap Jorun, Jevan ap David ap Grono and others. Del. Westm., 3 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

3. Rob. Rydley, clk. Presentation to the parish church of Symonbourn, Durham dioc., vacant by the resignation of Geo. Scalford. Del. Westm., 3 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

4. Roger Boland, late of Chepsted, Kent, tailor. Pardon of all outlawries and sentences against him at the suit of Ric. Dacres alias Bakere, merchant tailor of London. Del. Westm., 4 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

1527.

GRANTS IN DECEMBER 1527—*cont.*Dec.
—
GRANTS.

5. Tho. Wren and John Waterhouse. To be auditors of the county of Merthyr, Wales, succ Jo. Turnor and Jo. Wren, deceased. Del. Westm., 5 Dec. 19 Hen.VIII. —S.B.

6. John bishop of Exeter. Grant of lands in the lordship of Sutton Colfield, Warw. The boundaries and extent of the property are fully described, and tenants mentioned are Wm. Aken, Ric. Depyng and Simon Mounfort. Del. Westm., 6 Dec. 19 Hen.VIII. —S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 5.

6. Wm. lord Dacre, of Graistock. To be constable of Bewcastle and lands, chief forester of Nicol forest and the park of Plumpton, Inglewood forest, Cumb., in reversion, formerly belonging to Sir Jo. Middleton, with an annual rent of 40*l.*, on vacation by Tho. Masgrave. Westm., 6 Dec.—Pat. 19 Hen.VIII. p. 2, m. 18.

10. Jasper Pen. Confirmation of a deed, 12 Nov. 19 Hen.VIII., by which Sir Hugh Vaughan, governor of Jersey, granted to Jasper the office of bailiff of the island during the said Hugh's tenure of office. Greenwich, 4 Dec. 19 Hen.VIII. Del. Westm., 10 Dec.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 32.

12. John Plamer, of Hilde, Kent, tailor, alias horse-seller. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Hampton Court, 8 Dec. 19 Hen.VIII. Del. Le More, 12 Dec.—P.S.

16. Tho. Derby, clk. of the signet, and John Almain. Grant, in survivorship, of the office of clerk of the council, vacant by decease of Adrian Dyer. Del. Westm., 16 Dec. 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

22. John Cary, groom of the Privy Chamber. To be seneschall of the lordships of Lammershe and Colne Wake, Essex, and Basingborne, Camb., vice Sir Wm. Tyler, deceased, with wages of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Richmond, 5 Oct. 19 Hen.VIII. Del. Westm., 22 Dec.—P.S.

23. John Drews, of Bristol. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 25 Nov. 19 Hen.VIII. Del. Westm., 23 Dec.—P.S.

A.D. 1528.

Jan.
R. O.

3748. The KING'S NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

List of new year's gifts to various persons, Jan. 19 Hen.VIII. First, to the Cardinal, in plate, 40½ oz.; to the abp. of Canterbury, 31 oz.; to the bps. of Winchester, Lincoln, Exeter, Carlisle, and Llandaff, various, from 31 to 20 oz. To 13 of the nobility, among whom are the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the earl of Northumberland and Viscount Rocheford, gifts varying from 31 to 20 oz. To 11 knights, among whom are Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam and Sir John Wallop, from 28 to 13 oz. To Mr. Norris, 26 oz., Mr. Wynt, 18½ oz. To Dr. Chambers, 24½ oz. To the Queen's physician, 25½ oz.; her apothecary, 16½ oz. Mr. Philip, 20½ oz. Similar presents to Giles Dues, Peter (Carmelianus), luter, and his wife, to the Princess's schoolmaster, to Mr. Abell, and to the Queen's chancellor, almoner, and secretary. To 33 noble ladies, among whom is the French queen, the elder and younger duchess of Norfolk, the duchess of Buckingham, the countess of Sarum, lady Rocheford, lady Russell, &c. To 10 mistresses, sc., Norris, Jane (sic) Bollen, Baker, &c., from 22 to 10 oz.

Paper roll. Endd.

1 Jan.

3749. KNIGHT to [HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. x. 4.

B. M.

Burnet, iv. 37.

Visited the Pope on his liberty. He told me how dangerous it was for me to be at Rome, and that I had not left it for two hours when 200 Spaniards searched the house;—that he had received the King's letters, and had desired that I should depart, and he would send the dispensation. He begged you would have patience for a time, and not proceed at once to trial, as he is in great perplexity, "and it should not be long or your Highness should have not only that dispensation, but anything else that might lie in his power."

1528

I told him I had sent off news of the dispensation, "so that I could not imagine by what reason I might persuade unto you to believe that he would perform the promise that he had once broken." In conclusion, he was content you should have it, but on the condition that Gambara and I should beseech you not to proceed till the Pope was at liberty, and this could not be whilst the Almain and Spaniards reigned in Italy. I thought it best to have the dispensation at all hazards. Then he desired St. Quatuor to reform the minute; and this done, he showed it to me, desiring I should leave, and that Gambara should follow with the bull in the form and substance like your Highness's minute. I send you a copy of it.* The commission and protestation is void because it was conceived when the Pope was in captivity. On my return I met with Thadæus with "certain expeditions triplicate" to Gambara, Gregory de Casalis, and myself. In these there was a duplicate commission, one for Wolsey, and if that was refused because he might be thought partial, the same for Staphylæus;—also a copy of a dispensation, which, I perceive by your letter, was to be drawn according to the minute sent by Barlow, already sped and passed. I returned to Orvieto, and with Gregory have obtained a commission directed to the Legate, not in the form it was conceived in England, but in a manner sufficient. It and the commission were drawn up by St. Quatuor.

Though everything is passed as you desired, the Pope is undone if you proceed to execution at this time. The Imperialists destroy the towns about Rome, Lautrec remains at Bologna doing nothing. The Pope has no friend but you, and fears to displease the Emperor. This morning I return home, and Gregory de Casalis goes to Florence. Orvieto, 1 Jan.

*Hol.3750. KNIGHT to [HENRY VIII.]

R. O.
St. P. vii. 36.

My letter was written before I left the Pope. He begs you will keep secret the commission, and not proceed till you have given him notice of fifteen or thirty days, when he may issue a new commission. If Lautrec were here, he thinks he might have a sufficient excuse with the Emperor. Orvieto, New Year's day morning.

I have written to the Legate that the commission and dispensation for you has been obtained, "inasmuch as he sent hither the minute of a dispensation to be sped; but I specify not after what form your dispensation is granted and passed."

Hol. Endd.

1 Jan.

3751. KNIGHT to [WOLSEY].

Vr. R. x. 2.
R. M.
Barnet, iv. 34.

He and Gregory congratulated the Pope on his restoration to liberty, at which he was greatly pleased. He then enlarged on the King's devotion to the Church, the danger of a disputed succession, &c., desiring him to have the dispensation examined as in the form sent by your Grace. He admitted the difficulty, but as he was not familiar with granting commissions, he proposed to consult with St. Quatuor. We therefore visited St. Quatuor, and promised him a competent reward, and showed him the commission, "which he said could not pass without perpetual dishonor unto the Pope, the King, and your Grace; and a great part of such clauses as both omitted, he hath touched and laid reasons for the same in a writing which I do send unto your Grace with this." We then begged of him to make the minute of a commission sufficient; which he did. When we took it to the Pope, he said that when he was in the castle of St. Angelo, the general of the Observants in Spain required of him in the Emperor's name to grant no act whereby the

* See 23 Dec. 1527.

1528.

KNIGHT to [WOLSEY]—cont.

King's divorce should be judged in his own dominions. "The Pope answered inhibito non datur nisi post litem motam; and as unto the first, his Holiness was content, if any light thing were demanded, to advertise the Emperor before that he did let it pass; and this was in a manner for his Holiness being in captivity." He urges, as he is still in captivity in effect, he cannot grant this commission without evident ruin; but he is willing to run the hazard, rather than that the King and you should suspect him of ingratitude; and he heartily desires you, cum suspiriis et lachrymis, not to precipitate him for ever, which would be if, on delivering the commission, your Grace at once began process. He intends to save all upright thus.

If Lautrec would set forward, which he neglects doing, the Pope might have a pretext to tell the Emperor that he had been requested by the English ambassador to grant such and such a commission, and when he refused, he was required by Lautrec to do it; and so it might appear to the Emperor that the Pope had not granted it out of displeasure to him, but as an indifferent prince he was required to do justice, and could not refuse it. He will then send a commission dated after Lautrec's arrival. He begs that the King and you will be satisfied with this arrangement. We have given St. Quantur 2,000 cr., and 30 cr. to his secretary. Herewith you will receive the Pope's letter, and a counsel of Oldrand on the King's cause. I am returning home. Orvieto, 1 Jan.

Hol.

1 Jan.
Vesp. F. III.
107 b.
B. M.

3752. CHRISTOPHER A. B. (ARCHBISHOP OF BREMEN) to WOLSEY.

Desires credence for Dr. Johannes Reyunkius, who will speak to Wolsey on the Archbishop's affairs. Vordi, 1 Jan. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.

1 Jan.
R. O.

3753. JOHN DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF BAYONNE, to WOLSEY.

Incloses letters received this morning from France. Those to himself from the Great Master are very short, and contain no news but the death of Ant. Levianus. London, kal. Jan. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: Ill., &c., D. Card. Ebor. legato et Angliæ Cancellario, &c. Endd.

3754. ——— to ———

Calig. D. x.
184
B. M.

"Mons. de Brosse, avez au Roy par
. entendu ce qui est depuis se et les bons
. le Legat son bon amy, tient luy et moy
. sont j la dudit sieur tresbien
. bon vouloir que mondit sieur le Legat luy porte en toutes choses
. redouter de plus a te congnoissance de la vraye et p[er]f[ec]te amitie a luy et au bien de ses affaires, dont et de tous autres et grandes demonstrations lesdits sieurs sont tant
. pourroit assez affectueusement remercier, ce qu'il m'a commande expressément ainsi le faire de sa part; vous priant aussi tres humblement remercier de la myeune, tant de la bonne amy[tie] qu'il luy plaise me porter, que de la seurete et flance que par ses honestes p[ar]olles il a en moy, l'assurant que en toutes choses ou je lui pourray [servir,] et que je congnoistray estre selon son intencion, il me trouvera tel que celuy qui desire sur toutes choses autant luy obeyr en ce qu'il luy touche. Mais pour ensuyvre son bon vouloir en ce qu'il luy plaira me con-seiller et adviser estre bon et de jamays meestre peine de 1528.

conserver et toujours de plus [augmenter] la grande et indiscrutable amitie d'entre ces roys nos [maistres], ne voulant oublier de luy presenter mes tres humbles re[commandations] a sa] bonne grace, et au surplus me advenir tous-jours de sa s[ante]. Au demourant je vous renvoye le double de la [lettre] le Legat vous avoit baillie pour faire le semblable a vous a este envoyee pareillement vous est et oblacions qui dernièrement ont este"

(The rest of the document is illegible, with the exception of a few phrases, of which the most important are—"la dessus le protonotaire de Gambrois est icy pour s'en aller," and a reference to "frere Bernardin," which is too mutilated to be made out.)

1 Jan. 3755. ANTHONY HASELDEK.

His will. Proved, 1 January 1527. Printed in Nicolas' Testaments Vetus, p. 625.

1 Jan. 3756. CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.

R. O. I have received your letters. I have sent the dispensation you ask for St. P. VII. 33. in your former letters by the secretary (Knight) and Gambarn. The demand in your subsequent letter, beyond the dispensation, I have granted, though not without great hazard to myself, as a token of my affection for you. Begs credence for the secretary and the Nuncio. Orvieto, 1 Jan. 1528.
Signed: "J."

Hol., on paper. Add. Endd.

2 Jan. 3757. J. DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF BATONNE, and DE BRASSE, to Le Grand, III. FRANCIS I.
37.

On De Brosse's arrival on Tuesday morning, we went to the Legate, to whom we could not immediately communicate everything, because he was going to take advantage of the tide to visit the King; but we gave him your cordial thanks, and told him of what had been proposed to you for the marriage of the king of Scots, and of the words of the Emperor's chancellor, and the state of the affairs of Italy, especially of the Pope. He was incredibly pleased to hear of his Holiness's liberation, and the safety of the hostages, and also of Lautrec's diligence in following up his victory, and asked us to come next day to Greenwich. Thither we were conducted by Mr. Russell in the morning; and, while waiting till the King was ready, we again met the Legate, when De Brosse informed him of his whole charge. Wolsey expressed himself in the best possible manner towards Francis and Madame, and De Brosse offered to show him his instructions, stating that Francis wished him to see everything that concerned himself. During their conversation, Wolsey was called to see the King, to whom we were shortly afterwards conducted; when De Brosse presented his letters, and declared his charge. The King was not less delighted than Wolsey had been, and expressed himself in a most warm and cordial manner towards Francis and Madame, his speech occupying little less than an hour (ne fut moins que d'une petite heure), and he expressed himself strongly about the Emperor's chancellor, whom he evidently regarded as the wickedest man in the world.

After we had accompanied him to mass, and returned to his chamber, he caused us to be entertained by the bishop of Bath, viscount Rocheford, and others, and then return to him. He then brought us to visit the ladies, and introduced me, Brosse, to the Princess; to whom, after doing reverence to the Queen, I delivered your letters and those of Madame. She gave me the most honorable thanks, and could not have conducted herself with better grace. Before we left, the King took part in a dance, and had some further conversation with us, then dismissed us till he and Wolsey should have considered the answer to be made to Brosse's instructions. Next morning Wolsey asked if Brosse had a procuration to be installed in the room of Francis with the knights of the Order at Windsor, saying that the thing was necessary, and would be a great satisfaction to the King. Was obliged to apologise that he had not thought it requisite, and Wolsey desired him to send for one with all diligence. Represented the delay that might occur, the sea being so variable as it is at present. Discussed with Wolsey for an hour what was to be done. At last, Du Bellay, being left alone with Wolsey while the King spoke with Brosse, perceived that he wished Brosse to remain, but to get the procuration sent over with all diligence. He said the King was very desirous that Brosse should perform this office, finding him the most agreeable personage Francis could have sent him. Determined accordingly to send a courier express for the procuration, of which he desired Wolsey to draw up a minute. Have been obliged to wait for it till now. Begs Francis to send it with all diligence, for the King will detain the knights of the Order, who are here in great number for the feast, till he hear news of it.

1528.

J. DU BELLAY, BP. OF BAYONNE, and DE BROSE, to FRANCIS I.—cont.

Are desired by Wolsey to write the views entertained by the King and him, touching the proposals made to Francis. They are much pleased that Francis communicated to them privately the language he used about the marriage of the king of Scots, and think that as the attention of the world is at present fixed on the great interests of Christendom, and considering the age of the parties, it would be better to wait the issue of affairs, which will probably necessitate other alliances. The King is not less displeased at the Emperor's chancellor than we ourselves, considering the great justification of your cause; and if the Emperor were to use such words, and Francis (which God forbid) was not in a position to clear himself (empesche de sorte que ne les peussies relever) with that courage and magnanimity which distinguish him, he himself would challenge the Emperor to combat. But they think that Francis ought not to be so disquieted by the words of such a worthless villain (pour la parole d'un ribault belistre, garcon trompereau, homme de neant, villain en toute perfection de villenye). They will, however, send their advice by Brosse about what should be done if the Emperor avow these words.

When talking of the Emperor's treatment of the Pope, I, Du Bellay, finding Wolsey sufficiently indignant, said that Emperors had been deposed by Popes for much smaller offences, and that the Pope ought to depose Charles for his own surety. On this, Wolsey drew near a window, and swore to me he would do his best to bring it about. I said no one could do more to induce the Pope to it than he; but I did not wish to go further without instructions. I think it would be well if the Pope could be brought to it, and the right of election returned to the electors, a law being moreover passed that no one but one of themselves should be elected, which would be a sugarplum (la friandise) to make them find the deprivation good. Thinks Francis might speak of this to the prothonotary Gambara when he sees him on his way to England. London, 2 Jan.

Fr.

2 Jan.

3758. ITALY.

Vit. B. ix. 215.

B. M.

Extract of the letter of Gregory Casale, dated Orvieto, 31 Dec.

The Pope and Cardinals recognise the benefits rendered them by the King and Wolsey. Came to the Pope from Lautrec to urge him not to keep his agreement with the Imperialists. Wrote back to Lautrec that the Pope would do anything if Lautrec would only advance, which he had not yet determined to do, because on the 26th the Germans had not yet arrived at Bologna, having thus wasted four days.

1528.

There seems no necessity for Lautrec's urging the Pope to declare against the Emperor, as it is likely he will do it of his own accord; for the Imperialists will be compelled to violate the treaty, and the Colonnas have already laid waste many of the Papal towns, so that the Pope knows what to expect from them.

Had a long conversation on the matter with the Pope, who says he cannot remain here unless Lautrec advances, and wishes Casale to urge him in the King's name to do so. Told him he could not leave until the King's business was despatched, and his Holiness therefore spoke about it yesterday to card. St. Quatuor. Has sent a nobleman and a captain to Rome, to practise with the Germans. Galeazzo Farnese took by night Castro, a papal town occupied by the Imperialists, killed all the garrison, and now holds it for the Pope. Federigo Bossolo is dead. Has spoken on the Pope's behalf to the Florentines, who will send an ambassador to him, when they see that he is considered as a friend by the kings of England and France.

From letters dated Pigaim, 2 Jan.

The French king has sent to the Pope a secretary of Albert de Carpy for the same purpose as ourselves. It seems to Casale very impious to leave his Holiness in the middle of the Spaniards, and to ask him to declare against them, which would be of no use to us. He continues to fortify his towns, and delays the promised payment. Lautrec has not yet left Bologna, and will not meet the Imperialists before they arrive at Sienna, as was proposed to him. Wrote yesterday to the marquis of Saluzzo, to guard the passes strictly, and let no friend or foe go to Rome, so that the Imperialists may have no means of getting sure information.

The Pope has sent him to Lautrec, with a letter of credence to urge his advance. Hopes to succeed, but meanwhile time slips away.

Lat., pp. 3. Endd. The first extract is printed in Pocock, l. 36.

2 Jan. 3759. [MARQUIS OF EXETER'S HOUSEHOLD?]

R. O.

A bill indented of certain household property, &c., in the custody of Thomas Apowell and Davy Hammer, 2 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.

In the Chapel.—A pair of vestments of blue velvet, embroidered with a cross of crimson velvet; ditto of crimson velvet, with a cross of imagery, embroidered with silk and gold; ditto of black velvet, with a cross of crimson velvet; 3 ditto of black velvet, made of cloth of estate, with crosses of white satin of Bruges; one of green velvet with a cross of crimson velvet; ditto of green taffeta, with a cross of red ditto; of white with a cross of blue taffeta, and an image of Our Lady embroidered; ditto of crane-coloured damask, with a cross of blue velvet, embroidered, and my Lord's arms upon the Cross, with an image of Mary Magdalene; and many others specified. 10 altar cloths of linen. 3 towels. 4 super-altars. 4 mass books in print. 2 matins books of my Lady's grace; one covered with tawney velvet, with silver and gilt clasps; the other with black velvet, with silver and gilt clasps, engraved. Various other furniture for the chapel, such as pyxes, cruets, and chalices, silver gilt. Among the books, (1) The Appostelar, (2) Ortus Vocabulorum, (3) Catholicon, (4) Legenda Aurea, and a book of law.

Of the "gory stuff";—various basins and candlesticks of silver and silver gilt, with my Lord and Lady's arms. Numerous articles of napery.

Articles in the pantry and the kitchen.

In the Stable.—Two litter horses, one palfrey, "white lyarde fuskew white," a Cornish nag, a bay colt received from Master Haydon and Master Collis, and a white lyard prowys; my Lady's litter, covered with black velvet; saddles, headstalls, pillions, and similar furniture, all exactly described. A web bridle for my Lord's great horse. 8 leather halters, whereof my Lord had four at his last going up.

1528.

[MARQUIS OF EXETER'S HOUSEHOLD?]—cont.

Articles in the Buttry.

Implements of the household.—40 standing bedsteads. 6 truckle beds. 16 standing presses. 11 cupboards. 11 joined forms. 27 stools. 1 table board, 3½ yards long. 4 ditto, 8 yards long. 5 coffers bound with plate, in the tower over the gate. A great ship coffer, in Sir George Speke's chamber. Implements for kneading and baking. Chopping boards, &c. Images of St. Katharine, St. Dorothy, St. Lybell, St. Michael, St. Ann. A crucifix with Mary and John. A table cover 7 yards long. 12 halberts. 2 poleaxes. 1 hhd. of plaster of Paris.

Furniture of the Armoury.—Materials for cleaning the harness. Furniture in the stables and the outhouses. In the gate, 2 great guns. Furniture of the Privy Chamber and the Great Chamber. In the church:—3 new altars; a great hearse; a bier which my lady's Grace was carried to church upon. "A trendle to scald brawn in, that Golde occupieth." In the store:—17 whole loaves of sugar, cinnamon, cloves, mace, ginger, grains, rice, "sawnders," turnsole, aniseed, saffron, dates, 32 cakes of white soap, 3 clavicords, wax of various kinds, tapers. Wine, 1 hhd. of claret. Carpenters' instruments. 12 cloths of lead, 2,829 lb., and a sow of lead 65 lb. "Over the gate in the Great Chamber, a joined chair for a dry drafte." A turned chair in Master Speke's chamber.

Horses at the Leghes.—A bay mare, 18 hands high; a great horse sent down by my Lord by Petty John; various other horses. A horse received from Mr. Chamburne; another received from John Gawnte. A bay mare given by Anthony Harvey. Horses at Chymney:—a dun mare, 15 hands high, 17 years old; a stallion called "Parker." Horses at New Park; one named "Master Wyse's mare." A cage for the parrot. In North Exe an "eryare" of swans, beneath Exe Bridge two "eryares" of swans, and at Tiverton three swans.

A list of stuff lost "at the surrender of the stuff" in the ewery, kitchen and stable. Chapel stuff delivered to London, unto my lord's Grace's chantry. Other similar entries.

6 leaves of paper in form of a roll.

3 Jan.

3760. SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The inhabitants of the Suffolk coast, who are destitute of grain fit for man's use, have asked him to request Wolsey for a licence for them to carry white and red herrings and sprats to Flanders, to barter for corn. His almoner will say more on the subject. Norwich, 3 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

3761. SCARCITY.

R. O.

Considerations as to the dearness of all manner of victuals:—

1. The King's foreign wars, which have continued for two or three years, have been one cause of dearth. 2. The year that the war ended there was as great a rot and murrain among cattle as has been seen for 40 years before . . . nourished and kept, for in pasture there is very little murrain seen, or none. 3. There have been three or four marvellously dry summers, which produced surfeits among the cattle and sheep, owing to the scarcity of grass and lack of hay and water. In many parts of England cattle had to be driven five or six miles to water, a thing that had not been seen by any man now living. 4. Owing to this there were little or no fat cattle in the common fields from Michaelmas to Martylmas, as there usually are. 5. The lack of fodder has prevented husbandmen from breeding lambs or calves, and those that were bred were hunger bitten, and worth little, except those bred in pasture. 6. In times past, after wars or murrains, the killing of lambs and calves was restrained, but no such order has been made since this dearth began. 7. The great droughts in summer and frosts in winter have destroyed the freshwater fish and fowl in the fens, so that they are at treble their usual price. 8. Pork is very scarce, owing to the dearth of beans, pease, and mast. It was necessary to use pease for the horses and beasts, but, nevertheless, many horses died. 9. The dearth of cattle has also been the cause why all "pultree ware and whit meyte" have been so dear. 10. Regraters and forestallers of cattle have been another cause. In Wales, Cheshire, Lancashire, and the North, where beasts are bred, no grazier can buy either lean or fat beasts, except at third or fourth hand. 11. Notwithstanding all this, "thanked be God, all thing is plentiful at this day as ever it was, and like to be if God send seasonable weathers, also if the pastures at this day may continue, and then can dearth never long continue," for the murrain in the common fields hardly attacks the cattle in the pastures at all. The latter relieve the common fields again with their breed of cattle, "to the increasing of the husbands and the composing of their land, which is the chief cause of the plenty of corn, which will never be scarce as long as there are plenty of sheep." At the time when meat is scarce, between St. Andrew's tide and Midsommer, cattle and sheep are brought out of pastures and marshes, except the few that are stall fed. If there were no pastures within 40 or 50 miles of London, the butchers could not sell so cheap, for they bring up the beasts as they want them, and are put to no charge for grass. The beasts lose little flesh by their long journey, and do not cost much for carriage.

1528.

Pp. 4. Endd.

3 Jan.

3762. [EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND] to the EARL OF ANGUS.

R. O.

Has received by Leonard Musgrave his letter offering to meet him at any place for the good order of the Marches. Will be glad to do so. If he wishes to take a day of truce, and make redress for attemptata, open proclamation must be made, and they can meet at Cornell. If he wishes merely to determine what order should be taken, will meet him at Berwick. Asks him to make proclamation that good rule and peace may be kept, according to the league between the Kings. Will do the like in his wardenry. Asks for an answer by the bearer. Alneweke Castle, 3 Jan.

P. 1, copy. Headed: To my lorde of Anguyshe, chancelor of Scotland at the first tyme. Endd.

3 Jan.

3763. SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 69.

Writes nothing about this business committed to him, but refers to the letters of Master Secretary, who has acted most discreetly. Has only written a few things in cipher to Peter Vannes. Wolsey can undoubtedly make use of the Pope's authority as his own. His Holiness prays him to continue his help more now than ever. Begs Wolsey to pay the Cavalcanti, and increase his pension, as he promised. Florence, tertio nonas Januarii 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.: Messire Gregory de Casalis, iij. nonas Januarii 1527.

5 Jan.

3764. THE POPE'S DELIVERANCE.

Vit. B. x. 6.

R. M.

Fishes' Coll., p. 179.

Pocock, i. 34.

On Sunday, 5 Jan. 1527, between 8 and 9 in the morning, the Cardinal landed at Blackfriars, and with a large company proceeded to St. Paul's. With the Imperial ambassador on his right hand, and the French on his left, he advanced to the Arches, and was there met by the bishops of London, St. Asaph, Lincoln, Bath and Llandaff, the priors of 1528.

The POPE'S DELIVERANCE—cont.

Westminster, St. Saviour's, Christ Church and St. Mary's 'Spital, and the abbots of Stratford and of Tower Hill, and conducted to the high-altar. At the choir door Dr. Capon declared the great misery which the Church suffered from Lutheranism, and the shameful injuries inflicted on the Pope. When the service was done the Cardinal went to dinner, and the ambassadors with him.

Modern copy.

5 Jan

3765. [HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 29 b.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 49.

Add. MS.

15,287, f. 190.

B. M.

Theiner, 556.

Credence for bishop Stafileo, whom the French king is sending as an ambassador to his Holiness.

Lat., draft, in Vannes' hand, p. 1.

2. Copy from the Vatican, dated Greenwich, 5 Jan. 1527.

3766. [WOLSEY to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 45°.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 50.

Credence for Stafileo, who is going to Rome as the joint ambassador of the kings of France and England. London.

Lat., draft in Vannes' hand, p. 1.

3767. INSTRUCTIONS for STAFILEO.

R. O.

"Instructiones datæ a *Ser. Rege Angliæ, &c., R^{do} in Christo patri Episcopo Staphyleo, nonnulla gravissimi momenti negocia concernentes, quas ipse dictus Ser. Rex ejusdem domini Staphylei fidei in hunc qui sequitur modum in Italia tractanda ac peragenda commisit."

The King, hearing from Wolsey of the prudence and other virtues of the Bishop, and that Francis intends to send him to reside as ambassador at Rome, to work for the liberation of the Pope, and for the benefit of the Holy League, and in consequence of the community of interest of the two Kings, desired him to come to England; and seeing the truth of what he had heard, has appointed him as their joint ambassador, and sent letters of credence to the Pope, which he will use as he thinks fit.

If he finds the Pope liberated he must condole with him on his misfortunes in the name of the two Kings, and say that they, bound by perpetual amity, would think nothing more glorious than to act for the establishment of peace and the restoration of authority to the Holy See, for which purpose they have sent the said Bishop to declare their mind, and to ask the Pope's advice. It is most needful for him to be safe from wrong, and not to trust his enemies more, whose perfidy and cruelty have so often been experienced; and he should therefore betake himself to the army of the allies, or to some other place safe from the enemy, when he will be able, with clear conscience, to revoke the unjust conditions extorted by the enemy, and will not allow himself to be led into any compact prejudicial to the confederates. The Bishop shall assure him that the Kings will spare nothing to restore his Holiness to his ancient state, all his family to their rights, and Italy to freedom from a disgraceful yoke. If he find the Pope still prisoner, and is able to visit him, he must console him in the two Kings' names, and say that they will leave nothing undone to liberate him; he must ask him if he consents to these terms, which will produce irreparable injury, persuaded by the arts of the enemy. If he is forced to them by hope of his liberation, he must first protest. The enemy intend only to enslave the Church and lay waste every thing. There are two means of safety: one in the help of the League, which the Kings will so help that success may be shortly hoped for, but the Pope does not wish to be hasty; the other is, that if the Imperialists see that the affairs of the Church are managed by the Pope so that they cannot get any profit from his captivity, they will obtain nothing but infamy and the hatred of Christendom. The Kings advise him to delegate his authority to the absent Cardinals, that they may meet and take measures for the safety of the Church, and elect as vicar and moderator him who by his own prudence and the authority of the Kings will be best able to perform this duty. The Pope must promise his assistance. By this means the liberation of the Pope will be hastened, and the Papal States will be held in subjection, knowing that the Head of the Church is established, and that the Imperialists cannot do as they please with the Church.

* From the asterisk is struck out, and "R. D. Cardinali Eboracensi, Apostolicæ sedis de latere legato" is substituted.

1528.

Lat., pp. 7.

Vit. B. x. 15.

2. Secret instructions for the same.

R. M.

Pocock, i. 45.

The King has disclosed to the Bishop the invalidity of his marriage with the Queen, and the scruples of conscience arising partly from his own learning, and partly from the advice of theologians and other learned men; but wishing, as a Catholic prince, to do nothing contrary to the laws of the Church, he desired the Pope to grant what was necessary;—either to give a commission to men who seem most fit to decide the matter, or to send a Legate with sufficient authority to England,—because the wars in Italy make it unsafe for English subjects to go to the Pope, and because the facts cannot be examined with sufficient accuracy elsewhere than in England. The King trusts that his Holiness will grant these petitions, and not inform many people of them, lest the objections of the contrary party cause a hindrance. As it is uncertain how far the Pope will go, and the matter is of the greatest importance for the safety of the King's soul and for the tranquillity of his realm, by the advice of his councillors he has decided to use the assistance of all persons, either his subjects or foreigners, who are fitted to examine it, so that if it is referred by the Pope to the Cardinals or other learned men, the truth may the more easily be brought to light. The King therefore desires Stailes, on his arrival in Rome, to communicate with his agents, and, if the matter must be discussed before sending a commission or a legate, to assist the ambassadors and agents of the King in all places and with all persons by his erudition and prudence. He constitutes him for this purpose his chief advocate, councillor and proctor, desiring him to expound to the Pope, the Cardinals, and all others, the reasons which have been shown to him, and of which he has a memorandum; but he must not allow a copy of them to be made by any one. He desires the Bishop to show the Pope that a refusal to grant his just request may cause a diminution of the authority of the Holy See. He promises the Bishop to procure for him a bishopric from the French king, and to favor his promotion to the cardinalate.

If the Pope has left the castle of St. Angelo, but is still in the hands of the Imperialists, he is to urge his Holiness to nominate Wolsey his vicar general, or to appoint a meeting of the absent cardinals, and to depute Wolsey as their head during the Pope's captivity.

Lat., pp. 7. In Farnes' hand.

Vit. B. x. 34.

R. M.

Pocock, i. 49.

3. Instructions given by Card. Wolsey in the King's name to bp. Stailes, of matters to be treated of at Rome.

He is sent to reside with the Pope as the common ambassador of the French king and Henry, and to assist in matters concerning the state of the Church, and for the advantage of the Holy League. After presenting his letters of credence to the Pope, he is to condole with him on his misfortunes, and congratulate him on his escape; and to say that during his captivity the two Kings have thought of nothing so much as procuring his liberation, promoting universal peace, and restoring the authority of the Holy See. As the League has a powerful army in Italy, the Bishop must by all means urge the Pope not to perform the conditions extorted from him by the Imperialists. He need not be moved by regard for the hostages, for by Lautrec's valour, or in some other way, they will soon be liberated. If the Pope uses the present opportunity, with the assistance of these Princes, he will be able to compel the enemy to accept his terms; and by the use of ecclesiastical censures and other means will make them an example to all who may in future attempt anything against the vicar of Christ and the See Apostolic. His Holiness must put no more trust in the enemy, but betake himself to the allied army; or some other safe place. The Bishop must assure him that the kings of England and France will do all that could be expected from the most obedient sons.

1528.

INSTRUCTIONS for STAVILEO—cont.

Lat., pp. 9. These instructions were signed by Wolsey before hearing of the Pope's liberation, and were then altered.

6 Jan.

3768. PIETRO PISANI* to [the DOGE OF VENICE†]

Vit. B. ix. 17.

B. M.

Informs him that Gambara had been sent from the Pope to Monsignor Illustrissimo (de Medici) to go to the Most Christian King and then to England, among other things to request the King, as he has already done Lautrec, to use his intercession with Venice to give Ravenna and Cervia to the Pope. This has been done by the procurement of the prothonotary Gambara, who is not favorable to Venice. Thinks it right to give him advice of it, that he may do his best "per tuorli el credito." Gives an account of the numbers and intended movements of the army and of the duke of Urbino. When its efforts are crowned with success, hopes the Pope will no longer continue neutral. Bologna, 6 Jan. 1527. Signed: Petrus Pisan', Proc' Or.

Ital., mutilated, pp. 2.

On a slip attached: Signor Casale by his letters has done much service in this matter with Wolsey; so you may do your work bravely.

7 Jan.

3769. GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 70.

Lautrec will not leave tomorrow, as he promised, on account of the heavy rains, but will move his army hence on the day after. In the accompanying letters to Vannes there are certain matters to be told to Wolsey. Bononia, 7 Jan. 1528. Signed.

P. 1, Lat. Add. Endd.: D. Gregorius de Casalis, 7 Jan. 1527.

7 Jan.

3770. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 37.

Is delighted with the news of the 10th and 15th ult. In my letters of the 7th, 15th, and 26th Dec., I gave you copious instructions of the Legate to be sent, the commission for me and the King's dispensation; and I sent you instructions of the King's mind on the 26th, when we had great hopes of the Pope's liberation. The news of it has filled us with delight, and the King hopes you will now have free access to his Holiness for his matter. I make sure you have already gained the dispensation, commission,

* See Mr. Brown's Cal., July 18, 1528.

† Magnifico et Clarissimo.

1528.

and appointment of the Legate, and that all things are in good train. This courier will deliver you our letters of congratulation to the Pope. You are to visit him, and congratulate him on his delivery, according to the letters enclosed, and state that the King and I consider that he has acted for the best in his difficulties, and that he was justified in obtaining his liberty by an external compliance with the hard terms demanded of him, which, under the circumstances, he is not bound to observe, especially as they are so prejudicial to the Holy See. We expect that he will find a means of evading the danger which threatens the See and his confederates if these terms be observed. You must warn him against running into fresh hazards; for if Lautrec were defeated the Pope would be at the mercy of the Imperialists. You shall tell him what piasa we were engaged upon for his liberation. First, the King sent me to France to form a solid alliance between the two crowns. Next I omitted no occasion of urging on the expedition of Lautrec, to which the king of England contributed not less than the king of France. Then we encouraged the Venetians and the other states of Italy, and prevented the Florentines from revolting to the enemy. Then we kept the French and other people in their obedience to the Holy See, when, in consequence of the Pope's captivity, they thought of having recourse to some inferior authority. Then we made a requisition to the Emperor, insisting on the Pope's liberation, and sent letters for that purpose from the whole clergy of England to the clergy of Spain, and twice in a week had a fast and a litany through the whole kingdom to procure God's favor for that purpose, which it must be thought were heard by Him, and the Pope was more speedily liberated; and the King's majesty and I would take no rest, but were ready to shed our blood, he, as an excellent and Christian prince, and I as his most obedient minister.

After you have dexterously employed these arguments you shall wait a time, and see how the Pope takes them; and as there is no doubt that he will use some very complimentary expressions, you shall take the opportunity of edging in the King's matter, and tell his Holiness that, although the King is a most devoted and disinterested son of the Church, even if he obtain nothing by his services, yet as this matter is of such paramount importance to himself and his kingdom, and the Pope has granted the same to others who have less deserved it, his Highness trusts that he will not refuse his just and modest petition. You shall also remind him of the danger of incurring the loss of the King's friendship by refusing his request or delaying it. Urges Sir Gregory to use the same ability and dexterity as he has hitherto done in getting a legate appointed and sent. Sends a copy of the declaration of war against the Emperor in the event of his not acceding to the Pope's liberation. London, 7 Jan. 1527. Signed.

Lat. Add.

7 Jan. 3771. WOLSEY to CLEMENT VII.

Thames, p. 357.

Congratulates the Pope on his liberty. The King was greatly delighted at the news. Does not think the Pope is bound to fulfil the terms extorted from him. Would strongly recommend to him the King's cause, which is now most ardently pursued before his Holiness, were it not that he has full trust in the Pope's affection. The King asks no more than what is just, and will contribute to the repose of the Holy See. Writes to Gregory Camale on the subject. London, 7 Jan. 1527.

Lat.

Vii. B. v. 19.
B. M.
Pesch, 1. 51.

2. Corrected draft by Vanna.
Lat., pp. 4.

1328.

7 Jan.

3772. SURFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Ellis, 3 Ser.
i. 200.

Wrote lately about the privation of the abbot of St. Bennets (Hulme),* and has had no answer. Hears now that the King, who is founder, has commanded the abbot "not to intermeddle any further in the same monastery." All the gentlemen here will depose to his innocence of the crimes objected against him. As to dilapidations, the house, at his installation, was deeply in debt, of which the abbot has paid off great part, notwithstanding the dimes and other heavy charges. Asks favor for the abbot, especially as he has promised to be ordered by Wolsey, and has always been kind to the Queen and Suffolk. Norwich, 7 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal.

7 Jan.

3773. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Hears that Albany intends to come to Scotland by the assistance of the king of France. Asks him to write to Francis to stop him. If he has any writings to say that he comes by James's desire, they are false, or procured during his nonage. Has written to the same effect to Francis and the Duke by the bearer, Marchmont Herald. Knows that the castle of Dunbar being in the hands of Frenchmen is a great occasion for the Duke to come to this realm. Asks him, therefore, to solicit Francis to cause Albany to deliver it into his hands. Believes it is held by the French rather for evil to both realms than good. Edinburgh, 7 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: 7 Jan. 1527.

7 Jan.

3774. ANGUS to THE SAME.

R. O.

To the same effect. Halyrudhouse, 7 Jan. Signed.

P. 1, mutilated. Add.

7 Jan.

3775. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Asks him to use his influence in the above matter. Edinburgh, 7 Jan. Signed.

P. 1, mutilated. Add. Endd.: The king of Scots, 7 Jan. 1527.

7 Jan.

3776. ANGUS to THE SAME.

R. O.

On the same subject. Edinburgh, 7 Jan. 1527. Signature lost. Add. Endd.

7 Jan.

3777. ANGUS to the EARL OF [NORTHUMBERLAND].

R. O.

Received on the 6th Jan. inst. his writings, dated Alnwick, 3d inst. Does not think a general convention would be advisable till they have first met by themselves, to determine what should be done. Suggests that they should meet on Thursday, the 23 inst., at Rydenburn, "as place maist commodious and ganand, . . . considering it stands dry, but (i.e. without) confluence of greit [streams or other] impediment, sa we ma surely resort on athir syd therto . . . baith mare ewest (used) than Berwyk or Cornwell (Cornhill) that ar . . . e greit ryvere, that ma hald ws sundry." Before receiving his letter, had caused proclamation to be made for keeping good rule and concord. Edinburgh, 7 [Jan.] 1527. Signed.

P. 1, mutilated. Add.: [To the] erle of [Northumber]land, wardane [of the East and] Medill Marches.

1528.

8 Jan.

R. O.

3778. [JAMES V. to ALBANY.]

Hears that he intends to come into the realm, and fears that his doing so will cause trouble amongst the people. Desires him to send his intentions by Marchmont Herald, and to postpone his coming till James gives him leave. If any persons have begged him to come, saying that it is the King's pleasure, they deceive him, and do not wish for the weal of the kingdom, but try for their own purposes to put division between him and his subjects. Edinburgh, 8 Jan.

Copy, p. 1.

8 Jan.

Vat. Trans.

Add. MS.

15307, C. 192.

R. M.

St. P. vii. 44.

3779. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Congratulating the Pope on his liberty, and urging him not to observe the conditions extorted from him in his captivity. Lautrec has orders to advance. He will learn from the English ambassadors, especially from Gregory Casale, the efforts made in his behalf by his Majesty. Greenwich, 8 Jan. 1527.

Lat. Add.

Vlt. B. x. 21.

R. M.

2. Corrected draft.*

Pp. 5. Marginal note: Alexander cursor Anglus has tulit. 8 Jan. 1528.

9 Jan.

R. O.

3780. JOHN BISHOP OF EXETER to MR. RUSSELL.

Encloses letters received this present 9 Jan., the contents of which he desires him to communicate to my lord Legate. "Ye know Welshmen ben poor and charged with many bonds and payments further than any other the King's subjects, for the which claim their old customs" (sic); so it would be a good thing to stay the parties "aparrans" at this time, which would quiet the country, and further the King's duties. It is important that the Princess's council should know my lord Cardinal's pleasure in the matter.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Russell, secretary unto the Princess's good grace. Endd. in a later hand.

9 Jan.

R. O.

3781. JOHN TAYLOR, Master of the Rolls, to WOLSEY.

On the 8th "Bailly Robert Tett" told him that a spy had come from Spain with letters from the French ambassadors there, which the King is sending to the bishop of Bayonne for Wolsey to see. The King and Madame will do nothing without informing Wolsey. They are pleased to hear that he is content with their last advertisement out of Spain. On the 7th sent to Calais for Wolsey a letter in answer to that which my lord of Rocheford's servant brought him, letters from Italy, and one from the Grand Master in answer to Wolsey's, with an account of Lautrec's proceeding, and the provision of money for him. Wolsey's letters were calcar acutum, for a man was immediately sent to Lautrec. No news but what he will hear from the bishop of Bayonne. Has told the post to enquire for the letters he sent to Calais, and take them on. Paris, 9 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: Dr. Taylor xix, Jan. 1527.

9 Jan.

Vesp. C. iv. 2.

R. M.

3782. DON YNYGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

Has had letters from Flanders complaining of the injury done to the Spanish ships in an English port by the French, and tolerated by the English.

* At the end, Knight is put in place of Casale, as in "State Papers."

1528.

DON YNSGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY—cont.

Begs Wolsey will use his endeavors to remove all obstacles to the peace and the good understanding of the two nations. "Ex hac domo suburbana, v. id. Januarii." Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: D. cardinali Eboracen. atque Angliæ legato. Endd.

9 Jan.*

3783. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand,
III. 67.

He will learn from his joint letters with De Brosse the few things that have happened since the despatch of the last courier. The ceremonies have been great for the Pope's deliverance. Hopes similar ones will be done in France. I beg you will get me an answer about this ceremony of ranks (des rangs), and also a letter from the King which I can show, that he approves the language used by Wolsey, and the comedies which have been acted to his advantage, for Wolsey asked me particularly if I was not writing to him; also, if you write to me, you had better thank him for the declarations of friendship he has made towards you. He wishes to obtain a copy of the offers which were sent into Spain, of which he has lost the duplicate. I beg you will also send the copy I sent you of the procuration of De Brosse, of which neither he nor I have kept a duplicate. The ambassadors of Florence and Ferrara had some dispute at the ceremonies, which they referred to Bayonne; and he advised them to protest that what they did then should not be taken for a precedent, Florence already having gained prior place, but write to their fellow ambassadors, and those with Francis, who was chief of the League.

The day after he spoke to Wolsey about the deprivation of the Emperor, Wolsey spoke of it to Staphileus, who did not fail to aggravate it; but Wolsey did not speak of me, nor that I had opened the matter to him. When Staphileus spoke of it to me I pretended to know nothing about it, not wishing to deprive Wolsey of the honor of suggesting it. After the departure of Staphileus, the dean of the Chapel spoke of it to me as a thing that would be for the good of the Church, which, as he had just come from Wolsey, made me think he had been told it was my proposal, but I passed it over without pretending to know about it. I believe firmly that Staphileus carries the despatch "dont l'autre voyage vous ay escript," and I am sure it would give satisfaction here if you would despatch it soon. Russell will follow in post very close. Staphileus has express charge from the King and Wolsey to say to Francis and Madame wonders of ————†.

It may be that if it come to his knowledge he will presume I may have been the cause; but you know in what terms he spoke of it to you when you were here, which was not owing to me.

Petitions for the command of the galleys vacant by the death of Friar Bernardin, for his brother. London, 9 Jan.

P.S.—Has omitted to write to the King that De Brosse was two days at Greenwich, where he was very well received by the King.

French.

9 Jan.

3784. WM. KNIGHT to [HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. i. 33.

B. M.

Peeck, i. 54.

This courier Thadæus left Florence on Saturday last. The King's dispensation is passed under lead in as ample a form as the minute brought by Barlow. Brings also a commission for Wolsey, which is sufficient, though not like the minute. Cardinal St. Quatnor made the draught, so that whenever it is required, or a copy thereof, it may be given and stand with the honor of the Pope, the King and Wolsey. Left Florence on Sunday last, and, fearing the rivers in Lombardy, went towards Genoa. At Alexandria, his host informed him that Barlow had passed, leaving letters with Thadeus, whom he would find at Aste. Went thither the same day, and received the King's letter with a double of the minutes. As there was nothing in them to cause him to return, will continue his journey. If the courier had not been hindered by the floods, he would have been at Paris before Knight arrived at Aste. Aste, 9 Jan.

* In the heading to this letter, supplied by the Editor, it is dated 29th January, which appears to be an error.

† A line left blank here in Le Grand.

1528.

Hol. pp. 2.

9 Jan.

3785. KNIGHT to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 57.

Arrived today at Aste, and there received his letters dated Westm., 27 Dec., with the duplicates of the minutes that this courier lately brought him. By accompanying letters, he will perceive what is being done in the King's causes here. Sees no reason in Wolsey's letters for remaining, and trusts therefore to be soon with him. Thanks him for his letters of exchange, without which he would have been "clean comfortless." Aste, 9 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd. Sealed.

9 Jan.

3786. MARQUIS OF EXETER.

R. O.

"Item," 28 Oct., for a boat that carried stuff of my Lord's from London to Greenwich, 6*d.* 31 Oct., a boat from Greenwich to London to fetch stuff, 8*d.* 30 Nov., the same, 6*d.* For two "carea" that carried 2 punchcons of wine and 2 barrels of herrings from Billingsgate to my Lord's place, 6*d.* To 2 porters who stowed it in the cellar, 8*d.* To a cooper for putting 11 hoops on the punchcon, 11*d.* 8 Jan., boat hire when "I went with my Lord's stuff to my lord Carnelle (Cardinal) from Grenwyche," 8*d.* 6 Jan., reward to a woman who brought my Lord a present, 3*d.* 7 Jan., for a boat to carry a hoghead of wine from Lymuse to the Crane of the Ventre, 6*d.* Carriage of the wine from the Crane to my Lord's place, 3*d.* To a porter for stowing it in the cellar, 1*d.* 9 Jan., hire of a boat to carry my Lord's stuff from Greenwich to London, 6*d.* My boat hire from London to Greenwich, 1*d.*

Total, 10*s.* 5*d.* Signed: H. marques of Exeter.

Ip. 2, imperfect.

10 Jan.

3787. KNIGHT to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 46.

The dispensation is sped and under lead according to the minute brought by Barlow; also a commission devised by St. Quatuor. Gambara, who is now in France, will convey both to you. Having obtained them, I had returned thus far homeward when I found letters from you and my lord Legate, instructing me to get the Pope to send a special legate to England to determine your cause. But as Gregory de Casalis, who has similar instructions, is nearer the Pope, and on receipt of my letters you may perhaps be satisfied with what has been obtained already, I will wait here till I know your pleasure. Aste, 10 Jan.

Hol. Add.

10 Jan.

3788. KNIGHT to WOLSEY.

Vt. B. i. 31.

B. M.

Despatched this courier Thadeus on the 1*st.* from Orvieto, with letters about the success of his charges here, supposing he would shortly have been with Wolsey, but the impassable state of the rivers in Lombardy has delayed him, and as he met my lord of Rochford's priest,* who gave him letters from Wolsey for Knight, he waited here to deliver them. The priest passed on his way to Mr. Gregory two days before Knight arrived. As to the reasons that moved the King and Wolsey to have the King's cause committed to some Cardinal to be sent purposely into England, supposes he sees that as the Pope makes a difficulty about granting a commission to Wolsey, it will be much more difficult to induce him to send a legate purposely, for the continual fear that he and the cardinals are in, in consequence of the reports of the Emperor's preparations for war. Does not think the Pope would send, or any cardinal go, who intends to live quietly in England.

1528.

KNIGHT to WOLSEY—cont.

† The commission and dispensation are sped, with a request to be made by me and Gambara to the King at the time of their delivery. What it is you will perceive by my letters. I send them by Gambara, and, considering the time, you will be right well content with what has passed without asking for what could not be had without longer delay. Gregory and I will do our diligence, and if I am to return to Orvieto I will wait your pleasure hereby at Turin. The Datary has wholly abandoned the Court. Campeggio is ill at Rome with gout. Pisano, Triulcio, Orsini, Gadi and Cesi are hostages. De Monte, St. Quatuor, Ridolfo, Ravenna and Perusino are with the Pope. Aste, 10 Jan.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

10 Jan. 3789. SIR ROBT. JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received his letters by my lord of Rochford's priest, and has accordingly exhorted Lautrec to go forward with all speed, showing him that although the King's contribution for August, September, and October has been idly spent, he will contribute for two months more, and has paid ready money. He is greatly encouraged at this, saying that he trusts Henry as much as his own master, and will make no delay. He leaves here today, and has promised not to rest till he meets the enemy, except for the repose of his footmen. Bononia, 10 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: Sir Robt. Jernegan, 10 Jan. 1527.

10 Jan. 3790. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to [WOLSEY].

Vit B. x. 34.

R. M.

On Monday last received his letters dated Dec. 15. The Pope will not yet declare himself friend to the League, but Lautrec says that he trusts he will do so shortly, for success is impossible without his help. Thinks his Holiness delays because he does not feel sure of Lautrec's advance, and if that failed he would be in the greatest danger. Supposes he will join the League as the army approaches. The King's and Wolsey's letters will persuade him more to do so than anything else. Lautrec has received letters from the French King, by which he sees that Wolsey has spoken for him to Francis. For this he is very grateful.

Has urged him to proceed, and told him that it was only for that purpose that the King contributed. He leaves this town today to march forwards, and says he will not rest till he meets the enemy. Bologna, 10 Jan.

My lord of Rochford's priest arrived on Monday. Signed.

Pp. 2.

10 Jan. 3791. JAMES V. to FRANCIS I.

R. O.

Since he took upon him the government of Scotland, dissensions have abated, and law has been maintained; but it has been lately rumored that John duke of Albany, at the instigation of Robt. ab Oubynze

* Cranmer ?

* Printed from this point in Burnet, iv. 46.

1528.

(D'Aubigni), or both together, by aid of Francis, have been hiring ships and sending them to Scotland without leave of James. Has written to them to dissuade them from their voyage, that he may the better consider their affairs without injury to his kingdom; for if they really have documents as they pretend, from himself, giving them licence to come, he is entirely ignorant of them. Requests that Francis will stay them if they will not listen to his entreaty. Edinburgh, 10 Jan. 1527.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.

11 Jan.

*Lana, Corr.
des E. Karl V., vol. 1. 257.*

3792. CLEMENT VII. to CHARLES V.

When he was imprisoned, had nothing else to write to him, except for his liberation; but seeing by his letters with what zeal he had given orders for it of himself, cannot but thank him for his good offices. Expected to have had this to do before, but the death of the Viceroy has caused delay. Acknowledges that Charles has always shown himself devoted to the Holy See, and assures him of his good will. It remains to procure peace, the council, and the other things desired by the Emperor, for the sake of Christendom. Has complied willingly with the Emperor's commands touching the hostages and lands, &c. Had intended immediately upon his liberation to send one of his servants to intimate it to the Emperor, and thank him; but, owing to the difficulties of the passage, both by sea and land, was obliged to content himself with writing, in the hope that it might be sent by France, and has not yet had an answer. Orvieto, 11 Jan. 1528.

Italian.

12 Jan.

R. O.

3793. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

Asks for letters of safe-conduct for Wm. Fourhou, Burgess of Haddington, Patrick Fourhou, John Atkinson and George Forester to trade in England for a year. Edinburgh, 12 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

12 Jan.

R. O.

3794. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

Asks him to speak to the King for the prevention of Albany's coming into Scotland. Asks credence for the bearer, Wm. Hamilton. Edinburgh, 12 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. mutilated. Add. Endd.: The king of Scots, 12 Jan. 1527.

12 Jan.

R. O.

3795. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Since he came to Alnwick there has been no disorder in Northumberland. However, hearing from Sir Thos. Tempest and Master Bowes that certain outlaws at Felton, a town of Wm. Lisle's, intended to make a raid, sent Roger Lassells thither at midnight, who apprehended Alex. Crawhawe, the chief counsellor of Wm. and Humfrey Lisle, John Pryngill, to whose house the Lisles and their spies resorted, Rowly Eryngton, Gerrard Shaftowe, Eldre Hedle, laird of Bowreshelys in Riddesdale, Edw. Bewike of Riddesdale, Matthew Stokhall of Tyndale, one of the pledges that brake from the duke of Richmond's council at Pomfrett, Hobbe of Stokhall, Wm. Fletcher of Felton, John Talour of Felton, and Wm. Mydilton, Robt. Jakson, Gerrarde Richester, and John Broonwell, of South Tyndall, and John Armestrange, who brought the Armestrangs to Newcastle when they broke the gaol there. Held a warden court at Alnwick on Wednesday, Jan. 8, and beheaded nine for March treason, and hanged five for felony. The country is now in great fear and dread. Norfolk and others can tell Wolsey that these were most heinous transgressors. The gentlemen of the country served the King at the court truly, without fear or dread. The Lisles and their adherents are still aided in Scotland, notwithstanding the King's letters to the King and Angus. Encloses a letter from Angus, asking for a meeting on the Borders. Sends, as Wolsey wished, a list of the gentlemen of Northumberland, with their fees. Sent Thos. Gower, constable of Alnwick, to Angus, on receipt of his letter, and now sends him to Wolsey to tell what he heard there. Alnwick, 12 Jan. Signed.

1528.

H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND TO WOLSEY—cont.

Pp. 3. Add. : To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

12 Jan. 3796. THE SAME to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

On the same subject. Will not meet Angus in Scotland without the King's orders. The chancellor of Durham, Sir Wm. Evers, Sir Thos. Tempest and Robt. Bowes have been with him since his coming, and take all possible pains for the reformation of justice. Asks the King to thank them. Alnwick, 12 Jan.

P. 1. A copy. Add. : To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

12 Jan. 3797. THE SAME to ANGUS.

R. O.

Received on the 10th inst. his letter dated 7th inst. Does not think Dreydeneborne suitable, as it is so far from any good town, considering the company they must have with them. If Angus cannot come to Berwick, will meet him one day at Norham, and another day at Lady Church. Alnwick Castle, 12 Jan.

P. 1. Copy.

12 Jan. 3798. OLIVER LEDER

R. O.

A statement in answer to Oliver Leder, headed :—"This following is to manifest that as well Andrew Wodeoke as Ric. Reynold hath rightfully ordered the debt of Gaspar Grace according to Bedford's mind, and that the loss of the house in Cadiz is recompensed in Spain."

Pp. 3.

R. O.

2. Answer of Ric. Reynolds, of London, mercer, to a book of Oliver Leder, concerning a suit between them, and his supplication to Sir John Alen and Messrs. Roche and Withipole, the arbitrators. 12 Jan. 1527.

Pp. 10.

Jan. 3799. [TAYLOR] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 368.

R. M.

"[P]lease it your Grace to be advertised that the 12th of the clock, came to me the post which your Grace depecehed He] tarried nothing but while his post horse was made redy. I received from] him your gracious letters, and with the two copies of the instructions, whereof I went to the Court to h[ave an audience of] the King and my Lady his mother, according to your [commission]. When I came to the Court the Grand Master sho[wed me that for] 15 days I could not speak with the King, and that [Madame] was so grieved with the gout that she would n[ot speak] with any man; wherefore I showed unto the said Graun[d Master] the credence that your Grace had commanded me by [and] desired him, with humble commendations from your Gr[ace, to show] them to the King and Madame. At his retourny[ng back] again, the which was more than one long hour, h[e showed] to me how thankfully both the King and Madame t[ook your] speedy diligence in writing to the Pope's Holiness co[n]cerning the] affairs of Italy, and showed to me further that th[e King had] received a letter from Mons. de Bayona and Mons. [de 1528.

Brusse], of six paper leaves long; the which the King caused [to be read] to him two times by the Grand Master, and noted [sentence by] sentence in the same, the which he said were of your [Grace's] counsel made and devised; by the which I perceived following your acts of rejoicing the Pope's liberty they caused to be done certain solemnities at Saint had sent for the Chancellor to cause that in Par[is there] should be made processions and other ceremonies ly[ke as] had be done in England; and upon the King's beh[alf and my] Lady's he desired me to write unto your Grace both and thanks, and to advertise your Grace as doth follo[w]. First, that three days past, or that I came to the Co[ur]t, he had sent a gentleman of his, called Mons. Longavall[e, to the Pope,] with like congratulation and exhortations as [the King] and your Grace had done, and that they tr[usted] his Holiness would well regard the advisement of so [How]beit the King here marvelleth that h[is] Holiness seeketh delays to confirm such articles as be duke of Ferrara, by whose example likewise Venetians and the Florentines, it is thought here Duke should revolt upon cause of not performing as be concluded, the causes of Italy should be in [worse case than] ever they were, considering that it hath been grea[t good fortune] to win the Duke by great policy; and now by [sinister] affection to destroy all that hath cost so great lab[our] it were great folly. Wherefore the King here and Mada[m]e advertise your Grace that when Prothonotarius de Gambara com[eth] unto your Grace, the which as yet hath not spoke with the King[is] highness, it shall please you to seriously speak with him of the m[at]ter of the duke of Ferrara, and that the Pope should not [too straitly] regard particular matters, the which may be easily reformed [here]after, and with little business redressed and nee universal peace and quietness of the whole Church liberty of the estate of Italy, and the sooner pacif[ying] of Christendom, and likewise to do with the ambassado[r of] Venes; for here they thinke your Grace hath more e in one word than they can do with much labour. A[ls]o the Grand Master hath promised me that as soon as M[ons. de] Gambara hath spoke with the King and Madame, he [shall inform] your Grace of every word that here is spoke with that you may perfectly be instructed of all his doings.

"Also they willed me to write to your Grace that duke F[ernando], with the Emperor's favor and aid, maketh great lab[or and pain] with the princes of Almayne to be elect in Reges Romanorum; the which, if it should come to pass, should [be] a great comfort to the Cæsarians for interest of Italy. Wherefore they beseech your Grace with your great wisdom to help to withstand that effect. Howbeit, they have [c]ertents that a man of great power is departed from Fa[ernando] who is united with Vavoda for not performing such p[er]sones as were made betwixt Farnando and him, the [which they] thought to be a great diminution of the Duke's p[ur]pose him to enterprise any business into Italy.

"Furthermore, they willed me to write to your Gra[ce] that the Pope sheweth himself as yet but strangely outwardly, he hath secretly sent to Mons. Lot[erek] that he should march forward, and order him as though in his Holiness. Nevertheless, he hath promised [to do] all that he may do, whereby they have good [hopes that,] upon the good advisement of the King's highness [and your Grace,] there shall come from his Holiness more effectua[us] assistance, and that Mons. Loterek hath special command[ment to go] forward, and that he shall lack no money, and th[at the prince] of Orange is returned to Rome, and, as it is [thought,] so to go to Naples if there be no resistance made Loterek, the which is now past Bonony shall follo[w] him to Naples. Here is all that I have in commandment [to write unto] your Grace at this time.

"And where of your gracious and especial goodness en me it hath 1528.

[TAYLOR] to WOLSEY—cont.

pleased you to take great labours to error of simplicity and facility in remitting the p your Grace lately sent into Italy, I humbly thank [your Grace,] and I promise your Grace I was induced by two reasons so] to do: one was that your gracious letters made me [to think that] he went only to supply such adventures as my letted Taddeus, which I heard was safely arrived there; [and the] other was the long tarryal, the which the said post [made] by the way: but from hence forward I shall not nor dispute any reasons, but follow commandment semper sit monuisse satis, and I shall study rather Prometheus than Epimetheus, the which wa Prometheus had a forewit, Epimetheus had [an afterwit]. Other news here be none but that Mons. de [has] brought the Cardinal's hat to the Chanc[ellor of France, from the] Pope." P[aris] Jan.

Add.

Jan.

3800. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE and DE BROSE.

Cal. D. x. 321.

B. M.

“. eu par vostre dernyere lettre du ix^{me} de demonstration de joye qui a este faict pardela [pour la liberation de] nostre St. Pere le Pape, et encores que le jour des R[oya]s [pa]rdeça le semblable, tant en processions generales que aultre sy ay je oultre cela voullu pour plus grande demonstracion que [dans les] villes de mon royaume feuz de joye en soient faictz comme j'estime sy grande et de telle consequence qu'elle touche non seull[ement] dont il est le chef et pasteur, mais generalmente a toute la [Chrestiente] vous pourrez advertyr le Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye [et] Mons. le Legat mon bon amy, lequel vous remercierez de ma [part] des bons et honestes propos que vous m'escripvez vous avoir t l'entretenement de la bonne indissoluble et eternelle amytié q[ue] durer entre ledit Roy son maistre, mon bon pere et perpetuel allye, semblablement de la peine qu'il est delibere de prandre pour continuer au recouvrement et liberte de mes enfans par une ou aultre et pareillement en son bon conseil et advia, j'ay prins tel e que je ne puis que esperer que les choses a l'ayde de Dieu s tost venir a l'effect que nous devons desirer, qui est a la paix ne sera sans le grant honneur et immortelle gloire de Mo[ns. le Legat] mon bon amy, auquel l'obligacion en sera totalement d de moy et de ce qui me peult toucher, mais generalmente [de toute la] Chrestiente, pour avoir conduit dresse et manye les [affaires] a tel bien si vertueusement, si songneusement [Ju]sques icy, et dont je suis seur qu'il se ung advertissement que je vous [remis] [par le] quel ilz pourront veoir les praticques et m [All]maigne par le frere de l'Empereur pour se faire eslyre [roi des Romains, ce que seroit facile a empescher et y remedies y [a ce]ste prochaine dyette, qui se doit tenyr a la mycareme [de la] part dudit Roy mon bon frere et de la myenne pour remo teurs les choses qu'on advisera pouvoyr servir en la matiere me semble qu'on doit avoir d'autant plus de regard que ce s chose a sa devotion, donner toujours a l'Empereur plus de pouvoy[r] [a]t de force en Allemagne, et consequemment plus de moyen de [venir] a ce qu'il desire; parquoy vous me ferez entendre la response qu'i a vous sera faicte et la resolution qu'ilz y prandront, affin de faire le [devoir] de mon couste, vous advisant que ce pendant j'ay escript a [mes] ambassadeurs en Souysse, faire demander saufconduit pour cen [T]s Roy mondit bon frere, et perpetuel allye, et moy y pourrons envoyer

1528.

[ce qu]e je ne foyz doubte qu'ilz n'obtiennent facilement, affin que [v]oyalge se puisse faire en meilleure seurte.

"[Au] surplus, Messieurs, j'ay entendu par les derrenyeres lettres de Mons.
 [de L.]autrech le partement de mon armee de Boulogne, qui estoit [de] vers Ymola et la deliberacion qu'ilz ont d'aller trouver les [ennemis, che]se que nostre St. Pere soula main leur conforte et conseil[le comme vous] pourrez veoir par le double du chiffre que j'ay vous envoie, affin que [nostre St.] Pere de se ressentyr des injures qu ce et d'ayder et favoriser mon armee poussant conseil[le] qu'elle face. Ainsy que j'espere entendre ce amplement du prothonotaire du Gambre qui est icy arr[ive] apres passer plus avant et aller pardela par l particulierement et au long entendre toutes qu vous en dyre d'avantage," &c. St. Germain-en-Laye, Jan. Signed.

Add.

3801. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 243.

B. M.

" Empereur et ces deux Roys v [Chr]estiente que pour les causes et raisons mondit sieur de Bathe que pour ceste occasion il l de son intencion, et oultre cela luy a presente l apres avoir este veuz par le Roy mon maistre l'ambassadeur de l'Empereur des le 28^{me} jour du [mois] comme vous verrez par ce qu'il vous est envoie et ensuyvre le bon advis et opinion du Roy so[n] refuser ne deoyr faire chose que par luy et vo[us] d'entre eulx deux qu'il estime une mesme chose plus la grande et indubitable amour et affection qu'il escript la responce qu'il a presentement faite ausdits articles qu'il[1] pres le Roy soult bon pere ausquelz il escript bien son vouloir et intencion en cest endroit pour le luy fa et communiquer le tout comme a son bon et parfait amy tant qu'il m'est possible vouloir tenir main que cecy nulle declaration pour estre chose de telle import[ance] entendez que ne le vous pourroyz escrire mesmes lu si venoit a estre entendu par les allies, qui me gardera [de faire plus longue lettre,] remettant le surplus sur ce que les sieurs de Bayonne et de M[ontmorency] vous diront].

"Monsieur, Madame vostre bonne mere m'a comma[n]de de vous faire ses recommandacions, et vous prie de sa part la vouloir ex[cuser] de vous escrire] pour ceste heure, ce quelle eust faict volontiers neu est de la goutte qui l'a prinse a sa main, au bras et a

"Au demourant, Monsieur, il vous plaira veoir pa faict sur les articles que Monsieur de Bade luy a apportez, le qui cause entierement de la grande et bonne amour et affecti[on] vous verrez aussi par ce que vous est envoie la responce que le l'Empereur et le propos qu'il a eu avec luy, lequel il faict me ses pays et la se pourront trouver ses ambassadeurs Mon-sieigneur, croyre que s'il est chose ou je vous puisse

Add. : Reverendissime [Leg]at et

13 Jan.

3802. The DIVORCE.

Vit. B. x. 35.

B. M.

Extract from a letter of Gregory [Casale], dated Orvieto, 13 Jan.

Has shown the Pope all that Wolsey wrote to him on Dec. 15, viz., the new contribution to be made by the King, and the preparations for Lautrec's progress; as well as the French king's instructions to Lautrec. The 1528.

The DIVORCE—cont.

Spaniards and Germans demand two pays which are due to them, without which they will not leave Rome; but if Lautree goes towards Naples the Spaniards also will go thither. It is not certain what the Germans will do. Is carrying on practices by means of the Pope for the surrender of Abruzzo.

The fleet has taken Sardinia. Renzo has received a reinforcement of Corsicans, and will attack Sicily when the wind is favorable.

*Yesterday and today, had a long conference with the Pope about sending a legate conformably to Wolsey's letters of the 27 Dec. He is desirous of satisfying the King, but wishes to consult St. Quatuor and Simonetta as to the best method of proceeding, and they have resolved as follows: They think that the King must commit the cause to the Cardinal by virtue of the commission which the Secretary (Knight) takes, or of his own legatine authority; and when the cause is so committed, if the King finds his conscience disburdened, and he can honestly do what he requires, there is no doctor who can better resolve this point than the King himself. If, therefore, he is so resolved, as the Pope believes, let him commit his cause to the Legate, marry again, follow up the trial, let a public application be made for a legate who should be sent from the Consistory; for this will be most expedient. St. Quatuor and Simonetta say, if the Queen is cited she will put in no answer, except to protest against the place and the judges, and then the Imperialists will demand of the Pope a prohibition, and so the King cannot marry again, and if he does his offspring will not be legitimate. They will also demand a commission for the cause to be heard at Rome, and the Pope will not be able to refuse it. But if the King marry again they cannot demand a prohibition, and can only urge that Wolsey and the other cardinal and the place are suspicious, and ask that the cause may be examined at Rome, when the Pope will give sentence, and so judgment will be passed, to the satisfaction of the whole world, to which neither Spaniard nor German can make objection.

This is the method he suggests for proceeding; but he desires it should not be thought to come from himself. As Wolsey is anxious for speed a legate may be sent on the King's application. The Pope will consent to send whomsoever Casale shall nominate,—Campeggio, Casarinus, &c. Cesis is a hostage at Naples. Casarinus has a bishopric in Spain. Ara Celi has the gout. Campeggio would be the most suitable, but cannot leave Rome immediately, unless Lautree advances. The Pope tells me to say that he will not fail in doing what he can to satisfy the King's wishes; and I think he is sincere. He says he relies entirely on the King, and he is certain the Emperor will not pardon him, but force him to call a council or deprive him of his dignity and life. He has no trust in the French. Campeggio has written to the Pope that three days ago the Friar General spoke to him of the King's business, and ordered him to write to the Pope to put out a prohibition that the cause should not be tried in England.

Pp. 7. Vannes' hand.

14 Jan.

3803. FREDERIC I. OF DENMARK TO FRANCIS I.

R.T. 137, 135.

R. O.

Teulet, i. 89.

James Rounou, whom he sent to France last summer, has reported to him how much Francis was gratified by the aid offered to him in war by Frederic. Wishes to know whether he shall send the fleet. Is informed that his uncle, Christiern late king of Denmark, has intrigued with Robt. Barton and David Falkener in Scotland against Denmark. Bega Francis will use his influence with king James and the nobles of Scotland to prevent it. Gottorp, 14 Jan. 1528.

Lat.

1528.

14 Jan.

3804. UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD to WOLSEY.Faustina,
C. vii. 213.

B. M.

Wilkins,
iii. 709.

A letter in praise of his great virtues, especially his industry in public affairs, by which he has attained such great honors. Thank him for his encouragement of literature by the erection of his magnificent college at Oxford. Oxford, 14 Jan. 1527.

Lat. Add. Endd.

14 Jan.

3805. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 290.

Has lately despatched Marchmont Herald to him, fully instructed of his mind touching the coming of Albany to Scotland. Sends the bearer to the king of France to the same end. Begs he will solicit Francis to stop the Duke's coming, and cause Dunbar Castle to be given up to James. Edinburgh, 14 Jan. Signed.

Add.

14 Jan.

3806. THOS. CANNAB to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has received his letters and a purse sent by John Smyth, the auditor. Hears that my Lord's grace intends to suppress the monastery of Wallingford, by authority of the Pope. Asks him, if Wolsey entrusts the matter to him, to let the people of Basingstoke, where he was brought up, have the bells. Sends him a pair of Oxford gloves for a token. Asks him to try and settle peaceably between Mr. Deane and Wm. Freer as to his arrearages, and not to let it come to Wolsey's knowledge. Oxenford, 14 Jan.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Master Thos. Cromwell, dwelling in London. Endd.

14 Jan.

3807. JOHN RUSSELL* to MR. CADE and MR. ARUNDELL.

R. O.

Encloses two letters received today out of the Marches of Wales, which he thinks it important Wolsey should see. Has been unable to attend my Lord's grace, having been confined to his house since before Christmas, but is now mending. 14 Jan.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Master Cade, steward of household with my lord Legate's grace, and in his absence to Mr. Arundell, Esq., and unto either of them. Endd.

15 Jan.

3808. LOUISA OF SAVOY to CHARLES V.

Calig. E. i. 19.

B. M.

As Francis has despatched to visit the Queen, Madame [Eleanor], and charged him to go on to the Emperor, has requested him to pay her respects.

Hol., Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.: "[A] l'Empereur." Endd.: ". leu xv^e de Janvier, xxvij."

15 Jan.

3809. ROB. FOWLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

On the 14th Jan. a ship was lost upon Newland, and neither man nor child saved, out of which there has been recovered certain quantities of wax, wire, hemp and herrings. Has this day caused part of the stuff to be brought into the Exchequer; the rest to be brought tomorrow, to remain till the King's pleasure is known. Hears that great suit will be made to the King by divers spears at Calais to obtain it, which he hopes Wolsey will discourage. The value will be upwards of 200 marks, and would help towards the King's charges here. Calais, 15 Jan.

P. 1., hol. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.: 15 Jan.

* Not Sir John Russell.

1528.

16 Jan.

3810. UBERTO DE GAMBARA to PETER VANNES.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 71. While on his journey, on this side of Florence, received by the hands of Knight (Reverendi Secretarii Kinit), Wolsey's letters of the 6th ult. Could not return, but wrote by him to the Pope. Wrote again from Bononia, which was of advantage, as, for some reason, Knight had not delivered the first letter. Has explained the Pope's charge to the king of France, and shall come to kiss Wolsey's hands, bringing with him all his Grace desired. Desires to be recommended to him and his household, especially lord Arundel and Heneage. Poissy, 16 Jan. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.: The Pope's orator, Gambara, xxvj. Jan. M.D.XXVIJ.

17 Jan.

3811. DUKE OF SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his letters, dated the 6th. Has examined Wm. Husey and James Elys, in as sharp a manner as he could, before most of the worshipful of the shire, but can get nothing more from them. Has, therefore, ordered them to be restored to sanctuary, swearing to go straight to the sea side. Encloses the certificate of himself and the other commissioners about grains. Lord Berners will explain the order taken about the surplus.

Thanks him for the good reports he makes of him to the King, and for the good news in his letter. Lynne, 17 Jan. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

17 Jan.

3812. FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The King told him yesterday that he wished Broux to be installed at Windsor in place of the French king, and as soon as possible, as he wishes to return to his master. Assembled his fellows of the household, and have determined that everything shall be ready by tomorrow week, if Wolsey will appoint that day for it. Would have come himself, but is prevented by his old disease of the colic and stone. Hopes to be well enough to see him tomorrow. If Wolsey will command Garter to provide the helmet, sword, coat armor, &c. by the day, all else will be ready. Greenwich, Friday, 17 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: Sir William Fitzwilliam, the 17th of January 1527.

18 Jan.

3813. J. MATTHEO [GIBERTO] BISHOP OF VERONA to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 59.

B. M.

Thanks Wolsey for having instructed the bishop of Worcester to speak to the Emperor for his liberation, and for his offer of money, if a ransom was necessary. Has not needed it, but is none the less thankful. Has determined to go to his church at Verona, and serve God. Venice, 18 Jan. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1.

18 Jan.

3814. HERCULES GONZAGA, Cardinal of Mantua, to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 38*.

B. M.

Has not written for some time, because he had no opportunity of serving the King. Is going to Orvieto, where the Pope is staying, and offers his assistance in the King's affairs. Mantua, 15 kal. Feb. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.

18 Jan.

3815. RIC. FOX, Bishop of Winchester, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thanks him for being gracious to his Chancellor, as he is informed by Master Paulet. As to the misdemeanors of which the Bishop himself and his Chancellor are accused, in matters concerning his jurisdiction, it is true that the religious women in his diocese are forbidden to leave their monasteries, "and yet so much liberty appeareth sometime too much." Had he the same authority as Wolsey, he would endeavor to "mure and enclose" their monasteries according to the ordinance of the law; otherwise there will be no surety for their observance of good religion. For the rest, they are as favorably dealt with as any religious women in the realm. The religious men have been put to less cost in my days than others be. Never took procurations of any of them for all his visitations, by the space of 26 years, and has shown many of them great kindness. Has not been severe on the secular clerks, except for fornication and adultery. Never deprived any one in any of his dioceses. Except at Southwark, which is under the Archbishop's jurisdiction, there is as little known crime as within any diocese in the realm. Winchester, 18 Jan. Signed.

1528.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c., my lord cardinal of York, legate of England, and chancellor of the same.

18 Jan. 3816. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to Wolsey's orders, made proclamation for the coming in of rebels to submit to the King's mercy, mentioning the dreadful sentence of the Church which they would incur, and that he would hang them upon loughs, when apprehended, destroy their goods and houses, and send their wives and children into strange regions. Accordingly, on Sat. 11 Jan., 500 persons of Tyndall came and submitted on their knees. Four others fled to Sir Wm. Lisle. Had their houses and corn burnt, and their cattle distributed among those whom they had most offended. Would have shipped their wives and children if they had had any. Has eight pledges of the chief surnames for those who came in. Has delivered to the people a book of articles devised by the Chancellor, Sir Thos. Tempest, and Mr. Bowes, telling them he will put them to the sack if they break them. Has appointed Sir Rauf Fenwike his deputy. Riddisall came in wholly, to the number of 400, on Wednesday. Took ten pledges, and has appointed his cousin Evers as deputy. Asks for further instructions. Heard that a Scotch gentleman with two servants had entered England, and passed Alnwick without offering to speak with him. On sending for him, found him to be a herald-at-arms, with letters from the king of Scots to the King and Wolsey, and to the French king and Albany, to stop the coming of the said Duke. Thinks that if Angus and his friends are afraid of his coming, they will be more likely to do justice on the Borders, and follow Henry's wishes. Encloses the articles given to Tyndall and Riddisall. Desires credence for the chancellor of Durham, who is going to Wolsey. Alnwick, 18 Jan. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: My lord of Northumberland, 18 Jan. 1527.

R. O.

2. Articles devised by the Lord Warden and his Council, Monday, 13 Jan., for the order of Tyndall and Riddisall.

1. To appear when called upon to answer for past offences. 2. To aid the Warden's deputies. 3. To be of good behavior toward the King's subjects, and to be ready to answer any complaint. 4. The same towards Scotland. 5. To undergo the Warden's orders for removing some of them, if it is thought there are too many to be sustained by the country. 6. To apprehend any rebel, Scot or thief, who comes into these countries for harm to the King's subjects. 7. To aid any of the King's subjects who are following robbers through their countries. 8. And search for the offenders. 9. To deliver suitable pledges. 10. If any of them hereafter offend, and do not appear to be corrected, the Warden will call upon the headmen of the surname, for the delivery of the offender; and if he is not delivered, the said pledge will be "justified," and another pledge must be delivered.

Pp. 4.

1528.

18 Jan.
R. O.3817. SIR JOHN FITZGERALD, of Desmond, and his Son' GERALD, to HENRY VIII.

Have received his letter, dated 6 . . . , commanding them on their allegiance to forsake all intelligence with the rebels
 " against the said Richard Peer, but that also we co effectually to join with your servant James [Butler] for the execution of [such th]yngs as your Grace hath committed to him to be done." Have joined with the said James accordingly, and therefore the earl of Desmond has burned most of our country, and taken much cattle to Dungarvan. We pursued him to a castle within our country, and kept him six days and five nights, before Sir Thomas of Desmond, James Butler, and Cormok Ogh came to us with their hosts, when the Earl escaped, and took shipping to the main sea, and has since joined the Brenys, intending to take vengeance upon us. Beg the King to redress their wrongs. My lord of Norfolk can bear witness to their loyalty. Drommany, 18 Jan.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: Sir John Fiz Gerard and his sonne of Ireland, 18 Jan. 1527.

3818. The EARL OF DESMOND.

R. O.

Act of attainder against James earl of Desmond for "recetting" Frenchmen in Ireland, when they were the King's enemies, among others, one called lord Kendall, of France; sending secret messages to Francis I. to incite him to send an army into Ireland,* and making confederacies with the King's Irish rebels;—the Act to take effect from 10 Nov. 14 Hen.VIII.

On parchment. Great Seal (mutilated) attached. Endd.: An Act passed in the Parliament of Ireland concerning the attainder of the earl of Desmond.

3819. CORN.

R. O.

Account of grain to sell within the wapentake of Byngham, Notts, made before Sir John Mar[k]ham, Sir John Byron, and other commissioners, at Bingham, on the 18 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII., by oath of the constable and two others in every hundred.

Howthorp, 9 persons (named) have corn to sell. Ratcliffe, 6. Tetheby, 3. Clepiston, 3. Kynalton, 3. Byngham, 7. Whatton, 6. Aslaton, Master Dr. Cranmer, and 5 others. Newton Coltell (?), 3. Broughton Solney, 3. Cropwell Butler, 6. Eastbridgeforde, 3. Saxendale, 2. Scrue-ton, 6. Shelforth, 9. Cropwell Bishop, 13. Codgrave, 15. Skaryngton, 3. Gamston-cum-Membris, 1. Torlaton, 7. Elton, 6. Langer-cum-Barston, 19. Granby-cum-Sutton, 12. Colston Bassett, 23. Thoroton, 6. Carcolston, 9. Flyntham, 7. Hyklyng, 9. Kneton-super-Montem, 3. Stanton and Alyngton, 4. Orston, the vicar, and 13 others.

Sum total in the wapentake aforesaid, 1,103 quarters.

Signed: Per me, Joh'em Markham. Per me, Joh'em Byron.

2. Account of grain to sell within the wapentakes of Newerk and Thurgarton and Lithe, made before Sir Will. Meryng, Sir John Dunham, Rob. Brown, Tho. Meryng, and other commissioners, 18 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.

1. Wapentake of Newerk:—

Wynthorp, 1. South Colyngham, 3. Lanford, 1. Skarle, 1. South Clifton and Spalforth, 1. Barnby, 2. Balderton, 13. Hawton, 10.

* This was in 16 Hen. VIII., according to the Act of Attainder of the Earl of Kildare in the Irish Statutes, i. 67.

1528.

Newark, 5. Northgaye, 2. Cotham, 9. Farndon, the vicar, and 7 others. Stoke, 4. Thorpe, 1. Elston, 2. Siston, 2. Shelton, 2. Staunton-cum-Membris, John Deynse, chaplain, and 7 others. Total in wapentake of Newark, 680 quarters. Signed by William Meryng, Robert Broune, Thomas Meryng, Robert Mulmerse.

II. Wapentake of Thurgarton and Lithes:—

Gomaston, 5. Weston-cum-Marnham, Master Doctor Gamalion Clifton, rector, and 10 others. Lamley, Sir John Biron, farmer of the rectory, and 5 others. Lowdham, Sir Godfrey Foljambe, the vicar, and 4 others. Ged-lyng, Stoke and Carlton, 17. Farnfeld, 1. Blasby, Gorton, and Gibhamye, 4. Raleston-cum-Seathorp, 5. Oxtou, 5. Wynkborn, 2. Hirdlyngton and Normanton, Tho. Mover, clk. Hoveringham, 2. Thurgarton, 3. Fiskerton, 7. Wadsworth, 1. Upton, 5. Malbek-cum-Kirsall, 4. Cawnton, the vicar, and 3 others. North Marnham, 2. Ossington, 1. Kellon, 5. South-muskham, 3. Northmuskham, 1. Norwell, 17. Hokerton, 2. Cromwell, 4. Sutton-super-Trent, 2. Girsthorpe-cum-Normanton, 3. Soeynton, 1. Southwell, 8. Epperstone, the parson, and 5 others. Sum total of the wapentakes of Thurgarton and Lithes, 1,196 quarters. Signed at beginning and end by Sir John Dusham, Rob. Browne, and Hen. Sutton.

The names of the constable and the two others named in each hundred are given, and also the names of all the owners of grain.*

Pp. 16. Endd.

R. O.

2. Wilts.

"The view of the grain for the hundreds following, viewed by Will. Benham, Antony Erusley, and John Abarrow."

Tylyshide within the hund. of Brencote and Dolseld:—5 persons, named, have corn to spare after the requirements of their households. Tho. Miry-wether, and 10 of his neighbours, with 64 persons, can spare no corn.

Oxston Marke:—5 persons, named, have corn to spare. Rob. Fryker, and 3 of his neighbours, with 16 persons, hath no corn "but that at the byythe" (but that they buyeth).

Assarton:—1 person has corn to spare. Tho. Merys and his neighbours, with 25 persons, "hath no coryn but that at the byythe for ther money."

Elston and Oxston Jorgis:—2 persons have corn to spare. John Habra-ham and 3 neighbours, with 31 persons, can spare none. John Alderwyke and 19 neighbours have none.

Wynterbourne Stoke:—8 persons have corn to spare. John Kyllbey and 10 neighbours, with 57 persons, can spare none.

Wyshford:—3 persons have corn to spare. Will. Mount and 19 neigh-bours, with 105 persons, can spare none. John Sutton and 9 neighbours, with 43 persons, have none.

Little Wyshford:—1 person has corn to spare. Simon Parsons no corn to sell.

South Newton:—John Tynewe, with 13 neighbours and 100 persons, "hath not sufficient to find their houses and sow their lands." 6 persons have corn to spare. Henry Comton and 9 neighbours, no corn.

Madydon:—3 persons corn to spare. 9 households with 44 persons have none.

Swinton:—4 persons corn to spare. Jas. Downe and 9 neighbours, with 65 persons, not sufficient for their houses, and to sow. 2 households in the same village, with 7 persons, have no corn.

Barwyke, St. James:—3 persons corn to spare. John Hulat and 17 neigh-bours, with 83 persons, not sufficient to find their houses, neither to sow; and 5 households, with 7 persons, have no corn.

* Among these the name of the parson will frequently be found.

1528.

CORN—cont.

Stapylford :—10 persons with corn to spare. Arnold Burgis with 13 neighbours and 99 persons, have not sufficient corn. 9 households with 26 persons have no corn.

Wyllye :—8 persons with corn to spare. 10 households with 60 persons, not sufficient corn. 6 households with 23 persons, have no corn.

Scheryngton :—7 persons, corn to spare. 3 households with 13 persons, insufficient. 2 households with 11 persons, no corn.

Hangyngyn Langford :—7 persons corn to spare. 3 households and 13 persons, no corn.

Stipyllangford :—John Mossell hath barley which is sold to Will. Mossell, of Sarum, brewer, for 9d. a bush. ; 3 other persons have corn to spare. 6 households with 27 persons, insufficient. 4 households with 18 persons, no corn.

Towkynglangford :—4 households with 23 persons, sufficient to find their households, and to sow their lands.

Littlelangford :—2 persons corn to spare.

Fulston :—Barth. Husee has corn to spare.

The hundred of Underdyche.

Mylforde :—Rob. Rumsey, of wheat not sufficient to find his house, of barley, after 15 quarters sold into the town, scarce enough to find his house, and to sow his land. 10 households in the same village, no corn.

Wyllessforde :—3 persons corn to spare. In the same village 3 households with 10 persons, no corn.

Lake :—All that parish must buy or borrow both wheat and barley.

Great Wodforde :—3 persons corn to spare ; the rest of the parish must buy or borrow.

Little Wodforde :—2 persons have corn to spare, and 8 households no corn, neither barley to sow.

Stratford :—3 persons corn to spare. 4 households and 17 persons no corn. M. Antony Erley, at a farm called Bowndsecourt, hath corn to spare. "This must be put into the hundred of Alderberry."

Laverstoke :—M. Antony Erley at that place hath neither wheat or barley to find his house and to sow his land. 5 cottagers with 35 persons, no corn.*

The hundred of Alderbury.

Wynterburne Erlys :—In the parsonage dwelleth Rich. Mogoryge and Rich. Stanter, both with corn to spare. 5 other persons corn to spare. 8 households no corn.

Wynterburne Dauncy :—2 persons corn to spare. 4 households with 18 persons, no corn.

Wynterburne Shurborough :—3 persons corn to spare.* 4 households with 13 persons, no corn.

Porton :—5 persons corn to spare. 3 households, 13 persons, no corn.

Edmyston :—4 persons corn to spare. 8 households, 16 persons, no corn.

Pyton :—2 persons corn to spare. 6 households, 15 persons, no corn.

Whaddon :—Harry Pylgrym hath scarcely wheat to find his house, and he may sell 30 qrs. barley, and his lands sown.

Grymsted :—The parson and 1 other, corn to spare. 18 persons no corn.

Dene :—The parson, for he keepeth no household, corn to spare. A dozen households with 32 persons, not sufficient to find house or to sow.

Wynteraclow :—Win. Payne, barley to spare, and not wheat enough to find his house. Eleasaunders (Alexander) Thystylworthe, 40 qrs. wheat, "which he hath sold to one Jermayne, of Salybury, for 10d. the bushel, reserving to find his house," and 40 qrs. barley sold to the same for 6½d. the bush. "This bargain hath continued this 4 year, and shall do during their 2 lives." All the town after, 30 persons, must buy corn.

* This page endorsed "Mr. Bulkeley."

1528.

Alderterrye:—1 person has corn to spare; and the rest of the town, 24 persons, must buy corn.

Pp. 14.

20 Jan. 3820. STAFILED to [WOLSEY].

VII. B. x. 42.

B. M.

Burnet, iv. 27.

On the fifteenth day after my departure from London I embarked, but was detained by contrary wind. I discussed with the bishop of Rochester on the road the King's divorce (materia); and Dr. Marmaduke, who was present, will tell you with whom the victory rested. I would not for a small bishopric but that the King and you had been there to have heard the discussion. I cannot but commend to you that good man, good and diligent servant to the King and yourself. Bologna [Boulogne], 20 Jan. 1528.

Hol., Lat.

20 Jan. 3821. JOHN TAYLER, Master of the Rolls, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 48.

Sends a packet of letters received yesterday from Gregory de Casalis. Received one with them, dated Bonony, 7 Jan., stating that Lautrec would leave shortly for Naples. Gambara has taken his leave here, but has not spoken with the King.

Yesterday, 19 Jan., the archbishop of Sens received the cardinal's hat by the hand of the legate de Salviatis. While the oration was made, "the Chancellor, sitting beneath the Legate afore the high altar, stole a good sleep, and so did he also after dinner, sitting by the Legate, the chamber being full of people." His title is St. Anastasius. Other news Gambara will show Wolsey. Wrote on the 15th with other letters of Gregory de Casalis. Paris, 20 Jan.

P.S.—Yesterday, the 19th, there were general processions for the Pope's delivery. Signed.

P. l. Add. Endd.: Dr. Taylor, 20 Jan. 1527.

20 Jan. 3822. CORN.

R. O.

The North Riding of Yorkshire.

Certificate of Chris. lord Conyers, "Richard, wrong named Thomas, lord Latimer," Rob. abbot of Gervaux, Sir Wm. Bulmer, Sir Rauff Eure, Sir James Metcalf, Sir Hen. Boynton, Nich. Fairfax, Roger Cholmeley, Edw. Gower, "John Sayer, wrong named Rauff Saye," John Dawncey, John Pulleyn, and Tho. Pudsey, appointed commissioners in the North Riding of co. York, to search and view all barus, &c. for wheat and other grains, to demand of all mayors, bailiffs, &c. whether any be hidden or kept secret, to inquire as to forestalling, regrating, and engrossing of the same, to put into execution the statute of Winchester and others concerning beggars and vagabonds, unlawful games, for "putting down alehouses and inns at villages and town ends," and touching shooting with crossbows or handguna, keeping hounds, and watches.

This certificate is to be delivered to the King and Council, in the Star Chamber on the morrow after the Purification. It states that the commission was delivered to Conyers on 31 Dec. last, and that they assembled at Northalverton on 9 Jan. It then specifies the quantities of wheat, rye, barley, malt, oats, beans, and pease found by the commissioners in the several wapentakes, the total being 2,319 qrs., which they commanded the owners to bring to the markets, on pain of the King's displeasure; but they found none hidden, nor any forestallers. They have "punished divers valiant beggars with scourges to be beat, and put down suspect blind hostries and alehouses;" and have charged all the King's ministers, under great penalties, that no unlawful games be used. All such ministers were sworn "to keep secret the privy search and watch," which was made on a certain night; and to make search twice a week at least in all blind hostries, inns, and "suspect" ale-houses, for suspicious persons. Dated 20 Jan. (?) 19 Hen. VIII.

1528.

CORN—capt.

Parchment, defaced; the seal of the abbot of Gerveaux, and 10 others remaining.

20 Jan. 3823. HENRY [D'ALBRET, of Navarre,] to WOLSEY.

Cal. E. ii. 13.

B. M.

In behalf of Pierre and Michel Deodara, natives of his kingdom of Navarre, in a suit with Martin de Guynca before Wolsey. Mons. de Bayonne, the ambassador there, will give him ample information. St. Germain-en-Laye, 20 Jan. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.: "Le cardinal d'Yort, legat en Angleterre."

21 Jan. 3824. ——— to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. z. 63.

B. M.

The Pope seems mad with anger at the refusal of the Venetians to restore Ravenna and Cervia. It is not only an injury but an insult. They treat him as an enemy, while he desires to be friendly to the League. He sent an ambassador to Venice to ask for their restoration, but no answer was given to him. They told the prothonotary Casale, who spoke in the King's name, that the Pope ought to be deprived of other towns also, as he inclines to the Imperialists. Lautrec is quite contented with the Pope, for he does more than he asks. Believes they will not restore the cities unless they are demanded by the kings of England and France. The Pope wishes Wolsey to take the matter up, and that both Kings should send ambassadors to Venice to demand it, and to use strong language if they refuse, and to remind them of their promise to Wolsey when in France. Thinks they would give a deceitful answer. The ambassador should consult Casale or some one else who knows them. Many of the Lords would try to overcome the obstinacy of the Pregadi, but the authority of the two Kings would be necessary to do so. The French would perhaps object to opposing the wishes of the Venetians, but it might be answered that the Venetians have never expressed a desire to retain the cities. If it is said that they ought to have some recompense for their expences, it should be from the kingdom of Naples, and not at the Pope's expence. Orvieto, 21 Jan. 1528.

Lat., pp. 4.

21 Jan. 3825. JOHN CASALE, Prothonotary, to ANTONIO VIVALDI.

R. O.

Has taken 2,030 cr. of the money, being authorised so to do by secretary Knight and the cavalier Casale. Has agreed with Piero Ram at 5 soldi and 4 danari the large ducat; and, supposing the ducat worth 5 soldi (shillings?) in London, they will have to give there a large ducat and 5 danari for every ducat taken by me, i.e. for 1,943 ducats. Venice, 21 Jan. 1528. Signed.

Ital., p. 1. Add.: Al M^{re} come fratello M. Antonio Vivaldo, in Londra.

3826. GHIINUCCI and LEE to [WOLSEY].

Titus, B. vi. 1.

B. M.

"Post probitum." On proposing to the Emperor the King's offers concerning the recall of the army and the restitution of the cities, he said he wished these things to be done before the release of the [French king's] sons; not afterwards, as we offered; and the French ambassadors did not wish to go to him again. Resisted this with the help of the Italian ambassadors, and induced them to continue the negotiations. Did all they could to dissuade them from the intimation of war, although they said it was clearly ordered in their instructions, and spent fifteen days in doing so.

1528.

Urged many of the Imperialists to show the causes of their suspicion, promising to provide for their security, for the King would not deceive any one, nor allow the covenants of others made under his sanction to be broken; but they refused to do so.*

As there was no hope of peace, or of further delay without causing a rupture with the French ambassadors, were obliged to go with them and the Italians to ask the Emperor for leave to depart. On their return all the ambassadors came to Lee's house, except the bishop of Tarbes, who went to Alemand's. The president of Bordenaux, in the Bishop's name, urged the sending heralds to proclaim war that day, which Ghinucci and Lee refused, hoping the Imperialists might change their minds. An altercation ensued between the president and Ghinucci. The same evening they sent again to Ghinucci, who replied that he must consult Lee. Lee replied that they would communicate with them next day. They immediately sent back a sharp letter, saying that there was no place for consultation. Agreed to consent to the intimation, as there was no hope of putting it off.

Endeavored to obtain the omission, in the reply to the intimation, of certain words dishonorable to the King, lest they might be a cause of war when other matters were settled. Found Alemand willing to do this, as the words emanated from the Chancellor, who is his rival, but the Emperor would not consent.

Did not see what else they could do but tell the French openly that they would not make the intimation, but would write to the King and Wolsey concerning the Emperor's offers; and they feared to do this, because Wolsey had so expressly warned them against causing the French any suspicion, and they thought they must be much more careful of a rupture. Besides, they had formerly known that the French had secret negotiations with the Emperor, when they had no suspicion of the King or Wolsey; but now that the Emperor was indignant with the King on account of the intended divorce, there was much more danger of this.

The bishop of Tarbes said that Alemand had told him that the King would never make war on the Emperor, and the latter felt quite secure of this, and they saw that the Bishop believed it. During a discussion with the President and Bayard, Lee said he would risk his own person to avoid war, showing them the great evils which war would produce. These words caused them suspicion, and they reported them to the bishop of Tarbes, who was much troubled, and reported them to Ghinucci, bidding him speak out his mind, and saying that if they did not consent to the intimation, they (the French) must take care of their own interests. They said also that Wolsey's instructions were clearly in favor of the intimation.

As the Emperor's offers were not acceptable to the French, and it would have been difficult to induce them to write, Ghinucci and Lee must have written by sea, which would have been uncertain and long in the winter. Ships sometimes have to wait three months for a wind. Even if the French had wished to write to the King, does not believe they would have allowed any letters to go which were disagreeable to them, and they would not write that the Emperor offered to put the hostages in the hands of the king of England.

Lat., draft, pp. 4.

22 Jan.

Léonard,
Recueil, II. 316.
Granvelle,
I. 910.

3827. DEFIANCE of the EMPEROR by CLARENCEUX and GUIENNE.

1. Declaration of Guienne, with the Emperor's answer.

* This paragraph is struck out.

1528.

DEFIANCE of the EMPEROR by CLARENCEUX and GUIENNE—cont.

R. O.

2. Declaration by Clarenceux.

Léonard,
Ibid., p. 318.
Granvelle,
p. 316.

The King, his master, has commanded him to say that, considering the necessity of peace in Christendom, and the danger of the Turk who has taken Rhodes and Belgrade, the mischief arising from new sects, and from the great wars kindled by Charles, whose armies have pillaged Rome and made the Pope prisoner, Henry had endeavored to compose the differences between the Emperor and Francis, and made Charles such reasonable offers that he thought he could not but accept them. But since Charles will not come to reason, he has concluded with the French king to compel him by force of arms to deliver both his Holiness and the sons of Francis, for a reasonable ransom. The King and Francis, therefore, summon Charles, once for all, to accept these final offers, and to pay the debts due by him to England, otherwise they declare themselves his enemies to make war upon him by sea and land. They are willing, however, that 40 days be given to the subjects of either power to withdraw themselves from the dominions of the enemy.

Fr., pp. 3. Endd.

Léonard,
p. 320.
Granvelle,
p. 319.

3. The Emperor's answer. See Jan. 27.

23 Jan.
Cal. D. x. 380.
B. M.

3828. [TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

"..... my coming hither the
..... King and Madame he was co
..... e were letters come out of Spain [ca]used Bailey Robert Tett to declare [to me the import of t]hose letters, in the which it is thought the council that there be many occasion[s] for the] Emperor to defer the conclusion of pe[ace]; wherefore it has been] determined here that the original letter ...
..... shall be sent unto your Grace for to know [your]
..... unsement and counsel in the same, fo[r the King's grace here] will do nothing but the King's highness [shall]
... of counsel. And when I had heard the Grand Master brought me to favorable words received to her hands well sunged and amended of h[er c]hiragra, and also she charged me on her be[half that I] should with hearty commendations show your Grace [how she had] word that the King was well amended and r[eco]vered, and that] there was an humour fallen down off the head in so that it was deed lest it should fall aposthumacion, the which, Almighty God be than[ked, is now] healed without any aposthumacion, and shortly sh[al]e saith that] he shall come abroad.

"And then she reciting many clauses of the letters that [were sent from] Spain, and said they could find no comfort that [the Emperor] was disposed to any conclusion of peace, but rather [to war], and means to defer and prolong the time till h[is] shall hear how the affairs of Italy should pass.
An[d he useth] dissimulation showing that he much esteemeth and [is glad to have] the King our Sovereign lord mediator in this [affair, for] whose sake he would the sooner be content to co[m]e to terms of] peace, with other many inventions, the which [they think] here be but of small effect if he were dispo[sed to come to] any conclusion of peace.

"Also the Council here be not well conten[t that Mr.] Almoner should say that he and the is concluded and
..... [m]ake answer or frustra
..... d be take for answer and in 1528.

..... should make intimation of war or spake these words neither by th your Grace's commandment or con sithe your Grace that by your Grace ner may be advertised of your forasmuch as there is no such co [fr]om the Emperor and his journey and strong thinketh that his proce should long continue my Lady willed me to the King's highness that th be would be glad not in som And for the f Mons. Lotrek Madame besech your Grace to be earnestly will Gambara that the Pope hinder not the conclusion of [the treaty] with the duke of Ferrara for that should be disturbance and let of all things that hath been d[one] to the which hereafter may be remedied with less business and more honor, thus evidently it appeareth that they here have more confidence in yo d for their own causes than they can do th self. Furthermore, the Emperor was not well content th[at the] navy of France had been in Sardinia where they furny[shed] themselves of victual and money for a good time, we har[ken] daily to have word of them out of Sicily." Poissy, 23 Jan.

Mutilated.

3829. [TAYLER TO WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 381.

B. M.

"Fox being at St. Germyns to me from your Grace being da[tes]t] the same month to which letters we answer accordingly as the King w certify your Grace. At our returning there we found Master Wallop w
 the morrow I went to the Court wh benignly received him and after the dely[very to him of] the King's highness and your Graces letters and communication of the King's prosperity and [h]is good health he was remitted to another as I doubt not he will largely advertise [your Grace]. At my returning to my lodging I met with Gambara and desired me to write unto your G[race] plainly that if the Venetians do not immediate[ly] resign up such cities as they hold of the P[ope] that the Pope shall adhærere Casari, relictis leg[is] for his Holiness will no longer suffer them sou wrongfully to hold and possede the cities appert[aining un]to the Church, and as touching the duke of Fe[rarra] and the Florentines, his Holiness is content to ha[ve] patience till that Italy be in more quietness. If Pope's holiness be as earnestly disposed as Mons. Gambara sheweth it, doubtless it should be a great hindrance to the French king's affay[res which are] now proceeding so prosperously, for they say h[ere how] that Mons. Lotrek hath received many tow[ns] and strong holds into his hands as yet w[ithout much] resistens.
 As tomorrow shall come to the [King's] presence the bishop Pistoriensis, the wh[ic]h the Pope would send to the Emperor, b[ut the French] king will do nothing here till [there be come] word from the King's highness a look daily for Clarencieux

1528.

[TAYLER to WOLSEY]—cont.

..... tidings we have none a

..... pr^{is}

Mutilated. Add.: [To] my lor] de Legate's [Grace].

3830. [TAYLER? to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. s. 381.

B. M.

"[Please] it your Grace, the 14th of F[ebruary] came hither] Mr. Hercules de Missalis, and deliv[er]ed to me letter], dated the 10th day of the same. On the dinner came letters by the which he was com[manded] the sight of the same. Vincentius Casa[le] with me at dinner. And as touching all is done or spoken nother to the King nor to hath been showed by Mons. de Baion, f after that the truth was here published o he neither spake with the King nor with these matters and the secret-lier it is kept [and the less it shall be] known the better and honorablier it s[hall be] after my poor judgement your Grace doth able to revoke the said Hercules, quia rimarum [plenus]. Vincentius is more sober and discreet the tarry till that your gracious pleasure be sent or k[nown whether] he shall return or pass forth, as for the cop protestations I keep with me in omnem eventum the said Hercules bringeth with him.

"News we have here in the court that Aquila hath recovered it, but in what manner I [know not,] whether by violence or composition. The has told me that they be in great fear Aquilam should come straight to Flor[ence] here make better and surer provisi[on] be many great words and high d . . . the which should b[e]"

Mutilated.

3831. [FRANCIS I. to BISHOP OF BAYONNE.]

Cal. D. s. 182.

B. M.

" en Espagne par le moyen d f que a Bayonne seurement avecques les lettres d deschiffrement la responce qui leur a este faicte [par le conseil de l'Empereur, dont pareillement le double s elle fin que vous puissiez le tout communiquer et faire [sçavoir tant au] Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye, que a monsieur le [Legat, mon bon am]y, ausquelz vous savez que je ne vueil aucune chose seulement de ce qui me pourra survenir de ce couste la mai part quelle quelle soit, et pour autant que vous pourrez veoir [la responce] faicte par l'Empereur a mesdits ambassadeurs et bailliee par es[cript] que veu quilz s'arrestent a la revocation de mon armee et de Gennes et aultres places, laissent la responce ambigue c[omme] veoir, qu'il veult a ce qu'il dict estre faictes avant la restitu[ti]on de mes enfans, que c'est une vraye dissimulacion et rien que remestre la matiere en longueur et ne vouloir pour ceste [fois venir] a autre conclusion de paix ny de traicte, je vous en ay bien v[oul]u advertir afin que de ma part vous le puissiez bien amplement [montrer au] Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye, et a monsieur le Legat [mon bon amy] leur alleguant que je ne me puis en cela de trop es mes ambassadeurs, veu que ayant en telle responce d[u dit Empereur] comme est celle, qu'ilz pourront veoir par le deschiffrem[ent] sans autre chose attendre, prins cela pour congie et li[berte] et suivant le contenu aux oblations communes finalles et derrenyeres en leur l moyen pour les faire part [jus]ques icy tenu, et que sans venir la il est ne sauroit l'on avoir autre chose. A ceste [comme vous ver]rez par ledit deschiffrement, l'un des

1528.

ambassa[deurs du Roy mon bon fr]ere et perpetuel allye, qui est l'aumosnier, estant en [Espagne pour le] faict de la dicte intimation remonstre a mesditz ambassadeurs prelx pour y procedder, et qu'il n'estoit d'advia qu'on [a]ccellerer le negoce, monstrant par cela qu'il vouldust ou des[ra] retarder et prolonger l'affaire, encorres que par les instructi[ons] t est comme du est baillee, il soit nommeement dict que incontina[n]t apres avoyr congneu non seulement le refus sur les offres qui luy seront proposees, mais qu'il foust pour ou dilayer a y respondre, que en ce cas et sans aucune response de nous ilz luy signififieroient et intimeroient ledite guerre, jo [ne puis pas] a ceste occasion penser ne me persuader que ce soit du commandem[ent] et consentement du Roy son maistre, ny de mondit sieur le Legat [mon] bon amy, veu mesmement que heultes instructions signees de leurs pre[ses] mains ainsi le portent et contiennent; parquoy, Mons. de Bayonne [vous] direz et remonstrerez sur cela de ma part, que ne venant ceste heure a ladite intimation, comme nous l'avons communement [et e]nsemble advise, conclud et delibere, et ne le commandant ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye, mondit sieur [le Legat mon bon] amy pareillement a sesditz ambassadeurs ce telle

. a la charge le sieur de Lautrech qu selon le record et advia de mondit sieur L a esperer. Apres la liberte de nostre Sainct Pere e est que nous pourrions ou sauryons desirer ne saur ro portee, ny soustienne de moy seul, sans le see[ours et ayde] dudit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye, laquelle resquerir ne faire demander quelque faiz et charge que jay que premierement je n'aye veu et entendu la response du que je n'aye par icelle congneu son intention tendre a seulle pour pouvoyr me myner de ceste al grosse et lourde voit porter en Italye, sachant que je soys celluy [qui a jusques] icy le plus fourny et despensé, mais voyant par cela deveyr plus longuement durer en l'estat qu'elles sont autre fin que je ne pensoys et la despence continuer t telle ou plus grosse que je l'ay jusques icy portee que c'est pour le commun bien de toute la Chrestiente, je vu[us ay] vullu escrire, Mons. de Bayonne, que suivant les bon[nes et] honestes parolles que m'a tenues Mons. le Legat mon [bon amy] estant icy devers moy, de la part du Roy mon [bon frere et] perpetuel allye, et qu'il a depuys reiteres par de la a mon cousin le Grand Maistre estant derrenyement par ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye pour me laisser en nul besoing et ne me deux ny de trois moys, mais que je le de couryr avecques

. cela il me couviert journ enement de mon armee de mer, fourniture tiens, que autres choses qu'ilz peuvent comme en durant ce present moys de Janvier, et de Fevrier que bon leur semblera, pour l'armee que j'entretyens lye, et jusques a ce que l'Empereur se soit condescen[du aux termes] plus honestes et faisables qu'il na vouldu jusques a present [Je] suis tout assure que quant il sentyra ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye continuer a y employer ayde et secours d'argent, et empraise, ne me vouldoyr laisser ny abandonner il sera po la raison en payement, et entendu aux choses justes et b[onnestes] qui luy sont par nous offertes et mises en main; dont (?) pourrions par ce moyen esperer une bonne paix universelle ta et necessaire pour le bien et repos de toute la Chrestiente, et que l'abreigement des choses peult naistre et ysser de la fi action d'Espagne, selon laquelle chacun pourra juger par cy apres a se conduire et gouverner, je vous pry[e] pour la diligenter et abriger comme il est requis, et necessaire plus user de remises que vous faictes envers ledit Roy mon b[on frere] et perpetuel allye, 1528.

[FRANCIS I. to BISHOP OF BAYONNE]—cont.

et envers le Legat mon bon amy [ve]ullent escrire unes bonnes lettres a leurs dits ambassadeurs a ce que suivant le contenu en leurs instr[uctions]. leur furent derrenyere-me[n]t]"

Mutilated.

3832. [MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.]

Cal. D. x. 314.

B. M.

" Par les lettres venues d'Espagne euez en quelz termes les choses sont avec la bonnes parolles et remonstrances qui luy ont este ambassadeurs, des deux Roys qui ont conjointement choses ledit Empeur non seulement a differe mais aux oblacions finalles, disant que le Roy s'abusoit a revocquer l'armee d'Itallie et remectre les places qui a en ses mains il rendist messieurs les enfans, baillant qu'il a bailles par escript, veu lesquelles responces tant par lettre, si les oblacions finalles eussent este observees este convenu et accorde entre les deux Roys, il y avoit proceder incontinent et sans aucune dillacion ne attendre autr a l'intimacion et denonciacion de la guerre, et telles sont les contenues en la derreniere clause des finalles oblacions, et nen[tm]oins de la responce et remonstrance de l'aumosnier ambassadeur [d'Angleterre] qui dit lors qu'il ne se failloit baster, et qu'il n'y avoit jou[r] prefix pour l'intimacion de la guerre, combien que la prefix determination y feust expresse et plus que suffisante oblacions, les ambassadeurs de France differerent de craignant de faillir s'ilz s'advanceoient plus avant que les dits [ambassadeurs] d'Angleterre, ains charge et commission expresse de eulx assablement et tout d'ung pied, et ne faire [chose sinon] d'ung commung accord et con-sentement. Toutesfoiz de quelle importance estoit et est ladite int[imation] ne parlera autre langage .
 rs tandra a dissimuler et tenir
 r fera ce qui a este deslibere, c'est de proceder [d]e la guerre, a ceste cause ferez instance vers le [Roy le bon] frere et perpetuel allye du Roy et mondit sieur le Legat pour lever toute difficulte et occasion de differer. Mand pour ladite intimation a leurs ditz ambassadeurs, c'est assavoir u delloy de l'Empeur de accepter lesdites oblacions finalles ont este desliberees conceues et accordees entre les deux Ro[ys] trouvees plus que raisonnables dedans certain delay, c'est as[savoir, de] quatre ou de six jours, que sans plus differer, et des h autre attante ou dilation pour quelconque cause que ce puisse soit procede a la dite intimation et denonciacion de la guerre et q a mondit sieur le Legat de veoir la forme de l'intimacion ja envoie et si elle luy agree, mander ausditz ambassadeurs d'Angleterre quilz ladite forme, sinon qu'il y mette ou ajouste ce qu'il luy plaira luy remonstrant que quelquechose que l'on dye le Pape liberte d'autant qu'il a este, et est contrainct de bailler ost[ages] et que les ennemis sont es environs et a l'entour de luy tellement [que] pour se assurer il a este contrainct de se fortifier a Orbiette et [de] prendre garde de deux cens hacquebutiers de renfort et si es chacun jour menace par les lansquenetz de le forcer en ladite ville [O]rbiette, et au surplus ven les bones et grandes parolles qu'il roy d'Angleterre, me porter et a mondit sieur le Legat souvent cest que le Roy son maistre parlant de la cont pour troy mois, mais

1528.

..... courir une mesme fortune avec guerre d'Italie dure, et les grans et mer[veilleux] portables que le Roy a sur les bras et que les a Venitiens et Fleurentins se portent si froidement a mise. Il plaise audit roy d'Angleterre son bon frere et p[er]petuel allye continuer la contribucion par luy encommencee pour se Janvier et Fevrier, de la quelle a este differe de en esperance que l'Empereur voudroit entendre a la [raison, ce qu'il] n'a fait, comme dit est, usant de dissimulation et mes[an]sant de] longueur ainsi qu'il a toujours fait pareydevant, et que Mons. de Lautrec avec la puissance et armee des diligente le plus qu'il pault de marcher avant en pays pour les ennemis, esperant avec l'aide de Dieu la victoire certaine desquelz ennemis, qui puis nagueres ont fait leurs monstres de dix mille hommes, et si ont este delaissez de leur p meilleur capitaine, s'est du sieur Larcon, qui s'est retire au r[oyaume de] Naples, et en a laisse la charge et conduicte au prince [d'Orange qui] est de l'age et experience que vous entendez. Il Roy de veoir l'estinacion de l'Empereur si dure et si grande que de presser le roy d'Angleterre de ladite contribucion, dont i voulluntiers passe et deporte si l'Empereur eust voulu ente[n]dre a la paix] a la quelle il espere qu'il se rangera si sans plus proceder a la dite luttinacion.

" Mons. le Roy a este semblablement ad pine qu'il s'est trouve a Orlietta, a d le duc de Ferrare qui fait d'Italie, que vous entendez [af]fectueusement desire par tous les confederes r nostre dict Saint Pere, de la quelle difficulte peuvent [t]rop apparens, que sa prudence congnoist et entend A ceste cause, s'il plaist a mondit sieur le Legat sera tr et conseil icelluy nostre dit Saint Pere de ne differer la de cest appointement tant utile et si fructueusement et par les meilleures et plus vives raisons qu'il luy sera p[oss]ibles] et en ces trois poincts c'est assavoir de la prefixion d contribucion, et du fait de Ferrare, je vous prie d'estre et nous advertir incontinent de ce qu'il sy pourra faire, vo et gouvernant en toutes choses par le bon et saige adviz tres prudent conseil de mondit sieur le Legat, en quy le Roy et se confient comme en eulx mesmes, vous assurant au d[eme]urant que] le Roy est en tres bonne disposition et m'a donne charge de fa[ire ses] tres cordiales et affectueuses recommandacions au Roy son [bon frere] et perpetuel allye, sans oublier Mons. le Legat son bon [amy.] Madame leur eust escript, mais elle se sent encorres ung pet[it] sa goutte, vous ferez aussi ses tres cordiales recommandacions et excuses. Il vous est envoie le double de la responce qui a este faicte en Espagne par espie comme estoit venu qu'ilz avoient envoye. Qui sera la fin." St. Germain-en-Laye

Mutilated.

3833. [FRANCIS I. to ———.]

Cal. D. x. 312.

R. M.

"..... [J]ay receu vos lettres en chiff[re]
 ung duplicata avecques quelque p our Angleterre qui a este seurement [la]yenne et de la ley et par le derrenier esp vous du ij^{me} de ce moys ay ven la responce 1528.

[FRANCIS I. to ———] —cont.

et ballée par escript au conseil de l'Empereur pour laquelle vous estes pardela ensemble tout vous m'escripvez bien au long en chiffre et mes proposez que vous a tenuz l'Empereur sur la de faites. Sy ce que vous avoit fait comme dit par escript estoit sa finale et derreniero respon[ce] vous dit n'avoir autre chose vous dire et . pensiez qu'il feust pour me rendre mes enfa[ns] premierement revocquer mon armee d'Ytallie et qui auroit este pris que vous estiez bien ab il me semble tant par ce qui est contenu en mesmement touchant ladite revocation de mon a[rmee et la] redition des places prises quilz veulent estre
. la delivrance de mes enfans que aussi que vous a sur ce tenuz l'Empereur, qui es me faire la dite delivrance. Sans l'exécution p choses dessusdites que c'estoit vous donner evidente occasyon de ne vouloir rien f[aire] avecques vous, maiz essayer a tousjo[urs] longueur et dissimulation com
. offrir plus grant
. en voz instructions j'ay trouve
. nt icelles ven l'occasyon que vous en a mectre fin en conclusion aux choses v et si estrange responce par la voye de l sumation de la guerre, et pour ce que vous ie sur cela l'aulmosnier du roy d'Angleterre mon [bon frere e]t perpetual allye estant pardela vous a propose e n avant que vous n'avez temps prefix pour faire ladite qu'il n'estoit d'advis devoir si fort haster et a le negoce qui vous mectoit en paine ne seachant e comme vous conduyre.

"Messieurs, je croy que sy vous avez voulu veoir et r le contenu aux finales oblations qui vous feurent d envoyees et mesmement le derrenier article, vous tro[uverez] qu'il y est contenu nommement et speciffie en ces propr[es] mots]. Sy l'Empereur, que Dieu ne vueille, ne se vouloit cont[enter] ou ne vouloit, ou differoit de accepter les offres dess[us]dits concues et dirigees par l'ung et l'autre dess[us]dits deux Roys comme dit est; en ce cas la guerre sera luthimee et denonce de par eulx a l'Empereur par mer et terre [in]continent et sans aucune demeure, dilation ou autre attente. responce, qui est assez termynier et prefliger le vous pavez penser, parquoy et q
. intencion dudit Roy mon "

Mutilated.

- 23 Jan. 3834. MONASTERY OF ST. MARY'S, BARKING, dioc. of London.
P. S. b. Confirmation by Cuthbert bishop of London of the election of Dorothy Barley as abbess in the room of Elizabeth Grene, deceased, 23 Jan. 1527.

- 24 Jan. 3835. SIR ROB. WINFIELD to WOLSEY.
R. O. Bishop Stafyleus arrived on Saturday the 18th, and lay without the gates, as he landed after they were shut. Wingfield visited him next morning at his lodging, and on Monday he departed towards Boulogne with Wolsey's chaplain, Marzadoke, in his company. The latter returned next day, but has been forced to remain ever since, on account of "right forisable weddyr" and contrary wind. Has given him a message for Wolsey. Has also written to Master Stevyn, your secretary, to show you matters of importance. Has had no answer yet to the letters of the Council "moo days past," and time presses. Would pawn or sell his plate to pay his debts. Cannot find a man, stapler or other, that will confess he has any money. If the town be not succoured soon, wishes he had never seen it. Calais, 24 Jan. 1527.

1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

24 Jan.

3836 Wm. FRANKLEYN to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has written to Turnbull, dwelling beyond London Bridge, to deliver him a barrel of salmon. He shall receive his fee when Dr. Strangwaie next comes up, which will be immediately after the audit here. Durham, 24 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Master Cromwell.

24 Jan.

3837 BRINON to [WOLSEY]

[Calig. E. 1
ii.] i. 223.

B. M.

"Monsieur, sachant que de jour a autre . . . monseigneur le Grand Maistre vous advertissent et fais . . . advertir de toutes choses par Mons. levesque de Bayonne leur ambassadeur, je ne me suys ingere entre tant de si grande et de si haultz affaires que vous avez vous donner ennuy de mes lettres; combien que la memoire, la servitude, et l'affection ayent tout jour este enclines et regardant a vostre reverendissime et illustrissime seigneurie, comme par trop de raisons je me sens bien obligé."

The King and Madame have been much pleased with Wolsey's honorable message conveyed by Brinon,—especially "Madame votre bonne mere," who loves him as her own son, is anxious to hear of his convalescence, and is loud in praise of Wolsey's noble reception of the Grand Master and the other French ambassadors, and his anxiety to preserve and augment the amity between the two Kings, and for the deliverance of "monseigneurs les enfans de France." By the letters and by what has occurred in Spain ("ce qui est venu d'Espagne"), Wolsey will see the aims of the Emperor, "qui par ses dissimulations . . . consumer en despence priver et desmuner sil pouvoit de nez . . . la Fortune qu'il espere luy estre toujours mere; et que par . . . il ayt tire et extorqué deniers pour faire quelque esfor . . . possible; mais jespere que la puissance et auctorité du . . . et vostre prudence et faveur qui plus ont forge la fortune de l'empereur . . .] la beniguite des astres ayderont a luy rompre et aneantir a . . . que lon y mettra tel obstacle quil se trouvera bien long de s[es] esperances et entreprinses." The King has sent a large sum of money to Lautrec, who, by Wolsey's advice, is advancing into the country to seek the enemy. With the promised aid of England "sera grandement pourveu pour ung long temps." Doubts not the Emperor, before he is ready, will receive a check, which he will remember for life. St. Germain, 24 Jan. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, pp. 2.

24 Jan.

3838 EDWARD LORD DUDLEY to WOLSEY.

Vesp. F. 111.
121.

R. M.

Ellis, 3 Ser.
ii. 82.

On the night before Christmas Eve one Edward Byrmyngham, with two servants named Robert Sutton and Henry Fox, beat and robbed one of his tenants of Dudley, named John Moseley, leaving him for dead. Being afterwards pursued into Shropshire, the malefactors were conveyed by one Ralph of Warley into Worcestershire, in the hope of obtaining an acquittal for them there. Henry Fox has confessed that there were 100 thieves of their affinity within three shires adjoining. Byrmyngham's friends have no doubt they will get him a pardon. Begs that they may be examined. Dudley, 24 Jan.

P.S.—Refers him further to the bearer, who he hopes will satisfy him, 1528.

EDWARD LORD DUBLEY to WOLSEY—cont.

"more worth to you than the priory of Sondewall (Sandwell) that I gave you to your new college of Oxford." Signed.

P. 1. "The lord Legate de latere, cardinal and archbishop of York, &c." Endd.]

25 Jan. 3839. MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

[Calig. E. 1.
11.7] 1. 220.

B. M.

Is requested by Madame to write to him touching certain points which have come to her knowledge: 1, that the Pope is attempting to stop the contribution made by England for commencing the war in Italy, and has sent word of it to the prothonotary Gambarn; 2, that the Emperor is attempting to bribe Wolsey with an offer of 10,000 crowns on the bishopric of Toledo, and that they had heretofore made great offers. She has too great trust in Wolsey to think he would suffer anything to interfere with the alliance. Mons. de Bayonne has certain information for him. St. Germain en Laye, 25 Jan. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, pp. 2. Add.: "A Mons. Mons. le Cardinal, archevesque d'Yort, legat et chancelier d'Angleterre."

3840. [LOUISA OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.]

Calig. D. x.
309.

B. M.

"[Mons. le Cardina]l mon bon filz et p[ere]
 . . . de ma lettre et la fin par ns cy ne sera ce satysfait a ner cognoissance de ce que je sens e es de Monsieur de Bayonne de la bo[nne] affecti[on] que vous portez au Roy Monsieur et fylz [se]s affaires, desquelz vous avez fayt ent et saige discours que tous les es de ny scauroyent ryens adjouster l notte et peze par ledit Sieur consydera raysons que celles que contyent vostre dit ment partyr que de parsons d'ung cuer par effect s'est monstre et monstre qui touche le pere, les enfans, et toute [comp]agnye, vous pryant, Monsieur le Cardynal, [mon bon filz et] pere, que vous veuillez continuer en ceste t de tant oblyger a vous toute ceste dite comppoi[guy]e li]berallement y despartyr vostre tres prudent [b]on conseil lequelz ledit Sieur a dellibere d[e suivre de] point en point comme procedens du lyeu d ou il a plus de parfaite seurete et fy[ance] s y en a qui de bon cuer de rech[ef]" • • •

Hol. Add.: [A M]onsr. le Cardinal, mon bon [fi]lz et pere.

25 Jan. 3841. INSTALLATION OF FRANCIS I.

Asbmol.
MSS. 1134.

Sir Gilbert Dethick's narrative of "the manner for the installacion of the right Chrysten King Franceys" the first of France, K.G. in 1528: Reg.: "Furst the Saturday xxvth yere† of o^r said souveraigne lorde the King, all the lordes and knyghtes of the Order wth weare in commission."

26 Jan. 3842. THE PRINCESS'S COUNCIL to SIR JOHN PORTE and MASTER RUSSELL.

R. O.

Are in great want of money, which Brian Take will not deliver without a warrant. Dr. Burnell, now deceased, who was treasurer of the Princess's chamber, would ere this time have been in London for this and other matters, had his health allowed. Request them to move my lord Cardinal in the matter, and for repairs for the castle of Wigmore, which is very ruinous. Ludlow, 26 Jan. Signed: Jo. Exon.—Ja. Denton—E. Croft—John Salter—R. Sneyde.

1528.

P. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Sir John Porte, knight, one of the King's justices, and Master Russell, secretary unto the Princess.

Endd.: Letters from the Princess Council to Mr. Port.

26 Jan.

3843. BRIAN HIGDON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Begs him to remember the great decay and poverty of York, which is not like to continue as a city unless relieved of the 100*l.* demanded by my lord of Rutland. This done, it may amend again, especially if by Wolsey's favor the shipping of wools may continue, for clothmaking here is sore decayed, as the merchants of the staple at Calais buy no cloth of this country. York, 26 Jan.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord Legate. Endd.: "The dean of York, xxvjth Januarii 1527."

27 Jan.

3844. CHARLES V.

Léonard, II.
329.
Le Grand, III.
27.

Answer made to Clarence (Clarencieux) king-at-arms (27 Jan.)

In answer to what you, Clarencieux, have declared by word of mouth to the Emperor in the name of the king of England, as, after receiving a verbal answer from his Majesty, you have at his request delivered a writing signed with your name, desiring a more particular answer, his Majesty has ordered this reply to be made to you in writing.

1. The Emperor has hitherto regarded the king of England as a true mediator and common friend of himself and Francis, and therefore the most fitting minister to treat of a universal peace. The King and Wolsey themselves have acknowledged, after several discussions, that France was the first aggressor; and, in virtue of the treaty of London, Henry declared war against Francis; so that he ought to blame Francis, rather than the Emperor, as the cause of all the ills which have ensued by that war, both at Rhodes, in Hungary, in Germany, and at Rome. For all the world knows that it was not owing to his Majesty that provision was not made against the Turks, and that what has occurred at Rome has been without his consent; and that he has never been disinclined to an honorable peace, and has given up much of his right to satisfy the king of England. He even for Henry's sake abandoned much that the king of France of his own accord offered to the viceroy of Naples, and accepted conditions which he would not have done for any other Prince. Francis, on the other hand, cannot be said to have done anything for the sake of the king of England, except cut down by his means the offers he had already made to the Viceroy.

2. As to the deliverance of the Pope, his Majesty has already replied to you by mouth that he was free, and he has certain news that he left Rome without hindrance on 16 Dec. As to what was done against his Holiness his Majesty has written in his own justification to the king of England, desiring his counsel what should be done for the good of Christendom, and has had no answer. The king of England ought to know that the Emperor would not be unfaithful to the charge which God has given him for the protection of the Holy See, any more than the king of England.

3. The Emperor has never denied his debt, or refused to pay it. If payment has been delayed it has been because the English ambassadors, up to the point of the rupture, were treating to pay themselves from the monies of France, and after the rupture, which was only for lack of power, they demanded full payment in ready money, not only of the money lent, but of the indemnity for four years and four months at the rate of 133,305 crowns a year, and 500,000 crowns more as the penalty for the non-fulfilment of the marriage of the princess [Mary]. The Emperor made them answer that as to the money lent, seeing that they had not with them the original obligations or the jewels pledged for part payment, his Majesty, holding himself condemned (en soy en tenant pour condamné), offered to repay all the sums lent within the term given by law to those condemned, provided a suitable place were chosen for both parties where the payment should be made, and the king of England would send thither some one with sufficient power to give acquittance, and restore the pledges with the original obligations.

1528.

CHARLES V.—cont.

As to the demands of the indemnity and penalty, the ambassadors were told that as their commission only empowered them to demand debts in general, his Majesty did not think they would persist in such demands, and if they did he would send to the king of England to show him reasons why they should be forborne. And as the said reasons were not then delivered in writing to the ambassadors, although some of them were declared to them by mouth, his Majesty has ordered them to be stated here in writing, in order that if the King lay claim to the said indemnity and penalty, all the world may see that he has no just right to them. For as to the indemnity there were five strong reasons for refusing it, even if the ambassadors had had special powers to demand it. (1.) The obligation is grounded upon the retention of the pensions and monies which were due by Francis to the king of England solely by virtue of treaties and obligations, and these were not shown. (2.) The grounds for the said indemnity are not true, because the obligation was made in England before the Emperor passed into Spain, and the same day that the treaty of Windsor was made, so that it could not be for aid given to his Majesty in his passage to Spain, when he had not yet passed, nor yet for the passage from Calais to Dover, for as to that it was settled by the treaty of Windsor that his Majesty should be bound to give equal aid to the King, when he wished to pass from England to France. Also as to the statement that it was for declaring himself enemy to the French king, the French king had already withheld payment of the said pensions for a whole year. And if he say that he took up arms by virtue of the treaty of Windsor, he cannot have lost anything, because the declaration was not to be made by virtue of that treaty till the end of May 1524. If he found his claim upon the declaration made before, which cannot have been a month before the treaty of Windsor, one of two things must be confessed;—either that the said declaration was made in virtue of the treaty of London against France;—in which case the obligation of that treaty being reciprocal it cannot be said that there was just cause to bind the Emperor to the indemnity;—or that the said declaration was made, as is more likely, because the French king had failed in the payment of what he owed, which in any case was not owing to the Emperor. (3.) If Wolsey, who was the real author of the said indemnity, will confess the truth, he will remember that he told his Majesty, in presence of his Council, on the part of the king of England, that he should never pay anything of the said indemnity, and that it was only done to satisfy the King's subjects, and make them think that the King suffered no loss. (4.) The French king has, by the treaty of Madrid, sworn that the king of England should be paid all his arrears, and taken upon him the burden of the said indemnity, which his ambassadors have accepted in his name, expressly agreeing that the treaty in this point should remain in force. (5.) Even if the obligation be valid, the King, by demanding for four years and four months what is only due for three years, may lawfully be denied the whole.

As to the penalty demanded by the ambassadors, there are three strong and evident reasons to show that it is not due. (1.) According to both civil and canon law, penal stipulations to circumscribe the liberty of contracting marriage are null and void. (2.) Even if it were not, the obligation cannot be founded on the treaty of Windsor, without the King proving that he has fulfilled the whole of that treaty himself, which he cannot do. (3.) The Emperor, before his marriage, desired the King to send his daughter to 1528.

Spain to satisfy his subjects, or else to consent that he should marry elsewhere, and Henry preferred to send power to his ambassadors to consent to another marriage, under certain conditions. Besides, the king of England had not fulfilled the treaty himself, but had contravened it in various ways; for it was discovered, by letters intercepted at sea, that he was treating for the marriage of his daughter with the Scotch king, his nephew, long before the Emperor's marriage with the Empress; and if the penalty was in force the King himself would have incurred it. The king of England, besides, in violation of the treaty of Windsor, had entertained for one year at his court one John Joachim, who treated secretly on the part of France, and he afterwards received publicly the president of Rouen; and when the Emperor's ambassador wrote the truth of what he had seen and heard he was threatened, maltreated, his letters to the Emperor taken and opened by the King's ministers. Worse still, since the taking of the king of France, the King being required, according to the said treaty, to make arrangements with the Emperor for a joint peace, and to send power to his ambassadors, and state his claims, would not listen to the proposal, thinking to make his advantage otherwise, which was the cause of all the troubles which have since followed. And all this was done before the Emperor married, or treated with the King of France; and the Emperor has borne with it all, rather than break with England.

4. The charges against the Emperor of disrespect to the Holy See, and breach of faith towards England, might be retorted upon others, but it does not seem fitting for princes to bandy words together; nor has the King any ground to accuse him for refusing the last terms offered to him, for it appears that Henry had determined to defy him without awaiting an answer whether the Emperor accepted them or not. If he had given him an opportunity, he would have found that his Majesty placed more confidence in the sole word of the king of England than in all other sureties, and that he would have complied with all the terms offered, except only that of the revocation of his army, and of the attempts made since the treaty of Madrid; that the same ambassadors had consented to the communications of Palencia * according to the second article of the said treaty, which defined the things to be done before the restitution of the children; and as to the security to be left, they wish to defer it till the deliverance of his children, which was not reasonable.†

So that it is evident, whatever answer the Emperor might have given, their object was not peace, but greater war; for the writing delivered on the part of the French king was dated 11 November, and the said kings-of-arms remained in this city all the time of the communications of the said ambassadors, which were only meant to lull his Majesty to sleep, in the hope of peace, while they were arming on the other side.

5. His Majesty has already answered your threat of compelling him by force of arms, so virtuously by word of mouth, that no other answer can be made. Henry ought to keep faith, not only with Francis but with all others. His Majesty has also replied sufficiently to the declaration of war, and hopes Henry will not give him greater occasion for it than he has given to Henry. For if it be true, as is said both in England and France, that the King intends to separate from the Queen and marry another (which his Majesty cannot believe, seeing that he (Charles) has in his hands the dispensations, which he is ready to show, and which are so ample that they allow no subterfuge without impugning the power of the Pope), the Emperor would have a better cause to declare war against England than England against him. Such conduct would show by how little faith, honor or conscience Henry was guided, and would make intelligible enough his

* Blank in Le Grand.

† " Et pour laisser une garde-derrrière ils la vouloient différer depuis la délivrance de ses enfans, que n'estoit chose raisonnable."

1528.

CHARLES V.—cont.

object in giving his daughter to his Majesty in marriage, if he tried to make her a bastard; although, as above said, he cannot believe Henry would commit such a scandal, except it were upon false information from the cardinal of York, who, because the Emperor would not employ his Italian army to make him Pope by force, as he had requested the Emperor to do by letters of his own, and by others which he had obtained from the King his master, has often boasted that he would involve the Emperor's affairs in such trouble as had not been seen these hundred years, and that the Emperor should repent it even if England went to ruin. No doubt, if Henry suffer himself to be led by the Cardinal, he will raise a storm which he will not be able afterwards to allay. But the Emperor commits his cause to God.

6. As to the last point,—the withdrawal of the merchants,—his Majesty replies as he has done to the last article put in by France, and adds that he knew that orders were given in England long ago, in expectation of this rupture, against conveying merchandise into his Majesty's dominions. So that it would not be just, one side only being warned to withdraw their goods; and on this point a convention ought to be made reciprocal on both sides.

Fr.

3845. [FRANCIS I. to his AMBASSADORS in ENGLAND.]

Calig. D. x.

114.

B. M.

“allie des en
 Roy son bon frere, de la part du “Et premierement Apres avoir presente les lettres de roy d'Angleterre, son bon frere, amy et perp[etuel] allie avec ses] tres cordiales et affectueuses recommanda[tions] le sieu Empereur sans avoir regard aux grand[es] offres] qui faictes luy ont este pour la delivrance de[s] enfans] de France, oultre passans la rancon de troys et sans tenir compte des honnestes et bons remon[estrances] qui] luy ont este de la part dudit sieur roy d'Angleterre, auqu[el] il est] tant tenu et oblige, s'est du tout prepare a la guerre [malgre] toutes lesdites offres, tellement que les ambassadeurs de[s] deux Roys] ont este contrainctz de prendre congie.

“Et avant que le prendre (pour plus eulx mettre en moyen d'amolir la durete dudit Empereur, en passant offres finales, luy ont offert de bailler et fournir somme de huit cens mille escuz, et par le moyen du seulement la personne de monseigneur le Dauphin mons. d'Orleans tint et demourast hostage, jusqu' entier accomplissement des choses promises. E retraicte de l'armes, restitution de Genes et tient, a laquelle offre a este respondu [de la part] dudit Empereur quil la refusa.

“ ays oy parler
 ambassadeurs en la presence de son par sa lettre et responce bailliee par es[cript] se alleguer, sinon quil ne luy en souvenoit p ne voulut ledit Empereur accepter ledit offre ambassadeurs furent contrainctz de venir a l'ytimacion laquelle fut faicte audit Empereur, par les deux her[aults], cest jussavoir Cler[encieux] de la part dudit sieur roy d'Angleterre [et Gu]yenne de la part du Roy.

“Respondant auxquelles intimations furent par ledit Emper[eur] et preferences, et depuis baillies par escript par son ordon[nance] plusieurs paroles diffamatoires, injurieuses, malsonnans des-honestes, sugilans l'honneur et haultesse de l'un et de l'autre Roys, sans oublier Mons. le legat d'Angleterre, duquel a este dit que l'on ne feist oncques de prelat, ne beaucoup molodre et voyant le Roy treschrestien l'ingratitude et mauvaise invenc[i]on de] ceulx qui ont controuvé lesdites sales et des-honestes paroles mesme[n]t touchant L'honneur dudit sieur Roy son bon frere et p[er]petuel] allye et de mondit sieur le Legat son grant et parfaict amy, il se[n]t] merueilleusement resseuty et fort esmeu, et non sans bonne et [juste] cause, ne faisant aucune doubte que ledit sieur roy d'Angleterre p[ar] sa grande vertu et magnanimité et mondit sieur le Legat par sa preud[ence] et fo[r]titude, ne sen ressentront moings et tascheront par que par convices et injurieuses parolles donn grant erreur quil a faict"

1528.

Mutilated.

27 Jan.

3846. THE CORPORATION OF YORK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thank him for the pains he has often taken "for the preferment and maintaining of your poor city of York, whereby we trust now that it shall be and continue a city."

Ask to be allowed to conclude with the earl of Rutland by writing of the certainty that they shall pay to him yearly from the fee-farm of the city. Desire his favor touching the grant for shipping wool and fell. York, under the seal of office of the mayoralty, 27 Jan.

P. 1. Add. : To the lord Legate's grace. Endd.

27 Jan.

3847. ST. MARY, BERKYNQ.

Writ to the escheator of Essex for restitution of the temporalities of the Benedictine monastery of St. Mary, Berkynq, on the election of Dorothy Barley as abbess, whose fealty was to be taken by Geoffrey Wharton, clk.

Similar writs for London, Beds, Bucks, Midd., and Surrey. Westm., 27 Jan.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 6.

28 Jan.

3848. BISHOPRIC OF WINCHESTER.

Constat and exemplification, at the request of Richard Foxe bishop of Winchester, of patent 16 Nov. 6 Edw. IV., exonerating William bishop of Winchester, and his successors, from all escapes of felons committed to their custody as ordinaries of the place. Westm., 28 Jan.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 4.

28 Jan.

3849. HENRY EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. vii.

112.

B. M.

Monday the 21st,^{*} Will. Charlton, late of Shotlyngton, and others, entered the bishopric near Woolshyngham, took the parson of Moegleawike; were pursued, especially by Edw. Horsley, your Grace's bailiff of Hexham. As the waters of the Tyne were swollen they were driven to Aidembrigge (Heydon bridge), which was barred against them. They were then pursued by a tenant of his, Thos. Erryngton, with a slot hound, assisted by one Will. Charlton with other Tynesdale men. Charlton of Shotlyngton was slain by Erryngton; Jas. Noble, slain; Roger Armstrong and Archibald Dosde, taken prisoners. Charlton's body was hanged in chains on a gallows near Hexham; Noble, at Heydon bridge.

At Alnwick, Monday the 27th, Armstrong and Dosde were attainted and hung; and it got noised that if the rebels are not delivered by Angus, Northumberland would invade Netherdale. Willm. and Humph. Lisle and Will. Shaftowe surrendered on Sunday the 26th, as he came back from the parish church at Alnwick, and submitted to the King's mercy. Has written to the King of the same. Alnwick, 28 Jan. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. : "To my lord Legate's good grace." Endd. : "Therle of Northumberland, 28 January 1527."

^{*} An error for "20th."

1528.

28 Jan.

3850. NORTHUMBERLAND to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 486.

Since he wrote last, a fray was made, 21 Jan., by Edw. Horslay, my lord Legate's servant, and Thos. Eryngton, the Earl's servant, on Will. Charleton alias William of Shotelyngton, the head rebel of all the outlaws, and on Harry Noble, Archd. Dood and Roger Armestrang, who had robbed men in the bishopric of Durham. In their return Charleton and Noble were slain, and the other two taken. The latter were condemned by the Earl at a warden court, 27 Jan., and hanged in chains at Newcastle and Alnwick, where they had most offended; also Will. Charleton at Hexsam, and Harry Noble at Heydon Bridge, where the conflict took place. The rebels being thus disheartened, Will. and Humph. Lisle, and 15 others, met the Earl on Sunday last, as he was coming from mass, in their shirts, with halters about their necks, and submitted unconditionally. Committed them to prison at Alnwick. Alnwick, 28 Jan.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.: Therle of Northumberland, the 28th of January 1527.

Cal. B. vii. 113.

2. Copy of the above, with slight verbal alterations, enclosed in

B. M.

No. 3849. Signed. P. 1.

28 Jan.

3851. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Sends news of Italy, received from Dr. Knight, which was communicated by Melchior, the Pope's chamberlain. There seems to be good towardness in the affairs there. At the Starred Chamber, 28 Jan. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the King's most noble grace, Defender of the Faith.

28 Jan.

3852. The BORDERS.

Harl. MS.

4637 C. f. 86 b.

B. M.

Copy of an indenture passed between the English and Scotch commissioners, 28 Jan. 1528, referring to keeping order in Liddesdale.

Pp. 3. Copy in a Scotch hand.

29 Jan.

3853. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 42°.

B. M.

This morning* Lautrec sent signor Pawle Chemyno (Trivulzio) and count Guydo Daragon (Rangone) to know the Pope's pleasure about entering the League. He has good cause to do so, for Lautrec has put into his hands Ymole and Rymole. Lautrec tells him that the fleet has attacked Sardinia, and taken much victuals and money, and will go thence to Sicily and Naples. Lautrec is making great speed in his journey, in consequence of the King's and Wolsey's letters. He intends to enter into the kingdom of Naples in ten days. Rymola, 29^o Jan. Signed.

P. 1.

29 Jan.

3854. ITALY.

R. O.

Supposes he has heard that our fleet has landed at Sardaigne. Wishing to besiege a town, they were attacked by the son of the viceroy of Sardaigne, with 5,000 or 6,000 foot, and 1,000 or 1,200 horse, but they defeated him with great loss. They then took the town, finding there much corn and other provisions. They are now proceeding to another town, where there are 300 or 400 Spaniards returning with plunder from Rome.

Fr., p. 1.

29 Jan.

3855. LAUTREC to FRANCIS I.

Vit. B. x. 40.

B. M.

Wrote last from Rimini on the 22nd inst., that he had sent Paule Camille Trevolx and count Guido Rangon to the Pope, to urge him to declare himself. Has not yet heard from them. Thinks his Holiness becomes daily more disposed to join the League. He has twice advised Lautrec of the means of destroying a band of the enemy, consisting of 3,000 Italians, with the help of the marquis of Saluces, all whose officers he has ordered to obey Lautrec, and provide him with victuals when he passes with the army. He has also sent a Roman nobleman, named Pierre Paule Crescentio (Criseantio) to reside with him, and has commenced a practice with the counts of Montebate for delivering Aquila and Abruzzo to him. Has promised in the King's name, to one of the counts, 50 men-at-arms, to the other, 100 light horse, and 100 cr. a month, if peace is made, and they are obliged to leave their country. Hears that the Pope has appointed seven or eight persons to send continual news of the movements of the enemy.

* The date seems originally to have been written "xxij." and afterwards corrected "xxix."

1528

The lansquenets at Rome have mutined, and will not leave the city until they are paid both the sum promised by the Pope and their wages, which amount to 101,000 cr. The marquis de Guasto went to Naples for money, but Lautrec has not heard that he has brought any. He is much displeased that the prince of Orange is appointed captain, and Alarcon likewise. The marquis of Saluces informs him that Conradin, one of the chief captains of the lansquenets, told the prince of Orange expressly that if he was not paid in four days he would depart, and would find another master who would pay him. He had already offered the Marquis to come with three or four ensigns. If the lansquenets do leave the Imperialists, they will not have enough men to garrison more than one town. Sent for the ambassadors of Venice and Florence, and told them this news, showing them that it would result in complete victory; but money must be promptly supplied, that the lansquenets might be suddenly gained over, for the enemy would do all they could to content them. It was impossible to send to France for it, so they must furnish 80,000 cr., the amount of wages demanded. They promised to write urgently to the Signories, and they hoped for a good answer. Sent back la Perce to the Marquis, bidding him tell the captain that he and his men would be as well treated as any one in the camp. Hopes that his example will bring the remainder. It will then be easy to take the kingdom of Naples.

The Marquis writes also that he has heard that Andreas Doria has taken a carraek with ten or eleven Spanish captains, and property worth more than 150,000 cr. One Spaniard, the marquis of Retaldo, he has set free, as he had a safe-conduct from the Pope. Ancona, 29 Jan.

Fr., pp. 4. Endd. : Copie de la lettre de Mons. de Lautrec au Roy, du xxix. Jan., apportée par Mons. Dueroe.

30 Jan.

3856 SCOTLAND

Cal. B. v. 69

B. M.

Commission from Henry VIII. to Henry earl of Northumberland to make an abstinence of war with James V. of Scotland. Westminster, 30 Jan.

P. 1, copy.

31 Jan.

3857 [— to FRANCIS I.]

Cal. D. x. 310.

B. M.

“. [Esp]aigne que Mons. de Tarbe a despech[e] grande garde et dangier enquoy se trouv[e] [N]avarre ceux qui en pourtent, vray est q
 e et fiance que je pourroye avoir du s baillie enseignes telles du dit De Tarbe qui les avoir sceu d'autre que de luy.

“ Sire, ledit De Tarbe m'a mande vous advertir [en toute] diligence que le vingt ungiesme de la moys J congie de l'Empereur

1522.

[—— to FRANCIS I.]—cont.

pour lendemain s'en venir dev[ers vous et] ensemble Messieurs de Calvimont† et ceulx Bayart ce mesme soir ledit Empereur les fist arrester e longis, et lendemain a dix heures devers le m [par] vostre roy d'armes et celluy d'Angleterre fut denunc[ee la] guerre audit Empereur de par vous, Sire, ledit roy d'Ang[leterre,] et la Sainte Ligue, et troyz heures apres ledit [Empereur] fit prendre voz ambassadeurs et ceulx de Veni[sse] de Florence, et les fit conduyre et menner a ung [chasteau] nomme Posa, estant neuf lieues de Burgues, en tous leurs gens par trente archiers et soixante lancoquenetz de sa garde, la ou ilz sont a present prisonniers et ledit ambassadeur d'Angleterre ar en son longis, et incontinent apres ladite denunciation] faicte ledit Empereur a mande venir devers l[uy le] connestable d'Espagne et autres princes

"Sire, j'ay aussi ceste heure presente ressu[si les lettres du] tresorier de Navarre par lesquelz v[ous] ces d'Ipusco et de Biscaye de eulx nes pour faire ce que leur sera commande, E [Mo]ns. de Sainct Bonnet m'a escript lesditz de prendre quatre navires chargez de bledz Bayonne au devant du hembre du dit Bayonne assemblee des gens que l'on faict en Espagne sire avez cydevant ceste adverti, l'on garde tel passages en Ypusco et Navarre, qu'il n'y a personne puisse passer ni repasser sans grand dengier d personnes qui est a mon advis apparence d'affaire en frontiere, laquelle est despourveue de toutes chou[ses necessaires] pour la deffence d'icelle comme pourrez, Sire, s'il v[ous plaist,] plus a plain entendre par le roy et royne de N[avarre] et le besoing qu'il est que vous commandez y es pourveu en maniere que inconvenient n'en advieigne, c[ar il] seroit a craindre si la provision estoit differe[e]

"Sire, il vous plaira me commander si je permec[trais] que vos subjectz de pardeça se metent en devoir de pre par moyen des biens des Espaigneux comme lesdits Espaig[neulx le] font sur voz subjectz." Sorde, 31 Jan.

Mutilated.

31 Jan. 3858. WOLSEY to DE HUPPY, Captain of Bordeaux (†)

Cal. D. x. 353.

B. M.

"fai len y a d ompens furent [e]n la riviere de Bourd[eau]x pour la qui pour lors estoit en sa subjection lesquelles il il s'en va presentement de pardela pour les y mectre parquoy je vous prie trescordialement que en ce de vostre aide pour amour de moy le vueillez avoir d lay monstrant tousjours vostre faveur accoustumee co esperance, et vous m'obligerez de tant p a fa vosres le semblable." Westm., 31 Jan. Signed.

Mutilated. Add.

3859. [WOLSEY to FRANCIS I.]

R. O.

Mons. de Brosso, the bearer, will report to him what has been practised with Mons. de Bayonne and himself since his arrival here, and the good disposition of the writer to his Majesty's affairs.

Fr., p. 1. Draft.

† See Brown's Ven. Calend., iv. p. 118.

1528.

31 Jan. 3860. H. DUKE OF RICHMOND to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Gives his whole mind to such sciences and feats of learning as he is informed stand with Henry's pleasure. Requests a harness for his exercise in arms, according to his learning in Julius Caesar, in which he hopes to prosper as well as he has done in other learnings, of which he trusts Magnus, director of his council, can make creditable report. Pontefrete Castle, 31 Jan.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

31 Jan. 3861. H. DUKE OF RICHMOND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Ellis, 3 Ser.
ii. 117.

Has written to the King for a harness to exercise himself in arms, "according to my erudition in the Commentaries of Caesar." Hopes Wolsey will back his request. Pontefract, 31 Jan. Signed: Your full humble godson, H. Rychemond.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Unto my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: From the duke of Richmond, ultima Januarii 1527.

31 Jan. 3862. FULLER v. MUNDY.

R. O.

Seven papers relating to the suit in Chancery of Thos. Fuller, of London, mercer, against Sir John Mundy, alderman, of London, with Wolsey's decree thereon, 31 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.

Among the witnesses are Rowland Phillips, D.D., prebendary of St. Paul's, of the age of 60, sworn 24 May 19 Hen.VIII., and Will. Goodriche, D.D., parson of St. Martin, Otewyche, of the age of 52, sworn 27 May; whose arbitration had been accepted in 16 Hen.VIII.

31 Jan. 3863. RICHARD GRESHAM and the HOCHSTETTERS.

R. O.

Two papers of memoranda of the sale of cloths by Richard Gresham (Gresham) to the Hochstetters, dated 31 Dec. 1527 and 31 Jan. 1527.

R. O.

2. Fragment of one of Hochstetter's petitions (?)

Lat., pp. 2.

3864. ——— to ———.

R. O.

We have, according to your desire, informed the Cardinal "of the decreits of your woolls." He commands them to appear before him and the Council at Westminster, with such persons as they think necessary, with instructions as to the detection of these malpractices.

P. 1.

Jan. 3865. SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD to TUKE.

Cal. D. x. 135.

R. M.

" * * * * * to you and ryas of this town by which though choose which ye sent, mostly your servant Barbour commodity to send these by your said servant of many times past be homely to pain you, not a[ft]one) of these my letters, but also with executing of my is to make mine humble recommendations unto m[y lord Legate's] Grace, and further more to show that in most h[um]ble wise I beseech his Grace to have this town and the soowdiers of the] same remembered in such things as I and the Counc[il] ther[es]of have avised his Grace by writing," and as Dr. Steven Gardiner has spoken of to Wolsey. They touch most deeply the weal and safety of the town, for hunger often foreeth the wolf to leap out of the wood. The town is likely to be in great want of [victual], and the lack of payment to the soldiers has created such poverty that what is brought into the market is still unbought, "for lack of m[on]ey" the constables and vintners of the retinue h[er]e] the King's council here, in the council lamentable manner,

1528.

SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE—cont.

besought me
 as no deputy of this town manny yd more sharply on the retinue nor caway[d] their duties than I have done and do, which acordy easily with delay of payment, for money lacking [it is] dangerous to force men to keep all their points and good obeisance; nevertheless this day being before before is said, I both exhorted and put them in the best comfort that I could." Told them to give their companies the like comfort, for he was sure Wolsey would take such a way with the staplers or otherwise, that the retinue should be paid what was due to them on Oct. 6, and what will be due on April 6, and all future payments at the proper times. They seemed to be satisfied, and said that if this was not done shortly, they did not know how to pacify their companies, who are without money or pledges. Many have sold or laid [in pawn their be]ddys, on which they lay, and now lie upon the better man than I count myself, yet there cow[d nothing] please me better, the King's highness being cont[ent therewith], than to wit my successor, whosoever it shall be haven hitherward, for surely peaceable poverty more meet for mine age and appetite than an overweighed with unthankful business." Calais, Jan.

 1527.

Hol., pp. 3, mutilated. Add. Endd.

3886. The SUBSIDY.

R. O. Estimate of the fourth payment of the subsidy, Hilary term
 19 Hen. VIII.

The King's chamber, 63*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* The King's household, 71*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*
 The Cardinal's household, 64*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Bedfordshire, 31*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Buckinghamshire, 72*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* Bristol, 174*l.* 10*s.* Cambridgeshire, 40*l.* 12*s.*
 Huntingdonshire, 116*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* Cornwall, 73*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Devonshire, 423*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Exeter, 120*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Yorkshire, 49*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Essex, 466*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Colchester, 29*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Hertfordshire, 90*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*
 Gloucester, 52*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* Gloucestershire, 116*l.* 10*s.* Hereford, 36*l.* Herefordshire, 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Rochester, 12*l.* Kent, 542*l.* 13*s.* Canterbury, 37*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Lincoln, 33*l.* Lincolnshire, 333*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* London, 1,928*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* Middlesex, 157*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* Northampton, 10*l.* Northamptonshire, 147*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* Nottinghamshire, 66*s.* 8*d.* Derbyshire, 11*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*
 Norwich, 281*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Norfolk, 338*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Suffolk, 617*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*
 Oxfordshire, 147*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* New Windsor, 18*l.* 10*s.* Berkshire, 257*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*
 Rutland, 19*l.* Shropshire, nil. Staffordshire, 13*l.* Bath, 15*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*
 Somerset, 215*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Dorset, 292*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* Southwark, 68*l.* 7*s.* Surrey, 195*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* Sussex, 231*l.* 2*s.* Chichester, 13*l.* Isle of Wight, 15*l.*
 Winchester, 10*l.* 10*s.* Portsmouth, 11*l.* 10*s.* Southamptonshire, 224*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*
 Coventry, 68*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Warwick, 44*l.* 14*s.* Leicester, 7*l.* 10*s.* Leicestershire, 62*l.* 7*s.* Wiltshire, 653*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* New Salisbury, 124*l.* 12*s.* Worceaster, 19*l.* 2*s.* Worcestershire, 20*l.* 10*s.*

Lat. Endd.

R. O. 2. "Money whiche by estymacion maye be levied by the last daye of Novembre."

London and the staple, arrearage of the loan, 1,000*l.* Subsidy to be advanced, 1,000*l.* Arrearage of the loan of the clergy, 1,000*l.*; of the temporality, 3,000*l.* Loan of persons not assessed, 2,000*l.* Strangers' goods, 1,000*l.* King's revenues, 3,000*l.* Customs and profres, 500*l.*
 King's debts, 2,000*l.* Anticipation of the temporal subsidy to be practised by Commissioners, 20,000*l.*; of the spiritual subsidy, 10,000*l.*

P. 1.

1528.

3867. The MINT.

R. O.

1. "Th'answer or veredyct to th'artycles that we ben sworn to concerning the mynt maysters." (1.) "That the crown of the sonne, being of the just weight, is better than his value by 2*d.* sterling," as they had proved by two assays. (2.) That the crown of the sun is better than "the crown of double rose," by 15*d.* per oz. (3.) That in the "moltyug" of 1 lb. weight of old coined sterling silver 2*d.* is sufficient for the waste, and for 1 lb. of gold ——— (sum omitted). (4.) That whereas the masters of the Mint give 25*l.* for 1 lb. weight of crowns of the sun, or 100 crowns of the double rose, which is 25*l.* current, and in a pound weight of the same is 25*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, it is found that there is fine gold in the pound weight of crowns of the sun to the value of 25*l.* 8*s.*, for which they pay 100 crowns of the double rose, which lacketh 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound weight; that the masters of the Mint give no more than 41*s.* 3*d.* per oz., which is for the pound weight 24*l.* 15*s.*; "so the merchant shall have for the pound weight 24*l.* 12*s.*, and of every pound weight 25*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, which is 100 crowns of the double rose;" so that the masters gain 10*s.* 6*d.* per pound weight, besides $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. silver and $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. copper found in every 12 oz. (5.) That the "King's subjects been greatly endamaged by occasion that the Mint masters have the handling of the beam at their own pleasures, without comptrolment or oversight of any indifferent sworn person." (6.) "That they occupy men's money in their own shops at their pleasures, and to their singular lucre," making men wait for their money; "for some men say that they have tarried two or three months." (7.) "That they keep not the sheer indyfferently neither of gold nor of silver," making some coins lighter and some heavier, &c. They will not give true value for foreign gold, and refuse controlment, notwithstanding your Grace's commandment.

Pp. 5. Endd. in a modern hand: "Copied for Mr. Newton, 1701."

R. O.

2. "The answer made by Robert Amadas and Ralph Rowlett, being officers and deputies, under my lord Mountjoy, of the King's mint within the Tower of London, to certain articles declared in a book by Hewgh Walche, Thomas Crispe and Thomas Annsham;" sc., (1) denying that a verdict was given by Sir Jo. Moundy, kt., and others, the 15th day of Hilary term 19 Hen. VIII.; (2) or that they made such profit as alleged from "the crowne of the sonne," the average fineness being 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ carats, "which amounteth 41*s.* 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., the which stands us after the rate that we give for them 42*s.* 1*d.* the oz.;" (3) or on "the crowne of the dowhill Rose" (it being alleged that they made 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. profit in every pound weight of crown gold); (4) or that irregularities occur for lack of a good comptroller, there being an "aunsyant honest man, deputy to Sir Henry Wyatt, which hath continued over and above this 30 years;" (5) or that my lord Legate appointed their accusers to have 2*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* for their costs for making trials against them; (6) or that a lb. weight of silver could be melted for 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., the accusers themselves having failed on two occasions, and involved them in a loss of 8*l.*, which my lord Cardinal caused the accused to make good to Sir Henry Wyatt; (7) and asserting that they were losers by the coinage of the lewis (22 $\frac{1}{2}$ carats fine) and the golden gildyn (18 $\frac{1}{2}$ carats), and made no such profit as alleged on the "egyll," the "myddill Carrolls," the "Phyllippus gildons" or the "smalle Carollus."

Pp. 3.

3868. [JAMES V.] to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Asks for safe-conducts for [one] year for Jas. Ramsay and John Cowane, burghers of Edinburgh, to trade in England.

P. 1, mutilated. Add.

1528.

3869.

GRANTS IN JANUARY 1528.

Jan.
—
GRANTS.

3. Edw. Foxe, clk. Presentation to the rectory of Combemarten, Exeter dioc., vice Wm. Fell, S.T.P., deceased. Del. Westm., 3 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 10.

3. Roger Enghelberd, a native of Wesel, duchy of Clive. Denization. Westm., 3 Jan.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 8.

4. Sir Mathew Cradok, late general receiver in Glamorgan and Morgannok, S. Wales, and Sir Edw. Greville of Melcot, Warw., Sir Hugh Vaughan of Westminster, and Sir Rice Maunsell late of Glamorgan, N. Wales. Release of their recognizance of 1,000 marks entered into at Westminster before the barons of the Exchequer, 23 June 7 Hen. VIII. Westm., 4 Jan. — Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 7.

10. Owen Henshman. Annuity of 5*l.* for the performance of divine service in Montgomery castle, out of the issues of the lordships of Montgomery, Kery and Kydownen, as enjoyed by Ryce Malegwyn, dec. Del. Westm., 11 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 9.

12. Francis Capone, gold drawer of London, a native of Florence. Denization. Westm., 12 Jan.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 8.

16. Wm. Moraunt, page for the Mouth in the Cellar. To be usher of the Chamber at Westminster, with 10*l.* a year out of the duchy of Cornwall, and the same fees as enjoyed by Thomas Ferrour, deceased. Del. Westm., 16 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 11.

16. Tho. Goslyng, of Suthwerk, Surrey, vintner. Pardon for having killed Tho. Garland. Hampton Court, 6 Dec. Del. Westm., 16 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 9.

17. Wm. Barlee, chaplain. To have the pension which the abbess of Barking gives to a clerk of the King's nomination until he be promoted to a competent benefice. Greenwich, 31 — 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 17 Jan.—P.S.

17. Tho. Westby, B.D. Presentation to the parish church of Debden, London dioc., void by death. Del. Westm., 17 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 1, m. 9.

18. Shermen and fullers of London. Grant to unite them as one body, called the guild of the Assumption of St. Mary the Virgin of Clothworkers. Greenwich, 7 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 18 Jan.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 12.

19. Tho. Eton, of Rotherhithe, Surrey. Pardon for stealing cattle of John Kene and Rob. Kyrwyn of Wansworth, and John Discher of Clapham, Surrey. Del. Westm., 19 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 5.

22. Commission to Wm. Claybroke, clk., Roulard Lee, clk., and Edm. Bonare, clk., to hear and decide upon a petition presented to the King by Tho. Gyttyns, citizen of London, who, by authority of the mayor and burgesses of Bristol, arrested "the Trinity of Mountrygo," a ship belonging to Francis de Frankys, a Genoese, and summoned him to appear before the court of Admiralty of Bristol, for which Gyttyns was sentenced by the lieutenants of the lord High Admiral to pay the value of the ship. Westm., 22 Jan.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 12*d.*

24. John Bakby, officer of the Pantry. To have a corrody in the monastery of Deule Encrees (Dialucres), Staff. Del. Westm., 24 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

23. Wm. Hoddesdon, of Edgeware, Middx. Pardon for the theft of a knife (cultrum) and an iron "share," value 2*s.*, and of an angel noble (7*s.* 6*d.*) and 20*d.*, on the 17 and 25 Sept. 19 Hen. VIII., the property of Wm. Pollyn of Bussby. Del. Westm., 23 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

25. Jo. Clifford of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 20 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 25 Jan.—P.S.

27. Rob. Wakerley, of Bury, Suff. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 20 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 27 Jan.—P.S.

27. Jas. Thompson of London, grocer. Protection. Hampton Court, 8 Dec. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 27 Jan.—P.S.

27. Rob. Burnett, late of Smarden, Kent. Pardon for the theft of 4 ells of medely kersey, value 5*s.* 4*d.*; 1½ ell of white kersey, value 2*s.*; 5 girdles, value 13*s.*; a shirt (camisia), value 2*s.*; and 70*s.* in money; the property of John Stone. Del. Westm., 27 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

27. Wm. Brent, son and heir of John Brent, dec., and of Matilda his wife, one of the daughters and heirs of Walter Pauncefote, dec., "the said John having been a tenant of the duchy of Lancaster." Livery of the lands of the said John or Isabella Wyloughby, late wife of the said Walter Pauncefote. Del. Westm., 27 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 19.

27. Sir Hugh Vaughan. Constat and exemplification, at his request, of the enrolment (in consequence of the loss of the original,) of just. 18 Nov. 15 Hen. VII., granting to John Carre, his heirs and assigns for ever, certain tenements in London and Southwark, forfeited by Sir Ric. Charleton. Westm., 27 Jan.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 4.

1528.

Jan.

GRANTS.

29. Sir John Walep. Annuity of 50 marks. Del. Westm., 29 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

29. Commissioners of Gael Delivery. Hume Circuit: Sir John More, Tho. Inglesfeld, Ric. Lyndesell.

York Castle: Sir Anth. Fitzherbert, Ric. Lyster, James Fox.

Norfolk Circuit: Sir Rob. Boudenell, Sir Ric. Brooke, Tho. Fitzhugh, Wm. Wyatt.

Westm., 29 Jan.—Pat. 19 Hen.VIII. p. 2, m. 1d.

29. Ric. Phelyppa, late collector of customs in the port of Poole, Dorset. Pardon. Also pardon to Wm. Malyng of Sandhull, Southt., Jo. Wytecombe and Jno. Denyn of Leeton, Somers. Del. Westm., 29 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

29. Sir Nich. Carewe. Annuity of 50 marks. Del. Westm., 29 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

29. John Wastelyn. To be chief gunner of the castle of Carlisle, with 8d. a day for himself, and 4d. a day for a servant. Del. Westm., 29 Jan. 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

[.] Sir Mathew Cradok, late receiver general of Glamorgan and Morgannwg, and Sir Edw. Grevill of Melcote, Warw., Sir Hugh Vaughan and Sir Rice Manscell. Pardon and release. Westm., [.] Jan. (?) 19 Hen.VIII.—S.B.

3870. LEE to WOLSEY.

Vesp. CHAM
B. M.

Had sent letters of the 20, 22, 24, and 29 Jan., mentioning the intimation of war on the 22nd. The Emperor demands the restoration of Genoa, Asti and Hesding, before he will deliver the Princes. Offered the King's hand and their commission. Nothing would content him, "diffidence reigneth in the Emperor so much." Had determined to write to other princes, had the Emperor been conformable. Found nothing but diffidence and delay. Till then the Emperor and the Chancellor put us in good hopes; for the Chancellor said, if the French ambassador meant good faith, a conclusion might be made without great difficulty. On being assured by them and the French, he said that all should be concluded, and peace should be made. When the Emperor sent for them he said that though there was great difficulty "between Maria ante partum and post partum," for the zeal he had to peace he would take that difficulty away. All is but a dream of the Chancellor's. Describes his negotiations with the French ambassadors in reference to their arrangement with the king of England.

The Emperor objects that he has no security in his hands of the French king, and therefore proposes that the latter should deliver Bordenaux and Boulogne into the hands of England, and Bayonne and Terouenne to him. Then "restitution and revocation shall be after." These and other propositions must be fulfilled before the deliverance of the Princes. It was proposed that the Emperor should deliver the Dauphin first for 800,000 cr.; and for the duke of Orleans, Genoa, Hedin, and Asti should be delivered, to be redelivered on payment of 400,000 cr. He refused, and thus their commission is expired. Excuse themselves for their ill success. If they had had time to consult with the King and Wolsey, some other way might have been taken for the good of Christendom. Thus they were driven to the last intimation. Narrate their conversation with the Emperor respecting Francis Sforza and the dukedom of Milan, and other matters of Italy. Nassau was to have gone into Flanders. Now we hear secretly that De Buren shall pass by way of Andalusia, with 4,000 Spaniards, between Ireland and Scotland. He cannot be victualled in Biscay, for there is no wheat in the country, nor much in Andalusia. 8,000 or 12,000 Almains will come hither in ships, and are not very welcome, as the people do not wish for war with England. They are using various means to raise money, and have sent to borrow whatever was laid up for building the churches. They will have it by force if they cannot have it freely. The nobles here are incensed at the rumor touching the divorce, which is now in every man's mouth. Clarenceux saith that mention is made of it in the declaration of war, not well sounding, as he saith, and your Grace is touched in it. For clear debts they ask the benefit of the law; for the indemnity, and the penalty for the refusal of marriage with my lady Princess, they trust the King will not stick. Perhaps they will offer the money, as they know we cannot take it to England. In mention of the war with France, nothing is said of England.

1528.

LEE to WOLSEY—cont.

Pp. 6. In Tuke's hand. Endd by Tuke: Extract of Mr. Almosner's letters written in ciphers to my lord Cardinal.

2 Feb.

3871. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Cal. D. x. 305.

B. M.

" [Mons. de Ba]yonne, j'ay receu vos lettres que par le memoire que vous m'avez envoye veoir l'ambassadeur du roy d'Angleterre mon b[on frere] estant icy autour de moy entendu les bonnes et ho[nnora]bles j'ay bien congneu venir de Mons. le Legat mon bon amy et dressees pardela, tant pour envoyer en Italie et que pareillement en Espagne a leurs ambassadeurs es[tans la, je] congnoys bien par icelles et mesmement par le cont
 la bonne et affectionnee volonte que continue de plu porter ledit Roy, mon bon frere et perpetuel allye, veu qu moy et mon honneur il a voulu et commande a sesdits am[bassadeurs de dire] a l'Empereur sy haultes sy ouvertes et roydes parolles contenues esdites lettres, monstrant bien par icelles ne faire maiz tenyr en ung mesme degre tout ce qui me peult et comme sy c'estoit a sa mesme personne ou pour chose con[cernante son] estat et honneur, dequoy, Mons. de Bayonne, et de je me sens a jamais estre tenu a luy, et pareillement a M[ons. le] Legat mon bon amy, que je scay certainement estre le vray de tout ce qui sert a conserver, maintenir et garder nostre ferme et sy indissoluble amytie et perpetuelle allyence [dont luy] remercier de ma part autant affectionnement qu'il v les assurant bien qu'il ne me scauroit survenir occasio[n] de donner pareille cognoissance de mon couste qu'ilz prest et apparence de le faire d'aussi bon cueur ny scauroys faire pour mon propre faict, lequel dudit Roy mon bon frere une mesme chose en ne souffrir ne permectre aucune alteration y estre faicte en quelque maniere au afin qu'ilz sig avec lesdits ambassadeurs du Roy une commune negociation, sans se desjoindre ys d'avecques les autres comme leurs instructions qu'ilz en ont de moy le portent et contiennent. Toutes[fois nous av]ons voulu envoyer sans avoir eu le courier qu'ilz depescher longtemps a qui n'est encores arryve et a entendu en quelz termes sont les choses; ce que mes ne m'ont voulu mander ny pour ce faire depescher le ny demander son congé pour ne leur donner esperance autre chose a proposer d'avantaige, mais attendre a au la finale responce de l'Empereur, qu'ilz n'avoient encore comme vous avez veu parce qui en est venu par deux esp je vous ay derrenierement envoye, afin de me p[ou]voir a ce qu'ilz y auroient faict et negocie. Bien vous pry cela ne laisser a solliciter la lettre dont je vous ay derr[enierement] escript pour procesler promptement et sans autre retardement a [l'intimacion] de la guerre ou cas de delay ou de reffuz, et incontinent m'envoyer, comme je croy que vous avez de ceste heure car je voy certainement que c'est le seul et vray moyen les faire venir et condescendre a la raison. Et n'en fai 1528.

esperer autrement que toutes parolles et dissimulations n tendans a autres fins que pour nous entreteynr, et ce par preparer et apprester leurs choses, de sorte qu'ilz nous [p]ussent prevenyr et prendre a l'improviste, pensant par ce l s'avoir fait du dommaige avant que noz forces puss[ent] jointes et mises ensemble, ainsi qu'il est aise a c[royre] [adv]ertissemens que jay de tous coustez me sy certainement adverty fen Bour)goune et en Languedoc pareillement avecques la force qu'il pourra lever et assem[bler] Et pource qu'il m'a semble que le myeux faire estoit de venir adelante et estre le pour me defendre que pour assaillir s'il es[t] a ceste cause advise d'envoyer pratiquer a l le nombre de dix mille lansquenetz que je s recouvrer facilement et pareillement ay donne tenir prestz ung nombre de six ou sept mille Souys[es] je pourray lever en mon royaume en peu de temps de ceste heure fait faire la discrection jusques de vingt mille hommes, qui sont forces avecques j'espere, ayant l'ayde dudit Roy mon bon frere et [perpetuel] allye en ce qu'il a promys et est tenu et deliber[e de faire,] de non seulement defendre noz estatz de nostre mais d'endommaiger et mettre les syens en telle [sorte qu'il] aura regret de n'avoir voulu entendre aux bonne[stes et plus] que raisonnables offres que nous luy avons fai[t proposer] et mettre en avant, non seulement pour la liber[te de noz] enfanz, mais pour le bien general et repoz de toute [la Chrestiente] que luy seul aura le honte d'avoyr garde et Et pour autant qu'il est fait mencion dens v[ostre] lettre] que mondit sieur le Legat mon bon amy a reg heure a faire la deposche d'ung gentil-h[omme] en Allemagne, suyvant ce que je vous escript, afin d'empescher a ceste
 Ferrando de le [env]oye a mes ambassadeurs en Sou[ysses] trassent sauf conduyt pour les deux perso[nnes]
 [Ro]y mon bon frere et perpetuel allye et moy [e]e que je suis seur qu'ilz auront fait. Parquoy envoyer le baillly de Senlys, Marigny, que vou[s] [a]vecques bonnes et amples instructions dont je vous [envoye] ung double par la premiere poste; et sy celluy [que ledit] Roy mon bon frere deposchera ne veult passer par c pourront se rencontrer a Basle avant ce premier jo[ur du] Carême, et la communiquer leurs charges pour les jointement et d'ung commun accord, afin qu'on congno[ist] qu'ainsy nous voulons proceder en toutes choses.
 " Au demeurant je vous envoye ung double du deschiffrement] qui m'est dernièrement venu par les lettres de mon co[usin le] sieur de Lautrech escriptes a Arymint, laquelle a re la subjection de nostre Saint Pere, afin que vous communiquer audit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel al[lye], et pareillement a mondit sieur le Legat mon bon amy [afin que] par la ilz pourront congnoistre quelque chose qu'on ait dire ou escrire en quelle deliberation est nostre Saint [Pere]. de se ressentir envers ses ennemys des injures qu'il deulx souffertes et endurées et quelle demonstration [il s'est] delibere d'en faire, estant secouru et ayde de nous s s'amys allies et confederes, comme il desire d'estre pourve, Mons. de Bayonne, que pour l'entreteynr voulente comme je vous ay escript par au dit sieur de Lautrech pou[r] enco et pour autant que sur ce requeryr ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpe[tuel allye]

1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

ayder a la pouvoir porter, continuant sa encoures deux moyz dens lesquelz jespere que nostre] commune armee viendra a faire de sy beignes entreprinses] qu'il n'aura regret de sy bien y avoir

"A ceste cause vous en ferez l'instance que dit est escript vous en adressant a Mon[sieur le Legat] mon bon amy, que je suis seur trouvera la et raisonnable, qu'il la fera sortir son effee[t] chose qui redondera non seulement au bien [de tous] les allyez, maiz generallyment de toute la [republique] Chrestienne, et de laquelle il aura et devra avo[ir] le principal honneur et gloire; vous priant incontinent entendre la responce qui vous
. et pareillement sur toutes autres choses don[t je vous ay] escript, m'en advertissant bien au long, et comme vous avez tres bien fait jusques icy."

S. Germain en Laye, 2 [Feb.] Signed.

Add. Endd.: ij^{de} de Feuvrier 1527.

2 Feb.

3872. ROBERTET to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

R. O.

Sends what has come in cipher from Italy, and the King's letters. The booty has sufficed to pay all their men. They have also gained a battle over 3,000 or 4,000 foot and 1,500 horse, without losing any one of importance, except the Bishop's young brother, who was with Mons. de Langres, for whom the King grieves much. S. Germain en Laye, Jour de Chandelles.

Hol., Fr., p. 1. Add.: A monseigneur, Mons. de Bayonne, conseiller du Roy et son ambassadeur en Angleterre.

3 [Feb.]

3873. [TAYLOR] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x.385.

R. M.

"Please it your Grace, the 30th day of Jan[uary we received] a letter, and three several copies of such letters as s and Italy, the third of a letter from my lord of these a very great packet to be sent into Spain. [After I had] perused my letters and all thing appertaining, I went to [court], according to your gracious commandment, to do your [devoirs to] the King and my Lady. When I came thither I could [not see the] King nor my Lady, but was desired all such things [I would have said] unto them I should communicate with the Council wh[er]e I found the] Grand Master, the bishop of Bituricensis, the ch[anc]ellor of Alençon, the Admiral and other. When I had showed [unto them how] great diligence and laborious pains your Grace took [to give] good counsel and aid to their affairs in Spain [and else]where, in confirmation whereof I showed unto them the [said] gracious letters, the which the chanceller of Alençon re[ad], and] well declared them in French, I ensure your Grace [that the] Council marvelled greatly, and were astonished to see and and wise conveyance of every matter. The Admyral sa[id that] your Grace could no further have extended the power of [wisdom] and discretion, if it had been for the King's highness o[f England your] master; and after they had heard them both in Latin [and in] French, they desired to have them conformably to

"This done, the Council, by the mouth of the Chaun[c]ellor of Alençon, showed unto me that the King and Madame beseecheth [the King's] highness and your Grace that the ambassadors being in Sp[ain may] be informed and plainly instruct and restrained to [a certain day] within the which the Emperor should give plain a[n]swer] or not, and then, if case require, to make intimation [of war, and] not to prolong the time any further; for the Emperor [will] defer the time as much as he can devise, and p ambassadors to send a post to the French king inventions to defer the time, the which they wol [not accept, but] he gave to them a resolute answer. Neither th any post out of France to the ambassadors have a final answer from them, such kno[wledge they] have here now out of Spain and into Sp[ain by] secret spies.

1528.

"Furthermore they showed unto me, and so they [do to your] Grace, they have sure knowledge that the E[mperor doth] make many men and in especial near places the which be called neutral taken and confirmed betwixt the French king near unto Italy, he maketh men and also by the strength, in so much that the Admiral said . . . [that] many English ships be take up to do the t from the French king was sent an ambassador the which, contra jus gentium, they have taken prisoner, and daily ships; wherefore they think here that the Emperor [will delay] his answer till that he may be well purveyed both by [land and] water; and then incontinent he will invade, or any i[n]timation be made of war. Wherefore they beseech the King's highness [and your] Grace well to consider these things, and to be in a redin[ess] to aid in charges, as they say the King's highness pr[omised at] the being there of the Grand Master; for, as I perc[eive, the heavy] charges be more than may well be supported without h[elp]. At this time the French king hath made sure provy[sion of] Almains, footmen, 3,000 horsemen, and dot[h make] provision for 8,000 Suches and to the noum[ber] of his subjects, and to this purpose come well to pass that your Grace wrote in your letters to me that I should them that it should be necessary well to look about non dormit.

"As touching the articles concerning the Emperor, the Po[pe] duke of Ferrara, and the Florentines, they will send to the tenor of the copies sent hither from your Grace the diet in Germania they say that they have sent to t of Baver and the duke of Saxon for safe cond[uct] for the king of England and the French king's amb[assadors] that they may come to the said diet, whereof they have answer, and they have appointed a man meet for t to be joined with Mr. Wallop, but of time and pla[ce] where they shall meet, they cannot as yet determine. Bu[t it] seemeth they would that Mr. Wallop should come this way which should be far out of the way. They say they will write to Mons. de Bayona sufficiently to show your Gra[ce of] all things, and they think that their ambassador shall be sufficiently instructed to disappoint the Diet, for they have intelligence, as they say, out of Almayne, of many great pow[ers], as Basilea and others, that will renounce obedience to the Emp[eror]."

"After all this communication I spake with the Grand Mas[ter, and] showed to him the mind of your Grace touching the sicion cum interdicto terrarum, &c., the which the great wisdom to refer these causes ad tempo[ra] Grace; how be it he bade me show unto your Grace that the Pope is well disposal, and specially e and he trusteth shortly your Grace shall here of the mind of his Holiness concerning more p"

Add.: To my lord Legate's grace,

3 Feb.

R. O.

3874. The COUNCIL at LUDLOW to WOLSEY.

Have discharged the Princess's household here of certain gentlemen and yeomen, who have been allowed to return to their houses with their wages unchecked, and to renew their attendance upon her Grace at a future warning. There are still divers officers here who might be spared, but they are very poor men, without friends; and it is doubtful what would become of them, or what might be said of it, if they were dismissed in this hard year. Notwithstanding the reduction in the household the diets amount to great sums, owing chiefly to the dearth of grain, as will appear by a statement conveyed by this bearer, the clerk of the kitchen. Ludlow, 3 Feb. Signed: Jo. Exon—Ja. Denton—Peter Burnell—E. Croft—G. Bromley—John Russel—Richard Sneyde.

1528.

The COUNCIL at LUDLOW to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: From the King's council in the marches of Wales.

6 Feb.

3875. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 72.

B. M.

Lautree with his army has arrived here, within one day's march of the kingdom of Naples, which does not seem likely to make much resistance. They have already surrendered Curtella, and are providing victuals for the passage of the army. It is reported that the Spaniards and lanceknights are still at Rome. The marquis of Saluzzo has gone towards Florence to protect it, in case they attack it. He will remain there 14 or 15 days, and then come on to Naples. Have been well treated and sufficiently victualled in the Pope's countries. Ferme, 6 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add. and endd. at f. 81°.

6 Feb.

3876. CHARLES V. to INIGO DE MENDOZA, BP. ELECT OF BURGOS.Vesp. C. iv.
225.

B. M.

Will have been informed, before the receipt of this, that he has been defied by the kings of France and England. Sends him a copy of all that is past, in order to govern his conduct. Is to demand a public audience from the king of England, justify the Emperor's proceedings the best way he can, and demand his passage. The Emperor will detain the ambassadors of France and England until he is advertised of Mendoza's safety. Burgos, 6 Feb. 1528.

Fr. Copy.

3877. ——— to ———

R. O.

Monsieur, since the last post, the penultimate of last month, a courier has arrived at Parpinyan with letters from the Emperor to the Governor and consuls to publish war against the king of England and the Venetians.

This was done last Tuesday, by four trumpets, in all the streets of Parpinyan; all the victuals and cattle are brought back from the frontier, and the safe-conducts granted to some English merchants are revoked. They have fled.

The horsemen in the country are preparing for war.

Fr. p. 1. Endd.: "Double de la lettre venu de Mons. de Clermont de Languedoc, du vj. de ce moys, de Nerbonne."

6 Feb.

3878. BRIAN HIGDON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The prior of Hawtenprise is dead, and two of the brethren are coming up to Wolsey to sue for a new prior. It will be a good deed to expedite them, as the house is very poor on account of the great dearth of corn, and certain troubles which the late Prior had. The house is well builded, but the lands do not exceed 200 mks. Hopes there are fit men for the office, as there is "a pratie compeny," and religious persons enough for their lands. The duke of Richmond and Somerset is founder. They pay no pension, on account of the smallness of their land. York, 6 Feb.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.: The dean of York, 6 Feb.

7 Feb.

3879. CHARLES V.Lanz, Staats-papiere
Karl V. 41

Instructions for Scepperus, sent on a mission to Poland. He is to explain how the king of France has forfeited his word, and war has broken out between the Emperor, the Pope, and other Christian princes, to whom he did not so much as dream of giving any offence, but used every effort to secure their friendship. Not satisfied with these injuries, Francis has taken up arms against his benefactor, from whom he received his liberty, and has induced the king of England to do the same. The envoy shall use his efforts to induce the king of Poland to allow his subjects publicly, or at least privately, to turn their arms against England, the sooner to finish the war, and allow the Emperor to take up arms against the Infidels. Burgos, 7 Feb. 1528.

1528.

Lat.

7 [Feb.]
Cal. D. 401.
B M.

3880 FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

"[Mons. de] Bayonne, je vous envoie par ce co[urrier] une lettre escripte de ma main au roy d'Angleterre, mon bon frere et perpe[tuel] allye, et Mons. le Legat mon bon amy, et pareillement un Mons. d'Ayre, frere de Mons. de Tarbes, et par cela echerement en quelz termes et disposition sont les affaires qui me gardera de vous en repplequer riens davant incontinent que vous aurez veu le tout, vous vous retir et Legat, pour leur presenter lesdites lettres lesquelles vous pr part encorres que je pense bien que pour l'amour du sing[ulier] deulx me porte, et aussi qu'il est question du bien commun d soit ja besoing de les en solliciter qu'ilz vueillent bien quel poix importance et consequence est le contenu de la [lettre de Mons.] d'Ayre, et l'injure et oultrage que l'Empereur a fait au Roy [mon bon amy] et perpetuel allye, et a moy, et par consequent a tous les chose qui ne fut jamais faicte a ambassadeurs de pri[nces] cause, je prie mondit bon frere que comme prince d'honne[ur], comme] je le tiens et repote, il se vueille ressentir dudit oultrag[e et] donner ordre promptement a tout ce qu'il verra et coun[oi]stra et necessaire pour cest effect, et me vouloir faire ad et resolucio[n] qu'il aura prise sur le tout, et ce qu'il lu devray faire, pour selon son bon conseil et advis et celluy me conduire et gouverner en tout et partout.

"Au demeurant, Mons. de Bayonne, vous leur direz par comme ce jour d'uy, je fais assembler l'ambassadeur d et pareillement celuy de Venise, et autres de la Ligue monstrier et communiquer le contenu de la dite lettre de mo adviser par ensemble a prendre une bonne resolucio[n] a faire, et cela faict je depeschernay incontinent u[n] gentilhomme de ma] chambre en diligence pour aller devers lesditz [ambassadeurs pour] les advertir de la dite resolucio[n], que auss[i] mander par luy ce qu'il leur sembl[e]

" semblable, vous advisant que j'envoie [en Allemagne pour faire une levee promptement iceulx faire descendre ou besoing sera, que ung gentilhomme pour aller a Bayonne avec une

"Affin de pourveoir de la seurete et conservacion de ladite demourant de la frontiere, et aussi pour lever des gens [d'armes] dedans ledit Bayonne et autres villes de sorte que jespere que] de Guyenne il ne viendra aucun inconvenient, ne pareillement [de] Narbonne. Car je y ay semblablement fait pourveoir ain[s]i requis et necessaire comme plus a plain pourrez entendre que j'enverray pardela, en attendant le parlement duquel [ne] pourroit pas faire si grande diligence que ung courier. J[e] vouldrois] envoyer ce porteur avec la depesche dessusdite, ainsi que [vous le puissiez] faire entendre ausdits sieurs Roy et Legat." S. Germain-en-Laye, 7 Signed.

Mutilated.

1528.

3881. [FRANCIS I. to HENRY VIII.]

Cal. D. x. 237.

B. M.

" l'evesque par la
 quelle pourr re et deshonneur que le [vo]us et moy et pareillement [les confeder]ez de la Lygue, ce qu'yl ne fust . . . ambassadeurs de princes Chresty[ens] que je suya seur et certayn que d'honneur et de vertu que reputé vous ne fauldra de la dyte injure et qu yalle amitie quy est ye envoyer meyllleur ambass[ade] que la present[e] ye pour vous non advys sur le tout e que de votre part vous a volu preparer pour rem r promptement a toutes choses [d'import]ance et consequence des affay[res] que j'ay en vous ma parlaytte [confi]eence, et de mon couste je feray le se[mblable] re de user en tout et par tout de [vostre con]seyl et advys comme de celluy que ty[enne] trop plus seur et certayn que nu[l] [vostre bon] frere, cousin"

Hol., mutilated.

8 Feb.

3882. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

[Cal. E. i. ii. ?]

i. 222.

B. M.

Desires the Bishop to communicate to the King and Wolsey the contents of the French king's letter, being careful that they take it well. The King is about to send a gentleman to England. He has arrested the Imperial ambassador, and sent him to the Bois de Vincennes, and has stopped all the Spaniards and Flemings in his kingdom. Preparations are being well made on all sides. S. Germain, 8 Feb.

Does not send the information which has come from the treasurer of Navarre, because the letter of "Mons. d'Aire y t tout cela."

The bearer is paid to go and return. Signed.

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.

8 [Feb.]

3883. CHAS. DUKE OF SUFFOLK and ROG. TOUNESHEND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since the Duke came to Lynn a great part of the Marsh land has been overflowed with salt water, and many substantial persons have been before Suffolk and Touneshend, whom the Duke asked to aid him in ordering the business of grains in these parts, to represent their losses. Thinks the only safeguard for the country and for the town of Lynn will be a commission of sewers as before. The last breach happily is recovered. Sends copy of a letter which the Duke has written to the commissioners of this shire about the disposal of the grains out of this shire into others. Lynn, 8 Feb. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. :† To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd!

2. [Suffolk] to the Commissioners [in Norfolk].

Those who have purchased corn within their limit, for consumption in other parts, are to have the benefit of their bargain only so far as the commissioners think right, in consideration of the claims of their own and other hundreds, a reasonable portion of the grains being always set apart for the cities of London and Norwich, and other places appointed to be relieved by their hundred. They are also to make certificate, before the 1st March next, of such overplus of grain as shall remain in their hundred beyond the said bargains, that it may be disposed of to the relief of other places. Purchasers who take corn away are to be given a bill to such ports and creeks as the said corn is to pass by. Lynn, &c.

† The fly leaf containing the address was found separate from the document.

1528.

Pp. 3. Add.: To the worshipful A. B., commissioners assigned for the ordering of grains within the hundred of C.

8 Feb. 3884. CHARLES DUKE OF SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Requests letters from Wolsey in favor of a marriage between Rich. Freston, comptroller of the household of the Duke and the French queen, and the widow of Sir Walter Strickland, of whose death he has just heard. Lynn, 8 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.: The duke of Southfolke, 8 February 1527.

8 Feb. 3885. LAWRENCE STARBER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Does not know how to thank Wolsey for his benefits. Will use the greatest possible diligence in executing his commission. No news here, except that a great host is gathering against Gueldres, and that the Emperor's money, viz., 100,000 ducats, which he sent into Germany to raise an army for Italy, is now to be applied to the aid of king Ferdinand against the Weyde. Is going into High Germany. Antwerp, 8 Feb. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.: Laurencius Starber, 8 Martii† 1528.

8 Feb. 3886. THOS. BENET to WOLSEY.

Has bound Sir Will. Davis, priest, in 500 marks, to appear before Wolsey before St. Gregory's day, 12 March. Encloses the obligation. Sarum, 8 Feb.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord Cardinal. Endd.: Doctor Benet of Sarum.

9 Feb. 3887. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Last Wednesday, about 5 or 6 o'clock at night, four ships of Dieppe attacked two Spaniards who had been lying in the Cambré for 14 days, laden with merchandise from Flanders. They have taken the goods and one ship. The other is "budded" and lies broken on the sands. Went to Rye, and sent three of the jurates to tell the French they had not behaved well to the King in taking ships from the haven; and if they would bring the goods on land, he and the town would be bound to redeliver them if Wolsey and the president of Normandy, "which is ambassador," determined them to be lawful prize. They refused, and say they will take their booty to Dieppe, and will make answer if anything is laid to their charge. There were neither ships nor artillery to rescue the Spaniards, and Guldeford dares not have meddled without orders if there had been. Wishes for orders if the like happen again. Rye, 9 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

9 [Feb.] 3888. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 274.

R. M.

" d'Espagne pour le vous monst[rer] suivant ce que le Roy mon maistre m'a ex luy escripre, qui me gardera vous en man remectant le tout en la suffisance dudit Sieur d advertissant Monseigneur que ledit Sieur et M[adame sa mere] se contentent merveilleusement du bon office 1528.

— to WOLSEY—cont.

... Mons. de Vigorne, suivant ce que l'esleu Bayo[une] deca, j'espere que nous en aurons bien tost tout ce qu'il a porte dont vous serez incont[en]t avec] diligence adverty.

" Monseigneur, le sieur de Castillon, gentilhomme du Roy, lequel il avoit cy d'avant envoie deve[rs le sieur de] Lautrec, est presentement arrive et semble par le nostre Saint Pere luy a tenuz que sa Saintete face bon l'ysue de l'emprins[e] d'Itallye, et estime peu ennemys, en regard a la puissance de nostre arm[ee] le fait de Weiraulde soit en meilleurs term[es] que les Imperiaux en ont fait, ainsi que p[ou]rrez entendre par la lettre que le Roy escript au r[oy d'Angleterre] son bon frere et perpetuel allye, ne voull vous escrire que l'obligation en quoy lesdits [Roy et Madame] se sentent tenuz a vous, croist et augm[ente] a moyen du saige conseil, bonnes et ne c[es]se que ledit Sieur se porte a present y d'un rutme qu'il avoit qui l'a contrainct [a garder sa] chambre, me recommandant tres humblement je supplie le Createur, monseigneur, vous donner [bonne et longue] vye. De S. Germain en Laye, ce 9^{me} [jour de Fevrier].

" [Monsie]ur, le Roy avoit deslibere d'escrire au roy d'Angleterre mais pour autant qu'il escript bien au long de toute[s] choses a] mondit sieur de Bayonne, il s'en remettra pour ce coup"

Mutilated. Add.: Mons. le Cardinal arcevesque d'York, legat et chancelier d'Angleterre.

9 Feb.

3889. GIO. BATT. SANGA to GAMBARA, NUNCIO in ENGLAND.

Lettere
di Principi,
II. 82.

Jacomo Salviati wrote to you on the 29th of all occurrences here. Since then Mariotto has arrived with yours of the 12th, 15th, and 21st ult., which gave the Pope great hopes of peace, and of succour for the Church. As the negotiations for peace are on such a good footing, the Pope hoped the kings of France and England would take in good part his refusal to declare himself according to Lautrec's demands, and regard it as prudent counsel. The Pope was grateful that his release had taken place in time to enable him to bring the good work of peace to perfection. But, subsequently, Mons. di Longavalle arrived to congratulate the Pope on his liberation, and to declare the good intentions of the kings of France and England with respect to the re-establishment of the state and dignity of the Church. He has thus destroyed the hopes of peace, for his statements were quite contrary to what you had written. He declared that the kings of France and England consider it impossible to obtain peace with the Emperor until they have first subdued him with fierce war; and that the two Kings are positively determined to continue the Neapolitan enterprise until that kingdom and the duchy of Milan are recovered from the Emperor, to whom they are never to be restored. Their Majesties also intend to invade the Emperor in his other states, to compel him to restore the sons of the French king, and sue for peace. The negotiations which they keep alive in Spain are not meant to bring about any result, but only to make the Emperor slack in his preparations.

As the Pope wishes for peace, he has avoided giving a direct reply to Longavalle. However great might be the forces of the French king and the League in Italy, the issue of the war would be doubtful; and the Pope cannot honorably declare against the Emperor, who, on liberating him, exhorted him to go to Spain to conclude the peace. Because Longavalle insisted that the envoy who was to be sent to Spain should be sent from hence and have the confidence of the French, the Pope has appointed the bishop of Pistoia; and so you will be relieved of this burden.

1528.

Longavalle says the intention of the kings of France and England is not to restore Naples to the Emperor, even should he offer to restore the French king's sons, but to place all the territories which shall be conquered in the Pope's hands, and to appoint a king there acceptable to his Holiness. The Pope extremely desires to ascertain how the Neapolitan enterprise, which Lautrec is going to undertake, is regarded in England; for the Pope has reason to believe that the king (Henry) is not so anxious for the continuation of the war as is reported. He is therefore awaiting letters from you.

The Pope also desires that you should endeavour to discover the source from which this idea of the separation [of Henry and Katharine?] has sprung. The Pope believes some fresh commission on this subject has arrived from the Emperor; for the general of the Franciscans is again importuning the Pope respecting the inhibition, about which he had already spoken to the Pope in the castle; and your Lordship ought to know it.

According to your letter this will find you returned to France, where you and the legate (Salviati) are to give instructions to the bp. of Pistoia, how to persuade the Emperor to peace. I enclose the reply given to Longavalle, containing the articles upon which the Pope insisted. Orvieto, 9 Feb. 1528.

ii. Reply given by Pope Clement VII. to Mons. di Longavalle, respecting the declaration to be made by the Pope against the Emperor, as demanded by Longavalle on the part of the kings of France and England.

Ital.

10 Feb. 3890. SIR ROB. JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 49.

We have now entered the realm of Naples. The towns and castles within 20 miles compass are delivered to us, and we expect the rest to do the same as we approach. Count Tier de Nayer is gone towards Laquila, one of the greatest towns in those parts, which we expect will surrender, though there are in it 200 light horse, 80 men-of-arms, and 1,000 foot. The Spaniards and lanceknights are still at dissension in Rome. The prince of Orange has promised them payment to be levied in Naples, but Lautrec means to disappoint them. Aschulio, 10 Feb. Signed.

Add. Endd.

3891. THE SAME to [WOLSEY].

Vit. Rix. 45b.
R. M.

To the same effect. Signed.
P. 1.

3892. THE SAME to SANDYS.

R. O.

To the same effect. Desires to be commended to the marquis of Exeter and Sir Ric. Sandys. Aschulio, 10 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : My lord Sandys, lord Chamberlain. Endd.

3893. THE SAME to NORFOLK.

R. O.

To the same effect. Aschulio, 10 Feb. Signed.
P. 1. Add. Endd.

10 Feb.

Galba, B. ix
4A.
B. M.

3894. SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD to [WOLSEY].

Heard from one of his servants this morning that last night Mons. de Neell, a French gentleman, who lay at Arde, and all the best of the town, left with their baggage, and that this morning at 3 o'clock twelve horsemen came from Bolleyn and took away his wife and other stuff. Sent two archers on horseback to Sir Wm. Pelham, my lord Chamberlain's deputy at Gynys, to ask if he knew anything of it, and told them to ride on to Arde to get more certainty. They have brought back word that all the chief people of Arde and that quarter have left, that Mons. de la Mote with his wife and baggage has come to G[uisnes], that last night three or four villages were p[lundered] and the inhabitants carried away. Those who did it were probably French, as the villages belong to the Emperor. Asks how he is to act if either party bring anything within the King's Pale or seek for succour. Wishes the treasurer and marshal were her e. Calais, 10 Feb. 1527.

1528.

SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Hol., pp. 2, mutilated.

10 Feb. 3895. ——— to PIETRO PAULO CRESCENTIO, Nuncio with Lautree.

Lettere
di Principi,
II. 86.

Mons. di Longavalle has been here, and made great importunity for the Pope's declaration [against the Emperor]. The Pope has promised to declare himself if peace be rejected by the Emperor, and is sending the bishop of Pistoja to exhort his Majesty to peace, and to tell him that if he will not accept it on reasonable conditions, the Pope will make an agreement with the kings of France and England. Orvieto, 10 Feb. 1528.

Ital.

10 Feb. 3896. CHARLES V. to CLEMENT VII.

Lanz. Corresp.
des K.
Karl V. I. 262.

His nuncio is a witness of Charles's good intention, and how much he regretted the detention of his Holiness, and rejoiced at his liberation, although the latter event has been later than he wished, owing to the death of the viceroy of Naples. His delay in sending to his Holiness a person to supply the Viceroy's place has been in order that he might send now one of high authority, who knew his mind and good intention thoroughly; for which cause he has confided that mission to Hugh de Moncada. Burgos, 10 February.

Spanish.

11 Feb. 3897. CHARLES V.

Vesp. C. IV.
229.
B. M.

News from the Emperor's court, which arrived at Bayonne, 11 Feb. The Emperor is at Burgos, and has summoned to his presence all the great lords, spiritual and temporal. No one is yet in arms, except the constable of Castille and the duke of Nageres, for the greater part are very unwilling. It is said that the Emperor, since the declaration of war, has twice sent to his ambassador in England to make arrangements with that King. Meanwhile, for greater security, they have deliberated to place the French princes in the castle of Segovia or Sismanques (Simancas), and they will abridge their attendants. De Tarbes and the others are at the castle of Posa, and great complaint is made of their imprisonment, and that they know not how he will excuse it. The Emperor is in a great rage. They will not be permitted to leave until the reply of the king of England has arrived. The ambassador of the king of England is at Burgos, and is still visited. The Emperor is displeased, and but few people speak with him. The Castellians are dissatisfied with the Burgundians and the Flemings for obstructing the alliance with England, and a great hatred is sprung up between them, especially considering the poverty of the Emperor's household. Not much news from Italy. The fleet intended for Italy has been dispersed, part at Majorea and the rest at Carthage. They are in great apprehension about Navarre, and are negotiating with count de Levin by means of François de Beaumont, who is at present at court with Levin's children. They would like to send a person to govern Navarre, who would be agreeable to the people.

1528.

The Spaniards do not think the king of Hungary will render much assistance in Italy, and are much dismayed at seeing such a formidable alliance arrayed against them. Chanco Martinez de Leyves has orders to pass through Fontarabia and Guipuscoa, and will be provided with money and troops. The Emperor has sent a gentleman of his chamber, and a Portuguese into Portugal. There is nothing of importance said of it.

Fr., pp. 3. Eadd. in English.

11 Feb. 3898. HERMAN RYNOE to HENRY VIII.

Vit. B. xxi. 41.

B. M.

Has received the following news from his friends. Both the Emperor and the French king are preparing for war. The latter exacts from the clergy a third of their goods,—some say, of their revenues. The Emperor demands from each church two marks of silver, that is, twelve ducats. Catalonia, Aragon and Valencia will send him 600,000 ducats and a large army. Portugal has offered 800,000 ducats for licence to execute their contracts for spices, but it is not known whether the Emperor will accept them.

The Venetian fleet has been much injured by a storm, and two ships driven on to the coast of Apulia were taken by the Imperialists. The Emperor has forty ships at sea, and is sending 10,000 Spaniards to Italy. He will never make peace until the French king fulfils his promises. The Pope is liberated, having given certain cardinals as hostages for the performance of his treaty with the Emperor. The Pope has gone to Corneto (civitas Cornensis). Few persons are with him beside the Datary. He has surrendered to the Emperor Ostia and Civita Vecchia. The new viceroy of Naples is Hugo de Moncada. The army is now approaching Burgundy and France. The leader is Marcus Sittich of Embs. The people of Constance have for twelve years conspired with the people of Turgau. Does not know whether they will any longer ally themselves with the Swiss. No persons have come as bishops for the disputation to be held at Verona (Berne?), except from Ulm, Augsburg, Memmingen and Lyndau. Constance, Turgau, St. Gall, Basle and Argentina (Strasbourg) have also sent preachers (concionatores) thither.

The electors and other nobles have been ordered to forbid their subjects leaving their dominions, and to have them instructed in arms. The marriage between the duke of Lorraine and the princess of Cleves is broken off. It is thought that she will marry a Danish prince, and cede the duchy of Gueldres to the Emperor. Cologne, 3 id. Feb. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 3. Add. Eadd.

3899. GERMANY.

Vit. B. xxi. 40.

B. M.

"Advertissement des baron Desben et chevalier de [Richac qui] sont venus en ceste ville de Lucerne pour n . . . les choses ainsi qu'il s'ensuyt."

They have news from Germany that Ferdinand intends to make himself king of the Romans, and is practising with the Electors, with other princes, and with the Swabian league. A diet is appointed at Reginsbourg (Ratisbon) in Mid Lent. He will use force if necessary. He is collecting much money, and the men being enlisted in the Tyrol are for the same purpose.

Bohemia is in a state of revolt, as he will not keep his oaths. The duke of Stermberg has retired to the Weyde (Waywode). The dukes of Bavaria and Saxony will not consent to the election of Ferdinand as king of the Romans. They say that the King might procure the election of a king of the Romans in his own interest, and thus bridle the house of Austria.

They offer to conduct the practices themselves; that is, baron Desben will go to the duke of Bavaria, and the chevalier de Richac to the count Desche (Hesse) and duke of Saxony, where his master, the duke of Wirtemberg, is at present. The Weyder is in his own country, and is expecting money and men from the Turk to drive out Ferdinand.

1528.

GERMANY—cont.

They are ready to serve the King, and desire an answer. The baron Desben also wishes for an answer concerning "son beau . . . nommé _____" of whom we have written to the King. We hear that he would be of much service, and has great credit with the duke of Bavaria and others.

Fr., pp. 2. Endd.

11 Feb.

Le Grand, III.
78.

3900. WOLSEY to MONTMORENCI.

The King is sending my secretary, Stephen Gardiner, and Master Edward Fox, to the Pope, on matters of great importance both to the common affairs and to his own. They are instructed about the affair of Ferrara, which is of great importance, to withdraw the Pope from any intelligence he may have with the Emperor; for, as it does not appear likely that he will hold to the promises he made to the duke of Ferrara during his captivity (as his Holiness has openly declared to the King and me by the bishop of Tortonne, his ambassador), those promises having been only made to win over the Duke to the League, it will be well to find some means to satisfy both parties, and keep them both on the side of France and England. Henry has accordingly passed certain articles of promise to the Pope, which it is recommended that Francis should also pass with certain additions, framed for the purpose, as he has more interest in it than the King. They are couched in such form that there may be, if necessary, plenty of subterfuges "pour satisfaire le tout." Hopes Montmorenci will urge that Francis make no difficulty about it. Westm., 11 Feb. 1527.

French. Add.: A Mons. de Montmorency, Grant Maistre de France.

3901. [HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 74.
B. M.

His fidelity to the See Apostolic is too well known to need expression by letters or ambassadors. Trusting in the Pope's goodness, asks for a favour which ought to be granted to any Christian, and on which depends the continuation of his line, the peace of the kingdom or its ruin, and the safety of his own soul. Desires credence for Wolsey's letters, and for Gardiner and Edward Fox.

Draft by Vannes. Lat., p. 1.

3902. [HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 79.
B. M.

Draft of a letter very similar to the preceding.
In Vannes' hand. Lat., pp. 2.

3903. HENRY VIII. to the BISHOP OF VERONA.

Vit. B. x. 58.
B. M.
Pocock, i. 62.

Hopes that he will resume his former offices, which he discharged with so much ability. The King has no one on whom he can so fully rely, and therefore hopes that, for his sake also, Ghiberti will not refuse. Refers him to the elect of Tortona, and to Gardiner and Fox, who are now sent on this mission to Rome. Hopes he will interpose his good services with the Pope.

Thus far the King. From the latter part of the letter it is difficult to discover whether the writer was continuing the draft in his own name, or in that of the King. He urges the Bishop, "jure amicitie," to return to the Pope, and reside with him till the affairs of Christendom are in better condition.

1528.

Lat., corrected, draft, pp. 4. In Vannes' hand.

3904. [WOLSEY to J. M. GIBERTO, BISHOP OF VERONA.]

Vit. B. x. 51.
B. M.

"Ponatur primo tenor premissi literarum ad Veronensem; demum ubi dicit 'R. D. V. rogamus,' addatur:"

The ship of the Church, though overwhelmed by the tempest, is rising again, and the sea begins to be more calm. Reminds him that it should be assisted, not deserted. His care for his church at Verona should not deprive Christendom of his services, but he should appoint a proper suffragan. If desire for the public good, the necessity of the Pope, the prayers of the kings of England and France, do not persuade him to resume his public duties, what else can be thought but that a desire for private life and ease has influenced him? When affairs are settled, those will applaud him for his retirement who now say that he has retired from the court, not from zeal for serving God, or love of virtue, but from despair and weakness. How much his return would please the kings of England and France, &c.

"Hic se extendat D. Petrus, addatque eas prores quæ vehementes videntur."

Draft, Lat., pp. 2.

3905. WOLSEY to the BISHOP OF VERONA.

Vit. B. x. 54.
B. M.
Pocock, i. 63.

Considers the Bishop's misfortunes as common to himself, but, as spring succeeds winter, and light darkness, he must take courage. Begs him to go to the Pope and assist him by his counsel, as his absence is very prejudicial to the common weal. The King earnestly desires him to do so, both for public affairs, and for the benefit of his own cause. He will place not only the King and Wolsey, but the whole kingdom, under a perpetual obligation, if he will give his assistance in this matter. The bp. of Tortona will tell him more.

This matter, which the King most ardently desires, involves the quiet of the whole realm, or its complete destruction, the preservation of the King's succession, and the safety of his soul.

Draft, Lat., pp. 2. In Vannes' hand. Headed: Literæ R.D. Legati ad D. Veronensem.

3906. [WOLSEY to the BISHOP OF VERONA.]

Vit. B. x. 55.
B. M.

Urges him to return to the Pope. Neither Henry nor Francis approve of his deserting the care of the universal Church for the church at Verona, and think that no troubles can happen greater than those which have been already overcome. Cannot help thinking that he is affected by untimely eagerness for a quiet life, or by weariness. If he return he will be praised by those who now blame him. Cannot express the pleasure it would give to the two Kings and himself.

Draft, Lat., pp. 2. In Vannes' hand.

3907 [WOLSEY to ———.]

Vit. B. x. 58.
B. M.

"III. Domine et tanquam frater amantissime."

Remembers, with the greatest pleasure, his society in France. While engaged in public affairs, never omits anything which he thinks may benefit him. Staphyleus' commendation of his affairs was quite unnecessary. Profeases his entire willingness to serve him.

Draft, Lat., pp. 2. In Vannes' hand.

1528.

3908. [WOLSEY] to the CARDINAL OF ANCONA.

Vit. B. x. 62. Asks his assistance in the King's cause, which will be explained to
 B. M. him by the bp. of Tortona, Gardiner and Fox.
 Pocock, i. 67. Draft, Lat., pp. 2. In Vannes' hand.

3909. [HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 73. Perceives his affection from his letters to himself and Wolsey, and
 B. M. from the declaration of the bp. of Tortona. Considers his request as granted, Pocock, i. 59. and thanks him accordingly. Wishes it to be according to the form which the bp. of Tortona, Gardiner and Foxe will show him. The King, his kingdom and his friends, will be eternally bound to him.
Draft by Vannes. Lat., p. 1.

3910. HENRY VIII. to CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO.

Vit. B. x. 75. Uses his assistance with the greater confidence, as he daily sees his
 B. M. good faith, and his desire to serve him, by the reports of the bp. of Tortona.
 Enlarges on the importance and the justice of his demand. Knows Campeggio's influence with the Pope and his prudence, and begs him to use them in his favor. Desires credence for the bp. of Tortona, Gardiner and Fox.
Draft by Vannes. Lat., pp. 2.

3911. HENRY VIII. to the CARDINAL DA MONTE.

Vit. B. x. 80. Desires his assistance in his cause. Credence for the bp. of Tortona,
 B. M. Gardiner and Foxe.
In Vannes' hand. Lat., p. 1. Endd.

3912. [WOLSEY to CLEMENT VII.]

R. O. Urges upon him the importance of the King's cause, which he has Burnet, iv. 45. already pressed with so much solicitude by letters and messengers. It concerns the safety of the King, the preservation of the kingdom, the public peace, the apostolic authority, and Wolsey's very life. Implores the Pope, upon his knees, to assent promptly to the King's request; if it be not just, Wolsey will undergo any punishment. Fears that otherwise the King will be driven by divine and human law to seek his rights from the whole of Christendom, seeing that, by the Emperor's influence, justice is delayed to him. Warns the Pope, as a Christian, not to allow his authority to be thus injured. Sends his secretary, Stephen Gardiner, "mei dimidium," to his Holiness to explain more fully his mind. Begs credence for him and Edw. Fox.
Lat., pp. 3. In Vannes' hand.

Vit. B. x. 78. 2. Another draft in Vannes' hand, with important variations. Not
 B. M. corrected by Wolsey, as stated in Burnet.

Pp. 2. The heading in Burnet, "Rome, Feb. 10, 1528," is taken from a heading, written in a modern hand, on the top margin of the MS.

3913. WOLSEY to GARDINER and FOX.

Hatfield MSS. Are to visit France on their way to the Pope, and, taking with them
 Dr. Taillor, master of the Rolls, ambassador there, shall present the King and Wolsey's letters, and then proceed to follow the instructions herewith sent, taking order to accelerate their audience, speaking with my Lady at least if they can, or the Great Master, and making excuse for the shortness of their visit. At Rome they shall consult with the bishop elect of Tortona and 1528.

Gregory de Cassalys. They shall say that though the King's principal secretary, Dr. [Knight], and others, have expressed the Pope's good mind for granting what is required touching the King's marriage, and the Pope has passed a dispensation and commission devised by cardinal St. Quatuor, thinking the same to be sufficient, and promised to do what was necessary for the validity of the same by breves or bulls, yet the King would be glad to learn from the report, by word of mouth, of the said Elect the Pope's good intentions, and what the Pope desires of him for the recovery of the places detained from him. With a view to the greater effect of the same, and arranging peace between Francis and the Emperor, and for the substantial effect of the dispensation and commission necessary to the peace of this realm, which, in their present form, are as good as none at all, Gardiner and Fox are sent to the Pope, and they are to declare to the Pope everything that is necessary for his causes and the King's just petition. For the former the King will always stand with the Pope, and will interfere in his behalf. Here they shall enlarge upon the King's good intentions to him as if the cause were his own, and say that he expects to find a correspondent friendship on the part of the Pope.

Secondly, Wolsey finds by conversation with the said Elect that the Pope has been laboring under some misapprehension, as if the King had set on foot this cause, not from fear of his succession, but out of a vain affection or undue love to a gentlewoman of not so excellent qualities as she is here esteemed. They are to assure the Pope that Wolsey would not, for any earthly affection to his prince, or desire of reward, transgress the truth or swerve from the right path, nor would he have consented in any way to have reported to his Holiness otherwise than his conviction, which was of the insufficiency of the marriage, nor have used any dissimulation. If God has given any light of true doctrine to the greatest divines and lawyers of this realm, and if in this angle of the world there be any hope of God's favor, Wolsey is well assured and "dare put his soul" that the King's desire is grounded upon justice, and not from any grudge or displeasure to the Queen, whom the King honors and loves, and minds to love and to treat as his sister, with all manner of kindness. Also as she is the relief of his dearest brother he will entertain her with all joy and felicity. But as his matrimony is contrary to God's law, the King's conscience is grievously offended. "On the other side the approved, excellent virtuous [qualities] of the said gentlewoman [Anne], the purity of her life, her constant virginity, her maidenly and womanly pudicity, her soberness, chasteness, meekness, humility, wisdom, descent of right noble and high thorough regal blood, education in all good and laudable [qualities] and manners, apparent aptness to procreation of children, with her other infinite good qualities, more to be regarded and esteemed than the only progeny," be the grounds on which the King's desire is founded, which Wolsey regards as honest and necessary.

Considering these things, the dangers which would ensue from a disputed succession, and the likelihood in that event of England declining from obedience to the Holy See, he is glad that the Holy Father sees the danger and is willing to provide a remedy; and, as he has shown his affection by granting the commission and dispensation, hopes he will supply all the defects in the same, and see that they be effectual, in such a form as may serve in this realm where they are to be executed. The style here is more to be regarded than that of the court of Rome, as they shall fully explain to his Holiness. They shall therefore study these points, and discuss them with his Holiness, begging him that the dispensation and commission may be passed without alteration, according to the form here devised, and a legate be sent. The commission is to be directed to him and to Wolsey, in which event Fox shall immediately return with it, and Gardiner come after with the legate proposed. Rewards are to be offered, and they are to attempt to procure that Campegius be sent in preference to all others, promising that his charge shall be furnished from 1528.

WOLSEY to GARDINER and FOX—cont.

England. If Campegius is not sent they are to procure the cardinal Anconytane, or such other as shall be fit for their purpose. If the Pope decline to send the dispensation and commission in the form here devised, as unusual, they shall say that it has been frequently done by many Popes in matters of great and little moment; and though it may seem unusual, yet, considering that this is a cause of great moment, and that the legatine authority of Wolsey might have been sufficient without any reference to the Pope, to avoid all evils that may befall the realm, it is indispensable that the commission be couched in the form here devised, as otherwise it will not be possible to avoid many inconveniences. If they cannot obtain this, or find that the Pope is too much swayed by the Emperor, they shall beg of the Pope to consider the letters of the King and Wolsey here sent, the justice of the King's cause, his services to the Pope, and the danger if he should abandon him, and other arguments of the same tenor;—that the King, in his efforts to serve the Pope, has never considered the Emperor, and therefore cannot expect that he should be defrauded of his expectation through any such fear on the part of the Pope; but if he apprehends danger they are to show him that the King will by no means abandon him, and will use his blood and treasure in the Pope's defence. They are also to insist on the dishonor done to the Holy See if the Pope, through fear of any earthly person, refuse to exercise the justice that is in him, and abandon his friends. If the King cannot obtain justice in this way he will be compelled to seek it elsewhere, and live out of the laws of Holy Church; and, however reluctant, he will be driven to this for the quiet of his conscience.

They are to consider carefully what answer the Pope makes; and if they think that he intends to delay, are to give notice immediately of the same. So much they shall communicate with the Bishop Elect; but they shall of themselves tell the Pope that he cannot well refuse, for the King is resolved to proceed to execution, whether the Pope accedes to his wishes or not; and they shall urge what danger will necessarily accrue to Wolsey if the Pope put this threat into execution. They shall say that Wolsey knows so well the King's mind that as he never can show too much benevolence to those who proceed with him frankly and kindly, so he cannot abhor too much those who are ungrateful. This then is the time for the Pope to bind the heart of the King for ever. If, however, the Pope will not comply, but will offer them a method of procedure according to his own pleasure and authority, they shall say that they are so confounded with his refusal that they know not whether it were not better to return without anything, by which detriment might occur to the Holy See; but knowing Wolsey's devotion to the Holy See, rather than return empty-handed, they will accept the passing such a commission to a legate to be sent for that purpose, who is to be joined in commission with Wolsey, taking care that the writings be sufficient for the purpose required.

But if, through fear of the Emperor, the Pope will grant neither one nor the other, they must do the best to take the second or the third course, which according to their wisdom shall appear the best. For this third course, Gardiner shall remain and the other return. First, a legate is to be joined with Wolsey; if that cannot be, a legate to be sent only; if that cannot be, the commission to be directed to Wolsey and the archbishop of Canterbury, or some other bishop to be joined with him. To advance these purposes they shall insist on the importance of peace between the French king and the Emperor, and the efforts that the King has made in that behalf;—how he has striven to bring the Emperor to reason, and endeavored to do the Pope honor and pleasure, always considering the interests of the latter. The schedule signed by the King's hand, promising to advance the restitution of the towns to the Pope now withheld from him, is not to be shown until they be sure beforehand of the bulls and dispensation in the King's matter. If the bull is not to be used they shall obtain from the Pope a promise in writing of what is to be done for the King's cause. They shall desire that, till peace be had between the Emperor and France, he shall make no show of requiring the restitution of the towns which might disturb the peace. For this purpose it is important that Lautrek should perform some exploit; and if the Emperor continues refractory he must be excommunicated,—in which act the Pope shall be sure to be supported by the King. Gives them further information of what they shall do in France in consequence of letters sent here to the bishop of Bayonne. They shall thank the French king for what he has done in the affairs of the Emperor, and express their master's surprise that his almoner in the Imperial Court, knowing well the Emperor's devices, would use any delay in the intimation of war, and they think that his meaning has been misunderstood. If it be true, he shall be punished. Letters have been sent to him and the bishop of Worcester, informing them that they are to proceed to the said intimation at once. Possibly this delay on the part of the Emperor is only that the Pope may be the mediator of peace, to which the King is willing to consent in the interest of France, and possibly the Pope's mediation might prove beneficial. Further information on this point. They shall also intimate to the King and my Lady how the King, after a long process, being persuaded of the insufficiency of his marriage, and to quiet his conscience, and the scruples raised by many, as probably they have already heard by Staphileus and De Broos, and for other purposes, has sent them on embassy to the Pope, giving such information as they may think requisite. And further, to prevent the Pope falling into the hands of the Emperor, the King has devised certain articles chiefly to further the French king's interests. Instructions touching Modena and Reggio, and their restoration, and what the French king is to do in this matter, whom they shall induce to assent to the articles; requesting him also to write to the Venetians for the delivery of the towns, and to the duke of Ferrara, as the King does.

1528.

They shall also obtain from the French king letters to the Pope, desiring him to further the King's matter, with as many clauses as will make to their purpose, and similarly to Lautrek, which they shall deliver as will best suit their purpose. They shall also say that the King and Wolsey will be glad to know what is Francis's and my Lady's opinion concerning the Diet to be held in Almain, the election of Don Ferdinand, and the aid to be given to the Wayvoda. Further they shall show the Pope a book of the insufficiency of the King's marriage, also of certain indulgences for the King and the translation and canonization of king Henry, using all diligence possible in these matters.

Here follows a passage, somewhat broken, apparently desiring that the Pope should write to queen Katharine, requesting her to conform herself to the King's wishes to forbear all trouble and delay, as, if sentence be not passed against her, the King will have greater reason to deal with her liberally and treat her as princess of Wales, and that the Cardinals should also write to her to similar effect. Signed.

Pp. 65; slightly mutilated. In Tuke's hand.

Cal. D. x. 107.
B. M.

2. Modern copy of the latter portion of the preceding document.
Pp. 6, mutilated.

11 Feb.
R. O.

3914. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Nich. Lysle, one of the most heinous rebels in this country, was taken on Thursday the 6th inst., and executed at a warden court held by Northumberland the next Saturday. In going to the place of execution met Sir Geo. Hamilton, a Scotch gentleman, who was going to the King with letters from the king of Scots which would show his steadfastness to England and determination towards justice. He staid with the Earl that night at Alnwick, and was a witness of the execution. He has fourteen persons in his company. The country has suffered no spoliations since the Earl's first administration of justice, except from the Scots, who invaded it within this se'nnight, to the number of sixty persons, and carried off 160 sheep of Sir Jo. Heron of Chipches, though several of them were slain before they departed. Can get no redress on these Borders; and how the Scots have served Dacre in the West, he has doubtless written. Has a letter from him today, stating that Sir Will. Lisle and his adherents were obliged to submit to the King, having been turned out of Scotland. But this is a mistake. Nich. Lysle confessed at his death that they were supported by Angus, Bothwell and Maxwell, who were against their coming, and that the other twelve in Scotland were aided by them. Perceiving from Dacre's letter the conflict he has had with the Scots, has sent him six pieces of small artillery, and has offered, if the King approve, to meet him in Scotland at any place he may appoint. Alnwick Castle, 11 Feb. Signed.

1528.

H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

11 Feb. 3915. SIR JOHN NEVILL to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Will do the King true service in the office of sheriff, to which he has been admitted. Has seized certain cloths made against the laws, to the undoing of his poor subjects. Most part of West Yorkshire would have agreed with him, but he declared his business was only to execute the laws. Wish to know Wolsey's pleasure, as they have submitted wholly to the King and his Grace. They say if their cloths are taken they are undone, and many will be thrown idle. Advises that they be allowed to utter the cloth they now have till Midsummer day. Supposes they will be at a fine with the King for it. The Cheyt, 11 Feb. Signed: John Neveyll, knyght, scheryff of Zorkeschyer.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.: Sir John Nevile, sheriff of Yorkshire, xj. Februarii 1527.

11 Feb. 3916. CHARLES V. to his AMBASSADOR in FRANCE.

Vesp. C. IV.

226.

B. M.

Justifying himself for his own proceedings, and accusing the king of France of refusing to offer such conditions as the Emperor could accept. The Emperor has often expressed his willingness to restore the French princes on the restitution of certain fortresses, &c.

Complained that the French ambassadors had refused to notify their master of the proposals he had made, or of the justification of his conduct. On the 21st Jan. the said ambassadors took their leave. On the 22nd, received a defiance from the French herald,—a proceeding altogether novel. Complains that, as the King was his prisoner, he had no right to defy him, or accept a challenge from any one else. Has given an explicit answer to the herald, of which he sends a copy. He is to demand an audience, and take leave of the king of France, starting for Bayonne. The bishop of Tarbes and others are in a fortress named Posa, eight leagues hence, and will not move until your return. Is to send notice of the sort of treatment he receives, as by this the Emperor will measure his treatment of the French ambassadors. He will take reparation for the injury he receives. Sends him 500 ducats, to assist him in his journey. Is not to forget to send the courier Guillaume Couste, and despatch the packet, which is for Mendoza in England, with a copy of this. Burgos, 11 Feb. 1528. Signed.

Fr., pp. 6.

1528.

12 Feb.

R. O.

3917. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Insuperimus of grants touching St. Frideswide's. Westm., 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum, several sheets. Seal attached.

12 Feb.

R. O.

3918. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

St. P. vii. 50.

Compliments him on his ability, and is rejoiced to hear of the good disposition of the Pope and St. Quatuor, as expressed in his letters of the 6 Jan. from Bologna. Although the dispensation and commission already granted by the Pope are of no effect, yet, from your constant assertions and those of the bishop of Tortona, the King promises himself success in his suit; otherwise he would be inclined to think that in the dispensation and commission he had been deceived by the Pope. That his Holiness and St. Quatuor may understand that the King's petition has been duly weighed beforehand, my secretary, Dr. Stephen Gardiner, and Edw. Foxe, the King's confidant, are despatched to Rome,—who will show that the King's cause is founded on human and divine law. The bishop of Tortona can add his testimony. London, 12 Feb. 1527. Signed.

Lat. Add. Eudd.

3919. [HENRY VIII.] to the CARD. ST. QUATUOR.

Vit. B. x. 56.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 60.

Has received his letters from the castle of S. Angelo, and has heard from the bp. of Tortona and from Gregory Casale what he has done in the King's cause. Expresses his thanks. Finds that the commission and dispensation lately sent are of no force; and, knowing the wish of the Pope to satisfy him, again writes to request him to grant what will be sufficient. Refers him to the marginal notes appended to the documents, and to Gardiner and Foxe. Urges the reasons for granting his request, and desires the Cardinal to assist him in obtaining it. Desires credence for Gardiner and Foxe.

Draft by Vannes. Lat., pp. 3.

3920. [WOLSEY] to the CARD. ST. QUATUOR.

Vit. B. x. 44.

B. M.

By the dispensation and commission granted by the Pope, the King recognises his paternal affection. Hears from the bishop of Tortona and the Secretary, of the Cardinal's zeal. The King, on examining the commission and dispensation, finds them to be of no effect or authority, but is sure that the Pope granted them, thinking they were sufficient. Fears that the King, unless his request is granted, will despair of obtaining grace from the Vicar of Christ, and seek those remedies which divine and human law suggest, and which will perchance diminish the authority of the Holy See. Begg the Cardinal to give his assistance. The King sends Gardiner and Foxe to obtain a more valid commission and dispensation. Desires credence for them. Promises that no harm shall come from granting the petition.

Draft, Lat., pp. 3. In Vannes' hand.

3921. WOLSEY to CAMPEGGIO.

Vit. B. x. 43.

B. M.

Burnet, iv. 59.

Compliments him on his services to the King. The matter admits of no delay, is so plain as not to admit of discussion, and too righteous to be brought into controversy. You must let the Pope know that the King fully expects not to be disappointed. Refers him for further information to the bishop of Tortona,* Gardiner,† and Foxe.

Draft in Vannes' hand.

* "Terdouensis" — not "Jerdouensis," as in Burnet.

† "intimo meo secretario" — not "servo," as printed by Burnet.

1528.

12 Feb.

3922. SIR THOMAS DESMOND to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. F. XIII.

141.

R. M.

Has received his letter by Master James of Ormonde, whom the King wishes him to maintain and fortify, "and to ware in his corell" (war in his quarrel?); which he has done. By reason thereof, Sir Thomas's cousin, the earl of Desmond, came with a host, and took away his servants' goods and cattle to the castle of Dengarvan. Besieged him there; but he fled by night to Joughall (Youghal), and, with the assistance of the people of the town, has ravaged Sir Thomas's land. Asks in recompence for all the lordships "that the said Earl hawest in the said towne," during the King's pleasure. Desires also a confirmation of his grants by the King's father, that he may be the better able to do him service. At my manor Crossayne, 12 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: Sir Thomas Dessemont, 12 Feb. 1527.

12 Feb.

3923. MONASTERY OF LEEDS, KENT.

R. O.

Receipt given, 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII., by Thos. prior of Our Lady and St. Nicholas, Leeds, Kent, to William, prior of the Charterhouse, London, for 5*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.*, in payment of the debts of Will. Hoopes, now a brother professed at Leeds. Scaled.

13 Feb.

3924. SCOTLAND.

Add. MS.

12,401, f. 26.

B. M.

1. Henry VIII. to James V.

Has received his two letters by Leonard Musgrave and Marchmont Herald, containing his toward answer concerning the apprehension of Sir Wm. Lisle and his accomplices, who are now taken by Henry's officers, and asking Henry to assist in preventing Albany from entering the realm. Commends him for acting thus, and trusts he will not give cause of seeking any other way of administering justice. Trusts that he and his council know how Henry maintained and defended him in his minority. Looks more and more upon their proceedings daily, and will right soon perceive if they do not use the most direct and prudent way. If James will show correspondence of love, Henry, being so firmly knit in perpetual knot with the house of France, will take care that Albany neither enters the realm nor detains any place from him. Wolsey writes more fully to him and to Angus, his chancellor. Greenwich, 13 Feb. Signed and sealed.

P. 1. Add.

R. O.

2. Copy of the above.

R. O.

3. Wolsey to James V.

Has received his letters dated Edinburgh, 7 Jan., expressing his desire for the impeachment of Albany's coming. Has not failed to solicit the matter with the King, who has ordered writings to be despatched accordingly. Hopes James will see justice administered on the Borders, and not allow rebels to be received, as has lately been the case. Westminster, — day of —.

R. O.

4. Henry VIII. to the Earl of Angus.

Has received his letters of the 29th Dec. by Leonard Musgrave, and those of the 7th inst. by Marchmont Herald, about Sir Wm. Lisle, Albany, and the delivery of Dunbar Castle by the French.

Commends his good determination, but has seen no fruit as yet, and the King has been fain to take other ways for repressing the rebels. The sincerity of the Scots will appear by what they do to redress injuries. Will comply with their requests; but if he is treated as heretofore, shall be compelled to take other ways for the surety of his affairs, "for we be not minded in lieu of our kindness to be led by abuses." Trusts that when the King is once at an age to know the importance of his affairs, he will not think himself well served by those who would wilfully cast from him his best friends. Wolsey writes more fully. Greenwich.

1528.

Pp. 2. Headed: Copy of the King's letters to the earl of Angwishe.

13 Feb. 3925. GARDINER and FOX to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Pecock, l. 73.

Arrived at Dover on Tuesday night.* Embarked next day, but were compelled, after getting half seas over, to return, the wind being contrary. Hope to obtain passage this afternoon, and will use all possible diligence. This morning received from Tuke part of the letters contained in our memorial. Expect the rest by Thadeus. Urge that he be sent soon, as we have not received the letters to Worcester and Master Almoner.

Have resolved the French king's promise to Wolsey touching the Pope, and have with us the King's promise, sealed with the signet, as Wolsey commanded. Send the Emperor's last answer to the ambassadors in Spain, of which we retain a copy. As to Wolsey's suggestion that Fox, being the King's councillor and first named in the King's letters, should have the former place, and Gardiner the speech and utterance, they have agreed between them that Gardiner should have pre-eminence, both in place and speech. Dover, 13 Feb.

Hol.,† pp. 2. Add. Endd.: Mr. Stevyns and Mr. Fox, the 13th of February 1527.

13 Feb. 3926. INDICTMENTS in KENT.

R. O.

26 Jan.—John Goldyng, of Glemeforth, entered into a recognizance of 100*l.* to aid the King's constables when required, to bear himself well towards the King and his subjects, and to appear before the Council on the octaves of Hilary next.

Today appeared the jury of Kent, who refused to find a bill of murder and a bill of rescues against Wm. Hoorne, in spite of "pregnant and manifest evidence" produced by the King's solicitor and others. Ric. Clerk, Nic. Pix, Nic. Culter and Wm. Strangborne, whose "frowardness" prevented the bill being found, were committed to the Fleet, 28 Jan. The jury confessed that they would have indicted Hoorne, if it had not been for the four above-named jurors. Another bill is ordered to be made against Hoorne, and a new jury charged. The men of Apaldore must be present at the next assizes to give evidence against Hoorne.

7 Feb.—The case between lord Rochefort and Sir Henry Wyat, touching title of land, is committed to the two chief justices and the chief baron. They have promised the Legate to abide by their decision. The matter between Walter Whiting and another, and Ric. Edwards and another, is committed to Mr. Fitzherberd, justice, Sir John Gifford, and the abbot of Burton.

13 Feb.—The Legate declared openly in the Star Chamber what order was taken touching "minite" (?) causes in this and other courts, to be heard by the justices of assize; "and, in case any of these parties be obstinate, to certify to my [lord] Legate; and such matters as cannot be determined in their circuit, the said justices and other to determine it, if they can, at their own houses." Constance Young was today committed to the Fleet, for "making exclamation" that her husband was slain by Thos. Young, but he is found to be alive, as she confesses. The matter between — Colt and Ric. Higham is committed to the Lord Chief Baron, Sir Thos. More, Mr. Browne, serjeant, and Mr. Makwilliam. If they cannot agree, my Lord will decide it. They are bound, Higham in 1,000 marks, and Colt 500*l.*, to

* 11 Feb.

† Gardiner signs both for himself and Fox.

1528.

INDICTMENTS IN KENT—cont.

bring to the Hospital of the Savoy, to be valued, all goods in their possession by the will of John Colte, except household stuff, cattle and corn, which will be viewed at their houses.

Rede for his penance shall ride about the Palace with papers on his head, after the old manner. Washers, and the others in ward for hunting, shall make fine, according to their offence.

Pp. 4.

14 Feb.
Vit. B. ix. 3.
B. M.

3927. EBERHART VON RISCHACH AND MORELET to Messieurs ———.

Since baron De Horre, Guillaume de Bar[re], and I despatched our man, an Imperial gentleman has come hither, who says that Ferdinand has been obliged by the count of Weyder (the Waiwode) to retreat from Hungary to Vienna. If the Bohemians do not aid him he is likely to be defeated. Mercenary Damps (Mark Sittich of Ems) will not stir without payment for three months. They have not yet all the men they desire, for the princes of the empire are afraid of trusting each other. They had determined to raise 8,000 men in Wirtemberg, and then dared not give them arms, for fear of the Lutherans. Ferdinand, hearing that the Lutheran peasants wished to rise against him, wrote to Mark Sittich Damps to exterminate them; at which count William de Fustenberg, who is a Lutheran, was angry, and left the service of the King. Will write from day to day. Diesshoffen, 14 Feb.

"V Eberhart von Rischach der elter

" Morelet."

Fr., p. 1.

14 Feb.
Galba, B. ix. 111.
B. M.

3928. JOHN HACKET to [WOLSEY].

Since writing last by Tuke, has received none of his. In remembrance of Wolsey's promise at Calais to increase his diets, has taken 100*l.* by exchange from Thos. Leigh, merchant of the Staple, upon the increase of his diets from 19 Oct. last. Leigh writes that he cannot receive any of the money. Has spoken with one of the Emperor's secretaries, who came out of Spain. He says that for two months there has been some secret person with credence from the French king and his mother, who offers to the Emperor that if he would make peace with Francis without the King or Wolsey, Francis would condescend much more to the Emperor in some articles than he can if the King or Wolsey meddle. He did not know what answer the Emperor gave. Some here say we have broken the intercourse with the Emperor's subjects, and the Emperor ought to exact as much custom from Englishmen as the merchants of the Low Countries pay in England, or else the latter ought to pay as little custom as the English do here; that in England one-fifth of their goods is exacted, while here Englishmen pay scarcely 2*d.* in a pound.

We are little beholden to the treasurer-general and some others of the finances, and have lost nothing by Rawystayn's death. "God have his soul; his body was ill disposed, and died with popple . . . *." They also complain that it was at our request, that the lords here, by the Emperor's advice, lowered the price of their gold and syl[ver]; but we, on the contrary, have kept ours at a high inord[inate] price to draw the Emperor's coins and other gold and silver out of these countries. For all this, very reason confounds them in their own arguments.

Except at Calais, our merchants come to and fro as usual, and our gold and silver also, but not so much. Fault is found with our new groats, that some are worth about 1*d.* more than others, which in great quantity might turn to rebuke and damage to the realm. Encloses two groats as an example. This morning, a gentleman of my Lady's household, a friend of his, told him for a certainty that she had received letters from France of the French king's death. It has been often reported untruly, but now Hacket doubts somewhat. If true, fears this people will wax somewhat too "prydy;" but my Lady is always good, loving and hearty. 14 Feb. 1527.

1528.

Received a while ago a letter from gentle Mr. Bryan Tuke, with instructions and informations to know secret matters, like as Sir Thos. Spynelly was wont to do. If there was any man that would answer his letters to Wolsey, or that would inform him what points of secretness Wolsey wishes to know, would do his best to please his Grace. For a general secret has his "wech men," whom he can trust to tell him of any conspiracy or secret conclusion against the King or Wolsey, or anything that might turn to the dishonor of England.

Encloses a letter from Sir Lawrence Stawler, of Noremberghe, who lately came from England. He gives great laud and thanks to the King and Wolsey. Asks that the money due for his diets may be paid to the bearer, Thos. Leigh. Asks Wolsey to write him a word or two.

Idol., pp. 6.

14 Feb.

3929. WM. BOTRYE.

R O.

Particulars of a claim made by Wm. Botrye, of London, mercer, against the earl of Essex, for 329*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*, besides 40*l.* costs of a suit of six years, &c. Dated 14 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 2.

16 Feb.

3930. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, iii.
81.

Wolsey is doing all he can to find this war good, but cannot make it so. The merchants had conspired to come no more into the streets, in order that the peasants, returning without having sold their wools, might raise an insurrection. Wolsey immediately signified to some of the principal of them that it was enough he knew them, and that they knew where the Tower was. They came and cried for mercy, and have promised that at next Wednesday's market there shall not remain a crown's worth of merchandize that they will not buy, whatever price be demanded. But you may be sure he is playing a terrible game, for I believe he is the only Englishman who wishes a war with Flanders. You will see his proposals by the King's letters. Does not know if he has answered well, but thought it unadvisable to oppose him. Did not discuss with him, either, the matter of the ships which he proposed to send back (though I warned him to beware that he did not repent afterwards), for I saw that the affair was quite determined on. I proposed that they should be free, as far as we were concerned, within the jurisdiction of England, that the bons compagnons might live; but he was not satisfied.

Wallop leaves tomorrow. He will visit Francis, and there await his instructions from Germany. They are surprised you have not sent yours hither; and, to say the truth, it is a long delay, considering the cause for which you want them. Wallop must wait there till you have sent them, and they have drawn up others here. He had promised me to send his horses, but they are still here. The reason for his being sent first is to see how Francis is. Be assured that Wolsey and the King his master are in great doubt, and it would be very awkward if Wallop was obliged to make a pretence of seeing him (dissimuler de le voir), which might tend to cool matters (refroidir les affaires).

Since Gardiner's departure Brian Tuets (Tuke), the King's secretary, has written the despatches for Wolsey, which he had begun to do before. There is a Scotch king-of-arms here, who has brought letters from his master, and was to go to France; but they have put him off till now; they say he must await the return of another, whom they have sent to Scotland. Dare not enquire into the subject, for fear of giving suspicion. London, 16 Feb.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

P.S.—Does not write to Madame until he has an answer to his letters. Sends the minute, made in haste, of the “oblations” which he has delivered to Wolsey. Hopes he has not made a mistake, for Wolsey clearly divined the most part of it, at least “à l’avoir de lieu incertain,” for the final oblations and part of the others which were sent hither “vous estant, se remettoient à ce qui estoit déjà accordé.”

French.

16 Feb.

3931. DON INIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. IV.
39°.
B. M.

Sends him a copy of letters he has received from my lady Margaret, expressive of her desire for peace. Wishes to know if he has any reply to make. “Ex hac domo suburbana,” 16 Feb. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.: “Literæ oratoris Cesaris de xvj. Februarii 1528.”

17 Feb.

3932. GARDYNER and FOXE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Pocock, i. 75.

Arrived at Calais, at 8 p.m. on Sunday, after a very troublesome passage. Have already written how they embarked at Dover on the 13th, and were compelled, after passing half seas, to return and remain till Saturday at two in the morning, when the baily of Dover said the passage, though tedious, would “of al lightlywode” be sure, and that they would arrive at Calais that night. “Travayled” the seas all that day and night following, for want of wind. Found ourselves within four miles of the town on Sunday at daybreak. But such a tempest arose, the greatest the mariners ever saw, that we first tried to anchor, then were nearly driven on the coast of Flanders, where, from the advertisements we had at Dover of the Pope’s ambassador, we doubted how we should be received; and at last, by a great effort, managed to land in the ship’s boat, with only two of our servants, within a quarter of a mile of Gravelines, having been two days and nights without food, and seasick. Hear that our ship has arrived today at Dunkirk, much injured in entering the haven. Our horses too are useless. The Pope’s ambassador remains at Dover waiting for passage. Are troubled at not hearing of Thadeus, or of the letters we should have had to be sent to the ambassadors in Spain, as we mean to go on to Paris with all speed. Calais, 17 Feb.

Hol., † pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate’s good grace. Endd.: “Doctor Stephyns and Mr. Fox, concerning their dangerous passage over the sea, of the 17th of February 1527.”

3933. THE SAME to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 52.

To the same effect. Calais, 17 Feb.
Hol. † Add. Endd.

17 Feb.

3934. JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 53.

On our arrival on this side the Tront, which separates Naples from the Pope’s territory, Lautrec sent count Pier de Naver with the Frenchmen, Gascons, and Italians against Laquyla, the chief town of La Browee (Abruzzo); who, after passing great mountains and straits, took by force a strong castle, within 12 miles of the said town. On this the Viceroy and † Gardiner signs both for himself and Foxe.

1528.

one signor Sare Colowne, who were then in Laquyla, abandoned it. Thus we have gained possession of the whole Abruzzo. Adrya, 17 Feb. Signed.

Add. Endd.

17 Feb. 3935. SIR ROB JERNINGHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect.

The Spaniards and lanceknights remain in Rome. Lautrec wishes him to say that he wrote to the King and Wolsey on the 11th, as Jerningham himself did. Adrya, 17 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

17 Feb. 3936. The EARL OF OXFORD, FITZWILLIAM and SIR WILL. KINGSTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The King yesterday delivered to us a bill that had been presented to him, and desired us to report on it. We examined those who presented it, and made relation accordingly. The King was much displeased that such reports of him should have been circulated, and has ordered us to send it to you, as we do now, desiring the immediate apprehension of all concerned, Windsor, Monday, 17 Feb. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. : The 17th of February 1527.

3937. The BUTLERS.

R. O.

Indenture tripartite between Henry VIII. on the one part; dame Ann Seyntleger, widow, and dame Marg. Boleyn, widow, daughters and heirs of Sir Thos. Butler, earl of Ormond, and Thos. Viscount Rochford, son and heir apparent of dame Margaret, and Sir Geo. Seyntleger, son and heir apparent of dame Anne, on the second part; and Sir Pierce Butler, cousin and heir male of the said Earl, and Jas. Butler, his son and heir apparent, on the third part; witnessing an agreement between the parties through the mediation of Wolsey:—that the title of the earl of Ormond, with the annuity of 10*l.* out of the fee farm of Waterford, shall be henceforth at the King's disposal; that Sir Pierce shall be allowed peaceable possession of the manors of Cloncurry and Turvy in Ireland, and the said dame Ann and dame Margaret of the castles and manors of Carryknakgryffen, Roskre, Kilkenny, and a number of others; that dame Ann and dame Margaret grant to farm, to the said Sir Pierce and James his son, the castle of Kilkenny, and other lands on the west side of the river Barowe, in the counties of Kilkenny, Tipperary, and Ormond, for the term of 30 years, at a rent of 40*l.*; that if Sir Pierce Butler, and James, or any of their heirs, do within that time recover possession from the wild Irish of other lands west of the Barowe which should belong to dame Ann and dame Margaret, the said Viscount and Sir George, they shall enjoy them to the end of that term without paying any more rent; that dame Anne, dame Margaret, the said Viscount and Sir George, and their heirs for ever, shall enjoy the castle of Carryknakgryffen, and other lands east of the Barowe, without let or hindrance, except the manors of Cloncurry and Turvy, but that they will grant Sir Pierce and James reasonable leases, a year after the feast of the Annunciation of Our Lady next, &c. Dated 18 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 9.

18 Feb. 3938. STEPHEN GARDINER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Parock, i. 79.

Since his coming to Calais, Mr. Deputy has represented to him the poor state of the town. He is much perplexed what to do if war should break out as expected, especially considering what the captain of Boulogne has written to him, unless Wolsey make provision in time. The Pope's ambassador arrived tonight after a fair passage. Heard from his servants that Thadeus was at Dover. Tomorrow morning Fox and Gardiner start for Paris. Calais, 18 Feb.

1528.

STEPHEN GARDINER to WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: Doctor Stevyns, the 18th of February 1527. Sealed.

18 Feb.

3939. LOUISE OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

[Calig. E. 1.2]

iv. 130.

B. M.

vous entendez ces ire myeulx que tout autre que l'avez longuement en disput[e] ant vous et croy fermement par le bon sens et entendement [que] vous avez, que vous savez et congnoissez entierement que notre dit [seign]eur et filz qui est prince de foy et honneur na este aucunement [vio]lateur dicelluy traicte, et qu'il eust este bien contant que leslu [e]n Empereur eust voullu vivre avec luy, sans fiction, selon les [tr]aictes entre eulx faictz, ce que na voullu toutesfoiz faire, donnant a congnoistre apres qu'est venu audessous de ce que voullait faire, soubz la faveur de mondit seigneur et filz, que les traictes par luy faictz estoient deceptifs et fainetz, et si ne jamais cesse cri le Roy votre maistre et vous savez de conspirer secretement contre mondit seigneur et filz," and finally has challenged him, which has been the cause of wars between them. There has been no transgression on her son's part, but only on the Emperor's. For this reason letters patent were given to the Chancellor when he went to Calais to ask assistance according to the treaty of London; but he did not use them, as Wolsey said to the whole assembly that his master would not give any assistance on account of the reasons alleged on both sides. Her son has, however, sent them to his ambassadors to be presented to the King and Cardinal, feeling sure that they will assist him, who has always kept the treaties, against the violator of them. As to the pence he writes of, "mon dit seigneur et filz ayme trop myeulx que le f du Roy votre maistre et de vous que de tous a[utres] luy garderez son honneur et bon droict et la que a ces fins a tenu l'espace de troys moys a Callays qui se sont tousjours mis en devoir a toutes bonnes choses, combien savez que les amb[assadeurs] de l'empereur ne layent jamais voullu faire n encores mon dit seigneur et filz a envoye procura[ti]on qui sont devers le Roy votre maistre pour capituller et ce pour luy complaire et gratiffier et de ma autant qu'il m'est possible quelle feust bien faicte e bonne seurete a lhonneur de Dieu et tranquillite de t[out le monde]." Wolsey advises a truce, during which a pence might be made; but if so, the duke of Bari would establish himself in Milan, and the castles held by her son in the duchy would become short of victuals, and his troops be forced to retire, so that it would not be even in the Emperor's power to restore him when peace was concluded. Her son's army is now ready on both sides of the mountains, by sea and land, and it would be too expensive to disband it, and levy another. The truce would merely allow the Emperor time to strengthen himself to continue the war. Will send one of her servants to him in a few days. St. Germain en Laye, 18 Feb. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, pp. 3. Add.: Mons. le Legat d'Angleterre.

18 Feb.

3940. CLARENCIEUX to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv.
231.

B. M.

On 22 Jan. Guyenne and I made declaration of war against the Emperor, as he was sitting in a great hall, "in the siege royal, accompanied with all the nobles and gentlemen of his court." That done, he desired a copy of the declaration, stating that he would make answer in writing, which Lallemand in his lodging read openly before many. He also delivered to each of us a chain of gold worth 500 ducats. I replied that I was astonished that the Emperor put in his answers to articles more than was declared by us, "and that it was shamefully couched, in the great reproach of the King" and of your Grace, from whom he had received so much kindness, at his great need. I told the Chancellor, if it was to be printed, that these faults ought to be amended. †Lallemand showed me that it was not his fault, and let me see the minutes in the Chancellor's own hand, "and said to me also, where he recited matters of the papality, that the same villain Chancellor had made the greatest suits and means that the Emperor should have gone into Italy with a great army, to the intent that he should have been made Pope by force, and that it may fortune the great mischief which has been done in Rome hath been by his procurement, and went into Italy in hope to be Pope."† The Emperor has sent a gentleman to England, named Du Montfort, the greatest minion of the Chancellor, to state that I had no cause for declaring war. The King's ambassadors would have sent letters by him, but the Chancellor insisted they should be written according to his pleasure. Beaumain is sent with the fleet to Flanders, to cruise, it is said, between Ireland and Scotland. I have sent notice into France, to have them met by the navy of Bretagne. Great offers have been made to the German League to render assistance. Du Montfort is instructed, on his arrival in London, to practise with the merchants of the Steelyard, and turn them to the Emperor's side. Sends certain instructions he has received from the Almoner.

1528.

I have also brought with me letters in cipher, which I have carried in clews of silk, "wherefore they be evil to read." Sends the Emperor's answer to the kings of France and England, a copy of which he has transmitted to the Master of the Rolls, and also a copy of the Almoner's instructions. Bayonne, 18 Feb.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

3941. REPORT FROM FRANCE.

R O.

"My Lady made much of the report of the prince of Orange's man made of the Pope's holiness in delaying the King's matter, greatly charging the Pope therewith. They be also right sore discontented with the Pope, and have him in no small jealousy here, upon what ground we cannot tell. As for Monford's reports here of such favors as the Emperor, and specially they of Flanders, should have of the King's highness and of your Grace, my Lady saith she knoweth well enough that the said Monford hath made those reports only to make suspicion, and to bring men into some jealousy, which neither he nor ten such as he is shall be able to do, with many words of the great and assured hope and trust they have of the continuance of this steadfast and unfeigned friendship and amity that is between the King's highness and the King her son."

In Clerk's hand, pp. 2.

18 Feb.

3942. M[ARINO] GRIMANI CARD. [S. VITALIS] to WOLSEY.

VII. B. ix. 77.

B. M.

Informs him of his promotion to the cardinalate, and assures him of his devotion to himself and the King. Venice, 18 Feb. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Address pasted on.

20 Feb.

3943. J. RUSSELL to [WOLSEY].

Vesp. F. xiii.

150.

B. M.

Has told the King of [Wolsey's] having examined Francis Phylippes and Vyves in the gentlest manner he could without force, thinking that this mode was best for the King's honor. The King is satisfied with the course † Apostyled in the margin by Wolsey.

1528.

J. RUSSELL to [WOLSEY]—cont.

[Wolsey] intends to adopt to prevent their going out of London or visiting the court. "He has read Vyves pystelle where yn he wryttes of jus gentium (jus gentium); yn that hys mageste welle wrytt hys mynde under the sayde pystelle ande sende hytt to your Grase." Windsor, 20 Feb.

Hol., p. 1.

20 Feb. 3944. ERASMUS to PACE.

Er. Ep. p. 1060.

Is delighted to hear that Pace has been rescued from the troublesome waves of diplomacy, and restored to his country and the cultivation of the Muses. Is glad to find that he has added the study of Hebrew to his former acquirements. Is sending at this time his friend Quirinus into England,—first, to put an end to the robbery of a most wicked impostor; secondly, to ascertain whether he can commodiously accept the invitation of the Archbishop and the King to visit England. Basle, 20 Feb. 1528.

Lat.

3945. HEADS OF A TREATY.

Vit. B. xiv. 5.

B. M.

"In

Suspensio armorum e unum annum, et per

Et quia non adest hic
Christianissimo regi termin

Fiat restitutio locorum hinc inde
De Senensibus, et in aliis articulis

A die stipulationis restituantur res innovatæ p Generalis venia ab utraque parte, iis tamen exceptis [qui] in Roma arma sumpserunt.

Resarciantur offensæ et damna, si quod fieret hinc inde, d

Non recipiantur navigia offensiva.
Mutua statuum defensio, intelligendo statum Imperatoris esse . et Siciliam. Senæ et Florentia intelligantur conjunctæ Sedi [Apostolica].

Dentur transitus et commentus in casu defensionis et non offen[sionis].
Si in Anglia fuisset conclusa pax aut induciæ, præferantu[r]

Serenissimus Angliæ Rex sit fidejussor, conservator et interpret Nomina confederatorum et nominandorum pro parte cujuscunque

.
Mutilated. Modern marginal note: 20 Feb. Roma.

21 Feb. 3946. SIR ROBERT WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Wrote last yesterday, enclosing five letters in French received that day. Sends now a letter from one of his spies as to what the French have done in Bredmarde. Last night and today there came a good number of merchant adventurers out of Flanders, who say they were well treated everywhere. Calais, 21 Feb. 1527.

P.S.—Thinks the news in his last must be "evil-fashioned leasing," as the adventurers heard nothing of it.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: "xx. Februarii."

22 Feb. 3947. ITALY.

R. O.

22 Feb.—Lautrec is pleased at the Pope's intention of sending the bishop of Pistoja to France and thence to Spain, for when the Emperor has refused fair terms, he can through him declare open war, which he is very anxious for the kings of France and England to approve of, and has written letters on the subject to the former. He praises also the delay caused by the Pope. He is proceeding slowly to the kingdom of Naples, crossed the Trento on the 9th or 10th Feb. with his whole army, and six days after entering the enemies' country reduced the whole of the Abruzzi without meeting with any resistance. The viceroy of Aquila fled on the approach of Peter of Navarro, who has taken possession of the town. The bishop of Modling (Metuke), who last year most strenuously supported the French, is with Lautrec, and has already done him great service.

1528.

On Feb. 17, Lautrec halted at Adria, where he intended to leave a viceroy, but what his route would then be was not known. Almost everyone thinks it certain that, if he hastens on to Naples, he will gain the larger part of the kingdom, and perhaps even the city, before the Spaniards can send assistance, as they left Rome on the 17th for S. Germano. On that day the marquis of Guasto, who had left Rome with the vanguard two days before, was waiting at Anagni for the rest of the forces which had been left to take Val Montone. This town was taken on account of the lack of powder. Count S. Baptista was made prisoner, but set free by Julio Colonna, his father-in-law. It is generally asserted that the Spaniards will fight, and intend to leave their guns behind, that they may meet Lautrec the sooner.

Hears from Naples that the citizens are in great commotion, partly from fear, partly from hope, and partly from want of necessities. They do not intend to admit the Imperial soldiers. The fleet would have been a great assistance, if it had not returned from Sardinia so injured.

There is an increasing report that immense forces are being collected in Germany against the French.

The Pope is very anxious to know about the mission of the bishop of Pistoja. After Mariotti's departure, received a copy of the King's and Wolsey's letters to Lautrec in commendation of the Holy See.

About Ravenna and Cervin, though much is promised, nothing is done. The Pope is in great suspense. Begs him to speak for his Holiness to the King and Wolsey.

Lat., pp. 2.

22 Feb.

3948. SIR ROBERT JERNINGHAM to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. ix. 57.

B. M.

Received his letter dated 7th last month of January, and "I have moved M. de Lautrec to himself with his army to the expulsion of the Imperials, showing unto him, on the behalf of your said Grace, that the tract in sending answer to the charge of Baaarde is to be supposed only done to hear of the successes of Italy, and in the mean season to reinforce the Emperor's army there; in the which the said M. de Lautrec taketh like opinion, having thereunto special regard, and also trusting so to work that [the] Emperor's purpose in that behalf shall take small effect." He is always moving his forces about, sometimes as much as twenty miles a day.

Has required Lautrec to have consideration in repairing the affairs of Rome, and the restoration of such towns and patrimonies as have been taken from the Pope. He replied that as, in conformity with Wolsey's former letters, he had not failed to restore some of them, neither will he now; advertising the writer that the Venetians withhold from the Pope Ravane and Cervyn. He therefore wishes Wolsey would urge their surrender upon the Venetian ambassador now in England, and exhort the French king to write letters in that behalf. Lautrec expresses his thanks that Wolsey has promoted his interests with the kings of France and England. If there is any default the chancellor of France is the chief cause of it. The Spaniards and lanceknights have left Rome in order to give us battle. Lanchane, 22 Feb. Signed.

Pp. 2, mutilated.

1528.

22 Feb.

R. O.

3949. GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

After recovering Rimini for the Pope, Lautrec went on to Lauretum. His ordnance followed slowly, owing to the winter. He waited some days at the river Truentinum, and sent Peter of Navarre to Aquila; then went on to Atri, where he learned that one of the sons of the counts at Aquila (unum ex filiis comitum Aquila), when Peter of Navarre was within a day's march of Aquila, and the Viceroy had fled to the Abruzzi, had entered the city with French standards, and delivered it to Peter of Navarre. The other towns of the district then submitted. The Imperialists, on obtaining a certain sum from their leaders, quitted Rome on the 17th Feb. Their leaders also gave hostages that they would place Capua in their hands as a security for other promises. They have taken their course through the Campagna to protect Naples, Capua, and Gaeta, the only towns they can be in time to rescue. After their departure the abbot of Farfa put to death every Spanish or German he could find belonging to the Court. Campeggio is set at liberty, and all who belong to the Court are going back to Rome. Is very uncomfortable at not having received an answer from Wolsey to the letters he gave to Taddeo. When I was ill some days ago I wished to speak to the Pope about your letters of the 7th Jan., and to be with Longueville, the French ambassador. I got worse in consequence; but I hope shortly to be restored. Orvieto, 22 Feb. 1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

22 Feb.

Lamb. MS. 608.

f. 121.

Tit. B. xi. 334.

B. M.

3950. CREATION of PIERCE BUTLER as EARL OF OSSORY.

See Carew Calendar, i. 37.

23 Feb.

Le Grand, iii.

85.

3951. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

If you don't comply with the demands of the English I fear your affairs will not go well. You may be sure Wolsey will do all he can. What gives him most anxiety is that those who desire to catch him tripping are very glad the people cry out "Murder"; and some would like to see everything go wrong, that they might say, "See what the Legate has done." Most part of those who, when you were here, were urgent for war with the Emperor, now say strange things; but I think if you do what Wolsey wishes, it will shut their mouths; otherwise, though his will is good, and his influence great, I fear he would not dare put it in hazard. It is no small expence to maintain a thing against all others, and be in the wrong, or seem so to those who look nearest, though the great majority only think of what is actually before their eyes. Wolsey does not wish you to withdraw or give up, but to do it immediately; and if you put off, I fear the remedy will be too late, for you know the mischief that would occur if we fought together. It would require new plans and practices, and a whole summer would be spent before things were in order. Moreover, you would encourage the Emperor, and I doubt if you would ever get the English again to accord to you what they have done. I know what it is that made the Legate say that Latin word which I have mentioned in my letters to the King, for he is foresighted, and I am sure is very sorry when the affairs of France do not go as he desires. I hear that in Flanders they are making naval preparations, I suppose owing to the alarm they have had about these prizes, which, by all I can see, are not such great matter as they think at London.

Hopes if it be ill taken that he is here for the cause for which he has come, he may, if possible, be recalled; for the fear of failing has made him fail. Has given orders at Dover that if anything come for him it may be sent hither, or to wherever he has gone. Wonders that he has been fifteen days without news from France,—a thing which is taken strangely here, and they speak strangely of the health of Francis. Has excused it on the plea that they are waiting news from Spain. Sandwich, 23 Feb.

1528.

P.S.—This morning the booty taken by the French from the Flemings was arrested at the ports, and seemingly will have to be restored.

French.

23 Feb.

3952 H. ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN and PATRICK BERMINGHAM, Justice, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. II. 126.

The land has suffered great losses this winter;—this part of the Englishry from the absence of Kildare, and the counties of Kilkenny and Tipperary by great troubles among themselves, which might have been adjusted if Ormond had been at home. It is now reported that Kildare has been sent to the Tower for some late misdemeanors. If so, they are unknown to us, and it is all the more need to provide for the defence of this land; for the Vice-deputy has no power, and oppresses the people more than Kildare did, as he has no great lands of his own, and the subsidy cannot be got till it is granted by Parliament. James Butler has been at great pains for the apprehension of the unhappy earl of Decimon, whom it will be hard to take except by stratagem. Wolsey is, doubtless, aware of the lamentable decay of this land, both in good Christianity and in other things, for lack of good prelates and curates in the Church. He would do well to promote good men to bishoprics to be examples. The diocese of Meath, which is large, and the richest in this country, is in ruin, both spiritually and temporally, by the Bishop's absence. Thinks some good man should be provided for it, as it is said that the Bishop will not return. Dublin, 23 Feb. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add. Endd.: The archbishop of Dublin, the 23 Feb. 1527.

24 Feb.

3953 SIR JOHN FITZGERALD to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has not only suffered great injuries from the earl of Desmond, but "have as well seched with my pusanse the maner of Dongarvan as others dūd to my grette costs and damages contēnuallie unto the tyme ve derven the sayd Erle unto the mayn see yn serteyn Englyshe vessels," which have landed at Yeughall with as large a company as he could carry. The mayor and burghs, being the writer's neighbours, have requested him to inform the King of the truth. The Earl came suddenly at full sea into the town, the water gates not having been fastened, through mere negligence, not malice. Had it been otherwise, would have revenged his injuries upon them. The inhabitants have given assurance to James Butler, Cormok Oge, and the writer, that they will give no support to the Earl, but invade them to the utmost of their power. Hopes the King will therefore pardon them. Dromany, 24 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

24 Feb.

3954. GARDINER and FOXE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 34.

Left Calais on Wednesday. Arrived at Paris on Friday, but the French king was at St. Germain's, where the Master of the Rolls was in attendance. Not being able to get audience before Monday, stayed in Paris inquiring for Staphylæus, and making arrangements for our journey. Delivered to Staphylæus Wolsey's letters, and asked him what were the French king's feelings. He told us that Francis and my Lady had commanded him to hasten to Rome, and look to the King's business. We told him that your Majesty had desired Francis to provide him with a good bishopric in the event of his accomplishing his promise. On Sunday to Poissy, where we communicated our charge to the Master of the Rolls. This day we had audience. Found the King recovered of his sickness, but suffering from the impediment of his speech. Have written an account of the interview to Wolsey. He told us he had dispatched Staphylæus to Rome for the King's matter, and would write to the Pope and Lautrec whatever we wished. Are promised an interview with my Lady tomorrow. Poissy, 24 Feb. *Signed,

1528.

GARDINER and FOXE to HENRY VIII.—cont.

Hol. Add. Endd.

Feb.

3955. GARDINER and FOX to WOLSEY.

Harl. MS.
 419, f. 69 b.
 B. M.
 Pocock, i. 82.

Ask for instructions, as the French king's promise to the Pope is somewhat different to what is already passed by the King. Request him to thank the Master of the Rolls for his kind reception of them, and for lending them his horses. Gardiner delivered Wolsey's letters and tokens to the dean of Wells, who made them dine and sup with him. He is honorably served, and has a greater household than Wolsey appointed; but Lupset says none of them could be spared. He is marvellously well lodged, and studies very diligently. Ask Wolsey to let the Dean know they have spoken of him.

Copy, p. 1.

3956. TAYLER, GARDINER, and FOX to [WOLSEY].

Harl. 419,
 f. 68.
 B. M.
 Pocock, i. 79.

" . . . of Mons. de Lautrec, and that there is appearance of victory there, sheweth himself, by answer made to the said gentleman to be made to the French king, much more prone to adhere to the League than he was before, and desireth not to b[e] assured of so many things, ne in such special manner as the prothonotary Gambara had obtained of the King's highness there, like as he said he would advertise your highness by Mons. Moret," whom he sends to England for that and other matters. He (the French king) says that he will satisfy the Pope's desire in all points; but since to pass his promise as it was passed there might cause much broilery, and the Pope does not now desire it, he thinks it good to counsel Wolsey again. Thus he takes away by this answer all the reasons we had shown him to pass the said promise, as Gambara confessed when we showed it him. Gambara now denies that the Pope had sent any such word, but Francis affirms that he has, and will inform Wolsey of it by Moret. This stayed our suit, for Francis assured us that he would do what would content the Pope, and that his Holiness would be content with less. Asked him to grant safe-conduct to the person sent by the Pope to the Emperor to treat of peace, and in case of refusal "to denounce [him as] his Holiness' enemy." He answered that, considering the intimation was past, he would do nothing but by the consent of the King and Wolsey. Said that they both thought the Pope should experiment such ways of peace, and also that the Pope's denunciation would do much good, but that cannot be unless the Pope first tries ways of peace. The King answered that that was true, but still he would detain the nuncio sent to the Emperor till he heard again from Wolsey. On this took their leave. While at the court Tayler received Wolsey's letters of the 20th inst., with a letter to the Great Master, of which Tayler declared the contents to the King. He said, in reply, that he had heard from the bishop of Bayonne of the complaints made by merchants to Wolsey about his men of war, and said that the Bishop had come to Sandwich to attend to them, though he had no commission to do so; he would gladly win the hearts of the English merchants, and do what might please Wolsey and the King; but as the Emperor, since the intimation, has taken several of his subjects on the Spanish coasts, he must also take some of the Emperor's

* Both signatures are in Gardiner's hand.

1528.

subjects as pledges to obtain restitution. He is content that Wolsey shall appoint four Englishmen to reside on the coasts of Normandy, Picardy, Gascony and Brittany to receive the prizes, and send home all that they find belong to Englishmen, and the rest also if the Emperor will do the like. He is ready to agree with the Emperor for a term during which the merchants can withdraw their goods; and will follow Wolsey's advice concerning English goods in Flemish ships if the Emperor will do the like. Moret has full instructions.

Gardiner and Fox went to Paris that night, intending to continue their journey to the Pope next morning, and they left instructions with Tayler. Told the prothonetary Gambara of their leaving, and the answer of the French king. He desired them to tell Wolsey that he thought the duke of Ferrara would be to the See Apostolic as Helen was to Troy.

Copy, pp. 3.

Feb. 3957. HENRY VIII.

R. T. 137.

R. O.

Letters by which he undertakes, in concert with Francis I., to make common cause with the Pope against the Emperor with all his power; to receive his Holiness in England, if driven from Italy, and make him an allowance to support his dignity; to help him to recover his old authority, and to regain Ravenna and the other cities detained by the Venetians and the duke of Ferrara. Greenwich, — Feb. 1527, 19 Hen. VIII.

Lat., copy, pp. 2.

24 Feb. 3958. [SIR ROBERT WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 137.

B. M.

"[May it please] your g[race, on] I received a letter from John Gr[esham] [by the] which he advised me that he and divers o[thir] ben stopped and retained in Newport in Flanders," and asking me to write to the Bayly, Borgmaster and Scabyns for his release; which he has done. Hearing from the messenger that there were also English mer[chants] detained at Dunkirk on their way to Antwerp, wrote to the Borgmaster there, and expects to have an answer tomorrow. As the Emperor's towns had heard of the detention of their hoys and other vessels in the Thames, but not of their release, has informed them thereof, and that they can pass and repass as before, "and furthermore that [no war] shall be begun betwixt the King and the Emperor yet, the intendeth not to violate the treaty of intercourse which [hath been] observed betwixt the houses of England and Borgayne, [for that no] sawte be in themselves; also I esteem that on the sea coast be grieved to hear that anchor at Margate, and part of the d hyere on Saturday at afternoon yet come over, he departed hence this on post horses. Also yesterday in the afternoon Ma[ster] Noriown arrived here, also the lieutenant of the Staple, [to the] rejoyce and comfort of the retinue here." The counell and retinue, knowing that their relief comes from the King's liberality and Wolsey's contemplation, are as grateful as if they had been delivered from a painful prison. Calais, 24 Feb. 1527.

Hol., pp. 2, mutilated.

24 Feb. 3959. MARGARET OF SAVOY to the IMPERIAL AMBASSADOR† in ENGLAND.

Le Glay,
Négoc. entre la France et l'Autriche,
II. 670.

Has received his letters of the 12th, 14th, and 16th inst., and is much surprised at his detention at the instigation of the French ambassador. Would never have thought that the privileges and immunities of ambassadors would have been violated in a court so renowned as that of England, especially as the Emperor has never sought any quarrel with England, but has done all in his power to maintain the ancient friendship between Spain, England and Burgundy. If he has received her letters from Brussels, he will have seen that the Emperor is content, in Henry's favor, to condescend to most of the offers made to him, however different from the treaty of Madrid, provided Francis will perform his promises. He offered to give hostages to Henry that the French princes should be delivered immediately on the fulfilment of these promises. Notwithstanding this, the French and English ambassadors have proclaimed war, without prefixing any term, as is customary, and now wish to retire. For this reason, and because his own ambassadors in France were not aware of this, he detained them honorably, without the rigor and dishonor shown to his ambassadors in England and France, who were treated like criminals, although he has shown kindness to the English ambassadors, telling them of the affection he bears their master, and that he never thought to enter into a war against him. Desires him to remonstrate.

† Inigo Mendoza.

1528.

MARGARET OF SAVOY to the IMPERIAL AMBASSADOR in ENGLAND—cont.

Is surprised at the report that libels and seditious articles are circulated to animate English subjects against the Emperor. Hopes the King and Legate will see to it. Will send his letters to the Emperor, and write to Rome as he desires, and send him news of the answers on their arrival. As to the Legate's desire for the continuation of the intercourse and commerce between England and the Low Countries, has no desire to the contrary. Will see what news the herald brings, and answer accordingly. Has before informed him of the plunder committed by the French within the last fortnight. They have been the first to break the peace; for which reason the king of England and the Legate ought to aid the Emperor as the first invaded. He is to state this, and send word what answer he receives. Sends this open, and without cipher, that they may not keep it from him. Wishes them to see it. Malines, 24 Feb.

Fr.

24 Feb.

3960. ROB. RIDLEY, Priest, to HENRY GOLD.

Cleop. E. v.
363 b.
B. M.

Criticises severely "this common and vulgar translation of the New Testament into English, done by Mr. William Hichyns, otherwise called Mr. W. Tyndale, and Frear William Roy," whom he denounces as heretics and apostates, as proved both by their familiarity with Luther and his disciples, and by their commentaries on Matthew and Mark in the first print, their preface to the second print, and their introduction to the Epistle to the Romans. No one who receives such a translation can be a true son of the Church. The preface to the first print is mere phrensy; he says evangelium is nothing but dulcis promissio gratie, so that penitentiam agite, &c., are not parts of it. Gives instances of mistranslation. "I would that ye should have seen my Lord's books. As for the translation in Franche without any postille, it is for certain condemned in Paris decreto publico, though it be truly done,—condemned, I say, that it shall not be lawful to publish it to every layman,—quorum labia custo. sc.; and so it was in the old law, and in the time of the Apostles. Vide Sutores de Translatione Biblia." There are not three lines without fault in all the work; but he has not the book to mark them out. Wishes Gold had had leisure to do it. "Vale in all haste."

P.S.—Notes the translators' animus against scholastic theology in translating Stultas questiones decita, "Beware of foolish problems or questions in the schools," or words to the same effect. "Shew ye to the people that if any be of so proud and stubborn stomach that he will believe there is no fault, no error, except it be declared to him that he may see it, let him come hither to my Lord which hath profoundly examined all, and he shall hear and see errors, except that he be blind, and have no eyes." 24 Feb.

1528.

The translation is already condemned by consent of the learned, and ordered to be burnt, both here and beyond sea. "Show the people that ye be come to declare unto them that certain books be condemned by the counsel and profound examination of the prelates and fathers of the Church."

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To Master Henry Golde, chaplain to my lord of Canterbury.

. At the foot of the first page, in a different hand, are these words: Master Gold, I pray you be good to this pore whoman, Gylbartes whyff, as yet your tenawnt.

24 Feb. 3961. JOHN HIGDON to THOMAS BYRTON.

R. O.

Begs him to deliver the enclosed to Cromwell, containing the valor of the prebend and parsonage of Blawbery. Is to tell Wolsey that Higdon has made ready the book for the reformation of the statutes of his college. Cannot accept the prebend of Whytwange, intended by Wolsey for the dean of his college, except he may exchange his prebend of Wyghton, as it is not lawful. Wolsey proposed that he should permute his prebend with Mr. Sydnor, parson of Wytnay. Describes the advantages of each. If Wolsey were content "that I might depart from his college, being at my liberty, I would not leave my prebend of Wyghton for his parsonage of Wytnay." But if he continued in the college, Wytnay will be necessary for him. Trusts to have such provision of hay in Hanborough, "that my Lord's grace shall have carriage of his own, and to accelerate the building of his college" shorter by three years than it should have been. Would like to be at Easter next at York, to view the parsonage of Rudby and the lands of Kexby, lately given by Wolsey to the college; and so make a progress through Leicestershire, &c., and home before Whitsunday. After Trinity Sunday, to visit Calcey, Beygham, and Tornelbyrge (see), and so to London, and there tarry for the reformation of the college statutes, and make a substantial statute for the good ordering of the ministers of the chapel; for divers of them are very negligent, and often absent, especially from matins and the mass of requiem "daily both in holidays, and also from matins in principal feasts." Wishes a statute for the choir, and a fine of 2*d.* for absence from matins, from prime 1*d.*, from high mass 2*d.*, from evening 1*d.*, from compline and the hours $\frac{1}{2}$ d., holy water on Sundays $\frac{1}{2}$ d., from procession 2*d.*; on holidays, "double perdition," &c. Oxford, 24 Feb.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my right welbeloved friend Mr. Thomas Byrton, chaplain to my lord Cardinal's grace, at Westminster; or, in his absence, to Mr. Thomas Cromwell; or to John Browning in Flete Street, to deliver to Mr. Byrton or Mr. Cromwell.

Endd.

24 Feb. 3962. DR. JOHN LONDON to [the BISHOP OF LINCOLN].

R. O.

Foss. v. App.
(new ed.)

Mr. Dean [Higdon] at his coming home brought secret commandment from my lord Cardinal to attach Garrat at one Radley's house at Oxford, and send him up secretly. Saturday last he was taken by the commissary, who intended sending him next morning to my Lord by one of the proctors and Mr. Standiche. As the commissary was at evening Garrat escaped, went to Gloucester College, and took a secular scholar's coat. The scholar, on his examination, "hath confessed his books of heresy," and is in prison. This Monday, the vigil of St. Matthias, we searched Radley's house, and found some of Garrat's books. We find that he has distributed many books among the scholars. One of them, named John Mayow, had a table of books, of which I send you a copy. The original is in Garrat's purse. For the books "in the end of the next leaf" we gave Garrat 16*s.* Garrat came to Oxford on Christmas eve, and has been privily doing much hurt ever since. The commissary, "being in extreme pensiveness," caused a figure to be made by one expert in astronomy, "and his judgment doth continually persist upon this, that he fled in a tawny coat south-eastward, and is in the middle of London." Of which I thought good to send you information. Oxford, the vigil of St. Matthias.

1528.

Dr. JOHN LONDON to [the BISHOP OF LINCOLN]—cont.

ii. Anthony Dalaber helped to convey Garrat away, and received from him certain books. He became acquainted with him at Radley's house, one of the singing men in the college. He says he bought of Nicholas, bookseller in St. Paul's churchyard, the Farragines Lambertii. You will do good to advertise the Cardinal "what poison these booksellers bringeth into England." He read with Clerk in Oxford. Wishes to know what is to be done with the scholars. One is called Byrde, two are monks of Bury, and the other of Glastonbury.

iii. Copy of the "table" or list found with John Mayew of the books which he says Garret counselled him to buy.

iv. List of the "books taken with one scholar of Mr. Garrett."

Hol.

3963. THOMAS GARRET or GARRARD.

Foxt, v. 431.

Account of him while at Oxford.

This narrative is referred to the proctorship of Ball of Merton and Cole of Magdalen College. The persons mentioned in it are Dr. Cottisford, commissary, Dr. London, warden of New College, and Dr. Higden, dean of Frideswide's, who gave information to the Cardinal. The followers of Garret were Anthony Dalaber, clk., apparently of Cardinal's College, Edon, fellow of Magdalen, Sir Fitz James, of Alban Hall, Sir Diet, of Corpus Christi, Taverner, a singing man. Among others, mention is made of Sumner and Bets, canons of Christchurch, and one Udal; Anthony Dunston, monk of Westminster, now bishop of Llandaff.*

Foxt, v. 426.

2. Articles objected against Thomas Garret, M.A., some time curate of the parish of All Hallows in Honey Lane.†

For these articles (says Foxt) he abjured before Cuthbert bishop of London, John bishop of Lincoln, and John bishop of Bath and Wells.

24 Feb.

R. O.

3964. W. ABBOT OF BARDENEY to HENNEAGE.

The prior of Spalding is dead. Begs Henneage to solicit the Cardinal in favor of "my prior" as his successor. Will be glad to do any pleasure to my Lord that shall be offered for it. A more able man could not be got, and all worshipful men both in Kesten and Lyndesey desire his promotion. 24 Feb.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Master Thomas Hennage, of the King's Privy Chamber. Endd.

* Anthony Kitchen or Dunston elected bishop of Llandaff, 1545; died, 1556. It is probable, therefore, from this and the general style of the document, that it was written after the reign of Henry VIII., perhaps in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The whole seems to me to have been dramatized by Foxt, who, as usual, has not been very accurate about the chronology.

† It appears that Garret was not made parson of Honey Lane until 14 June 1537, when the rectory was resigned by Laurence Cook. Thomas Forman, who is mentioned in connection with Garret, held the rectory from 7 Feb. 1534 to 31 Oct. 1538.

1528.

25 Feb.

R. O.

3965 MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

In behalf of the bearer, Castillon, whom Francis sends to England with a message to Wolsey. St. Germain en Laye, 25 Feb. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Endd.

25 Feb.

Galles, R. 13.

14.

B. M.

3966 MARGARET OF SAVOY to [HACKET].

"Mons. l'ambassadeur." Wrote to him from Brussels what the Emperor had told her about the departure of the French ambassadors, but fears he has not received her letter, as he does not mention it. Tells it him afresh, lest the French should prejudice the King and Wolsey against the Emperor. After the Emperor had set the King of France free, and made him his brother-in-law and heir apparent, the King refused to keep his promises, and has attacked his Majesty in Italy by land and sea. Although the Emperor has no reason to relax any of the conditions, for the sake of pleasing the King and Wolsey, and of tranquillity, he has been content to give up the restitution of Burgundy, taking the money which the King offered him.

The only difficulty is now, that the Emperor demands the recall of the army in Italy, and the restitution of Genoa, before the delivery of the children: but the French ambassadors say they ought to be delivered first. His Majesty then offered to give Henry hostages such as were given for Tournay for the delivery of the children. This offer the ambassadors refused, and took leave of the Emperor on Jan. 28, notifying that on the next day he would be defied by the King. This the Emperor thinks a very new thing, for a defiance to be made after six years of war, especially as he is still the Emperor's prisoner. There is no need for him to cover his ill will by the pretence of fighting for the recovery of his children, which depends only upon the fulfilment of his promises.

The Emperor has a better cause than before. He has not yet suffered any feat of war to be done upon French subjects, but the French have invaded Sardinia, and put his ambassador in prison. The Emperor has, therefore, put under arrest the French ambassadors, treating them well, until his own has returned. These things show that Francis has no wish for peace, and that the money he has raised from his subjects has been only by pretence for the delivery of his children. The Emperor is sending an ambassador to England. Hears that words against the Emperor are being circulated in England, which she trusts Wolsey will remedy. Has never had any intention of interfering with the mercantile intercourse between the English and these countries. Malines, 25 Feb. 1527. Signed.

Fr., pp. 4. Endorsement pasted on: "Sir Robt. Wingfield, the xth of "

25 Feb.

R. O.

3967 H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Understands, by letters from the King and Wolsey, that they desire Will. Lisle and his son Humphrey, with their accomplices, to be attainted and executed, so that the King may be entitled to the forfeiture of their lands. As he is not experienced in attainders, requests that the justices of assizes at York be joined with him in the commission, and instructed to meet him at Newcastle after the Durham assize. On the 22nd Feb. Rob. Dodsle alias Lewshorne, one of the King's rebels, was slain by the Earl's officers in Tyndale, in resisting an arrest. Requests a copy of the last league and articles of truce with Scotland to be sent him by bearer, as he cannot otherwise treat with Angus. Alnwick, 25 Feb. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.) To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd. by Wolsey.

1528.

25 Feb.

3968. DR. LONDON to the BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

R. O.

Foxe, v. App.

Since last writing has perceived many things that make him very pensive. This unhappy Mr. Garret, being at Oxford at Easter, sought out those who knew Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, pretending that he wished to learn Hebrew and Greek, and distributed a great number of corrupt books among them. Fears Mr. Clerk called him thither. Dalaber has confessed that Clerk sent him Farragines Lutheri, Pomerianum super Epistolas Pauli, Lambert de Vocatione, Enchiridion Precationum, Legendarius in Lucam, and Super Epistolam Petri ad Hebræos, Pomerianum super Deuteronomiam and Uniones Dissidentium.

Dalaber was with Clerk all last summer at Powghley. It is clearly proved that Clerk read in his chamber Paul's Epistles to young men and those who were of two, three, or four years standing in the University. Wishes Wolsey had never called him or any other Cambridge man to his most towardsly college. "It were a gracious deed if they were tried and purged, and restored unto their mother from whence they came, if they be worthy to come thither again." Were clear from suspicion till they came. Some of them, as Mr. Dean has known, have borne a shrewd name.

These youths have not long been conversant with Garret, nor have greatly perused his books. Long before he was taken many of them were weary of his works, and brought them to Dalaber, in whose keeping were found yesterday all the books marked in the following list. Is very sorry for these youths. Though not greatly infected, they will never avoid slander. As Wolsey has sent for Garret, he supposes he will know everything from the Bishop.

Nothing shall be hid, though they were all his brothers. Makes this mean for them, as they are the most towardsly young men in Oxford. Encloses their First Principles, a perilous book. In the first leaf is a prophecy, and the matter following proceeds of like spirit. Prays God to send Garret to my Lord's hands, and that after this trial the University may be clear for many years. Oxford, Ash Wednesday.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

ii. List of heretical books.

P. 1.

25 Feb.

3969. ROYAL BANQUET.Lansdowne
MS. 1. f. 203.

B. M.

Costs of a dinner given by the King in the lodge of the little park at Windsor, Tuesday, 25 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

The Bakehouse:—2 b. flour, 10s. "Furnage of the same," 4d. 1 p. fine flour for cakes, 15d. Carriage, 4d. The Pantry:—80 loaves of chet bread, 5s. The Buttery and Cellar:—15 g. beer, 20d. 15 g. ale, 2s. 6d. 2 kild. bought, 10d. 1 g. Romney, 12d. 6 f. Gascon and French wine, 13s. 4d. Carriage, 4d. The Spicery:—For the Kitchen: 1 oz. pepper, 1½d.; 3 oz. ginger, 4½d.; 6 oz. cinnamon, 21d.; 1 q. cloves and mace, 2s. 8d.; 1 oz. saffron, 18d.; 3 lb. dates, 9d.; 3 lb. prunes, 9d.; 3 lb. "raices cors" (coarse raisins?) 9d.; 4 lb. "raices gr." 4½d.; 14 lb. sugar, 7s. 3½d.; 1 yd. strainers, 2d.; 8 lb. almonds, 1s. 8d.; ½ lb. pyskads, 5d.; 1 q. rose water, 12d.; ½ 100 fine gold, 2s.; 3 lb. pyskatts, 2s. 6d.; 3 lb. comfets, 21d.; 300 wafers for marchpanes, 2s. 4d.; 2 lb. carraways, 16d. For the Confectionary: 200 wardens, 10s.; 30 oranges, 7s.; 24 quinces, 2s.; carrots and sokery, 20d.; 2 boxes for comfets and carraways, 6d.; 200 pippins, 3s. 4d.; 1 lb. sugar, 6½d.; 1 oz. cinnamon, 4½d.; 1 oz. ginger, 1½d. Wafery: 2 lb. sugar, 12½d. Jelly Stuff: 2 oz. ginger, 3d.; ½ lb. cinnamon, 3s.; 2 oz. grains, 2½d.; 2 oz. cloves, 12d.; 2 oz. mace, 1528.

6d. : 6 lb. sugar, 3s. 1½d. : 1 ell jelly cloths, 8d. For the Pastry : 1 q. pepper, 5½d. : 1 oz. saffron, 18d. : 2 oz. cloves and mace, 3s. : ½ lb. cinnamon, 2s. 4d. : 5 oz. ginger, 9d. : 20 lb. sugar, 10s. 5d. : 3 lb. dates, 9d. : 4 lbs. prunes, 12d. : 3 lbs. "cora,"* 9d. : 1 q. paper, 2d. : 1 yd. strainers, 2d. For the Wafery and for Cream : 9½ lb. sugar, 4s. 11d. For the Privy Bakehouse : 3 lb. sugar, 19d. : 2 oz. cloves and mace, 16d. : 1 q. paper, 2d. For Ipsocras : ½ lb. ginger, 12d. : 12 lb. sugar, 6s. 3d. : 1 q. nutmegs and cloves, 18d. : 1½ lb. cinnamon elect, 9s. For the Ewry : 1 q. rose water, 12d. For the Poultry : 1 lb. sugar, 6½d. : ½ oz. cloves and mace, 4d. : ½ oz. saffron, 4½d. : 1 lb. "races cora,"* 3d. : 2½ lb. wax, 10d. For the scalding house : 2½ lb. wax, 10d.

The Accutry and Larder :—3 pieces of beef, 3s. 4d. 3 br. veal, 3s. 2 stone white, 12d. 2 doz. flayls, 8s. 1 fitch of bacon, 20d. 2 paunches, 8d. 2 gauges* of oxen, 8d. 2 gauges* of calves, 4d. 2 veals fecz, 8d. 1 piece lard, 8d.

The Poultry :—3 capons of grease, 7s. : 7 fat hens, 6s. : 4 kids and lambs, 10s. 8d. : 12 plovers, 4s. : 2 doz. and 1 "cooks,"* 12s. 6d. : 4 pheasants, 13s. 4d. : 14 partridges, 14s. : 14 sokers, 4s. 8d. : 2 herons, 4s. 8d. : 4 doz. pipers, 8s. : 8 doz. larks, 5s. 4d. : 18 snytes, 3s. 4d. : 8 conies, 20d. For the Kitchen : 60 dishes butter, 5s. : 250 eggs, 5s. : 100 pom, 12d. : 3 g. cream, 3s. For the Wafery : 1 g. eggs, 7d. For the Pastry : 24 dishes butter, 2s. : 500 eggs, 10s. : 2 g. cream, 2s. The Privy bakehouse : 6 dishes butter, 6d. : 1 g. eggs, 7d. : ½ g. cream, 6d. For fresh cheeses : 6 g. milk, 12d. : ½ g. cream, 6d. : making them, 4d. For puddings : 1 p. "wotemele," 4d. : 1 g. cream, 8d. Carriage of the stuff for the poultry from London, with 3 horses, 10s. Wages of 3 men for 4 days, 13s. 4d.

The Jewelhous :—To Rob. Draper, for washing a diaper cloth and 2½ doz. napkins, 5s. : for glazing and oiling 3 cases of knives, 3s. 4d.

The Scullery :—12 q. coals, 5s. Tables and trestles hired in the town, 12d. Cream from the keeper's wife in the lodge, 16d. Herbs, 12d. A gylter hired, 8d. Carriage of kitchen-stuff and water, 8d.

The Saucery :—2 b. flour for the bakements, 3s. 4d. Mustard, verjuice, and vinegar, 1s. 6d. Oil and hard cheese from the King's store.

Total, 17l. 6s. 11½d. "Visus per me, Willm. Thynne."

4 sheets ; originally a roll. Endd. by Lord Burghley.

26 Feb. 3970. [SIR] GREGORY [CASALE] to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Pocock, t. 72.

Have before written that Lautree has seized all the towns in Abruzzi, "statutipe in Apollam . . . jam se conferre." He will send thence officers to receive the [surrender] of Apulia, and afterwards proceed to Naples to meet the enemy. Those who are going towards Naples and Galeta have ordered the fleet which sailed from Sardinia for Etruria to return to the Neapolitan coast that the enemy may be attacked by sea and land. The allied army (exercitus faderis) which was here is ordered to march to the same place, and is on its way. The Pope stays here, and does not intend to go to Rome, which will probably be besieged, as Ostia, Civita Vecchia ("Civitas Vetus") and Viterbo are in the hands of the enemy.

Wrote to Campeggio that when the city is restored to liberty, he can depart, and leave some one in his place. Asked whether he would go to England if there was occasion ; to which he answered that he should be much pleased to revisit the King and yourself.

Am sorry that no answer has come to my letters dated at . . . giving the Pope's opinion. Immediately on receiving [an answer] arrangements will be made for sending a legate. Orviseti], 26 Feb. MXXX . . .

Hol., Lat., pp. 2 ; mutilated. Add. : Ill. et R. D. D. Car^s Flor. [Ang]lis legato, &c. Endd.

1528

26 Feb.

R. O.

3971. EARL OF CUMBERLAND and DACRE.

Award made by Hen. earl of Northumberland, warden of the East and Middle Marches, for settling the differences between Hen. earl of Cumberland and Will. lord Dacre and Greystock:—1. That they shall lay apart all grudges, and be familiar. 2. The Earl shall not pursue any process against any of Dacre's tenants for riot or trespass heretofore done, nor Dacre any action against the Earl or his adherents for hunting in his parks. 3. 100 marks to be paid by Dacre to the Earl before Easter next, in satisfaction of several claims. 4. Dacre to pardon the Earl's adherents for "hyrying or taking of nets" in the waters of Esk and Leryn. 5. Any future complaints on either side to be referred to the earl of Northumberland, Alnwick, 26 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Draft, mostly in the hand of the earl of Northumberland; pp. 3.

R. O.

2. Another copy.

26 Feb.

Cal. B. ii. 3.

B. M.

3972. DACRE to ANGUS.

Sends him a letter from Wolsey, which came with others to himself, about the exploit made by him on the Debateable Ground, and the resistance of lord Maxwell, who burnt Nederby in revenge. At Maxwell's request is to meet him at Lochmaban Stane or Tollercrike, on Monday, 2 March. Desires Angus will make arrangements for it with Maxwell, or send down his brother or one of the Council to compel him to make due redress, as he cannot trust him. The matters of his complaint are the killing of his servant, the burning of Nederby, &c. Wolsey desires him to make immediate reformation according to the truce, otherwise there will be no good rule on the borders. Hull Abbey, beside Alnwick, 26 Feb.

P. 1. Headed: "Copy of a letter sent from the lord Dacres to the earl of Angus."

26 Feb.

S. B.

3973. PETER BUTLER, EARL OF OSSORY.

Grant, in tail male, of all the possessions of the lordship or earldom of Ossory in Ireland. Also grant to the said Peter of the offices of steward, constable, and governor of the manor and castle of Dungarvon (Waterford) in Ireland, which he and his son James have promised to attempt to recover from James earl of Desmond, with fees of 100*l.* a year out of the issues thereof; to hold to the said Peter for life, with remainder for life to his son James aforesaid, with remainder for life to the son and heir male of the body of the said James if he should have such issue, the promissess thereafter to revert to the Crown. Del. Westm., 26 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

Pat. p. 2, m. 20.

27 Feb.

R. O.

3974. [JOHN AWDELEY] to the LORDS OF THE STAR CHAMBER.

In the 18th of Hen. VIII. an agreement passed between me and Sir John Moody, for payment of 1,720*l.* in four years, in full settlement of all bargains between us. At that time, at Master Broke's house in London, then chief baron of the Exchequer, present Sir Ric. Lyster, now chief baron, and Sir Brian Tuke, Moody claimed 1,720*l.*, but showed no specialties. I agreed to pay 400*l.*, and that 1,320*l.* should be taken of the mess profits of the lands. But he is not satisfied, and sues me for 1,000*l.*, which I never had, but was a surety for the repayment of 800*l.* that I lost by his means to my lord of Shrewsbury. I beg of you to hear what my witnesses have deposed, and how extremely ill I have been handled. "At my poor house at W . . .," 27 Feb.

P. 1. Eadd.: Letter of John Awdeley.

1528.

28 Feb.

R. O.

3975. WM. and CHR. DACRE to [the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND].

"These are the names of the prisoners that remaines here in Carlisle Castell, whiche is taken upon your commandment by your writing signed with your hand."

Dande Nicson, Clement's brother; John Nicson, of the Maynes; Cristoll Routlege, Lynn's son; James Routlege; Geo. Routlege, Dunsod Rolland's son; Matho Lystell, called Gutterholes; Peter Whitbode; Davy Cinwe. New made; Cristoll Nobill; Jak Nikson, called Delf Jak.

Prisoners at Hexham; Thos. Erington, called Pope; John Erington, called Angell; Gib Erington, of Gremerich; Edw. Charlton, pledge for all his band; Geo. Horde; Chr. Lyddall; Wallas of the Kirkhouse.

Prisoners and pledges at Morpeth; Hen. Robson, of the Fawstane, one of those in your bill; Sande Yarowe, Henry Yarowe's brother; Clement and Rauf Charlton, sons to Thos. Charlton of Carreleith; Dumble Davy Milburne; a son of Elde Doddes; Will Charlton, brother of Gib of the Bowght Hill.

Think that as Tindale has "loppyn furth," and left their pledges in their own default, that those should serve instead of them. Will do all they can to apprehend others mentioned in his bill, but they have been openly warned to keep away from the Dacres till new keepers of Tindale come down. Carlisle, penult. Feb. Signed.

A strip of paper.

[28] Feb.

Cal. D. x. 332

B. M.

3976. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

"[Mons.] de Bayoïne, j'ay receu voz lettres [se]u bien au long par le contenu d'icelles les Sandouych, et l'instance qu'il vous a este faicte [par Mons. le Cardinal] mon grant amy d'ainsy le vouloir faire et se en diligence ce courrier pour scavoir et ent[endre] ma] volente sur le fait des prises et arrests de m[archandises] appartenans aux subgects de l'Empereur, qui ont e[ste] prins de] par l'intimation de la guerre naguieres faicte et a celle fin qu'il peust en cela contenter les subg[ect]s du Roy son] maistre qui luy avoient fait tant de plaintes d interessez que particulièrement chacun d'eulx recev[ra] ouverture de ceste guerre, et dont sans la re[stitution] desdites prises, il luy seroit impossible les avoir ne contenter qui luy estoit paine telle et ey g[rande] qu'il est] impossible de plus. Parquoy il me prioit y co[n]s[iderer] et y mectre tel ordre qu'il n'en peust advenir il] me[n]venient entre] nos subgects, mais que ce fust, de sorte que [le vaisseau] qui estoit pris, leur fust entyèrement retenu et qu'il fust defendu de ey apres n'en faire au[une] prise] sur les subgects dudit Empereur; ainsies que le contenez en l'article de l'intimation de la guer[re] passez et accompliz, voulant que durant iceulx du privilege et sauveconduict contenu en icelle.

"Mons. de Bayonne, vous m'avez fait plaisir voulente de mondit sieur le Legat mon bo[n] amy] Jusques audit Sandouych pour les a respondre a ce que dessus

. [vous] verrez que besong sera e avant l'intimation de ladite gu[erre]
 t en la coste de Bretaigne, Picardye entent derrenierement dans l'entree de la r [plu]sieurs navyres et autres vaisseaulx de mes su[b]gects] [na]rchandises et iceulx mener et arrestez aux ports [d]udit Empereur, ou ils sont encors de present, par navyre guerre; et qui sont encors, n ce que j'ay este adverty en flottans le long de la dite coste, en malgrevance mes su[b]gects] ils les peuent prendre et rencontrer, comme ennemis ont de faire les ungs sur les autres, de sorte que 1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

l'on peu(t dire) que le dommaige qu'ilz ont jusques icy fait sur meaditz s[ubjectz] se monte a une merveilleuse et grosse somme, qui rem totale perte et destruction de plusieurs bons, groz et riche[s] de mondit royaume, lesquelz, sans leurs donner moyen de se et faire le semblable sur les subjectz dudit Empereur, s[eront] contrainctz de mandier leur vie et de venir jusques a querir. Toutesfoiz, affin que les subjectz dudit Roy [mon bon] frere et perpetuel allye congnoissent l'amytie, seurete et que je luy porte et ce que je vouldroye faire a l'instance [et] requeste de mondit sieur le Legat mon bon amy, qui si fort vous fait pryer et requerrir de vouloir donner ordre au faic(t) desdites prises et a les faire relascher et delivrer pour appaiser les plainctes qui luy en sont pardela faictes a cause des dommaiges et pertes qu'ilz disent y recevoir, vous luy pourrez sur cela . . . [dire] et remonstrer que ayant eu vosdites lettres, jay incontine[nt] par tous les portz de ma subgection, tant de Gui[enne] et de Picardye que Normandye, et mande a mes de mer que les

* er en aucune maniere que ce

. intencion, et affin que la suit egalle delivrance du coste de d avoir este pris de mes subgeetz pour le a seray et suis trescontent, pour l'enveye que j[e] dit est, a la requeste de mondit sieur le Leg[at] ce faire oblyer en quelque chose l'interest qu'il commecte et deppute quatre telz pers[onnaiges] envoyer pardeca, lesquelz je feray accompagner [vers les] costes; c'est assavoir, l'ung en Normandye, et le[s] autres en Bretagne et Picardye, et la je leur feray meestre [entre] leurs mains toutes lesdites marchandises qui auro[nt] este prises et arrestees par mes subjectz sur les Flaman[da,] subgeetz de l'Empereur, a celle fin de les leur rendre et [restituer] a ung mesme temps et a l'heure qu'ilz voudront faire [le semblable] de leur coste, comme la raison le veult et requie[r]t parce qu'ils ont este les premiers qui ont commence, et de cela arrester a la seurete et fiance que j'ay vueil p sieur le Legat mon bon amy et a tout ce qui viendra davantage faire deffense a tous mes admyraul[x] et autres cappitaines de mer estans en ma subgection par cy apres durant le terme qui sera advise j'ay escript par Castillon comme vous aurez peu ve[oir] assaillyr ny offendre aucuns navyres estrangie[r]s s'ilz ne sont assaillyz les premiers, forcez et [contrainctz de se] deffendre. Parquoy je vous pryé luy vouloir [dire de ma part] et faire entendre la raison en laquelle je me condescendz et soubzmetz contenter, et au tant en f

. mes propres subjectz, de seavoir peu de gre a mondit sieur seul cause de ainay le me faire eust este tres mal aise l'accorder de r les raisons, mesmement que j'ay eydevant [t]outesfoiz en ce qui touchera le bien, prouffict [et avantage] des subjectz dudit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel [allye] pour la bonne et seure amytie et intelligence d'entre [nous] je ne suis pour jamais avoir moindre regard maiz plus [grant] que aux myens propres, et de cela le pourrez vous h asseurer, vous priant davantage incontinent me faire si ce qu'ilz auront depuis veu qui m'est venu par le h retourne d'Espaigne que je vous ay envoie par ledit et la sorte de quoy il a este respondu a ceste in[t]im[ati]on aura point este occasyon de leur faire changer les v dela et comment tout aura este pris ensemble de responce qui vous sera faicte sur le tout; et ce pend[ant] je depescheray 1528.

Moresete qui est ce soir arrive. Lequ[el] portera, comme je vous ay dernièrement escript, ma re[sponse] sur toutes choses, afin de la pouvoir debaister de del[iberer] avec vous selon les memoires et instructions qui luy en seront baillez." St. Germain en Laye, le penultime jour de Fevrier.

Signed.

Mutilated. Add.

[28 Feb.]

3977. [FRANCIS I. to CLEMENT VII.]†

Calig. D. x.

142.

R. M.

"nous estoient propres et ne fa prosperite que du nostre, et pour ce que par venerab[les] Docteurs Stephanns et Foucques (Fox) qu'il envoie ses ambas[sadeurs] entendu qu'il a a obtenir et impetrer d'icelle chose de visceralement le touchent, nous vous supplions, tressainct Pere) et tant comme faire pouvons, que vers notre dit bon frere [et allye le] roy d'Angleterre, vostre tant devot fils, et si tressaffect user de vostre humanite grace et liberalite speciale singulier car nous pensions le dit seigneur Roy nostre bon frere observance et affection cordiale qu'il a tousjours demonstree avoir merite envers elle, privilege singulier special, et plus la et pour la grande et intime amour que luy portons, nous vous [prions de luy] complaire en toutes ses justes requestes, et ne luy donner occasion [de se malcontenter] ne retirer de l'amitie commune qui seroit, comme sçavez prejudier et don- et estat de vostre dite Sainctete et tous les confederes comme inestimable vo tressainct Pere, que de la faveur, humanite, courtoisie et gracieuseté dont nostre dit meilleur frere et perpetuel allye, nous en tiendrons plus estre[ict et] obligé que si nous l'avions receu en personne. Ausurplus, tressainct pere, vous] connoissez la disposition du temps, telle quelle est, et entendez l'esleu Empereur, et ambition immense de la monarchie, la guerre est par toute la Chrestiente, tellement qu'il n'y a lieu de seur acces pour as[ssembler un] concelle general, et si sont les partialitez et divisions si tressgrand[es en toutes] parts que a peine se pourroit faire acte universal ou il y eust vraye et A ceste cause, tressainct Pere, vous vous resouldrez s'il vous plaist qu Chrestiente n'y auroit ordre de faire eslebrer pour le present, et durant ces g universal, en quoy vous tiendrez la main et aurez regard a ver la temerite de ceulx qui se sont efforcez ruyver et deprimer la dig[nite de la Sainte] Sagesse et de toute l'Eglise, vous offrant y tenir la main et employer jusques a la dernière goutte de nostre sang, comme vray fils a Et a tant, tressainct Pere, nous supplions et requerons vostre dit Sainctete, Il vueille longuement maintenir pret ent de nostre mere, Salute Eglise"

Mutilated.

3978. [FRANCIS I. to CLEMENT VII.]

Calig. D. x.

27a.

R. M.

"(Tres)sainct Pere, encours que nous soions to[ujours] asseure de] l'affection et bonne volonte que vous portez [au Roy] nostre tres cher et tres aime frere cousin et perpetuel [allye] que par tant de foiz nous ayons fait entendre a le desir que nous avons de veoir mettre fin

† This letter is described in Masters' MS. (f. 111) as follows: "Feb. 28, 1544. A letter of the French king to the Pope, entreating him to dispatch the business (being of great importance) which the king of England desires to be done, by Dr. Stephen and Fox, whom he sends now to his Holiness. That the king of England hath deserved this of his Holiness and that See; and therefore 'nous prions luy vouloir complaire en toutes ses justes requestes, et ne luy donner l'occasion de se malcontenter,' &c., which shall be to the great damage of the common amity, the Church, and your Holiness' own estate and person."

1528.

[FRANCIS I. to CLEMENT VII.]—cont.

lequel il a naguieres envoye ses ambassadeurs icelle sa Saintete qui n'est meindre que s'il estoit de nostre propre fait. Toutesfoiz, envoyant [nostre dit] bon frere et perpetuel allye de rechef pardela [les porteurs] de cestes pour les causes que par eux elle pourra sçavoir, nous ne les avons voulu laisser venir pardev[ra] vostre dite] Saintete, sans encores une bonne foiz suppl[ier] icelle vostre dite Saintete leur vouloir donner la me[illeur, plus] briefve et plus prompte expedition de leur dit aff[aire] que possible] vous sera, assurant bien vostre dite Saintete que que nous aurons a toute telle gratitude (?) et pla[isir] comme] c'estait pour nostre propre personne. Nes moins le bien et honneur du Roy nostre dit b[on frere] nostre mesmes, comme nous croyons que vostre dite Saintete entend mieulx que n este, ce qui nous gardera vous en le Createur" • • •

Copy, mutilated.

28 Feb.

3979. [LOUISA OF SAVOY to CLEMENT VII.]

VII. B. x. 80°.

B. M.

The King writes to him about the affairs of the king of England. Asks the Pope to grant his request. St. Germain en Laye, 28 Feb.

Copy, Fr., p. 1.

28 Feb.

3980. FRANCIS I. to LAUTREC.

VII. B. x. 81.

B. M.

Writes to the Pope in favor of the king of England in his cause. Encloses a copy of his letter. Desires him to urge the Pope to grant his request. St. Germain en Laye, 28 Feb. 1527.

Copy, Fr., p. 1. Endd.

28 Feb.

3981. LOUISA OF SAVOY to LAUTREC.

VII. B. x. 81

B. M.

To the same effect. St. Germain en Laye, 28 Feb.

Copy, Fr., p. 1. Endd.

28 Feb.

3982. CHARLES V.

Vesp. C. iv.

333.

B. M.

News received at Bayonne, 28 Feb., from the Emperor's Court.

The Emperor left Burgos last Saturday to go to Madrid, to hold a Cortes, and with him the Empress and the Prince, whom he wishes to have sworn. The ambassadors are at Posa, waiting the coming of the Imperial ambassadors from France and England. The Emperor has commanded the English ambassador to retire to Posa with the rest. The Emperor has ordained that the French princes shall be kept in the castle of Segovia. All their servants are taken away, except one dwarf, and Orleans's tutor. All the rest will go to Villapando. This is creating a great outcry throughout Castile. There is a great report that the king of France has been very sick; and the Queen, hearing that the French princes had been thus treated, has fallen melancholy, and retired to a monastery. The Emperor sent her the archbishops of Toledo and of Saragossa to bring her back, but without avail, until the Emperor went and fetched her. The Emperor has sent a letter, signed with his own hand, to the constable of Castile, commanding him to put away from the French princes all their French attendants. The Constable did nothing all that day; but when they were gone to bed he showed the servants the Emperor's orders. He has appointed the countess of Haro and other persons of honor in their place. The Princes are very well.

The Emperor has sent notice of his defiance to all the towns, and has ordered processions and prayers to be made in the Church for the safety of the State. All French, Venetians, &c. are ordered to depart, and all of them who are married and are domiciled contribute a sum of money. He is trying to sell his patrimony. Soldiers are ordered to be in readiness everywhere, and especially at Barcelona new gallees are ordered. On the 20th, a gentleman was despatched to France, named De la Taillera. Details of the orders given to different parts of Spain and Flanders to prepare for the invasion. A courier, named Gaspar le Breton, has brought various despatches. Don Martin de Bellasco is appointed captain general in Navarre, with orders to discover what preparations are made in France. Machin de la Renterie is vice-admiral of Guipuscon and Biscay; he will build eight galleys, like those of sieur Johan de Lucos, and arm eight great ships of 100 tons, to protect the harbors. It is said that 60 well armed ships have left these two provinces to go against the ports of France and Brittany.

1528.

Fr., pp. 6. Endd.

28 Feb. 3983. ERASMUS to MORE.

Er. Ep. p. 1062.

Has received great consolation from the King's letter, inviting him to England. Things are now in such a state that he must look out for a grave where he may rest after death in quiet, since that is not possible in this life. The heresy of the Anabaptists is more widely diffused than any one suspects. Quirinus, who is going to England, will tell him all.* Baga More will explain to the King the feelings of Erasmus. Basle, 28 Feb. 1528.

Lat.

28 Feb. 3984. PRIORY OF USKE, Llandaff dioc.

P. S. b.

Petition of the Sub-prioress for a congé d'elire on the resignation of the Prioress, Joan Harryman, from old age. 28 Feb. 1527.

29 Feb. 3985. MONTMORENCI to WOLSEY.

Cat. R. i. 90.

R. M.

Has received his letters, and communicated the contents to the King, who has at considerable length talked of this affair with his ambassador. He desires to conform to Wolsey's wishes, "non se voullant arrester aux torn et griefs." Neither he nor any of his subjects interposed in this matter touching the Princess; it is entirely an invention of the Emperor. Has given his answer to the Master of the Rolls, as the Cardinal may perhaps have been informed. Mons. de Bayonne will tell him more. St. Germain en Laye, last day of Feb.

Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.; "Mons. le Cardinal d'Yorth, chancelier et legat d'Angleterre."

3986. [HENRY VIII. to LOUISA OF SAVOY.]

R. O.

Is sending Sir John Wallop, a gentleman of his privy chamber, to visit his good brother, and her, with congratulations on the recovery of his health. Not signed.

Fr., p. 1.

29 Feb. 3987. WALLOP to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

84. P. vii. 47.

Arrived on the 27th at Poissy, where all the ambassadors are lodged a league from court. Was desired to visit the King next morning, when he presented Henry's letter, and congratulated Francis on his recovery. He thanked Henry for sending him one of his privy chamber, which he took as a great favor, and said he was well amended, and able to go abroad. However,

* In a letter addressed to this Quirinus, 14 March 1528, Erasmus says—"I readily conjecture that you have stayed a long time in England. I know how dilatory my friend Montjoy is." He desires Quirinus to hurry home from Flanders, begging him, however, to give his compliments to James Duprest, "whom, I imagine, you found in England."

1528.

WALLOP to HENRY VIII.—cont.

I had much trouble to understand him, as he had lost most of his upper teeth. Needs not write of Italian and Spanish affairs; of which the Master of the Rolls and Dr. Stevyns have informed him. Awaits the King's pleasure, "and for mine instructions, which the French king hath sent your Highness by Chatillon." Poissy, the last day of February. Signed.

Add. Endd.

29 Feb.

3988. ——— to the DEPUTY OF CALAIS (WINGFIELD).

Cal. D. x. 167.

B. M.

Have received a letter from him, dated the of this present month of Feb. 1527."

Are detaining some ships (n[avires]), arrested at their town: "Car nous ne sommes pas ceulx que voudriesme faire telle choses de cy tres grande et mais bien est il vray et veritable que le de ceste ville de Neufport pour aucun j il aura aultre charge de par son maistre bien nostre gre. Esperons toutesvoies qu seront elargies a leur France liberte Neuport in Flanders, ult. [Feb.] 1527."

Hol., Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.: [Au] noble et puissant Monsieur, le Depute de [son ma]istre Roy d'Engleterre, a Calays.

Feb.

3989. HENRY VIII. to the DOGE OF VENICE.

R. T. 137.

R. O.

On the capture of the Pope last year, the cities of Ravenna and Cervia, together with a great load of salt and other goods of the Church, came into the hands of the Venetians. The Venetian ambassador in England, being asked about it, said that the Signory had only taken the custody of them, to prevent their falling into the hands of the Emperor, till the Pope should be at liberty again. As it is now nearly three months since he was liberated, Henry strongly urges the Signory to make restitution.

Lat., pp. 2.

Feb.

3990. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,

xiv.

The bearer and his fellow are dispatched with as many things to compass our matter and bring it to pass as wit could imagine; which being accomplished by their diligence, I trust you and I will shortly have our desired end. This would be more to my heart's ease and quietness of my mind than anything in the world. I assure you no time shall be lost, for ultra posse non est esse. "Keep him not too long with you, but desire him, for your sake, to make the more speed; for the sooner we shall have word from him, the sooner shall our matter come to pass. And thus, upon trust of your short repair to London, I make an end of my letter, mine own sweetheart. Written with the hand of him which desireth as much to be yours as you do to have him."

Hol.

3991.

GRANTS IN FEBRUARY 1528.

Feb.

GRANTS.

3. Commissions of Good Delivery.

Midland Circuit: Sir Humph. Conyngeaby.

Rob. Norwiche, John Jenour.

Oxford Circuit: Sir John Forte, Sir Wm.

Rudhale, Tho. Broderell.

Western Circuit: Sir John Fitzjames,

Wm. Shelley, Rob. Dacres.

Westm., 3 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2,

m. 1d.

parish of Cranebroke, Kent, clothmakers. Pardon for having broken into the close of Richard Paching, at Cranebroke, and killed Thomas Pachyng. Del. Westm., 4 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 2, m. 23.

5. John Lynesey, one of the six clerks of Chancery. Grant, in tall male, of the reversion of the manor of Walkhamstowe Fraunces, aka Lowehall, Essex, parcel of the lands of Anne late countess of Warwick, which was leased for the term of 21 years by

4. Richard and Stephen Cushman, and Thomas Kent, all of Mylkehouse, in the 1528.

Feb.

GRANTS.

patent, 14 May 12 Hen VIII. p. 1, m. 10, to John Jeynes; to hold at the annual rent of 10*l*. 8*s*. Del. Westm., 5 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 26.

5. David Appowell. Licence to import wine and wood. Del. Westm., 5 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

6. Sir Wm. Kyngeston and Anthony his son. Reversion of the manors of Upton Newdenbury and Wykeburnell, with appurtenances in Bryght-Hampton, Broughton, Popylton and Parshote, Ware, formerly of Francis Lord Lovell, granted to Giles Grevell by patent, 4 Dec. 23 Hen. VII., for 31 years, at the yearly rent of 40 marks, which Ric. Blounte, deceased, lately received; on surrender of patent, 11 Dec. 7 Hen. VIII., granting the same to Sir William alone. Also grant of the said rent from Blounte's death. Del. Westm., 6 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

7. Somerset. Simon White and John Andreye. Commission to make inquisition concerning the lands and heir of Richard Harvy, deceased. Westm., 6 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 19*d*.

8. Wm. Dawe and Barth. Flammank, yeomen of the Chamber. Grant of a messuage and land in Hole, by Lymford, near Lostwithell, Cornw., which came to the Crown in 2 Hen. VI. because John Wilcot, the King's native of the manor of Restormell, died without issue; also of the moiety of 27 messuages and land in Treussamar, Treussavyn, Trevidell, Kerrewer, Boscawell, Bosconvery, Tregerick, St. Austell, and Lophorog, Cornw., late of Ric., one of the ds. and hs. of Rich. Trevisill, and which came to the hands of Edw. IV. by reason of Ric. both's moiety; also of two gardens in Tregony, late of Sir Henry Badrigan, attainted of high treason; the whole being worth 60*l*. 10*d*. yearly, as appears in the account of Sir Peter Eggescombe, feodary of the duchy of Cornwall; to hold in survivorship, according to the customs of the customary tenants of Restormell. Greenwich, 1 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 8 Feb.—P.S.

9. Sir Anth. Browne, knight of the Body, and Alice his wife. Grant of the lordship of Newton, Lanc., with appurtenances, partly leased by Jo. Henage, and partly by John Jasson; also the manors of Newhall and Coppenhall, Cheshire, and Eglyton, Rutland. Del. Westm., 8 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 14.—Vacated on surrender 22 June 22 Hen. VIII.

9. Bernardine Bossa or Buzza, of London, cornmeasurer. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Del. Westm., 9 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

10. Sir William Kyngeston, kn. of the Body, and George Baynham "unus appositionem Regis, ad mensuram." Grant, in survivorship, of the office of constable of the castle of St. Briavel, in Dene forest, Glouc., with the usual fees payable out of the issues of the said forest and of the lordship of Newland. Del. Westm., 10 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 13.

10. John Smyth, remembrancer of the Treasury of the Exchequer. Wardship of John, son and heir of Thos. Deny. Del. Westm., 10 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

10. John Sonett, alias Baptist, chaplain, a native of Picardy. Denization. Westm., 10 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 4 and 27.

12. Rob. Baste, chaplain. To have a chantry in the manor of Egham, Kent, with the chantry-priest's house, near Ric. Store, deceased. Greenwich, 7 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 12 Feb.—P.S.

12. Devon. John Ford, Alexander Wade, John Hext and John Pomeroy. Commission to make inquisition concerning the lands and heirs of Brian Travers, John Bere of Wodenaston, and Margt. Hille, widow, deceased. Westm., 12 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 19*d*.

12. To Thos. Chafyn of Salisbury, merchant. Pardon of all payments of gold coined in England, and delivery of plate, &c. to aliens, contrary to the statute 4 Hen. VII. Del. Westm., 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 13.

12. Ric. Swyfte of London. Pardon for having killed John Apherry. Del. Westm., 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 7.

12. Thomas Byssoley alias Bewmantell pursuivant. To be York herald, with 20 marks a year. Del. Westm., 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 9.

12. Geo. Neville lord Bergesvenny. Wardship of George ap Harry, s. and h. of Thos. ap Harry of Panton, with custody of the manor of Monyngton Stradell, and of the moiety of the manor of Eton Tregose. Del. Westm., 12 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

12. Justices of Assize. Mallard Circuit: John Jenour, with Sir Humph. Conyngesby and Rob. Norwich. 12 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 12*d*.

12. Commission of Sewers. Cornw.: John bp. of Exeter, Sir John Arundell, John Chamond, John Arundell of Trerise, John Carnynowe, Wm. Gosholgham, Wm. Loure, Wm. Carnynowe, Hen. Tre-carell, Nich. Carnynowe; for the water of Tamer and marshes adjoining, from Congrewey to Bainham in the parish of Lawhitton, Cornw. 12 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 13*d*.

13. Ric. Bolokard of Sengylton, Sussex. Pardon for having, with John Goff, killed Thomas Standerden. Del. Westm., 13 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 13.

13. Northern Circuit: James Fox, Anthony Fitzherbert, and Richard Lyster. Association as Justices of assize. Westm., 13 Feb.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 3*d*.

1528.

GRANTS IN FEBRUARY 1528—*cont.*Feb.
GRANTS.

15. John Burchier, lord Berners. Grant of the manors of Okelham, Effingham, Chappesle and Waddingham (Surrey), 3 messuages, 1,000 acres of land called Porteley, Upwode, Halyngbury and Gaters in Caterham, &c. 6d. annual rent in the manor of Tittesey, Surrey; 8d. annual rent out of the house of "Derby house in Etenbridge" (Etenbridge) in the parish of Westerham, Kent; and the manors of Stratton Audeley, Oxon, Knock, Wilts, and Upclapforde, Hants. Del. Westm., 15 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 18.

16. Henry marquis of Exeter. Livery of lands as s. and h. of Wm. Courteney, earl of Devon (son of Edward earl of Devon), and lady Katharine his wife; and as kinsman and heir of Tho. Courteney earl of Devon, son of Tho. Courteney earl of Devon. Del. Westm., 16 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

16. John Broke, of London, clothier. Custody of lands in James-field at the Spoute, Middx., which belonged to Steph. Chese, deceased, and were appropriated without licence by the abbot of Westminster, and the master of St. James'. Del. Westm., 16 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—A Treasurer's fiat for letters patent. Signed by Norfolk. Add. to the Chancellor.

17. Austin prior of Butley. Licence to acquire lands, &c. to the annual value of 10 marks. Del. Westm., 17 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 26.

20. Wm. Holwey and Thos. Lofte, late of Hankerton, Wilts. Pardon for robbing John Daves of a pair of black breeches and 2 buckskins, value 5s., and 40s. in money in a purse, value 4d. Del. Westm., 20 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

20. Maurice Birchynsha, clk. Presentation to the rectory of Flansrede, Line. dioc., vacant by resignation of Jo. Davenport. Del. Westm., 20 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.

23. Sir John Braggs, of Cokerley. Grant, in reversion, of the office of steward of the lordship, &c. of Beasley (Glouc.), on the death of Katharine, queen consort, who granted him the same during her lifetime (on surrender of the premises by Sir William Blounte lord Mountjoy, her great chamberlain) by patent 10 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 28 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 2.

26. Ric. Rosearrok and Isabella his wife and Margaret Trevenour. Livery of lands, &c. to the said Richard, Isabella, and Margaret, who is sister and heir of Wm. Trevenour, deceased, son and heir of Ric. Trevenour, deceased; the said Richard and William having been tenants of the duchies of Exeter and Cornwall. This livery is for all lands of the said Richard Trevenour and William, or which came to the King's hands on death of Joan, wife of Richard Courteney, late wife of the said Richard Trevenour, or on the death of Isabella, wife of Hugh Chauntrell, late wife of John Trevenour, elder brother of the said Richard, &c. Del. Westm., 26 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

26. Wm. Kechyn of Calais, late of Benyngton, Surr., yeoman. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield, Windsor, 26 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

26. Tho. Whyte. Livery of lands as s. and h. of Rob. Whyte, of Southwarrenborowe, Hants. Del. Westm., 26 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

27. Henry Norreys, squire of the Body, and Hector Ascheley. Grant, in survivorship, of the office of keeper of the site of the manor of Hunnesdon, Herts, and some other neighboring possessions.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 2.

28. Doctor Wm. Knight, the King's secretary, Sir John Russell, and Gamaliel Clifton. To have the advowson of the first canonry and prebend which shall be void in the church of SS. Mary and George, in Windsor Castle. Del. Westm., 28 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 21.

28. William Knight, Richard Wolman, and William Benet, LL.D. Advowson of the first canonry and prebend void in the collegiate chapel of St. Stephen's, Westminster. Del. Westm., 28 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 21.

1 March. 3992 CLERK to WOLSEY.

Titus, B. i. 309.

B. M.

St. P. i. 281.

On Friday last, the King, at his second mass, called lord Rochford, the treasurer, and me, into his travers, and communicated to us divers things concerning the charge of count Carpi's servant, and other matters contained in the writings now sent. He is glad to hear of the Pope's good will, and the bad estate of the Emperor's affairs in Italy; and hopes that, by the advance of Lautree to Naples, the Emperor shall repent of the war. He takes the Emperor's proclamation of war as he should, and says, if he must go to war, he will do it substantially. He spoke much of the Emperor's bragging letter to the Romans, and willed me to read it, and send it back to you. He thinks that as the Emperor calls himself king of Germany, and attributes his glory to the Romans, it were well if Wallop divulged it in Germany.

The men of Rye have written of a prize taken in their haven by Frenchmen. Rochford, the treasurer, and I, have written on this subject to you.

1528.

An ambassador (Patrick Sinclair) has come from Scotland, and had a communication with the King. The King has said nothing about it, but only of the coming of the Spanish ambassador. Windsor, Sunday, 1 March.

Pp. 3. Add. Endd.

1 March. 3993. CLERK, ROCHFORD and FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. i. 282

The King has written to the mayor of Rye, touching the demeanor of the Frenchmen, with which he is not pleased, and requests you will communicate with the French ambassador, that no such attempt be repeated. He says they might as well take a Fleming upon the land as in any of his havens. Windsor, 1 March.

P.S.—This Sunday, after dinner, the King shewed us that the Emperor's ambassador had fresh letters from Spain. If he has any letters since the proclamation of the war, he is to come here on Tuesday or Wednesday. If they are of an older date, he is to communicate them to Wolsey. Signed.

Add. Endd. : 1 March 1527.

3994. JOHN DU BELLAY, Bishop of Bayonne, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Hears that he has sent persons to the place of the late battle between the Spaniards and the French, to find out the truth. The Spaniards have despatched several persons to falsify the reports, in which they will spare neither money nor trouble. Advises him to write to D. de Guillefort to examine the matter, and also to the mayor of Rye.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. : Ill^{me}, &c., Cardinali Ebor. S. D. N. de latere Legato, ac Angliæ cancellario dignissimo. Endd.

1 March. 3995. SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is anxious at not having received any answer either touching Tadeo, the messenger whom he sent to Wolsey, or touching the Pope's opinion, of which he wrote by three posts. Feels Wolsey is displeased that he has not accomplished anything in the King's affair. The Pope thinks that he can do nothing till he obtains an answer from Wolsey on the above points. Has spoken with Campeggio to get him to come to England, which he will be glad to do if he have an opportunity. Has pressed it again upon him since the Imperialists left Rome, and will continue to urge it.

The Imperialists attempted to take some castles on their way to Naples, but lost some good men. Lautree goes on slowly, because the Viceroy is on the confines of the Abruzzi with 4,000 foot. He intends to draw nearer Naples, and send a force from there to take possession of Apulia; which ought to be the easier, as the army of the League should be there by this time. Many think he should have pushed on more actively, but he is not a man to hazard anything, and he is sure of Abruzzi and Apulia, from which two regions come all the supplies of the kingdom of Naples, whence within a few days he can easily raise 300,000 crowns. The Imperialists, on the other hand, will be compelled to destroy Capua, Gaeta and Naples, as they have done many cities of Lombardy, and if a fleet be sent thither they will be in extreme want of provisions. Langelis has gone lately to the French king to procure one. Cardinal Colonna has gone to the army of the Imperialists, and will be made leader or governor of Naples. The cardinals Orsini and De Cesis, who were given as hostages to Colonna, have returned free. The Pope is not going to leave Orvieto, though the court suffers from a scarcity of everything. Lautree urges him to declare in favor of the League. This proposal has been debated in a Consistory of Cardinals, and it has been determined to do nothing till an answer is received from the bishop of Pistoya. When Casale is well, he will do all he can to get him to help the League. Orvieto, 1 March 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 4. Add. Endd.

1528.

1 March. 3996. NEWS FROM ITALY.

R. O.

Wrote to him several letters on the "viii. cal." Nothing has since occurred that much concerns you or the republic. Letters came from the French camp on the 7th calends, when Lantrec was thinking of advancing from Christi on Lanciano and Nocera. He intends to intercept the revenues of Apulia, and draw nearer Naples. Trusts that the French will be a match for the enemy, seeing that they are both stronger in numbers, and have a more skilful leader. Can hardly write without indignation of the way the Venetians abuse the patience of these kings, in taking towns from the Pope, who risked his head for their preservation, and refusing to restore them, even at the intercession of this King and Wolsey, to whom they are so much bound. Laden with the spoils of the Church, they cheat the Pope, even before the eyes of the French king, and despise the warnings of the King and Wolsey. You must urge the Cardinal to show his zeal again for the Church in this matter, as he did formerly against France and against the Emperor. The fear which the French pretend of driving the Venetians over to the Emperor by insisting on the restitution of those cities is absurd; they will not risk everything for the sake of Ravenna and Cervia. The dilatoriness of France has encouraged them to dissemble with the Pope, and no one knows better than you how much he is grieved with it.

Lat., pp. 2. Headed: 1^o Martii. Endd.: Nova de rebus Italicis die prima Januarij 1528.

1 March. 3997. CHAS. DUKE OF SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Encloses a letter received from John Copildike, showing how Sir Chr. Willoughby had entered the manor of Eresby. A great part of the evidences touching the young lady Willoughby's inheritance remain in the said manor place. It would be much to her prejudice if they came to Sir Christopher's hands. Has informed Master Paulet, that the rights of the King's ward may be saved. Thanks Wolsey for his favor to the bearer, a servant of Suffolk and the French queen, for his advancement to marriage. Westmore, 1 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. Sealed.

* * * The two leaves of this letter were found apart.

1 March. 3998. THOMAS DONYNGTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The dean of Lincoln has received his letters;—will visit him, and bring the King's patent for the hospital of St. Leonard's, York, and surrender it. He alleges it is of the clear value of 43*l.*, for which he desires an equivalent. If the Dean can have a prebend of 36*l.* in Salisbury which Wolsey named unto him, and some other in the North, he will make the surrender without delay. "And in his accomplishing your gracious desire I trust your Grace shall be as well content with that promotion of the valor for my master as any that he says." Lincoln, 1 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord legate de latore (sic) and cardinal. Endd.

1 March. 3999. JOHN FLOOKE* to DR. COTTISFORD.

R. O.

Foxe, v. App.

By means of "Mr. Wilkins alias [?] Chapman, of Bristol, father-in-law to Master Cole, one of your proctors," Gararde was taken at Westminster last night. He was brought before a justice of the peace, confessed that he was a fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and had broken out of your chamber. He has been committed to the gaol at Ilchester. On Monday, 9 March, there will be a sessions. Such wait was privily laid for him that he could not escape. As he was leaving Bristol he was captured. He is now in a courtier's coat and a buttoned cap. Requests that thanks may be sent to the mayor and aldermen for their zeal in this matter. Signed: Joh'es Floske, vicarius ecclesie parochialis Omnium Sanctorum, Bristol.

* Misprinted "Fooke" in Foxe.

1528.

Headed: Bristolliz, raptim primo die Marcii post vespere.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the, &c. Doctor Cottisford, commissary of Oxon, and rector of Lincoln College.

1 March. 4000. ERASMUS to QUEEN KATHARINE.

Er. Ep. p. 1062.

The nobility of her birth, her exalted rank, and her marriage with a most prosperous sovereign, are as nothing in contributing to her happiness, compared with her Majesty's gifts. It is most rare to find a lady, born and brought up at Court, placing all her hopes and solace in devotion and the reading of Scripture. Would that others, widows at all events, would take an example from her, and not widows only, but unmarried ladies, by devoting themselves to the service of Christ! He is a solid rock, the spouse of all pious souls, and nearer to each than the nearest tie. The soul that is devoted to this husband is not less grateful in adversity than in prosperity. He knows what is expedient for all, and is often more propitious when He changes the sweet for bitter. Every one must take up their cross; there is no entrance into heavenly glory without it. These are blessings which none can take away. Hopes the book which he has dedicated to her Majesty will receive her favorable attention. Basle, 1 March 1528.

Lat.

1 March. 4001. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

1. Grant by Wolsey, bishop of Durham, to the dean and canons "aforesaid," of the manors of Norton, Northt., and Barnes in Brechesley and Begham, Kent, with a pension from the rector of Bodvington, and lands in Norton and Preston, Northt.; Begham, Brechesley, Yaldyng, Fauntz, and Bawdewyns, Kent; and all the lands in those counties granted by the King to Wolsey by patent 4 March 17 Hen. VIII.*

Lat., draft, the latter part in Wriothesley's hand, pp. 3. Eadd. by Cromwell: "A gift from my Lord of the lands omitted upon the patent made by the general warrant."

P. 8.

2. For Thomas cardinal of York.

Grant of the site and precincts of the late monasteries of Bradwell, Bucks, and Horkisley Parva, Essex. Also of lands, &c., in Bradwell, Wolverton, Ellesburge and Palburie, Bucks; Norton, Northt.; Barnes-in-Brechesley and Begham, Kent; Bodesham, Camb.; Stokesby-in-Rydam, Norf.; Bodlington, Northt.; Loughton, Shenley, Thorneborough, Stonystratforde, Suke and Ellingburge, Bucks; Billing Magna, Northampton, Wikyn, Preston and Norton, Northt.; Crymplesham and Clare, Norf.; Houndesworth, Staff.; Yaldyng, Fauntz and Bawdewyns, Kent; lately belonging to the said monastery of Bradwell, and to those of Sandewell, Staff., Daventric, Northt., Lissnes and Tonbridge, Kent, and Begham, Sussex. Also of lands, &c., in Horkisley Parva, Boxstede, Horkisley Magna, Wiston, Wornynghforde, Fordham, Ardeley and Okle, Essex, lately belonging to the said monastery of Horkisley Parva. Greenwich, 27 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 1 March.

R. O.

3. Grant by Wolsey to John Higden, dean, and to the canons of his college at Oxford, of his manors of Bradwell, Bucks; Norton, Northt.; Barnes in Brechesley and Begham, Kent; Bodesham, Cambridgesh.;

* No patent to Wolsey of this date appears upon the rolls.

1328.

CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD—cont.

annuities of 8*l* from Stokesbye in Rydham, Norf.; 26*s*. 8*d*. from the rector of Bodyugton, Northt.; messuages, &c. in Bradwell, Wolverton, Padbury, Loughton, Shenley, Thorneborough, Stony Stratford, Stoke, and Ellesburge, Burks; Billyng Magna, Wykyn, Preston and Norton, Northt.; Bodesham, Camb.; Rydham, Stokesbye; Crymplesham and Clare, Norf.; Houndesworth, Staff.; and Begham, Brynchesley, Yalding, Fauntz and Baudewyns, Kent; granted to him by patent 1 March 19 Hen. VIII.

Draft, Lat., pp. 5. Endd.

2 March. 4002. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. i. 186.

Being informed by the Emperor's ambassador that the charge he had received through a servant of the lady Margaret relates to matters before the intimation, Wolsey gave him audience this afternoon. The Emperor, to avoid war, had offered to give the King hostages like those given for Tournay, for the delivery of the French king's children on such conditions as should be arranged. Though the King has declared war against the Emperor, the latter says he will make no war against England, as he sees no reason for hostility; that he will do anything to satisfy Henry in the matter of his debts; and that he is sending a gentleman to Henry by sea, whose arrival the ambassador hourly expects. Although he pretends that these things were dispatched before the intimation, Wolsey can see that means may be devised for a peace, which will be much to Henry's honor. Will repair to Hampton Court on Wednesday, and be with the King on Thursday to confer upon the matter. Westminster, 2 March. Signed.

Add.

2 March. 4003. GARDINER and FOX to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to Wolsey's instructions, having met within 12 leagues of Lyons a gentleman of the French king's privy chamber, who had letters from Sir Rich. (Rob.) Jerningham for the King and Wolsey, we asked him to deliver them, and read those directed to you. Tomorrow we hope to be at Lyons, and will go on with all diligence to the Pope. Bishop Staphilaus told us he would be at Lyons on Thursday next. We left him yesterday at Naverre, 45 leagues from Lyons. Rowen, 2 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

3 March. 4004. JOHN [LONGLAND], BISHOP OF LINCOLN, to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Elli. 3 Ser.
H. 77.

Thanks him for the dispensation for the use of meats necessary for his health. Since he wrote last about Oxford, has had fresh information about the corruption of youth by Mr. Garrett, and the erroneous books he brought thither, which it is thought came from a bookseller in London, named Gough, and there is a priced list in his hand. Many books were found hid under the earth. The chief companions of Garrett in this business were Mr. Clarke, Mr. Freer, Sir Fryth, Sir Dyott, and Ant. Delabere; and it appears by Garrett's writing that Dr. Farman, of Hony Lane, has had books from him, and his servant, John Goodale, has often brought books from London to Garrett. If taken, he might disclose many things about Garrett. Fears he has corrupted the monastery of Reading, for he has sold to the Prior more than 60 such books. Advises him to apprehend Gough and Goodale, and to call before him some of the principals. The others, who are young and penitent, can be treated by the Dean, Mr. Claymond, Dr. London, and the president of Magdalen College, according to Wolsey's commission. Would ride thither himself, if he were in health. Prays God to extinguish those abominable errors. It is necessary that the prior of Reading should be attended to. Holborn, 3 March. Signed.

1528.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate his good grace. Endd.

3 March.

4005. THOMAS HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Ellis, 3 Ser.
ii. 151.

Excuses his non-attendance upon Wolsey. Mr. Carre and Mr. Browne are absent, and there is none here but Norres and himself to attend the King in his bedchamber, or keep the pallet. Every afternoon when the weather is fair the King rides out hawking, or walks in the Park, not returning till late in the evening. Today, as the King was going to dinner, Mrs. Ann spoke to Hennege, saying she was afraid Wolsey had forgotten her, as he sent her no token with Forest;—she thought that was the reason he did not come to her. Hennege told her that his message was of such importance that Wolsey had forgotten to send a token. Was requested by my Lady her mother to give her a morsel of tunny; she said she had spoken to Forest to ask Wolsey for it. Requests Wolsey to help his brother the archdeacon of Oxford to obtain some part of his goods taken from him "by that lewd person which is in sanctuary at Bewdley." Has sent the King a report touching that person's demeanor by Mr. Crofts and Mr. Gryville, and showing what they have done in the matter.

Tonight the King sent him down with a dish to Mistress Ann (Boleyn) for her supper. She caused Hennege to sup with her, and wished she had some good meat from Wolsey, as carps, shrimps or other. "I beseech your Grace, pardon me that I am so bold to write unto your Grace hereof; it is the conceit and mind of a woman." Was ordered by the King to bid Forest remain here all night. Expects he will be dispatched in the morning. Windsor, 3 March. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: "To my Lord's Grace." Endd.: "A letter of Thomas Hennege, 3 March 1527."

4 March.

4006. FRANCIS I. to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. i. ii. f.]
i. 162.
B. M.

In favor of Pascal Spinol, a Genoese merchant, who complains of the arrest by the King of England of a quantity of alum. Begs he will see justice done. St. Germain en Laye, 4 March. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.: "A Mons. le Cardinal d'York mon bon amy."

4 March.

4007. STEPHEN GARDINER and EDW. FOX to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
Pocock, i. 83.

Arrived here last night on our way from Paris. Are making arrangements with our friends here for our further progress. Intend to leave tomorrow for Jeanes (Genoa), and go on by sea to Luke, and so to Florence, which is within three days' journey of Orvieto; so that we trust to be with the Pope in nine days. The protonotary Gambara follows us in post, and bishop Staphileus will be here tomorrow. He promised to follow with all speed, and seemed only afraid all things should be sped without him. Lyons, 4 March. Signed by Gardiner, for himself and Fox.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4 March.

4008. THOS. WALL, WINDSOR HERALD, to [WOLSEY]

Galba, B. ii. c.
49.
B. M.

Arrived at Calais on Wednesday, 19 Feb. Spent Thursday night at Nyenport, where the bally presented him with wine. Dined next day at Bruges, where Mons. de Malyngham, "Scoutes" of the town, came to his lodging, and gave him eight pots of wine. He asked certain questions, and said that the English were well and honestly treated. After dinner rode 15 m. to Ecclu, and slept there. About midnight, word was brought that all the 1528.

THOS. WALL, WINDSOR HERALD, to [WOLSEY]—cont.

English whom he had met between Bruges and Gravelingae were arrested, and their goods. Next day, Saturday, came to Antwerp. Sent for Hacket to Zealand, but the messenger was prevented from crossing by the wind. On account of this, and because the people of the country said plainly he had come for defiance, went to the court at Malynes, on Wednesday the 25th, and told Hoghstrate of his coming. Was sent for by my Lady. Went to her at 4 o'clock, and presented her with the King's letters. She welcomed him, and, congratulating the King on his good health, said that the King in his letter touched toward war, saying that the Emperor had chosen war, although all his letters to her are to the contrary, and express his intention to refuse it unless he were compelled; that here they would do the uttermost they could for peace; and finally she desired him to return to his lodging, as the letter required deliberation. Said the King did not wish for war, unless compelled, and that the reason of his coming was to know, if the intimation of war were really passed, which the King still believed to be true, whether the intercourse here shall be kept for six weeks, as accorded by the King and Emperor. She answered that she hoped no such thing would happen. There were in presence, the card. of Liege, the lord of Palerme, lords Hoghstrate, Buren, Fienues, and others. On Thursday, as Hacket had not come, delivered a copy of his letter to the Council; but as my Lady was ill at ease, they would not then deliver it to her. Went thither again in the afternoon. She asked for a copy of the articles; which he refused, but read them to her. Hacket arrived on Friday. Malynes, 4 March 1527.

Hol., pp. 3.

4 March.

Galles, B. ix.

46.

B. M.

4009. JOHN HACKET to [WOLSEY]

Wrote last on Feb. 14, by Thos. Lee, merchant of the Staple. On the 26th received a letter from Windsor, being in Zelland, to see about his wife's lands, and to remove his household stuff to the Court, which he intends to follow from time to time. On receiving Windsor's letter, returned to Court on the 28th. Windsor brought him Wolsey's letter, and said he had delivered the King's letter, and a copy of Hacket's, in French, to lady Margaret, and had showed her the articles.

Sent immediately to Hoghstrate to ask him to inform my Lady of his coming. John de Leschault soon after came to tell him that my Lady had sent for the lord of Barrow, and on his coming she would also send for him. The said Lord arrived, Feb. 28. Went with Windsor to my Lady, there being present the cardinal of Liège, the lords of Palerme, Barrow, Fyennes, Hoghstrate, Buren, Brabanson, and others. The copy of Hacket's letter had not been delivered to her, and as it contained matters of importance the Council wished to deliberate upon it; and Hacket and Windsor returned.

The next day, about 7 p.m., Leschault came to say that the letters had been again read, and answer should be given on the 2nd. Were called to the Council on the 3rd. Hogstrate said that, as they had complained that English merchants and ships were arrested and ill treated, my Lady had sent to all the ports and towns to bid them abide in the arrest, and treat the English honorably; that she does not intend to have war, or any intimation thereof, unless the country is constrained corps defendant; that the restraint is only to know how the Emperor's subjects are treated in England. Though we say that the restraint in England is released, and that many Flemish ships are come home, they say that they know by Spaniards that all the Spanish ships are still arrested; and as they are all under one master, they can do no less than restrain English ships here, for the King's subjects will be treated here as the Emperor's are there. Asked for the despatch of Windsor, but they said that as the matter was important, it would be five or six days before he would be despatched. Fears that it will be longer, for they go softly to work. Malynes, 4 March 1527. Signed.

1528.

Pp. 4.

4 March. 4010. JOHN HACKET TO TUKE.

Galba, B. 13.

48.

B. M.

Since writing to Wolsey, dined with the cardinal of Liege and other lords. Heard divers things said about war and peace between them and England. They said they would prefer the latter, but, if war were necessary, would defend themselves on all sides. My Lady has given him a passport for his letters to come and go. If Tuke does not send the man back, he can keep the passport, for Hacket has paid for it. Though they did not wish to take money for it, would not be beholden to them for such a small matter. My lord of Palermo, having sent for him, said that my Lady wishes to preserve peace, and will send ambassadors to the King, and detain Windsor that he may go with them. She wishes Hacket to write to Wolsey for a safe-conduct for them. Machlyng, 4 March 1527.

Has been sent for to the Council. Palermo and Hoghstrate desire him to write to Wolsey for a safe-conduct for the provost of Cassel and John de Lascault with twelve or fifteen persons. Sends, therefore, another letter to Wolsey. Windsor will stay till he knows Wolsey's pleasure.

Hol., pp. 2.

4 March. 4011. JOHN HACKETT TO WOLSEY.

R. O.

After obtaining a passport for the bearer, was sent for to Court, and desired by my lord of Palermo and Hoghstrate to write for a safe-conduct for the provost of Cassel and John Lescault, going to England to make answer to the King's letter brought by Windsor, whom they will not allow to return except with them. Till the safe-conduct comes, the ambassadors will lie on the frontiers of Flanders. The Council have also sent the enclosed letter to the Emperor's ambassador in England, of which Hackett knows not the contents. They readily granted the passport for the sending of these letters from me and Windsor, trusting that we would write nothing but what was honorable. Stephen Solompe, a servant of lady Margaret's, who was in England on Monday last, has brought some news,—God knows what; but Hoghstrate says the Emperor's ambassador in England is badly used, being so straitly kept that none can speak with him alone. Some of the Council also say that the English ships would have been released this day, and Windsor despatched four or five days after, but for a letter which arrived this morning, sent by the King to Buren, and dated 14 Feb., stating that the King and the Emperor were at utter war. Malines, 4 March 1527. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

4 March. 4012. NORFOLK TO WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thanks him for his letter of 28 Feb., ordering, among other things, that the wheat at Colchester should be sold to the inhabitants. According to the King's commission last week, when on his journey to Walsingham, Norfolk appointed divers gentlemen of Suffolk to meet him here to-day about the prices of corn. Sends a letter from Sir Robert Drewry, showing how divers lewd persons of Bury meant to have made an unlawful assembly. He has committed the offenders to Bury gaol, and made a searching inquiry to find if others were implicated; for which Norfolk thinks he deserves thanks. Advises that a letter be directed to Sir Robert and Thomas Jermy, under-steward of the franchise of Bury, to convey them to the King, so their punishment there would deter others more than here,—unless they can be lawfully put to death, which Sir Robert thinks they cannot, as they did not act. Wolsey will remember that my lord of Suffolk imprisoned divers persons at Norwich for like offences; "and for my part, in Suffolk, I have caused some, on the market days, to be set openly in the stocks, some on the fair days on the pillory, some kept in prison in Yewwyche and in mine own house, and after banished them the country; and yet all this can be no warring to the light ill-disposed persons." Thinks some more fearful punishment necessary. Wishes to know Wolsey's pleasure in time to put it into execution before his departure to London on Monday or Tuesday next. On Sunday is to have with him a number of the most substantial clothiers of Suffolk, whom he must "handle with good words, that the cloth-making be not suddenly laid down," in consequence of a rumor from London that English merchants are detained in Flanders. Hexon, 4 March.

1528.

NORFOLK TO WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

2. Persons examined by Sir Rob. Drury.

R. O.

John Davy of Bury, thacker, said before the wife of one Cage and others, at dinner, on Saturday the last day of February, that the Monday following would be moonlight all night, and on Tuesday there would be 200 or 300 good poor fellows together who would have a living, "and he that had most should have least, peradventure." He induced his servant John to be of the company, telling him that all the poor men in all the streets in Bury were of mind so to do, except those of Northgatestrete. Davy confessed, before the abbot of Bury, Drury and others, that one Rob. Andrew, a smith in Bury, agreed to join him; and both Davy and Andrew acknowledged they had arranged to go up to the King and my lord Cardinal with as many as they could assemble, and beseech a remedy for the living of poor men. Two pinnars, accused by Andrew, acknowledged that they had agreed to join them. Signed by Drury.

P. 1.

4013. SIR ROBT. DRURY TO WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends the three men whom he committed to ward for their seditious language, mentioned in his writing sent to Wolsey by Norfolk. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate.

4 March.

Calig. B. n.

379.

B. M.

4014. BORDER CORRESPONDENCE.

i. "Copy of a letter sent from the lord Dacres to the earl of Angus."

Had sent him a letter from Wolsey and one from himself. At his meeting yesterday with lord Maxwell, for redress of the burning of Netherby, could get no determinate answer. Is surprised Angus did not send some one to the meeting to force Maxwell to redress. Received a demand touching the burning of Holthouse. Sends him the correspondence. Will not meet Maxwell any more. Naward, 4 March. [N.B.—Before the day of the month Nos. xxv], and v. are struck through with the pen.]

P. 1. The heading in Dacre's hand.

ib., 378.

ii. (1.) "Copy of a bill geven in to the wardens of the Marches upon the party of England," against William and Peter Meffett, Andrew Litell, George Scott, and John Armestrange, for coming to Netherby.

(2.) Lord Maxwell's answer that at the same time lord Dacre and Sir Chr. Dacre made an inroad into Catterdy, and burnt "the Hole house."

(3.) "Copy of the bill given in by lord Maxwell on the part of Scotland. John Armestrange, of Stabgate, complains against the Dacres for the same 1528.

(4.) Dacre's answer that the Holl house is not in Scotland, but in the Debatable Ground.

P. 1.

4 March. 4015. LUPSET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Need not write to him at length, as George Hampton can report everything about Master Dean (Wynter). His hopes have been disappointed, his fears more than justified. The Dean's goodwill to himself, however, is even more than he expected, and no one could be more inclined to probity, humanity, and letters. Saw even greater symptoms than he expected of his good disposition (probae indolis), but in other things he was disappointed with the whole house, which was not furnished sufficiently either with wine or wood, and he was spending money at a great rate. A large part of the year's allowance which Wolsey made to Lupset has been consumed beforehand, and Wolsey must not be surprised if he petition him one day for an increase. Has determined in his own mind the course of life and studies to be pursued with his pupil when he is strong enough, but has not made a beginning hitherto, both because he has been but so short a time here, and because it is the holiday season in which, at Paris especially, people indulge in jokes and antics. Moreover, the agreeable presence of Stephen [Gardiner] and Fox has given him other duties. Paris, 4 non. Martii.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2. Add.

5 March. 4016. SIR JOHN JERNEGAN and others to [WOLSEY].

Otho. E. vi
291.

B. M.

[According to his] letters "in London the 27th day of February," (have arrested a ship?) laden with grain, which chanced to come into Leystoft Rode, "some being str(angers, and some) Englishmen." They have caskets of the customet of Lynn, to colour their subtle imagination. Yet we have made restraint [of the] last coming ships, as we did of the first. Sent a breviate of the caskets, and names of the persons so privily conveying themselves. Have spoken to the bailiffs and customers at Yarmouth to make restraint of carriage of corn, malt, and grain, and made them send to Blakeney, Wynton, and other places in Norfolk, for execution of the premises. Cannot stow away the corn and malt contained in the first ships as [Wolsey] commands; all Leystoft has not room to receive it. Many of the ships are so deep they cannot enter Yarmouth Haven, while in the Road they are liable to injury. Leystoft, in Suffolk, 5 March. Signed: John Jernegan—John Harry—Robert Hoddes—John Botolff.

P.S.—Since writing have seen Mr. Brian, customer of Yarmouth, who says that a persolvant was with him this morning to command all sails, both English and foreign, to be taken, and all corn found in the ships to be left till the King's pleasure be known. If Wolsey will send orders for the building up of the Blackhouse at Leystoft, it will go the better forward.

Pp. 2, badly mutilated.

5 March. 4017. JOHN [LONGLAND] BISHOP OF LINCOLN, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Faxe, v. App.

The wicked man, Master Garrot, who escaped from Oxford, is now taken, as Wolsey will see by the letters enclosed, and is in Helmsley prison, the common gaol of Somersetshire. The commissary of Oxford has made great search, "and did set for his taking Dover, Rye, Winchelsea, Hampton, Chester, and Bristown." He was at Bedminster, a mile from Bristol, the last day of Feb. Advises Wolsey to order his examination as soon as possible, as he has many adherents, who may thus be discovered. Now that he is recaptured, thinks his escape was fortunate, as so much has been discovered by the search for him. Master Freer was taken yesterday at the Black Friars, London, immediately after Wolsey's departure. Garrett, Clarke, and Freer have done much mischief; "for the love of God let them be handled thereafter." Fears they have infected many other parts of England. Hopes he will remember the prior of Reading. Hopes now, while Wolsey is at Windsor, he will send a chaplain to put the prior in custody, and search for his books, in whose hands they be. Wolsey might find out, "many infectious persons" from the parson of Honey Lane and his servant Goodale, by keeping them in custody for a while. Holborn, 5 March. Signed.

1528.

JOHN [LONGLAND,] BISHOP OF LINCOLN, to WOLSEY—cont.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

5 March.

4018. RIC. GRESHAM to WOLSEY.

Galba, B. ix.

12.

B. M.

Ellis, 3 Ser.

ii. 80.†

All Englishmen, with their ships and goods, are arrested here, because the Emperor's ambassadors and divers ships were arrested in England. The bearer, Jochem Howstetter, of Osboroughe, one of the richest merchants in this land, and a great importer of wheat to London, goes expressly to obtain Wolsey's favor in certain affairs. He has very great power in the court and in Almain, and if Wolsey wishes anything done here, there is no person so able to bring it about. He has also taken great pains to help Gresham and other Englishmen, and obtained a safe-conduct for him and his two brethren, who are here arrested. It will not help them, as they were arrested before it was granted, and he has to come to the court and prove that he had it before his arrest; which done, he trusts to be at liberty. Neweporte, 5 March xv^{xx}

Hol., p. 1. Add.: [To my] lord Cardinal's [good] grace. Endd.

6 March.

4019. FRANCIS I.

Cal. D. x. 143.

B. M.

• • • • • "singulare nostrum um tranquillitatemque nos ad has literas in presenti ndos ponamus, quot mala, quot scelera passim in gravissima Dei Optimi Maximi offensione. Ex quo fac[to] Turcis ita creverit audacia ut præter alias multas Rhodum, Belgradum, oppida munitissima vi inte nisi ipsorum locorum possessoribus resistente, dum inter se crudelissime gerendo intenti sunt. Etenim Imp[er]ator qui omnium, potissimum vero Sedis Apostolicæ patrociniū abest, ut tot calamitatibus pro viribus obviam ire conetur foveat, nec ullis licet amplissimis conditiōibus ad pacificationem vero satis constat quī ejus signis militabant eodem non modo stupris, caedibus, incendiis nullo jure pœnæ delevisse, sed quod im ipse manus injecisse violenter, quem velut in locum Petri suffectum [Christi in] terris vicarium veneramus; eidemque per aliquot menses detento, s interim sua fungendi facultate, libertatem iniquissimo vendidisse penas jure constitutas incurrendo, quibus tamen facinoribus nequ idem Imperator, obdurato animo pacem etiam aspernatus est, univers quidem nos imprimis, Serenissimus item rex Angliæ, frater et per conjunctissimus, ceteræ pariter Italiæ confederatæ civitates modis e etiam nostro dispendio eum ipsum dudum invitabamus, ut et summi pot vindicaremus bellorumque declinarem[us] incommoda; quod vobis, pote[n]tissimi amici et consanguinei carissimi, significare operæ pretium esse d[uximus], oratores nostros contra jus gentium nuper detinendos jussit per[niciosissimo] exemplo. Nunc vero confectos quosdam per universam His[paniam] pro[curat] rumores, non stetisse per se, quin pax fieret, se pecuniarum ad bellum acrius quam antea gerend[um] fecto se pen conatibus obsistere cogimur in amississimos convertissemus, neque enim 1528.

ulla latius dominan mis tantum abhorreamus quantum debemus a Christiana da, quippe pro cuius tranquillitate atque adversum t [pat]rimonii partem ut videre est impendere obtulerim[us] ini principes, amici, consanguinei carissimi et a vobis uni em venera-tionemque illius, qui pro genere humano redimendo p[re]passus est] in quam maximo possimus studio rogamus, obtestamurque ut pro Chr[istiana] religionis et reipublice incolumitate, commemoratarum rerum om[n]ium, quem par est, rationem habere velitis, nec ullo modo committere, ut unius inextinguibili imperii ampliandi libidine tam nefariorum sceler[um] et religioni et Christi vicario impune insultaverint, Christianaque re[publica] gravioribus amplius conflictetur procellis. Cui quidem non minus in s[uo] necessario operi exequendo nos et personam et opes nostras omnes pro[fun-] dere] constitimus; quod idem factorum se proficitur potentissimus pr[inceps], frater charissimus, aeternoque fiedere conjunctissimus, rex Anglia, Fidei Defensor, egregiorum quorumque operum auctor simul et fautor acerrimus.
 "Potentissimi principes, consanguinei, amici, et confederati carissimi [Deum] Optimum Maximum consilia vestra perpetuo secundare precamur."
 St. Germain en Laye, 6 March 1527, 14 [Fras. I.]

Mutilated and slightly defaced.

6 March. 4020. WILLIAM LORD DACRE to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. vii.
104.
B. M.

Has received his letter, and a copy of one from Angus. Has written to the Earl. Sends a copy. Maxwell had desired a meeting for redress. Gave Angus notice thereof. At the meeting on Tuesday, demanded redress for the burning of Netherby by Maxwell, which the latter disputed. Gave Angus notice thereof. Wishes to know his resolution with regard to Cannonby, the inhabitants of which claim to belong to Scotland. They refer in proof to a bill made in Henry VII.'s time. Believes it to be in the Debateable Ground. Thinks it should be wasted, because, if the Scots demanded redress, it must then come to trial. Has burned and wasted that part of the Debateable Ground "which stode in holles, where as a grete booste coult not com." Will not leave a house or hold standing in it. On Shrove Tuesday,* when he was with the earls of Northumberland and Cumberland at Alawick, the Armstrongs burned a mill at Gillesland. Has agreed with Cumberland. Naward, 6 March. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: "To my lord Legate." Endd.: "From my lord Dacre, the 6th of March 1527."

6 March. 4021. SIR WM. WALDEGRAVE.

His will, 26 Jan. 1525. Proved, 6 March 1528. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 626.

6 March. 4022. LUFSET to WOLSEY.

B. O.

Gave letters to Hampton to show Wolsey the condition we are in. Writes at present only what he feels to be his duty touching Walter, who is so dear to us all, especially to Master Dean, that he can hardly speak in high enough terms of him. He is not only a most useful and agreeable companion to the Dean, but is so indispensable to him that he could hardly get on in this city without him. Fears that he will return to England cum rem uxorem conetur; but he will never try to escape from Wolsey's authority. Begs Wolsey to consider how injurious it would be to us to lose a man so much attached, so well known in France, and so adroit in business. Moreover, what is perhaps most important, no one understands the Dean's health better. Paris, pridie non. Martii.

1528.

LUPSET to WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

7 March. 4023. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Writes as Geo. Hampton says he is going to his Grace after giving the letters to Walter. Praises him for his good service and his diligence in buying furniture. He will hear from Hampton how they live, and in what manner they are received by and receive the noblemen of the country. Are sometimes obliged to spend a little more, for the sake of their office and honor; which he hopes will do honor to the Cardinal, and no harm to their purpose. Paris, Nonis Martii.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: Rmo, &c. Card. Ebor. Anglie primati, a latere legato, &c. Endd.: Decanus Wellen., mens. Martii 1527.

7 March. 4024. LAURENCE STARBER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has not been able to write to him in pursuance of his commands touching the search for metals. Would have taken an opportunity on returning to his own country a short while ago, but will explain everything when he has the power. Will write now what he has been able to ascertain of the affairs of the Germans and Turks. Eric duke of Brunswick is going to Italy with 800 horse for the Emperor. Mark Sittich of Ems is enrolling foot soldiers to the number of 10,000, of whom the most part are obtained, to go along with him; but nothing is yet known of the plan of the expedition, or when it is to be. Wrote to Wolsey from Antwerp that the Turk was making great preparations. This is confirmed. He has taken a strong castle in Crabatis, which was like the gate of Hungary, and conquered the lands which lately came under the sway of king Ferdinand. The name of the castle is Castell Geetz (?). The Hungarians, however, have repelled the Turks. The Waywode, who has possession of seven castles, does not cease to make war upon Ferdinand, but has done little harm. Ferdinand has an army of 1,700 light horse and 500 foot from the kingdom of Bohemia and Moravia. The Diet, which was to meet on 1 March, is proceeding, although doing little. The Princes do not attend; if Ferdinand were to appear there it would have great influence. Requests that letters for him may be addressed to the English house at Antwerp. Nuremberg, non. Martii. Signed.

Lat., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

7 March. 4025. DON YNIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Requesting discharge of the sureties given for the goods of some Spaniards, which were taken during the war as French merchandise by lord Sands, who was then at Calais. It was proved by the Emperor's council that the owners were the Emperor's subjects, and he wrote to Sands upon the subject, but he still delays their release. Lady Margaret now writes to Wolsey in their behalf. 7 March. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: R. D. Cardinali Eboracensi.

[March.] 4026. SANDYS to SIR THOS. CHENEY.

Calig. E. iii.

15.

B. M.

... into Flaunders, whiche is that into the contrey next to theym, and have taken thear, and have caried theym into Gaunt with is mewtenyng

1528.

amonge theym selfis thear, as at Guyenez the 27th daie of Februar. And the they have take up and billed 500 men of werre and promisse theym wages. Mounceur de Recourt cam the 20th day of Februar to Seint Omers to have men of werre, which the towne wold not suffer. A[nd] they were not concluded whoo shuld be their capitaine horsemen in Seint Omers, which on Tuysdaie the xxliij. departed thence, all saving 40 light horsez, which as it commaundement of my lady Margarete, whoo did send a post before and demanded the maire and burgeses to take hede and not to care for lowyng of the cuntry, and that th men of werre thear was that the first course they wold ma[ke] the marchez of Guysnez, and the garnyson of Turway[n doch] ronne dally before the gates of Seint Omers and Ayry and h whete and catell for vitailyng of their own towne of Turw[ayn]; which newes be conteyned in the seid letre dated the 27th daie. Also an other letre dated the 23rd daie of Febr. that the 22nd daie [of] the same moneth there came herbyngers into Seint Omers and to[ok] logyng for 300 horsemen and 1,000 fotemen, and that the[y] sh[ould] remayn thear oon or twayn nights and soo departe to Dornam and . . . lye in garnyson and kepe the frontiers of Flaunders, and that sayings was in Seint Omers that another garnyson shuld com [to] Gravelyn and that Fernando shuld come into Flaunders [a]way all the catell

. thear be certein garnisons com into every t[own] soo that they may make a thousand men in lij [Heard by an] other letter, dated the said last day of February, that upon Fri[day last] there came to St. Omers 300 foot and horsemen of Dissilstains, and the same day 300 foot [came] to Ayre, and that they look dally for [the comin]g of Dissilstain and a band with him. It is reported at St. Omers that there will be peace between England and and that the Burgundians intend to lay siege to the castle of Ottynge beside Arde.

Heard by another letter, dated Guisnes, 2 March, that Ravenstein had mustered 1,000 foot at St. Omers on Sunday, but only retained 500 of the most able men, and that it is said at St. Omers that there will be peace before Midlent; but they are strengthening themselves, and increasing their garrisons.

Asks him to send the news to the King and Cardinal. The King gave him respite on account of his sickness, but he wishes to know if he shall make more haste by reason [of the] news, and whether he shall bring with him the 60 men hor[sed], whom he has ready.

"eny ayde that he shuld to com over with a band of men with I wold be glad to assist theym to my I have this said present daie received a send unto hym by Mounsieur de Byez, which [I send] you herein closed to thetent ye may a[dvertise] the King [of the same].

"Sir, I here say that Satillion (Chatillon) is come over, wh know parte of his newez by this berer, such as m be knowen, and that ye will make my h to my lord marquess of Excetor, Sir John Russell, [the master] of the horsez, and other my frinds." At the [Vyne], Saturday, 10 at night. Signed.

Pp. 3, mutilated. Add.

7 March.

R. O.

4027. RIC. WATKYNs to WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Was so delighted by his letter that he almost died of joy, like the Roman woman mentioned by Valerius Maximus. Will take his advice, and that of the munificent Brian Tuke, though he thinks the position too great for his powers. Asks him to write fuller particulars of his wishes, and whether he is to bring little Robert into England, or leave him here with some English person. Genyns is expecting Hews, the Queen's chaplain, dally from Italy, and will go to England with him. Asks him to tell this to Mr. Carter. The courier is hurrying him, and he finishes this two hours after receiving Edward's letter. Non. Mart.

1528.

RIC. WATKYNs to WILLIAM EDWARDS—cont.

Hol., Lat., pp. 3. Add.: To the right worshipful [and my mo]ste singular good master, Master William Edwards, [servant to m]y lord Car[dinal's] gr[ace], be this delivered ith the most le at Westmon. besides London.

7 March. 4028. SIR THOMAS MORE.

Wilkins, III.
711.

Licence granted to Sir Thomas More, by Cuthbert bishop of London, to read and keep certain books of Luther, and certain heretical publications in English, in order that he may write an answer to them in the vernacular tongue. 7 March 1527.

Lat.

7 March. 4029. HERESY.

Harl. MS. 421,
f. 11.
B. M.

Headed:—Hakkar.

John Pykas, in the parish of St. Nicholas, Colchester, baker; Thomas Matthew, fishmonger, in the parish of St. James; William brother of John Pykas, servant of Thomas Matthew.

Christopher Ravyn. (Mem., that he formerly abjured his heresy before bishop Fitzjames.) "Item, he (Hakkar) said" that Chr. Ravynes, tailor of Witham, communicated with him about a quarter of a year past, at his house at Witham. That once or twice a year, for the last four years, he has gone to his house, and taught him the commandments; that the sacrament of the altar is not the body of God, but a remembrance of God, who is in heaven; that worshipping of images, offering and going on pilgrimages, was nought; "and that the one taught the other [in] such [l]earnings." Also that one Thomas Hills, Ravyn's servant, is of the same sect, can read well, and has a printed book of the New Testament in English, which he bought in London. John and Richard Chapman, born in Colchester, Ravyn's servants, followed their "reading and doctrine;" and Hilles is a great reader amongst them.

27. Jan. Hacker.—He says that John Gator, Stere and — Knight, founders (the last of whom married Dr. Beele's mother) of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, were of his sect, and that their teaching and reading was at one Russell's house, at the gate of Birdes Alley, against St. Stephen's Church, Coleman Street. These three continued in his company for six years.

That one Cony, clerk of St. Antony's besides the Frere Augustine's Gate, and his wife, were of his sect about six years past. He had a book called "the bayly" from the respondent. That Thomas Vincent, father-in-law of him who was burnt for heresy about 14 years past, taught the respondent all his heresies. He continued with Vincent two or three years, and received from him the Gospel of Matthew in English. Thomas Austyne, Vincent's son-in-law, also followed his opinions. Vincent gave the respondent a book of the Ten Commandments, which he gave to one Gune of Witney. That John Pykas, of Colchester, has a book, partly English, partly Latin, beginning "The most excellent and glorious Lord, &c.," and another called "Disputatio inter fratrem et clericum," and a book of the respondent's called "The Prieke of Conscience." That John Stacy, bricklayer, of Coleman Street, kept in his house a man named John to write the Apocalypse in English, the expences being borne by John Seroot, grocer, of Coleman Street. Seroot had a copy of "The Bayly." Elizabeth Newman, of St. Thomas Apostle, caused the respondent to change his name to Richardson. Thomas Rawlyn, tallow-chandier, Aldermanbury, is of the same sect, and was taught by Hacker. (Note in margin: "Vide in abjurations Johanne Austye, quod cum in responsionibus suis, ubi concordat cum isto.") John Tewkesbury, haberdasher, near St. Martin's Gate, Dorothy Long, of St. Giles', Colchester, and Marion Westden, wife of Thomas Matthew, of Colchester, are also his disciples. (Note in margin: "Nota quod istas duas in abjurations Christophori Ravyn, in depositione Dionisie Ravyn.")

1528.

London.—Thomas Philip, pointmaker, dwelling against the Little Conduit in Chepe, is a chief reader and teacher of Hacker's opinions. *Hacker met him often in William Russell's house for five or six years, and once a quarter at his own house, where he communicated to them his opinions. Philip sometimes read a book of Paul, sometimes a book of the Epistles. Philip, Russell, and Laurence Maxwell, bricklayer, of St. Olave's, Silver Street, were often at the house of Lawrence Swarffer, tailor, then living at Shoreditch, now at St. John of Jerusalem in England.

Names of others taught by Hacker within the last six years. Thomas Goffray, tailor, of Coleman Street; the wife of Bulley, saddler, at the sign of the Red Cross and the Bullhead, Cheapside; Mrs. Etyes, at the sign of the Ball, in Friday Street; Thomas Tyllesworth, tailor, of Bugge Row; Alice ———, now married, then living at the White Hart, against the Savoy; and Robert Tyllesworth, tailor, of Abchurch Lane.

Hacker, 20 Jan.—Mother Bristow, dwelling at the Castle in Wood Street, had the Gospel of Luke in English from him, which he had from Thomas Blessed, of Swan Alley, Coleman Street. She was well learned in these opinions before he read or taught here.

He says also that the following belonged to his sect: Stevyn Carde, weaver, of Ware; Henry Tuck; William Mason, tailor, formerly of Bishopsgate Street, now of the Bell, in New Fish Street; John Household, of All-hallows the Less, but not since he abjured; William Raylond, of the parish of the Holy Trinity, Colchester, who is a reader and teacher, and has the Apocalypse in English; John Best, of St. Botolph's, Colchester, a reader and teacher; William and Antony Becwyth, of Branktree, husbandmen, who had learned these opinions before he knew them; Robert Wyth and Mother Becwyth. He went to Branktree twice or thrice a year to communicate with them of his learning.

Pp. 8. The folios are numbered, in a contemporary hand, cxxix.-cxxxii.

Harl. MS. 421,
f. 17.
B. M.

2. Replies of John Pykas to articles administered to him, 7 March 1527, before Cuthbert bishop of London, in a chapel within his palace at London, in the presence of Matthew Greston, writer of the proceedings, Thomas Forman, S.T.P., Richard Sparchford, John Tunstal, Thomas Chambre, chaplains, and others.

To the first and second articles he confesses. To the rest, from the third to the eleventh, he replies that about five years ago his mother, at Bury, told him not to believe in the sacraments of the Church, gave him Paul's Epistles in English, and bade him live according to the Epistles and Gospels, and not after the way that the Church teaches. About two years ago he bought an English New Testament in Colchester, from a Lombard of London, for 4s., which "he kept for the space of four years." Hearing that these books were forbidden, he gave it and the Epistles to his mother. Fell into his errors by reading these books. Has often taught that the sacrament of the altar after consecration is only bread and wine, in the house of Thomas Mathew, in presence of his wife, Marion Westden, her daughter, and William Pykas; in the houses and presence of John Thompson, fletcher, Dorothy Long, Robert Best, Mrs. Swayn, John Gyrling, John Bradley, blacksmith,

* In margin, "xix. Februarii."

† Note in margin—"Concordat cum Johanna Anst, in abjurations sua."

1528.

HERESY—cont.

and his wife, Thomas Parker, weaver, Margaret, wife of Thomas Bowgas, Mrs. Cowbridge, widow, of Colchester, John Hobbett, of Est Danyland, Robert Bate, Richard Collins alias Jonson, weaver of Boxstede, and John Wyley, of Horkesley, weaver. All these persons believed the said articles. Has also asserted that there is no baptism but of the Holy Ghost, which he learned in the English New Testament, from the saying of John the Baptist. Thought that when Christ came, the baptism in water should cease, and no other be used but baptism in the Holy Ghost. Has also said that privy confession of sins to God was sufficient; but has yearly been confessed and "housled," that people should not wonder upon him. Has heard Mr. Bynney and other preachers at Ipswich say that it was but folly to go on pilgrimages, for saints are but stocks and stones, and cannot speak to a man nor do him any good, and that it is no good to pray to saints, for they are but servants and can hear no man's prayer. Spread these opinions after hearing them preached.

Mr. Bynney's sermon was "most ghostly." Has often said that God never made fasting, and that the Church has no authority to make it, and none should be kept. Fasted only on "the Imbren dayes." Has said that God made no holy days but Sunday, and no man can make other; that the Pope or other men of the Church have no authority to grant pardons. All these persons have gladly heard these things taught and disputed, and, though not as learned as he, have affirmed them. Has now in his custody The Prick of Conscience, The Seven Wise Masters of Rome, which he had from a friar at Colchester,—a book beginning O thou most glorious and excellent Lord, which he had from old father Hacker alias Ebb,—and Communicatio inter fratrem et clericum, which he had from his brother William, and lost about a year ago.

Gave no answer to the twelfth. Confesses the thirteenth. Signed: Be me,—John Pokes, of Colchester.

Pp. 4. Contemporary foliation, clxxx.-i.

Hark MS. 421.
f. 15.
B. M.

3. 24 Feb. 1527. In the Long Chapel, near the north gate of St. Paul's, London, before Dr. Geoffrey Wharton, vicar of Cuthbert, bishop of London, Sebastian Heris, curate of Kensington, whom Wharton absolved from the sentence of excommunication, confessed that he had the New Testament translated into English by William Hoehyn, priest, and friar — Roy, and Unio Dissidentium, containing Luther's heresy. Wharton then charged him not to keep or dispose of any such books, nor to hold intercourse with persons suspected of heresy, nor to visit London for more than a day and night, but to live at a distance of four miles for two years. In presence of Matthew Grafton, notary, John Darell, B.D., official of the archdeacon of London, Henry Bousfel, notary, proctor-general of the court of Canterbury, and Richard Nele.

2 March 1527. In the Consistory of London, before Dr. Wharton, Thomas Mathew, John Pykas, and Henry Raylond, of Colchester, appeared, and were summoned to attend on the bishop of London, at his palace, at 1 p.m. the same day. He pronounced William Raylond contumacious for his non-appearance, summoned him to appear on the next day, and as he did not, excommunicated him in writing. On March 12 he absolved him from the sentence, and enjoined him to say daily for three days five Paternosters and five Ave Marias.

3 March 1527. The bishop of London, in a chapel in his palace, administered to John Pykas, of Colchester, the articles which had been administered to John Hacker, adding that he had had a Testament translated by Hoehyn and Roye, in spite of its condemnation, and other books containing heresy, and summoned as witnesses John Bowghton, of Colchester, and John Hacker.

1528.

4 March. The Bishop, in a chamber in his palace, questioned Henry Raylond whether the true body of Christ was in the sacrament of the altar,—to which he replied that it was; whether pilgrimages were profitable,—to which he assented; and whether he had formerly said that the Virgin Mary of Ipswich was an idol,—which he denied. The Bishop then dismissed him, charging him to appear when summoned. Present: Geoffrey Wharton, Robert Rydley, S.T.P., Richard Sparchford, M.A., and Matthew Grefton, notary.

5 March. In the chapel within his palace, the Bishop received the testimony of Thomas Mathew, of Colchester, to the articles ministered to John Pykas. Mathew abjured, submitted himself to correction, and was absolved by the Bishop. Present: Robert Rydley, John Reyston, S.T.P., Richard Sparchford, M.A., John Tunstall, chaplain, Nicholas Tunstall, T. Downman, Thomas Pykenton, and James Multon. The Bishop ordered him to give in alms 6s. 8d. during five weeks in Lent; viz., 16d. to the prisoners in Colchester Castle, 8d. to prisoners elsewhere in the town, and the remainder to the poor of the town, in bread and herrings; and that he must break the loaves before distributing them to the prisoners. Also that he must appear the week after Whitsunday to receive the rest of his penance.

Lat., pp. 2. Contemporary foliation, clix.-i.

4030. ROBERT NECTON'S CONFESSION.

Styrye's Mem.
1. part B. 63.

That he had bought at various times many of the New Testaments in English from Mr. Fyshe, dwelling by the Whitefriars in London, who had them of one Harmond, an Englishman, beyond sea. That a year and a half ago he fell in acquaintance with vicar Constantyne, in London, who got him to buy the Testaments of Mr. Fyshe. That he had sold five of them to Sir William Furbeshore, singing man in Stowmarket, Suff., for seven or eight groats a-piece, and two in Bury St. Edmund's to Raynold Wodeheuse and Thos. Herfan. At Christmas he sold a New Testament to a priest at Pycknam Wade, and two Latin books, Æconomica Christiana and Unio Dissidentium; also a Testament to Will. Gibson, merchant, of St. Margaret Patens; also two Testaments to Sir Ric. Bayfell. He has sold five or six New Testaments to persons in London. Since Easter he has bought of Geoffrey Usher, of St. Antonyes, with whom he became acquainted a year ago (because he was servant to Mr. Forman, the parson of Honey Lane, to whose sermons this respondent much resorted), eighteen New Testaments of the small size, and twenty-six books, all of one sort, called Æconomica Christiana; and two others, called Unio Dissidentium. Of the former, vicar Constantyne had thirteen copies at one time. Since Easter he had carried several Testaments, &c., to Lynne, and left them with a young man named William who refused to purchase them, as they were prohibited. He has also sold a small Testament to young Elderton, merchantman of St. Mary Hill parish. He says, however, he knew not that any of these books were of Luther's sect.

To the 18th [article], he says he has been a receptor, and has been twice or thrice in Thos. Mathew's house, of Colchester, where he read the New Testament in English; that he there heard old father Hacker speak of prophecies.

To the 19th, he says that about Christmas last a Dutchman, now in the Fleet, offered to sell him 200 or 300 English Testaments, at 9d. each; but he did not buy, only sending him to Mr. Fyshe, and promising to do whatever Mr. Fyshe did. To the 20th: Since Easter, when at Norwich, he was complained of to my lord of Norwich because he had a New Testament. His brother advised him to send or deliver it, and he sent it to London by carrier. 21. He acknowledges having kept it a year or more after he knew of its condemnation, and to have read it thoroughly many times, both to himself and others. 22. He denies that he had "Wychief's Wycket" or the Apocalypse at any time. "Per me, Robert Necton."

1598.

ROBERT NECTON'S CONFESSION—cont.

8 March. 4031. QUEEN MARGARET to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Thanks him for his letters, dated Greenwich, 13 Feb., in answer to hers sent by Leonard Musgrave. Will use his advice in all weighty matters henceforth. Intends to send Jas. Steward, brother of lord Avyndale, for whom she desires a safe-conduct, to show her mind in all matters touching Henry's honor and the weal of both kingdoms. Was made very ill lately, and in danger of her life, by a report of Henry's death. Striviling, 8 March. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

R. O. 4032. THE SAME to WOLSEY.

To the same effect. Striviling, 8 March. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

R. O. 4033. THE SAME to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

On the same subject. Received the King's letters by Florence Forestar, the bearer, the Earl's servant. Striviling, 8 March. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add.: To my lord and cousing, Erle of Northumberland, lieutenant-general in the North partis of England. Endd.

8 March. 4034. [TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 383.

B. M.

" [Gam]bara the King showed unto us the matter of there he would do nothing without the counsel [and consent of] the King's highness and your Grace, for he said [that if the said] Bishop should pass through his realm to m[ake overture of] peace, the Emperor would think that both he an[d the king] of England sued unto the Pope to be mediator [for him], which were not for their honour after that they h[ad declared] war unto him. The Bishop replied unto the K[ing] soberly, discreetly, with assured boldness, that he des[ired] not in [the Pope's] name anything of the King, but that h[e might] safely pass through his realm to the Emperor, [to whom] he would, by the Pope's commandment, perswade peace [with such] conditions as hath been offered by the French king if he refused he would, upon the Pope's behalf, int[imate] war both spiritual and temporal, inasmuch as his po[wer] was".

" The Venacions be sore against this Bishop's going [to the] Emperor, thinking that there is some secret intelligence betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, wherefore it was [thought] good to send unto the King's highness and your Grace to [have] your counsel in this matter, as Master Wallop, the w[hich] was present, can show your Grace. Mons. Lautrec ha[s taken?] the city of Aquilla, the which is the principal city [in] Brucia, and speedily processeth towards Naples. The count de Guast saith he will give him a breakfast, and leave [the] rest to the prince of Orange. At this time I send [unto] your Grace the copy of the letters written by the Kyng and Madame to the Pope and Mons. Lautrec in the K[ing's] causes." Poissy, 8 March.

Mutilated, p. 1.

1528.

8 March.

R. O.

4035. DON YNIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

Is obliged, both for health and for the business of which he lately spoke, to leave, and see the Emperor as soon as possible. Requests Wolsey to write by the present messenger to the English ambassador in France to get safe-conducts for himself and for Mendoza; and also to write to the bishop (Ghinucci) residing at Valladolid, to come to the frontier, where the exchange may be made between him and Mendoza. Wishes only eight servants and horses to accompany him, intending to send the rest of his household by sea. 8 March. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: R. D. Cardinali Eboracensi atque Angliæ legato. Endd.

8 March.

Galbe, B. ix

31.

B. M.

4036. FLORYS [COUNT BUREN to HENRY VIII.]

Has received his letters by the bearer. Is grieved and astonished that he intends to enter into war against the Emperor. Does not think the Emperor can have given any occasion for it. Thinks that he must have heard that the Emperor would not listen to peace, and had chosen war, from those who most desire the ruin of both Princes; for in his letters to my Lady, he agrees to all the articles of peace, except the time of fulfilling them, the French ambassadors insisting on the previous delivery of the children. Does not think any one can blame the Emperor, considering his experience of French faith, and the danger to his affairs in Italy by the stay of the French army there. He has given up the duchy of Burgundy and other places, to purchase peace. Begs him to consider the reasons for preserving peace with them, to whom he is united by blood, by ancient friendship, mercantile intercourse, and the natural inclination of the people. Desires credence for the bearer. Malines, 8 March. Signed.

Fr., pp. 2.

4037. THE SAME to WOLSEY.Ib. f. 50^r.

B. M.

Urging the evil consequences of war, now that the Turk is making such progress, and heresy is spreading. Malines, 8 March 1527. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

4038. JOHN HIG'S ABJURATION OF HERESY.

R. O.

Inc. "Abjuratio Joannis Hig, alias Noke, alias Jonson. In the name of God, Amen. I, John Hig, otherwise called John Noke or John Jonson, of the parish of Cheshunt, of the diocese and jurisdiction of London, before you, M. Geoffrey Wharton, doctor of law, and vicar-general to the reverent father in God, lord Cuthbert, bishop of London, mine ordinary and diocesan, and before this company and audience, openly confess and knowledge that I have erroneously and damnably said, affirmed, believed, and taught these damnable and erroneous opinions:—"1. That all men, whether temporal or spiritual, might preach the Gospel. 2. That Martin Luther was more learned than all the doctors in England. 3. That a man should pay nothing to the Church, except his four offering days. 4. That the Church is blind, and teaches the people the wrong way. 5. That he had "a booke of the Gospels in the Doche tongue," by the which he expounded in alehouses to people there the Sunday Gospels. 6. That he had in derision those that went on pilgrimages, and called them fools. 7. That, when in parts beyond the sea, he had preached against Purgatory, although he believed the same; and that prayers and alms deeds were of no value when a man was dead. 8. That he had not done reverence at the elevation of the Host, but kept reading his Dutch booke of the Gospels. All which he now utterly abjures and renounces, desiring to suffer penance for the same, and promising never to return to them. Signed: "Per me, Joannem Hige, alyas Noke, alias Jonson. + Sic subscripsit manu propria."

1528.

JOHN HIG'S ABJURATION OF HERESY—cont.

2. Injunctio dicti Johannis;—being the commissary's account of the appearance of the said John Hig, of his absolution, and the penance enjoined;—sc. that on Palm Sunday he should head the procession to St. Paul's Cathedral, bare-headed, bare-legged, shoeless, and carrying a faggot on his left shoulder; that he should remain in the custody of the apparitor until Good Friday (d. Parasceus), and should then stand at Paul's cross bare-headed, with his faggot as before, all the time of the preaching of the sermon. That on Easter Sunday he should head the procession in the parish church of Cheshunt, bare-headed and with the faggot, as before; that he should hear mass on bended knees, but not receive until Monday following. That for the rest of his life he shall wear a silken faggot embroidered in his sleeve, except he have dispensation. That he shall never leave the diocese of London without presenting himself to his ordinary, and informing him where he intends to go. Present: Robert Rydley and William Myddelton.

3. The dispensation of the silken faggot by the Vicar General, on the representation of the same John Hig, that if he was compelled to wear it no one would employ him, and he would be compelled to beg.

4. His petition for forgiveness. "Jesus Maria. The mercy of the Father, the meekness of the Son, the goodness of the Holy Ghost, be with us, &c. Honorable Master Doctor, I desire you to be good master to me, for I do knowledge myself to your mastership that I have offended in the articles the which you laid upon me yesterday; as in learning the Gospels; that wo worth ill tongues; for if my master that I dwelled withal had not been, I had not uttered the hundredth word that I have done, for he would ask me to bring my book with me to many places, and with many words behind my back," &c.

"Billa confessionis Johannis Hig, &c., scripta manu ejus propria in turri vocata Lollards Toure."

Pp. 4.

4039. PROCEEDINGS for HERESY.

R. O.

1. A paper, addressed to Wolsey (?) ("Sanctitas tua"), containing a recantation of certain theological opinions. The writer appears from these extracts to have been an Englishman:—

"Item scripsi contra illud tributum quod exactum fuit per papam Innocentium 3^m a domino Johanne, quondam Rege hujus regni Angliæ, propter absolutionem interdiccionis regni."

"Item scripsi contra hoc quod tue Sanctitati per Papam conceditur comites palatini militesque creare et testamenta confirmare vel improbare; a domino Rege et non a Papa illam autoritatem procedere debuisse dixi."

Inc.: "Hos subsequeutes articulos dixi et eorum aliquos etiam scripsi."

Ends: "Immensas grâcias ago Sanctitati tue quod tam clementer et misericorditer mecum egisti et ab his ceterisque Lutheri erroribus revocasti et benigne absolvisti; quid enim retribuam Sanctitati tue pro his beneficiis que retribuisti mihi? Nihil habeo, sed toto meo obsequio post Deum tue Sanctitati semper adero."

"Omnipotens Dominus tuam Sanctitatem conservet semper summo cum honore et salute."

Pp. 3.

R. O.

2. A paper corresponding in some passages with the preceding.

I abjure and detest Luther and all Lutherans, and their writings and opinions condemned by the Church. I embrace the Christian faith, as held by holy Church, and as taught by the apostles, fathers, and doctors. In my arguments and disputations I have not adhered to my own sense, and desire my sayings and writings to be judged according to the Divine Word, submitting them and myself to your Holiness.

1528.

Explains his opinions relative to faith and works, free will, human traditions, popes, the subjection of the clergy to kings, the unjust interdict in the reign of John, tribute to the Roman court, indulgences, the veneration of saints, and vows.

Notary's signature in four places: "R. T." (Robert Toney?)

Lat., pp. 2.

4040. SEDITIOUS PREACHING.

R. O.

Master Jerome, "doctor of phisike," has informed my lord Cardinal, and other of the King's counsel, against one Cooke, in the King's retinue at Tournay, "who used the habit of a White Friar as a spy, and was conveyed in the same habit from Tournaye to Ipses by one Gammage, dwelling in Walden in Essex. He had heard Cooke preach, in a secular priest's habit, in Walden, "that the King, my lord Cardinal, and the duke of Norfolk his master, were the strongest thieves in England, and by craft and subtlety robbed the poor commons of this realm; that if a sheep would take upon him to be a king within this realm, all the commons would arise in his favor for to have thereby more quietness and pence;" and "that the poor innocents of England lying in their cradles should cry vengeance upon the King, my lord Cardinal, and the said Duke, for the wretchedness and poverty they were in." Jerome further states, that, having intended to come to the King and declare the premises, he was imprisoned by the procurement of one West, at the command of six aldermen of London, in order to prevent a disclosure which would have implicated not only Cooke and Gammage, but also another parish priest, named Master Basse, M.A. Gammage and Basse had also conspired to hang him at his own place, called "Jeromys Castell," and report that he had hanged himself. Cooke, Gammage, and the priest had "had letters lying afore them," from Richard Delapole, as he supposed. Cooke had been chaplain to the duke of Buckingham, and afterwards to the duke of Norfolk; and when this informant followed Cook to Dover in order to arrest him, he entered the service of Sir Nicholas Vaux, and crossed the sea, and is now, as the writer is informed, servant to the earl of Arundel. Cooke in his sermon recited the following verses, declaring that they related to the Church and my lord Cardinal:—

"Constantine, cades, et equæ de marino factæ
Et lapis erectus et magnæ palaciæ Romæ.
Hæc sua sunt signa. Ruet urbs cum præsule digna.
Funere detectus Petri successor abibit
Et lapis erectus ad terram funditus ibit."

Not signed, sealed, or directed.

Pp. 2. Endd.: "Agayn Cooke that hath had sedicious words agayn the King and my Lord."

8 March.

Wilkins, iii.
710.

4041. ARCHBISHOP WARRHAM.

Ordinance of the Archbishop, confirming a statute of Rob. de Winchelsey, former archbishop of Canterbury, limiting the number of proctors in the Court of Arches to ten. Otteford, 6 March 1527.

Ratification of the above by the Archbishop, dated in the chapter house of Canterbury, 5 March 19 Hen. VIII.

Lat.

9 March.

Calig. B. iii.
376.

B. M.

4042. THE DUKE OF RICHMOND'S COUNCIL to WOLSEY.

On receipt of his letters by Sir John Uvedale, secretary to the duke of Richmond, dated Richmond, 31 Jan., they committed to York castle John Bretton, where he has lain, in great jeopardy of his life, for 16 days, as the sickness there is so sore and contagious that 14 prisoners and others are dead. As the matter between him and John Uvedale is of small moment, they have released him on his recognisance. Bretton supplied the place of Uvedale in his absence, and accounted to him truly for all the profits, holding it no longer than till Thos. Derby had by common report obtained it of the King and Wolsey,—when Bretton would have discharged himself, but was prevailed on by the Council to stay, with promise of the profits of the office till the King's pleasure were known. Think it unjust that Uvedale should have the profits, which Bretton has earned by his pen. They had not presumed to appoint any one to the place, except under the circumstances mentioned. York, 9 March. Signed: Brian Higdon—T. Tempest—William Taite—Robert Bowis.

1528.

The DUKE OF RICHMOND'S COUNCIL to WOLSEY—cont.

Endd.: "The duke of Richmondes council, 9th March." Endd. by Cecil: "Scotland, H. 8. All of one year."

Pp. 2.

9 March. 4043. WM. LORD SANDYS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This Monday, about seven in the morning, received the King's letters, saying that he has heard that the clothiers about Westbury, who are thrown out of work, have assembled, and intend to repair to his Highness, which he is surprised not to have heard of from Sandys and his other servants in those parts. Never heard of it till he received the King's letter; for Westbury, as he is told, is near Bristol, 60 miles from here. Will go today, with a few persons, as if hunting, towards Sir John Seymour and Sir Wm. Essex, and, if there is any such insurrection, will do his best to pacify it. If he cannot, will follow the King's instructions. Though he has sent all his harness to Guisnes, will not spare his poor body amongst them. The Vyne, 9 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's good grace. Endd.: My lord Sands, 9 March.

9 March. 4044. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Some ill-disposed persons who had stolen a crayer from Englishmen have been intercepted by certain men of Dunwich, coming home from London, and have been put in prison by Norfolk's orders, till the King's pleasure be known. As their punishment belongs to lord Lisle's office, thinks he should send officers to receive them from the bailiffs of Dunwich, who are at great charge in keeping them. Yesterday, called before him 40 of the most substantial clothiers of these parts, of some towns two, and of some one, and exhorted them to continue their men in work, assuring them that the reports were false about the detention of English merchants in Spain and Flanders, and using other arguments, which he will explain to Wolsey on coming to him before Sunday next. Was assisted by Sir Ric. Wentworth and Sir Philip Tylney, and finally persuaded them to resume work, and take back their servants whom they had put away. If he had not "quenched the bruit" of the arrests in Flanders, he should have had 200 or 300 women suing to him to make the clothiers set their husbands and children on work. Wolsey might cause the London merchants not to suffer so many cloths to remain in Blackwell Hall unbought. Has been at Ipswich, and got a "platt" made of the whole house of St. Peter's, which he will show Wolsey. Can advise him so as to save large money in building there. Has spoken with my lord of Norwich. "Tomorrow I intend to see part of your Grace's marches belonging to Dodenashe in Colnes, and part of mine own; and so from thence towards your Grace." Stoke, 9 March.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

1528.

4045. NORFOLK to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

Since writing has received a letter from Wolsey, with one to Sir Rob. Dreury, which he shall have tomorrow. The King desires him to remain here till Easter, and send for his wife and servants now at London. Will not leave till he hears again, but begs that he may come up, if only for six days' absence, including going and coming. Would not leave if he saw any danger. If he were to do what he is desired, would have to make provision of many things from London, including money. Wishes also to have some conference with Wolsey on other subjects of his letter. Will be but one day on the road either way.

*Hol., p. 1.9 March. 4046. [FRANCIS I.] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 155.

B. M.

Asks him to see justice done to the bearer, and to treat him as he would wish subjects of his King to be treated in France. S[t. Germain]-en-Laye, 9 March.

Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.: A, &c., le Cardinal legat et chancelier d'Angleterre.

9 March. 4047. WILLIAM BENET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received this evening Wolsey's letters, which he would he had had yesterday; for the Abbot resigned this morning, on Benet's declaring to him Wolsey's pleasure by mouth; and Benet declared the house to be void, intimating to the convent that Wolsey had sent by him the King's licence to proceed to an election on Wednesday next. The whole convent, except four or five, are "full appointed upon Frances." Wolsey will see the awkwardness if he should now detain the conge from them, and cause two of the brethren to come up to pursue the King's licence. Will, however, prorogue the election on Wednesday next till some other day, and defer showing the licence till he hear from Wolsey, unless he can induce the convent to compromitt the election to Wolsey, without promising them that either Boston or Frances shall be chosen. Will obey Wolsey's commands about the entertainment of Borrow. Peterborough, 9 March. Signed.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.: "Doctor Benet, nono Martii 1527."

9 March. 4048. MONASTERY OF PETERBOROUGH, Linc. dioc.

P. S. b.

Petition for a conge d'elire on the resignation of Rob. Kyrkton, abbot. Chapter-house, 9 March 1527.

4049. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 173.

B. M.

" Deo motus, maneo tamen in specula e quid tum fieri poterit, ut spero posse, cens [jac]turam Flandrenses† adhuc accipere, ea minima f [ci]ves isti Londinii tantas turbas ei ere debuissent erit non dubito quin ad mandatum Regis mei qu sarciantur. Interim dedi operam ut quicquid est pr illatum non distrahatur, sed integra res maneat confirmavit prefectus præsidio oppidi facturum se, ut Flandrensibus aut aliis quibusvis opprimendis. R diligenter nisi ad regem meum excusorem expeditissimum quem quidem regem non dubito quin sit ad R^{mo} D. T. oculis gerit voluntatem omnino se accommodaturus, sed e quantas injurias nostrates patiuntur. In mari Aquit[anico] naves Hispanice portum Rochellæ obsederunt, et Gall[icas] in ipso statim 1528.

— to WOLSEY—cont.

appellu interceperunt. Elapsa est una vin que hac in Scotiam transiens nuntia fuit claudis istius magno aliquando Cesari constabit, nam apparatus fuit terrestris et maritimi majores quam dici possit: quem[admodum ex] hoc nostro Baltasare poterit intelligere Ill. D. T. non poterat Rex meus rerum Italicarum et maxime pon[tificia] maxime quod recens inde sit reversus, mittere. Et h prater fidem quam illi merito habet, quare alium quemvis duxerit huc destinandum [pro]positum mihi negocium confecero, conte”

Mutilated. Add.: Ill., &c., Card. Ebor. de latere Legato ac Britannis Cancellario, &c. Londini.

10 March. 4050. FRANCIS I.

R. O. Commission to John du Bellay, bishop of Bayonne, and Charles Rym. xiv. 235. Morette, to conclude an arrangement for mutual intercourse with the subjects of the Emperor. S. Germain-en-Laye, 10 March 1527.

Lat., sealed.

R. O. 2. Commission to the same, to arrange with England for a war against the Rym. xiv. 236. Emperor. S. Germain-en-Laye, 10 March 1527.

Lat., sealed.

R. O. 3. Commission to the same, for English merchants to trade with France. Rym. xiv. 236. S. Germain-en-Laye, 10 March 1527.

Lat., sealed.

10 March. 4051. WILLIAM HAMILTON of MACKNARISTOUN to WOLSEY.

R. O. Complains of the long time he has been kept in London, waiting for a safe-conduct. Begs that the bearer be hastily despatched with it, “considerant that the King’s grace my maister gillis your Grace credence in all his affaris, and forthirring of his servandes.” London, 10 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

11 March. 4052. LOUISA OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 174.

B. M.

Asks him to administer justice to one Spinolle. The King also writes. St. Germain-en-Laye, 11 March. Signed.

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.: A Mons. le Cardinal d’Yort, legat d’Angleterre.

12 March. 4053. MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

Cal. E. ii. 169.

B. M.

“presentement devers le Roy son bon adverty de toutes choses dedens au long et par le menu qu’il besoing vous en riens replicquer par lettre, remestant le tout en la qui est en luy.” Professes his readiness to serve the Cardinal. St. Germain, 12 March. Signed.

French, mutilated, p. 1. Add.: A Mons., &c. le card. d’Yorth, legat et chancelier d’Angleterre. Endd.: Letters of credence concerning the charge of Mons. Moret.

12 March. 4054. CARDINAL SALVIATI to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Hopes that Henry, who has shown himself from the first such a stout defender of the Christian commonwealth, will pour water upon the conflagration now raging in Italy. What they require concerns the wreal, not only of the Pope, but of all Christendom. Writes more fully to Wolsey, and to John Maria Stratigopolia, his servant, for whom he desires credence. Polsey, 12 March 1528. Signed.

1528.

Lat., p. 1. Add.

12 March. 4055. FRANCIS LOVELL to CROMWELL.

R. O.

"Fellow Cromwell," I have my Lord's letters ordering me to further, as much as I can, Osborne Ichynglam's marriage with Maistres Olyve Wychyngham. I enclose a letter to my Lord, informing him that Mrs. Olyve was previously contracted to Roger Rukwood. When she was with other gentlemen and gentlewomen at my house making merry, Osborne sent her a "letter of defiance," of which I enclose a copy. Will not meddle in the affair till he has further orders. Estharlyng, 12 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To hys ryght wurschippfull and welbelovyd fellowe maister Cromwell.

13 March. 4056. ROBT. KYRTUS, late ABBOT OF PETERBOROUGH, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received on Saturday last, by Dr. Benet, Wolsey's letter dated 4 March. Hearing from Benet what Wolsey also intimated to my friend Thos. Lark, that either Dan Francis or Dan Boston was to be my successor, I have resigned. Has no doubt the convent would have chosen brother Francis, but for the persuasion of Dr. Benet who has induced them to compromit to Wolsey. Trusts firmly that Wolsey, in accordance with his former promise, will choose brother Francis, who is a good religious man, and of gentle conditions. Has showed his mind to Dr. Benet about his pension, and delivered him a book thereof. Peterborough, 13 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: A letter of the late abbot of Peterborough, the 13th of March 1527.

13 March. 4057. JOHN HACKETT to WOLSEY.

R. O.

His last letters were dated the 4th, and sent by John Fuller, a sworn secret messenger, with a verbal credence. Had given the same message to this bearer, Windsor herald, with a memorial of other articles as to the "business" in these parts, and the chances of peace or war. He will also report what has come within his own knowledge. Sends a note of articles on which he may be interrogated. Mechlin, 13 March 1527.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

13 March. 4058. WILLIAM LORD SANDYS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received on Thursday, 12 March, the King's letters and Wolsey's, commanding him not to permit any clothworkers to discharge any artificers employed in the making of cloth so as to cause unlawful assemblies. Nothing of that kind shall occur in Hampshire. Hopes that Berkshire and Wiltshire will be equally well managed. Has kept 60 horsemen at his own costs, but cannot find ten able foot out of 100 persons fit "for this voyage." The Vyne, Friday, 13 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: My lord Cardinal. Endd.

4059. FRANCIS I. to [WOLSEY].

Calig. D. xi. 3.

R. M.

Credence for [Morette?], sent to promote the indissoluble amity of the two kingdoms. Signed.

Fr., mutilated, p. 1.

1528.

4060. [LOUISE OF SAVOY] to WOLSEY.

[CaL.E.III.13.]

B. M.

"Mons. le Cardynal, mon bon filz, de Morettes le port[eur] a este dyfferre afin de vous . . .
. . . [p]ar luy plus amplement s choses vous entendre (?)
. [v]oulonte du Roy monsr. et [filz] y car il a charge de "

Fr., hol., p. 1, mutilated and defaced. Add.: Mons. le Cardynal, mon [bon] fylz et pere.

4061. LOUISA OF SAVOY to HENRY VIII.

[Cal. E.II.2.]

i. 34.

B. M.

Francis has deferred for some little time the despatching of Morette.
Hol., Fr., mutilated, p. 1. Add.

4062. LOUISE OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. III.

42.]

B. M.

Desires credence on her own part for Morette, whom the King is sending. Trusts Wolsey more than any one else, for the preservation of the friendship between the Princes.

Hol., Fr., mutilated. Add.: Mons. le Cardynal.

13 March. 4063. TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 58.

Finding that Morette's coming to England was delayed from day to day, as Gregory de Casalis wrote to me that his letters required haste I sent a post to Calais with a large packet containing letters from him and Jerningham. Received today one from Gregory to Wolsey, delivered by card.
Salviati, who said he and the bishop Pistoriensis would send in haste to England to know the King and Wolsey's pleasure about his going to Spain.
Asked the French king and the Grand Master if they had written to Wolsey about it. Thinks Francis does not wish the Bishop to go to Spain, as he would only hinder matters now in good train. The news from Lautrec is so encouraging he would like to know the issue of the Neapolitan expedition first. De Salviati and the Bishop, however, request him to write to Wolsey in favor of the Pope's desire. It is said the Bishop, in going by Florence, tried to persuade the Florentines to side with the Emperor: which is no good token. All the Spaniards and lanceknights have left Rome for Naples.
Those that remained were slain by the Ursinis. The Spaniards had freighted a ship with artillery for Naples, but the Romans bowged it, and sank the ordnance. Colonna is gone to the Viceroy Don Hugo at Naples.
News has come from Spain that the ambassadors will not be suffered to depart till the Emperor's ambassadors have come to Bayonne. Poissy, 13 March. Signed.

Add. Endd.

13 March. 4064. GEORGE HAMPTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Arrived on March 1. Found the Dean and all his servants well, and glad to hear of Wolsey's prosperity. Next day went to the Court, and delivered Wolsey's letter to the Grand Master, who answered that nothing pleased him more than being employed by Wolsey, and he went immediately to the King. The next day he sent word that the King would grant all Wolsey wished, and whenever he should send to Kane it should be ready.
Speaks on behalf of master Syppryan, one of the Dean's readers. They have read three or four books, and begun another, but "he never toke yt crosse nor pyle," and will receive no money. He will not read to any bishop in France, but only the Dean, and that for Wolsey's sake. Asks Wolsey to send him a gown cloth and a piece of worsted for a coat, which would please him more than 500 crowns. Lupet says the Dean has profited more by him than by any other since he came into France. Paris, 13 March.

1528.

Pp. 2, fol. Add. : To my lord Cardinal's good grace. Endd.

13 March. 4065. [CHR. COO to WOLSEY.]

Cal. E. III. 32.

B. M.

[Pic]cardy Mons. de Vand[onie] of victuals to [be] had for the garrisons and also [that it] is pretended in the said parts it was not x[vj] ?] there for 200 mewys in Normandy it is orde[ined] shall have it and the Governor have special to give his atache luty[?] for 500 mewys in Guleune commanded from the King to Mownsir Amrall (?) patent and atache for the same, with the which I servants is gone to Dugyon in Burgoyne to the said [King, wishing to have the] said patent, it will like your Grace for these 700 doubt not but they shall be ready at your Grace's [commands] to be levied by such as shall be appointed by your [Grace] to have them, considering your Grace's pleasure in not certain, but if I had had the 300 in Picardy I dare meddle with them, but ready to attain them [whenever] they shall be delivered at your Grace's pleasure, such luty[?] as I have made with the mayor of London I am ful apoint so immediately as I can lade the same of newn and for money (?) had not little to my pain I sha[ll] myself homeward to the intent to put myself and as shall be mete for me to do my best in the King's s[er]vice and your Grace's; for the more your Grace's goodness towards [me] in that upon the first motion here I was so bold large, to shew master Arundell by my letter, to move y[our] Grace amongst other to have me in like your benevolent remembrance, in that or in other I shall be ready with heart and such as God have sent me, always to do that shall be [to] your Grace's pleasure.

"It shall please your Grace to know as I understand Mr. Gostewick have taken of late of mine a 100 wheat over and besides the 100 quarters given to your Grace for 1200 quarters lading of your Grace's licence. I trust it shall again or mony upon the delivery of the said your Gra[ce's] to be allowed such ready money as ordinary dispatches and licences that it will like y[our Grace of] your charity to command my end with Fermour for s[uch] [as] he have of mine in his hand, either to deliver it (?) or the other half of the manor as shall be more the [u]nto the which he is not to be brought without your Grace's for the which I shall remain, as I am bound dail[y to pray] for your prosperous state long in health to continue Scribbled in haste the 13th day of March.

"By your most bounden in servi"

Mutilated.

13 March. 4066. GONSON to WOLSEY.

Ortho. E. ix.

35.

B. M.

" gladly have showed your Grace as your Grace was so greatly occupied that I my[ght] to fullyll your commaundement in the dispatche of [wh]erof it may please your Grace to pardon me.

"First, that I and my compayne shulde indevor ourselfs [that all merchant]-men and shippis saylling yn to this realme ow[t of the Emperor's] dominion yestwards, as well Flemysngs as other, or s[ailing out of] this lande in to there owne countres may be surely waffe[d out] of the Frenchmen's danger." Also, that if French and Imperial ships of war should meet in their company, they should exhort them to keep the peace; but if they will not, they should take the Frenchmen's part with their whole power. That if they see any ships of Sp[ain] or men-of-war sailed by Spaniards from any manner of . . . they shall do their best to take them, "and to see their goods sur[e]ly kept" till his pleasure may be further known." Asks him to consider the premises, and send further instructions if need be. Has been today with the French ambassador, and has devised with him the writing to such French men-of-war as they shall meet with, according to Wolsey's order. London, 13 March. Signed.

1528.

GONSON to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1, mutilated. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.: Wm. Gonson, 13 March 1527.

13 March. 4067. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 1.

B. M.

Sends the bearer because he hears that [the king of] England is making "quelque nombre de ch"

Asks that 500 may be given him. "Et j'espere que n . . . avec mon ayde en fera unne sy belle," that his Grace shall know he is ready to serve the King. Abbeville, 13 March.

Fr., mutilated. Add.: A, &c. le Legat d'Angleterre.

14 March. 4068. [CARD. SALVIATI to HENRY VIII.]

Vit. B. ix. 74.

B. M.

Enlarges on the great merits of Henry towards the Church. It is owing to him that St. Peter's ship has been snatched from destruction, and will shortly be put to-rights. All the rowers look upon the King as their deliverer, especially the writer, who, besides his public duties, is under personal obligations to the King for the kindnesses shown by Henry to his brother, "[al]terum fere me." He and his brothers will always be at Henry's service. Poissi, prid. idus Martii 1527.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

14 March. 4069. The LOW COUNTRIES.

Galba, B. ix.

114.

R. O.

"Memory of such articles as may please your Grace to ask Windsor Herald, by manner of interrogation, if that he should forget any."

What Hacket has said to the lady Margaret and the Council about the relaxation of English subjects, their ships and goods, as has been done in England to the Emperor's subjects; and what answer he has had.

The cause of arrest of Englishmen's goods, and how they may be released. The cause of my Lady's ambassadors coming to England. The disposition of my Lady and the Council to peace or war. Of Mons. de Reux, who is in Spain, and his "consors" in this country. Mons. de Issynghen's saying in the Council Chamber, touching the "howlks" of Holland. The difference of peace and war. The communication of the cardinal of Liege. The Audiencer's sayings. The preparation of war in these countries. The ships that they think here may come out of Spain. The land of Seland. The "howlks" of Holland. Hacket's treatment. His going to Seland to fetch his wife . . . to the Court, and their coming to England if war happens. The exploit of 1,400 men of Gueldres on the largest village in Holland. My Lady's recommendation and letters to the King and Wolsey. The general sayings of the commonalties here. Machlyng, 14 March 1527.

In Hacket's hand, pp. 2.

14 March. 4070. RICHARD WATKYNs to WILLIAM EDWARDS.

R. O.

Cannot tell with what delight he received his letter of the 6 Feb. from London. It at once banished all his grief. Replied in two letters, the one in Latin, the other in English; but repeats briefly their substance, lest 1528.

they should not reach him soon enough. The town agrees to the condition last offered of taking the benefice. Is more at ease than he was. Need write nothing more, except that Edwards would fix the day for his departure. Nothing ever occurred to him more desirable than this hope of revisiting his country. If fortune favour him equally in other things, he will deserve to be called the son of a white hen, but if disappointed in this he will languish. Would like to hear about the prospects of Robert (de ratione collocandi mei Roberti) either from himself or from Carter.—Added, in a different ink: Is ashamed not to mention their munificent friend, Brian. Has no words to praise or thank him. Louvain, 14 March.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: Ad egregium virum magistrum Gulielmum Eduarda, unum e secretis R^{mo} D. Car[dina]lis Eboracensi[s].

15 March. 4071. LORD DE BERGHES to HENRY VIII.

Galba, B. ix.
52.
B. M.

Has received the King's letters in answer to his own, and was glad to hear that the prohibition, by the King, of English merchants to visit his town of Berghes, was not from his fault. Has always shown and intends to show them as much friendship as to his own subjects. It is reported here that the King has arrested all ships from Spain and Flanders, and that he intends to go to war to please the French. This has caused great astonishment, for it is thought that he ought to favor the Emperor and these countries against the French. It has been thought necessary to arrest English merchants here, but he will take care that they suffer no damage. Themselves and their goods shall be freed immediately on hearing that the like has been done in England. The King does him the honor to write as if he had most power in the preservation of the League. Assures his Majesty of the Emperor's good will, and the wrong the French have done to him. Hopes he will not give up an ancient friendship, so profitable to his country, for the pleasure of the French, his ancient enemies. Malines, 15 March 1527. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: Au Roy.

15 March. 4072. THE SAME to WOLSEY.

Ibid. f. 52^r.
B. M.

To the same effect. Desires credence for the provost of Cassel, the bearer. Malines, 15 March 1527. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

15 March. 4073. TUNSTAL to WOLSEY.

R.O.
Foxe, v. App.

According to your orders, sent by the master of Savoy, your receiver, with two gentlemen of Oxford, and by Mr. Henegge, archdeacon of Oxford, on the 6th inst. I attached Dr. Ferman, parson of Hony Lane, John Goodale, his servant, and John Gogh, bookseller of Fleet Street. Has kept them separate, and examined them. Sends writings in the hands of Goodale and Goghe. The latter says he does not know Gararde, and never dealt in forbidden books with him, or any one in Oxford, since the monitions. He has only had a shop of his own for two years, and, before that, was servant to another. Unless there is any special matter, he might give surety to be forthcoming. Thinks he is mistaken for another man. The bringer of these books this year past was a Dutchman from Antwerp, named Theodoryke, who was for some time in London, and has brought many books. Some were brought to Tunstal, among them, Oeconomia Christiana and Preconiones Piar, which he forbade to be sold, but still they have been sold secretly. He had also many New Testaments in English of the little volume, but he would not "be aknowen of them," except to those who, he thought, would buy them. Thinks, therefore, that Gogh is innocent.

Has committed him to the Fleet, as all his other prisons are full of persons from the furthest parts of the diocese. Goodale says that Gerard sent before Christmas two heavy fardels to Oxford, but he does not know what was in them. He was Gerard's pupil, but will not confess to any sinister opinions of his own or Gerard's. Advises him to be sent to Oxford to be examined.

1528.

TUNSTAL to WOLSEY—cont.

He has been Ferman's servant since Whitsuntide, and was at Oxford before that. The scholars of Oxford whom Tunstal saw, lay much to his charge. Ferman denies sending any books to Oxford, but confesses that he has got such, to see what opinions the Lutherans held, and be the more ready to defend the Church. Caused him to send for them, sending also some of his own folk to search the rooms where Gerard and his servant lay. Found none but what he himself produced.

He repeated his reasons for having them, adding that a licence to that effect had been given by Wolsey to the students at Cambridge. Wolsey can find out from Gerard what he charges this man with. The scholars said that writings in Gerard's own hand implicate him.

Cannot find out that he preached otherwise than well. Has sent some to hear him purposely. He is ready to answer any further charge. Sends him to Wolsey. Would have done so last week, but he knew his Grace was with the King. Asks his further pleasure. Has visited more than half the city, and hopes to finish next week. Ferman could find surety to be forthcoming. London, 25 March.

Hol., pp. 4. Add. : To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

4074. JOHN HIGDON to MR. BIRTON.

R. O.

Asks him to tell Wolsey that, according to his letters, he has kept in ward Mr. Clerke, Mr. Sumnar, Mr. Betts and Sir Frithe, being canons primi ordinis, Sir Baylye, a canon secundi ordinis, and Sir Thos. Lawney, a priest of the Chapel, suspected of having heretical books.

Has examined them with the assistance of Mr. Subdean, two censors, and a notary, and sends their answers. Has not committed to prison Tanner or Radley, because the Registrar says that Wolsey told him they were not to be regarded, as being unlearned. The worst charges against Tanner are hiding Mr. Clerk's books, and being privy to the letter sent to him by Garret after his flight. Radley sold Garret's books, and all the suspected persons resorted to Mr. Garret to his house. Asks to know Wolsey's pleasure concerning those of his college; for Easter is near, and many of them are excommunicated. Wishes Wolsey to absolve them, that they may take their rights in Holy Church.

Has sent the names of Mr. Frierys books, which he left locked up with Mr. Williams, canon and overseer of the new buildings at Wolsey's college, that when he is examined Wolsey may know if he speaks the truth. After Mr. Clerk's examination, proved by the answer of other suspected persons that he used to preach at Poghley during the sickness at Oxford. When asked what licence he had to preach there, he said he had licence from Cambridge University to preach in every diocese in England. Told him these licences were only in force for one year, and showed him the penalties inflicted on those who preach without licence of the ordinary, in the first chapter of the Constitutions Provincial. He said a hundred others did so as well as he. Told him their offence did not excuse his; to which he made no answer. Signed.

Pp. 2. Endd. : Mr. Higdon, denne of Cardinal's College in Oxford.

4075. THOS. GARARDE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Implores Wolsey to release him, not from those iron bonds which Foxe, v. App. he has so justly imposed upon him, but from the more terrible bonds of 1328.

excommunication, and receive the wandering sheep back into the fold. Requests to have the use of a mass book.

Lat., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.: Thomas Garnde, of Cardinal's College in Oxford, detected of heresy.

16 March. 4076. STEPHEN GARDINER and EDWARD FOXE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Pocock, i. 96. Left Lyons on the 4th, for Orvieto, by Genoa, as they wrote that they intended to do; and, journeying with the greatest possible diligence, have arrived this day at Luke. Began travelling always before daylight, and have not stayed two nights in one place; but were much hindered at Genoa by lack of horses, and difficulty of the way, besides being disappointed of passage by sea. The citizens of Luke have made us a marvellous goodly present in honor of the King. Those of Genoa showed us great attentions at the house of Jeronimus Dorea without detaining us. Our passage through these parts is no secret, as the master of the posts has orders to give no man horses till he has been presented to the captain. Have sent couriers to Florence for a passport. When they have spoken with the Pope, Fox will return with the commission, according to Wolsey's instructions. Luke, 16 March.

Hol.,* pp. 2. Add. Endd. by Wriothesley: Stephen Gardiner and Edward Fox to the King's Majesty† from Luke.

16 March. 4077. GARDINER and FOXE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 59. To the same effect. Luke, 16 March.
Hol. Add. Endd.

Harl. 419.f.70. 2. Copy of the preceding.

B. M.
Pocock, i. 84.

16 March. 4078. GARDINER and FOXE to TUKE.

R. O. Yesterday wrote letters to you and Master Peter [Vannes] only, having no leisure to write to my Lord. At our writing we had newly dined. Shortly after the citizens here sent us a goodly present, brought by fifty persons with trumpets and instruments. There were 20 great pikes with tench and other fish, brought on four men's heads in silver basins, trimmed with laurels and oranges; 4 basins full of comfits like those of Portugal, garnished with the King's arms, borne by four men; 4 basins of bread toasted, being a very dainty thing; 6 basins of marchpanes; 20 great boxes of confections; two dozen torches of white virgin wax and gold; 60 white candles of virgin wax, "which we wished in England." Besides these, 40 gallons of various wines. When the present was set down it filled the great chamber. Tomorrow we leave for Orvieto, longing to be there as the shortest way home, "where we would most gladly be, the same being agreeable to the King's and my lord's Grace's pleasure. Although next home, which is and shall be home for that verse's sake,—

"Nescio qua natale solum dulcedine cunctos Attrahit," &c.

we could be contented to dwell here at Luke, a city of marvellous quietness," &c. Luke, 16 March.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

Mutilated.

* Even Fox's signature is in Gardiner's hand in this and the following letters.

† An error of Wriothesley.

1528.

16 March. 4079. JOHN BISHOP OF EXETER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has despatched the bearer, in whom Wolsey will find a treasure, and the household here no little luck, as also in our clerk-comptroller now repairing to you. They can both show the state of this household, and how it is a greater charge to the King for lack of pastures. These parts under the Princess's authority are in great quietness. Ludlow, 16 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord Legate. Endd.

16 March. 4080. SIR T. MORE to WOLSEY.

Galba, B. v.

122.

B. M.

St. P. 1. 284.

Yesterday, Michael the Gueldrois delivered the King a letter from Iselsteyne, written in such a way as it seemed to the King not without the suggestion of the lady Margaret. Iselsteyne deprecated strongly the war between the Emperor and the King, expressing a hope that Flanders would not be affected by it. The King replied that no one was more loth than he to have war, but as the Emperor had shown himself intractable, he was resolved to defend his cause, and had not been hasty to do injury to the Low Countries. As Iselsteyne had proposed to come over, if he came with sufficient authority from the Emperor, he should be welcome; but the King refused to enter into any specialties with Michael on so slight an intimation.

The King sent for More, and expressed his unwillingness to have war with the Low Countries, although he would have no slackness in putting lord Sandys and his company in readiness. He thinks that the Low Countries will be more likely, by sending Sandys, to keep the goods of the English merchants; or else that Sandys would be induced by the French to undertake some exploit in Flanders, and so exasperate matters and endanger the English Pale. When I was about to tell him my mind, "he said this gear could not be done so suddenly," but that he and you must first speak together. When the Spaniards are discharged, whom the King condescends to set at liberty on your advice, he wishes you to tell them how loth he is to have any war with Spain.

There is a hospital in Southwark, of which the master is old, blind, and feeble. Though it is in the gift of the bishop of Winchester, yet the King is informed that, as Legate, you may appoint a coadjutor; and he would like to have the same for his chaplain, Mr. Stanley. He has two reasons for this: first, that Stanley is a gentleman born; and, secondly, if he got rid of him, he would like to have a more learned man in his place. Sends letters received yesterday by the King out of Ireland. Windsor, 16 March.

Hol. Add.

16 March. 4081. THOS. HENEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

I thank your good Grace that it pleaseth you to write "to so poor a man as I am; and also Mistress Ann in like manner thanketh your Grace for your kind and favorable writing unto her." She humbly desires me to write to your Grace in favor of Sir Thos. Cheyney, and she is marvellously sorry that he should be in your Grace's displeasure. Hears that Borrow, one of the monks at Peterborough, has come to London, and says that the convent have compromised to Wolsey to choose either him or another of the same house. Sends the bearer to know Wolsey's pleasure about it. Windsor, 16 March.

P.S.—Promises him 2,000 marks towards his great building at Oxford. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "Mr. Hennege, xvj^{to} Marcii 1527."

[17 March.] 4082. [WOLSEY to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.]

Cott. App. 6.

B. M.

"[My] Lorde," your Lordship writes that you could not proceed to the execution of the King's letters, as your Council could not inform you what order should be taken with those attainted and arraigned of treason, and asking that it might be delayed till the coming of some of the justices. If his delay proceed from that ground chiefly, it would be well. He must not use such cautious and colorable dealing with [one] who has thus tenderly brought him up, and set [him] forward, and by whose means the King [has put him in such authority. Knows the whole and discourse of his privy suits and dealing. [He] has not answered to Wolsey's expectations. [If] his suits had been just and reasonable, would not have failed to have set [them "forward"]."

1528.

As for the sparing of Sir William Lisle's elder son, would rather he lived than died,—"quia non cupio [m]ort[em] peccatoris sed ut convertatur et vivat,"—if it did not embolden others. The King therefore wishes him to be sent to the Tower, and the execution of his father and the others to proceed with all diligence. "Hampton Court, the, &c."

Draft, hol., mutilated, pp. 2.

20 March. 4083. THOMAS TAVERNAR.

R. O. Will of Thos. Tavyuar, dated 20 March 1528. To be buried at Eayngden. Bequests to the altar there, and the church of Lincoln; to his wife Joan Tavernar; his son William; his eldest daughter Annas Hawward; and Alice and Ame, &c.

P. 1.

20 March. 4084. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O. Thanks Wolsey for taking into his own hands the cause of two poor religious men sent to Rome by the minister and wardens of the order of St. Francis in Scotland, whom he caused to remain in England, and obtained for them, at his own expence, briefs against an apostate. Requests him to deliver them to the said religious men, or to the brethren of Greenwich or Richmond. Edinburgh, 20 March 15 Jac. V. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

20 March. 4085. THOMAS LORD BERKELEY and others to WOLSEY.

R. O. Have received the King's letter this 20 March. Have accordingly met at Tetbury. Can get no information of any persons having come out of Gloucestershire into Wiltshire, such as the King was informed were the occasion of the assembly at the Devise. The King's subjects in this shire are peaceful and loyal, and the clothiers quite willing to set their men at work as they used to do. Begg Wolsey to be a mean to the King that there be a vent shortly for the utterance of their cloth. Signed: Thomas Berkeley—Willm. Kyngston—Antony Poyntz—Johan Hyggys—Edmund Tame.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

21 March. 4086. ITALY.

R. O. "Exemplum litterarum Nuntii Apostolici apud Lautrek de data diei xv. Martii."

Gives an account of Lautree's progress and movements at Troia.

ii. "Exemplum litterarum Nuntii Apostolici apud Lautrechum 21 Martii, ex felicissimis castris confederatorum prope Trojam."

Describes the evacuation of Troia by the Imperialists, who retired towards Naples. Some think they will return. Peter of Navarre told me that the Imperialists will find no safety except at Capua or Benevento. The towns of Melphi and Vennusia, and those of Apulia by the Mediterranean towards Barletta, have submitted to Lautrec, and many more may be expected to do the same. D. Marius Ursinus is sent to garrison them, with the 300 Germans with whom he entered Ascoli.

1528.

ITALY—cont.

Many expect that Lautrec will remove the camp towards Manfredonia and Barletta, and after receiving the submission of all Apulia will go on to Naples; but nothing is determined. The Florentine troops will be here today, or at all events tomorrow. D. Petrus Alvisius de Tarneto and Petrus Maria de Rubéis are in Manfredonia with 2,000 foot and 200 horse.

Lat., pp. 2.

21 March. 4087. [DU BELLAY] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 397.

B. M.

" Domine, ego nihil min[us cogitavi quam, te] inconsulto, adire ad Serenissimum [Dominum Regem; et] enim cum tota Chr. Regis mei voluntas esset ni[hil ut velit te] insciente, nihil sine con[sensu vestro] . . . eo sum dimissus, mihi ut imprimis mandav[it] perlegenda tibi exhiberem, ad te omnia refer . . . [et ea] quæ non probasses ut negligerem. Itaque ego non reperio. Nam apud hunc regem nisi quas curari a me Rex meus volebat, abs te v nihil ago. Ipsum ut statim non adeam quom committere non possum, nec debeo. Parendum enim [est et] utendum consilio tuo, non quia ab eo abhorream nihil abs te in regem meum proficisci posse quod [non] gratissimum, deinde quod te intelligam apud Regem mei causa tantum velle, ut si quicquam ego gerend peccavero, id tu possis, quæ tua est dexteritas tuo negotio resarcire. Adibo igitur, quando adibo ut cum rege salutato, consilia mei adu de iis integram rejiciam in adventum tum, quam Opt. Max. diu nobis e"

London, 21 March.

Mutilated. Add.

22 March. 4088. ST. PAUL'S, LONDON.

R. O.

Batch of five receipts to Sir Hen. Wyotte, farmer of the manor of Barnes, each for 16*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, ranging from 8 Nov. 8 Hen. VIII. to 22 March 19 Hen. VIII., collected severally by Wm. Lichfeld, John Dowman, and John Smythe, receivers of the dean and chapter of St. Paul's cathedral, London.

4089. HENRY VIII. to ANDREA GRITTI, DOGE OF VENICE.

Vit. B. x. 46.

B. M.

Desires the Signory to restore Ravenna and Cervia, and a quantity of salt and other goods of the Church, which they seized during the Pope's captivity. The ambassador in England told him that the towns were occupied to prevent their falling into the hands of the Imperialists, and the ambassador in France said the same to Wolsey.

It is now nearly three months since the Pope was liberated, but the King has not heard that the towns have been restored to him. Credence for the prothonotary Casale.

Lat., draft, pp. 2.

23 March. 4090. GARDINER and FOXE to TUKE.

R. O.

Arrived at Orvieto, on Saturday last, with no garments but the coats they rode in, which were much worn and defaced by the foul weather. Informed the Pope of their coming by Mr. Gregory, but had to stay at home that day and the next while their garments were "at the making." Had much difficulty from the dearth of everything. Commodities are conveyed into the town by asses and mules; and cloth, worth 20*s.* in England, is here 6*l.*, and yet not procurable in any quantity. Had they not made provision for gowns at Luke, they would have had to borrow Spanish cloaks from the 1528.

Pope's servants; and few men here have more garments than one. Master Gregory had to borrow as much as might furnish them with three beds. The day of their arrival was a very foul day; and within a mile of the town they had to pass a river on horseback, riding so deep that the water reached almost to their girdles. One of their servants is now in great danger from the wetting,—a young man, learned in physic, Greek and Latin, whose death would be a great loss. "We suppose ye know him well. His name is Richard Herde. He was wont to resort much to me, Steven Gardiner, there, and sometime dwelled with Master Chancellor of the Duchy" (More). Master Gregory says that in summer the south wind brings pestilence here from a river within a mile of the city. The place may well be called Urbs Vetus. No one would give it any other name.

Cannot tell how the Pope should be described as at liberty here, where hunger, scarcity, bad lodgings, and ill air keep him as much confined as he was in Castel Angel. His Holiness could not deny to Master Gregory that captivity at Rome was better than liberty here. The Pope occupies a decayed palace of the bishop of Orvieto. Before reaching his privy chamber we passed three chambers, "all naked and unchanged, the roofs fallen down, and, as we can guess, 30 persons, riff raff and other, standing in the chamber for a garnishment." The furniture of the Pope's bed chamber was not worth 20 nobles, bed and all. "It is a fall from the top of the hill to the lowest part of the mountain, where was primus ascensus, which every man in manner useth for his commodity." The Venetians, Florentines, and duke of Ferrara have profited by it. Those of Viterbo rebel, expecting the Spaniards will have the victory; and Sigismund de Mala Testa has entered again into Ariminum, which Lautrec restored to the Pope. The Pope is determined to send 2,000 or 3,000 footmen against those of Viterbo, that he may have access to Rome. The victory in Naples is still doubtful. Orvieto, 23 March. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

Harl. 419,
f. 72.
B. M.

2. Copy of the preceding.

23 March. 4091. QUEEN MARGARET TO ALBANY.

Tenlet, i. 65.

Thanks him cordially for his great diligence in promoting her business at Rome, which she hopes will be despatched shortly, from the information contained in a letter of the abbot of Culros, dated Rome, 21 Jan. Begs him earnestly to obtain the expedition of her sentence, and send it to Scotland as soon as possible, supplying whatever money is necessary, and to write again to the abbot of Culros, thanking him for his services. Is informed today, by Albany's secretary, Nicholas Caryvet, of a captain named William Stewart, and another gentleman, sent by Albany with a present of horses to the King her son, which will be very acceptable to him. He would have written to you for such things, but for the impediment mentioned in my last letters, to which I expect a full reply by the said captain, both from Francis and from you. Begs that letters intended for her may be given to Dunbar, Albany's secretary. Stirling, 23 March.

P.S.—Excuses herself for not writing all in her own hand.

French.

23 March. 4092. MONASTERY OF PETERBOROUGH.

Assent to the election of John Borowe, as abbot of the Benedictine Monastery of Peterborough. Hampton Court, 23 March.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 20.

1528.

24 March.

4093. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Calig. B. II.

255.

B. M.

Has received his letters dated at Hampton Court on the 17th. Is gratified by the gentleness of Wolsey's admonition, but regrets he should have entertained such a suspicion. Had never so much as thought in this matter of Wm. Lyll and his fellows, of applying to any but Wolsey, and would not for the world. Had only sent to my lord of London and to Tuke to move his Grace to save some of their lives, considering that Wm. Lyll has many allies and friends on the Borders to whom he must trust his life to do the King service. His servant had not spoken with my lord of London, who was absent from court, but delivered his letter to Tuke, who promised to speak to Wolsey on the subject. Has no knowledge of anything else done in the matter. Though he has little wit and experience, knows how much Wolsey has done for him, "and in a much greater matter than this is." Beseeches Wolsey "upon his knees" not to impute this to him, or it will shorten his days, which in truth he does not expect to be of long continuance. The bearer can tell how he has been since the receipt of Wolsey's letter, and that since his coming on the first Monday of Lent he has remained here with two hundred persons, and with the prisoners, whom he was ready to have put to execution on the coming of a judge. Newcastle, 24 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To my lord Legate's good grace." Endd.

24 March.

4094. CON O'NEILL, LORD OF TYRONE, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his loving letters by Sir Bartholomew Dillon, for which he is most greatly bound to him. Will hold firmly to the King's friendship. What he is accused of doing against the King's subjects he was compelled to do in self-defence against the baron of Delvin and others, from whom he could get no redress for the wrongs they did him, and in order to collect a tribute due to him and his ancestors from time immemorial. Is willing to submit the dispute to arbitration. Whenever the King's deputy and other subjects take my part against my Irish rebels, I also will help them against any Irish invaders. Regrets to hear that his kinsman Kildare has fallen under the King's displeasure. Hopes Wolsey will procure his pardon. Requests that he and his adherents may be free to go and return throughout the whole English part of Ireland. From my house at Dungenynde, 24 March 1527.

Hol., Lat., p. 1, broad sheet. Scaled. Add. Endd.

25 March.

4095. JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 61.

I wrote in my last that we were encamped within sight of the enemy. On Saturday the 15th, we came nearer to them, and encamped within half a mile of each other,—the Spaniards within the town of Troy, their lance-knights on one side, and our camp before it. Awaited battle that day, and skirmished together. Their camp was strongly environed, but it is thought we might have vanquished them if we had done our best, for it is said they were not more than 11,000 or 12,000 men, and without artillery. On Friday they fled, and Lautrec came on the following night to Melfe, which they battered next day with their ordnance. This day our men have entered and sacked the place, and slain above 3,000. The prince of the town has fallen into Lautrec's hands. Lautrec intends tomorrow to follow the enemy towards Naples, who have increased their force, and recovered 10 or 12 pieces of artillery. Expects to give them battle in 15 days. Before Melfe, 25 March.

Signed.

Add.

1528.

25 March.

R. O.

4096. The PRINCESS'S COUNCIL to WOLSEY.

Have discharged, as commanded, the Princess's household here in the Marches. Will fulfil his other commands. Several of the discharged servants were in good service before, and are now without a living. To stop complaints, have devised letters for the King to send to certain abbots within the limits of the Council's commission, according to a bill enclosed. Hope Wolsey will grant them wages meanwhile. Beaulieu, 25 March. Signed: John Exon.—Ja. Denton—G. Bromley—John Russell.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

ii. Circular to be addressed to the abbots, stating that for her own better education, and for the consolation of the King and Queen, it has been ordered that the Princess should reside near the King's person. As the Council of the Marches would be encumbered by having to move a great household from place to place in her absence, her officers and servants have been allowed to go home. But as several of them are destitute of houses or friends to resort to, the Abbot is requested to take ——— of them in the meantime "unto your convenient finding."

iii. List of the abbots to whom the above circular is to be sent, viz.:—In Gloucestershire: St. Augustine's, Bristol, Gloucester, Tewkesbury, Flaxley, Tintern, Kingswood, Siscestre, the prior of Lanthony beside Gloucester. In Worcestershire: Wychecombe, Hayles, Evesham, Pershore, Bordesley, Worcester, Mouch Malverne. In Shropshire: Shrewsbury, Burydese, Lylleshill, Haghmond, Wenlok, Womebridge, Halesowen. In Herefordshire: Wignor, Doore, Herford, Leompstre, Monmouth, Wormesley. In Cheshire: Chester, Combermer, Vale Roiall, Norton. In Wenlodge: Lanterham.

If Wolsey would bestow 69 of the poorest of the Princess's servants among the above houses, it would be "a full gracious deed."

Pp. 2.

25 March.

P. 8.

4097. The PRIOR and CONVENT of PETERBOROUGH, Line dioc.

Petition for assent* to the election by Wolsey, to whom the convent delegated its rights, of John Borowe as abbot, in the place of Robt. Kyrkton, resigned. 25 March 1528.

25 March.

R. O.

4098. JAMES WALSH.

Specialties of his demands from Mr. Roger Wygston. The latest date mentioned is the Annunciation, 1528.

Pp. 4.

[March.]

4099. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. 1. 37.

Since sending Master Peter (Vannes) to the King, has received other letters from Mr. Fox and Mr. Stephens, addressed to the King, Brian Tuke, and himself; which he sends, as they relate to the progress of their journey, although not of later date. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the King's most noble grace, Defensor of the Faith.

26 March.

R. O.

4100. G. DE THEIMSEKE and JOHN DE LA SAUCH to WOLSEY.

Arrived last night at London, having been instructed by Madame to repair to the King and Wolsey. Request that he will appoint a day to receive them. London, 26 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: Mons. le cardinal Legat en Engleterre. Endd.: Mons. Johan de la Sauch, xxvj^{te} Marcii 1527.

* It appears that the assent was already passed on the 23rd March, before the date of this petition.

1528.

27 March. 4101. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received his letters, dated Greenwich, 13 Feb., acknowledging the receipt of letters of two different dates touching the apprehension of Sir Will. Lisle and his accomplices, the good order of the Borders, and the prevention of Albany's coming. Is glad to have done him a service about Lisle; for though he surrendered to Henry's officers, it was owing to the sharp persecution made on him by James's. Has great confidence in Henry, and will give him no occasion of complaint. Reminds him that he has several times written, the last by Marchmont herald, for restitution to Rob. Bertoun, of Uvirbertoune, of ships and goods taken from him by Englishmen. Edinburgh, 27 March. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

27 March. 4102. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thanks Wolsey for his wise letters, dated Westminster, 13 Feb., showing his determinate mind that the two kingdoms may stand in concord. James on his side will wholly apply himself to the same end, as his chancellor Angus has written to the King and Wolsey. Edinburgh, 27 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "From the king of Scots, 28 Marcii 1528."

27 March. 4103. GARDINER and FOXE to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

Richard Herle died on Lady Day, to our great discomfort, as we had great confidence in his learning and experience in physic. The air of this city is very contagious, and the weather so moist that, except there be some change of the inhabitants soon, it will be of little consequence who are lords of this country, unless for penance you would wish it to the Spaniards as being unworthy to die in battle. The Pope receives letters from both sides with contrary news. He has a nuncio with Lautrec and Colonna, pretending that he is with the Spaniards, only to save the goods of the Church. Have written to my Lord such news as the Pope desired Sanga to tell us. By all accounts the armies are within half a mile of each other, the Spaniards being about equal, or not more than 4,000 different.

Have just heard that the Imperialists mean to divide themselves, and keep the strongholds of Naples, viz., the city of Naples, Capua, Gaeta and Castel Nove, where the Pope's hostages are, in which case it is believed the war will continue till Michaelmas. Request Tuke to take some trouble in deciphering their ciphers, as they know his skill. He will find that the letter M is made sometimes thus, Δ, and sometimes thus, ∇, "which neither of them is verily like your cipher, but only in another place, where ye put a greater cipher of that fashion for a great personage." We write daily what conference we have had, and defer sending the post till we can send some certain resolution. Pray to be delivered from this pestilential air, which has already done us such displeasure. Do not like to detain this post, who was specially sent by the King and Wolsey. Orvieto, 27 March. Signed by Gardiner, for himself and Foxe.

Pp. 3. Add. Endd.

28 March. 4104. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

In favor of his cousin Evers, who goes up at this time to Wolsey on his own affairs. Has always found him diligent, and ready to do the King service. Newcastle, 28 March.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

1528.

28 March. 4105. ANGUS to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has received the King's letters, dated Greenwich, 13 Feb., complaining that nothing had been done on this side for the taking of the Lises, and promising that if he find reciprocity of love on the part of Scotland, there need be no fear of Albany's going thither. Assures him he did his utmost to deprive the Lises of all support in Scotland, otherwise they might have avoided subjection to Henry's officers. If Henry knew the truth he would give James thanks for his efforts to make redress and establish peace. Has written more amply to Wolsey. Edinburgh, 28 March 1528. Signed : Ard. Chancellor.

P. 1, broad sheet. Add. Endd.

28 March. 4106. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

License to Thomas lord Rochford of the site or mansion place of the manor of Tunbridge, with demesne lands and appurtenances, at a rent of 26*l.* 8*s.* per annum. 28 March 19 Hen. VIII. Signed and sealed by lord Rochford.

Parchment.

28 March. 4107. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has received his letter by a servant of Master Curteis. Will stay the receipt of 60*l.* from Thos. Somer, and the delivery of his obligation, till further instructed. Hugh cannot find the acquittance for the abbot of Bruern in Cromwell's house. Gave Mondye Cromwell's demands about Fuller's matter, who said he would abide my lord Cardinal's orders, but would not concede that Fuller should enter on his lands last Lady Day. Found him at evensong in his parish church, when he told Vaughan he was disposed to serve God, and could not attend to such matters there : "whom I was bold to answer that sith it was his mind in such place to serve God, that better he could not serve Him than with restoring the right unto his brother whom he had wrongfully defrauded." On Thursday last, between 6 and 7 p.m., five thieves knocked at the door of Roderego, the Spaniard "which dwelleth next the goldsmith against your door." Being asked who was there, they answered, "One from the Court to speak with Roderego." When the door was opened, three of them rushed in, "and found the said Roderego sitting by the fire, accompanied with a poor woman dwelling next to Mrs. Wynsor. The other two tarried, and kept the door, and strangled the woman that she should not cry." They then took Roderego's purse, and killed him by stabbing him in the belly, but had not fled far before two of them were taken and brought to Newgate. Have made a chain to Cromwell's wicket that no man not well known may enter.

Antony Bonvixi has heard that the French have invaded Naples, taken Pulia and other towns, and are now lying near the city of Naples, likely to subdue all the realm, unless they be resisted by an army which the Emperor has sent out of Rome. Others say the armies have met, and the French been beaten. Two ambassadors have come from the Lady Margaret, who were here before, and lodged at Marcellus' house. The one is a man of 60, a good deal like Dr. Colet, late dean of Powlys, both in person and gesture. Yesterday they left for the Court, but were ordered to return, perhaps "because the court was not furnished with gentlemen to the King's pleasure." Tomorrow they go thither again. Cromwell probably knows the news they bring better than Vaughan. Two hulks have lately arrived with grain, and more are looked for. London, Passion Even.

Hel., p. 1. Add. : To his right worshipful master, Mr. Cromwell, be this yoven at Oxford.

1528.

28 March.

R. O.

4108. FRANCIS I. to CHARLES V.

Letter of defiance. Paris, 28 March 1527, before Easter.

P. 1. Spanish translation.

Vesp.C.vii.39.

R. M.

2. The Emperor's reply.

Spanish, p. 1.

28 March.

Cal. D. x.
177-180,
and 124-128.

R. M.

Papiers de Card. Granvelle, t. 350.

4109. RECEPTION of GRANVELLE by FRANCIS I.

On the 28th March 1527, avant Pasques, the King being at Paris, accompanied by the Princes of the Blood, Cardinals, &c., summoned to his presence the Emperor's ambassador, Nicolas Perrenot, s'eur de Granvelle, who represented to him that he had letters from his master, of 7 Feb., showing that the French ambassadors had taken leave of him on the 21st Jan., and that a French herald had declared war against him and defied him on the following day. For this reason he had been ordered to take his leave of Francis, and return immediately, and he much regretted his master's desire for peace was thus thwarted. The ambassador protested that he himself had done all he could to preserve friendly relations; and if he had given offence to Francis, he asked his pardon.

The King replied that he was sorry not to be able to treat Granvelle as courteously as he deserved, but that as the Emperor had arrested his ambassadors, he was forced to do the like to him. In reply to what the Emperor had said to Guyenne and Clarenceux, he said that he had never pledged his faith to the Emperor; and gave Granvelle a writing, which he desired him to read and deliver to his master. The ambassador took the paper from Robertet, but, as his commission was expired, desired to be excused receiving any further charge. The King then ordered Robertet to read the paper, which was a cartel of defiance, dated Paris, 28 March 1527, avant Pasques. He reminded the ambassador that the Dom Prevost of Utrecht, the imperial ambassador, defied him at Dijon, contrary to a treaty; and as to the Emperor's protest that he did not consider himself to have done wrong before God, God himself should be judge of both their consciences. The excuse which the Emperor makes for the capture and detention of the Pope has so little appearance of truth, that he wonders at its being put forward. Considering the length of the Pope's confinement, how can Charles pretend that he is not answerable for it? Francis knows well that his children are in the Emperor's hands; but as to the pretence of the latter that he has raised no obstacle to their liberation, it is notorious that Francis has made such great and excessive offers that not one of his predecessors who have been taken prisoners by the Infidels have been demanded one quarter of the sums. To mention only one instance: he offered to give Charles 2,000,000 cr., both in ready money and rents. If, then, the retention of his children, the refusal to negotiate, the demand that he should abandon his allies before restitution of his children, the taking a Pope prisoner, the violation of everything holy, and the refusal to join in opposing the Turk or putting down heresy, were not enough to move him to war, what other injuries should have sufficed to that end? As to the king of England, Francis has entire confidence that he will reply so virtuously on his own account that it would be doing him wrong to answer for him. Nevertheless, his friendship with England is such that if by indisposition the King should, unhappily, not be able to make answer, Francis would do as much for him as for himself, placing not only his kingdom and subjects but also his own person at Henry's disposal. Francis is informed by his herald Guyenne that Charles bade him communicate some conversations he had with the French ambassador, the president, in Granada, which the Emperor considers, if Francis had heard, he would have replied to. Francis says his ambassador had informed him of many conversations, but of none which touched his honor. Otherwise he would not have waited so long : for as soon as he heard the things which he has mentioned to Granvelle, he made a reply, which he has delivered to Granvelle to read, signed with his own hand, and which he believes to be sufficient. The Emperor said in this conversation that he had observed the promises made at Madrid better than Francis. Francis is not aware that he made him any promise. The treaty, which was in writing, is not binding, because he was not then at liberty; and he made no engagement to him otherwise, except as to an enterprise against the Turk, of which he is quite ready to fulfil the conditions when Charles will do the like. The Emperor may be assured that he will no sooner have placed foot in the stirrup in such a sacred cause than Francis will be in his saddle, although the Turks are not such near neighbours to him as to Charles.

1528.

The ambassador replied, that he could make no further answer at present than what the Emperor had declared, and delivered in writing to the ambassadors and heralds of France; but as a faithful subject of his master, he would say, that if Francis intimated to the Emperor the things aforesaid, either by herald or otherwise, the Emperor would certainly acquit himself, as he had always done, in good conscience. He thanked Francis that he had expressed satisfaction with his own personal conduct, and insisted on his demand for a safe-conduct to return. Francis replied that Charles by his conduct had compelled him to make the answer which he had done, and trusted that on receiving what the ambassador had heard, signed with his hand, he would reply to him like a gentleman, and not like a lawyer by writing; for if he did the latter he would make answer to his Chancellor by an advocate who should be a better man than he. As to Granvelle, he should be conducted to the frontier, and allowed to cross, in exchange for the French ambassadors, on his obtaining a safe-conduct for the French herald.

Fr., pp. 15, mutilated.

28 March. 4110 INSTRUCTIONS of FRANCIS I. to DU PRAT and BOUCLANS.

Cal. D. x. 153.

B. M.

" [de France et d'Angleterre
Messrs. du Prat et de Bouclans envoyez de p[ar]t de l'Empereur.]

" Que l'on dira que quant a la seurete du rest[at] les 1,200,000 escus payez et ledit Roy d de ce que luy est deu ainsi qu'il a este offert oul[tre] presentes, ledit sieur Roy et le roy d'Angleterre baillier[ont] et promectre payer ledit restat es termes qui seront [convenues]."

Genoa and the county and territory of Ast shall be restored to the Emperor after the deliverance of the Dauphin and duke of Orleans "avec seurete qui a este offerte pour la revocation de l'exercite. apres declaree sur la dite revocation.

" Et quant a la susdite revocation, si la seurete offerte ne soit] trouvee suffisante ledit sieur Roy tres Chrestien consentira [encourir] ipso facto la peine des 300,000 es[cus] apres la demission de mesdits Sieurs son e[n]f[an]s dedans le temps qui sera limite As to Milan, he asks the Emperor to have the Duke's conduct investigated, and, if he is found innocent, to restore him, according to the treaty of Toledo. If he is found guilty and resists, Francis will assist the Emperor against him

• • • • •
Fr., pp 2, mutilated.

4111. [DEFIANCE OF FRANCIS I. ?]

Cal. D. x. 180.

B. M.

• • • • • " Seigneur m'a command[e] de dire rle de sa delivrance en ceste court en autre me, disant qu'il sen estoit alle sur sa foy et promesse savoir a 1528.

[DEFIANCE OF FRANCIS I. ?]—cont.

ung chacun, que encores que tout homme g avoir obligation de foy, et que cela luy est excuse trop h ce nonobstant pour satisfaire a luy et a ung chacun de son h[onneur que] il a voulu garder jusques a ceste heure, et gardera s'il pl[ais]t a Dieu jusques a la mort, m'a donne charge de dire que s'il y a [homme de] son estat au monde qui le vueille chargier, non pas de sadite tant seulement, mais qu'il ait jamais fait chose que ung [gentilhomme] ayant son honneur ne doibve faire, il dit qu'il a menty par la g[orge] et autant de foiz qu'il le dira, mentyra, delibere d'en deffendre s[on] honneur, jusques au derrrenier jour de sa vye, et pour autant celluy ainsi contre verite le voudroit charger. Dorresnavant ne luy es riens, mais luy assure le camp, et ledit Seigneur luy portera l armes, protestant que si apres ceste declaration y a homme d[e monde] qui le charge par parolles ou escriptures, la honte [luy restera] veu que ledit Seigneur accepte le combat qui es"

Mutilated.

28 March. 4112. CHARLES V. to MARGARET.†

Vesp. C. II. 380.

B. M.

Since the defiance by the kings of France and England, on Jan. 22, has sent to her and the King his brother, by sea, the lords of Reulx and Montfort, the provost of Waltrielue (?) and Henry Cheingher, factor of the Welzers. Montfort's instruction is dated Jan. 31. He is to ask for news, aid and advice for the protection of the country. Desires her to assemble the Estates, if she has not already done so, and explain to them the unreasonableness of the defiance. Reulx will arrive about the end of March with 2,000 Spaniards, paid for six months, having started from Carthagená on the 5th. The fortifications of Gravellines, Bourbourg, Dunquerque and the dikes must be attended to, to prevent surprises.

The force sent by the lord of Rosinboz will assist. She must provide arms and stores, revoke and refuse safe-conducts, assemble armourers and saddlers, collect powder, sulphur and saltpetre, for which he will send payment by Reulx. Has written about this to Teremonde. Desires her to spend 10,000 or 12,000 ducats in artillery, according to the accompanying bill; and to practise with the people of England by distributing writings in his justification, and blaming the Cardinal as the cause of this and of the intended divorce. Beures must send a wise man to Scotland to negotiate an alliance by marriage or otherwise, so as to injure the English, and also to the chief persons in Osterlande, to get their aid against the English. Reminds her that the adhesion of the duke of Cleves should be obtained by Mons. de Liege, and that the duke of Gueldres must be treated with, at least for neutrality, whatever it may cost without giving up territory. The friendship of Cologne and other chief towns must be obtained, without putting too much trust in them. Has written "au re[nte]-maistre de Zellande" about a fleet. Montfort will leave Margaret his instructions, and go on to the Emperor's brother in Germany, to prevent the Germans serving on the other side, and to make an effort for Burgundy; to advise him and the electors to send a king-at-arms to the kings of France and England, to say that they consider themselves defied, as they have defied the Emperor; and to induce the Swiss to insist on payment from France before the Emperor releases the Princess, and to hold a diet before serving the French king. Intends to spread a report that he will invade France in several quarters with Almans, though he does not mean to have more than 10,000, who will be led hither by count Felix. Will send money for them by Reulx.

† Decipher of intercepted despatch.

1528.

Enrich, the factor of the Welzers, is charged to go to Colliment, the armourer of Augsburg, for armour for the Emperor and the army. Reulx's instruction of Feb. 8 is to raise 2,000 Spaniards for the defence of the Low Countries, for whose provision he has 30,000 ducats; to arrange for the passage of the 6,000* Germans, and to raise 1,000 hackbut men, for which he has 20,000 ducats. He carries also letters for the States. Desires the lord of Vault to be recompensed for the captaincy of Bapalmes castle, unless he wishes to keep it, and the charge given to John Quilles or other fit person. Wishes the Spaniards to be well treated. Asks for speedy news. Has had none since Rosimbor's departure. Madrid, 28 March.

Desires her to bid Reulx buy 2,000 quintals of sulphur for the artillery here.

Fr. pp. 5. Endd.: "Deschiffrement des lettres de l'Empereur à Madame Marguerite." And a similar endorsement in Latin.

29 March. 4113. JOHN DUNCAN to ALBANY.

Teulet, i. 67.

Has labored so effectually with reference to the queen of Scotland's divorce, at the instance of herself and Albany, that sentence was pronounced in the Queen's favor on 11 March by the cardinal of Ancona. As the matter is weighty the Cardinal and his officers expect large rewards. Thinks 100 ducats will be required to satisfy them, of which Octavian expects shortly to be able to furnish one half. The Queen relies entirely upon Albany to meet the necessary expences. What has hitherto been spent amounts to over 250 ducats, but now that sentence is obtained you will have the means of proceeding rigorously against Angus. Rome, 29 March 1527.

Fr.

29 March. 4114. RICHARD EVENSWOD, Parson of Kyrkbithure, to DR. BELLASSES.

R. O.

Thanks him for his kindness in amending his living. Is grateful also to Dr. Bellasses' brother for his much needed favor. Requests his further good offices in a matter, to be explained by the bearer, about which he fears to be put in trouble. Kirkbithure, 29 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

29 March. 4115. ARCHIBALD [EARL OF ANGUS], CHANCELLOR [OF SCOTLAND,] to DACRE.

Cal. B. VII. 27.

R. M.

Has referred his complaint of non-redress to the King and Council. They have written for Maxwell, but before he could come the King departed beyond Forth, "for his pastime" till near Easter. Maxwell will be here in the holidays. Bogs the matter may be suspended till Tuesday after Low Sunday, when due redress shall be made. Edinburgh, 29 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Dacre, wardane of the West Marches of Evingland foranentis Scotland, &c.

30 March. 4116. ANGUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his long letter, dated Westminster, 14 Feb., and a short one, dated Westminster, the 17th, which he has shown the King. Though the means taken for the capture of the Isles were not the best that might have been, orders were given, owing to which they were compelled to surrender. Spared no labor or expence for his own part, and caused sharp execution to be made on them night and day. Wolsey speaks of the King's forbearance during James's minority. James is not ungrateful. Although the peace is so nearly expired, a convention of Lords is to be held soon after Easter, in which this will be the chief subject of consideration. Has always had true mind to the King, next his own sovereign, "and has ben redy and lyn ewest the Bordouris ay sen the 23d day of Januair," expecting to have met the earl of Northumberland and others, according to Angus's request sent by Thos. Gowrie, constable of Alnwick. Shall always be ready to meet and make redress. Meanwhile has charged his lieutenants to do so. Hopes Wolsey will not listen to the complaints of those who ask redress but will not give it. There are as many complaints on this side, as the taking of the bark of Sandwich, the spoiling of the "pyk" of Aberdeen, and various outrages on the Borders. On the 15th March, the household of Berwick, to the number of sixscore men, entered Scotland, and in open day "tane up one toune in the Merse called Clarybald," and have made no redress. What James wrote to the King about Albany was not because he was in dread of his coming, but that he might have his uncle's counsel and support in all things. Edinburgh, 30 March 1528. Signed: Ard. Chancellor.

1528.

ANGUS to WOLSEY—cont.

Pp. 3. Add. Endd.

30 March. 4117. HENRY GULDEFORD to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Hears that he has come to Tunbridge for the dissolving of that house, and that he is going thence to Bilsington. Reminds him of their communication about the ferme of Bilsington, and asks him to come to Leeds Castle on his return to commune further of the matter. Otford, 30 March. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To Maister Cromwell.

31 March. 4118. GARDINER and FOXE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 63.

Arrived at Orvieto on the 20th. Kept ourselves secret for one day in order to communicate with Gregory. Visited the Pope on the 22nd, and were with him every day three or four hours till this day. We have written in cipher at some length to Wolsey. Foxe expects to return shortly after the despatch of this post. Sir Gregory is hearty in your service. None could do better. We are indebted to him for our lodgings, which no money could have furnished. It is hoped that Lautree will shortly obtain Naples. Orvieto, 31 March.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

Harl. 419,
f. 73 b.
B. M.

2. Copy of the preceding, from Gardiner's letter book.

[March.] 4119. [GARDINER and FOXE to WOLSEY.]

Harl. MS.
419, f. 71.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 90.

Arrived at Orvieto on the 20th inst., and were admitted to the Pope's presence as soon as they could get clothes. Were obliged to keep secret one day, which they spent with Gregory. The Pope sent Sanga, who was the Datary's servant, to welcome them, to apologise that he could not better receive them, and to offer free access to him without ceremony. Would have visited him accordingly, but it suited their purpose to have full communication with Mr. Gregory, and so they excused themselves by their want of clothes. As they travelled post, they were obliged to leave all their clothes at Calais, and there are none to be borrowed here.

Ask Wolsey to thank Mr. Gregory for his kindness. He gave up to them his own lodging furnished with beds. He keeps an honorable porte, and has great access of gentlemen,—much to his expence and the King's honor. The Pope has a high opinion of him, and he can do the King more service than any other man. Write in their common letters about their audience with the Pope.

Copy, pp. 2, from Gardiner's letter book.

1528.

31 March. 4120. CASALE, GARDINER and FOXE to WOLSEY.

Harl. 419. C75.

B. M.

Strype's Mem.

i. ii. No. 28.

Pecock, i. 95.

Had an audience with the Pope in his privy bedchamber. Found there card. Ridolfo. Delivered our letters; on which the Pope made us a long speech, enlarging on the King's services in his behalf. He desired us to enter familiarly into communication, and he would give such resolution without delay as in law and equity we could require. On this I, Stephen Gardiner, said that the King and you were persuaded of his zeal and affection by the letters of Casale, Knight and Gambara, who exhibited a commission and dispensation, with a promise that if they were insufficient his Holiness would supply the defects. Though the said commission and dispensation were altered in some material points from the form required by the King, and were not fully suitable, yet, in consideration of the Pope's promise, the King thanked his Holiness as if they had been. I then touched upon the cause of our coming, our answer in the French court, the King's resolution to adhere to the Pope, omitting to write the precise form to your Grace, as the same must be sent in cipher in presenti rerum statu, and by spending half the day with the Pope and half with St. Quatuor we should delay our letters too long. The Pope replied, that he reposed all his trust in the King, and, notwithstanding his promise, he must dissemble until Italy be pacified. He had ever studied the interests of Christendom more than his own. "And whereas, according to the instruction, it was declared how your Grace, being advertised that his Holiness somewhat stayed in expedition of the King's desire, for that it was showed him that matter was set forth without your consent or knowledge," and therefore you begged us to protest of your sincerity and your mind concerning the merits and the qualities of the gentlewoman; he said no such protestation was necessary, and he could not believe that the King would be led by any undue affection in a matter of such importance, saying he would lean to the King's opinions more than to any other learned man, that they must be great and efficient to have induced him to take this step, and he desired to see the King's labor and study in the matter. He added that he did not believe the report that your Grace was not privy to it, or that anything of such high consequence would be set forth without your advice, by which the King is so much guided, that he will continue to use the same, and, in consideration of your good qualities, esteem you no less than the having of an heir to succeed him in his realm. He confessed that the report had made him waver until he had ascertained the truth; that in altering the commission he only regarded the honor of the King and of the See Apostolic, which two were indissolubly connected; that he would make no delay, but would the next day read with us the King's book, and determine the commission. On urging him to make an overture as of himself to the French king for abstinence of war on that side of the mountains, conformably to your letters, he expressed apprehension lest the Spaniards should attempt to delude Lautrec, weary their enemies by delay, and so Italy would not be delivered. To further arguments on this head, he said it was a matter to be dreamed and slept on. So we parted for the night.

Next day we exhibited to the Pope the King's book. The Pope began to read; and standing a while, and after sitting upon a form covered with an old coverlet not worth 20d., read the preliminary epistle, and the latter part of the book touching the law, without suffering any of us to help him. After commenting upon it, he greatly commended it, and said he would keep it and read it at leisure. And as the epistle is directed to you and other prelates, his Holiness asked for the answer. We said there was none, but he might infer the answer from your letters. He asked whether the King had ever broken the matter to the Queen. We said, yes, and that she was content to abide by the judgment of the Church. He then proceeded to question whether your Grace would be objected to "as suspect;" for that, by answering the King's epistle and declaring your mind, you had given sentence beforehand, and could not be considered indifferent. We answered that you had only asserted your opinion thus far,—that, if the facts were as alleged, judgment ought to follow; and he might send you a commission to define the law, in the event of the facts being ascertained. With this he seemed satisfied. We urged that a clause should be added remota recusatione et appellatione.

1528.

CASALE, GARDINER and FOXE to WOLSEY—cont.

He wished to read the commission by himself, admitting, as we urged, the necessity of speed, and the danger to the realm by delay, reckoning what titles might be pretended by the king of Scots and others. That night we went to St. Quatuor, and delivered him the King's and your letters, thanking him for his services, and a promise of the King's liberality. He declined the 2,000 cr. offered him; so, rewarding his secretary with 30, I keep the rest in my hands to be offered him again. He promised not to be sparing in his troubles. He had done no more than his duty. The King had been a good servant to the Church, and to various Popes. He then proceeded to particulars. We showed him the King's book, with which he was well pleased, and admitted in the end that the commission desired by the King was conformable to the decretals. It is clear that they are hampered only by fear of the Spaniards. This was confirmed by our interview with the Pope on Wednesday, who declined to discuss the commission on that day, as St. Quatuor was unwell. We then talked with him about a cardinal to be sent, "who might have a good pretence for composing peace between princes." He did not relish the proposition; and when we told him, on Gambara's authority, of letters received by him from the Emperor for that purpose, he faintly admitted that he had received them. We urged that Campeggio should be sent, as favoring the Emperor.

We then tried to fathom his opinion touching the abstinence, but after some discussion could obtain no direct answer. Next day, repairing to the Pope, we found St. Quatuor, and in another angle of the chamber cardinals Ursinus, Caesarinus and De Cæsis. When we entered his bedchamber, the Pope withdrew to a little study which he uses for his sleeping chamber, had some stools brought, and, setting himself with his back to the wall, willed us to sit round him. He then called for Simonett, dean of the Rota, a man of substantial learning. St. Quatuor explained the cause of the meeting; on which the Dean said that he had not much studied the matter, but he thought St. Quatuor spoke very well. Then Gardiner, at the Pope's bidding, spoke in defence of the commission, apparently to their satisfaction. Finally he came to this point, that, though the commission was not without precedent, the Emperor might object that it was unusual. We brought him off from this opinion. Then he doubted whether the causes assigned for the divorce were sufficient, and desired Simonett to consult his books. The conference lasted four hours; and the Pope said that, as for himself, he had so much confidence in the King's conscience that he thought his cause was just; but as it must come before the world, and he had no sufficient learning to discuss the matter, he must take the advice of counsel to justify his doings, for the Emperor would get the universities to write upon it. Whereupon he showed a letter to Casale, sent from the Emperor's court, containing the Emperor's answer to the intimations made to him of the King's divorce. We think he will not refuse, for he is fully convinced of the King's merit. Tomorrow we have a conference with Simonett.

This day, the 27th, Gambara arrived. Staphylæus, they say, will be here in three or four days. From seven in the morning till night we discussed the commission with Simonett, until he descended to persuade us to be satisfied with a general commission, and not in the form we desired, being new and out of course. If so, it could be sped tomorrow, and within three months sentence be given in England, and remitted here to be confirmed. He assured us he was sensible of the King's merits, and so are all men here.

1528.

Next day we presented our letters to Card. de Monte, who promised to further the King's cause, so far as he might. On Passion Sunday after dinner the Pope took counsel with De Monte, St. Quatuor and Simonetta. At our audience, about three o'clock, he commanded us all to be seated, himself sitting in medio semicirculi. On urging the commission, the Pope protested his good mind to the King, and showed what he had done, as his own learning was insufficient. Gardiner replied that there were two articles: first, would his Holiness pass the commission? 2. Might he, if he would? Of the first I said we had evident argument; for the second, that he might, appeared by the King's book, and the offers of St. Quatuor and Simonetta, who had said that if the sentence was once given the Pope would confirm it; and if this were so, the cause must be good, or ought not to be confirmed, and all we asked was confirmation beforehand. I added, that if they objected merely on a point of form, and the King could get no more favor from their hands than a common person, his Majesty would use domestico remedio apud suos, and not have his cause tried among those whose hearts were already prejudiced, and all things coloured, nullis nixa radicibus justitia et veritatis. After I had thus spoken, every man looked on another, and so staid until Simonett began to excuse himself by a show of distinctions, and so entered again into a discussion of the cause.

The Pope heard all with very good will. De Monte and St. Quatuor, pretending they were not well informed in the matter, desired us to be content with a general commission, with promise of confirmation, which would serve the King's purpose. We said we had received our instructions according to the advice of learned men, and could not transgress them. The Pope replied he would do all that in honor he could do. We said it was not honorable for the King to desire what was not honorable in his Holiness to grant, and it was not likely that the King, who had so much respect to his honor, would blemish it in this matter.

The Pope, perceiving how we spoke, plainly said that to satisfy the King he would set apart all style and common course of the court which could not bind him in such a cause as this was, speaking apparently against St. Quatuor, who is a great supporter of established usage;—adding that if the Emperor complained he would show him and the world that in administering justice he was bound to show favor to one so meritorious as the king of England, and he would hear what De Monte and Anconitanus had to say, and then satisfy our request. We begged it might be shortly, that we might dispatch our post, who had now waited six days, and would not be despatched till we had a certain resolution. After this the Pope enquired of the bishops of England and their ages; on which I told him a "merry tale of the bishop of Norwich his good heart, and how, being about fourscore year old, he would have a chamber devised near the ground, without any stairs, to lie in 20 years hence, when he knew he should be somewhat feeble." And I took occasion to make him an overture for taking away the first fruits, telling him it was a suggestion made by the said bishop,—without letting him know that we had any instructions. His Holiness began to inquire about them, and how they might be redeemed. The project pleased him and the cardinals, and he said he would gladly concur in it. He then fell to speaking of yourself and your college, how the buildings proceeded, what they would cost, the number of scholars, readers, &c.; and it pleased him much to understand that you had taken such order in letting the farms, as no man should have them except he would dwell upon them and maintain hospitality. And this was the best justification for the alteration of those religious places, whereof only did arise scandalum religionis. He professed his desire to do all that he could to assist you. We touched also upon the degradation of priests. We have enquired how much time would be spent if the King's cause were relegated here. They do not desire it, for fear of the Imperialists. This is the only obstacle to the King's request. When we speak of celerity, they discuss how it may be secured. Their proposal that the King should first marry was only a device to get rid of responsibility. Therefore we are more earnest to obtain the commission after the first form; but if that cannot be, the commission after the second degree will serve for the purpose of beginning the process, and can be openly shown, they promising to confirm the sentence and supply all defects. But we shall only accept this according to our instructions, in the event of not being able to obtain the first. As fear is the great obstacle, we do not see how to remove it, as you may judge for yourself, according to the communication we had with you in your chamber at York Place, on Friday night, before our departure. We are not without hope, if we cannot obtain the commission absolutely in the first form, to prevail upon the Pope to pass it secretly, to remain in the King's hands in eventum, and to give us a general commission for a legate.

1528.

CASALE, GARDINER and FOXE to WOLSEY—cont.

Matters being at this point, we thought it best to despatch at once Lord Rochford's priest.* We had hopes to have sent some resolution of our attaining the commission in the first form. Gambara is active in the King's matter. Staphylæus is not yet come. The only objection to sending Campeggio is the dread of the gout, to which he is extremely subject, and which leaves him very weak after its attacks. We can get no answer about the abstinence. The Pope is Cunctator maximus, but with contrary success to Fabius maximus. He has taken great pains in the King's matter, and can never plead that he did not understand it. Wish to have instructions how they shall act on their return through France, and what answer they shall give if the French king question them. Send abstracts of letters of Lautrec, and the news in Italy. No Spaniard's life is safe in Rome. Orvieto, 31 March.

P.S.—The Pope told Casale that if the Venetians had not been secretly supported by Francis they would have restored Cervia and Ravenna,—that he is deluded on all sides, and if he cannot be supported by his friends he must give himself up to his enemies rather than suffer the ruin of Italy. He is troubled that Rimini, once delivered to him by Lautrec, has been taken out of his hands. If these things cannot be remedied by you, the Pope will evidently "precipitate himself into his enemies' deduction."

Copy, from Gardiner's letter book.

R. O.

2. Copy of the first part of the preceding despatch.

Pp. 6. Endd. in Geo. Throgmorton's hand: Copies of letters from Doctor Stevins and Foxe to my lord Cardinal.

[March ?]

4121. SIR WM. FITZWILLIAM the elder to MR. HENNEGE.

R. O.

The abbot of Borow's letter, asking Fitzwilliam to pay 200*l.* to his servant Dawson, did not arrive till he had left Essex, and he could not then pay it without much hindrance to the projected marriage of one of his daughters.

Asks Hennege to spare it till next term. If the letter had arrived when he was in London, it should have been paid in an hour.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipfull Mr. Henegge, one of the Kyng's pryve chambre. Endd.

March.

4122. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal D. x. 250.

B. M.

"[P]leasith your Gra[ce, on the] . . . [of this] present month we b . . . unto us the constable of . . . being assistants of the sa[me] . . . declared unto us to have rece[ived] . . . of the Staple, the same being . . . with the most principal

1528 stapi[llers] London, by which letter he a bowght, considering the scantness of mon[ey and every other] thing, which reigneth here that some e tall men and of good fame have for p[ur]se [th]eyin silvis in such danger of their lives th[at it will] please the King to be gracious unto them. Three of [them now i]n prison are like to suffer, wherefore if it s[ho]uld happen by any fort[un]e that April payment should be delayed it [becometh] us to judge what peril is like to fall by m [ex]treeme poverty, which is universal amongst s[uch] as are u[nder] our charge, which, well considered, is not [c]awse; for by mean that the King's coins which [were] wont to be current by these parties been now and that all manner of victual with all other ne[cessary] things been raised in their prices after the r[ati]o of [or] rather far above, it is not possible for the soldiers, [who] ben now in 8d. by the day, to live so well on [their pay] as those of 6d. by the day did before the reeys[ing of] the King's coins, as is before said, also the same universal plague which toucheth unto all the council a[nd the i]nhabitants here, rate and rate like, or more doth to the soldiers, for the dearer that all [things are] here the more is their charge; for where ne s in time of dearth men do either break their [dim]inische their servants and expenses at their [pleasure, it is] all contrary here in most humble wise we beseech [the King's highness] and your Grace not only to co manner such matter as is comprised letter, and to take the same in good p[ar]t most gracious manner, to provide such a be found for the imminent perils most most by the King's graciousness circumspect wisdom. Our Lord [keep your Grace] in prosperous health with long and to his pleasure. Written at Guisnes,

 March 1528."

Pp. 3, very mutilated. Add.: [To my lo]rd Legate's grace.

4123. JO. DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF BAYONNE, to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. n. 2.]

I 36.

B. M.

" Ill^{mo} et R^{mo} domine, si volet R.D.V. ea que heri [mihi] aperuit Bal-thasarum latere, et tamen per ipsum post rem huc regi Serenissimo communicatam literas et instructiones de ea tota in Galliam mittere, non video quomodo recte id fieri poterit. Nam quum nihil attulerit ex Gallia nisi apertum et quod illi emanandum ante discessum fuerit, (ut solet nobili[bus] qui data opera pro re certa mittuntur), inurbanum videretur[r] si contra signata et clausa omnia veluti cursori darent[ur]; deinde suspicio illi forte injicietur nonnulla esse que vel[is] Pontificem latere. Quamobrem rectius meo iudicio foret] si non gravaretur Ill^{mo} et R^{mo} D.V. ipsum hodie hora certa se accersere, et de his que a rege meo attulit expedition[em] aliquam facere, quod non erit factu difficile, nam nudius te[r]tius] cum ego una adessem p[er]ne satisfactum illi fuit de rebus adeo ut fere nihil jam supersit nisi benigne et blan[de] acceptum dimittere. Interrogavit me quid cause esset] quod] orator Cesaris heri ad D.V. R^{mo} adibisset. Respondi ill[um] dicere Cesarum et Margaretam a[gre] ferre quod esset bellu[m] cum] hoc rege affini et necessario suscipiendum, et plerumque in [hanc] sententiam, tamen Ill^{mo} D.V., que falli non potest veluti ab ingenio Hispanico profecta accepisse. Poter[it] R^{mo} D.V. si ita videbitur in hoc mecum convenire, nam si rem illam celaremus, scrupulum illi majorem et suspicionem inji[ceremus].
 Ignoscet tamen mihi Ill^{mo} et R^{mo} D.V. si sus Minervam do[lescere] audeat]."
Signed.

Mutilated. Add.: Ill^{mo}, &c. Card. Ebor. S. Sedis Apostolicæ de Latere Legato et Angliæ cancellario.

1528.

GRANTS in MARCH 1528.

March.
GRANTS.

1. Ralph Buketon. Exemption from serving on juries, &c. Del. Westm., 1 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 23.

2. Robert abbot of Selby. Insuperimus and confirmation of various charters and patents of Edward IV., &c. Westm., 2 March.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 17.

2. Wm. Bramley, messenger of the Chamber. To be a messenger of the Exchequer, with 4*d.* a day, in the room of John Honne, who is incapacitated. Bramley will not receive wages until the death of Honne. Greenwich, 8 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Westm., 2 March.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 15.

3. John Fuller, of Neudegate, Surrey. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Windsor, 15 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 3 March.—P.S.

3. Jo. Heyron. Pardon for the murder of Alice, wife of Thos. Slykestone, of Brentkingsethorp. Leic., alias Thos. Tailor. Windsor, 27 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 3 March.—P.S.

3. Nic. Caldecott. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Del. Westm., 3 March 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

7. Edward Staple, clk. Presentation to a canonry and prebend in the collegiate church of Tomworth, called Wyginton. Staff., void by death of John Golde. Del. Westm., 7 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

10. Wm. Riggeley and Rouland Riggeley, yeomen of the wardrobe of Beds. Grant, in survivorship, of the offices of bailiff of the manor of Shenston, Staff., with 2*d.* a day, and keeper of the park there, with 2*d.* a day. Also herbage and pannage of the park, at an annual rent of 110*s.* 4*d.*; on surrender of patent 20 Feb. 10 Hen. VIII., granting the same to William only. Windsor Castle, 20 Feb. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Windsor, 10 March.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 22.

14. Sir Rob. Legh. Lease of lands in Brokeburgh, Beds. Del. Westm., 14 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S. B. b.

15. Peter Mutton, yeoman usher of the Chamber. To be constable of Pembroke Castle, South Wales, with 100*s.* a year, as Maurice Buttele was constable. Del. Hampton Court, 1[5] March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

16. Griffin Rede, usher of the Chamber. To be customer and builer and "silaginer" in the ports of Pembroke and Tynby, Pembroke and Haverford West, in the comote of Haverford, South Wales; with fees of 4*l.* out of the issues of the said offices and of the crown lands in said coa. Del. Westm., 16 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 23.

17. Sir John Wallop and Richard Page, gentlemen of the Chamber. To be surveyors and receivers, &c. of the subsidy of cloths called karweys, in the ports of London and Southampton, with an annuity of 100*l.* This appointment is made to check certain practices of foreign merchants, of which information was given to Henry VII., whereby the exchequer was defrauded of a portion of the customs on the said cloths. Del. Hampton Court, 17 March 19 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 1, m. 27.

18. Urian Brereton, page of the Chamber. Annuity of 10 marks for life, out of the issues of the lordship of Denbigh, marches of Wales. Westm., 18 March.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

22. Walter Walsh, groom of the Chamber. To be keeper of Wigmore park, marches of Wales, in same manner as Sir Ralph Egerton held the like office, and to have 24*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year out of the fee farm of the town of Ludlow. Richmond, 20 Mar. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 22 Mar.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 20.

23. John Turnor. Lease of the site of the manor called Canon Courte als. Cowley Courte, in the lordship of Cowley, Glouce., parcel of the lands late of the marquis of Berkeley, and all the lands, &c. now held by John Adams at the annual rent of 8*l.* 10*s.*; with reservations; for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 8*l.* 10*s.*, and 3*s.* 4*d.* of increase. Del. Westm., 23 Mar. 19 Hen. VIII. S.B. b.—Pat. p. 2, m. 26.

23. Rob. Oxenfelde. Licence to import wine and woad. Del. Hampton Court, 23 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

27. Henry Palmer. Grant, in reversion, of the manor, &c. of Policote, Bucks, lately belonging to Edward duke of Buckingham; granted to Thomas Palmer by patent 12 May 14 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 27 March 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 26.

29. Wm. Mortymer and Wm. Ebgrave. To be embroiderers to the King, with 12*d.* a day, on surrender by Mortymer, who held the office with Wm. More, now deceased. Del. Hampton Court, 29 March 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 25.

30. Willm. Calybutt. To be comptroller of the great and little customs in the port of Ipswich. Westm., 30 March.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 29.

1528.

1 April. 4125. JOHN [LONGLAND.] BISHOP OF LINCOLN, to WOLSEY.

R. O.
 Foxe, v. App. Thanks him for his letters and for his goodness, now he is sick. Hears from Dr. Chaubere that Wolsey wishes him to be at the court this Easter, if possible. If he amends as he has done, hopes to be there by Saturday before noon. One foot is in pain, but he will come if he can walk with a staff. Has made the same answer to the King, who sent on Saturday. Will send a sure answer on Thursday. As soon as he heard that Wolsey had committed to him and the Lord Privy Seal the examination of Garrett, sent to Oxford to examine certain scholars there, and for the processes there made, that they might know with what to charge him. My lord of London will give Wolsey part, and the rest he sends now. Garrett is "a very subtyll, crafty, soleyne, and an untrew man," as will appear by comparison of his answers with those of the scholars.

Dr. Rowham, a monk of St. Edmondsbury, preached on the fourth Sunday in Lent at St. Peter's, Oxford, a most seditious sermon, railing against Wolsey and the other bishops for the sequestration of evil preachers, maintaining Luther's opinions, and comforting those who held them, saying, "Nolite timere eos qui occidunt corpus, &c." Sends the sermon in English. They have bound him by oath to bring in a copy of it, as near as he can. Fears he will rather flee. Advises Wolsey to send for him straight to Bury. Holborn, — April. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate his good grace. Endd. (not by Wolsey): From my lord of Lincoln, the 1 day of April.

4126. [KING'S] COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, to WOLSEY.

Cott. App. 69.
 B. M. Have received with pleasure his letters in favor of Dr. Fox. Have appointed him their provost, as being a person most suitable to drive away heresy. Henry VI. had been a great benefactor to them.

Lat., pp. 2, mutilated.

1 April. 4127. SIR ADRIAN FORTESCUE.

Faustina,
 B. VII. 113. Sign manual to contribute ten foot soldiers, archers and others, to the crew about to be sent under lord Sands for protection of Calais against inroads of the Imperial or French forces;—the men to be viewed at Guildford on the 3rd of next month. Richmond, 1 April 19 Hen. VIII.

Add.

4128. HENRY VIII. to ———

Otho. B. IX. 35.
 B. M. As the Emperor and the French king, both of whom are at peace with England, are preparing armies against each other, the men-of-war of both princes may arrive at places on the coast, and attempt to spoil his subjects. He must therefore see that all the bemacons near the port of — are prepared to give notice to the neighbourhood in such case, and send up a list of ships able to do service, with their burden and apparel, and of the mariners, in the said port. Ships of either party entering the port for refuge are to be succoured; he must not allow any prize to be taken there, or sale to be made of any prizes taken at sea. Ships coming in from stress of weather, or for water or victual, are to be supplied at reasonable prices, if the men-of-war and mariners do no displeasure to the people. Signed at the head by stamp.

P. 1, mutilated. The names of the officer to whom it is sent, and the port, are not filled in.

1528.

2 April.

R. O.

4129. HENRY EARL OF ESSEX to WOLSEY.

This Wednesday, 1 April, being at dinner at his house at Stansted, Masters Audeley and Bochem sent him a letter, stating that unless he came to Colchester the gaol delivery could not be kept. Received the letter on the road, of which he sends a copy. Has attached the writer. Colchester, 2 April. Signed.

P. 1. Endd. Add.: My lord Cardinal's grace.

ii. Jo. Bosswell, of Colchester, to good man Sammya.

Desires his kindness. They cannot sell a cloth even at half the cost price, and "be fain for to lene up," having scant money enough to pay the spinners that be abroad. The merchants say they will not buy till the commons rise and complain to the King that "they be not half set a work." Cannot help him with money before Easter. 13 March.

Copy on the fly leaf of the preceding; p. 1.

2 April.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 490.

4130. MARGARET QUEEN OF SCOTLAND.

Attested copy of the sentence of divorce between Margaret queen of Scotland and the earl of Angus, pronounced by Peter cardinal of Ancona, at Rome, on the 11 March 1527. Ancona, 2 April 1528.

Lat., p. 1, broadsheet.

R. O.

2. Two modern copies of the same.4131. [WOLSEY to MARGARET QUEEN OF SCOTLAND.]

Cal. B. vi. 194.

B. M.

Desires her to accept favorably her brother the king of England's message, which much concerns the welfare of her soul and her own repute. His Highness hopes the "undisceyvable Spryte of God," which moved him to send to her, "shall effectually work." Amid the cares of his government he has never forgotten her, and hopes she will turn "to God's word, the vyvely doctryne of Jesu Christ, the onely ground of salvacion,—1 Cor. 3," &c. Reminds her of "the divine ordinance of inseparable matrimony first instituted in Paradise." Hopes her Grace will perceive how she was seduced by flatterers to an unlawful divorce from the right noble earl of Angwyshe upon untrue and unsufficient allegations. "Furthermore, the shameless sentence sent from Rome plainly discovereth how unlawfully it was handled,"—judgment being given against a party neither present in person, nor by proxy. Urges her, for the weal of her soul, and to avoid "the inevitable damnation threatened against advouters," to reconcile herself with Angus as her true husband, or out of mere natural affection for her daughter, "whose excellent beauty and pleasaunt behaviour, nothing less godly than goodly furnished with virtues and womanly demeanour," should soften her heart. That she should be "reputed base borne" cannot be avoided, except the Queen will "relinquish the advoutrous company with him that is not, nor may not be of right, her husband."

Draft, corrected by Wriothesley, pp. 4.

2 April.

Cal. B. vii. 11.

B. M.

4132. NORTHUMBERLAND to HENRY VIII.*

Grateful for the King's thanks given him for service on the Borders. Success is to be attributed to God, who loves his Highness, and to Wolsey, for his wise instructions. Has made a final award, of which he sends a copy, between Dacres and the earl of Cumberland, in commission with Sir Anthony Fitzherbert. Briefly recites his proceedings against Lisle. Alnwick, 2 April. Not signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: From my lord of Northumberland, 2 April.

* Addressed, by mistake, to Wolsey.

1528.

2 April.

Cal. B. m. 146.

R. M.

4133 NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

By the advice of Sir Anthony Fitzherbert and the King's attorney, joined with him in commission, he has now proceeded against William Lysle and his accomplices, and forfeited their lands. Will. Lysle, Humphrey his son, John Ogbe, Will. Shaftowe, and Thos. Fenwike, gentlemen, leaders of the rebels, have been condemned for treason, and, with the exception of the second, now sent up by John Norton, hung, drawn, and quartered. Keeps by him the younger son of Will. Lysle, till he knows the King's pleasure. Has set up on the dungeon of the castle of Newcastle and other conspicuous places the heads and quarters of those who were executed. Other rebels have been attainted for March treasons; six thieves in Tynedale executed, on which the Tynedale men submitted, the 2 April, at the town of Newcastle. Will. adopt the same measures with the Redesdale men.

His servant, Florians Foster, only returned this day from Scotland, having delivered his letters to the king and queen of Scots and the lord Angus:—was delayed by the King having ridden far into Scotland. Sends letters from the King, the Queen, and Angus, to the King and Wolsey. By letters from Angus and the Queen to himself, which he sends, perceives that the former is not inclined to come to Berwick or Norham. Has written to the King. Sends a copy of the letter to Wolsey by the bearer. Wishes to have a copy of the truce last concluded between the two realms. Has arranged matters between the earl of Cumberland and my lord Dacre. Sends a copy of the award. Recommends Sir Rauf Fenwike. Alwicks, 2 April. Signed: "H. Northumberland."

Ep. 4. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

2 April.

Cal. H. VII. 28.

R. M.

St. P. iv. 488.

4134 WILL. LORD DACRE to [WOLSEY].

Wrote in his last that he had sent letters to Angus from Wolsey and himself, and received no answer. Sends a letter now received from the Earl, by which it appears nothing will be done till Tuesday after Low Sunday. Will do his best to keep the Border meantime. His servants have been with Angus about this matter since Shrovetide. Held a warden court at Carlisle on Friday, 27 March, when he attached 21 offenders, and delivered them to Sir Edw. Musgrave, the sheriff. Eight were executed, of whom two were Armistranges and two Hadringtons; the rest reprieved till next quarter sessions, to be held just after Easter. One Riche Grange, whom he had taken "for betraying of me and my company" to the Armistranges, when he turned the Debateable Ground, escaped from Carlisle castle. Though delivered sufficiently ironed, he was allowed to go loose up and down the castle, by order of the under-sheriff, Sir Will. Musgrave, son of Sir Edward. He leaped out by a privy postern which stood open to the fields, where there was a man and a led horse ready for him. Has warned a session at Carlisle, for Saturday next, to inquire into the escape, which was most open and shameful. Fears more harm will ensue from it.

Wolsey wrote that he had spoken with Thos. Musgrave to deliver Beawcastell to Dacre, but it is in such decay no man can dwell there. Musgrave has clearly spoiled it; taken away all the lead, and broken the glass windows. Begs Wolsey will get Musgrave to surrender his patent, and he will reasonably agree with him at Wolsey's pleasure.

Henry Steward has married the queen of Scots, as she herself has confessed. James caused lord Arskyn to lie about Stirling castle to attach him; on which the Queen delivered him up. The Scotch council have issued proclamations against buying prizes of Frenchmen, or aiding them with victuals to take prizes. Angus came to the Borders "to have made a road of the Armistrange"; but returned, as the Carres of Teydale, who were under land of assurance with the Armistrange, refused to join him. He then made out letters in the King's name, to proclaim the Armstrongs rebels, and "blow out upon them, as the custom is there;" but lord Maxwell would not execute them. Angus has therefore come again to Jedworth. Maxwell caused the Armstrongs to make a road on the laird of Johnston, his own sister's son, who is at feud with them for the killing of "Mikill Syn Armistrang," and lay in ambush himself to kill the laird.

1528.

WILL. LORD DACRE to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Sends the commission of gael delivery for Cumberland to be renewed, and more persons of the shire put in the quorum. Was lately in the Debateable Ground, and burned all the remaining houses, especially a strong peol of "ill Will Armistrang's," built so that it had to be cut down with axes first. There are no houses left now, except part of Cannonbye, on which he has written his opinion. Nawarde, 2 April. Signed.

2. Papers touching Richie Grahame.

Cal. H. vii.
212.
B. M.

i. "The true copy of the indietment of Riche Grahame, of Esk, found at Carlisle, the 28 day March anno 19 regis Henrici Octavi, afore the lord Dacre, warden of the West Marches," for having, on the 4 February 19 Hen. VIII., received Alexander alias Sande Armstrong, a Scot, at Esk, and for having given warning to the Scots of a raid proposed to be made by William lord Dacre, Christopher Dacre, John Radcliff, William Musgrave, kts., &c., to burn certain houses built contrary to the truce upon the Debateable Ground by John Armstrong alias John the laird, Simon Armstrong the laird, Ninian Armstrong, &c.

ii. "The examinations of sundry persons for and about the escaping of Riche Grahame out of the castle of Carlisle, afore the lord Dacre, warden of the West Marches, Sir Christopher Dacre, Sir John Radcliff, kts., and Jeffraye Lancaster, justices of peace within the county of Cumberland, taken at Carlisle, the 29 day of the said month of March."

1. Robert Parker, jailer to Sir Edw. Musgrave, sheriff of Cumberland, deposes that Riche Grahame, of Esk, was given to his custody on Monday, 23 March 19 Hen. VIII., with other prisoners sent by lord Dacre from Naward. Put him in the high tower of Carlisle castle with a pair of "boyes" upon his feet. The jailer of the castle, James Porter, kept the keys and would not deliver them to Parker. By order of Christopher Lowther, constable of the castle, the "boyes" were taken off that night. On Tuesday morning, 24 March, Lowther took the keys from Porter, and brought Riche Grahame's mother, wife of Huchan Grahame, to the prisoner. On Parker demanding the keys back again Lowther refused, saying he was charged with the said Riche himself. Having afterwards recovered them, they were again taken from him by Lowther, who struck him with a dagger, and threatened to stab him if ever he kept keys within the gates. On his complaint the sheriff wrote to Sir Christopher, who delivered the prisoner again into his hands on Saturday, 28th March. Put him into the Shiref prison in the said castle, and ironed him fast with another prisoner; but afterwards took off the irons, by command of Sir Will. Musgrave, under-sheriff to his father. On Sunday, 29 March, the constable having charged that he should remain no longer in that prison, he was allowed to hear mass in the chapel, and dine in the hall. After dinner, Thom Wright, a vagabond belonging to the castle, took Parker by the sleeve to the hall window, when Riche Grahame desired to go down to the gate. All three went down together; and the gate being open, Parker shut and speared it, but while searching for the keys Grahame "lap" out at the wicket. Robert Burlaye, cook of the castle, met him on the bridge. Robert Bristow, steward of the house, John Parkin, servant to Sir Thos. Clifford, Jas. Porter, Rob. Storye, "brade," James Roullege, servant to the said Sir Thomas Daude Armstrong, and his wife, a prisoner, were called to stop him, but did not. Parker pursued on horseback, but could get none within the castle to ride with him. The same Sunday, John Grahame, the "brade," brother of Riche, had an interview with Lowther for an hour and more. That night Lowther said "Riche Grahame was a fool that went away, for I promised him, and gave him my thorne, or he went to the toll-booth, that I had gitten his life for his grey horse."

1528.

2. Thus, Wright, son of William Wright, servant to Geo. Blenkinsop, a soldier of the castle. John Robson, keeper of the keys of the postern, was forbidden by Chr. Lowther to lock up on Sunday, 29 March 19 Hen. VIII., who walked up and down to see that he was obeyed. Lowther was always favourable to Riche Grahame, and struck Robert Parker, the jailer, because he would let him have none ease.

3. John Robson, before named, a Scotchman born, says he had the keeping of the postern for a year and more.

4. John Foster, servant to Sir Edw. Musgrave. On Sunday, 29 March 19 Hen. VIII., Chr. Lowther told him Riche Grahame should be better looked to, for he would go away without fail.

5. Thus, Dacre, servant to lord Dacre. When he delivered Riche Grahame to Sir Will. Musgrave, ironed with another prisoner, Sir William desired leave to "lowse" him, and let him go to dinner. He replied he had no further charge of him. Afterwards he saw Grahame following Sir William, without irons, into the castle.

iii. "The names of the gentlemen pannelled in the inquest upon the escape of Riche Grahame:—Jo. Leigh, Jas. Martindale, Thos. Dikes, Thos. Salkeld, Esqrs., John Southaile, Thos. Blanchasset, Ambrose Machell, Robt. Salkeld, John Salkeld, Edw. Penredok, Rich. Bewlyse, Will. Denton, Will. Huton, of the forest, gentlemen."

iv. "The copy of the bill given in to the inquest above written, whereunto they would not all agree," accusing Sir Edw. Musgrave of permitting Grahame to go at large, and Sir Will. Musgrave, Chr. Lowther, Robt. Parker, and Robt. Robson as his accomplices.

v. "The copy of the verdict found by eleven persons of the inquest," accusing Parker only.

Copy, pp. 6. Endd.

2 April.

4135 THOS. CROMWELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Ellis, 2 Ser.
ii. 138.

Has been to the monastery at Wallingford, and found all the church and household implements conveyed away, except the evidences, which he has given to the dean of Wolsey's college at Oxford. Croke and he then reformed the patents granted to him, and his grants to his college, so that nothing is omitted.

Has found "offices" of the said monastery and all its possessions in Oxford and Berks, and of the omissions in the said counties belonging to Frediswides and Lythemore.

Is going to Bucks and Beds, to find "offices" for the lands there belonging to the monasteries of Wallingford and of Praye beside St. Albans.

The college is progressing. Every man thinks the like was never seen for largeness, beauty, sumptuous, curious and substantial building. The chapel there is most devoutly and virtuously ordered. The ministers are diligent in the service of God, and the daily service so devout, solemn, and full of harmony that it hath few peers.

Asks him to give the benefice of St. Florence, in the diocese of St. Davyes, in Wolsey's gift as chancellor, to Byrton, who is honest and well learned.

Will come up when he has finished his business. Oxford, 2 April. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. : To my l Endd. : Mr. Cromwell, 2 April 1528.

1528.

2 April.

R. O.

4136. GEO. THROKMORTON to WOLSEY.

Inform him of the death of Sir Giles Greville, comptroller to my lady Princess. Begs to be promoted to his offices. Most of his inheritance lies in Worcestershire, where he was born, and Wolsey's promises have encouraged him to write. Is staying at Raunston, waiting for the dean of your college of Oxford, and other of your Council, "for matters of your Grace's appointed between you and me," which he hopes will be easily arranged. Raunston, 2 April. Signed.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: "Mr. Throgmerton, the second of April 1528."

2 April.

R. O.

4137. SIR JOHN WALLOP to WOLSEY.

St. P. vii. 65.

Received Wolsey's letter on the 30th March, commanding him, on the arrival of my lord of Bath, to take leave of the French king and return. Would have done so, but that he has been plagued with sickness, which will prevent his leaving before Easter. For days past has been vexed with a cough and "murre," increased by the wet weather. St. Maure, two leagues from Paris, 2 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: Sir John Walop, the 3d of April 1528.

4138. FRANCIS I. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Desires credence for Wallop, who is returning. Begs him to continue in his good will. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons. le Cardinal, mon bon amy. Endd.

4139. LOUISE OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has charged Wallop, who is leaving, to tell him the news, and to beg him to continue in the affection which he bears to them. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons. le Cardinal, mon bon fils et pere. Endd.

3 April.

R. O.

4140. The COUNCIL OF WALES to WOLSEY.

Send the depositions of Roger Kynaston and Roger Philips, prisoners in Ludlow Castle for seditious words arising out of a dispute between Sir John Heyward and Sir John Botfield about the possession of the church of Nesse Strange, dioc. of Chester. The information against them was comprised in a letter from Sir John Talbot, sheriff of Salop. Send also depositions of witnesses against them produced by Arthur Neweton. Ludlow, 3 April. Signed: John Exon.—Peter Burnell—G. Bromley—J. Russel.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

3 April.

Titus, B. 1.

97.

B. M.

4141. HENRY CAPELL, ROGER BASYNG, THOS. BAMFYLD and THOS. HORSER to SIR HENRY LONGE, kt.

Inform him of an insurrection at Taunton and Bridgewater. Lord Fitzwaren and others were prevented from holding the sessions. It is expected that other parts will rise. Beg he will come to Frome. Wells, 3 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. by Wriothesley.

4 April.

R. O.

4142. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BATH.

The King has received the post from his ambassadors in England, with two packets of letters for the Bishop, which he sends. If the Bishop has anything to communicate to the King he may either impart it to the cardinal of Sens, the Chancellor, and the first President, who are at Paris, or write to Montmorency; for the King has withdrawn himself for twelve or fifteen days, with a small company, "pour faire sa feste." He has despatched the safe-conduct desired by the king of England, and is much pleased with what Henry said of him to the ambassadors sent by Madame Marguerite. "Dannet, ce 4^{me} jour d'Avril." Signed.

1528.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: Mons. de Bathe, ambassadeur du roy d'Angleterre. Endd.

4 April. 4143. MONASTERY OF PETERBOROUGH.

Writ to the escheator of Lincolnshire for restitution of temporalities on election of John Berowe as abbot. Wm. Benet, LL.D. and the abbot of Ramsey to take his fealty.

ii. Similar writs for Northton., Camb. and Hunts, Norf. and Suff., London (to Sir Jas. Spenser, the mayor and the escheator), Warw. and Leic., Notts, Rutland, Beds and Bucks. Hampton Court, 4 April.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 20.

5 April. 4144. T. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R.O.

Spoke to the King last night about Mr. Bullock's servant, who died at the Charterhouse, "and also of your Grace's house there, wherein no flesh may be eaten." He replied that the ambassadors "might be in the other house where they do eat flesh in the Charterhouse." The King proposed this today in the high mass time to Mr. Morette, who is well content with it. Richmond, Palm Sunday. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my Lord's grace. Endd.: Mr. Hennege, the 5th of Aprile 1528.

5 April. 4145. HENRY EARL OF ESSEX to WOLSEY.

R.O.

Received last Saturday, at 5 o'clock at night, Wolsey's letters of 3rd of April, touching John Boswell, sent that day to the bailiffs of Colchester to examine him. Encloses his confession. Could get nothing out of him of persons in these parts, but sends him to Wolsey, as he has named a person in London. Stansed, 5 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.: From my lord of Essex, the first day of April 1528, concerning clothiers.

ii. Examination of John Boswell the younger, of Colchester, clothmaker, touching the contents of a letter from him directed to Thomas Sames.

He confesses he wrote it; that no one was privy to it; that he wrote it because he was in debt to Sames and others for wool, in order to get longer days of payment. That when he was at London on Friday after Ash Wednesday last, in a hall called Colchester Hall, within Blakewell Hall, having three or four cloths to sell, "it chanced one John Tyndall, of London, merchant, dwelling about the well with the two buckets towards the Austins Friars, to come into the said Colchester Hall," when Boswell asked him if he would buy any of the cloths. Tyndall said he could not sell them again; and, being asked what remedy there was, said he saw none, unless the commons arose and complained to the King that the people were not half set to work. He says there was no one else present at this conversation.

P. 1.

6 April. 4146. FREDERIC I. OF DENMARK to HENRY VIII.

R.O.

Desiring restitution to be made to John Olavi, of Anslø, in Norway, of whatever has been recovered of a vessel wrecked at Bamborough on St. Magdalen's day. Gottorp, 6 April 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

6 April.

Galba, B. ix.

53.

B. M.

4147. HACKET to WOLSEY.

Since he wrote by Windsor, has received a letter from Wolsey, dated 9 March. My Lady having received Wolsey's and Don Inigo's letters, and Guillaume de Barry's reports, has decided with her Council to annul all the arrests of English subjects, and to allow as free mercantile intercourse to them as is allowed to the Emperor's subjects in England; and she desired Hacket to write to the King and Wolsey thereof. In answer to Hacket's complaint, that the Council had acted contrary to the treaties of intercourse, she said she had sent the provost of Cassel and John de Lassault to answer all articles of importance, and to preserve the amity; and for better assurance thereof she now sends De Barrys with writings to Wolsey, and instructions to Don Inigo and the Provost.

It is evident that she wishes to keep the peace; and so do the cardinal of Liege, and the lords of Palermo, Bewyrs, Berghes and Burse. Some, he thinks, are opposed to them. The letters brought by Windsor, and also that from the King to the lord of Burre, have caused the people to fortify their towns and frontiers. They say here that the prince of Orange defeated the French on the 13th and 16th March; that Antony de Leva, captain of Milan, defeated the Venetians on the 19th; that the king of Hungary has defeated the Waywode, and has sent the duke of Browns[wick] with 3,000 horse, and count Felyx with 16,000 Dutch[men], to make an end of the business of Italy. All these news are in their favor, as if they were forged. If all were true, would think that God favored one party more than the other.

My Lady is sending to the E[mp]eror Lassault's youngest son by sea, and by land the Treasurer Marenyx's brother. Told Windsor to show Wolsey that some people in authority take great pains to bring about to make peace between the Emperor and the French king, without the interposition of the King or Wolsey. Hears they are very busy, but thinks it will be as the French say, tel qu'ide que fault. Received today the enclosed letter for Wolsey from Sir Laurence Starber of Noremberghe. My Lady has had arrested at Amsterdam and Antwerp five or six ships laden with wheat and rye, which the Haghstetters were about to send to England. The factors complained to him, and he went to ask my Lady to license them to export it, saying that Wolsey had written in favor of those who would bring corn or other victual into England. After consultation with the Cardinal, lords of Palermo, Berghes and Tregeny, the treasurer-general and others, she answered that the corn should be allowed to be exported. For this they think they have deserved thanks. Machlyng, 6 April 1527, before Easter.

The cardinal of Liege read before my Lady and the Council the copy of the French king's letter to the bishop of Bayonne. Some of the Council then said that Wolsey showed great favor to the Emperor's subjects. My Lady answered, "Mons, le Lega[t] est prudent et sage. Il eet byen quam byen que tel marchandes vault, car ilz sont lettres escripts pour complayr alla maynere de France." The Cardinal said that the French king in these letters declared that he had first intimated war to the Emperor. They are confident that if the French could find a better way of alliance than with England, they would leave one for the other. Since leaving Wolsey at Calais has not received a penny. Machlyng, 6 April.

Some men here dread that if the King and Emperor make a new alliance they will lose their authority.

Hol., pp. 5. Add. Endd.

7 April.

R. O.

4148. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

Requests a safe-conduct for George Lokhart, clk., and four persons in his company, to pass through England to parts beyond sea. Edinburgh, 7 April 15 Juc. V. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

1528.

7 April.

R. O.

4149. RI. [FOX] BP. OF WINCHESTER, to HENRY VIII.

Has executed the King's commands, to the best of his ability, memory and conscience, according to his Grace's letters and credence sent by Dr. Wolman. Begs the King to continue his good lord and have consideration for his great age, blindness and lack of hearing. Winchester, 7 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

8 April.

R. O.

Foxe, v. App.

4150. JOHN [LONGLAND.] BP. OF LINCOLN, to WOLSEY.

Has used all possible remedies, and such exercise as he might, to recover the use of his limbs, that he might do his duty this Easter to the King, but he is yet unwieldy. Desires further credence for archdeacon Henegge, by whom he sends Garrett's confession, which was brought yesterday by the lieutenant, his servant. It would be a gracious deed if Wolsey would license those scholars of Oxford who have been thus "detect for having of evil books;"—those that are priests to celebrate and the others to "receyve ther Maker, (facta prius reconciliatione)" at this feast of Easter. Perceives that they are penitent. Holborn, 8 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate his grace. Endd.: My lord of Lincoln, 8 Aprilis 1528.

8 April.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 498.

4151. DACRE to WOLSEY.

The friends of Riche Graime, whose escape Dacre mentioned in his last, "ar leppen to him in Scotland," viz., his father and seven brothers, with thirty other persons, and are maintained by lord Maxwell, like the Armstrongs. Can have no remedy till the meeting appointed by Angus on Tuesday after Low Sunday, but will meanwhile write to Angus. If he meet with the usual "drifts and delays," will leave these Borders in a sufficient stay, and go to Wolsey to know how he is to order himself. Kept a session with the justices at Carlisle, on Saturday the 4th, to inquire into the escape; but the gentlemen, owing to the labor made to them, would not find it perfectly. After sitting all Saturday and till Sunday afternoon, they could not agree, but gave in the bill, much razed. Only two would not consent to the erasures. Sends a book of the indictment and examinations; the bill delivered to be inquired into, and how much was found. Naward, 8 April. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

8 April.

R. O.

4152. WARHAM to LADY GREVILLE.

Has received her letter about her husband's* decease.

Advises her to take it patiently, and not make two sorrows of one, thereby displeasing God, hurting herself, and doing no good to her husband's soul. She should use herself discreetly, that men may say that she is a sad and wise young woman. Mr. Golde, his chaplain, can tarry with her as long as she wishes, to assist her in her business. Will do anything he can for her. Knol, 8 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my nesse, the lady Grevile.

8 April.

R. O.

4153. MARGARET OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

Has received his letters by her secretary, William des Barres, who has explained to her his desire to promote universal peace, and preserve the alliance with the Emperor. Has made such representations to the Emperor as she hopes will promote this object. Refers him for further information to her said secretary, whom she is sending back. Malines, 8 April. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Monsr. le Legat mon bon fils. Endd.

* Sir Giles Greville. He died 1 April 1528. See Inq. p.m. 20 Hen. VIII. No. 63; also No. 4136, ante.

1528.

8 April.

Le Grand, iii.
88.

4154. NICHOLAS RAINCE to MONTMORENCY.

Hoping he has received what he sent by the Englishman,* who left here on the 1st inst., will make him answer touching the contents. Nothing has occurred of importance touching the affairs which are in train here, except what you will see about the marriages proposed to the Pope by Staphileus, whose despatch, sent with this, will show his Holiness's disposition. Has translated it from Italian into French, at the request of Staphileus, and despatched it with the letters to the queen of Navarre and Montmorency. The Englishmen have had a long interview with the Pope this morning. Hopes by tomorrow some conclusion will be taken that will be satisfactory to the king of England and Wolsey; in which case one of the ambassadors will take his leave, by whom Francis can learn everything.

News of Lautrec. Orvieto, 8 April 1528.

French.

8 April.

Cal. E. ii. 148.
B. M.

4155. WOLSEY to the BISHOP OF BATH.

Urges him, for the reasons in his former instructions and those now sent, to persuade the French king, for the good of peace, and at the King's instance, "to leave the extremities, and to be[gin] to show] some confidence toward the Emperor, in the delivery of the . . . [t]ownys upon the concluding of the peace, and the parties other . . . promise under the censures; for it is not to be thought that the [Emperor] will ever give hostages into the King's hands for the delivery of the said townys, not that he can or will trust the King's grace a[s] . . . well for that he hath declared himself enemy to h[im]." As for the Queen's matter, and the firm union between the kings of France and England, Clerk must persuade Francis not to stick at any such surety, or at hostages to be given for the delivery of the duke of [Orleans] after the revocation of the army, as his ambassadors offered that the Duke should remain till then, without demanding hostages. The Emperor's promise and oath under the censures of the Church must be considered sufficient, notwithstanding any clause to the contrary in Clerk's instructions. If the French king ponders well the article which [is] well liked by the lady Margaret and the Emperor's [council], and which is now made the second of Clerk's former instructions, doubts not he will accept it without any sticking. Urges Clerk to try and persuade him to do so, lest the peace be prevented. "[A]llert ye be sufficiently by my other letters instructy[d] in the pre[m]ysse, yet on my faith I could not be satisfied . . . ye written ex superabundantia of this letters, beseech[ing] God, which on this Good Friday died for all manky[nd, t]o help, speed and concert with you for the advancing [of] this necessary and desired peace to the repose and [welfare] of all Christendom."

Ibid., draft, pp. 2, mutilated.

4156. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 198.
B. M.

"[After] our most humble recommend[at]ions, please it your Grace to understand that the 10th day of th[is] present month the French] king, willing to give audience unto [us] . . . had caused a solemn apparatt to be held in the hall here in the palace, his doble . . . his chair to be hanged and set th . . . princely, and had there a great assem[bly of lords], both spiritual and temporal, with pr . . . [every] man placed according to his degree . . . bye on the right side in a travers wh[ere] they could both see and hear. The King there at his . . . the place, came unto us where we were, [and showed] us his leg, whereon he had the garr[ter, saying unto us that,] seeing that he went about an act wh[ic]h closely concerned the] honor of knight[ho]od, he thought that he [could not have] a better remembrance, ne do thing that [could more] move him and stir him to the defense off his honor, than the wearing thereof. He said also th[at he thought] it convenient to be worn th[at] day, to th[e end that all should] see that the thing wher[e]bout he we[n]t concerned the] King's highness his brother's [h]onor as we[ll] as his own. He] said that he would do no less for th[e reputation and] honor of the one than for the honor of [the other. After] thanks given unto him on our beha[lf, and in the King's] Highness's name, he pleased hy very long season with a very

* Lord Rochford's priest (Cranmer?).

1528.

. [op]ynly read first the Emperor's [defiance to the amba]sador of France, which your Grace that caused his letter chartall of be read, and thereupon said that ther [was no t]hing to be done, but that after the law [of arms the Em]peror must for his part send him the ch[allenge] aske campis under the patent seals of the[s]e princes [i]n whose jurisdiction the said camps should [be held]; that he granted the Emperor's herald a safe-con[duct on that] condition, so that he brought the appointmen[t of the] said camps accordingly; which, he said, if [the said] herald did bring, he would not fail to accept [it], and be ready to appoint the weapon and harney[s accor]dingly; and percase the said herald did b[ri]ng no] such appointment of the camp, then what so ever he should bring besides forth, he was dete[rmined] not to hear him, ne to receive none other writ[ing] he said both by writing and by word, both the [King's grace] and he had done and spoken as much as could be that it should be but folly to multiply convices and injurious language betwixt them; for when all s[hou]ld] be done, further then the duel they could not go, [and] hereunto they were come all ready. In the accomplish[ment] of the which duel, he had gone as far forth as co[uld] be required, so that if there were nev[er] any duel his] honor was saved, if the Emperor would finding of the ca[mp]"

Mutilated.

April. 4157. Jo. [CLERK,] BP. OF BATH, and Jo. T[AYLER,] M.R., to Cal. E. in. 53. [WOLSEY].

R. M.

. " of the affairs of Naples. As tow[ching] cessation of arms, they may not be time to retire your merchants and conty they say that Mons. de Baiona hath and that what some ever your Grace, he of Flanders shall conclude, the King h therewith, and with that the said Bus[shop] hath commission to do therein what your Gr[ace thinks] best to be done. As we said, they here [wait for news of] the successes of the army of Italy, and we [can have no] resolution in any matter here unto such time [as they] shall be somewhat cleared, assuring your Grace [that it is] somewhat painful practising, for the King [and his mother] doth withdraw themselves, the Great Mast[er] the King, now Robertett and the chancellor of departed to God, here is none left but the whom we find after the old fashion, and in to be new made to the Emperor very difficill." Paris, April. Signed.

P. 1, mutilated.

1528.

10 April.

R. O.

4158. JOHN [CLERK,] BISHOP OF BATH, to WOLSEY.

P.S.—This is an addition to “this other letter,” which we have kept four or five days, waiting for an answer about the second safe-conduct which Wolsey wrote for, and which is not yet come from the court. The Chancellor promised it should be delivered either to us or to Mons. de Bayonne. The Chancellor hears nothing of it from the French king, “but saith that he hath word from the King again concerning this last device, which is, that he hath written into England his mind thereupon; and, as the said Chancellor saith, shewed such evident reasons, that your Grace shall say yourself it is not for them to accept the same.” The King, as we have written, is 17 leagues off, “and will have none access to him; my Lady also, at St. Germain, in like manner. Now, after these holidays, and upon these new successes of Naples, we shall see whereunto they will finally resolve themselves.” Paris, 10 April.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

4159. DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF BAYONNE, to TUKE.

Cal. E. II. 171.

B. M.

Sends a letter by an express courier, to be transmitted to the Legate. [Hears he is] angry with him for not having sent the resolution of . . . touching the war or the abstinence by sea; but he can answer that well, for he has the copy of the letters he had sent them, and letters from them in answer, so that they cannot deny having heard of it. Because they have not sent the power for the treaty, they wish to lay the blame on him. Wishes to hear tomorrow from him as to what he wishes him to do concerning the present proposals.

Hol., Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.: A Mons., Mons. [Brien]tuk, secretaire ordinaire.

4160. BISHOP OF BAYONNE to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

Sends a packet which he and Morette have just received. There is no letter for them. Thinks a packet must have been omitted. It has been a long time coming. Asks for news of Wolsey's health, and for the minute of the truce. Expects today or tomorrow an answer about Mons. de Guedres. Will immediately send him word thereof. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons., Mons. le tresorier Bryant Tuke.

4161. BISHOP OF BAYONNE to ———

R. O.

In the packet which he has sent to the Bishop there are only the two letters to the King and Legate, open. Supposes they were thus received at the court. There was also a short letter from Robertet, written in such haste that you would want a decipher of it.

It states merely that the espousal of the duke of Ferrara is performed, and that a post shall be immediately despatched to answer the Bishop's letters; which he could not do then, as the Great Master was not up, and the courier wished to start. Expects a speedy resolution. Has communicated to the bearer, “your” secretary, the minute of his letters. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Endd. by Vannes.

10 April.

R. O.

4162. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

The poor mariners of Colechester, who brought a hoy laden with wheat from a French ship of war, when Norfolk sent them into Sussex for corn, daily petition him for the money he has received for the said wheat, in accordance with their bargain. Keeps it in his own hands by Wolsey's order. The Frenchmen of whom they bought the wheat keep two men of Colchester as pledges for payment, and have lately taken another, whom they have also imprisoned at Boulogne. Since the proclamation of the war in France, the French have taken several Flemings, and sold them to Englishmen, "all which do enjoy their bargains, save only these poor men." A Flemish ship of war has lately taken three small French ships, and sold part in England. Stoke, 10 April.

1528.

P.S. in his own hand.—Is informed by lord Rochford of the King's pleasure that he should not come up at St. George's Day. Wishes to know by bearer if he shall come up next term. If not, will remove to Kenyaghale, for here he has no provision of wood, wheat or malt. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

11 April. 4163. DON INIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv.
90°.

B. M.

Guillaume des Barres has come hither from my lady Margaret. As this is holiday time, wishes Wolsey will appoint a day for audience. London, 11 April. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

13 April. 4164. DON INIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The sooner he departs it will be the better for his health, which is every day getting worse. Has determined, as was resolved at the last conference, to send his servant before him to the Emperor, with Wolsey's letters to my lord of Worcester, that he may solicit liberty for him to come to the frontier, and not be kept waiting. Requests Wolsey to instruct the English ambassador in France to procure letters of safe-conduct for him to go to the Emperor. Hopes Wolsey will get them as ample and as speedily made out as possible. Requests his interposition in a dispute between the Lord Mayor and the Spanish and other foreign merchants. "Ex hac domo sub urbana," 13 April. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: Rmo. domino Cardinali Eboracensi atque totius Angliæ legato. Endd.

13 April. 4165. DON INIGO DE MENDOZA to BRIAN TUKE.

Vesp. C. iv.
91.

B. M.

Sends his servant, as agreed upon, that before he returns to Spain the bishop of Worcester may come to the Borders. Begs he will obtain for him from the king of France an ample safe-conduct for himself and his family, to be left at Calais. "Ex hac domo," 13 April. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: Mag. Dom. Briano Tuk, Ser. Regis Thesaurario atque Secretario.

13 April. 4166. THE DIVORCE.

R. O.

Bryn. xiv. 237.

Bull of Clement VII. empowering cardinal Wolsey, as his vicegerent, to take cognisance of all matters concerning the King's divorce, in conjunction with the archbishop of Canterbury. Orvieto, 13 April 1528.

Lat., vellum, leaden seal.

13 April. 4167. GARDINER and SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Strype's Mem.
i. n. 24.

Pocock, i. 120.

Since the despatch of my lord of Rochford's priest on the 1st April, Gardiner with Fox and Sir Gregory have been with the Pope, telling him we had despatched our post to report his Holiness's good mind, and that we expected short expedition to the satisfaction of the King and Wolsey: the specialties to be sent by Mr. Fox, who must return shortly. Told him, "His dat qui cito dat, et aliquid dare videtur qui cito negat." His Holiness said it was a question of law, in which he must depend on the opinion of learned men whom he had consulted on the point. He had pressed them to come to a determination with speed whether the marriage should be declared noight, and the dispensation void. Gardiner hoped the Pope would accept the evidences of the King's book, and Wolsey's relation of the opinions of learned men in those parts. The Pope said he would do so, "the thing being such as should not come in judicium orbis," but that when the matter should be in everybody's mouths he could not use such testimony. He was sorry and ashamed that he had no learning in the law himself, and feared his most trusted councillors would oppose whatever was done without their advice, even if it were right. But if he could get any comfort of these men he would obtain their opinions in the King's favor, to be published hereafter. Remonstrated that this was a practical refusal of the King's just request, and quoted the Pope's former words, by which he had encouraged us. Told him, that in a matter of such manifest truth he ought not to be afraid of men's sayings, especially as he had admitted the justice of the King's petition. The Pope said he would await the coming of Staphileus. The latter arrived that night, and on the ambassadors consulting with him next day, he regretted he had not been able to come sooner. When Gardiner said the commission should be directed either to Wolsey alone, or jointly with another legate, he said his instructions were quite to the contrary, and referred to words spoken by the King at the More, the evening he was with your Highness and his Grace; "at which time, he saith, the King's highness said that the Queen might and would refuse your Grace, and therefore it should be well done your Grace meddled not as judge in the matter." Could not get him to change his opinion for a good while, but at last he promised to conform to our instructions.

1528.

GARDINER and SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY—cont.

Staphileus being here as the French king's ambassador, he has been twice to the Pope without us. Sir Gregory learned in the evening, at a secret interview with the Pope, all that Staphileus had said to him on the King's matter; viz., that he thought the cause good; and on the Pope's wondering about the form of the commission, said he was never privy to it, but was only instructed that a general commission should be given to a legate sent from Rome, and that the King did not wish Wolsey to be judge, because the Queen might object to him. After his audience Staphileus told us that he had spoken with the Pope in our matter, and hoped to obtain short expedition for us. "Nevertheless, rounding as in the ear, he said it was not to be sticket at for obtaining the commission decretal, inasmuch as by a general commission the King might have his purpose, the sentence to be given there shortly, and so afterwards to be confirmed here." He promised to bring this about by his dexterity. We, dissimbling our knowledge of what he had said to the Pope, said we had without him "obtained grant of such a commission, with secret promise of confirmation, and had ordered the matter in such sort as it was on their part offered us, and we desired by them to take it," but that as by our secret instructions we were not allowed to accept it, we still insisted upon the first.

On Friday before Palm Sunday, the Pope appointed solemnem consessum of the cardinals De Monte and Sanctorem Quatuor, Staphileus, ourselves and the dean of the Rota, to discuss the King's matter. We met in the Pope's little chamber, there being present Paulus, an auditor of the Rota, and the prothonotary Gambara. Staphileus made a two hours' oration, containing his whole book, and the reasons of the same. He was answered by card. S. Quatuor. The discussion grew warm, and Gardiner obtained leave to reply to the Cardinal, whose reasonings he thought very frivolous, and exposed so thoroughly, that the Pope saw clearly how little they weighed. After a long discussion, in which, for lack of arguments, they repeatedly asked us to be content with a commission in general form, to be confirmed here after sentence, Gardiner desired the Pope, and those present, to note and ponder what he should say touching the Pope's authority; viz., that inasmuch as the King's matter had been debated here, unless some other resolution were taken than they seemed inclined to take, it would create a "marvellous opinion" of his Holiness and the College, for people would say that they either would not or could not make any certain reply; that if they would not show the way to the wanderer, a task entrusted to them by God, and especially to a prince to whom they were so much indebted, people would exclaim against their cunning and dissimulation, for they made large promises and performed nothing; that England asked nothing but justice, and had a special right to the Pope's counsel, having always assisted the Pope, both with counsel and otherwise; that the King and lords of England would be driven to think God had taken away from the Holy See the key of knowledge, and would begin to adopt the opinion of those who thought pontifical laws, which were not clear to the Pope himself, might well be committed to the flames. To this no answer was given, except the old advice to come to a compromise; and Gardiner told the Pope plainly that he saw nothing else was meant than that every man might pretend ignorance hereafter and keep himself at liberty, so that if the Emperor were victorious they might lean to him. Moreover, that the granting of such a commission was practically an admission of the justice of the King's cause, which they would not make in words; for how could the Pope grant a commission for a cause he considered bad? On telling the Pope privately afterwards that he must see the justice of the King's cause, "his Holiness said, that he was not learned; and to say truth, albeit it were a saying in the law that Pontifex habet omnia jura in serinio pectore, yet God never gave unto him the key to open illud serinum;" but he would consult with the cardinals and auditors "to what point we shall rest." He did so, and told Sir Gregory that they advised him in no wise to grant the commission in the first form.

1528.

Next day we returned to the Pope, and spoke roundly to him, according to our instructions, that the King would do it without him. The Pope said he would it were done, "and in the other words nothing, but sighed, and wiped his eyes, saying, that in a matter in qua vertitur jus tertii he could do nothing without the counsel of them." He wished it were in his power to do something for the King, if it were to his own hurt only, and so forth. On this we were obliged to resort to the second degree, which was afterwards set forth by Sir Gregory, who, in talking familiarly with the Pope, said, as of himself, that he would ascertain if his colleagues would be satisfied with a general commission, provided the Pope would pass in secret manner the decretal commission: the same not to come in publicum, unless the Pope did not confirm the sentence. The Pope answered, that it would be well to mention it to his colleagues, and he himself would consider the matter.

On Palm Sunday we again visited the Pope, when his Holiness said, that as to the passing of the decretal commission, there was this dilemma: if it were just, it should be done publicly; if it were not just, it would be a great scandal, and would trouble his conscience in secret. Gardiner replied, that it was just, and should be done publicly; but as the fear of the Emperor prevented this, it might be done without fear in secret, and that, if so done, there was some hope that, by Wolsey's dexterity, it might be taken by the King in good part. Could get no answer, and departed. The Pope sees all that is spoken better and sooner than any other, but no man is so slow to give an answer.

That night we went for Simonetta, the dean of the Rota, as we had done several times before. Thanked him for what he had done in the matter, and said that, although it had not borne fruit, the King would reward him for his pains. We then asked him as a friend, setting apart his judicial character, to give us his opinion in the King's matter, saying that he might do so freely, as we were not going to stick any further in the first commission. He answered that, the facts being proved, he considered the cause great and just. We said we would signify his opinion to the King and you, in confirmation of that which was held there pro comperto. We then asked familiarly, why he had not said so to the Pope. To this he could give no direct answer, but said it was better to keep the common course than have such a commission as we desired. After he left, Gardiner drew up a general commission for a legate, with the clauses contained in our instructions. Send by Master Fox a minute, with annotations.

1528.

GARDINER and SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY—cont.

Hitherto we have done as they do; for they always praise the present flavor of the meat, though they are compelled to blame the cooking. Hitherto they had been quite in favor of a general commission, but when it comes to the point we find it is not agreeable. We had always been told it should be of our own devising; but when we had made it they all took counsel to catch us in our speech, and pervert the meaning of the plainest words, as Mr. Fox will more amply show you. We first, by the Pope's direction, showed the commission devised by us to Simonetta, who said he thought the matter good, except at the end, but it was too ornate. Next day we went to the cardinal S. Quatuor, who, having heard of it beforehand from Simonetta, said, before he read it, that it could not be granted; for the sick man, on consulting the physician, did not prescribe the medicine himself. Gardiner said that in many cases the sick man's advice might help the physician, especially when he knew his own complaint, and had some learning in physic. On its being read to him, the Cardinal said that he did not like the beginning, and returned to read to us that which he had sent by Master Secretary. After some discussion we were told to come with him to the cardinal De Monte, where, after reading the commission in presence of them all, we were desired to leave, the Cardinals telling us that they would consult over it, and not alter very much. We urged them to determine shortly, for Master Fox must depart, and Easter was at hand. Could learn nothing more that afternoon or next day, though we were kept going between the Pope and them.

On Tuesday after Palm Sunday, about two hours before night, the Pope showed us a draft commission, corrected and signed by them, but, when we saw the amount of correction in it, Gardiner accused the Pope of a breach of his promise in choosing such men as instruments; that his Holiness first protested he cared nothing for style, but only for justice; and when the question of justice was set at rest, difficulties were raised about the style. The Pope said he was obliged to use other men's counsels, but finally consented to let us have the minute after our devising, if Simonetta would say it was not contrary to justice. On this Simonetta was called for, but declined to answer directly in the absence of the Cardinals. Discussed the matter warmly for five hours during the night till 1 a.m., when we departed with no other answer but that we should have a definite reply next day before dinner. That day, Wednesday, we repaired to the Pope's presence before mass, with books of the law to justify those parts of our commission to which they had objected, adding somewhat as to the dispute brought upon the office of judge. The cardinals De Monte, St. Quatuor, and Simonetta, were present, and entered into a new discussion, in which we showed the Pope, by the authority of the book, that they had done wrong. At last, they began in friendly manner to read the commission, and correct it by consent, "saying in certain points, as more plainly appeareth in the corrections." He then left at 2 p.m., with a promise that we should have the minute before night, clearly finished to our satisfaction. On visiting the Pope again that evening, we found our minute altered from what it was agreed on. Began a new discussion with Simonetta, the Cardinals being absent. At last we differed but in two words, omnem to be added to potestatem, and nolente to the clause nolente impedito. This Simonetta would not do without advice of the Cardinals; and the night being then far past, the Pope sent him and Gambara to the Cardinals' houses, who sent word that they were making collation, but would look up their books tomorrow. "Here began a new tragedy." The ambassadors complained that they were deluded; and Gardiner told the Pope that these men had shown no learning, but only ignorance, in their corrections, fearing a scorpion under every word. We believe, however, that this is all done by the Pope's order, who has eyes but sees not. Gardiner began then to expostulate with Gambara for persuading the King to send ambassadors, and trying, when they came, to intoxicate them with fine words to circumvent their friends (meaning Staphileus), and to lure them as men do hawks to the fist, "pratendere pugna carnem et inhiantes ac sequentes semper Iudificare." Gambara said he had only done according to his commission; upon which Gardiner turned to the Pope, and taxed him with ingratitude. The Pope said nothing, and sighed, and wiped his eyes; and Staphileus, turning towards us, "said he took it as God's will that we should come after him, or else the difficulty here should not have been believed." Gardiner said he thought it God's will, indeed, that when we should report what sort of men be here, the favor of that Prince who is their only friend should be taken away, and that the Apostolic See should fall to pieces with the consent and applause of everybody. "At these words the Pope's holiness, casting his arms abroad, bade us put in the words we varied for, and therewith walked up and down the chamber, casting now and then his arms abroad, we standing in a great silence." After a while, regaining his composure, he said he was sorry he could not satisfy the King without counsel. Gardiner said he was as sorry that his Holiness had so little confidence in the King. After the commissions were written and sealed, we again resorted to the Pope and Cardinals, when things were discussed in a friendly manner on their part, with acknowledgments of the King's benefits, and their great desire to satisfy him. We persistently told them this commission would not do so, although we, as the lowest members of the Church, would do our best to further its acceptance. Finally, the Pope bid us inform the King that he committed himself to his protection, as, things being in their present state, the sending of this commission is a declaration against the Emperor. He has not yet required the King's promise; and Gardiner has not offered it, as we await your answer to the letters we wrote from Paris. Gardiner waits also to know how Wolsey is satisfied with the commission, which he thinks as good as can be devised, though not in all so open as could be wished. It is in effect all that can be wished, except the clauses of confirmation and revocation, of which he has written his opinion in the margin.

There is no cardinal here, except Campeggio, fit for this legation. Sir Gregory has written their disqualifications to Wolsey. Gardiner now repairs to Rome to know his mind. The commissions in any case are directed to Wolsey and Campeggio; and their not being written "in so fresh hand" as they should have been may be excused, as there are so few writers here, and only one that can skill, who has written these commissions and dispensation twice, "and at the last escaped sine aliqua menda in notabili loco." As to sending letters to the Queen; the Pope has devised to send a Friar with a brief of credence; but as the commission decretal does not pass, the letters cannot contain all specialties. Desires instructions about this point, and about the deliverance of the King's promise, and of rewards to Simonetta and others, and to know whether he may return if Campeggio cannot shortly come.

The Pope is willing to make short process for the canonization of Hen. VI., but the matter must be examined by a number of cardinals. My lords of Canterbury and Winchester, who have examined the matter at home, had better send the process hither. Can do nothing about the pardon to Windsor College till we hear the certainty about the name and the incorporation.

1528.

GARDINER and SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY—cont.

Spoke to the Pope about the matters of Wolsey's College, and was told that all things should pass which I could reasonably desire. Orvieto, Easter Monday. Signed.

Pp. 25. Add.: To my lord Legate.

Harl. 419.
f. 92 b.
B. M.

2. Copy of the preceding.

4168. GREGORY CASALE to [VANNES].

Vit. B. x. 195.
B. M.

"Ex gifris D. Gregorii ex Orvieto."

The Pope has passed the commission as the Secretary desired. His Holiness is not averse to pleasing the King and Wolsey, but fears the Spaniards more than he ever did, as they hold all the lands of the Church. The Friar General has forbidden him, in the Emperor's name, to grant the King's request. He fears for his life from the Imperialists, if the Emperor knows of it. Told him to trust entirely to the King and Wolsey, which he said he would do. He expects ruin without the King's assistance, if the Emperor is allowed to possess more than the kingdom of Naples. There is now a good opportunity for the French to act. The Pope advises a contribution, stipulating that they shall immediately march to liberate the States of the Church, and not stop at crossing any river or besieging any town on the plea that they are not strong enough. Thinks nothing should be done without the joint consent of the Pope and the French. It would be a pitiful thing to leave the Pope in the hands of these dogs. Unless Lautrec does all that he has been so often ordered to do, the Pope and all Italy will be irremediably in the power of the Imperialists. Advises a present to be sent to the cardinal St. Quatuor, as he has much power with the Pope, and says that what dispensations are required he will obtain. Begs for assistance for himself. The Pope desires, if peace is concluded, the restitution of [Ravenna] and Cervia, and does not wish to ratify the capitulation with the duke of Ferrara. He begs the King not to force him to give up these cities for the good of peace. Spoke of this alone during the day, and at night took the Secretary to the Pope, lest the Spaniards should suspect anything. Vannes may tell Wolsey that if he wishes to have the commission brought by the Secretary, under lead, he can have it. His Holiness refers the matter between himself and the Florentines to the King.

Before the Pope would grant this brief, he said, weeping, that it would be his utter ruin; that he was at the mercy of the Imperialists, for there was no hope from France, and the Venetians and Florentines desired nothing more than his destruction; that his sole hope of life was from the Emperor, which hope was now lost, for the Imperialists would say that he had moved the King to this from hatred to the Emperor.* He used many arguments to prove this; which Casale answered, and bade him be of good courage. He asked Casale to swear whether the King would desert him or not. Satisfied him on this point, and then he granted the brief, saying that he put himself in the King's arms, and would be drawn into perpetual war with the Emperor.

The Pope desired him to write separately to Wolsey that he had willingly incurred this danger, trusting in his continual declarations of goodwill, without which he would never have dared to do it; and that Wolsey might dispose of him and the papacy as if he were pope himself. He considers also that Casale has done him good service during these wars.

Lat., mutilated; in Vannes' hand; pp. 5. Endd.

1528.

4169. CLEMENT VII.

Add. MS.
6874, f. 112.
B.M.

Promise of Clement VII. that, now he has issued a commission for trying the cause of Henry VIII. and Katharine, he will not yield to any request to issue letters or bulls restraining the said commission.

Lat., copy, pp. 2. Endd.: "Promissio Clementis PP. VII. ejus manu scripta in causa divortii Regis et Regine Angliæ, cum sigillo signata, alioquo die et data."

13 April.
S.B.

4170. BRIAN TUKK.

To be treasurer of the Chamber, vice Sir Henry Wyat. Del. Hampton Court, 13 April 19 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 20.

4171. [GARDINER and SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.]

Harl. 419,
f. 101.
B.M.
Styep. Mem.
L. B. No. 25.
Pocock, 1. 136.

The Pope, hearing that the Emperor, in answer to the King's intimation, had mentioned the King's matter, thinks he will take it more displeasingly than if his Holiness had declared himself specially. The general [of the Franciscans] also hath made suit to the contrary. He is therefore in great perplexity, and can only trust the King. The Venetians, Florentines and the duke of Ferrara have banded together. The French king will do nothing. If he had been in earnest the Venetians would have restored Cervin and Ravenna. He says that Lautrec has sent him word that if he do not declare himself he shall be treated as an enemy, although no conditions are proposed to him. He begs, therefore, you will take the management of these things; and as to the proposal of depriving the Emperor upon declaration made, that, he thinks, would be a very precipitate step, impolitic in itself and in its consequences. What is to be done with Naples if the Emperor be deprived of it, or if Francis should help the Emperor to recover it in the hope of regaining his children? By letters of the 30th ult. from Salviati, the Pope is advertised of the coming of Turenne, but only with compliments. As Lautrec is so successful, thinks the French should speak roundly to the Venetians. No favorable answer has yet come from them.

A letter has come to Gambara, stating that when Morette was in England he reported that the Prothonotary much pressed the French king for Modena and Reggio. The Prothonotary desires me to say that after one denial of it by the French king he spoke no more of it. He wishes to have a nuncio resident in England, and would be glad to know who will be acceptable to you and the King. He showed us letters from Genoa, and thinks that if care be not taken the French will lose that city. Fox will report the other news by mouth.

Copy, from Gardiner's letter book.

14 April.
R. O.

4172. ANTHOINE DE LIGNE (COUNT FAUCONBERG) to HEN. VIII.

Writes as one of his humble servants, requesting that the bearer may be allowed to pass towards the Emperor on his business, Mortaigne, 14 April 28, purs Pasques. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: Au Roy. Endd.

14 April.
R. O.

4173. THE LOAN.

Petition to William Archbishop of Canterbury, from the inhabitants of the Lowy of Tunbridge, Hadlowe, Penshurst, Bithoroughe, Spelherst, Lye, Soundryshe, Shepstone, Sevenoke, the vill of Brasted, the hundred of Coddleshöth, Somerden and Westerham, praying that he will move the King to repay them the amount of the loan which the Archbishop undertook should be refunded to them, seeing that they are so sore impoverished by the great dearth of corn.

1528.

THE LOAN—cont.

P. 1, large paper. Headed: "This is the copy of a bill of supplication, not fully drawn, but interlined and stricken out in divers places, which such as were at Knoll on Easter Tuesday last to desire my lord of Canterbury to speak to the King's grace for their loan, after it were corrected and perfected, intended to deliver unto the said lord of Canterbury the 3rd day of May next ensuing."

- R. O. 2. The original draft, with corrections and interlineations above alluded to.
Pp. 2.

15 April. 4174. HENRY FANE alias VANE, of Hadloo, alias of Tonbridge,
S. B. Kent, late sheriff of Kent.

Pardon; with release to Sir John Norton, of Norwood, parish of Middleton (Kent), and Richard Fane alias Vane, of Tewdeley, Kent, of their recognizance of 40*l.* made 29 Jan. 17 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 15 April 19 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 22.

- R. O. 2. Draft of the preceding.
Pp. 2.

- R. O. 3. Petition for the above pardon, stating that Fane was appointed sheriff of Kent in 17 Hen. VIII., but had no knowledge of his appointment till after the Purification of Our Lady, when he could get no under-sheriff or bailiffs to assist him in the office, and lost all the profits of his county court and tournes. He was thus unable to levy certain moneys, out of which he should have paid some annuities due by the Crown. He also sustained loss to the extent of 50*l.* when he was sheriff in 22 & 23 Hen. VII.

Pp. 2.

- R. O. 4. Extract from the Memoranda Rolls of the Exchequer, Hil. 17 Hen. VIII., relative to the bail given, 29 Jan., by Henry Vane, sheriff of [Kent], and Sir John Norton of Norwode in Middleton, and Rich. Fane of Tudeley, that Vane shall duly account to the Exchequer for the fruits of his office.

16 April. 4175. PROCEEDINGS for HERESY.

Hart. MS. 421, f. 19. B. M. Thursday, 19 March, Cuthbert bishop of London, in an inner chamber in his palace, forbade Robert Forman, S.T.P., rector of All Hallows, Housay Lane, to perform mass or preach, for retaining Luther's books after their condemnation. Present, Dr. Geoffrey Wharton, the bishop's vicar, Robert Rydley, and John Royston, S.T.P., Richard Sparshford, M.A., and Matthew Grefson, notary.—The same day, in a great chamber in his palace, the Bishop examined John Thompson, William Pykas, Robert Best, John Gyrdyng, John Bradley, and Alice Gardlyner of Colchester, and John Hubbard of Est Donyland, who all refused to acknowledge and reveal their heresies, expressly denying them. He admonished them, and advised them to consider until the morrow.—Friday, 20 March 1527, the Bishop in his chapel administered to John Thompson of Colchester the articles previously administered to Hacker and Pykas, receiving as witnesses John Pykas, John Hacker alias Ebb, and William Raylond. William Pykas, refusing to swear, was sent to the Lollard's Tower, and put in the stocks.—The same day, John Bradley appeared, and at first refused to swear, but, being admonished, did so. The same witnesses were received as against John Thompson; and on 23 March, William Pykas and John Thompson, John Hubbard of Est Dony-1528.

lond, John Gyrling, Robert Best, and Alice Gardlyner of Colchester, also appeared, and were sworn to reply to the articles, and the same witnesses were received.

23 March, William Pykas took the oath, and acknowledged his replies. Henry Raylond was admitted as witness on 16 April 1528.

Lat., pp. 4. Contemporary foliation, clxxxvj.—clxxxvij.

Hart. MS. 421.

f. 21.

B. M.

2. Examination of John Pykas, of the parish of St. Nicholas, Colchester, baker, about thirty-three years of age.

About a year ago, had communication with Best, twice, in his own house, concerning the epistles of James, which Best could say by heart. Best has been taken for a known man and a brother in Christ for a year. He borrowed an English New Testament of Pykas. Spoke with John Gyrling, two or three years ago, concerning Christ's words in the xxi[v.] chapter of Matthew, about the destruction of Jerusalem, by which he meant that priests and men of the Church, who have stony hearts because they punish heretics, should reign a while, and then God would punish them. Spoke also to Gyrling about a chapter of James, saying that God is Father of light, and overshadowed all sin, wherefore we should pray only to God. All this Gyrling consented to and approved of. Gyrling has been reputed a known man and a brother in Christ for three years. Was told by Robert Bishop, son of Gyrling's wife by another husband, about sixteen years of age, that his mother did public penance; but wherefore he knows not. Has talked with William Raylond about the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed in English, about the Epistles of James and John, and about the eight Beatitudes. William Raylond and Henry his son have often talked against pilgrimages and worshipping images, saying that only Saints in heaven should be worshipped; none of the known men ever set up lights before images. Raylond also said that baptism with water is but a token of repentance, and that when a man comes to years of discretion, and keeps himself clean of the promise made by his godfathers, then he shall receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Henry Raylond also approved of the above. Marion Mathew alias Westlon has the Epistles and Gospels in her house, and knows them by heart, and has been a known woman and of the brotherhood for twelve years, as he has heard say. Has often communed with Dorothy Long, who belongs to the same sect. Knows not about Catharine Swayne, but she is reputed for a known woman. Has known Alice Gardlyner for twenty years, and has talked with her about the Lord's Prayer, the Salutation of the Angel, the Apostles' Creed, and certain Epistles in the vulgar tongue. Knows not about Mother Denby. Thomas Parker has often, in the presence of John Thompson, Fletcher, his son-in-law, said that pilgrimages should not be used, and that men should worship God, and not Saints.

Pp. 6. Contemporary foliation, clxxxvij.—clxxx.

Hart. MS. 421.

f. 24.

B. M.

3. Examination of William Raylond, of the parish of the Holy Trinity, Colchester, formerly of St. Botolph's, and of Ardeleghe.

Has heard John Pykas say, in his house, that the host was but bread; that the body of Christ was in the Word and not in the bread; that God is in the Word, and the Word is in God, and God and the Word cannot be departed; and that bread was but in remembrance of the Passion. This heresy his son Henry gladly heard and believed.

Has often heard John Pykas and Henry Raylond, his son, say that it is "mysavery" to go on pilgrimages to Walsingham, Ipswich, or elsewhere, for it is idolatry; [the images] cannot help themselves, and therefore cannot help another; that men should pray to God, and no Saints, "for Saints in heaven have their reward." Has often rebuked his son, who told him to set his heart at rest, and learn the true laws of God. Has heard John Gyrling rehearse an epistle of Paul in his house. Gyrling has been reputed a known man. About four or five years ago heard John Gyrling's wife speak of the 1328.

PROCEEDINGS for HERESY—cont.

Gospels and Epistles, and open "the Pokalyps" in her own house. About 12 years ago, when she lived with Sir Thomas Eyers, curate of Skells, she abjured, and bore a fagot. Heard that the priest was afterwards burned for heresy. Five or six years ago asked John Gyrlyng's wife what the Sacrament of the Altar was; to which she replied, that it was but an host, and that the body of God was joined in the Word, and the Word and God was all one, and could not be parted. She said also that images of saints were but idola.

Robert Best has been a known man and one of the brotherhood for about four years. Has had similar conversations with Dorothy Long and Thomas Parker, who abjured and bore a fagot in London about 24 years ago, when the archbishop of Canterbury was bishop of London, and gave the deponent the four Evangelists, the Epistles, and Gospels, in English, about six years ago. Robert Bate is also a known man, and more learned in this law than the deponent. Knows nothing of Thomas Bowgas or his wife. Has spoken to Mrs. Cowbrige of the Gospels and Epistles, and has heard that she is of the same law and brotherhood.

Pp. 6. Contemporary foliation, clxxxiv.—clxxxvij.

4176. ——— to [WOLSEY].

Cal. E. m. 60.

B. M.

" hym he said that he hade l being in Ingland, whiche the Kyng's [highness desired to] heer reede, and causid the cheiff pres[ident to] reede unto us the said letters; the conty[une] whatt matters the ambassadors off Fla[n]ders had shewed to the Kyngs highness, and what answer [his Highness] hade made unto the said ambassadors, upon [which] the saide Frenche ambassadors hade made [report] off the Kyngs highnes fryndlye and lovyng [mind] in that behalfe, in soche manere that [they] said that the Kyng heer and his consaill re[joiced,] saying that they themselves coud nott a dev[is]ed for] the Kyngs highnes to have doon more; grett[ly] praising] the Kyngs highnes vertue and goodnes, and ge[ving him] ryght hartye thanks therfore. And by cause [they read] in the said Frenche ambassadors letter that your G[race had] wrytyn unto us off thos same matters, they de[m]anded of] us whether we had anything in our letters, mor[e than was] contaynyd in the letters off ther ambassadors, saying [that if] we hade, the Kyngs pleasure was that we shold d [it] unto them, and nott resort otherwise to the Kyng [or to] my Ladye for that purpose, for they war nowe re[tired], and wolde have no resorte unto them tyll after the [holy]days; we shewid theym that at that tym we hade [received] no freshe letters from your Grace. They said that Mons. [Langes] had letters for us, wherapon we tooke tym to see our l[etters, and] therapon to be agayn withe the Chancellore the nexte [day]. That nyght hat Langes sent us a paquett of letters

. [res]ortyng to the coorte for by the same.

" [Accordin]g to owr appoyntment we war the next day [with] the Chancelore, and declaryd unto hym the contine[w of your G]race is letter, and in effect what the ambassadors off [Flanders] hade proponyde, and what the Kyngs highnes had [answered to] them agayne, the same being moche conforme un[to the re]porte off the Frenche ambassadors redde unto us th[is]e d[ay]e before. We showed also the Kyngs desyre concer[ning] the second safe-conducts for Master John de la Sawch wherin they made some difficultie, sayinge that the s[af]e-conduyet sent all redye myght suffice, howbeit fyn[ely] they ware content, and said that they wold send unto u[th]e Coorte therfore. We proponyd unto them your Grace is dy . . .

1528.

for the farther assurance of the revocation off the a powdering on off the ways withe the marriage off M[adame] Elionora ther alio to remayn in Spayn after the con[clusion] of the] matrimonye ostage with the duke of Orleance in [the same] forme and maner as is sent unto your Grace in a s[chedule] herwithe, assuryng your Grace that it was nott gre[atly] myslykyl, speciallye the primere president passyd [it] very well. Howbeit finallye they stak verye sore [at two] poynts: the one that they shold paye the holle some for the one off ther hostages; the other that they hostages in thēperor's hands, the duke of Orleance a[nd Madame] Elionora, shold also geve hostages to the Kyngs hig[hness]; howbeit, after moche reasoning, they said they wold [speak] unto the Kyng ther master, and that we shold be^h

Mutilated, pp. 2.

16 April. 4177. CLERK to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

If the safe-conduct for La Sauche be not come, blame not us, for the Chancellor promised us it should have been sent seven days ago. Refers him to a letter enclosed in my Lord's, touching the King's welfare, "unto whom yet no man resorteth, ne yet unto my Lady," and touching the sacking of the city of Melfi, and surrender to Lautree of the towns of Apulia. Paris, 16 April.

Ital., p. 1. Three words in cipher. Add.: Master Bryan Tuke, treasurer of the King's chamber.

16 April. 4178. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Desires restitution to Alex. Bertoun and Will. Gold, merchants of Edinburgh, of certain wines taken by the customers of London from a ship which had paid all duties at Berwick. Edinburgh, 16 April 15 Jac. V. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

16 April. 4179. LADY LUCY.

R. O.

Bill of Wm. Wilkinson of London, mercer, to lady Lucy, 16 April 1528.

1 ell 3½ qrs. holland, at 22d., for Mrs. Anne Lucy. 1 ell ½ qr. holland, at 12d. A black velvet bonnet, 18s. A frontlet of purple velvet and crimson satin, 11s. For new pasting a bonnet, 16d. 2 "byllyments" of black velvet, 10s. A French parlet, 4s. For stringing a paper of beads, 2s. Mending a bracelet, 4d. 50s. 10½d.

For the boarding of Mrs. Anne for 8 weeks and 3 days, whatsoever it may please you.

Endd.

16 April. 4180. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE, and MORETTE, Ambassadors in England.

R. O.

They have been informed how the Imperialists in Naples have evacuated Troya. Lautree marched on and attacked Melfi, which was defended by 4,000 or 5,000 men at arms, under the prince of Melfi, and carried it after three assaults. Several other towns have surrendered, so that Lautree is master of the greater part of the kingdom. Sends a memorandum of the towns taken. The enemy have retired to Naples and Gaeta. They are to communicate the news to the King and Wolsey. Expect even better tidings. Francis has retired to keep the feast of Easter. "D'Annet (?)". 16 April.

P.S.—Francis wishes Morette to come back as soon as possible with the 1528.

MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE and MORETTE, &c.—cont.
entire resolution of the King. He is at great expence in the payment of his lanceknights, of whom he has already raised 6,000, chiefly in his own countries. He will have 10,000 more, according to the treaty. Signed.

Fr., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

17 April. 4181. WARHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Promised in his last to attend on Wolsey at the beginning of this term. Will therefore wait on him the 1st or 2nd day after St. George's, or, if Wolsey be not then with the King, on St. George's day itself, when the Cardinal will be at better leisure than on a working day, unless the Archbishop is prevented by the disease of his head, from which he now suffers. Hopes Wolsey will not detain him long, as the pestilence is beginning to be severe in London, and it will be hard to keep his servants out of the city. Otford, 17 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: My lord cardinal of York and Legate de Latere.

17 April. 4182. DON INIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is so ill he cannot remain here without danger; and it would be much better, in a business point of view, that he should be speedily with the Emperor. Begs Wolsey to send the accompanying letters to Spain, and dispatch a safe-conduct as soon as possible, allowing him to await its arrival at Calais. It is no use his waiting for the Emperor's letters. 17 April. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: Cardinali Eboracensi atque totius Angliæ legato.

18 April. 4183. SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received his letter this Saturday, at 7 p.m., intimating the King's pleasure that Suffolk should be with him on St. George's Day. Has not time to put his household in order, and riding would be painful to him; besides, the tidings are somewhat heavy to the French queen. Will, however, come up as soon after the said Feast as possible. Westacre, 18 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

18 April. 4184. SIR CHR. WILLOUGHBY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received, on the 13 April, Wolsey's letter, dated Hampton Court, 16 March, in reference to the complaint made against him by the duke of Suffolk and others for entering on the manor of Erysby, Line., contrary to an order made by Wolsey and the Council with the consent of lady Willoughby and Sir Christopher. Has no doubt he can prove Suffolk has been misinformed, as Wolsey's displeasure would be no less punishment to him than death. Entered quite peaceably. Encloses two schedules: the first containing instructions to his Council, which they would have shown Wolsey long ago if they had had an opportunity; the second giving an account of his demeanor. Sutherey, 18 April. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.: Sir Christofer Willoughby, 18 Aprilis 1528.

21 April. 4185. KNIGHT to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Pocock, t. 160

As often as he remembers the King's goodness, it pierceth his stomach that any charge committed to him should not be performed according to the King's pleasure, as chanced at his last voyage. If he had not acted as a true servant, would be ashamed to return into England. As the King wishes him to remain here, begs him to consider that the matters of which he has written to Wolsey require one or two great personages of authority and wisdom. Blose, 21 April.

1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

22 April. 4186. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

Calig. B. ii.
110.
B. M.

"Please it your Grace to be advertised that yesterday I received a [packet of letters from] Scotland, some addressed from the king of Scots unto your Grace King unto me, with a letter unto me from Patrick Singeler w have unto your said Grace by this bearer, my Lord's messenger I doubt not but your Grace hath in remembrance that of late I wrote unto advertisements and communications, and ascertained her touching of the same time there were ambassadors sent unto the King's highness [from the Pope's] Holiness and from all Christian princes, Scotland excepted to co means of the King's said highness there mought be an universal peace had w all Christendom, by occasion whereof and that great bruit renneth into Scotland [of the] solemn ambassadors that be with the King's highness, I conceive the young [king of] Scots and his counsel are desirous to have knowledge and advertisement [from] the King's highness or your Grace of some causes for their comfort, for of my opinion few matters of importance touching the universal w[eal] of Christ[endom come] to their intelligence. Albeit I hear there is one come or to come to Scotland out of France in manner of an ambassador noted to bring to the said King from the [French] king certain harnesses for his own person, with many ships loaded with wine and [corn] for relieving of that realm. The certainty thereof, if it so be, [I make no doubt] but [it] shall come unto the knowledge of your said Grace.

"Of late I and other of my Lords counsel were at Newcastle causes, and have put that country in a reasonable good order, at Riddesdale, as at our coming up to your said Grace wha[t] the next term the shall not only but also wh three Marches with other, the which part lords could bind t this time.

"There were put to execution of late at York 12 offenders, and also 12 at Newcastle, whereof there was a gentleman called Blekinsop, another called Nikson and his father reput yd set up again to the name at Lammas, all thieves of N t Rowly Dodde and William Stokhall, two great thieves and of the great s[urnames of] Tyndale, Edward Hedele, and William Pott, principal thieves and of the great surnames of Riddesdale with other moe of Northumberland.

"The young king of Scots of late being advertised from my lord of R[ichmond and me] that great hurt was done to the King's subjects by the thieves of and [no] redress made for the same as is done in every other [of] the borders the parts nt into those parts, the earl of Angwisshe, who b country, wherein the said thieves be inhabited, and did slay xviii. of th[em], and hung upon a bridge xliii. and of them he conveyed with him to Edinburgh for execution to be done there upon them.

"There are xlvj. of the Niksons of Bewcastledale and one Will two or three mo[re] of Tyndale gone into Scotland, and as my hurt laid w[ait] and espial for taking of the same thieves and offenders un[to the] s[aid] lor[de] of Richmond's grace hath written to the young king of S[cotland] also the taking of the said thieves and delivery of them between both the realms.

1528.

MAGNUS to WOLSEY—cont.

In that matter said lord's Grace shall have but that the queen of Scots and the archbishop of St. Andrews earl of good service and specially out of trust and credence. And God have your said Grace in his most blessed [u]n[i]o[n]
 At P[ro]n[un]c[e]i[ac]t, 22 April."

Hol., much faded. Add.

22 April. 4187. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is much better in health. Thanks Wolsey both for his comforting letters and words. According to commandment, has sped the elections of Nottley and Burcestre. Sends the prior of Burcestre, who has been elected to Nottley, and the prior of Yppeswiche, who has been elected to Burcestre, to offer their thanks to Wolsey. The Abbot is a suitor for the King's assent in this matter. Holborn, 22 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

22 April. 4188. WARHAM to LORD ROCHEFORD and SIR H. GUILDFORD.

R. O.

Asks them to decide the matter between Wm. Cheke, his bailiff of Croydon, and the duchess of Norfolk's servants. Will not be at Lambeth for some time, and the matter must not go unpunished, or officers will be loth to serve the King's writs if they are in danger of being laid in wait for as Cheke was.

Was told on Sher Thursday* that a number of the yeomen of the country intended to come and ask him to petition the King to return them their loan money. Sent some of his house to stop those whom he thought likely to be persuaded, but on Tuesday† in Easter week about a hundred came to Knoll. Sent to ask them what they wanted, and told them to send five or six to speak with him; which they did,—and said that their poverty compelled them to ask him to get their loan money returned; that they caused most of their neighbours to stay at home, and only came two or three from a parish, lest by meeting in great numbers they might displease the King. Told them they had not chosen a good time, considering the great expences the King would incur if war ensued, which was still doubtful; and asked them, who advised them to assemble. They said, poverty only, and they and their neighbours lacked meat and money; that no one counselled them, except their own minds, when complaining to each other. Was told, however, that some acted as summoners, and would have made inquisition about them but for fear of incensing the multitude; for commonly the greater part of the multitude lack wit and discretion, and yet will take upon them to rule the wiser. Reminded them of a similar gathering two years ago, with which the King was not well pleased. They said they hoped he would not be displeased, as they were his true subjects, and that he would pity their poverty. Asked why they came to him; they said because he was the chief of the commissioners, and most of all had practised the loan.

Promised, that if they would abstain from unlawful assemblies, and would make their petition in writing, he would offer it up, and speak in its favor. They said they had no wit to do this, and could get no man to write for them, and asked if some of the Archbishop's men might do it; which he refused. Sir Edw. Watton, Thos. Willughby, serjeant-at-law, and Ric. Clement, of the Mote, Esq., were present.

They departed content with his answer, but he hears that some spoke unfitting words after they had been in the town and drunk their full. Does not know what else they will do. Wishes to know what answer to give

* i.e. Maundy Thursday, 9 April in 1528.

† 14 April.

1528.

them if they come again. Hears that those who came have threatened those who promised to come and did not. Oxford, 22 April. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Rocheforda and Sir Henry Goldford, comptroller of the King's house, &c.

4189. [WOLSEY to LORD ROCHEFORD.]

Cott. App. 28.
B. M.

My Lord, I send by the bearer a copy of my letters to my lord of Canterbury. Since his Lordship's departure, has been told by many people coming from Suffolk and through Essex that the demand for the repayment of the loan, and my lord of Canterbury's [answer] therunto, is in every man's mouth, and is right pleasant to the people. It should be repressed at once, lest it grew worse. Doubts not that he and Mr. Comptroller will use their accustomed wisdom.

Hol., mutilated, p. 1.

4190. [WOLSEY to WARHAM.]

Cott. App. 12.
B. M.

My Lord, I have lately written to lord Rochford and Mr. Guylford, comptroller of the Household, a letter containing matter of weighty importance, necessary to be looked to for the King's honor and surety, lest by the evil example of those who lately assembled to demand their loan money, and the spreading of the report thereof and of your answer, many others may be emboldened to do the like. After deliberation, the King "doth now [send u]nto you the said lord Rochford and Mr. Comptroller," instructed as to the manner of and demands, and also to tell you what is further to be done. Must appease and put them to silence.

Hol., draft, mutilated, p. 1.

4191. WOLSEY to LORD ———.

Cott. App. 26.
B. M.

Since the bearer, his Lordship's servant, arrived here with his letter, news has come that by the good policy of John Erneley, J.P., and the Mayor of the Vyes (Devizes), the light persons assembled there have returned home. But to prevent the people from making any like attempts, and to notify to them what order the King intends to take for the " ntyng, lying and sellng of ther clothys hereafter," he [direc]tyth letters to his Lordship and others in Wiltshire and Berkshire, for the good order of the parts near to them, and he wishes them effectually executed. "[And] for as muche as hys Grace intendyth to send undyr your with all dylligens above the of the hundred horsemen by yow to be provyded vij. or ix. [hund]red fute, hys Grace desyreth yow with dylligens to advertyse the seyde number ye may and can be contentyd to thynntent that upon knowlege of your y [c]ause the rest to be provyde of suche perse[ns] as y[ou shall] thinke most me[et]"

Hol., mutilated, p. 1.

23 April.
R. O.

4192. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

Learns from his servant Whight that the King and Wolsey wish him to remain in these parts all the month of May. Hopes Wolsey will also command Oxford, Essex and Fitzwalter to remain at their houses in Essex in case any "business should chance." What little power he can make is not within 24 or 30 miles of this house, but he will do his best if needful. Would like to have a joint commission to assemble the King's people if necessary — my lords of Suffolk and Barnes to be included. Desires credence for his kinsman, Sir George Wyndham, the bearer. Stoke, St. George's day.

P.S.—Has just heard that divers of Kent have come to my lord of Canterbury, demanding the loan money. "I pray God your Grace by your high wisdom may so provide that no more speech be thereof, for that is more to be feared than any other thing; there be so many that would fain have again their money, that it is hard whom men may trust in that case."

1528.

NORFOLK to WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

23 April. 4193. WILL. GONSON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to the King's commandment, seventeen days past, sent two ships to Hunflewe, with Alan Kyng, to waft certain French ships to the Thames. Wanders up and down the narrow seas with two ships. Meets daily with French and Dutch ships of war seeking prizes. On Sunday last brought from Rye ten French ships, kept there by three Dutch men-of-war, who grumbled at the act. On Monday sent Morette from Dover to Boulogne. Yesterday, as soon as the French ships were in the Thames, out of danger, steered for Boulogne to convey certain French ships laden with wheat to London. Met with three Dutch men-of-war intending to intercept them. Victuals are scanty. Scribbled in The Minion, between Dover and Calais, the 23rd day of April.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's Grace. Endd.

23 April. 4194. DR. TAYLER to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

Received these letters from Jernyngham on the 22 April, and for lack of a messenger was fain to send them to Master Deputy of Calais. Thinks the news contained in them was anticipated in the last letters sent to Wolsey by Tayler and my lord of Bath, viz., that Lotrek prospered in Naples, and used great cruelty at the taking of Melphe, sacking the city, and slaying all the inhabitants, except the prince of the town and certain captains. This has caused other towns and castles to be yielded; and Lautree is now going straight to Naples. Are informed that 12,000 Almaines have arrived at Trent to join the Spaniards in Milan. Hears that Tuke is to succeed to Wyatt's office; begs him, therefore, to see to his diets, which have expired long ago. Has spent much more than they amount to. Paris, 23 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: Master Bryan Tuke, counsellor and secretary to the King's highness. Endd.

4195. CLERK to TUKE.

R. O.

"The successes of Naples maketh us here on horseback." If we may be assured of concurrence, we will not be so quick in our offers. Therefore such reasons as do exclude concurrence, except upon reasonable offers, are to be stuck to. "He shall have Christ's blessing, and the bishop of Bath's, that first opened that window."

"The French king is meetly well; durat tamen tumor in facie, et quod erat in summa parte genæ nunc videtur propinquior naso. His diebus quibus absuit videtur alio modo se curasse quam dieta, nam est pinguis, et satis bonæ habilitatis, nisi quod pallet."

P. 1., in Tuke's hand. Headed: The clauses in cipher in my lord of Bath's letter to me. Endd. by Vannes: Clausula domini Bath. ad D. Brianum.

4196. [KNIGHT to HENRY VIII.]

Cal. D. x. 198.

R. M.

"[Please it] your Grace to under[stand] [on St.]
George's Even,† which [be]ing 3

1528.

leagues from Blase, whe[re] strange building full of new reporteth much honor of the K[ing] . .
. and of the loving acceptation of . The King returned hither upon [and] did celebrate the feast at even-song in his chapel, hanged through o[ut] his self wearing his garter an [but] not in his robe, as the King and [other knights are wont], not of any negligence, but rather la[cking knowledge] done, he called Mr. Taylor and me unto [him] had seen many knights of the Order but we never did see any that did [wear the] garter with truer heart and better affection [than he]. He bade[us] that we would be with him the next day, for he had certain things to show unto us. The next [day]
. and the ambassador of Venice in communication
. the King entered into a privy chamber to whom he said, that albeit at our late being there he showed unto us that it was not [expedient to send] De Bayonne unto Rome, because Mona.
. and also he was ascertained by the
. the Pope was minded to go into [Spain] for as much as the passing of the[m]p[eror] supposeth to be fully determined he will as soon as he h
[Mon]sieur de Bayon[ne]
. [Spa]gniards that descended at until now of late they have b [mi]at enter into Milan, but in the th, they passed the Po at Placence [with the consent o]ff the governor of the town, which is [as Mons.] de Bayonne saith, but the Legat they passed in the confines of the Placentyne [ca]lled Arena, by side the Castle of Saint . [without the] knowledge of the Placentines or the Governor [knew that] ever they passed or how. In this all agreeth, th[at they have e]ntered into Milan. The Legat supposeth that the Emperor passeth, and that because of [knowledge that] the Pope's servant that should have come hither to re[ceive the King's consent for passage is revoked.
His Lord[ship has had] no word from Rome these 28 days.
" [Th]e King showed unto us at our departing that he for Master Russell, and hopeth well upon some by him. Sir, we wrote unto you in our last [to ask how] your Grace would have the affairs here mayned and advise, he that should persuade it had n of authority, albeit whatsoever your Grace
. yt unto me, Secretary, for time of my being here glad should not be long, I shall say and a Grace will have me to do it.

" know how letters may be conv[eyed]" * * *

Hol., mutilated.

24 April. 4197. THOS. BENET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The abbess of Wilton died today, and the Prioress and Convent will shortly write to Wolsey for their congé d'élire. Most of the convent favor dame Isabell Jordayn, the prioress, sister to the abbess of Syon, who is ancient, wise and discreet. There will also be grent labor made for dame Eleanor Carye, sister to Mr. Carye of the Court.† The substance of the house consists in wool to the value of 600 mks.

† Married to Ann Boleyn's sister, Mary.

1528.

THOS. BENET to WOLSEY—cont.

There is but little money. Wishes to know Wolsey's pleasure. Wilton, 24 April.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: From Doctor Benet of Saresbery, 23 April.

25 April. 4198. THOS. BENET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has written to the chapter of St. Paul's for the admission of David Vincent, one of the grooms of Wolsey's privy chamber, to the office of verger in the said church. Salisbury, 25 April.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: Dr. Benet of Sarisbury, 25 April 1528.

25 April. 4199. SANDYS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

At 10 o'clock on St. George's day, received his letter about the coming of several secretaries from my lady Margaret, with such charges as are not unlikely to further peace, and saying that it was considered that 100 horse and 200 foot would be sufficient to accompany him to Guisnes. Did not receive the King's letters till 7 a.m. yesterday. Sent forth 41 to the best places for procuring the 200 footmen, as he will see by the enclosed list. Has the horse already furnished.

Hears from the bishop of Winchester that, contrary to Wolsey's promise that he should only furnish 10 men, the King's letter commands him to furnish 50. If all the other letters are similarly increased, he has sent out many more than necessary. The shire is so scant of tried men that he does not know where the Bishop would find so many. The day appointed is near, being the 5th of next month, and it will be very difficult to keep it. Will be at Westminster on Friday or Saturday next. The Vine, 25 April.

Signed.
Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: My lorde Chamburlayn, 25 April 1528.

ii. List enclosed of 41 letters directed from the King, sent by Robt. Bayard and Ric. Denys to the bishop of Winchester, earl of Arundel, lords Montague, Fitzwarren, Sowtel, Stourton and Berkeley, the abbots of Reading, Abingdon, Beawley and Waverley, the prior of St. Swithin's, Sir Giles Strangwishe, Sir John Rogers, Sir Edw. Baynton, Sir Chr. Bayneham, Sir Wm. Denys, Sir John Welsh, Sir Thos. Lisle, Sir Wm. Pawlett, Sir Thos. Inglefeld, Sir Adrian Fortescue, Sir Ant. Willoughby, Sir Wm. Berkeley, Sir Geo. Forster, Sir Wm. Uvedale, Sir Wm. Barentyn, Sir Edm. Bray, Sir Petre Philpott, — Marten, Ric. Lister, Wm. Tracy, the towns of Gloucester, Chyppenham, Wilton, Salisbury, the Vyes (Devizes), Alton, Reading, Abingdon and Guildford.

P. 1.

4200. [RIC. FOX, BP. OF WINCHESTER,] to my LORD TREASURER.

R. O.

Requesting him to make his excuse to the King for nonpayment of a prest of 100 marks to be delivered by Assumption day. Has been at great charge in repairing his ruinous houses in Southwark, and in building and keeping up the church of Hyde these two years past and more.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "To Thomas Stokys of the Receyte."

25 April. 4201. RIC. BELLYSIS to THOS. CROMWELL.

R. O.

Roger Richardson, mintmaster of Wolsey's coin at Durham, is dead. As the continuance of the coinage is profitable and necessary for the country, and its cessation would injure Wolsey's rents, desires Cromwell's favor that the bearer, John Richardson, son of the deceased, may be appointed to the vacant place, for he had the charge of the Mint in his father's life, and is very expert in fining, trying and coining. There is no one else in the country fit for the post. Wolsey's ship of Tynemouth has been set forward, and has been very costly, as Stokall will tell him more at length. He shall have the promised gelding. Durham, 25 April. Signed.

1528.

P. 1. Add. Endd. : Jo. Bellyensis.

25 April.

4202. H. NORTHUMBERLAND to ——— ARUNDEL.

R. O.

Had received my Lord's letters and Arundel's on Shere Thursday, "at my manly." On Easter day fell ill, both of his old disease and of a swelling at the stomach with extreme ague. Expected never to have seen him again. Encloses copy of his letters to my Lord, which he requests Arundel to deliver, "for in you doth rest mine earthly comfort only." Is still very ill. Sends a chalice and a sacring bell for a memorial; "and soon after shall send you all belongyng to the spiritually for you necessary," in case God call him to his mercy. Sends also two layrs (?) for a token to my Lord's grace, and a pot for green ginger to Tuke, as he loves fasting. Hopes at the coming of the judges my lord will be satisfied. 25 April.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. : To my bedfellow Arundell.

26 April.

4203. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Executed five of the Riddisdale offenders on Tuesday, 21 April, in presence of most of the gentlemen of Northumberland; on which "the Redisdale men in great number submitted themselves, in their shirts, with halters about their necks, upon their bare knees, unto the King's mercy," and begged the Earl to get Wolsey to intercede for them. Has received a letter from the King, with one from Master Pallett, to examine Cuthbert Harbotell, said to be an idiot, and next heir to Wygeard Harbotell, deceased. Finds he has really little discretion, but he has his living of Sir Ralph Fenwick, and they say he fulfils his trust wisely. He has no claim to lands of the Harbotells, which descended by heirs general, and now remain to two sisters of the Harbotell last deceased. Alnwick Castle, 26 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate. Endd.

4204. TUKE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. IV, 487.

Was informed last night that one of the 16 who came in with Sir Will. and Humph. Lisle with halters about their necks is a younger son of Sir William's, not more than 12 or 13 years old, who never offended, except in being out with his father. Writes from pure compassion, having children of his own. "The remembrance of this innocent hath caused me that in my bed this night I could not forbear to water my plants, having in fresh remembrance what I knew in King Henry the VII.'s days was considered and alleged touching the difference between the King's laws and an instinct or law that is in nature, when Sir James Trel and Sir John Wyndham were put to death, and their sons upon that consideration pardoned."

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

26 April.

4205. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Requests him to write to the Pope for the promotion of Alex. Douglas, "a natural son to our trust counsallour and thesaurar, Archibald Douglas," to the bishopric of Murray, which is deferred "through default of his mature age, or rather through solicitation and means of our eme the duke of Albany." Strivlinge, 26 April 15 Jac. V. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

26 April.

Le Grand, III.
92.

4206. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Besides what he has written to Francis, has little to say, but that Wolsey is continually crying that for God's sake, seeing he has the peace and the French king's children in his hands, you will not allow your confidence in him to be shaken, for he would sooner be hacked in pieces than do a bad thing. He would give a finger off his hand to have a two hours' talk with Francis and Madame, the queen of Navarre, and Montmorency; and there is no fear that if the towns are placed under obligation to the Emperor he will fail in his promise. He would give his head in surety for it. If he were to do so the King his master, and all his subjects, would cry murder upon him, and all Christendom would rise against him. He went on thus for a whole day; and you may be sure you never saw such passion in any man. For my part, I can only say that if his advice is not good, it is not out of ill will to you; on that I will stake all that I am worth. The King also is steadfast in his affection, and rejoices in our good news as his own. He has sometimes said to me, while the blood mounted to his face, "Think you, Mons. l'Ambassadeur, that the King my brother ever had better or more loyal councillors than we are to him; and where his own would be the ruin of him, we would [preserve] him.* We would gladly hazard our goods and person for him, but not for his councillors, when they manifestly wish to lead him wrong." Such language he has used several times, and did partly when Morette was here; but he always speaks highly of Montmorency, saying that but for him the affairs of Francis would go badly, and no one would know whom to address, especially when Madame is ill and cannot endure business. You may be sure there is nothing said or done at the Court, or even out of it, of which he is not informed.

I assure you I have discussed everything with Wolsey half a dozen times, and pressed him so close that I believe if you had been present you would have pulled me back by the coat. Morette, who witnessed part of our discussion, though he did not understand all our Latin, saw by our faces how strenuously we fought; and you need not hope to gain anything more than we have done. I wish you had been behind the tapestry when I spoke with him tête à tête that you might have judged whether I had studied my lesson well.

Thinks nothing but trouble can arise from Francis adhering to the course he mentioned in his letter of the 19th. Yesterday the King returned to Greenwich. Thinks he will not begin his progress till he has news of our resolution. The matters treated at Rome are in good train; and Henry expects his demands shortly to be conceded. The Cardinal comes here on Tuesday for the term. I intend to remove a mile hence for some time, as the plague is in the neighbourhood, though not from any great fear of it; for God knows in this trouble I would accept death with pleasure, seeing there is no rest in doing the best I can, and I am only regarded as a troublesome fellow. Excuse me to Madame that I do not write to her. If I wrote without asking for my congé, she would think I had changed my mind; and if I asked for it, I fear I should be troublesome. Desires him to obtain the King's letters for a relation of Peter Vannes, according to a memorandum sent to Robertet. London, 26 April.

Fr. Add.

26 April.

4207. SIR ROB JERNINGHAM to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Since the capture of Melf, Lautree has advanced, and on Thursday St. P. vii. 66. last encamped within 1½ miles of Naples, where they have remained till now.

* As the passage stands in Le Grand, there seems to be a word omitted.—"et que là où les siennes le voudroient faire perdre, nous le voulussions [conserver?] ne encora nous perdre quant et quant pour eulx."

1528.

Tomorrow they intend coming nearer the town, wherein is the whole army of the enemy. Last Friday the enemy made a sortie with their main power, but were met by 4,000 foot and 500 horse of our men, who forced them to retire, and chased them to the gates of Naples. Took two pieces of their artillery, and killed two of their chief captains. Signor Egmond, a kinsman of the Emperor, was taken prisoner. Yesterday the enemy assembled; and Lautrec, being warned, sent the marquis of Saluce with 500 men-of-arms and 200 hackbushes to lie in wait for their return, took from them 800 horse and slew 200 of their foot. They are worse discomfited than when they fled at the town of Troye; so that we hope soon to see an end of the enterprise. Lautrec requests that the King will not attempt war elsewhere until affairs are settled here. From the camp of Naples, Sunday, 26 April. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

26 April. 4208. THE SAME to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect. Same date. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.; To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

26 April. 4209. JOHN CAROWE to WOLSEY.

VII. B. x. 84.

R. M.

Similar letter to that to the King under date 28 April;—q. v. The camp near Naples, 26 April. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. and endd. at f. 87 b.

26 April. 4210. WALLOP to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Wrote, in answer to Wolsey's letters by his (Wallop's) servant, John Brooke, that his health would not permit him to return before Easter, but he was not well enough at that time. Is now perfectly whole, and writing only for licence from the French king. Has asked the Chancellor two or three times when he can take leave of the King; but he will give no answer, and allows none of the ambassadors to see him. Thinks he is sick again. Has sent to the Great Master to ask when he can come to the court to take leave, or, if not, whether he may have leave to depart. Will tell Wolsey, when he arrives, the chief cause of his infirmity, and meantime Dr. Fox can inform him.

Supposes he has heard the Italian news. Paris, 26 April. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

26 April. 4211. HENRY EARL OF CUMBERLAND to ———.

Cal. B. iii. 212.

B. M.

Sends such news as he has received from Scotland by a letter from Carlisle. Will be glad to know what is to be done for the defence of Carlisle. Skipton, 26 April. Signed.

P. 1.

27 April. 4212. JOHN CASALE to CLERK.

R. O.

D. Andreas Rossi, secretary of the Signory, is being sent to France to beg more assistance against the arrival of the Germans, who number 18,000, as the troops promised by the Signory, the duke of Milan and the French king, number only 15,000, and they suggest hiring 3,000 Swiss. The Signory wishes also that Francis should write to urge the King and Wolsey to send advice and assistance, for success in Italy is more important than success in Flanders. If the first attack is resisted, Lautrec will have finished the affairs of Naples, and be able to assist, and the yoke of the Emperor will be thrown off.

Lat., pp. 2. Headed: Copia literarum D. Prothonotarii Casali ad R. D. Bathon. die xxvij. Aprilis. Endd.: A prothon. Casalis die xxvij. Aprilis ex Venetis.

iv.

6 c

1528.

27 April.

Nero, B. vii.
83.

B. M.

4213. JOHN CASALE, the Prothonotary, to [WOLSEY].

Wrote in several letters directed to Peter Vannes that it was reported that great levies were being made in Germany of horse and foot, but that as they would not be paid till the middle of April, they could not be ready to descend into Italy before the end of the month. This news came by several messengers, but the lords here are informed that already some of them are on the road, although they do not hear that they have had wages. Their number is 12,000 foot and 1,200 horse, with baggage, artillery and all necessaries. It is said that a levy is also being made on this side the Italian boundaries. The lords have not ceased to consult, and to prepare everything necessary to resist this attack. They have determined to levy 8,000 Italian foot, and the duke of Milan 4,000, and they will send for 6,000 Almaines or Swiss, if necessary. Two months ago they signified to the French king to choose 3,000 Almaines in their name, and send them to Italy. Great exertions must be made; for, if the Germans find no one to resist them, they will burn up and lay waste all this part, will take the places that are not well fortified, burn all the crops, and reduce everything to such a state of poverty that the country will be obliged to surrender. If Lautrec turns aside to resist this attack he will leave to the Imperialists Naples and all that part of Italy; if he stays, these newly arrived Germans will come on to Naples, and, joining those already there, will doubtless be able to fight with him. Another army must therefore be provided for this neighbourhood. The lords here have therefore resolved to send Andreas Rubeus, one of the chief secretaries, to show this to the French king, and urge him to assist them, and to persuade the king of England and Wolsey to do the same. Makes the same request on their behalf. If this present invasion of the Germans is repressed the Emperor will be easily induced to take conditions of peace. If the contrary, all Italy will be subdued, and the Emperor become so insolent that it is more likely he would enslave all Christendom than ever come to peace. Venice, 27 April 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 4.

27 April.

R. O.

4214. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

Has always the same subject, his kindness, to write about. The bearer is in haste. Apologises for his rude and unpolished letters, but will write better every day, as he is diligently learning Latin and other things. Will do with the greatest eagerness whatever he thinks will please Wolsey. Paris, 5 kal. Maias.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: R., &c., Card. Ebor. Angliæ Primati, a Latere Legato, &c. Endd.: A D'no Decano Wellen., 5 kal. Maias 1528.

28 April.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 67.

4215. JOHN CAROWE to KING HENRY VIII.

Since Jernigan's last letter on Sunday, the 26th of April, he is dead, after a sickness of eight days. Asks to have the offices held in Suffolk by Jernigan of the late duke of Buckingham's lands. Naples, 28 April. Signed.

Add. Endd.

28 April.

R. O.

4216. THOS. LUPSET to WOLSEY.

Fox left in such a hurry that Lupset could not write what he intended, and so gave him a verbal message about the Dean's mode of life. Will send an account of their expences. If they seem excessive it is not Lupset's fault, but owing to the necessities of the time and place. Paris, 28 April.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: R. &c. Card. Ebor., a Latere Legato, &c. Endd.

1528.

28 April. 4217. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. i. 288.

Since war has been proclaimed by him and Francis against the Emperor, and the success of the peace is still uncertain, ships should be prepared for the war, for various reasons, grounded on the treaty of offence. Apart from that, it is necessary to have some ships at sea to conduct those bringing corn and other goods to London, and to guard the passage for couriers and letters, and for Mr. Fox and the Legate. Advises that orders should be given for the victualling for two months more of those already at sea, by which time it will be seen whether they should be reinforced or revoked. Hampton Court, 28 April. Signed.

P. J. Add. Endd.

28 April. 4218. TYBALL'S CONFESSION.

Strype's Mem.
i. p. ii. p. 50.

Confession of John Tyball of Bumstede ad Turrim, before Cuthbert bishop of London, in his chapel at London House, 28 April 1528; which he afterwards signed; viz., that seven or eight years ago he had of one Holy John, certain books of the Four Evangelists, in English, which he burned the day Sir Ric. Fox was attached. From a chapter of the Corinthians, which he does not now remember, he was led to think the Sacrament of the Altar nothing but bread and wine. He had asserted, on Paul's authority, that every priest and bishop ought to have a wife; that it was as good to confess to God alone, or to a layman, as to a priest (which error he taught to Rob. Faire of Bumstede); that a layman might minister the Sacraments; that pilgrimages were unnecessary; that men should not kneel to images, or set candles before them. He had sometimes doubted the Pope's power to pardon, and thought mitres and crosses, &c. might better be given to the poor. He thinks the souls of good men (except saints like Peter and Paul) do not go to Heaven till the general resurrection, but remain in some place of joy and pleasure unless helped to Heaven by good prayer; while the souls of sinners remain in purgatory unless delivered by prayer. He had, however, held for a while, and disputed with Sir Richard Fox, that there was no purgatory. He had held that fasting was unprofitable; that sea water was as good as holy water (because when Christ first made the world and the water, &c., he blessed them, which was enough). He had conversed on these matters with Old Father Hacker alias Ebb, with Sir William Stryngar and Sir Arthur, parish priests of Bumstede, John Smyth of Bumstede, and Sir Ric. Fox, curate there; with Mother Beckwythe and Wm. Beckwythe at Colchester, old Christmas of Boekyng, and Wm. Pykas. Sir Ric. Fox had read to him from a book called The Wicket, in Johnson's house at Boxstede. Thinks Johnson and his wife are of the same sect; also John and Wm. Pykas, John Gyrling, and John Bradeley. Cannot tell about Thos. Mathwe's wife. He had refused to go on pilgrimage to Ipswich with his godmother Alice Gardiner, telling her it would be better to give her spare money to the poor. Had talked with Thos. Parker of the Gospels in English. Thos. Hilles, tailor, John Chapman, John Wyggan of Wytham, Rob. Fayre, and John Smythe of Bumstede are of the same sect.

About Michaelmas last was twelvemonth this respondent and Thos. Hilles came to London to buy a New Testament of Friar Barons at the Friers Augustines; found Barons in his chamber, with a merchant and two or three others; and, after a conversation about Sir Ric. Fox, curate of Bumstede, to whom Barons promised to write, the latter delivered to them an English Testament, for which they paid 3s. 2d., and he desired them to keep it close. Barons likened the Latin Testament to "a cymbal tinkling and brass sounding." Half a year ago he delivered the New Testament to Friar Gardyner, and never got it back.

1528.

TYBALL'S CONFESSION—cont.

Elene Tyball, his mother, and Alice, his wife, are guilty in all the forsworn articles, except his wife about the Sacrament of the Altar.

Five years ago he assisted one Friar Meadow, a Grey Friar of Colchester, to whom he had confessed, to abandon his religion; who has since gone to Amersham, and married a maiden of Colchester. He has also conversed often with Edmund Tyball. Signed by John Tyball with a mark.

ii. Tyball's abjuration follows in the next leaf of the MS.

28 April. 4219. For HUMPHREY son and heir of THOMAS LEE.

R. O.

To have (on surety of Will. Horwood, of London, and Thos. Moorton, of Engleton, Suff.) the custody of the messuage of Cotton Hall, Salop, mentioned in an inquisition p. m. taken at Wenloke Magna on Monday after the Exaltation of Holy Cross 18 Hen. VIII. Westm., 28 April 20 Hen. VIII.

Copy, with the following note at the bottom: "Examinatur et concordatur cum posterioribus literis patentibus; per J. Lambart."

28 April. 4220. ST. MARY AT PRAY.

R. O.

Inquisition taken at Stortford, Herts, 28 April [20 Hen. VIII. before John A]leyn, escheator, touching the possessions of the Benedictine Nuns of Pray, otherwise called St. Mary de Pratis, Linc. dioc., of which Eleanor Barnarde, the last prioress, died on 4 June 19 Hen. VIII., there being then three nuns under her, who therefore deserted the place. Their possessions were the church and churchyard, site and precinct, &c. of the monastery, the manors of Pratis, Playdell, and Beaumont; tithe rents in Redburn, Sarette, Dolowe, Codaycote; lands in the town of St. Alban's and without the bars of the same, and in Pray, Playdell, Beaumonde, Hempstende, Bacheworth, Berkehamsted, Westwyk, Whethamsted, Redburn, Sarette, Watford, Childewyk, Lechworth, Flaunden, Dagnale, Hexton, and Hexam. Clear yearly value of the whole, 33*l*. The convent had, by charter, dated 5 Aug. 6 Hen. VIII., given the office of steward of the priory to Thos. Stepneth, learned in the law, with a rent of 20*s*. for life out of the issues of their lands in Herts and Bucks.

Lat., pp. 5.

28 April. 4221. JOHN, PRIOR of the CARTHUSIAN HOUSE OF SHENE, to the PRIOR of the CARTHUSIAN HOUSE OF THE SALUTATION, near LONDON.

R. O.

As visitor of the Order, consents to the alienation of a tenement in London, of the gift of Sir Robt. Reede, late Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, in exchange for other lands more profitable to the monastery; the London house having made petition to that effect under the signatures of Edmund Gilibronde, vicar, John Howghton, sacrist, and Edmund Hord, prector. Shene, 28 April 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.

29 April. 4222. ITALY.

R. O.

Extract from letters of the Apostolic Nuncio to the Pope's secretary, from the camp, 29 April.

Lautrec has heard of a fight between six Imperial galleys, two "fustes," and four brigantines, and the French fleet, yesterday, about the twenty-first hour. Two galleys were taken on each side, and the Imperialists fled. During the pursuit the French took the General's galley. It is said that 1528.

Moncada and the marquis of Vasto are prisoners. Lautrec had sent to the fleet 300 arquebusiers, who arrived an hour before the battle. He complains strongly of the Pope's not writing or sending to him.

Lat., pp. 2.

29 April. 4223. THE NOBLES OF HUNGARY to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. F. 1.
C.
B M

Doubts not that he knows from his ambassador here that, after the death of Lewis, John was elected, and crowned king of Hungary, Dalmatia, Croatia, &c.; and that Ferdinand, king of Bohemia, by the unjust use of arms, and by the corruption of persons in whom King John trusted, invaded the kingdom. Ask for assistance to free themselves from his oppression. There are but few who do not take their part. John has justly and lawfully obtained the crown; but Ferdinand has no right, and seeks to increase his dominions, to the danger of Christendom. This letter is sealed by Francis de Frangepani, archbishop of Colocz and Bath, and by Stephen de Werbercz, the King's secretary and chancellor. Tharnow, 29 April 1528. Signed: "Prælati, barones, ac nobiles regni Hungarie fidem veri et legitimi regis sequuti."

Lat., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

30 April. 4224. LAUTREC to FRANCIS I.

R O

Wrote last that he had sent Le Crocq with 300 harquebusiers to serve in the galleys. An hour after they were embarked, the enemy, knowing that they were badly furnished with men, attacked them with six galleys, four "fustes," four brigantines, and sixteen or eighteen frigates, and other small vessels, containing full 1,200 men. The fight lasted four hours, but the French were victorious. Don Hugo de Moncada was killed, and the marquis du Guesst, Escanyo Coulonne, constable of Naples, comendador Ricardo, captains Machin, Jehan Dyvart, Gots, captain of the galleys, Jehan Gaytan, Regnard de Montanes, and Salines, with six ensigns, and many others, were taken prisoners. Two galleys with Coradin and the lansquenets escaped. Heard this news yesterday, and has told all the ambassadors. Deferred writing till today, that he might have better information. Le Crocq is the cause of the victory, for the galleys were so badly manned that they must have been lost without him. He returned today, and says that count Philippin (Doria?) fought very well. They both deserve praise and reward. Sends Mons. de Montpensat to explain more fully. Sends a copy of his last despatch to Mons. de Conserans. Asks him to provide for the galleys. Thinks four will be sufficient to guard Genoa. The camp at Naples, 30 April. Signed.

Fr., pp. 2. Add. Endd.: Mons. de Lautrec, 30 April 1528.

30 April. 4225. HENRY DUKE OF RICHMOND to HENRY VIII.

R O

Requests him to prefer Sir William Swalowe, his old chaplain, to the village of Fremington in Devonshire. The vicarage being in the Duke's gift, the Duke lately presented him; but, as Magnus, the bearer, will show, he is likely to lose it, without Henry's favor. Pomfret, 30 April.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

R O

2. Modern copy.

30 April. 4226. WARHAM to WOLSEY.

R O

Has received his letters dated Hampton Court, 25 April, by lord Rocheford, and Mr. Guildford, the comptroller, and heard their credence. Has endeavored to do what was thought most expedient, as Rocheford and 1528.

WARHAM TO WOLSEY—cont.

Guldeford will inform him, for it is too long to write. Otford, 30 April.
Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c. my lord Cardinal of York and Legate. Endd.

30 April. 4227. NUNNERY OF WILTON, Salisb. dioc.

P. 8. b. Petition of Isabella Jordayn, prioress, for election of an abbess in the place of Cecilia Wiloughby, deceased. 30 April 1528.

30 April. 4228. LADY LUCY.

R. O. Receipt given by dame Eliz. widow of Sir Thos. Lucy to Roger Baker her bailey of Lapworth, for her rents due at the Annunciation of Our Lady, amounting to 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Dated 30 April 20 Hen. VIII.

4229. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. 1. Draft of a bull of Clement VII. appropriating to the college the parish churches of St. Peter, St. Nicholas, St. Mary ad Clavem, St. Clement, and St. Matthew, in Ipswich; of Whersted, Creetingham, and Thurlston, Suff.; Snape, Freston and Bedingfeld, Norw. dioc.; Dodnesh and Falkenham, Felyastowe or Felcheatowe, in Walton; Walton and Trymley, Wynset and Elmeham; Bromhill, Wetinges, Oteringhit and Croxton; ———, which belonged to the monastery of Mounjoy; Wykes, Wormyngford, Chettyham and Swyllond or Swynsland, Norw. dioc.; Horkeley Parva, and Boxsted, London dioc.; Stanesgate and Steple; Typtre and Tolshunt; Blakamore, Gyng Margaret or Margaretyng, Hormede, Maryborne or Tyborne, London dioc.

Pp. 6.

R. O. 2. "Memorandum of certain plate gone that was longing unto St. Peter's Church in Ippiswiche, the which the late master, Thomas Alverde, had in keeping to the church's use:" viz. "a cross of silver and gilt with Mary and John, that cost 34*l.*;" 4 silver chalices and 2 silver cruets, parcel gilt; a pax and a pyx, both silver gilt; a silver censer and a silver ship, both parcel gilt. Total value, 72*l.* 10*s.* The seats and stools of the church have also been broken up and sold by the Dean and Subdean. The making thereof will cost 20 marks. Also 371 lb. wax of the sepulchre light, and certain towels, curtains, &c. specified, and "two trones with the lanys hanging before the high altar and the rood loft," value 33*s.* 4*d.* Total loss, 99*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*; which "your orators," the parishioners, remit to your Lordship's consideration.

P. 1.

R. O. 3. A list of church vestment and plate, the latter nearly the same as that described in § 2. Signed: Thomas Alvard.

P. 1. Endd.: Mr. Thomas Alvard's writing delivered unto the parishens of Seynt [Peter's] in Ipswich.

R. O. 4. Note of the proposed disposition of certain lands, viz.:—Sites of the manors of Begham and Causay (Calcey), &c., to the treasurer of the Household; the monasteries of St. Peter's, Ipswich, Dodnesh, Wykes, Typtre, Horkeley and Rumborgh, to coparceners; lands in Thobie, &c., to Sir Ric. Page; in Raunston, to Sir Fm. Bryan; Chesthunt, to the earl of Worcester; Keable, Lefington, and Barthorp, with reversion of lands of Rob. Ughtred, to Sir Anth. Ughtred and Sir Edw. Seymour; Wyng, to John Pen.

Pp. 2.

R. O. 5. Inexpensus and confirmation of the bull of Clement VII., dated at Orvieto, priv. id. Mail 1528, (see Rym. xiv. 241.) for suppressing the monastery of St. Peter's, Ipswich, and founding a college.

A roll of paper

1528.

R. O.

6. Ratification, by Wolsey, of the gift made by John Higdon, S.T.P., dean of his college at Oxford, to Will. Capon, S.T.P., the dean, and to the college of St. Mary, Ipswich, of the lands of the suppressed priories of Tyttre, Wykes, Dodnesh, Snape, &c. Hampton Court, 4 Aug. 70 Hen. VIII.

Lat., draft, paper roll.

R. O.

7. "Things already done for and concerning my Lord his college in Gypwyche," as an enumeration of the patents obtained for suppression of monasteries, and erection of the college, and the private grants from my lord (Wolsey) and others.

8. "Remembrances to be done for my Lord his college in Gypwyche," as, to call upon Mr. Huggill for the evidences of Sayes Court and Chestnut; to send for the heir of St. John, and agree with him; to get a deed made by the dean and canons of Cardinal's college, Oxford, to the dean and canons of Cardinal's coll., Ipswich; arrangements to be made with the bp. of Dublin, my lady of Lincoln, &c.; every and assize to be taken in the monasteries of Fellastowe, Rumburgh, &c.; a book of liberties to be drawn for the college, and the King's confirmation thereof obtained; and to speak with my Lord Chief Baron for the manor of Pounden besides Gypwyche.

9. Remembrances of "things to be done within my lord's Grace his bishopric of Durham," as, a lease of all the minerals of the bishopric to be made to Mr. Thomas Wynter; a lease to be made of the salmon, and to see to the fine and certain barrels of salmon to be paid yearly to my Lord; certain wards to be disposed of; an end to be taken between Wolsey and my lord of Rutland for Hartlipole.

Pp. 7.

R. O.

6. "A rate of the charges of wages, commons, and liveries for the master, fellows, conductors, scholars, and bedemen, to be maintained in a college intended by my lord Cardinal's grace to be established within the town of Ipswich;" viz. for a president, 12 fellows, 8 clerks, a master in grammar, 2 ushers, and 15 odd men. Total charge, 40*l.* 7*s.*

Pp. 4.

R. O.

9. "Expence laid out by Thomas Crumwell about the charges of my Lord his college in Gypwyche, anno Henrici Octavi,* as hereafter it doth appear."

28 skins of vellum "for drawing and flourishing letters in the same, as well for the King's patents as for my Lord's deeds and charters," at 3*s.* each. To Garrard, for writing 12 deeds, viz. the originals and duplicates, 4*l.* 10*s.* 2 doz. parchments, 6*s.*, and one ream of paper, 3*s.* Fees to clerks of the Privy Signet and Privy Seal, 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* 10 boxes for the evidences, 20*s.* To the clerks of the Petty Bag, 33*s.* 4*d.*

Payments at the finding of the office (i.e. the Inquisition) of St. Peter's in Ipswich. To the exchequer of Suffolk, 40*s.* To the under-sheriff, 6*s.* 8*d.* To the exchequer's clerk, 3*s.* 4*d.* 5 bailiffs, 6*s.* 8*d.* The jury's dinner and horse meat, 23*s.* 7*d.*

Similar charges for finding the offices of Bromhill, Rumburgh and Felixstowe.

Personal expences of Crumwell, about the finding of these offices, riding to the installation of the Dean, suppressing the monasteries, and taking possession. For a chest "to put in the common seal of Ipswich," 20*s.* for carriage of silks to Hampton Court, for the college, 6*s.* 4*d.* for carriage thither and from thence to London of "grayles, antipioners," 6*s.* 8*d.* To two of his servants who surveyed the lands of Rumburgh and Bromhill, for 15 days, 43*s.* For "my costs at Hampton Court, and for my horses at divers times in the sweating season," 24*s.* 6*d.*

"Debts paid at the late monastery of Bromhill the 20th day of September, anno H. Octavi—," at the late monastery of Rumburgh, 11 Sept., to the late prior there, 11 Oct., 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Payments: Mrs. Jiddle, for laces of silk and gold; fees to the sealer for green wax, and to the secretaries of my lord of Norfolk, and of the French queen and duke of Suffolk. To my lord of Norfolk's secretary, for a letter for the corn of Felixstowe, 2*s.* To the officers of the Exchequer, for the entry and enrolling of my Lord's patents, 13*s.* 4*d.* For 1528.

CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH—cont.

Hugh's costs to Oxford twice, fetching deeds sealed for Ipswich college, 12s. To Brabazon, to take possession in Blakamore, Stanesgate, Felyxstowe, Rumburgh and Bromhill, 40s. "For costs riding in surveying the lands of Gypswiche, Rumburgh, Felyxstow, Bromhill and St. Peter's, by the space of 39 days," 22l. 12s. 3 weeks' physic and surgery for Brabazon, my man, lying sick at Walton, 4l. 13s. 4d. For 2 geldings, 6d. 13s. 4d. For taking down the lead at Bromhill, 4l. 13s. 4d. To the vicar of Croxton, his year's pension, 53s. 4d. Same to the quondam [prior] of Bromhill, 40s. To Page when he went for Candishe, 5s. 6d. To Dr. Capon, 30l. 8s. 4d.

Pp. 9.

R. O.

10. Rents received of the revenues of the late monastery of St. Peter's, Ipswich, 19 to 21 April, 19 Hen. VIII.; viz., from Philip Barnard, Thos. Vesey, Nich. Marten, Thos. Cadye, Sir John Godingham, Thos. Manser, Rob. Kene, John Campell, Rob. Canon, Roger Payne, Thos. Comper, Chr. Ungle, Will. Stance, John Smyth, John Payne, Roht. Neve, Anne Causton, John Woodroste, John Ryvere, Robard Goodwyn.

Rumburgh: Thos. Russhe. Bromhill: Dr. Lee, anno 20. Mr. Jermyn, William Westare, John Rudland and John Yonge.

Pp. 5, mutilated.

R. O.

11. A note of the number of oaks to be felled in various places for the building of the college at Ipswich; with the distance of each place from Ipswich, and the names of the persons to whom the woods belong. The owners are the Master of Eton College, Sir Andrew Windsor, William Spencer, late portman and customer of Ipswich, Lionel Talmage, Doyle of Hadley, Sir John Awdley, Sir Ric. Wentworth of Netylade, the late monastery of St. Peter's, the prior of Christchurch, Sir Philip Bothe, Master Gerny, Roger Woodhouse, Master Latemer, Master Wolverston, William Hyll of Barfolte, and Master Harman.

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O.

12. A rental of certain lands of the priory of St. Peter, Ipswich.

P. 1, with some memoranda on the back.

30 April.

Fiddes Coll.
p. 172.

4230. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

Inquisition taken at Oxford, 29 March 19 Hen. VIII., of the smaller monasteries suppressed for Wolsey's colleges. Delivered 30 April, 19 (sic, for 20) Hen. VIII., by the hands of Thomas Cromwell.

Lat.

4231.

GRANTS IN APRIL 1528.

April.

GRANTS.

1. Jo. Maknellys, a Scotch tailor. Licence to take two journeymen, being aliens, besides the two allowed by the Act of 14 & 15 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Del. Hampton Court, 1 April 19 Hen. VIII.

1. Sir Jno. Byron and Wm. West, groom of the Privy Chamber. Grant, in survivorship, of the custody of the manor, castle, &c. of Chipstone, Shirlwood, Notts, on surrender by West of pat. 14 July 12 Hen. VIII. (No. 933, Vol. III.) Del. Westminster, 1 April.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 20.

1. John Gibbe, of Calais, tyler, native of Autouyle, in the French dominions. Denization. Hampton Court, 1 April.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 27.

6. Rob. bp. of Chichester. Licence to alienate (with the consent of the dean and chapter of Chichester) lands in Ferryng, Sussex, to Wm. Shelley, Justice of the Common Pleas.—S.B. Del. Hampton Court, 6 April 19 Hen. VIII.

6. John Bishop, of Beccles, Suff. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Del. Hampton Court, 6 April 19 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

7. John Holland of London, yeoman, Wm. Sentlowe of Gloucester, and John Berewyke of London, yeoman. Pardon for robbing Joan Dene, widow, at Stoke Talmage, Oxon, and Thos. Dene, her servant, and for mortally wounding Wm. Pangbourne. Del. Westminster, 7 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 24.

8. Wm. Holme, groom of the Cellar. Licence to export woollen "thromes." Del. Westminster, 8 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

1528.

April.

GRANTS.

10. Tho. Wyger, of the parish of St. Peter, Southelmham, Suff., tailor. Pardon for the theft of 30s. from the house of Edm. Kunselroke at Southelmham. Del. Westm., 19 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 20.

10. Avery Wyvell of London, goldsmith. Pardon. Del. Hampton Court, 19 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 20. The petition states that he had bought a wedge of gold from Tho. Lee, goldsmith, who, he afterwards found, had made it of "clippings of gold," and that he had been in sanctuary three years.

11. Nich. Freshewell, sewer of the Chamber. Licence to import wine and wood. Del. Hampton Court, 11 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

12. Wm. Bowman, groom of the Buttery, and Rob. Troughton, groom of the Chamber. Custody of the person and lands of John Freshmer, br. and h. of Tho. Freshmer, dec., during his idiosy; on surrender of patent 12 Nov. 19 Hen. VIII., which was invalid. Del. Westm., 12 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

13. Henry Blounte. Grant of the free chapel or hospital called "le Spytell," near Stafford. Richmond, 8 April 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 13 April.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 23.

14. Katharine Odell of Harald, Beds. Protection for property and person. Del. Hampton Court, 14 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

14. John Edwards. To be bailiff of les Trayans de Nanthedoy, with the bailiwick of Moghaunt, in the lordship of Chirkeland, marches of Wales, on surrender of pat. 14 Oct. 3 Hen. VIII. by Jo. Glynn, yoman of the chamber to the Queen. Del. Hampton Court, 14 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

17. John Underhill, clk., dean of the college in Walyngford castle. Lease of two water mills, Walyngford Mills, Berks, for 21 years, at the annual rent of 8*l.*, and 6*s.* 8*d.* of increase. Del. Westm., 17 April 19 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 20.

20. David Morgan, sewer of the Chamber. To be bailiff of the lordship of Stalkpole, Pembske, in the King's gift by reason of the minority of Tho. Vernon, s. and h. of Rob. Vernon. Richmond, 20 March 19 Hen. VIII. Teste Hampton Court, 20 April, anno 19.—P.S.

UNDATED, 19 HEN. VIII.

Rob. Ascugh. Lease of the warren in the moors of Frothringham and Scomphorp, called Frothringham Estmor and Scomphorp Estmor, parcel of the duchy of Cornwall, Linc., for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 20*s.*, and 6*s.* 8*d.* of increase.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 7.

John Tregian. Lease of the manor of Tihest, Cornw., and all messuages, lands, &c. in Tihest, with advowsons, ecclesiats, &c. thereto belonging, for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 20*l.*, payable to the receiver general of the duchy of Cornwall.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 21.

Sir John Russell. Licence to export within 3 years 2000 sacks of wool of English growth from the ports of London, Southampton and Sandwich, through the straits of Marrok, without paying the customs of Calais or other dues.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 13.

Gilh. Smyth, archdeacon of Northt. and prebendary of Leighton manor, Hunts. Licence to found a chantry of one chaplain for the good estate of the said Gilb., and for the soul of Wm. Smyth, late bp. of Lincoln, at the altar of St. Katharine, in the parish of St. Mary, Leighton Bromswold (Hunts, Linc. dioc.); with mortmain licence to endow the said chantry to the annual value of 6*s.*—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 21.

Randell, or Ralph Laurence, of Reading. Pardon for the murder of John Goodgame, clk.—S.B.

John Higdon, dean, and the canons of Cardinal's college, Oxford. Licence to appropriate the prebend of Blewbury, Berks, belonging to the cathedral church of Sarum.—S.B. b.

John de Colyn, goldsmith, a native of Germany. Licence to retain two apprentices and four journeymen or "covenant servants," of foreign birth, notwithstanding the Act of 15 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

Tho. Elyott. To be clerk of the Council, with 40 marks a year, and the usual summer and winter livery, as enjoyed by Rob. Ryden, John Baldisswell, &c., and other profits, as enjoyed by Ric. Eden or Rob. Edon; on a conditional surrender of pat. 21 Oct. 4 Hen. VIII. granting the office to the said Ric. Eden.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 11.

Sir Nic. Vaus and Anne his wife, d. and one of the ha. of Sir Tho. Grene. Pardon for ruins and decays of dwellings, &c. in Burecote, Pokesley, Carcewell and Potecote, Northt., contrary to the stat. of Hen. VII.—S.B.

Simon Dyghy of Estgrenewich, Kent. Pardon.—S.B.

Tho. Lawe, groom of the Chamber. To be bailiff of the lordship of Olney and keeper of Olney park, Bucks, vice Sir Francis Brian, who held by grant 2 March 6 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 21.

Sir Edm. Bray. Wardship of Ralph Verney s. and h. of Sir Ralph Verney.—S.B.

John Le Mayre, surgeon, of Hanover. Licence to practise in England.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 23.

1528.

GRANTS IN APRIL 1528—cont.

April.

GRANTS.

Ric. Crokes of London, goldsmith. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Robt. Wingfield.—P.S.

Tho. Butt, clk. To have the pension which the abbot of Peterborough gives to a clerk of the King's nomination, for his exhibition, until he be promoted to a benefice by the abbot.—S.B.

Sir Piers Butler. Creation as earl of Ossory in Ireland, with succession in tail male, and 20*l.* a year, in support of the title, out of the issues of the manor of Newcastle, near Lyons, ("de Novo Castro de Lionnes"). Dublin.—S.B. Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 11.

Jo. Cavalcanti and Peter Frances de Barti, merchants of Florence. Cancel of 39 obligations, amounting in the total to 11,250*l.* Add. to Sir Hen. Wiat, treasurer of the Chamber.—S.B.

Sir John Gaynesford. Wardship of Wm. s. and h. of Wm. Aylove.—S.B.

Francis Frobiisher. Pardon for acquiring, without licence, from Richard Fletcher and Ursula his wife, the manor of Herreby, and 2 messuages and 530 acres of land in Herreby and Grantham, and regranting the same to the said Richard and Ursula, in survivorship, with remainder to the right heirs of the said Ursula. Westm., ———. —Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 18.

William Cartwyke. To be serjeant-at-arms, vice Robt. (or Richd. ?)* Twyford, deceased. Westm., ———. —Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 11.

Calais. Authority to the mayor, &c. to collect the customs granted to them at various periods, and lately confirmed by the King, notwithstanding a recent proclamation that there should be a free market at Calais, subject only to the same dues which were exacted in the Netherlands. — Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 8*d.*

John Pope, of Pettwales, in the parish of Berkynge, London, native of Gelderland, Denization.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 22.

John Gyfford, serjeant-at-arms. Inspecimus and confirmation of an indenture made, 26 May 8 Hen. VIII., between queen Katharine on the one part and the said John Gyfford, then yeoman of the Crown, on the other, whereby the said Queen granted him a lease of the manor of Stepneydon, Bucks, with reservations, for the term of 61 years, at the annual rent of 23*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* — Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 11.

Wm. Skeryngton. To be gunner in the Tower, vice Hen. Pykeman, deceased; with 6*d.* a day. Westm.—Pat. 19 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 13.

20 Hen. VIII.

23. Brian Annesley, yeoman for the month in the office of the King's cellar. Grant of possessions in Bradwell by the Sea, Essex, whereof John Skynner was seized in his lordship as of fee; which reverted to the Crown by reason of a fine levied without licence, on the morrow of St. Martin 12 Hen. VIII., to the use of James Browen alias Thrumbyll, a born subject of James king of Scots. Del. Hampton Court, 23 April 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 12.

24. Roger Ratcliff, gentleman usher of the Chamber. To farm the manor, castle, lands &c. of Okeham, Rutland, at the annual rent of 38*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.*, on surrender of three patents, one granting an annuity of 10*l.*, another of 20*l.*, and the third the stewardship of the above. Del. Westm., 24 April 20 Hen. VIII.—Pat. p. 1, m. 28. S.B.

26. Jas. Welles alias Ganne, husbandman, of Long Melford, Suffolk. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Robt. Wingfield. Greenwich, 28 Oct. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 26 April 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

26. Roger Shepe, of Long Melford, Suff., wheelwright. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Robt. Wingfield. Greenwich, 30 Oct. 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 26 April 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

28. Anthony Mynyon, of All Hallows, Barking, in Tower Ward, London, Italian, alias one of the King's gunners. Pardon. Del. Westm. (?), 28 April 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 12.

1 May.

4232. CARD. POMPEIO COLONNA to CARD. CAMPEGGIO.

Could have written two days ago about this naval victory of the French, but waited for fuller news. There never was a more bloody battle at sea. Few have escaped alive. Marquis de Guasto, Ascanio and Camillo

* "Quod quidem officium Robertus Twyford defunctus nuper habuit." Again: "a tempore mortis dicti Ricardi Twyford."

1528.

Colonna, the Cardinal's nephews, are prisoners. Don Ugo, the viceroy, Caesar Ferramusca and Pedro Urias are dead.

Lat., p. 1. Headed: Exemplum literarum cardinalis Columnæ ad R. Campegium. Calata, cal. Mali '28.

Endd.: Copia rerum Neapolitanarum.

1 May.

Galba, B. 12.

116°.

B. M.

4233. DE LUXEMBOURG to [WINGFIELD]. Deputy of Calais.

Has received by the bearer letters from Madame, saying that he has complained of certain deeds done in his territory by the men-of-war at Bourbourg and Gravelines. Wonders he never informed him of it, as he has been for some time on the frontier. If he will send some one to inform him of the damage done, will hear the captains of the said men-of-war, and do justice. Berghes, St. Winocq, 1 May '28. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.

1 May.

R. O.

4234. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to ARUNDEL.

Finds that his brother Dacres is going up to my Lord's grace (Wolsey) for several causes. It was as necessary the writer should have gone as he, if it had been my Lord's pleasure, who, he now fears, is not his good lord. Wishes to know from Arundel if it is so, for then it will be meet for him to give over what he has of the King. Hopes Arundel will be as plain with him as he was wont. Alnwick, 1 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my bedfellow Arundell.

1 May.

S. R.

4235. WM. HASING.

Grant to Wm. Hasyug alias Nottingham pursuivant, of the office of Somerset herald. Del. Westm., 1 May 20 Hen.VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen.VIII. p. 2, m. 29.

R. O.

Petition of Wm. Hasing alias Buckingham herald, for annuity of 10*l.* from the lordship of Agmondisham, Bucks, for his services in the wars; also for the office of one of the heralds, with such a name as shall please the King.

In the margin at the top of the page is written: "This must be first done."

Large paper, p. 1. Endd.

2 May.

R. O.

4236. WARHAM to LORD ROCHFORD and SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Has received their letter, dated Greenwich, 1 May, saying that the King wishes him to send up the writer of the copy of the bill of supplication, the man who instructed the writer, and the supplication interlined, of which they have the copy. Sends Richard Sisely, in whose hands he found the original bill, scribbled and interlined, which he encloses; and Thos. Colhurst, the writer, who did nothing but copy the bill which was brought to him. Sisely will tell Rochford from whom he had the original bill in Tunbridge, but he does not know who gave the instructions or wrote the original bill. Would have sent to Tunbridge for those Sisley named, but thought Lord Rochford could do that better, as he has the rule there, and, besides that, it might cause a bruit. Oxford, 2 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

1528.

- 3 May. 4237. PHIL. DE SENIS, DEAN OF THE APOSTOLIC CHAMBER, to
Vit. B. x. 87.
R. M.

Desires him to ask Wolsey that certain alum belonging to the heirs of Augustino Ghisi may be freed from sequestration, and delivered to Antonio Bonvisse as payment for the debts due to him from the Ghisi. Orvieto, 3 May 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1.

- 3 May. 4238. JOHN BISHOP OF EXETER to LORD FERRERS.
R. O.

A servant of the Bishop's, who brought him a letter from Exeter, and departed forthwith to his lodging at Bewdely, died there, this 3 May, of the common sickness. My lady Governess and the Council think those of the Council who are occupied with the suitors thronging the Court should not come into the Princess's presence. Proclamations are made that no infected persons should come thither; but if there be any disease at Hertelbury, they have no good place to remove the Princess to.

Mr. Almoner, Mr. Salter and Mr. Bromley, who, with the solicitor, are all the councillors present, send their compliments.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

- 4 May. 4239. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.
R. O.

Divers substantial clothiers of these parts have been with him this day, complaining that they can have no sale for their cloths at London, and that unless remedy be found they will be unable to keep their workfolks in work more than a fortnight or three weeks. The scarcity of oil alone, they say, will compel them to give up making cloth, unless some come from Spain. Stoke, 4 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

- 4 May. 4240. HENRY DUKE OF BRUNSWICK† to ANDREA GRITTI, DOGE
R. O. OF VENICE.

Informs him that the Imperial army, of which he is captain general, is proceeding to the defence of Italy. Trent, 4 May 1528.

Lat.

iii. List of Imperialists taken prisoners.

Don Ugo de Moncada, dead.

Marquis of Guasto, Prince of Salerno, Ascanio Colonna, Capt. Sancta Croce, Capt. Gio. de Varia, with other captains and 900 arquebusiers, entirely cut to pieces.

Comendador Ricardo, Capt. Manzono, Daghe Spagnuolo, Capt. Gobbo, Capt. Joan Gaetano, Capt. Reniere de Montenes, with his ensigns.

Ital., p. 1, in the hand of John Casale. Endd.: Copia literarum capitanei Germanorum ad Venetos. Add.: R. D. Petro Vanna, secretario, Londini.

- 4 May. 4241. DE LUXEMBOURG to [WINGFIELD, Deputy of Calais].
Galba, B. ix. 117.

R. M.

Has received his letter by the bearer. Is glad to hear that he is so well contented with his [Luxembourg's] men. Professes his readiness to remedy all damage done by them. Gravelinghes, 4 May '28. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

* Addressed, "Magnifice Domine."

† Henricus junior dux Transilvaniæ.

1528.

4 May.

Strype's Mem.
i. 17. ii. p. 56.

4242. THOMAS BOWGAS.

Abjuration by Thos. Bowgas, of the parish of St. Leonard's, Colchester, fuller, before Cuthbert bishop of London, of the following heresies; viz., that a man need not go on pilgrimage to St. Thomas of Canterbury, or to Our Lady of Grace; that there is no other church of God but man's conscience; that he had as leve be buried in his own house as in the church; "that I would Our Lady of Grace were in my bakehouse;" that when asked if it were good to set a taper before the sepulchre, he said, "it was nothing but to set a candle before the Devil;" that if he had the crucifix, the image of Our Lady and other Saints, and crosses, in a ship, he would drown them all in the sea. Desires a penance. Signed.

On the 4 May 1528, Bowgas appeared before the bishop of London, in the chapel of the manor house of the bishop of Norwich by Charing Cross; and on reading the above abjuration received absolution, the Bishop enjoining him, on pain of relapse, to go in procession on Sunday, 10 May, following, at the parish of St. Leonard at Hithe near Colchester, bearing a faggot on his shoulder, and afterwards hear mass on bended knees on the steps of the choir. Says he is willing to undergo the penance. Present: Geoffrey Wharton, chancellor; Wm. Layton, principal registrar; Thos. Chambre, chaplain; Master Skelton, Marmaduke Tunstal, gentlemen; Geo. Besyll, Thos. Pilkington, Thos. Dowman, Anthony Tunstal, Nich. Tunstal, Wm. Westwray and Humph. Odingsalis, literati.

8 May.

R. O.

4243. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

Last Wednesday, about 9 o'clock, p.m., heard from his brother Sir Henry, that Thos. Merse, of Hawkehurst, made the bill "that was put up to my lord of Canterbury by the men of Senoke and others." Sent his servants to attach him, and sends him to Wolsey by them. He does not know why he is sent, but thinks it is about a variance he has with the parson of Hawkehurst. Hallden, 8 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

8 May.

Galba, B. ix.

118.

B. M.

4244. JOHN HACKET to [Tuke].

Has received no letters from him since he wrote last. Although my Lady was fully determined to send the squire Marenix on the coming of the safe-conduct which Lassaux brought, and it was thought he would be dispatched on April 27, she afterwards, by Hoghestrate's advice, caused him to tarry till she had answer to some new things which she wrote to the Emperor's ambassador there. This answer arrived on April 30; and next day, at dinner time, Marenix, who is the treasurer Marenix's brother, left with his instruction, "to mythe our me . . . in France," and so pass forward.

My Lady is better inclined to Wolsey's mind than before. There are ill spirits in the world, who would prefer that this peace were made by other ways than by the King and Wolsey; but he doubts not that God and time will overcome their ill intents. Thinks he told him, in his letter of April 6, that, at his suggestion, my Lady had allowed the corn that the Hoghestetters were about to send to England to proceed thither. Two ships from Antwerp have sailed; but Hoghestrat, as governor of Holland, has detained those in Holland, saying that the Emperor has some action upon the Hoghestetters which my Lady and the Council did not know of when they gave this permission. Joakyn Hoghatetter has been here himself, and does not know how he shall speed, for they lay divers things to his charge. He has denied the charges, but that does not help him. If his accusers were as good English hearts as Hacket or Tuke, his corn would not have been arrested; but, as the Italians say, "quy a il tymone in mano, ghoverna la nave."

Wishes he could see Wolsey and hear his pleasure. On the 12th a diet of 1528.

JOHN HACKET to [Tuke]—cont.

the states of Holland, Seland, Brabant and Flanders will be held to arrange for the defence of the countries.

Doubts not that he has spoken to Wolsey for the increase of his diets, which he does not desire for avarice or to make store. Machlyng, 8 May 1528.

Hol., pp. 4. The three names in italics are in cipher.

4245. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

R. O.

Thanks him for this last token of affection which his Majesty has received by Fox. Vows devotion to the Holy See. Perceives that the methods adopted by the Pope have been those of an indulgent father. It only remains the Pope should now accomplish what may appear necessary for the completion of the work, with the same courtesy as he has commenced it. The King will use so much dexterity* that nothing but honor shall redound to the Holy See.

In Vannes' hand, Lat., p. 1. Endd.: Copy of a letter to the Pope from the King.

10 May.

R. O.

4246. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

The King and Wolsey have been much delighted to hear, by the letters of Master Stephen and the report of Fox, with what diligence Casalis has been pursuing the King's business. Requests him, however, to use his influence with the Pope along with Master Stephen to obtain certain things which, in Wolsey's opinion and that of some most learned men, remain to be done, especially "in commissione illa decretali a S.D.N., nullis arbitris seu consultoribus admissis, concedenda et secreto ad me mittenda."[†] He may pledge Wolsey's salvation to the Pope *that it shall be kept secret from every eye, so that his Holiness need have no fear. Does not desire the commission, that on the strength of it any process should take place, or that it should be publicly or privately exhibited, but only as a pledge of the Pope's paternal regard towards the King and to himself, by which he will show his complete confidence in Wolsey, and assist in maintaining his authority. From my house at London, 10 May 1528. Signed.

Pp. 2, in Vannes' hand. Add. Endd. by Casale: "10 Maij."

Vit. B. x. 88.

B. M.

2. Duplicate of the same, with a few verbal differences.

10 May.

4247. HENRY VIII.

Vit. B. x. 61 b.

B. M.

Safe-conduct for Thadeus, going to Italy with despatches. Greenwich, 10 May 1528.

Pocock, i. 162.

Lat., draft, p. 1, in Vannes' hand.

10 May.

R. O.

4248. SIR GEROT SHANESSON to HENRY VIII.

The earl of Ossory intends to expel him from the manor of Clonacurry, which he and his ancestors have possessed these 100 years, in violation of an agreement which the present earl of Kildare, just after his father's death, made with him when he was earl of Ormond. Requests that Ossory may be commanded to keep to his agreement. Divers of his ancestors were slain in defence of these lands against Irish rebels. Requests that if the Earl will not obey the King's command, the writer may make defence against him. Clonscurrey, 10 May.

* For the original word, "procedentia," the King has substituted in his own hand "dexteritate."

[†] These passages are underlined, apparently by another hand.

1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. and endd.

11 May.

4249. [WOLSEY to CAMPEGGIO.]

VII. B. x. 85.

B. M.

The letters of Gregory Casale and Gardiner have confirmed Henry's opinion of his faith, real and benevolence. The Pope could choose no one so fit to act as legate for the decision of the King's cause, or who would be more acceptable to his Majesty. Will assist him diligently, and begs him not to grudge the trouble of the journey. Wishes him to come as soon as possible. Has given Gardiner full directions to tell him all that has already taken place. Desires him to urge the Pope to grant what will be sufficient for the cause, and what can never be subject to revocation or appeal.

Draft by Vannes, Lat., pp. 3. Endd.: Tullit has literas Magister Barillo et Thadeus cursor qui discesserunt die xj. Maii 1528.

11 May.

4250. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

B. O.

Since writing last, has had the accompanying letters, with news of a great victory at sea. Wished for a confirmation before he wrote of it; but the Bishop may take it for true, as he has heard it from several quarters. The messenger who was bringing letters from Lautrec has been taken by the Turks at sea.

Hopes soon to have better news still. Bids him inform the King and Cardinal, who, he is sure, will be glad to hear of it.

The articles brought by Morecte have since been altered. Sends them that he may be able to answer if they are spoken of. Will send back Morecte shortly. St. Germain en Laye, 11 May. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

[11 May.]

4251. [FOX] to GARDINER.

Harl. 419,
f. 103.

B. M.

Strype's Mem.
t. ii. 36.

Footech, t. 141.

Wrote him two letters on 27 April: the first from Paris, notifying his arrival there; the other in the fields on horseback, four miles from Clermont, about a meeting with Sylvester Darius there, who was sent by the King and Wolsey ambassador into Spain. Received from him my Lord's letters directed to you, Mr. Gregory, and me. Had estcoons closed and sealed them, and sent them to my lord of Bath to be conveyed to you; and continued my journey to Calais, the 28 April, from which I obtained passage on 2 May, and arrived at Sandwich that night. Next day, Sunday, made all diligence towards Greenwich, where I expected to find my Lord's grace with the King, but experienced as great civilities from the mayor of Canterbury and balliffs of Rochester and Gravesend as we did in the territory of Florence. On arrival, at 5 p.m., Wolsey had left Greenwich two hours before; but the King commanded me to go to Mrs. Anne's chamber, who, as my lady Princess and others of the Queen's maidens were sick of the smallpox, lay in the gallery of the tilt-yard. Declared to her your singular diligence and dexterity in obtaining such expeditions, and in hastening the coming of the Legate with your hearty recommendations, for which she seemed to be most grateful, "oftentimes in communication calling me * Master Stephens, with promise of large recompence for your good acquittal." The King then entered the chamber, and Mrs. Anne left, when, calling me apart, his Highness welcomed me home, and bid me show him shortly what was done in his cause. Delivered the Pope's letters and yours, and the bishop Staphile's. He read yours secretly to himself, but the Bishop's he read not. Told him that we had followed his instructions to obtain a dispensation and a commission according to the form prescribed. Rehearsed our arguments used towards the Pope, and said that his Holiness had passed the same without alteration of a word, and sent it by me to his Highness. Explained to him the difficulties raised by the Cardinals and other learned men about granting the first of the three kinds of commissions; viz., the decretal. Told him that, as to the two points omitted, the Pope was willing to satisfy him to the best of his power, which he might do in the following manner; viz., grant under his seal that, the sentence once given by the delegates, he would confirm it without delay, and promise never to revoke it or give inhibition to the contrary. With all this the King seemed marvellously well pleased, and, calling in Mrs. Anne, bid me repeat it all to her. Was questioned at great length what good will we found in the Pope towards the King; which I ceased not to extol, telling how honorably we were entertained, and how freely we were admitted to his presence, how much his Holiness pondered the dangers of the realm if the King's purpose should not take effect, and the private opinion he had given of the justice of the King's cause. Took occasion to speak of the effect of Wolsey's letters, without which we should have obtained nothing; for the Pope declared to us he had been told, long before our coming, that the King wanted this only for private reasons, "and that she was with child, and of no such qualities as should be worthy that Majesty;" but Wolsey's letters proved the contrary. Was asked about the consultations of the learned men of that court; on which he related the discussions and daily meetings we had had before the Pope, and privately in Mr. Gregory's house; "wherein I ceased not to declare your learning and vehemence used, and also Mr. Gregory his diligence and authority, de quibus malo aliorum prädicatione constet tibi quam meis verbis. Certe sic mihi visus est affectus Rex erga te, ut sperem fore quum nos omnes amici tui felicissime collocatam hanc operam tuam gloriabimur." Being asked what provision was made against recusation and appeal, showed that words were inserted in the commission by which these were excluded, as far as the law would allow. With this he seemed to be satisfied, but said he would take Wolsey's judgement on the matter.

* So in MS.

1528.

[FOX] to GARDINER—cont.

It was past 10 p.m. before he reached Durham Place, where Wolsey now lies, "the hall of York Place with other edifices there being now in building, my lord's Grace intending most sumptuously and gorgeously to repair and furnish the same;" but though Wolsey was in bed he was admitted to his presence. After showing him that by no ways we could obtain the decretal, he seemed much perplexed, thinking this commission to be of no more value than that sent by Gambara. Was commanded to leave it with him that night, with the Pope's and your letters, and your rationes justificatorias commissioni expedite; which after he had read in the morning and well considered, he called Dr. Bell and me to him on Monday afternoon to read the same. This was done in presence of my lord of Rochford, when his opinion was confirmed, and even they were satisfied that the commission was such that no better could be devised; that the decretal commission was not to be shown in public, "and that there might have been recusatio et appellatio, as well if process had been made by it as by this, with many other reasons, which he of his innate and excellent wisdom most quickly invented to the justification of your doing in this matter, with much praise and laud giving unto you for the same." Wolsey appointed next day a consultation with Drs. Wolman and Benet upon the said commission, and commanded me to go and report his opinion to the King, and what new expedition he purposed to make to you for the perfect consummation of the King's desires. The King was highly satisfied, and sent me back to my Lord that night, but Wolsey had been too busy to speak with the said doctors.

1528.

Next day, Wednesday, they all assembled before him ; and I was afterwards informed, having been sent that morning by Wolsey to Greenwich, that they all agreed in his opinion, extolling your great wisdom and dexterity. On my return that afternoon, my Lord called Mr. Peter* and me, instructed the former of the form of answers he meant to make to the Pope, and directed me to write to you under this tenor ; that although what you had already done was so highly satisfactory that no further commission might seem necessary, and the King and Wolsey do not cease to extol your praises, " exclaiming, O non estimandum thesaurum martyrumque regni nostri! to the great comfort and rejoice of us your poor friends here ;" yet Wolsey, as of himself, for the discharge of his own conscience, with the consent of the other prelates here, and considering the chances of mortality, desires you to press the Pope with all possible persuasions to grant the commission decretal, to be sent here to his Grace in the most secret fashion, for these causes : 1st, that the sentence, being once given by the Pope et judicio ecclesie, might be a rule how to proceed in this matter, and defeat all tergiversation of the adversary in future ; 2nd, that by means of it he can easily induce all those who take the adversary's part to conform to his Grace's opinion ; 3rd, that, considering the uncertainty of life, he thinks it better to enter pelagus illud judiciorum by an open investigation of the cause, but everything hangs at present upon the sole will of the Pope, viz. if he will confirm,—which many things may interfere with ; 4th, that it would conduce greatly to the stability of the Holy See if Wolsey were of such authority and estimation with the King that whatever he should advise, Henry would readily assent to,—for which no means would be so effectual as that the Pope should grant this commission decretal at his request. You are therefore to state, as his Grace never intends to make process by virtue thereof, or to show it to any person, whereby the least slander may arise or prejudice to the Apostolic See, but only to the King as a means of augmenting his own influence with him, " of which thing his Grace willeth also you make faith and promise in animam suam, under most sacred oath and obtestation," that you still urge his Holiness to pass the said decretal. If after three or four congresses you see no reason to expect that he will relent, you are to return home, leaving that suit to be prosecuted by Mr. Gregory and other the King's friends there. Moreover, as the juris-consulti here say continually that the Queen may appeal, you are to consult with the most learned men in that court whether she may do so or not ; and if she do, what will be its validity, and whether the Legates may proceed notwithstanding, or what remedy may be used by remission of the appeal and confirmation of the sentence per superiorem judicem ; and whether, the appeal made, the parties may redire ad nova rota before confirmation, &c. While also Wolsey approves your rationes justificatorias, which you will receive again enclosed herewith lest you lose the copy, he wishes you to have them read and examined by the said learned men to add to and approve and sign. These instructions you will receive in Wolsey's own letters ; but as my Lord commanded me to inform you of them, I was busy all Thursday penning them, which, for lack of experience, was a painful task to me.

On Friday, Mr. Tuke having perfected my Lord's expedition to you, his Grace called me to hear the reading of it, and bid me show him the draft of this letter, and afterwards report the effect of these expeditions to the King, and show him a copy of the Pope's letters to be written with his own hand. With this the King was well satisfied, and seemed to desire nothing so much as that you should set forth the said expedition, and return with all celerity. On Saturday following my Lord called Mr. Bell and me to his presence, and commanded me to desire you to consult with Staphile and others,—first, whether the said bull would be invalidated if the Queen, as he is informed she will do, renouncing all benefit from the dispensation of Julius, recur only to the allegation quod non fuit cognita ab Arthuro, there being no mention made in the same de publica honestate; "for sith the bull dispenseth only cum affinitate cujusmodi, if her allegation should be true, nulla interesset inter contrahentes, and being necessary the same to be dispensed with argueth the matrimony to be illegitimate, in his Grace's opinion, wherein his Grace would gladly be resolved by your and other learned men his judgments." Moreover, the wording of the commission requires, first, that the validity or invalidity of the bull be determined; 2nd, the illegitimacy, or otherwise, of the marriage; and 3rd, that sentence of divorce be given. The learned men here are in doubt whether three separate sentences should be given in these three cases, or whether one as to the nullity of the marriage would include the other two. Wolsey is determined to proceed conscientiously, and thinks he has one strong ground to go upon, viz. that the King himself knew nothing of the obtaining of the bull, "whereof he is ascertained not only by the King's relation, but also by my lord of Winchester;" and he wishes you, without appearing to doubt the justice of the cause, to obtain an opinion upon this point from the bishop of Ancona, or some one of equal learning.

1528.

[FOX] to GARDINER—cont.

Was at Greenwich on Sunday with my Lord, who intended that day to have despatched such expeditions as he now sends by Mr. Barloo; but on reading them before the King, being present Tuke, Wolman, Bell, and I, Mr. Wolman raised another scruple, which you must discuss with learned men there, viz., whether the clause in the commission excluding appeal be not invalidated by the circumstance that the commission contains both officium nobile and also mercenarium, and that it will be in the latter function only that the Legate can declare the marriage null. This difficulty is set forth at some length. On this point you are to state your opinion boldly, the King being quite resolved to do nothing illegal, and being persuaded that the Queen by using the right of appeal would do much to advance his cause,—an opinion which my Lord has by degrees instilled into his mind. "Inasmuch that yesterday, to my great marvel and no less joy and comfort, his Grace openly, in presence of Mr. Tuke, Mr. Wolman, Mr. Bell, and me, made protestation to the King's highness that although he was so much bound unto the same as any subject might be to his prince, and by reason thereof his Grace was of so perfect devotion, faith and loyalty towards his Majesty that he could gladly spend goods, blood and life in his just causes, yet sith his Grace was more obliged to God, and that he was sure he should render an account de operibus suis before Him, he would in this matter rather suffer his high indignation, yea, and his body jointly to be torn in pieces, than he would do anything in this cause otherwise than justice requireth, ne that his Highness should look after any other favor to be ministered unto him in this cause on his Grace's party, than the justice of the cause would bear; but if the bull were sufficient he would so pronounce it."

P.S.—Was sent for this Monday by the King, and desired to inform you of two things which he thinks specially important to be set forth: first, the commission decretal to be obtained according to my Lord's instructions now sent, which if you despair of obtaining, ye then, Master Stephens, shall say to the Pope that you are seriously afraid the refusal of so just a petition may work in the King's breast to alienate him from the Pope, seeing that he has never heretofore done anything for Henry's own sake,—a result which would be very prejudicial to his Holiness. After saying this, you are to cease further suit therein, and you and Mr. Gregory shall study by all possible means to obtain the said decretal.

Pp. 15. Copy, in Gardiner's hand.

1528.

4252 [WOLSEY] to ROBERT BROWNE

R. O.

Thanks him for letters : the first touching "the condition of my manor of Sowthwell, with the parks and woods thereto," and the second notifying that he had committed to ward in Nottingham Castle "a lewd person" for unfitting language. The King's council "well alloweth" his conduct, and desire him to send the said person hither with the depositions against him. I have ordered Toms* to make and seal your patents,† and ere long will provide better things for you. Desires him to levy his money with all diligence.

P. 1; draft, in Wolsey's hand.

11 May.

4253. QUEEN MARGARET to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

In Feb. last received a letter from Wolsey, forwarded by the earl of Northumberland; to which she made answer from Strivling Castle, 2 March, when she asked for a safe-conduct. Hopes, as it is for the honor both of himself and his nephew, Henry will grant it "in sort and manner" as mentioned in that letter. Edinburgh, 11 May. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

11 May.

4254. ABJURATIONS OF HERETICS.

Strype's Mem.
i. ii. 39.

Abjuration by William Bocher, of Steple Bumstede, ploughwright, before Cuthbert bishop of London, of heresies concerning the sacrament of the altar, pardons and pilgrimages. Signed with a cross.

On the 11 May 1528, in the chapel in the manor house of the bishop of Norwich by Charing Cross, before Cuthbert bishop of London,

"Nota, quod iste oritur de stirpe vitata, quia avus patris sui erat ob hæresim concrematus, ut dicitur."

Ib. i. ii. 60.

2. On the 11th May 1528, Rob. Hemstede, of Bumstede ad Turrim, appeared before the bp. of London at the manor house of the bp. of Norwich at Charing Cross, and read an abjuration of heresy, acknowledging communications with Sir Ric. Fox, John Tyball, John Smyth, and Frere Topley, the last of whom said, if he did not believe as they taught, he was no true Christian man. He was led into heresy about the sacrament of the altar by Sir Ric. Fox, curate of Bumstede. At first he told Sir Richard, "I fear me, ye go about to bring me in the taking the men of Colchester be in." But the latter replied, "What, man, art thou afraid? Be not afraid. For those serve a better master than ever thou diddest." He has thought that pardons did not profit.

Ib. i. ii. 61.

3. On the 11th May 1528, as above, Thos. Hemsted confesses that his wife taught him the Paternoster, Ave Maria and Credo, in English, which she learned of Gilbert Shipwright, deceased. Some time after, he was chosen churchwarden of Bumstede, with John Tyball, and was often in his company and that of Sir Richard Fox, who, knowing what his wife had taught him, called him "brother in Christ," and "a known man." Has heard their reading and teaching for a year without disclosing them. About Shrovetide last was taught by Thomas Hilles that pardons were not profitable; and about "Fastyngham" last, was taught by Fox that the sacrament of the altar is not the very body of Christ, but done for a remembrance of Christ's Passion; and that pilgrimages were of no effect. The following persons are of the same sect, and have been taught by Fox, Tyball and Friar Garsdiner: Edmond Tyball and his wife, Joan Bocher, widow, the wife of George Preston, Joan Hempsted, the respondent's wife, John, filius ejus naturalis,

* Dead in 1528?

† See Patent 11 May 1528 in Grants.

1528.

ABJURATIONS OF HERETICS—cont.

and Robert Faire, lay persons of Bumstede; John Wyggen, Thomas Topley, and William Gardyner, Austin Friars of Clare; John Chapman and Thomas Hilles of Wytham; William Browne and John Craneford, of Bumstede.

Harl. MS. 421,

f. 27.

B. M.

4. Abjuration of Robert Hempstede, of Steple Bumstede, husbandman, before Cuthbert bp. of London, of the opinion that the sacrament of the altar is not the very body of Christ, and that pardons are of no effect.

Signed with a cross.

Pp. 2.

12 May.

R. O.

4255. JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY.

Wrote last about the defeat of the Imperial fleet. Sends a copy of the letters of Card. Colonna and of the nuncio with Lautrec. The viscount of Lorraine and the president of Provence have come to the Pope from Francis, begging him to declare for the allies, to which our ambassadors have long urged him. His Holiness makes the usual excuse, that he wishes the cities taken by the Venetians to be restored; to which they answer that the King intends that they shall be restored, and that they had orders to assist him in all that he should desire, and especially in this restitution.

A new French ambassador has just arrived here, the late one having returned to France. Hears from him that he is to urge the Signory to this restitution. Have persuaded them to send an ambassador to the Pope; which they will do in three days. It is reported that 800 horse have arrived at Trent, and many infantry, though in disorder. Preparations for their resistance are talked of daily here. The French ambassador has been this morning pressing the Signory to contribute to the pay of the 6,000 German foot, whom the King is going to send to Italy. He writes that he will send in addition 1,400 French foot and 100 men-at-arms, who serve under the son of the duke of Savoy, with others, who are said already to have arrived in Italy. He has written to all his allies, including the dukes of Savoy and Ferrara, and the marquis of Mantua, to assist this enterprise. The Signory are preparing a numerous army of Italian foot, and fortifying towns. Lautrec has pitched his camp at half a mile from Naples, whence daily incursions are made. Venice, 12 May 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

12 May.

R. O.

4256. MARGARET OF SAVOY.

Commission to don Inigo de Mendoca, bp. elect of Burgos, Wm. de Barres, and John de le Sauch, to conclude a mercantile truce with the kings of England and France. Malines, 12 May 1528. Signed.

Fr. Great seal of Margaret attached.

12 May.

R. O.

4257. WOLSEY'S LEGATESHIP.

Bull of Clement VII., empowering cardinal Wolsey to degrade Rym. xiv. 239. ecclesiastics. Orvieto, 12 May 1528.

Lat.

13 May.

R. O.

4258. JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY.

Wrote yesterday, but the courier did not leave. Received letters this morning from the ambassadors with the Pope, of which he encloses copies. Wolsey will see thereby that divine punishment has begun to overtake the Colonnas. Sends the names of the captains, and the number of the new German army, part of which is already near the Veronese. Venice, 13 May 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

14 May. 4259. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Bull of Clement VII. to cardinal Wolsey for the suppression of the monasteries of Romborow, Felixstow, Bromehil, Bliborow and Montjoye. Rym. xiv. 340. Orvieto, prid. id. Mail 1528.

Lat., vellum.

14 May.

R. O.

2. Bull for the suppression and annexation of St. Peter's, St. Nicholas's, St. Clement's and St. Mary's, Ipswich, and of Wersted and Cretyugham, to the college at Ipswich. Orvieto, prid. id. Mail 1528.

Lat., vellum.

3. Bull for the suppression of the nunnery of Prê.*

R. O.

Rough draft, Lat., pp. 7.

14 May. 4260. PROCEEDINGS for HERESY.

Strype's Mem.
i. 408

Articles ministered against Humfrey Munmouth, of the parish of All Saints Barking, London.

1. That he knew that Luther and his opinions were condemned as heretical, and that his books were prohibited in England, in April 1521. 2. That he has bought and kept many books by Luther and his sect. 3. That he has helped and given exhibition to persons occupied in translating the Bible, and making erroneous books from it; as Sir William Hochin alias Tyndalle, priest, and friar Roye, an apostate Observant. 4. That he helped Tyndalle and Roye to go to Almayne to study Luther's sect. 5. That he had books of Luther's translated into English, as well as his book De Libertate Christiana, and his exposition upon the Pater Noster. 6. That the De Libertate Christiana was written in the beginning and drawn out of St. Augustine's works, and the exposition of the Pater Noster ascribed to Hilarius, to blind and abuse the readers. 7. That he has helped the translation of the New Testament by Tyndal and Roye, as well as its printing and importation. 8. That he has read and kept the translation after it was openly forbidden as being full of errors. 9. That he has kept and read an English introduction to St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans. 10. That other books, full of errors, translated into English, have been sent to him by Tyndalle. 11. That he has been privy to the printing, beyond sea, of detestable English books against the sacrament of the Altar, the Mass, and other observances of the Church. 12. That he has caused books by Luther and friar Lambert to be translated into English. 13. That he has eaten flesh in Lent. 14. That he has said and believed that faith without works is sufficient to save a man's soul. 15. That all men are not bound to observe the constitutions of the Church. 16. That we should pray to God, and not to Saints. 17. That Christians ought to worship God only, and not Saints. 18. That pilgrimages should not be used. 19. That men should not offer to images in church, nor set lights before them. 20. That contrition and confession to God alone are sufficient for a man in deadly sin. 21. That no man is bound to keep fast days. 22. That pardons granted by the Pope or a bishop are not profitable. 23. That he is considered an advancer and favorer of Luther and his heresies. 24. That the above is true and notorious, and commonly reported in London and elsewhere.

15 May. 4261. INCLOSURES.

Hart. MS. 442,
f. 91.
B. M.

Proclamation published in the Chancery, ordering the secret disclosing to the lord Legate, chancellor of England, of the names of persons who keep more farms than one, or have enclosed grounds or pastures to the hurt of the commonwealth. The informations will be received by Mr. Throgmorton and Mr. Claybrugh, masters of the Chancery.

* Similar in substance to the bull in Rymer's Fodera, xiv. 340.

1528.

INCLOSURES—cont.

This proclamation was made in the Chancery, 15 May 20 Hen. VIII.

Modern copy, p. 1.

15 May. 4262. CHRISTOPHER DE S[CHYDLOVYECZ], Castellan of Cracow and Chancellor of Poland, to [HENRY VIII.]

Nero. B. II.
103*.

B. M.

Offers his services to the King, and commends to him Stanislaus Cipeer, consul of Cracow, who is going to England with sables bought for the King. Cracow, 15 May 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1.

15 May. 4263. The COUNCIL OF IRELAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. II. 127.

Have written to the King of the misfortune of the Vice-deputy (baron Delvin), who was taken prisoner by O'Chonour at a parley, and many of his men slain and taken.

The rebels are so emboldened that it is feared great damage will ensue to the King's subjects. The Englishry are so destitute of captains that they have chosen Sir Thomas Fitzgarrat captain, till the King provides otherwise; the Garrantynes being next to the defence of these countries, and the earl of Ossory so far that the country might be sore damaged before his coming hither. Have often advised the Vice-deputy to beware of O'Chonour, and to pay him the wages enjoyed by him and his predecessors, as he had made confederacies with divers great Irishmen in case the Vice-deputy attempted anything against him. Do not know what peril will ensue for lack of defence, for nothing can be done without destroying the land by coyne and livery, or without great expence to the King. The revenues are so diminished that the Deputy has little or nothing for his expences after paying the ordinary fees. Ask Wolsey to provide aid for them. Enclose a letter from the prior of Conall, a lord of Parliament, whom they have sent to O'Chonour. Dublin, 15 May. Signed: H. Dublinens.—G. Armachan—W. V. of G. [viscount of Gormanstown]—P. Bermynghem, justice—P. Fynglas, baron of th'eschequer. Scaled.

Add.: To, &c. the Cardinal of York, legate and chancellor. Endd.

15 May. 4264. W. PRIOR OF CONNALL to the ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

R. O.

On receipt of the Archbishop's letters, went to O'Concor, whom he found on the confines of his own country. Presented the letters to him, and explained their purport, when he said that he had often offered peace and obedience to the Baron [Delvin], and entreated him not to give him occasion to league himself again with the Irish chieftains, by keeping from him the King's wages (regium stipendium). The Baron, however, not only denied him peace, but refused to pay him his wages, arrested a rider whom he had sent to Dublin on a mission, and was with difficulty persuaded to let him go. On the day of this Parliament he offered hostages in the hands of Thomas, son of the earl of Kildare, for all claims the Baron had against him; but the Baron refused them, and, as O'Concor asserts, refused to make a truce. Thus he lays all the blame upon the Baron, who, he says, compelled him to make a league with O'Kerwayll and other Irishmen, without whose counsel he will not now make peace or truce. He demands his wages to be paid at regular terms, and if any of his servants be proved to have injured any of the King's subjects he will compel them to make restitution; also that if any one of Oifely has had uninterrupted payment of black rent for a long time, it may be paid still.* When the writer desired him to appoint a term of truce, during which the Archbishop and the Council could take this into consideration, he refused it. He believes he can overrun the English pale without resistance. He was willing to spare churches and churchyards if the Deputy would do the same. He is so elated with his prosperity, it is to be feared he will burn Athboy, Molingar and Trym. I have brought with me the abbot of Clonard, who willingly labors for the public good. Ballehogan, 15 May 1528.

1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2. Add.: R^{mo}, &c., H. Dublin. archiepiscopo Hibernie primati et archicancellario.

15 May.

Lamb. MS.
602, f. 81.

St. P. ii. 129.

4265. H[UGH INGE] ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN, and PATRICK BIRMINGHAM, to the DUKE OF NORFOLK.

The baron of Delvin, who has the governance of the country here, has had continual dissensions with O'Chonor since the departure of the earl of Kildare on account of robberies committed on Englishmen. For this reason the Vice-deputy stopped O'Chonor's tribute. On the 12th inst. a parliament was appointed, near his country, by a castle of Sir Wm. Darcy's called Rathyn; when Delvyn was taken by treachery, all his footmen slain, some of his horsemen wounded, and Christopher Cusake and others taken. Encloses a copy of the prior of Conall's letter. Wrote to him and Sir Walter Delahide as soon as they heard of it, asking them to speak to O'Chonor for the Vice-deputy's deliverance. These parts are destitute of good captains and soldiers. "The strength (if any be) is by the Garrantynes." Have therefore appointed Sir Thos. Fitzgurrat captain in these parts. Considering the great affairs which the earl of Ossory has in his country, great peril will ensue without help from England. The revenues have so decreased that they are not sufficient for ordinary charges. The Irish perceive the debility of the Englishry. Ask credence for the bearer, who is going to the King and Cardinal, if Norfolk think it expedient. Dublin, 15 May. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To the duke of Norfolk, treasurer of England.

16 May.

R. O.

4266. LOUISA OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

Her confidence in Wolsey will make her speak openly to him. Has been much astonished at Clerk's statement that Henry is not bound to make actual war on the Emperor until he has refused all means of coming to a peace, while he persists in as high terms for the Emperor as before the expence incurred by this voyage of Lautrec and by the rest of the League. Though she considers the friendship indissoluble, asks him to reconsider his advice. Thinks, as the League is so prosperous, that they should use other language.

All her desire is for the restoration of her children and the good of peace, for which it is easily seen the enemy have no desire, but rather to destroy the League by dissimulation. Desires credence for Morette. The Emperor has treated the children with great inhumanity. He has taken away all their servants, and intends to put them in the galleys by force. St. Germain-en-Laye, 16 May. Signed.

Fr., pp. 3. Add.: A Mons. le Cardinal, mon bon fils et pere. Endd.

* This at least seems to be the intended meaning. The words are in the original — "Desiderat pariter quod ubicunque aliquis de Offalya habuerit tributum vocatum Biske rest, in cujus solutione breui vel longo tempore cessatum fuerat sine contradictione, qualibet etiam temporis mutatione contraria de cetero solvatur."

1528.

16 May.
Vesp. F. iii.
57 b.
R. M.

4267. MARGARET QUEEN OF NAVARRE to WOLSEY.

Thinks, from his letter to her, that here will not be unpleasant to him. Commends herself to him as the means of good to Christendom, and the bond of friendship between the two Princes. The sieur De Morette will tell him the news. Madame desires her to inform him that she is in the fourth month of her pregnancy, which she dares not believe herself. Prays to have a son. She and the king of Navarre will leave him to inherit their affection for the King and Wolsey.

Hol., Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons. mon bon frere, Mons. le Legat. Endd.: A domina Regina Navarræ die xvj. Maii.

16 May.
R. O.

4268. MONTMORENCY to WOLSEY.

In answer to the articles declared by Clerk, the King sends Morette, the bearer, and wishes for a speedy answer by him. St. Germain-en-Laye, 16 May. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A M. M. le Cardinal archevesque d'York, legat et chancelier d'Angleterre. Endd.

16 May.
R. O.

4269. CLERK to SYLVESTER [DARIUS].

Has sent a separate safe-conduct for the messenger of lady Margaret. If he does not come, Sylvester is to go without him. He can tell the Emperor that the messenger had arrived at Paris, and he left, expecting him to follow. The Emperor will doubtless gladly listen to what he will say about the new offers. He must first say, for the honor of the Princes, that Wolsey would never have sent him unless lady Margaret had promised to send also; and that he greatly doubts what to do, as her messenger has not come, but that, for the good of peace, he will venture to do what otherwise he would not have dared. With this preface, he can speak, as if from himself and without commission, of a treaty of peace with the Emperor, in Wolsey's name, even if the other person does not come. He will doubtless arrive, however, for Clerk sent his steward with the safe-conduct; if necessary, will go himself to urge him to it. Poissy, 16 May 1528.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.: Copia literarum D. Bathon. ad D. Sylvestrum, die xvj. Maii.

16 May.
R. O.

4270. CLERK to TUKE.

Wrote to Wolsey at length on the 9th and 13th inst.

The news from Naples is not confirmed, but is believed to be true. It is rumored that the city also is taken. Master Sylvester departs today. As he lies in Paris, lady Margaret's messenger seven leagues hence, and Clerk three miles from the Court, it is not wonderful that a long time is consumed in sending to and fro. If they had not used good policy, lady Margaret's man would have gone no further. Poissy, 16 May.

Has told Sylvester not to wait for lady Margaret's servant, as they will not have post horses enough to go together. If the messenger is delayed, Sylvester is to say what Tuke will see in the enclosed copy of a letter to him. Much is committed to his (Clerk's) discretion. Hopes he does nothing amiss. "Master Tuke, for Goddis sake lett us lef thes cerymonyes, specially who shall speke fyrst; which is heer to moche regardyd." Told my Lady that she, being a woman, should, rather than fail, go down on her knees to the Emperor for her children. Thinks she scarcely took it in good part. There would be a great likelihood of peace, if there were a little humility on both sides, specially on that that has most need, but "we be here far from it."

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

1528.

4271. INIGO MENDOZA to SILVESTER DARIUS.Vesp. C. III
272.

Has received his letters. Would have visited Wolsey immediately on the departure of Darius, had it not been for a sickness occasioned by the death of his uncle. Has sent a servant to appoint an audience with the Legate. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "Ab oratore Casaria, D. Silvestro Dario."

16 May

4272. JOHN KING OF HUNGARY to HENRY VIII.Vesp. F. III
86 b.
B. M.

Desires credence for his ambassador, Johannes Statilius, bishop elect of Transilvania. Tharnow, 16 May 1528, regnorum secundo. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 May.

4273. JOHN KING OF HUNGARY to WOLSEY.Vesp. F. I. 77
B. M.

To the same effect. Same date. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 May.

4274. RICHARD FISHER.Titus, B. I. 64
B. M.

Sign manual to the prior of Tunbridge, in behalf of Richard Fisher, gentleman usher of the Chamber, who had been expelled from the parsonage of Leigh (Kent), of which he held a lease, in favor of one Cooke. Greenwich, 16 May. Countersigned: "John Lincoln—Ric. Vuoleman."

P. 1. Add.

16 May.

4275. WM. BRABAZON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has received his letter. Maister Dean (Higdon) is here. He had previously been at Sandwall, Canwall, Ragdale and Salford, and has finished at Denton Bassett, where they held a court. The vicarage is set to the vicar for 7*l.*, and he to have no further promotion. He has also been at Bysbroke, Foxton, Cold Assheby and Westhadden, and intends to stop here six days. He has let the manor of Daventry with the tithes, and Throper Closys, to Travys of Oxford, for 20*l.* more than it was let at before. He is trying to let all the parsonages and farms at a higher rent than before. Will attend on him. Brabazon's horse has been ill. Daventry, 16 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 May.

4276. SIR HENRY GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since coming to Kent, has spoken to many who contributed to the loan, but they never mention it. They strongly disapprove of the behavior of those who came to my lord of Canterbury. Trusts, therefore, the demands of the loan are at a point for this time. The clothiers complain that they have so little sale that they will not be able to keep as many men as formerly, and if they are compelled to abandon their trade great numbers will be left idle. However, with his brother Sir Edward, his brother Wotton, and his brother George, he has so handled them that they shall not lack occupation till harvest time. Will keep a vigilant eye on them, and hopes no evil demeanor will happen in these parts.

Hopes Wolsey will find some remedy, for they will not be able to exercise their occupation long. Asks that his brother Wotton may be again put in the commission of the peace, and "corum." As he is now made knight, he has no authority to sit by this commission, which is a great lack here. Asks him to put in John Cromer, who is a wise man, and always ready to accomplish the King's and Wolsey's commands. Leeds, 17 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

1528.

17 May. 4277. T. DUKE OF NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

By Wolsey's procurement Mr. Butts has come to him from the King, without whose aid he thinks he should not have recovered. Requests that the bearer may have the King's letters to the Pope, that the prior of Connall may have the see of Kildare in commendam. It is not worth more than 100 marks a year, and the man is a native of that country who has deserved his promotion for his true service to the King. Requests him to hear Cowley, the bearer, on the subject, and sends a letter in the Prior's favor from the chancellor of Ireland. Hears that the archbishop of Cashel is come to get a grant from the King, that no coyne or livery be put within his diocese. Warns Wolsey that this would greatly diminish the strength of the earl of Ossory, who is the Archbishop's father. Stoke, 17 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 May. 4278. WM. BRABAZON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Mr. Dean is at Daventry, and will stay there till Tuesday next, when he will prepare to go to Ravenston, Tykford and Bradwell. He has let the parsonage and manor of Daventry to Travers of Oxford, the parsonage of Scareton to one Glyn, and that of Norton to Smyth of Daventry, the bailiff. His policy is to enhance the rents of parsonages and farms. Bakedale parsonage will be settled at Michaelmas in London. Parker, the treasurer of Lincoln, will very likely have the parsonage of Scalford, but must pay 10*l.* this year, and more next, instead of 7*l.* 3*s.* 4*d., the former rent. Wanted it for himself, as it was necessary to him, and is only two miles from where he was born; but the Treasurer is very anxious for it, and the man who pays the most rent will have it. Cromwell had better write next to Newport Panel, beside Tykford. The Dean will be there on Thursday. He is a worshipful, wise man, but somewhat too hard in the preferment of the college and rearing rents. Will be with Cromwell by Whit-Sunday. Daventry, Sunday, 18 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Cromwell.

18 May. 4279. JOHN BURGH, ABBOT OF PETERBOROUGH, to HENNEGE.

R. O.

Has received his letters by Mr. Vyllers, desiring him to send my Lord's grace 1,000 marks. Is so sore charged he cannot do it. Has paid 100*l.* to his old master, and at the beginning of this term sent by Mr. Montague to my Lord, "for ower old fader dett," 100*l.* Has also paid the King 100*l.* for free election and restitution of temporalities, and nearly 140*l.* for the subsidy due last Candlemas. Sends 100*l.* to my Lord by the bearer, Mr. Vyllers. Had only 1,000*l.* of his old master, and Dan Francis spent 100*l.* on our election when I was at London. By my Lord's command, must make a doctor at Midsummer, which will cost him over 20*l.*, and a bachelor of divinity, which will cost 10*l.* Must pay his old master's pension, and keep Strubryche fair, which will cost 200 marks. The "livelode" of the house was never so far in decay, and he is fain to borrow. Peterborough, 18 May.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

19 May. 4280. TREATY.

R. O.

Commission to Cuthbert bishop of London, and Brian Tuke, to conclude a truce with Margaret of Savoy, in conjunction with the ambassadors of France. Greenwich, 19 May 1528.

French. Great Seal attached.

* This must be an error. Sunday, 17th May, was doubtless intended.

1528.

19 May.

R. O.

4281. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

Thanks him for his advice by Dr. Cleybruke to follow the King's pleasure about the collation of a benefice and prebend in his patronage. Asks him to explain to the King that it was not in his hands, but had "passed by vowson" under his writing, as he wrote to the King. If he had known again that the King wished to have it, would have accomplished his pleasure. Has accordingly sent the collations of both by Dr. Clahroke. Asks Wolsey to intercede with the King to take him again into his old favor, or he will not long continue in this life, for he cannot bear the least jot of his displeasure. Would have come in person if he were able to go or ride. "At my house, Holborn," 19 May.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate his grace. Endd.

19 May.

4282. HUMPHREY MONMOUTH.

Styke's Mem.
i. Pt. ii. No. 89.

Petition of Humphrey Monmouth, draper, of London, to Wolsey and the Council, 19 May 20 Hen. VIII.

On May 14th was sent for to Sir John Dauncie's, by Sir Thomas Moore and Sir Wm. Kingston, who asked him what letters and books he had lately received from beyond sea. Denied that he had received any. They then asked him what exhibition he gave to any one beyond sea. Answered that he had given none for three years. They asked if he was acquainted with many persons, none of whom he knew. Said that four years ago he gave [an exhibition] to a priest, called Sir William Tyndal alias Hotchens. Kingston and More then took him to his house, which they searched, and examined all the letters and books, but found nothing which they regarded. Returned to Sir John Dauncy, and was delivered to Sir Edmond Walsingham, lieutenant of the Tower.

Four years and a half ago, heard Tyndal preach two or three sermons at St. Dunstan's in the West. Chanced to meet him, and was told by him that he had no living, but hoped to get into the bishop of London's service; for which reason Monmouth "had the better fantasy to him." Afterward he came and asked for help, as the Bishop wanted no more chaplains. Took him into his house for half a year, where he lived like a good priest. He studied most of the day and night, ate only sodden meat, drank small single beer, and never wore linen. Promised him 10*l.* to pray for the souls of his father and mother, and paid it to him at Hamburgh. A year after, sent him, by Hans Collenbeke, of the Stuyard, 10*l.* more, which he had got from other men, and left with Monmouth.

Has never sent him money since, nor ever will. Has given more exhibitions to scholars. Dr. Royston, the bishop of London's chaplain, has cost him 40*l.* or 50*l.*; and Dr. Woodlall, provincial of the Augustin Friars, as much or more. Has also given money to Dr. Watson, the King's chaplain, and to scholars, priests and friars, at his request. Is he to be blamed if any other of these turn as this priest has done?

Tyndal sent him an English book, called Enchiridion, which he sent to the abbess of Denny at her request. That house has cost him more than 50*l.* Had another copy of the same book, which a friar of Greenwich asked for. Thinks the bishop of Rochester has it. Had also the Paternoster in English, but how it came to his house he cannot tell; and De Libertate Christiana, given him by Arnold, a young man, who has gone into Spain to Mr. Woodall, who went with Sir John (Richard) Wingfield, the ambassador. Gave these to the confessor of Sion, with a book of the New Testament, which the bishop of London had. Had also a little treatise which Tyndal sent him when he sent for his money. All these books, except the New Testament, have been openly in his house for more than two years, and he has never heard priest, friar or layman find any great fault with them. Has shown them to Dr. Watson, Dr. Stochouse, parson of Lanning, Suffolk, the father confessor of Sion, and to Mr. Martyn, parson of Totingebeke; and they found no fault in them, except that they said that in the De Libertate there were things somewhat hard, except the reader were wise. Would not have showed them to so many men if he had thought they were not good. If learned men had told him they were evil books, would have put them away. If then he had kept them, would have been worthy of punishment.

1528.

HUMPHREY MONMOUTH—cont.

The first time he knew any evil of Tyndal was when the bishop of London preached at St. Paul's Cross, and said that he had translated the New Testament naughtily. Shortly after, burnt all Tyndal's letters, treatises and sermons, and copies of books written by his servant. Burnt them more "for fear of the translator" than for any ill he knew in them.

Has utterly lost his name and credit by this imprisonment. Buys cloths in Suffolk, paying for them weekly; and if the clothiers fail of their money, they cannot set the poor folks to work. Other merchants would not buy them.

Usually sells 400 or 500 cloths every year to foreigners, which bring more customs to the King than if he exported five times the number.

Usually sells most between Christmas and Whitsuntide, but he has only sold 22 since Christmas, and no one asks for them. Will be utterly undone if he remains in prison.

If he had broken most of the Ten Commandments, [would be forgiven,] as he had pardons a pœna and a culpa granted him by the Pope at Rome, when on his way to Jerusalem, and he received a similar pardon from Wolsey, when his Grace was last at St. Paul's.

Asks for forgiveness.

20 May. 4283. LORD BUTLER to [INGE], CHANCELLOR [OF IRELAND].

R. O.
St. P. II. 130. Two days after he wrote of the lord Deputy's (Vice-Deputy's) misfortune, in whose company he was, he passed through O'Konour's country with his safe-conduct, and was allowed to speak to the Deputy at O'Konour's house, where he is closely kept, but only openly in Irish, so that their conversation might be understood. Treated with O'Konour for the security of the King's subjects, seeing that he had a sufficient gage for any rightful demand. He answered that he would be at peace, if he had his wages, the Deputy's ransom, and the bond of the King's subjects not to be revenged. Durst not reply, being in his power; but broke his mind to Master Whyt, the only person there whom he could trust. Asked Cayere, O'Konour's second brother, who is next to him, to accompany him to see him safe out of the country; and then persuaded him to come on to the earl of Ossory, who has brought him to that point, that they trust he will serve the King if his brother will not conform to reason. He desires Inge and Ossory to be bound to intercede for him with the King, and not to allow Kildare to be revenged on him for taking the King's part. Many wise men think that O'Konour was abetted by Kildare, and expect much more mischief if Inge does not take substantial order. Advises him to beware whom he trusts. Wishes no one to see this letter, except the Privy Council, unless he sends it to England. Caphydyn, 20 May.

His father has been at Rosse for a week, waiting for Inge's answer about Norfolk's lands, which he has to farm, and now the time is passed, and he can get no tenants for a twelvemonth. He desires Inge to send him an answer speedily.

Hol. Add.: To the Lord Chancellor. Endd.

1528.

21 May.
R.O.

84, P. n. 132.

4284. PIERUS EARL OF OSSORY to [INGE] CHANCELLOR [OF IRELAND].

Has received his letters of the 13th, and is sorry for the misadventure of the lord Deputy (Vice-Deputy). On hearing of it, sent for O'Keroll, O'More, Mac Gylpatrik and O'Menghere, and treated with them for delivery of the lord Deputy and the withdrawal of their aid from O'Konour, if he refuse. Had great difficulty in preventing O'Keroll and O'More from taking open part with O'Konour, as he and the earl of Kildare's servants have made them large offers. Has induced them to propose a parley between Ossory and O'Konour this day week; and if the latter will not be content with reason, they will take Ossory's part, and defend the King's subjects against O'Konour. Has promised to give O'Keroll the value of 40*l.*, beside what the Deputy or King will give him. Can ill spare this sum, considering his charges in England, and the slow receipt from Kildare's officers. Is also bound to reward O'More, and to defend him against the earl of Kildare in his right; if he has no right to the land which he believes Kildare keeps without good title, to induce Kildare to give him right; and, if he will not, to take O'More's part. Has forgiven M'Gylpatrike injuries and wrongs to the value of 400 marks.

Has made no agreement with the baron of Douboyn, as he has written to Inge, and does not intend it. Asks for advice. 21 May.

Asks for the commission about the clipped money, of which his son James spoke. The signature is not Ossory's own.

Add. Endd.

22 May.

Galba, B. 2.
131^r.
B. M.4285. MARGARET OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

Thanks him for the pains he has taken for a peace, and for his proposal for an abstinence of war. Complains that the truce is coming to nothing, in consequence of the new articles daily proposed by the French; which he might easily dispose of otherwise, as the king of France has perfect confidence in him. These proposals are greatly to the disadvantage of the Emperor, and she cannot accept them without ruining herself. Begs him to reject these impertinent demands, or, at least, not to comprehend Messire Charles de Gheldres, and to make other corrections which her commissioners will explain. Malines, 22 May '28.

Hel., Fr., p. 1. Add.

22 May.

Galba, B. 12.
130.
B. M.4286. JOHN HACKET to BRIAN TUKE.

Wrote last on the 8th by Thos. Leigh, and before that on April xx . . . Wrote another letter by Lassaux, who arrived here the 19th inst., about 5 p.m., and presented the letters and articles which he had brought to my Lady.

De Barrys has sent a post in haste, with a new article, not previously mentioned, but which has been more pondered than any of the first. Fears Lassaux will not bring as good an answer when he next comes. If he brings a better answer, fears it will be dissimulation. The Diet of the States was finished on the 20th. It was concluded to resist the duke of Gueldres. Brabant consents to pay the Emperor 5,200 footmen and 1,200 horse; Holland and Seland, 5,000 foot and 400 horse. Holland gives, besides, 12,000 gulden for the expenses of the Emperor's artillery. My lord of B . . . will be chief captain toward Gelderland, and it is said that he and the governor of Friesland have 16,000 foot and 2,000 horse.

The states of Flanders have made musters of 40,000 foot. In all quarters they know at the sounding of the clock when to meet, and lack but 4,000 or 5,000 Almayns, whom they can have at 20 days' warning. The States intended to appoint as many ships as would carry 5,000 or 6,000 men, but now, thinking that there will be no war with England, they consider 16 or 20 ships enough. If there were war with England, there are 10,000 mariners who would be glad to rig out ships at their own cost.

1528.

JOHN HACKET to BRIAN TUKE—cont.

Is daily soliciting the relaxation of English ships that "the unthrifty braggarts of war" daily take between here and England, saying that they are Frenchmen's goods. However, all English ships, when known, are set at liberty. Has told my Lady that this is not sufficient, while English subjects are taken both within and without the King's jurisdiction, seeing that we have no war with them. She said she was sorry for it, and has caused a "mandment" to be published in the Emperor's name that his subjects shall not trouble the English by sea or land. Thinks Wolsey might write to my Lady in favor of the English. Machlyng, 22 May 1528.

Has received no letter from Tuke since 16 April. John de Lassoix is meetly well disposed to do well. Cannot reproach him for being, like a true servant, more favorable to his master than to any other.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

22 May.

4287. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received his letter yesterday, Ascension Day, about 4 p.m. Has accordingly attached John Andrew, of Cranbrooke, clothier, and sends him by his servants. Has advised him to tell Wolsey the whole truth. Hallden, 22 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

23 May.

4288. WOLSEY to [CARD. CAMPEGGIO].

Vit. B. x. 95.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 163.

Both the King and himself were much pleased at the Pope choosing him as Legate. While eagerly expecting him, received letters from Gregory Casale and Gardiner, saying that his journey was delayed by the gout, by his duties as legate at Rome, and by the difficulty of procuring horses and servants. Writes to press him to make haste. Gardiner will supply him with money. Advises him to come with a few attendants, and let the others follow. He will find horses, mules, money, and all he wants, ready for him in France. Will cross the sea to conduct him to England. Hopes that now his gout is not bad enough to prevent his journey. The Pope will, without delay, appoint a vice-legate at Rome. Would not urge haste, but that both the King and Council think it necessary for him to be Wolsey's colleague. Promises him ample recompence. Fears the King may think that the Pope wishes to gratify the Emperor by offending him, and that what has been reported of Campeggio is true. If he values the King's favor, if he is grateful for benefits, if he thinks Wolsey can ever be of service to him, if he wishes the authority of the Church to be undiminished, he must start on his journey at once, for it cannot be delayed longer without irreparable harm.

Lat., draft by Vannes, pp. 4. Endd.: Misere fuerunt hæc literæ die 23 Maii per certum . . . a Domino um, etc.

23 May.

4289. WOLSEY to SIR G. CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 68.

Has already given him copious instructions. Is greatly distressed at his letter of 4 May, at hearing of the delay in the coming of Campeggio, and at not finding his information of the goodwill of the Pope and the Cardinals confirmed by the result. Either you do not write the truth, or we and you are equally deceived; for I cannot but believe that if you had used ordinary diligence, this matter would have been expedited long ago. Urges him to exertion. If Campeggio is ill, ask for the bishop of Ancona, or any other one who is fit. Is confident that Campeggio will anxiously serve the King, for he knows what reward is awaiting him. Desires he will hasten his coming, and expedite the commission in the form prescribed, as if it were as his own salvation. If Casale and the others do not succeed, the King will not believe that his cause is faithfully pressed, or that Casale and the others possess any influence with the Pope. London, 23 May 1528. Signed.

1528.

Lat., in Vannes' hand. Add. Endd.

VII. B. x. 94.
B. M.

2. Draft in Vannes' hand.
Pp. 2.

4290. [FOXE to GARDINER.]

Hart. MS. 419,
f. 110 b.
B. M.
Pocock, i. 156.

His packet of letters, dated the 4th, was brought to Take on the 19th, and distributed by him. His account of "the great difficulties pretended, and contrived delays, and thereunto great uncertainties, both of my lord Cardinal Campeggio's favor and inclination to the furtherance of the King's purpose, and also of his coming hither," is taken so displeasingly that the hope before entertained of a speedy expedition of the cause is now almost extinguished. Wolsey suspects the Pope defers Campeggio's coming until he sees which army is victorious. Wrote by Barlowe how well the Pope's gratitude and Gardiner's labor were taken by the King and Wolsey. These last letters seem to make them more inclined to desert the Pope, as being ungrateful and unworthy. To Gardiner's request, in the Pope's behalf, to find means to prevent the descent of the Almayns, they answer openly, "Shall we impoverish ourselves and our subjects, and fight with our friends, for his sake, who, neither considering our private honor nor conscience, nor the weal of the realm, nor yet our manifold benefits to him, when asked only for spiritual grace and favour, which he is bound to give even to an enemy, by craft and with the viage of amity caused his learned men to pretend ignorance and doubt of the justness of the cause; refused the commission decretal, or anything else that might conduce to its furtherance, and after marvellous importunity would only grant such a commission as he might revoke at pleasure, leaving such appellations and other delays that he seemed only to intend to cast us into the briars and shackles of law, and to keep us always under his yoke? Now he refuses to allow Campeggio to execute the commission he has given him, and delays his coming by imagined excuses." Interprets this talk as showing high displeasure, which nothing will take away but a manifest declaration without tergiversation or colour. Fears they impute tacitly some blame to Gardiner for want of diligence in soliciting the Pope. The suits of his friends for his quick return are useless. They say that he must accompany the Legate until he is past the mountains, and, if he never comes, Gardiner is never to return.

Urges him to use all his powers to persuade the Pope to grant the commission decretal, and to hasten the coming of Campeggio, or, in default of him, to entrust the cause to the card. of Ancona. "Denique per sacra pinque omnia te obtestor ut quacumque ratione has suspicionis et diffidentie nebulas istorum animis tuo sole sollicitaque prudentia discutias, que nostram interim omnem offuscant obtenebrantque luttum, omnemque quam de exanclatis laboribus nostris laudem gloriamque ceu pramii vice expectaveramus, prorsus adimunt. Sic ut amplissime a meo reditu optarim etiam atque etiam rursum" —

Copy, imperfect, pp. 3. From Gardiner's letter book.

23 May.
R. O.

4291. THOMAS DONTYNOTON to WOLSEY.

Dr. Melton,† chancellor of the church of York, is taken with a palsy, and not likely to live.

† Died in 1528, according to Le Neve.

1528.

THOS. DOWINGTON to WOLSEY—cont.

Asks him to confer his parsonage of Clanworthe, of 10*l.* or 20 mks., on Mr. Tetworthe, "doctor of Sevyll," who is substantially learned and approved by the Dean and Wolsey's other officers, and does diligent service to your Grace and my master. "From your Grace's church of York," 23 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c. my lord Legate, &c. Endd.

24 May. 4292. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
99.

Has little to add to what he wrote on the 19th, except what Morette will relate, who has met with a good reception. If you had told me at first, as Morette promised, what you proposed to do for the contribution, there would have been no need of so many excuses, but they would have mended the bargain. Still, as things are, you will not find them so bad. You had better write to Wolsey, thanking him for his great services in preserving a good understanding with his master, and begging him not to take ill any hasty expression, either in former letters, or in the conversations held with the bishop of Bath; and that Francis and Madame have full confidence in him. I am sure this would do good. He says he has been informed by the bishop of Bath that Francis told him he would allow Silvester to go, and, if he found the Emperor inclined to peace, would take counsel with England upon any difficulty that might occur. This was quite to his mind, all the more as he acknowledges it is not so pressing a matter to determine of the extremity of the said articles as it was when the question being of making war in Flanders an immediate resolution was necessary. He intended that Morette especially should mention this matter to Francis; but he did it in general terms, without limiting himself by a promise, which he might be called upon afterwards to fulfil. I believe firmly what he wished Francis to be told was with a view to justify the King his brother, that he knows well the said King desires nothing but peace and quietness, and wishes Francis had the same will. He desired us to show the King the decipher of the Emperor's letters to the lady Margaret, and to read to him very distinctly the article which speaks of the divorce, and of the mutiny of the people; which we have not failed to do. The King frowned not a little at it, and abused the Emperor somewhat (et qu'il ayt ung peu parl      l'Empeur).

The Legate was very sorry that you had said in France that in England they could not keep their people in control; and as by my letters it looked as if this information came from me, I have had some little strokes of the whip for it; but I requested that my lord of Bath should be beaten as well as myself, for he said it quite openly. However, all that is passed. In all our conversation he continually comes back to this, that it is wrong for us to ground ourselves upon the matter of this salt, and that they were very bad merchants to buy a little salt so dear, which has only cost them the contribution of the past year. He declares he made this proposal to the Council of the King his master, that he might be able to conduct matters to your advantage and the Emperor's injury; and he swears he would sooner have lost 10,000 crowns than that the King his master should be informed of these terms, and still less of the others, viz., that if they do not keep their promise you will not keep the treaty of peace.

Has had many alarms during the last fifteen days, of which he writes little. Must now give a word of warning. Whatever you get from them, it would be well to treat as a kindness, and not as a right. This will best advance your aims;—letting bygones be bygones. We do not yet send the resolution about the contribution. We are discussing (nous sommes sus) the terms of 74,000 livres a month for five months, beginning in June in case the truce be published immediately. I think we shall have great difficulty in getting further. Until Morette comes, do not make much talk about it, so that there may remain something for him to say, and that you may be more sure of matters. London, 24 May.

1528.

French.

24 May. 4293. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 69.

Since Morette's departure nothing has occurred, except confirmation of the conflict by sea near Naples, in a letter from Lautrec. St. Pel, who was to have been captain-general of the army in Lombardy, had not the Venetians opposed it, was to be despatched this day or tomorrow. The duke of Urbino is to be in equal authority with him. It is said that Pavia has been surrendered to the Imperialists by the treason of a Venetian captain. The duke of Ferrara's son has come to marry Madame Renée. He was met by the Great Master and others. The King received him in his chamber; my Lady on her bed, for she is much troubled by the gout. Poissy, 24 May. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

24 May. 4294. CLERK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Master Dean (Wynter) has been with him today, intending to have seen the Great Master, who, however, was too much occupied, and does not seem over well pleased with the difficulties lately made by us in our affairs. Though it is good he should see him sometimes, will advise him not to go till the cloud be past. "Surely your Grace will like Master Dean very well now." He has grown much in body and mind, and gives himself well to learning. He is three fingers taller than when Wolsey saw him last, "and beginneth to grow in breadth to a very good and a comely man's stature and fashion. He departeth this day or tomorrow again to Paris. This little recreation and taking of the air shall do him much good." Poissy, 24 May.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To my lord Legate's good Grace." Endd.

24 May. 4295. PETLEY and CRUMWELL.

R. O.

Lease by William Petley, of Halsted, Kent, to Thomas Crumwell, of London, of the manor of Fylstow and other land called Andrewes, in the parish of Shoreham, Kent. Dated 24 May 20 Hen. VIII.

Corrected draft, pp. 4.

26 May. 4296. SIR HENRY GUILDFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Last Sunday night his brother Sir Edward wrote to Wolsey of the evil purpose of certain ill disposed people, of whom he has taken some. He sent three of them that night to Sir Henry, to be committed to Maidstone gaol. Examined them on the following Monday. Forwards the examination; of which he has also sent a copy to Sir Edward that he may apprehend those they have accused. Thinks they would communicate more if they were examined before Wolsey. The beginner of this business remains still with his brother. Has delivered these three to the sheriff. Hopes little pity will be shown them, for an example to the shire. The neighbourhood is in good quiet. Leeds Castle, 26 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

26 May. 4297. ST. PETER'S, IPSWICH.

P. 8.

Ratification of a bull of Clement VII., dated the day before the ides of May (14th) 1528, empowering Thos. cardinal of York to suppress the priory of St. Peter, Ipswich; to transfer the canons to other places; to convert the priory into a college, and to unite thereto the parish churches of St. Peter, St. Nicholas, St. Clement, St. Mary Reoye, in Ipswich, and of Weersted 1528.

ST. PETER'S, IPSWICH—cont.
and Cretinghame, Norw. dioc. Greenwich, 23 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del.
Westm., 26 May.
Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 35.

R. O. 2. Original patent of the above.
Great seal attached. Endd.

27 May. 4298. ANGUS to SIR CHR. DACRE.

R. O. For the repressing of trespassers on the borders, the King "has thoct St. P. iv. 493. maist gaaud" * that an army be raised by the 22 June next, and proposes to pass in his own person, as he now writes to his uncle. He advises Dacre and the other officers on the English borders to assemble the King's subjects by that day "to se, cerse and be sickir" that no such malefactors, nor their wives, children nor goods, be received in England. Writes to Sir Christopher, knowing that my lord his nephew is absent at court. Edinburgh, 27 May 1528. Signed.

Add.: Sir Christopher Dacre, wardane of the West Marchis under his nephew. Endd.

28 May. 4299. SIR WM. FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O. Has declared what Wolsey commanded him to the King, who liked it right well, and would add nothing to it, except that he thought Wolsey should send for the mayor and sheriffs of London, and other substantial men, and warn them to have a vigilant eye to the premises, considering that the message was sent to London, and answer made to it thence. He commends Wolsey's discreet instructions to the solicitor for the examination of the offenders, especially in that point which he thinks the chiefest to be regarded.

He has ordered Fitzwilliam to see his guard and his ship ordered as Wolsey devised. After leaving Wolsey, Fitzwilliam sent one of his servants to tell the Secretary the King required him at Court with all the clerks of the signet. As Fitzwilliam had to wait the writing of the minute of the letter, he arrived before him; and the King, knowing nothing of Fitzwilliam's message, and having already signed and sent to Wolsey the letters Wolsey had sent by Hennage, told him to return to London. Found, therefore, neither the secretary, nor any of the clerks of the signet, except old Henry Conwey.

As the letters are of importance, has set Conwey, the clerks of the Green-cloth and the kitchen, and others, to work at them all night, and trusts most of them will be finished tomorrow. Finds some difficulty in getting the King to sign them all, but will take care that he signs those to the lords and most substantial knights. "The rest may pass well enough by the print."
Greenwich, Wednesday night. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.: "A D'no Fit-w'llmo, die 28 Maii."

29 May. 4300. LORD ROCHEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O. Coming this morning from Tunbridge, where he has been for this week to put those parts in good order, received the King's letters concerning the disposition of some in the shire towards an insurrection, and that the judges will sit at Rochester on Thursday in Whitsun week to examine the matter. Will keep an eye to the quietness of the country, and have his servants and friends ready to repress disturbances and assist the judges at

* i. e. most fitting. Not "gavaud," as in State Papers.

1528.

Rochester, as the King wishes. Has diligently inquired, and finds the country as quiet as can be desired. Has put those parts of Kent, and the part of Sussex which he rules, in readiness to execute the King's orders; as his brother the bearer, sheriff of Sussex,* will show. Hever, Friday before Whitsunday.

Hal., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.: My lord of Rocheford the last of May.

29 May.

R. O.

4301. SIR HENRY GUILDFORD to WOLSEY.

His brother Sir Edward, and the gentlemen commissioned by Wolsey to be at Leeds this Friday afternoon, are now here. Since his brother wrote to Wolsey, he thinks no more persons are guilty. On Wednesday night he apprehended all that can be suspected, except three, who have escaped; so he thinks the band is broken. His brother thinks the sessions of Oyer and Terminer might have been appointed at Cranbrook, instead of Rochester. Leeds Castle, 29 May. Signed.

P. L. Add. Endd.

30 May.

R. O.

4302. ANP. OF DUBLIN and PATRICK BERMINGHAM to NORFOLK.

The messenger has been prevented by contrary winds from crossing till today. Meanwhile have received the enclosed, which we send that you may see "what conjectures be had, the proof whereof resteth much in Chayr Ro O'Chonor, which your Grace gave wages unto in Thomas Bathe's house of Drogheda." He is now likely to be at variance with his brother O'Chonor, and hopes to occupy his room. If any such thing be done as appears in the letters, those who advised it should be punished. Believe it must have been without their master's consent. Things will never be well unless the King provide for good order to be taken between these two Earls if they are both to remain here; for their variance has brought the land into great danger. Jas. Gilas, now bishop of Kilalo in O'Breen's country, came lately from his diocese, "showing us that O'Breen, called Chonor, son to the last O'Breen, having to wife the earl of Decimon's sister, came lately over the water of Synon (Shannon?) to confeder and knit the said Earl and his kinsmen together with divers other Irishmen of that coast, and, as he reporteth, Cormach Og; and, moreover, told us that the said O'Breen would have been on the earl of Ossery for the sought of his brother before this time, were not that he thought it should hurt the earl of Kildare. We think O'Nele much like-minded." Still we fear the land will be ruined unless the Earl come home. Have spoken with Thos. Fitzmorice, "which abideth upon your land, by the setting of the earl of Kildare." He is quite willing to depart from it, if Sir Walter Delahide, the Earl's general receiver and surveyor, will take that discharge; which Jas. Fitzgerald thinks he will not do without orders. Recommend Chr. Delahide for the second judgeship of the Common Pleas here, now vacant. Dublin, 30 May.

P.S.—Have just received the enclosed letter from Sir Walter Delahide.

Signed: H. Dublin.—P. B. Justice.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

31 May.

Thinner,
p. 261.

4303. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Seconds the letters of the king of Scotland in behalf of Alexander Douglas, promoted to Moray on the death of Robert, the last bishop. Greenwich, 31 May 1528.

Lat.

* John Sakvyle was sheriff of Surrey and Sussex in 1527-8.

1528.

31 May. 4304. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Theiner,
p. 361.

Thinks it almost an insult that the Pope should recommend to him the Order of St. John, as he has always been zealous in its behalf, and will not fail to assist in restoring it to its ancient splendour. Has talked on the subject with the Great Master, as the Pope will learn from the bearer. Greenwich, 31 May 1528.

Lat.

31 May. 4305. SIR WILL. PARRE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

My lord of Richmond and all his train are in good health, but six persons have died lately in the lordship of Pomfret, and many young children are sick of the pokkes. The Council have therefore determined to remove him to Ledeston, three miles hence. Those that died were first attacked with a great cold, next with a fervent heat and sweating, when they became delirious. Urges Wolsey to send down a physician, for there is none in all these parts. Pountefrete Castle, 31 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate. Endd.

31 May. 4306. SIR HENRY GUILDFORD and EDWARD WOTTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since the departure of the King's solicitor, have examined the commission of Oyer and Terminer, which they now send to be amended, as there are nine persons nominated, and only eight authorized. Beg that it be returned with all speed to Rochester, where they mean to be one day before the judges come. Leeds Castle, 31 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. : "From Maister Gylford and Maister Hutton,* the last day of May."

31 May. 4307. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

R. O.

1. Bull of Clement (VII.) to cardinal Wolsey, for the suppression of the Rym.xiv. 243. Benedictine monastery of Pré (de Prato), Linc. dioc., on the ground that the nuns do not keep good discipline, and the union of it and the parish church of Teneby to the monastery of St. Alban's, now held by Wolsey. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum, mutilated.

R. O. 2. Bull of Clement VII. to cardinal Wolsey. Faculty for redeeming the Rym.xiv. 244. first-fruits of the diocese of Norwich. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum.

R. O. 3. Bull for transferring Snape and Dodenesch from Wolsey's college in Rym.xiv. 246. Oxford to his college at Ipswich. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum.

R. O. 4. Bull for transferring Snape, Dodenesch, Wykys, Horkesley, and Typtre, Rym.xiv. 247. to Wolsey's college at Ipswich. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum.

R. O. 5. Bull for alienating the moveable goods of the monastery of St. Alban's, Rym.xiv. 249. held by Wolsey in commendam. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum.

R. O. 6. Bull for uniting the prebend of Wetwange, York, to Wolsey's college Rym.xiv. 250. at Oxford. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.

Lat., vellum.

1528.

R. O. 7. Bull for Cardinal's college in Oxford to retain the revenues from the Rym.xiv.251. farms, &c. of the suppressed monasteries, obtained before application for the Papal letters. Orvieto, 31 May 1528.
Lat., vellum.

R. O. 8. Bull of exemption for Cardinal's college, Oxford. Orvieto, 31 May Rym.xiv.252. 1528.
*Lat., vellum. Two originals, one of which has lost the seal. Endd.
by the scribe: "Registrata in Cam^a Ap^lica de mandato Car. S. Quatuor.
B. Motta."*

Rym.xiv.257. 9. Bull of exemption for Cardinal's college, Ipswich. Orvieto, 31 May
R. O. 1528.
Lat., vellum.

R. O. 10. Inspecimus of the bull of Clement VII. (§ 1.)
Pp. 10, large paper.

R. O. 11. Fragment of an inspecimus.

R. O. 12. Bull confirming the annexation of Snape and Dodnesh, with their appropriations, to Cardinal's college at Ipswich.
Draft, Lat., pp. 12, paper.

R. O. 13. Bull of Clement VII. for exchanges. Orvieto, 1528, prid. kl.
Junii.
Draft, paper roll, Lat.

R. O. 14. Clement VII. to Wolsey.
Copy of § 2.

31 May. 4308. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O. A large roll of confirmations of patents belonging to the same, commencing 3 April 1524, and ending 31 May 1528.
Imperfect, vellum.

4309. THOMAS LUCAS to WOLSEY.

R. O. The lieutenant of the Tower desired Sir Roger Townsend, Wigeston and me to examine three persons of Bury, sent by Sir Rob. Drury without any examination of them by him. Having heard of the matter in the country, Sir Roger and I examined them on Friday before Whitsunday.
I send their confessions, and also those taken by Sir Rob. Drury, who, I find, was commanded by Norfolk to send them up. There is a great discrepancy between them. Desires to be excused for not coming himself on account of the plague in the city.

P.S.—It is said baron Elys is deceased. If so, begs to be had in remembrance therein, or else joined with Sir Thos. Nevill, as Wolsey himself suggested.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

May. 4310. SEDITION in KENT.

R. O. Depositions touching certain seditious proceedings at Gouthurst and Cranbrook.

i. Of [Robert] Banks, cutler of Gouthurst. The "said" Robt. came to his house to learn cutlery about the said Nicholas 1528.

SEDITION IN KENT—cont.

told him that he had spoken to John Bigg, a clothmaker of Gouteherst, to know what the men of London intended to do, seeing they could have no course for their cloths. On Sunday, 10 May, Robert Bailye said to him, "We, with other good fellows, will rise for the Cardinall] [My]lner said unto him the same day, When we have the Cardinal we may no[t] slay him, for if we do the land shall be interdicted; therefore if we take him we will bring him to the sea side, and there will put him in [a] boat, in the which shall be bored four great holes, and the holes shall be stopped with pins, and so the boat and he shall be conveyed, with folks being in another boat, into the sea, and when it is there the pins shall be pulled out, and so sink him." Next Tuesday they went to Nicholas Love's house, and after a secret consultation Robert Banks, Nicholas Love and Robert Mylner went to a place between Gouteherste and Mr. Culpeper's, called Kichingfote, where they were overtaken by John Ungley, where it was proposed to procure as many as they could of their affinity. On Sunday before St. Dunstan's Day, 17 May, one Wrigg, of Cranbrook, fuller, said to Thos. Hyklyn, fiddler, in the churchyard of Gouteherste, that there were to the number of 50 persons in Cranbrook ready to rise, and there would be more. On St. Dunstan's Day they sent William Warre to Cranbrook, where he met with Robert Myln[er], who then spoke to John Freman and Hoge Owin, "a birler of clothes," to be of their company; and they said they would be at Gouteherst next Sunday, and ascertain what number they should have out of Cranbrook to join them. Will. Warre said his uncle, Rob. Warre, clothmaker of Cranebroke, would help them, and that there would be 100 at Frikynden ready to be of their company.

On Ascension Day, 21 May, Nich. Love and 12 others (names given) met at Will. Gastroft's, and proposed to go to Sir Alex. Culpeper's house at Bedgebery, and have his harness, and take him with them by force; then to Sir Edw. Guldeford's and Master Darell's of Scotneye, and do the same. Rob. Mylner told them that Jo. Freman of Cranbrook did say that when Robert of Ridsdale made a proclamation he used a cry which was thus: "Who made this cry? Robert à Rydsdale, Jack Straw and I." In his journey he left the gentlemen and justices of the peace behind him, who beheaded him on his return; but if he had taken the gentlemen with him and beheaded them, he might have ruled all at his will.

John Armstrong, laborer of Gouteherst, said he durst be one of the half hundred to take all the ordnance at the Block-house at Rye.

ii. Of John Ungely, husbandman of Gouteherste. On Tuesday s'ennight, before St. Dunstan's Day, i.e. 12 May, he came to William Gastroft's house in Gouteherste, and there first heard of the purpose of Nicholas Love, who there said to him, "Thou seest we be in much poverty. If I can get company to get corn of the rich men, wilt thou be one of them to help to get it?" To which Ungley said, "Yes, if the company was sufficient." He afterwards overtook Love and others at Kechingfote, when Love wished to send him to Mr. Oliver's, a shoemaker at Cranbrook. On Thursday, 21 May, Ascension Day, deponent, coming out of the church gate at Gouteherste, met Peter Tailour, a smith, and went with him to drink at Gastroft's, where they found eleven others, &c. Signed: Henry Galdeford—John Crowmer.

Pp. 3, badly mutilated and imperfect.

4311. ——— to FRANCIS I.

Cal. D. x. 232.

B. M.

" vous avez este ave a guerre que
Messieurs voz nte Lygue ont fait a l'amp[ereur ?]
. par toute ceste frontiere ledit amp[ereur ?]
. les marchans Francoys et Angloys et a despesche 1528.

deux brigantins, l'ung en Flandres et pour avertir son frere d

"Sire, vous savez de combien vous t Bayonne, qui est aussi mal garnie de [toutes choses necessaires] pour la conservacion d'icelle que ville de fro[ntiere] comme par cy devant vous l'ay fait entend[re] conseil, davantage tous les ramp[arts] fondus et la moytie d'ung pain de mur chasteau neuf par terre. Il est deu aux vous a pleu ordonner pour la garde d'icel[le] Haultbourdin adactz neuf mois et nos ja passer. La plus part des pompes et paignous fain a cause de la grave famine qui est escripts a present bien au long a Mons. l pour vous avertir du tout vostre bon plaisir ser entendu son dire faire donner yey telle pie le requiert de peur que inconveniant n'arrive[.]

"Sire, je prie a nostre Seigneur vous don[ner] bonne vie] et longue. De nostre ville de Bayonne ce"

Mutilated. Add.: Au Roy.

4312. [TAYLER to TUKE]

Calig. E. 1. 43.
B. M.

" s in the schedule of these new offers now [made unto] us by the French king; mention is made that the my lady Margaret (of Navarre) should desire that the cities should [be] first delivered in all these eight ways by us proposed;" which has convinced them that these ways are the proposal of my Lord without th[e Empe]ror's knowledge. The Chancellor is willing that the English propositions be transmitted to Spain, but they will nowise assent to them "if we do [not] bring the money to the full sum of 1,200,000 cr., the iiij. degree newly offered." Could send for Ichyngham well enough, and doubts not he would come, but they put off all that they can till they hear from Lotreke. "For this cause my Lady somewhat, as I imagine, the more sicklier;" and the French king has gone out of the way, 20 leagues from Paris. "They reckon as that the Emperor will deceive them if he might, a[nd] that he may do so if he will as long as have the Dolphyn in his hand, what caution p renunciation so ever he shall make. This thing is imbibitum, that all the reasons and persuasions that be made cannot bring the fear hereof out of th And as touching this reason u that making promises with renun[ciation] devised but that the Emperor will They here be nothing moved wy say what and the Emperor in deed s what a scornful point should we be th be plain with you as I do take it. Th that they have deceived the Emperor all ready leastwise the Emperor reckoneth that they so they say plainly that the Emperor might them after the revocation of the army playde me on, why may I not play the for haste I have not so perfectly expressed th letter unto my Lord's grace, therefore ye may unto him if ye think it expedient. I mislike that the Chancellor is content that all the overtures be sent"

Hol., pp. 2, mutilated.

4313.

GRANTS in MAY 1528.

May.
—
GRANTS.

1. Rob. Grene, one of the King's footmen. Annuity of 6l. 13s. 4d. out of the issues of the lordship of Denbigh. Richmond, 10 April 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westminster, 1 May 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 12.

3. The Provost and College of St. Mary, Eton, near Windsor. Mortmain licence to acquire lands, &c. to the annual value of 40l. Del. Westminster, 3 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 33.

1528.

GRANTS IN MAY 1528—cont.

May.

GRANTS.

4. Thos. the prior, and the exempt Cluniac monastery of SS. Peter and Paul, Mountagu. Licence to appropriate the parish church of the Blessed Virgin, Margaret,* Tyntenhull, Bath and Wells dioc., on condition that a perpetual vicarage of one secular priest be established there, at [the discretion of the ordinary of the place. Del. Westm., 4 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 10.

4. Robert Foster. Pardon for having accidentally shot with an arrow his brother Thomas, at Brikhill Magna, Bucks, in the close of Thomas Paradise. Westm., 4 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 13.

5. Robt. Acton, gentleman usher of the Chamber, and Margerie his wife. Grant, in tail male, of certain land called "Le Wastes," in the manor of Walsal, parcel of the manor of Stafford, late of the duke of Buckingham's lands. Del. Westm., 5 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

5. Walter Devereux, K.G., lord Ferrers and Chertsey. Grant, in tail male, of the English manor of Pentkelly, S. Wales, part of Buckingham's lands, on surrender of patent 24 Nov. 16 Hen. VIII., granting the same to Sir John Rageland. Westm., 5 May.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 18.

5. Elias Hilton, servant of queen Katharine. Grant of the site of a tenement, now decayed, in Gravesend, Kent, between the lower street and the Thames, and a wharf adjoining, which appear by an inquisition before John Joskyn, escheator temp. Hen. VI., to have belonged to Richard Walshe, shipman, who was outlawed at the county court holden at Rochester, 29 Nov. 30 Hen. VI., for high-treason. Del. Westm., 5 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 18.

5. Ric. Croke. To be Nottingham pursuivant-at-arms, attending upon the duke of Richmond and Somerset, vice Wm. Hasyng, who is promoted. Greenwich, 30 April 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 5 May.—P.S.

5. Wm. Hayes of London. Release of all suits for which he was held accountable before 1 Jan. 7 Hen. VIII., as executor of Jo. Hayes of Tiverton, Devon, s. and h. of Jo. Hayes, receiver (temp. Edw. IV., Ric. III., and Hen. VII.) of Salisbury and Spencer lands.—Westm., 5 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 21.

6. William Uvedale. Grant of a messuage and the whole land in Fat Purbeck, Dorset, late of Richard Unwyn alias Onewyn, forfeited to the Crown, and extending between Kyngesdounne and Warhamsway, leased 16 Oct. 6 Ric. II. to Phillip Wallewyn, for 10 years; to hold to the said William, &c. at the annual rent of 2*l.*, on surrender of patent 2 Dec. 10 Hen. VIII., granting him (John Uvedale of London and Richard Philippe of Pole, Dorset, being his bail,) the custody of the same, at the annual rent of 27*s.* 8*d.*, and 8*d.* of increase. Del. Westm., 6 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 14.

6. William Crane, master of the boys of the King's chapel, lately appointed to furnish the King's ships called le Caryke alias le Kateryn Forteleza and le Nicholas Rede, and the King's three galleys called le Rose, le Henry and le Kateryn. Release of the 800*l.* received by him from the King by the hands of Sir John Daunce, to be spent on the furnishing of the said ships, and in wages for the workmen, &c. Del. Westm., 6 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 29.

6. John Hutton, Guisnes pursuivant at arms. To be Blewmaute pursuivant at arms. Richmond, 24 April 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 6 May 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

8. Llewellyn Vaughan ap Morgan ap David Game. To be chancellor and receiver of the lordships of Brechon and Haia, and chancellor and receiver of the lordships of Cantreccelly, Penkelly, and Alexandreston, S. Wales, forfeited by Buckingham, (Hugh Mervyn having held at pleasure the offices of chancellor and receiver of the lordship of Brechon by patent 28 April 14 Hen. VIII.); with fees of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year as chancellor and receiver of Brechon and Haia, and 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a year as chancellor and receiver of Cantreccelly, &c. Del. Westm., 6 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

8. Jo. Davy, groom of the Chamber. Wardship of Hen. Blount, an idiot, s. and h. of Thos. Blount of London, ironmonger. This grant to be cancelled if the lands, &c. (which are situated at Great Marlow, Bucks) exceed the annual value of 5 marks. Richmond, 23 April 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 8 May.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 20.

8. Richard Archer. Livery of lands as s. and h. of John Archer, jun., and grandson and h. of John Archer, sen. Westm., 8 May.—S.B. (which is undated). Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 15.

8. Lucy Morton, widow. Custody of the possessions in Winterborne alias Kyngeston Winterborne, Mynster, Hampreston, Kyngeston, Lacy-Gillingham, Horsyngton, and Milton-upon-(F)lower, Dorset, and Mere, Wilts, lately belonging to John Morton, of St. Andrew's, Milborne, deceased, or any other, to the use of the said John Morton, during the minority of Thomas Morton, s. and h. of the said John. Del. Westm., 8 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 29.

9. Richard Stapull, of Alyngton, Kent. Pardon for the death of Robert Pull, of Lynton, weaver. Del. Westm., 9 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 29.

* St. Katharine on Patent Roll.

1528.

May.

GRANTS.

9. John Lovell. To be surveyor and keeper of the orchard in the manor of Richmond, Surrey, with 2d. a day from two years previous to this date, from which time he has performed the office. Del. Westm., 9 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 10.

11. Thomas Aleyn and John Wyllyams. Reversion, in survivorship, of the office of bailiff of the lordship of Hanley, and keeper of Blakehamore park, now held by Thomas Beaton, by patent 7 Oct. 6 Hen. VIII., granting them to him and John Pate, page of the wardrobe of Hala. Del. Westm., 11 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 20.

11. Methwold, Norfolk. Insuperimus and confirmation of a patent of 4 Hen. VII., granting a market and fair to the inhabitants. Westm., 11 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 2.

11. John Parker, yeoman of the mail ["valet de le n'r male"]. Reversion of the office of bowbearer in the forest of Gawlitres, York, and collector of "le tachment money" there, which offices were granted by patent 1 April 14 Hen. VIII. to George Lawson; with 4d. a day as bowbearer, and 40s. a year as collector. Richmond, 16 April 19 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 11 May 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 20.

11. Anthony Twaytes and Edmund Clerc. Licence to alienate land, &c. in Threak, Yorks., to Sir John Neryll, William Nevill, Thomas Nevill, Marqueduke Nevill, John Dawny, Richard Norton, Christopher Wandesford, and Robert Londa. Westm., 11 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 5.

11. Robert Brown and John Plumsted. Lease of all lands leased for 21 years to John Butts by patent 1 Aug. 18 Hen. VIII., parcel of the manor of Wormegay, Norfolk, and of the lands of the late viscount Beaumont, viz., lands called "le Holmes" and Baddenfennes, late in the tenure of John Lanchborne; others of John Fyncham, others of the priory of Pentney, and of the priores of Blakeburgh; and also lands leased for 21 years to the said John Butts by patent 8 March 9 Hen. VIII.; to hold to the said Robert and John, to the use of the tenants of the lordship of Wormegay, for 21 years from Mich. 1535, or as soon as the premises shall revert to the King by surrender or otherwise; at the same annual rent of 9l. for the parcels contained in the patent 1 Aug. 8 Hen. VIII., and for those mentioned in the patent 8 March 9 Hen. VIII., the annual rent of 53s. 4d., and 53s. 4d. of renewed rent. Westm., 11 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 11.

12. Robert Dolben, jun. Lease of lands late in the tenure of William Dolben, Robert Dolben, John Knowesley, John Walker, John Hurchinshaw (parcel of the park of Sigruit, in the commote of Keymerghit, lordship of Denbigh); also land late in the tenure of Robert Wynnewey, parcel of Llewenny park, in the commote of Isanlet in the said lordship; with reservations, for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 73s. 6d., and 3s. 4d. of increase. Del. Westm., 12 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 12.

12. William Lord Sandys, late treasurer of Calais, the King's chamberlain. Release of all debts and penalties incurred in the said office of treasurer, under statute 3 Edw. IV. Del. Westm., 12 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 22.

12. Edward Lytelton. Wardship of Walter, kinsman and heir of Roger Horton, deceased, who held of the King in chief, as of the honor of Tutbury, parcel of the duchy of Lancaster. Westm., 12 May.—S.B., undated. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 7.

12. Edward Lytelton. Wardship of John, s. and h. of John Coles. Del. Westm., 12 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 2.

12. Griffith Smith of Llanerfan, Glamorgan. Pardon for the murder of Alex. Seyntjohn. Del. Westm., 12 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 26.

14. Roger Ratclyff, gentleman, usher of the Privy Chamber, Philip Wogan, Thomas Westby and Thomas Horsley, clks. Advowson of the canonry and prebend of Shepton-under-Wichwoode, Oxon., being a prebend and canonry in Salisbury cathedral, on the first vacancy. Del. Westm., 14 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 18.

14. John Myllye. Pardon for having killed, in self-defence, Richard Shepard of Leominster, Heref., as appears by the record of Thomas Philipp, coroner. Westm., 14 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 6.

14. Thos. Elyot. Wardship of Erasmus, s. and h. of Reginald Pyme, with custody of the manor of Cannington and a third part of the manor of Exton and Hawkerrege. Del. Westm., 14 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

14. Thos. Alen and Alice Maaston, widow of [William] Maaston. Annuity of 30l. Del. Westm., 14 May.—S.B.

14. Henry Smyth and Thos. Flower. To be clerk and surveyor, in survivorship, of the King's works in England, with the usual fees; on surrender of patent 11 June 1 Hen. VIII., granting the same to Henry Smyth alone. Greenwich, 2 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 14 May.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 18. Vacated on surrender by the said Thomas, the survivor, 1 Oct. 24 Hen. VIII.

15. John Coole, M.A. Presentation to the parish church of Town Meryoneth, with the chapels of Taleyllye, Pennalle, and Llanyhangell, Bangor dioc., vice William Tuffe, deceased. Greenwich, 12 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 12 May.—S.B.

1528.

GRANTS IN MAY 1528—cont.

May.

GRANTS.

15. John Scott. To be third baron of the Exchequer. Westm., 15 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 13.

15. William Fermor. Pardon for accidentally killing James Kyng with a knife in the house of William Straton, at Stapelherst (Kent). Westm., 15 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 19.

16. Jo. Dowfeld or Duffild of London, mercer. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Del. Westm., 16 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

18. Jo. More, saltier, of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield, Greenwich, 6 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 18 May.—P.S.

20. Griffith or Geoff. Yonge, of Kingsclere, Hants, alias of Ellesmore, marches of Wales, and Rob. his son. Pardon for the murder of Th. Batemanson, alias Glover, at Kingsclere. Eltham, 25 March 11 Hen. VIII. *Del. Westm., 20 May 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 36.

20. Thos. Barrows, late of Cristleton, Cheshire. Pardon. Greenwich, 28 April 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 20 May 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

22. Rob. Rauson or Rawlinson, of Henley-upon-Thames, dyer. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 10 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 22 May.—P.S.

22. Rob. Oxynfeld. Warrant to Sir Anthony Ughtred, vice-captain of Berwick, and Geo. Lawson, treasurer, to admit Oxynfeld to the office of gunner in the old retinue to which he has been appointed. Westm., 22 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

22. Miles Forest and Cuthbert Thurbay. To be keeper of Welles Park, adjoining Bernard Castle, in survivorship, which office was granted to Thomas Thurbay, yeoman of the Crown. Westm., 22 May.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 10.

22. Sir Andrew Billesby. Wardship of Andrew, s. and h. of John Aserdby. Del. Westm., 22 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 8.

22. Sir Robert Turwytt, squire of the Body. Custody of all lands and tenements in Fersby, Line, and Adlyngdote, York, late of Thomas Kyddall, during the minority of William Kyddall, his son and heir. Del. Westm., 22 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 37.

28. Humphrey Bowland, gentleman of the Exchequer. Lease of the lordships of Stourton and Kynvere, Staff., now held by Edward lord Dudley by patent 4 June 15 Hen. VIII, to hold to the said Humphrey from Mich. A.D. 1543, on the expiration of the said lease, for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 20*l.*, and 40*d.* of increase. Del. Westm., 28 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 14.

28. Hugh Pole. Lease of land in Peepling and Proyton, co. Guyanes, marches of Calais, now in the tenure of the heirs of lady Maynsys, for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 8*d.* an acre, 33*s.* 4*d.* in all. Del. Westm., 28 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 29.

29. Thos. Billings, of Bachsager, commote of Rodl. [Rhuddlan], co. Flint. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Robert Wingfield. Del. Westm., 29 May 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

4314. JOHN CHEKYNGE to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Would be glad to hear of his health. All here are well, "as the Frenscheman saythe, a cap ay pe." Wants money in part compensation of his pains, which he had not intended to ask till the whole year commenced at Midsummer. Found Erasmus's edition of the works of St. Austin so necessary, that he must have them if he hid his gowns in pledge. Has bought a copy for 5*l.*, to be paid at St. Matthew's Day. Has bought other books, but of no great value. Pembroke Hall, Cambridge.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful, &c., Master Thomas Cromwell, at London. Endd.

1 June.

R. O.

4315. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOISEY.

Has sent on his letter to the provincial of the Black Friars of Langelay. It was delivered to him on 28 May at Warwick, whence he had his woman Agnes Paston. He has lately sent her back, and married her to a servant of his. Dr. Tomeson, of the same religion, will attend with other brethren, to inform Wolsey about him. Incloses the "detections" made by the most honest people of Dunstable. Was first told of this by the Queen, who insisted on his reformation, and said he should not live in a house of which she was foundress. Told her he would show it to the ordinary. It is a pity such a man should be a head of Christ's church. Has admonished him privately, and by letter. As reformation does not ensue, and the party is in his diocese and exempt, will follow the counsel of the Gospel, "Die ecclesie, &c."

* Erroneously printed in vol. III. under date 20 May 15 Hen. VIII.

1528.

Asks him to take such order as is necessary. There is little religion kept at the house, and it is in utter decay. A provincial was never prior before this man, but always some one who was under visitation of his "faders;" but this man has no reformer but Wolsey as legate. Shall be at Lidington next week, and soon after at Peterborough. Wooborn, 1 June.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate.

1 June.

4316. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to THOS. HENNAGE.

R. O.

Requests him to obtain for the bearer, Sir Ric. Bayly, the chantry of the Irons in Lincoln Cathedral, which is now void, and in Wolsey's gift. "He is a poor vicar of my cathedral church. Thus ever I put you to pains. Or tonight or tomorrow ye shall receive a warrant for two bucks in Stowe Park." Wooborn, 1 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To mine especial loving friend Master Thos. Hennage."

1 June.

4317. ERASMUS to HENRY VIII.

Er Ep. p. 1084.

Thanks him for his letter inviting him to England, at a time when he is troubled by various afflictions, labors, and ill health. Was afraid of the length of the journey, perils by robbers, and the annoyance of the sea, but yet sent his servant to England as a preliminary step. Since his departure at Easter time, was so sorely attacked by disease that he thought he should have died. Hears from his servant, who is returned, that bands of soldiers are prowling everywhere, and that the duke of Gueldres threatens war. If he can do anything by his pen to please the King, he will not fail. Basle, 1 June 1528.

Lat.

1 June.

4318. MONASTERY OF ST. ALBAN'S.

R. O.

Appointment by Wolsey, as commendatory of St. Alban's, of Thomas Maidwell of St. Alban's, as collector of the rents of the monastery in the vill and lordships of St. Alban's, Parke, Tytenhangre, Sandrugge, Hurston and Hexton, Herts and Beds. St. Alban's, 1 June 20 Hen. VIII.

Corrected draft, pp. 2. At the foot: "Per me, Thomam Cade super-visorem."

R. O.

2. Grant to John Sayntclere of the office of general keeper of the woods of Brumham-woode, Byrdhight, Levysden, Barnet, Nothchaw-woode, Nodley, Strode, Langeley-burye-woode, Hylle-mede, Westwoode, Garston, and Abbet's-Walden, Herts, and in Sandrugge, Gorhammys, Codicote, Eywoode, Janynges-woode, Fawnten-woode, and Neuburye, with a wood called Twelve-acres and Bramfield-woode, Herts;—with an annual rent of 100s.

Lat., draft, pp. 3, large paper. Endd.

1528.

2 June. 4319. CLERK to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

On receipt of Wolsey's letters of the 23rd, sent immediately a servant to Paris to see what could be done to forward Wolsey's letters to Dr. Stephyna, at the court of Rome. On the 30th, went thither himself about that, and to see the King on other matters. On his arrival found means to send a courier by Peter Spina, who is factor to Ant. Vyvald, and delivers to Clerk his money by exchange. Gave him thirty ducats for the courier's charges, and was assured he should be where the Pope is in eight or nine days. Spoke with the King and my Lady, who each consented to write a letter for him. "They axyd me how that matter ded. I shewyd theym right well, saffyg that the Pope, to full off respectia, delayd the matter more then needyd." The King said he had heard the Pope had sent his nephews to Savona, and was himself coming to Nice, in Savoy; and if he did so, he would not dare do otherwise than the King, his brother, and he, should think expedient. "I assure your Grace they both were very well willing, and my Lady said that rather than fail she would go to Rome herself for the matter." Being informed, however, by Robertet that there would be some delay in the writing of those letters, (which, indeed, he has not yet received), he sent Wolsey's off "the day abovesaid." Poyssy, 2 June.

Hol., p. 1. Endd.

2 June. 4320. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has remained here, by the King's commandment, all the month of May, though it was very desirable for his health that he should consult cunning men in London. Is somewhat better now. Can ride at a soft pace, but not walk, "the fume doth so arise in my head." Has had a sore fit every week, and his digestion is so bad he does not eat in three days as much as he did in one meal. Proposes therefore, to ride to London before next term begins. Kenynghale, 2 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

2 June. 4321. WALLOP AND OTHERS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The Mayor of this town lately received a letter from my Lord Deputy, intimating Wolsey's pleasure that he should commit to ward Chamberlain's servant and Roger's servant, to be kept till Wolsey's pleasure be further known. The Mayor did so, and examined such writings as were found upon them; among which was the enclosed letter, written by John Knolles to Chamberlain, which the Mayor showed us all here in the King's council chamber. Refer the whole matter to Wolsey. Have apprehended Knolles and John Harington, named in the letter. Calais, 2 June. Signed by Sir John Wallop, William Briswode, Sir Robt. Wingfield, Christopher Garneys and Sir W. Husey.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: "A letter from Sir John Husey, Garnisshe, with other, concerning Chamberlain's servant, and Rogers."

2 June. 4322. P. DE VILLERS LYSLE ADAM to Priors WM. WESTON, of England, and JOHN RAWSON, of Ireland.

R. O.

While at Viterbo authorized Docwra, Weston's predecessor, John Balington, Turcopolier, and Albion Pol, bailiff of the Eagle, to make an exchange of the preceptory of Sampford with Wolsey. Appoints Weston in place of Docwra, and adds Rawson to the others. The Priory near London, 2 June 1528. Signed: F. Thomas Bosius, vicecancell. Sealed.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.

1528

2 June. 4323. ELIZABETH DACRE to LORD DACRE.

Cal. B. ii. 17B.
R. M.

Encloses a letter from Angus to her uncle, requiring Dacre's advice what should be done if the king of Scots come down, as Angus expects. If Dacre come not home, he had better ascertain Wolsey's pleasure. Encloses also a letter from Maxwell to her uncle, showing his crafty mind; which the latter not perceiving, came to the place accustomed for redress. On Monday night, the 25th May, he went with Dacre's servants to the Debateable Ground, "where as the Routleges called the Qwyskes was drawn to the shellia with their goods in the head of Terres which is the uttermost part of all the said Debateable Ground, and there missed the persons selves by reason of the great strength of the woods and mosses, and took their goods, that is to say, four-score head ofholt, five-score sheep and forty gate," and returning burnt the houses of Black Joke's sons upon the Mere burn adjoining the side of Liddisdale. On Saturday last the Armstrongs, by the counsel of Wm. Graine and his children, and some of the Irwens of Hodome by that of Maxwell, came to Artreth, and burnt the waste houses of the Grames and some of "the houses of the Storres," to provoke a breach of the peace. Maxwell is in such trouble he dare not appear before his King, but has sent his wife to "meane for him." Nawerd, 2 June. Signed: "Your loneuyngo bedfello, Elizabeth Dacre."

Pp. 2. Add.: "To my lord Dacre, warden of the West Marches." Endd.: "A letter of my lady Dacre's to my lord her husband."

4 June. 4324. SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is anxious to hear of some good expedition of his great causes, "now depending in your Grace's hands," the success of which he desires above all others. Fears they have been delayed by the negligence of those he sent to attend Wolsey. Ewelme, 4 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace.

4 June. 4325. MONTMORENCY to the BISHOP OF BATH.

[Cal. E. i. 11.2]

i. 94.

R. M.

Sends him two packets which he has this morning received by the post. Received one for him yesterday, which he forwarded to the Chancellor. Lautrec writes on the 15th that everything goes on well, and that he is besieging the enemy in Naples, who will be compelled to capitulate on the arrival of the fleet. The King will return in two or three days to Fontainebleau], 4 June. Signed.

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.

4 June. 4326. TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

On examination of the letters and "acrocs" in young Denham's keeping, there was found a letter of John Corbett's, one of Tayler's servants, which is sent to Wolsey with others. My lord of Bath and Tayler examined the writer, and made him "take a pen and paper, and write his mind with his own hand, as far as he knoweth himself infect in Luther's opinions, and by whom he was moved, and what companions or favorites he hath had or hath, adherents to the said Luther's heresies." As he has in his own writings confessed himself of Luther's sect, sends both his confession and his person: "the which John Corbett, by his father and other of his friends, was put to me the same day that I took my journey towards France, and at Sittingbourne overtook me. I was very glad of him for his virtue and good letters, and now I am right sorry that it hath be his misfortune so to disorder himself; for he is well learned, both Greece and Latine, and can do no other things but study. In worldly things he hath nother experience for activity; in study of good letters miram felicitatem ac capacitatem et insuperabilem diligenciam." Hopes Wolsey will therefore "have compassion of age* and his humble submission and meek revocation of his errors." Poissy, 4 June 1528. Signed: Jo. T., M^r of the Rolls.

1528.

TAYLER to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: Doctor Tayler the M^r of the Rolls, of the 4th of June 1528.

5 June.

4327. TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Explains how John Corbette came into his service. The bishop of Bath and himself found a letter implicating him in the suspicion of Lutheranism. Sent it to Wolsey, with Corbette's confession. Intended to have sent, on the 3rd, Denham and Corbette to England. Promised to write in Corbette's behalf, on condition that he would appear before Wolsey, and detect his adherents. But at midnight Corbette rose, "saying he went ad opus naturæ." "The cecesse was without the chamber." As he returned not his fellows sought for him, but he could not be found. Has sent to Paris and Roan in search of him. Hopes he shall be excused for his facile credence. Poissy, 5 June 1528. Signed and sealed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4328. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The monk is not in Paris, but, so far as they can learn, has returned to England. There is no other Englishman in Paris spotted with this infection. Dennam is a very proper young man, under 19, and is sore repentant. Hope Wolsey will not put him "to such extremity, as they have been put unto that have abydden process," but take him to mercy, as his Grace has taken others. He will see by his confession what Lutheran books Dennam possessed. Poissy, 5 June. Signed.

P.S.—Sends his steward and half a dozen servants to conduct Dennam to Calais, and deliver him to the Deputy, and with him his dangerous and pestiferous books.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

5 June.

4329. FRANCIS I. to CLERK, BISHOP OF BATH.

R. O.

Is sending the provost of Paris pardela (to England), for causes which the Provost will explain to Clerk. Desires credence for him. Fontainebleau, 5 June. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons. de Bade. Endd.

5 June.

4330. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

Yesterday received a letter from the bishop of Bath, with a packet for Tuke. Is advised by the Bishop that by Wolsey's command he has taken certain of Martin Luther's scholars at Paris, who have accused a priest of this town, named Philip Smyth otherwise Fabry. He has directed Wingfield to attach the priest, with all his books, as a mischievous heretic. As the priest is the Staplers' chaplain, and had his chamber in the Staple hall, took master treasurer and the lieutenant of the staple, who found the priest's chamber well furnished with books, and, among the number, 12 or more of Luther's or his favorers; all which he put into a pillowbere and sealed, and committed the priest to Wolsey's commissary.

Last week, a man-of-war of Dieppe shot at Wingfield's hoy, with divers

* i.e., of his young age.

1528.

others coming from Winchelsea with wood. The Frenchmen ransacked the hoy, and would have taken a Fleming who belonged to Wingfield, and did damage to other vessels. Wrote a letter to the captain of Boulogne, who sent a written reply (enclosed), and told the messenger that the vessel was not in his jurisdiction. The messenger, on his return, met the captain going to Boulogne with all the mariners, and accordingly went back with him to demand justice. The mariners were immediately delivered, but no redress could be obtained. The boys dare not venture out again, so that the town is in danger of being left unprovided with timber, malt, and beer. Last week also a crayer of London, laden with beer, was driven into Boulogne. A Fleming, the beer brewer's prentice, being on board, was taken by one Robt. Reynolds, an Englishman, who serves at Boulogne as a horseman. Wrote to the captain of Boulogne about this, and received an answer, enclosed. The master of the crayer has come hither with the prisoner, for whose ransom they have taken 20 barrels of beer. Represents the urgent necessity of this town. Has done his utmost to relieve it, of his own accord. Calais, 5 June 1528.

Hol., pp. 4. Endd.

5 June.

4331. RIC. BROKE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

At the sessions of Oier Determyner, held at Rochester Castle, on Thursday in Whitsun week, there were present lord Cobham, Mr. Comptroller, Sir Edw. Guldeforde, Sir Alex. Culpeper, and Master Wotton, knts., Broke's brother, Mr. Shelley, Baron Hales, and Broke, the King's commissioners; Sir Thos. Newell, Mr. Wylloughby, sergeant-at-law, and the King's solicitor, of the King's learned council, and a good number of people in quiet order. There were attainted Nic. Love, fuller, Robt. Bankes, cutler, John Burley, laborer, Ric. Bayley, miller, Wm. Grastroste, shoemaker, John Ongley, laborer, and Thos. Smyth, smith, of high treason. John Gyrdeler, weaver, and Thos. Love, junr., tailor, were indicted of the same, but not taken. Wm. Lyngfeld, weaver, John Parke, Hen. Kyrry, Henry Joye, laborers, John Rode, smith, John Freman, shoemaker, Wm. Ware, laborer, Wm. Love, yeoman, Edm. Wyld, fuller, and Thos. Nyklyn, minstrel, were indicted of misprision. Sir Thos. Newell, Mr. Willoughby and the King's solicitor gave evidence against them. At first they denied their own confessions, but this morning they have all confessed they deserve death, except Thos. Smyth, whom they say they falsely accused, and for whom they ask mercy; in which all the commissioners join, except Cobham and Guldeford, who are absent. Broke's brother, Shelley, has instructions to speak about it to Wolsey. Kent is in good order, but the old term of principis obsta is executed upon the said evil-disposed persons. Rochester, Friday in Whitsun week. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate and Cardinal's good grace. Endd.: Mr. Broke, the judge, of the 5th of June.

5 June.

4332. BRIAN TUKE to the BISHOP OF LONDON.

Galba, B. viii.

4.

B. M.

Have fled to Steponeth for fear of this infection, a servant of mine being ill at my house in London. Received last night a packet of letters from Wolsey, addressed to you and me. As it was late, and I dislike to come to London, I opened it, and found a letter likewise addressed, with others, which I send. The King and my lord Cardinal wish either you or me to come to court for information on certain points about the truce. If I go, I must go in my wagon, which is at my house in Essex, and cannot be here today, for I have a disease in vesica, of which Wolsey is aware, and was almost whole; but coming hither from London last night as softly as could be, has made me as ill as before. Besides, I doubt if it would be right to go to the King, having had such a visitor in my house. You could easily satisfy the King. As to the King's desire that my Lady should be bound to make restitution if any Spaniards took Englishmen, it is more than any Prince is or w[ould be] bound to make restitution of injuries done by their subjects, even in a treaty of perpetual peace. The King thinks, if his subjects may be taken on the coasts of Spain, why may they not do the like to the Spaniards? The answer is, they may in any place, having once come as far as the Spanish harbors, where the truce has no force; "in such wise as when the lady Margaret's folks had agreed thereunto, the French ambassador, talking with my lord Legate in the garden at Hampton Court late in an evening, I being present, and the Lady's folks absent, gave great thanks to my said Lord for that point," as both the French and English might pass to the havens of Spain to do exploits of war; and whenever they wished to return, the Spaniards could not hurt them, when once they got on this side the said havens. The French ambassador expected that by this means his master would work the Spaniards sorrow on those seas. For everything on this side it must be provided that redress be made as in time of peace, so that no man may rob on land or sea. In haste, at Stepney, 3 o'clock, a.m., in my bed.

1528.

BRIAN TUKE to the BISHOP OF LONDON—cont.

P.S.—The letter to Gonson came to me open; that to my Lady I will send to her secretaries, who left early yesterday morning. I send also all the treaties and writings, that you may take with you such as you think good. Will forward Gonson's letter, if the King think fit, and you send it to me, and will seal it with my own seal; for my lord Cardinal, when I was at Hampton Court, ordered that it should be sent open to Fitzwilliam, but I see Mr. Peter has sealed it by mistake.

Hol., pp. 3, mutilated. Add.: To my lord of London, lord Privy Seal.

Titus, B. 1. 82.
B. M.

2. Copy of the preceding, in Tuke's own hand.
Pp. 3.

5 June. 4333. TUKE to [VANNES].

Titus, B. 1. 91.
B. M.

Cannot move, afoot or on horseback. Has a "wagon" that is accustomed to carry his children. Will come in that cart, and on his knees, rather than fail, if it be the King's pleasure; but his house has had the infection. It is not to be expected the lady Margaret will make restitution for injuries done by the Spaniards. Discusses the point touching the right of the Spaniards to apprehend Englishmen in certain havens. Encloses his letter to the bishop of London concerning this matter. Sends him Gonson's letter, and one to the king of Scots, requiring haste. Stepney, Friday.

P.S.—Sends the treaties for the King's consideration.

Hol., pp. 4. Begins: Right Honorable Sir.

5 June. 4334. SIR EDWARD GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

A letter sent about 12 days ago by Brian Tuke to Sandwich, to arrest the King's ship The Mary and John, laden by Anthony Cavallare with beans, came to the hands of the mayor of Winchelsea. As the ship was within the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports, the Mayor informed Guildford, who immediately caused her to be arrested, and put his own officers on board to keep her. Tuke has since sent letters of commandment, dated London, 2 June, for the delivery of the same ship, "which I suppose,"

Begs that matters touching the jurisdiction of his office be henceforth directed to him or his deputy at Dover Castle. Halden, 5 June. Signed.

Mutilated, p. 1. Add.: [My lord C]ardinalles [grace].

1528.

6 June. 4335. THOMAS HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. L. 249.

Has explained to the King the matter concerning the mastership of St. Bartholomew's Spital, and moved his Grace to send Master Wylson to you. The King would be glad if you brought the appointment into your own hands, that he and you may put him or some other good man in. His Highness says that your Grace was always accustomed to be with him "as upon Monday night," and therefore looks for you. Mistress Anne is very well amended, commends herself unto you, "and thinketh long till she speak with you." The King sends you a buck he killed yesterday in Eltham park. Greenwich, Saturday night. Signed.

Add.: To my Lord's grace. Endd.

6 June. 4336. The LISLES.

R. O.

"Humphrey Lysle, gentleman, sworn and examined, the 6th day of June, anno R. H. VIIIth, xx", upon such offences as have been heretofore, by Sir William Lysle, knight, deceased, father unto the said Humphrey, himself, and other their servants, confederates, adherents, and partakers, committed, contrary to the King's laws."

1. About twelve montha ago, he and his father, with about 40 persons, Scots and English (of whom all the English have since been put to execution), attacked Newcastle, compelled the keepers of the castle to surrender the keys, and delivered nine prisoners. 2. Shortly afterwards they came to Weytherington, intending to have taken or slain Sir Will. Elerkare, if he had issued out of the town, and took away 20 horses from the fields. 3. With about 140 persons, chiefly Scots, banished men and outlaws, they spoiled and burned Holmeshalgh in Northumberland. 4. On attacking Weytherington a second time they took prisoner and ransomed Michael Vynell. 5. In returning to Scotland they took prisoner four of my lord of Northumberland's company, three of whom they liberated without ransom. 6. They burned three or four houses in Thropell, and took three prisoners. 7. Burned Lynton, a farm-house of Sir Will. Elerkar's, and drove away 43 cattle. 8. Humphrey himself and four servants burned the house of Roger Heyron in Eshed; 9. drove away 60 head of cattle from Toggesdeyne, 17 from Moryke, 20 from Hawkesby, and 60 horses from Over and Nether Buxton. 10. Humphrey and his servant John Ogle, disguised as beggars, met two men of Staunford harnessed on horseback, and robbed them of their horses and spears. 11. He and four servants plundered a house in Wooddon of household stuff to the value of 46*s.* 8*d.* 12. He took two horses from Anthony Lyborne. 13. Took 14 head of cattle from Whittell, and 8 from Hen. Lex, of Thurston; took prisoners three or four men between Alnwick and Warcouth (Warkworth), and two between Warcouth and Chyblorne; robbed the shop of Hen. Saunderson in Awnewyke of 4*l.* worth of goods, and the house of Thos. Dryden, in Ealemouth, of four marks' worth. 14. When about 13 years old, was present when Roger Jowsye killed a canon of Brynkborne. Signed: "By me, Umfra Lysle."

15. After the said deponent's confession hitherto, calling to remembrance other his offences, hath further declared the same; viz., 1, that at Gosfurth, a mile from Newcastle, he took prisoners 27 persons passing by in the High Street, of whom he had 26*s.* 8*d.*, and ransomed all but seven, whom he kept for a while in servitude in Scotland. 2. In returning to Scotland, he met his father, and took two prisoners on the Tyne, in the highway between Newcastle and Chellerfurth, robbed them of horses and weapons, and took seven of them to Scotland. 3. In the highway between Laysbury and Warcouth, he and three servants robbed two fishermen of four marks and an ambling mare. Signed as above.

Pp. 7. Endd.

1528.

The LISLES—cont.

R. O.

2. "The book of the names of the inhabitants of Ryddesdale," arranged under surnames, viz. :—

"The Halles," 70 names, beginning with John Hall, of Otterborne. The Jaffrasons, 2. The Ellesdens, 7. The Dons, 7. The Nicolsona, 9. The Spores, 15. The Coksens, 15. The Flechers, 13. The Potts, 29. The Hedlegs, 64. The Lowisdens, 8. The Benykes, 9. The Waulenses, 9. The Dawgs, 6. The Nexsons, 3. The Chators, 3. The Edgors, 2. The Brownes, 20. The Wilkinsons, 5. The Grenea, 9. The Haugenshawes, 3. The Stevensons, 3. The Forsters,† 28. The Wans, 7. The Mylburns, 4. The Hogs, 6. The Merwods, 2. The Robsons, 5. The Colwells, 2. The Clerkes, 2. The Robinsens, 3. The Raves, 5. The Hoppes, 4. The Smythes, 2. The Houghtons, 3. The Wadhawes, 6. The Andersons, 13. The Redes, 39. Total of persons, 445.

Pp. 18. Endd. : "The lord of Northumberland his letters, with two books of names of the inhabitants of Riddesdale and Tynnedale, with the confession of Humfrey Lisle." Add. : "To my lord Legate's good grace."

R. O.

3. "The book of the names of the inhabitants of Tyndrill," viz. :—

Charltons, 54 names. Doddes, 53. Robsons, 63. Mylburnes, 30. Yarows, 16. Tomsons, 15. Wilkinsons, 13. Stokos or Stochos, 16. Hages, 5. Redes, 15. Elwades, 10. Hunters, 12. Makwell, 1. Grays, 3. Siatersons, 2. Jones, 6. Nobills, 4. Smythes, 6. Ladderdales, 5. Handwys, 5. Jamyassons, 14. Benets, 2. Barnes, 3. Stampers, 17. Willies, 6. Frisells, 2. Kyrrops, 9. Ogleson, 1. Dausons, 4. Allendells, 5. Quildens, 4. Haules, 9. Lenges, 3. 5 other names. Karroks, 5. Total, 403.

Pp. 10. Add. : My lord Legate's good grace.

. In both the preceding lists one or two surnames occur occasionally different from the headings under which they are included.

6 June.

4337. DE LA BARRE to CLERK.

R. O.

Sends the King's letters of credence for himself. If the prisoner whom I delivered into your hands has not yet passed the sea, cause him to return hither on account of an affair which has since transpired, and for which the said prisoner will be wanted. Should you think he is still here, send some one to search for him. Paris, 6 June. Signed.

P.S.—The prisoner shall be immediately returned to you. After dinner the prisoner who is here shall be questioned and sent to you immediately.

Fr., p. 1. Add. : Mons. de Balde. Endd.

7 June.

4338. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 79.

Sent young Denham yesterday to Calais. Have received letters from the French king, to send for him again, as you will see by the same; and also for conveyance of certain letters from Rome, from Dr. Stephynny, and Sir Gregory, "which, as they say, required haste."§ 12,000 lance-knights have arrived in the plains of Lombardy. Corbett is taken, and will be sent with the other. There is a great noise in Paris in consequence of the Blessed Lady, and her Son in her arms, having both lost their heads. The Chancellor is inquiring into the matter. Poyssey, 7 June. Signed.

P. 1, in Clerk's hand. Add. and endd.

7 June.

4339. LISLE-ADAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was as honorably received as he was dismissed. Had a royal convey, and reached Bologna (Boulogne) yesterday. The King's and Wolsey's † Sometimes spelt Foster.

§ Underlined, and noted in the margin by Wolsey.

‡ So in MS.

1528.

letters have been of great service to him. Recommends his Order to their protection. Bologna (Bologna), 7 June 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Sealed, add., and encll.

7 June. 4340. BRIAN TUKE to PETER VANNIER.

Titus, B. i. 277.

B. M.

This hour, at four o'clock in the morning, letters have arrived from France, which he sends for the Legate. The bishop of Bath writes that when he had declared to the French king, my Lady and the Council the difficulties in the truce, the King answered that by letters from Moret it appeared that they were all "accorded" by the lady Margaret's folks here. Thinks, therefore, a further answer from France must be waited for. Wishes him to tell Wolsey that, the same evening that Moret left, the French ambassador sent for a copy of the truce as it was penned at the Black Friars; which Tuke sent with a message that he had better write that he should not be restrained to those clauses, as some things might have to be added, and mentioned the Spanish ships, which, unless provision were made, might think themselves at liberty to take English and French men on the seas within the limits of the truce; and the restitution to be made of ships taken from and by the Flemings; and advised him therefore to write for a general instruction,—which he said he would do, and mention these two points.

When Tuke told the secretaries of Wolsey's going to Hampton Court, and insisted on their passing the article "des biens" with the qualification, they said they would attend on him there when answer came from France and he sent for them, but they could not pass the article without first informing my Lady. Told them, therefore, about the Spanish ships, lest they should make a new difficulty at the conclusion of the truce, and they think my Lady will be content to have an article for it. They would also write for general instructions; but said they were sure that if Beaumont and his Spaniards arrived in Flanders before the truce was concluded (and they promised to drink no wine for a twelvemonth if he did not), or if lady Margaret's army got Utrecht, which they have blockaded, she would not consent to any comprehension of the duke of Gueldres, with qualification or without. They did not seem to say this from brag, but that they were content to wait for answers from France.

With the King's letters that were sent after Moret left, wrote to the bishop of Bath the whole state of the truce, enclosing copies of Gueldres's comprehension and the article of Madame de Vendosme. As this is a good day, sends the letters, but tarries himself. Asks whether Wolsey wants to see him tomorrow. If not, has business of his own for a day or two here. A packet has come by the post for the French ambassador, which Tuke will send to him immediately. Trinity Sunday, the hour aforesaid, in my bed.

Hol., pp. 3. Add.

4341. TUKE to ———.

Galles, B. vi.

24.

B. M.

William de Barres has written to lady Margaret for the comprehension of the duke of Gueldres; but he thinks it will be difficult, for he says the Duke's people invaded Haye, in Holland, in violation of the treaty with the Emperor; that the people of Utrecht had expelled their bishop; then went over to Gueldres, and attacked the rest of the country, who threw themselves on the protection of the Emperor. Unless the Duke therefore send an ambassador for compounding these matters, the comprehension will not be available. "Whereof being about the letters to my lord of Bath, I thought convenient to advertise your Grace by my letters, because your Grace may know his opinion herein before the coming of the French ambassador to the same." He makes two other great difficulties: one is that my Lady "has title to the county of Charolois, which by the treaty of Madrid should be delivered to her, exempt from all higher jurisdiction." If that article pass, Vandosme shall have his lands, which she now holds. Secondly, the prince of Orange is kept from his lands in Burgundy, and in recompence has part of the lands of Vandosme given him by the Emperor. He fears also Marvix is detained by the French in his way to the French court, and declares that Mountferar has levied 6,000 lanceknights, with which, if the truce fail, he will go into France; if otherwise, into Italy.

1528.

Tuke to ——— —cont.

Hol., pp. 2, mutilated.

4342. KATERYN HENEGE to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Asks him to despatch these two friars with my lord's Grace's alms as shortly as possible. Sent by Ric. Eton to ask him to make a deed of feoffment of the lands her husband purchased in Lincolnshire of Master Chamberlain. Molsaye, Trinity Sunday.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my especial friend Mr. Cromwell. Endd.

8 June.

4343. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 197.

B. M.

" . . . e felt the Emperor's disposition . . . never so well disposed, yea, wol . . . children for nothing, yet his ho . . . this message must be done, we sa[id] . . . and showed your Grace's advice ho . . . some good manner by the ambassadors a . . . by the Herald. He said it must be . . . hart. As the Emperor had provoked him . . . to speak no more in the matter, for . . . divulged and so far past that th . . . and though there were he would not use . . . the King's highness whom he knoweth of . . . a prince of honor, and to know what h . . . and also your Grace, when he shall have se . . . ye will allow; the sending of the mess[enger] . . . him rather to slack therein than otherw[ise] . . . my Lady in the same matter. We fow[nd her sorrowful] and dolent for the same, and also on the . . . inclined to the respect mentioned of th . . . honor. She said that the time was n . . . the beginning, she said she advised . . . all that she could that no such . . . fearing the exasperating of th . . . thereof. She sware that she . . . from her son's knowle[dge] . . . th as touching this matter . . . there is no remedy. First the thing . . . copies thereof comen unto the Emperor's h[ands] . . . [o]wn ambassador hath been advertised of . . . e herald and particularly of his mes . . . [be]cause the Emperor hath sent him 3 salf[conducts, exp]ressing in each of the same the cause of tha . . . nyng, and hath sent divers of his own ga[rde to meet the] said herald at the confines, and so to co[m]e with him i[n]to his presence. And that the said herald . . . and conducted by them of the Emperor's guard xx . . . [days] past entered into Spain, and by all likelihood . . . this day, or at the least wise before any letters co[m]e . . . there should be at the point of doing his message . . . this thing was not possible to be remedied her . . . called the Great Master for witness in the pre[mises], who, as he had afore unto us affirmed the s[ame to] be true in very earnest manner, as to be plain wi[th your] Grace he is in many other matters very sore quye . . . small, albeit we find him otherwise very cou[rteous an]d gentyll, and at all times himself he bringeth . . . King and to my Lady and maketh as much o . . . man can. After much communication of this "

Mutilated. Modern heading: 8 Ju[ne].

1528.

8 June.

R. O.

4344. WILL. GONSON to HENRY VIII.

On Saturday conveyed the Great Master of St. John's and Mons. de Morett from Dover to Boulogne. As their wages and victuals end on the 27th, desires to know if they have to serve at sea any longer. Their victuals must chiefly come from London. Understands from Tho. Spert that all Spanish ships may be taken, but not Flemings. The King has, no doubt, heard of the displeasures done to his subjects in Flanders, and to Gonson's goods and servants, "with their beastly and seldwotose words." On board the Minion between Calais and Dover, 8 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To the King's highness." Endd.

8 June.

Vit. B. x. 97.

R. M.

Herbert,

p. 107.*

Pocock, i. 167.

4345. CLEMENT VII.

Commission to Wolsey and Campeggio to examine and decide as to the validity of the King's marriage, without appeal. Viterbo, 1528, 6 id. Jun., 5 pont.

Lat., draft, pp. 7.

4346. HENRY VIII.

Vit. B. xii. 3.

R. M.

Licence to Wolsey and Campeggio to execute the bull dated Viterbo, 6 id. Jun. 1528.

Lat., draft, mutilated, pp. 4. Endd.

9 June.

4347. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

Rym. xiv. 234.

Bull of indulgence for visiting Cardinal's college, Oxford. Orrieto, 9 June 1528.

Lat., vellum. Two originals, both with seals.

9 June.

4348. CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 71.

To show the gratitude of the Holy See to the King, will endeavor to discover, however arduous the task may be, some form of satisfying his Majesty. The Pope must proceed in this business deliberately. Hopes the King will continue in his efforts to restore the Holy See. Viterbo, 9 June.

Signed: J.

Hol., p. 1. Add. and endd.

R. O.

2. Copy of the same.

Endd.: 9 June 1528.

9 June.

4349. WILL. LORD DACRE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 496.

Received last night letters from the Borders, one of which, a letter from Angus to Sir Chr. Dacre, he would have presented to Wolsey this day if he had been well. Had a fall from his horse and broke his arm in returning from his pilgrimage to Canterbury this vacation. Sends Angus's letter, with one from the lord Maxwell to Sir Christopher, and another from the writer's wife. Wishes to know what order shall be taken if the king of Scots come forward. Thinks the Borders should be well furnished, so that all fugitives from Scotland may be apprehended, and no ground left for complaint. Reminds Wolsey of the letters he ordered to be sent to the king of Scots and Angus in answer to the request in the Earl's letters which Dacre delivered to Wolsey by Brian Tuke. Advertisements sent to them now by the King and Wolsey would quicken James's good purpose. London, 9 June.

Signed.

Add. Endd.

1528.

9 June.

R. O.

4350. RIC. BANK to CROMWELL.

Sent his servant yesterday to Mr. Haydon to ask if any privy seals had gone out against the persons mentioned in the enclosed bill; and he sends word that both attachments and privy seals had been sent out.

Asks him to procure a letter to restrain them, from Mr. Chancellor to Sir Alex. Osboldstone, sheriff of Lancashire, and to Robt. Parker, messenger within the county palatine. Reminds him that the Chancellor wrote to Banks, at the instance of the duke of Suffolk, last Easter, that Banks's sureties might tarry at home; and now attachments are sent down for them.

Will be utterly undone if Cromwell does not help him. From the Cow in Southwark, Tuesday morning, 9 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell at Hampton Court. Endd.

9 June.

Wilkins,
iii. 712.

4351. SYNOD HELD AT ELY.

Statutes made by the Synod of Ely, held 9 June in the convent church of Barnewell.

1. No layman who comes to the diocese of Ely from any other place shall be admitted to marriage within a year of his arrival. If he has contracted marriage, no curate shall celebrate it without a testimonial from the ordinary of the place where he formerly resided, or unless he is reported to be of honest conversation in the parish. 2. Rectors, vicars and curates are to read the Exoneratorium curatorum in their churches every year. 3. No priest or chaplain newly arrived in the diocese may be admitted to serve cures by rectors or vicars for more than one month, without examination by the bishop or his officer, on pain of suspension for two months. 4. No person is to be allowed to publish the liberties and privileges of brotherhoods, hospitals, &c., or to ask for alms for them, without licence from the bishop. 5. Parish clerks must wear surplices while serving the priests at high mass. 6. No curate, chaplain or priest is to perform mass in "ruggid gownes." 7. Rectors and curates must not allow Bibles according to the new interpretation to be used in their churches, or employ them for their sermons. 8. Two solemn processions are to be held every week until St. Peter's ad Vincula. 9. Four commemorations have been held in the diocese, time out of mind, excepting in places where the church is dedicated to St. Mary or St. Etheldreda, and in East Hatly church, and some churches in the deanery of Shingay. 10. The Feast of the Translation of St. Mary Magdalen is celebrated on March 19. 11. The following penitentiaries were named for the deaneries in Cambridgeshire: Cambridge, Mr. Aspe; Chesterton, Mr. Lumpkin; Shingay, Mr. Risschey; Borne, Mr. Ireland, Mr. Holder; Barton, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Sterne; Camps, Mr. Beeton, Mr. Heyton, Mr. Smith. 1528, 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat.

10 [June.]

R. O.

4352. THE WAR IN NAPLES.

News of the 10th, from Naples, by the cardinal Triulzi.

Things are going badly for the Imperialists; and if the Germans at Rome do not help them, Lautrec has gained the whole kingdom without drawing a sword. Thinks it is God's judgment upon them, for disorder is increasing among them every day, as they have news of the progress of the French. It is the opinion here that whoever first occupies Apuglia will be the conqueror. The archbishop of Capua took leave of us this morning, to go to Capua, and escape from these embarrassments.

ii. Other news from the same, without date.

Has done his best since he is here to find out how they are satisfied with the Pope. They are not pleased with him, though he can see no reasonable cause. Some say that he has not kept the time for the first payment; moreover, that Frenchmen did whatever he counselled them. Whatever be the fact, they say his Holiness left Orvieto on the 5th for Ancona, being bound by a secret declaration against the Imperialists. These latter seem to be in the greatest disorder; and if Lautrec pushes on, as he seems to be doing, it is thought that this kingdom is in great danger. A bishop who is the soul of the archbishop of Capua (qual e l'anima de l'arcivescovo de C.) said yesterday that the Archbishop had been in doubt what to do amid all these novelties, whether to go to Ischia or to Gaeta, but had changed his purpose, and determined to place himself in this castle. Does not know about the progress of the war, or how they get supplies of money. Many are very anxious, and they say Don Hugo is in despair. Cannot speak of the protests made of the prince of Melfi in Apruzzo, and of the general disorder of the Imperial forces. Our courtesies, &c. are at end. ("Le nostre carezze, cortesie et trattamenti buoni sonno resoluti.") It is eighteen days since we arrived, and we have not left our chambers, except once. Don Hugo has not come to see us, nor has anything been heard of him.

1528.

Italian, pp. 2.

[10 June.] 4353. PIERS EARL OF OSSORY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. II. 133.

After the taking of the baron of Dalvyn, the vice-deputy, by O'Conour, Kildare's son-in-law, the Irishry determined to aid O'Conour to destroy the Pale, hoping that the King would be moved to release Kildare, and send him here to rule again. Rode to their country, and with no little trouble separated them by policy and promise of reward, of which he wrote to the Council in Ireland. Thought it dangerous to have war with O'Conour without knowing the King's pleasure, as he still has war with the earl of Desmond, whom the Bretnis aid more than ever. Asks for orders. Waterford, Corpus Christi Eve. Signed.

Add. Eudd.

10 June. 4354. LEDER and REYNOLDS.

R. O.

Deposition of Thos. Howell touching the accounts given to Leder by Reynolds, of which he has obtained more knowledge since his last examination. He now states, 10 June 20 Hen. VIII., that about Christmas last he was desired to examine those accounts by Sir John Alen, alderman of London, William Roche and Paul Wythypoll, owing to Leder's complaint that Reynolds had left out of his account all the profits of the first six years' occupying between him and Francis Bawdwyn. Richard Davy was appointed to examine them along with him. They found that their first occupying began in 1502. Reports the profits received at various dates, with references to Reynolds's ledger, &c. Deponent has been in Spain, coming and going, for about 26 years.

Pp. 6, large paper.

R. O.

2. "Answer to the examinations of Thomas Howell and Bedford in June, anno 20 H. Octavi, in the Chancery."

Pp. 2, large paper. Eudd.

11 June. 4355. GARDINER to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. VII. 77.

Has at last conduced to the setting forward of Camppeggio, as will appear by the Cardinal's letters sent to Fox. Thinks the King will be satisfied with their services. It is a great heaviness to them to be accused of want of diligence and sincerity. After many alterations and promises made to the Pope, he has consented at last to send the commission by Camppeggio. We urged the Pope to express the matter in special terms, but could not prevail with him in consequence of the difficulty. He said you would understand his meaning by the words, "invenituri sumus aliquam formam."^a I may be deceived, but I think the Pope means well. If I thought otherwise I would certainly tell the truth, for your Majesty is templum fidei et veritatis unicum in orbe relictum. Your Majesty will now understand how much the words spoken by you to Take do prick me. Apologises for his rude writing. Viterbo, 11 June.

1528.

GARDINER to HENRY VIII.—cont.

Hol. Add. Endd.

11 June. 4356. THOMAS HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. L. 289.

This day, as the King came "towards evensong," the marquis of Exeter brought two great bucks from Burllyng, the best of which the King sends to your Grace. This day the King has received his Maker at the Friars', when my lord of Lincoln administered. On Tuesday the King goes to Waltham. Greenwich, Corpus Christi Day. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

11 June. 4357. LADY ELIZABETH TAILBOIS to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Wood's Lett.,
vol. II. 39.

Has received his letters, dated Durham Place, 15 May, desiring her to deliver to Sir Gilbert Tailbois, her son, lands to the yearly value of 100*l.*, the residue of those worth 200*l.*, appointed by Act of Parliament to him and his wife after her husband's decease, an annuity of 40*l.*, and the money received from the lands from Mayday last. Will give him the lands, but begs to be excused from giving the money for the following reasons:—
1. Since her husband's visitation, when he was committed to Wolsey by the King, his rents have been employed for household expences and the marriages of his children, and not in wasteful expences. 2. There is now 150 marks owing of the marriage money of one of their children, for which her nearest friends are bound. 3. Her other son, brother to Sir Gilbert, has no assignment for his living, and must be provided for. 4. Wm. Bingham, an old servant of her husband's, who was accustomed to provide wheat and grain for the household, has gone away with money enough to provide for the whole year, and she is obliged to make fresh provision with the rents of the lordships for which her son Sir Gilbert asks, and of other lands also. 6. There are 10 score wild beasts in the lordship of Kyme, from which they used to provide beef for the household, but from which they can now get no profit. Has had little comfort since her husband's last visitation, "and for the pleasure of God I have yielded me thereunto," and now my husband is aged it would be hard to live in penury, and be unable to discharge our friends of the sums in which they are bound for us. If my son obtain his demands, we shall be obliged to break up house and "sparpull" our children and servants. He has now in his hands lands worth 342*l.* 17*s.* 11½*d.*,—more than she and her husband have. Will do all she can for him when her children are provided for and her debts paid. Goltaght, 11 June. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

11 June. 4358. BRIAN TUKE to THOMAS DERBY.

R. O.

Perceived by his letters that my Lord's pleasure is that lady Margaret's secretaries should be with him on Friday morning. Tuke will be there, but is forbidden to ride, and will therefore go by water. Is to assure Wolsey that Stephens' letters did not come in the packet, as the bishop of

^a See the Pope's letter of 9 June.

1528.

Bath stated; and therefore Tuke supposed they were either in Mr. Peter's (Vannes') packet, or the same as the letters in Latin to Wolsey. Doubts not that the Cardinal will find they were not sent in the packet Tuke had. Missed them as soon as he read the bishop of Bath's letters, expecting himself to have heard from Mr. Stephens. This is all he can say. Thinks they have been left out of the packet by inadvertence, or else that my lord of Bath called Mr. Gregory's Mr. Stephens' letters. The bishop of Bath's packet came whole in a cover from the deputy of Calais, who said they had "flyen over the walls to him at 10 of the clock at night, and should fly over again to the post, to send them over incontinently; and with that packet was a truss in canvas, directed to my Lord's grace, which was not cast over the walls." The letters of sundry dates were put by Tichet into one packet. Sends various letters, and mentions others that came; some directed to the ambassador of Florence, others for Anthony Vivaldi, one to Nich. Carewe. Begs he may come on Friday, as, but for the King and Wolsey's commandment, he would not stir from his chamber for 100*l*, "till a thing that is amiss in my body be better amended, for stirring is the most dangerous thing I can do, and besides potions and other medicines I am anointed morning and evening, and have other things administered to me not meet to be used in Court." London, Corpus Christi evening, late.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my loving friend Thomas Derbye, clerk of the King's signet. Endd.

11 June. 4359. BRIAN TUKE to CLERK.

R. O.

Clerk will perceive by Wolsey's letters to him and Tayler that there has been an odd mischance. Never knew letters of importance miscarry before, since the beginning of the King's reign; but it seems, from what they and Sir Gregory Casalis have written, that letters from Mr. Stephens have been intercepted or lost,—which concerns Tuke, as he has the control of their conveyance. No such letters of Mr. Stephens could be found when the packet came to hand, for Tuke received the packet in bed, opened it, and read Clerk's letter to himself, and immediately looked for those mentioned, "as those which I longed longest for," but found none, except from Clerk and Tayler; so that, finding one which he knew to be in the hand of Sylvester Darius, he supposed Clerk had written Stephens instead of Sylvester; but on going to Wolsey he found that they had written about the conveyance of letters from Rome from Dr. Stephens and Sir Gregory, "which, as they said, required haste." The word they made the King and Wolsey think that Clerk had letters from them both, and as Clerk and Sir Gregory both wrote that Mr. Stephens had written at length, they inferred that the letters had come to Clerk's hands. Two packets of Clerk's letters came to Calais at once, containing those of the 5th and 7th inst., and with them a truss in canvas, which, as they arrived after the gates were shut, were cast over the wall to Mr. Deputy, and from him again to the post, who trussed both packets into one. Does not know if Mr. Stephens' letters were trussed in Clerk's packet, or apart. Clerk says that he sent a servant to Calais for those letters, and to revoke young Denham; and Tichet writes that a servant whom he left with Clerk brought the letters to Calais. Other explanations suggested. Hopes the matter will be cleared for both their sakes. Has written to Calais to put Tichet's man in surety till the truth be known.

Copy, in Tuke's hand, pp. 4. Headed: "The copy of my letters to my lord of Bath."

4360. [ANNE BOLEYN to WOLSEY.]

VII. B. 2.11. 4.

R. M.

Barnet, 1. 103.

My Lord, in my most humble wise I desire you to pardon me that I am so bold to trouble you with my simple and rude writing, proceeding from one who is much desirous to know that your Grace does well, as I perceive by this bearer. The great pains you take for me, both day and night, are never likely to be recompensed, "but alone in loving you, next unto the King's grace, above all creatures living," as my deeds shall manifest. I long to hear from you news of the Legate, and hope they will be very good.

1528.

[ANNE BOLEYN to WOLSEY]—cont.

Added by the King :—The writer of this would not cease till she had called me likewise to set to my hand. Both of us desire to see you, and are glad to hear you have escaped the plague so well, trusting the fury of it is abated, especially with those that keep good diet, as I trust you do. The not hearing of the Legate's arrival in France causeth us somewhat to muse ; but we trust by your diligence shortly to be eased of that trouble.

Hol., mutilated.

[12 June.] 4361. WOLSEY to CLERK and TAYLER.

R. O.
St. P. VII. 72.

Since my last, received yours of the 2nd, and two others of the 5th and 7th ; the first in answer to mine of the 19th and 23rd, concerning the truce ; the second relating to Denham, who, by your letters of the 7th, had been revoked by the French king. I have shown your letters to the King, who is surprised that any advertisement should be given to Francis that lady Margaret's secretaries had agreed for the comprehension of the duke of Gueldres, as I could never bring them to such an agreement. Since then the French ambassador has offered terms from his master which will make the comprehension practicable. Till, however, further instructions be sent to the bishop of Bayonne, the truce cannot be concluded. Therefore, beg the French king to consider what his ambassadors and Morette have written on this matter, and accelerate the same, as this is important for the King's merchants trading at Antwerp. Send information respecting two clauses in Clerk's letters, touching letters from Dr. Stephens, which have not been received. The King fears they have been intercepted. A special man is sent to you for information on this point ; and you are to explain whether you saw the letters packed, &c.

I have had letters from Sylvester Darius, dated Bayonne, 18 May, stating that the French herald had arrived there with the challenge. Sylvester was anxious that the herald should delay his mission for the present. Of this you have given no notice in your letters. You are therefore to advertise the French king, and ask him to comply with Sylvester's proposal. I have written to Sylvester on the subject. The King is surprised to learn, by Clerk's letter of the 2nd, that he sent a packet of letters to Mr. Stephens by Anthony Vivaldi, an Imperialist, and desires him to be careful.

Headed : Copy of my lord Legate's letters to my lord of Bath and Mr. Tallor.

4362. J. DU BELLAYE, BISHOP OF BAYONNE, and DE MORETTE, to WOLSEY.

Cal. E. i. 94.
R. M.

..... "trouve cest apres disner, ou recueil et parolles d..... promectre, et que fusmes ung peu entrez ou propos..... votre moyen de luy pour le Roy son bon frere et perpetuel alye..... a remis la resolution dudit ayde en ce que touche la contribuc[ion]..... la commission nouvelle pour faire la tresve.

"[Mon]seigneur, nous n'avon voulu luy faire de rien instance pour la charge que..... [n]ous avon du Roy votre grant amy de ne parler que par votre bouche..... mais il nous semble qu'il seroit meilleur que resolution se priust aup..... duditte affaire, non obstant que la commission ne soit venue, (presuppos[ant] qu'il ny aura faulte qu'elle ne vienne et que suyvant icelle la tres[ve] soit) conelue, comme desja le devez tenir pour fait,) faisant, Monseigneur resolution, et moy, Morette, incontinent l'apportant au Roy, seroit d plus avance et diligente l'affaire de Lannharille, qui plus chaullement[ut] sans point de doute se conduira, moy retourne avec ladite resolution.

1528.

"Monseigneur, non pour espargner nostre peine, mais pour ne vous donner avons choisi de plustost vous envoyer ce memoire qu'aller vers vous attendant que vous ordonnerez, ce qu'il vous plaira que nous facion, qu'entièrement vous trouviez telle obeysance que sont tenuz vous porter" Signed.

Mutilated. Add.: [A] Monseigneur [le] Cardinal d'Yorch, legat et Angleterre.

12 June. 4363. JOHN DE SELVA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has been acquainted by the bishop of Bath, and the conversation of Morette, of Wolsey's good inclination towards him. Is rejoiced to find that he is agreeable to one whom all admire for his great ability and patriotism. Has been induced to write at the suggestion of the bishop of Bayonne. Paris, 12 June 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

12 June. 4364. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

R. O.

Assent, by Campeggio, as bishop of Sarum, to the annexation of the prebend of Blowbery to Wolsey's college in Oxford, according to the decree of incorporation by the Pope, dated Orvieto, 1528, pridie idus Junii.

In Cromwell's hand (?) Lat., pp. 5.

12 June. 4365. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

Rym. xiv. 255.

Bull of confirmation for Cardinal's college, Oxford. Orvieto, 12 June 1528.

Lat., vellum. Leaden seal.

4366. BRIAN TUKE to PETER VANNER.

R. O.

The French ambassador, after having received and read his packet of letters, sent them by a servant to Tuke without any other message. Found letters to the King and Wolsey, both open, and one to the ambassador from Robertet, acknowledging the ambassador's letters of 19 and 23 May, hoping the truce was concluded upon the last resolution sent by the French king, and stating that they looked hourly for Morette. Robertet's letter was despatched in haste by the English courier, without waiting for any from the great master, who was then asleep. Tuke sent the letters back by his French clerk to the ambassador at his village, to know what he was to do with them, saying he was surprised at the King and Wolsey's letters being opened, "though it seemeth they were never sealed but with a label put through;" and also that the French king should take the truce for concluded, as there was no such appearance. Desired his clerk also to inquire of him "whether in those letters he wrote any such comfort," and whether he had not written otherwise since. Sends his answer along with the said two letters, which the ambassador returned. He retained Robertet's, pretending it was so ill written it would require some one to decipher it; but Tuke read it well enough. Perceives they wrote too comfortably about the truce at first, and that the ambassador is looking for a further answer, which he fears will be of no effect before Morette's arrival.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Mr. Peter Vanne, secretary to my lord Legate's grace. For my Lord's grace.

1528.

13 June.

4367. FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends the King's progress as devised "for this grass season." He had intended to go to Ampthill immediately after being at Hounslow, Hartford and those parts; but he has postponed it, as Fitzwilliam told him Wolsey could not be there so soon on account of the term. Greenwich, 13 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

13 June.

4368. ITALIAN NEWS.

R. O.

"Ex Viterbio, die xij. Junii."

Campeggio has come hither from Rome to go to England in the cause of the divorce. He stays here, awaiting an answer from Genoa to a request for a galley to carry him to Marseilles, but if it do not come he will go by land. Those at Naples are badly off,—without wine or meat, and with a great pestilence. Those without think it impossible they can hold out till the middle of July. The Imperialists pretended they can hold out to the middle of August, but their faces belie their assertions. The bishop of Lecce (Lechicensis) leaves tomorrow for Spain for the liberation of the Cardinals. Believes they will be set free before his return. The ambassador who came from Naples is still here; and though what he demands of the Pope is not well known, it is supposed he has offered him the restitution of Ostia and Civita Vecchia, and the liberation of the Cardinals, for a payment of 40,000 scudi, and a grant of a tenth to the Emperor. Believes, however, that he is awaiting an answer from Naples. You have heard of the recovery of Rimini. Nothing is wanted now but that of Cervia and Ravenna from the Venetians, and Ostia and Civita Vecchia from the Spaniards.

ii. Extract from an intercepted letter of the prince of Orange to the duke of Brunswick, dated Naples, 31 May.

Has written to him several times this month, with great urgency, to come to Naples, as they cannot stand a longer siege than to the time he before mentioned in writing to Andrea de Burgo. Are in greater distress every day. Urge him to come by way of Tronti, as the enemy did, for the way is smooth, and full of good cities. Naples, 31 May 1528.

Lat., pp. 2. Endd. in same hand: "Nova ex Italia."

13 June

4369. JOHN HACKET to BRIAN TUKE.

Galba, B. ix.

125.

B. M.

Has received no letter from him since he wrote last by Lassaux on May 22. My Lady writes daily to her ambassadors to show Wolsey her opinion. Since Mid-Lent there have been but few days that he has not had complaints from the King's subjects of the taking of their ships. My Lady and the Council ordered restitution immediately on hearing of it, and seem displeased at this treatment of the English. The procurer-general has been sent to Seeland, and tomorrow the receiver of the "Explottes" will go to Flanders to cause restitution to be made, especially of Mr. Gonston's galleon, with express commission to command my Lord Admiral and the rent-master of to punish those who have committed the injuries. Finds my Lady, the cardinal of Liege, Berghes and others well disposed to preserve the amity, as far as it is not to the Emperor's prejudice.

Letters from Dutchland state that Antony de Leva has taken Pavia, and the duke of Brownwyk Parma and Alexandria. Has seen a letter from Trent, that says only that the Duke has taken two towns in the duchy of Milan, and that, for all the bad fortune of the Imperialists, they have now nearly 30,000 men in Italy. Hedyng recommends himself heartily to Wolsey and to Tuke, and wishes Hacket to say that the kind letter Wolsey sent to my Lady in his favor was not as well accepted as it ought to have been. The cardinal of Liege tells him it has caused "more retardance of Henslyng's business than any awau(cement), all proceeding of the good love and favor that Hoghestrate owes to the King and Wolsey." Thinks Henslyng will write by a servant of his own in a few days.

1528.

It is said that Ytchyngham arrived at Paris from Spain on the 28th M[ay]. Supposes he is by this time in England. Hears that Hoghestrate has daily letters from France, but none knows the secret except my Lady and him. Machlyng, 13 June 1528.

Is desired by Mr. Lays Sowche, secretary to . . . , to send the enclosed copy of my Lady's [letter] that Tuke may remind the Lord Chamberlain to fulfil my Lady's request in favor of Mychel de Lombyer, merchant.

After the letter was closed, my Lady sent Mons. Dayngny, second president of the council, with the receiver of the "Explottes" and the captain of Byerflit, to take his advice about opening and breaking up all Englishmen's and strangers' [letters] which the said captain has found in Gonson's galleon, which was laden at Antwerp with Englishmen's and strangers' goods for London, and was stopped at sea and brought to Byerflit, on the pretext that it contained French goods and merchants, and must be examined. Said the truth might be known as well by the purser's book as by other letters, that it was not his business to advise in the matter, and he knew my Lady and the Council to be wise enough to know what they ought to do.

Pp. 4. Add. Endd.

13 June. 4370. FRANCIS CARDINAL CORNELIUS to HENRY VIII.

Vit. R. x. 101.
R. M.

Has always admired the King since he saw him while on an embassy from Venice to the Emperor. Informs him that the Pope has conferred the cardinalate on him, and offers his services. Venice, 13 June 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Address pasted on.

13 June. 4371. FRANCIS CARDINAL CORNELIUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Notifying his appointment to the cardinalate. Venice, 13 June 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

14 June. 4372. NEWS FROM ITALY.

R. O.

i. From an intercepted letter of cardinal Colonna to count Andren de Burgo, Gaeta, 9 June.—Has heard of the resolution of the Germans to march to Milan and attack Lodi. Does not approve of the resolution, considering the great extremity of Naples. Unless it be succoured it will be lost, and the Imperial interests in Lombardy cannot be saved.

ii. From a letter of the prothonotary Casale, Venice.—The Imperialists are intending an attack against Bergamo, which has been prepared for its defence. 4,000 fresh Germans have arrived at Ivrea. The Venetian ambassador is at Viterbo, and finds the Pope resolute to have the "said" lands, and unwilling to declare himself on any other conditions. The Venetians (isti domini) will not restore them, although Francis has written to them strongly on this subject, and has ordered viscount Turenne, who is with the Pope, to further the business. No news of Lautrec. Johannes de Urbina has left Naples, and suffered a defeat from our troops. Francis writes that he has sent his fleet to Genoa under the command of captain Barvegius. He has also sent 200,000 scudi to Lautrec.

Lat., pp. 2.

1528.

14 June. 4373. HENRY VIII. to MARGARET OF SAVOY.

Le Glay, Ana-lectes Hist.,
p. 196.

"Il annonce a Marguerite d'Autriche que les députés ont conclu avec l'Empereur et le roi de France un traité de commerce pour la restitution des vaisseaux, effets et prisonniers." Greenwich, 14 June 1528.

14 June. 4374. JOHN CLERK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 79.

On Corpus Christi Day, at the procession, thanked the King for the trouble he had taken in writing to the Pope for the King's matter, at your request. He said he did it gladly, and would do anything to further it, "that the Pope should do it," and that he had written to the Venetians for the restitution of Cervia and Ravenna. He said they would certainly restore them, and he would press the Venetians thereunto for the King's sake. Then the Pope would be too unkind if he made any more sticking in the matter. He takes the King's matter as much at heart as if it were his own. Wished he had more earnestly pressed the Pope in his letter, but did not dare say so, as he had taken so much labor in writing. If there was any fault, it was in the secretary who prepared the minute, for the French king cared not what he wrote, provided the King's matter was advanced. Sends a copy. Sent the original yesterday to Dr. Stevens, and another letter to Mons. Turayn.

As the matters go pleasantly, brought master Dean* to the great President, who made much of him. The two young men attached for Lutheranism have this day been sent to Calais. Poysseye, 14 June. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

14 June. 4375. MONTMORENCI to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Wolsey will have learnt from the bishop of Bayonne the satisfaction of the King and Madame on hearing by Morette the good and honorable words which he was desired by Henry to report to them. Besides the assurances Mons. de Bayonne will give of their great affection to Henry, wishes to let Wolsey know how much they feel bound to him. The bishop of Bayonne will also inform him of what Francis has done for the Holy Father, whose cause he is determined to support, as will appear by the copy of the letters written with his own hand, which he has sent to the Pope by a gentleman express. He will also give full instructions of his intentions to the viscount of Thuraïne (Turenne), his ambassador with his Holiness. St. Germain en Laye, 14 June. Signed.

Fr. Add.: Mons. le Cardinal archevesque d'Iort, legat et chancelier d'Angleterre.

15 June. 4376. ENGLAND, FRANCE and FLANDERS.

R. O.

Treaty made by don Inigo de Mendoza, Wm. des Barres, and John de le Sauch, on the part of Margaret of Savoy, with Cuthbert bishop of London, Privy Seal, and Brian Tucke, treasurer of the Chamber, on the part of England, and John du Bellay, bishop of Bayonne, on the part of France, for a truce of eight months. Charles of Gueldres to be comprised, on condition of restoring Utrecht to the bishop of Utrecht or to the Emperor, and submitting to the penalties incurred by him for breaking his truce with the Emperor. The truce not to be in force in Spain or Italy. The cardinals of York, Lorraine and Liege to be protectors of the truce. Hampton Court, 15 June 1528. Signed and sealed by the plenipotentiaries of Flanders.

French.

R. O.

2. French counterpart of the same. Hampton Court, 15 June 1528. Signed and sealed by Du Bellay.

French.

1528.

15 June. 4377. TRUCE with the Low COUNTRIES.

R. O.

Promise made by Wm. des Barres and John de la Sauch, in the name of Margaret of Savoy, that all English ships arrested since the intimation of war made by England to the Emperor at Burgos shall be released, 15 June 1528. Signed and sealed.

Fr. On parchment.

R. O.

2. Oath taken by don Ynigo de Mendeça, bishop elect of Burgos, in the name of Margaret of Savoy, for the observance of the truce made 15 June 1528. Signed.

Fr. On parchment.

4378. ARTICLE of TREATIES with FRANCE and FLANDERS.

Galba, B. ix

63.

B. M.

1. Article of a treaty with France, declaring that the privileges granted to English merchants by the treaties of 18 Aug. 1527 and 30 Aug. 1525 shall be in accordance with the book hereto annexed. Signed by Wolsey and Montmorency.

Lat., pp. 4.

Galba, B. ix.

65.

B. M.

2. Grant of Philip duke of Burgundy, of certain privileges to English merchants. Brussels, 6 Aug. 1446.

Copy, Lat. and Flemish, pp. 8. Signed by Wolsey and Montmorency; the latter signature almost entirely cut off.

Galba, B. ix.

69.

B. M.

3. Articles of commercial intercourse between the English merchants and the town of Antwerp, 1 June 1518.

Copy, Lat., pp. 22. Signed by Wolsey and Montmorency. Of the latter signature only the two dots placed over the name remain.

Galba, B. ix.

81.

B. M.

4. Confirmation by Chievres, Escambeke, and Semp of commercial treaties between England and the Low Countries.

Copy, Lat., pp. 7. Signed by Wolsey and Montmorency.

Galba, B. ix.

85.

B. M.

5. Minutes of treaties between Henry VIII. and Francis I., Hen. VIII. and Maximilian, and the kings of Navarre and Spain, Henry VII. and the archduke of Flanders, and Henry VIII. and Charles V., from 1495 to 1527.

Lat., pp. 9.

Cal. D. x. 60.

B. M.

6. Abstracts of treaties between England and France.

Pp. 5, mutilated, in Tuke's hand.

Cal. D. x.

66-102.

B. M.

7. Fragments of treaties with France.

15 June. 4379. THE DIVORCE.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 170.

* Ex literis D. Gregorii die xv. Junii Viterbil datis."

Wrote last by his chaplain, Barle; after which he went to Rome, that he might, by all possible means, induce Campeggio to second the mode desired by the King of a commission with power to decree (de commissione decretali), and say he should consider it a special favor if the Pope conferred it upon himself. Suggested two motives for this: 1, to merit the King's favor; and 2, that his honor was concerned in the confirmation of the sentence. Moreover, the Pope seemed to refer the matter to Campeggio, and would do nothing without his counsel, so that it was of the utmost consequence to prepare him. He is now most anxious to accommodate himself to the King's will.* Got him to give up his journey to Bologna, where he would have wasted time. He will travel by post horses, if the gout permits him, by the road we would wish for speed. Having crossed the sea from Corneto to Marseilles, he can make the journey in three days. Has sent Baptista to ask Andrea Doria for two galleys, in the name of the Pope and the French ambassador, to conduct the Legate from Corneto. A good deal of tact will be necessary to get them, as he is afraid of more Germans coming to Genoa. Baptista will endeavor to get them "securas et non pestiferas." Meanwhile Campeggio will make his will, and arrange to go to Portus Veneris or Leghorn, if the galleys are not sent to Corneto. We have got the president of Provence, the French ambassador here, to write, that everything may be ready for him at Marseilles. If the galleys cannot be had he will go by land, and has arranged to procure clothes at Avignon. At 12 leagues beyond Lyons he will enter the Rhone (sic), and soon get to Paris.

* Noted by Wolsey in the margin.

1528.

THE DIVORCE—cont.

Lat., pp. 3.

15 June. 4380. THE DIVORCE.

R. O.

Pocock, i. 172.

Extract from letters of D. Gregory (Casale), dated Viterbo, 15 June.

Has obtained the commission for Campeggio, although he feared the Pope would not keep his promise to him and Dr. Stephens. Went to Campeggio, but first convinced D. Florian, without whom nothing could be done. Then went to the Pope, and told him that Campeggio was not only contented to take with him the commission, but approved of our procuring it, and even wished to procure it himself, not knowing a better way to render the sentence safe, and that he thought the Pope should grant it soon. Told Campeggio that they had written to England that the Pope would grant the commission if Campeggio would take it; and thus the King knew that it depended on him.* Said they had written thus to increase the esteem in which he was held, so that he was obliged either to comply or decide in opposition to the King. Acted thus from doubts as to his sincerity, &c. The Pope did not wish them to tell Campeggio that they had spoken to him. Excused himself for having done so. Did it lest the Pope should impose upon them. His Holiness granted it unwillingly, saying that he did not wish it to be known, either openly or secretly.

Wolsey will hear from Baptista, whom they have sent to Genoa, when the Legate is likely to arrive in England. Has persuaded Lautrec to send two galleys, in case the other two are not provided by Andrea Doria. Two are also expected from Naples. Has sent to sea to stop them, as they may be of service. Are working at this matter day and night. Have made this provision through Lautrec, because the Germans are at Bergamo, and say they are going to Genoa. If so, no land route would be safe for the Legate, and Doria would not grant the galleys.

Lat., pp. 2. Endd.

15 June. 4381. ANTONIO DE LEYVA to COUNT HIERONYMO MORONO, the Emperor's Commissary.

R. O.

Prays credence for Sigismond da Ferrara, and that the commissary will take care that provisions be sent in good time, or else all will go wrong. At the Imperial palace, 15 June 1528.

Ital., p. 1. Headed: "Copia de lre de Antonio de Leyva al Morono."
Endd.: "Copia literarum ducis Brunswic."

* Note in the margin in Wolsey's hand: "prudenter factum."

1528.

16 June. 4382. HENRY [OF NAVARRE] to WOLSEY.

Vesp. F.H. 57.

H. M.

Has written already to him in favor of Peter and Michael Dardara, natives of Navarre, in their suit against Martin Deguignes. Sentence has been given in favor of his subjects, but the opposite party has fled. Desires his favor to procure speedy justice in their suit against the sureties. Paris, 16 June.* Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. : " Mon frere le cardinal Dyort, legat en Angleterre."

[16 June.] 4383. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,

XII.

There came to me in the night the most afflicting news possible. I have to grieve for three causes : first, to hear of my mistress's sickness, whose health I desire as my own, and would willingly bear the half of yours to cure you ; secondly, because I fear to suffer yet longer that absence which has already given me so much pain,—God deliver me from such an importunate rebel ! ; thirdly, because the physician I trust most is at present absent when he could do me the greatest pleasure. However, in his absence, I send you the second, praying God he may soon make you well, and I shall love him the better. I beseech you to be governed by his advice, and then I hope to see you soon again.

Fr.

16 June. 4384. OUDART DU BIES to LORD SANDS.

[Cal. E. i. ii.]

A. 213.

H. M.

Sent last Thursday M[ons.] de Veruyn to Andre on his master's affairs, and charged him to visit Sands; but he heard that he was not then at Guisnes. Sends, therefore, the present bearer, who was brought up by Sands, to inquire after his health. Wishes to hear from him, and offers his services. Boulogne, 16 June. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. : A Mons. le Chambellan du roy d'Angleterre, chevalier de son ordre, capitaine de Guisnes.

17 June. 4385. FRANCIS I.

R. O.

Attestation of William des Barres and Jehan de le Sauch, secretaries to lady Margaret, of the commission by Francis I. to Jehan du Bellay, bishop of Bayonne, dated at St. Germain-en-Laye, 19 May 1528, 14 Francis I., for a truce between himself and the Emperor.

This attestation is granted to the English ambassadors, Cuthbert bishop of London, and Brian Take, for their greater security, Du Bellay not having at the time a power to deliver to the English as well as to the Imperialists. Dated 17 June 1527 (sic). Signed.

Fr., vellum.

4386. FLANDERS.

Galba, R. ix.

104

H. M.

Power of Margaret of Savoy to ——— to treat for an abstinence of war with the kings of England and France.

Draft, Fr., pp. 4. Endd.

17 June. 4387. CHARLES DUKE OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. i. ii.]

L. 141.

H. M.

Has seen the articles Wolsey has sent about the truce. Two of them concern his mother and himself, and do not seem reasonable. Has made a memorandum of the difficulty therein, and sends it to Mons. de

* " 1528 " added in a modern hand.

1528.

CHARLES DUKE OF SAVOY to WOLSEY—cont.

Bayonne to show him. Asks him to correct the said articles. St. Denis, 17 June. Signed: Charles.

Fr., p. 1. Add.: A Mons. le legat d'Angleterre, card. d'York. Endd.: A Magno Magi[stro]

18 June. 4388. RICHARD CAVE to CROMWELL

R. O.

Recommends himself to him and his wife. Thanks him for his good cheer when last with him. Asks for his favor concerning Tykford, according to what he and his son Croke said at Westminster. Asks him to do something for his son Antony Cave, who wants a place in England, and would be very meet for a merchant. Wishes his favor for himself and his cousin Rowland touching Skulford. Stanford, 18 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Crumwell at London.

18 June. 4389. WOLSEY to the BP. OF LONDON and BRIAN TUKE

Galba, B. VII.

373.

B. M.

St. P. I, 290.

I enclose letters received this hour from Mr. Treasurer, by which you will see that the King is not quite satisfied with the truce, as there is no provision in case any Spaniards should take any of the King's subjects on the coasts of Brittany, Gascony, Guienne, Normandy, or in the ports of Spain, that my Lady shall make restitution of such Spaniards' goods as shall be found in Flanders; and though Master Treasurer made good answer to the King, his Highness wishes to discuss the matter with you tomorrow morning, or at least with Brian Tuke. I wonder he does not better consider the effect of the truce, with whom it is made, and to what places it extends; for neither my Lady nor the Emperor's ambassador is authorised to conclude anything relating to the ports of Spain, and the truce does not extend to them; yet it is provided that no Spaniard shall attempt anything against the King's subjects on this side of Spain, either in Guyenne, Gascoigne, Brittany, or Normandy, and for this my Lady is bound both for herself and for the Emperor. This prohibition implies restitution, if it is infringed, and there is no other provision in case any Fleming take an Englishman. You can inform the King what sticking I have made for restitution of the English ships taken by the Spaniards, and what answer was made by the Emperor's ambassador and my Lady's secretaries, what obligation my Lady has made for the same, and what promise I demanded of the Emperor's ambassador, who said he would procure restitution, but had no commission to bind himself. In going to the King, take with you all the writings about this matter, and the little memorial in English, and I doubt not he will be satisfied. As to the detention of the secretaries, I suppose they are gone. If they be longer stayed it will be impossible to publish the truce in Flanders by Monday next. The French king and his ambassador here are quite satisfied with this provision for the sea, though, being nearer Spain, they are in greater danger than Englishmen. Hampton Court, 18 June.

P.S.—You can tell the King the reasons why I made such haste for the publication of the truce,—that the merchants might have a market for their cloths at the Synchyeme mart; and for fear lest my Lady, on the arrival of Beaumain with the Spaniards, having made other provision for the defence of the Low Countries, and for keeping Francis occupied on this side so that he would not send succours to Italy, should altogether refuse to treat,—as I was warned by Hackot and others. The King ought to see that the provision against attempts by sea is more to the advantage of himself and France than of the Emperor; for the two Kings can prevent any Spaniard coming out of a Spanish port, but the Spaniards cannot do the same towards the English and French. Tuke may deliver the King's letter for my lady Margaret to one of her secretaries left behind for that purpose. I send you my letters addressed to Gonson. See that they be despatched according to the King's pleasure. Signed.

1528.

Pp. 3. Add.

18 June. 4390. JOHN CLERK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 51.

As to the letters of Dr. Stephyns, which are supposed to have miscarried, cannot for his life say more than this: when he was commanded by the French king to send for Denham, a packet of letters was brought him by the Great Master, addressed to Tayler and himself, with a letter to the Great Master, and a small packet of letters. Cannot recollect whether this was for Wolsey, Tuke or Peter Vannes, or whether it was one letter or more. The letter to us was a few words only, desiring us to forward the packet. It was signed by Master Stephens and Sir Gregory. Is sure of Sir Gregory's signature; but Master Stephens writes two or three hands, of which he has not taken so much notice;—if it was any of them, it was his Italian hand. Has made repeated searches for that letter. Dr. Tayler never saw it, as he was then writing for the dispatch of a courier; but he might see by the letter to Wolsey, which he subscribed along with Clerk, that such a packet was sent. The packet never went out of Clerk's sight after it once came to his hands; and he inclosed it in his own packet himself, and delivered it to his servant, whom he sent after Denham to Abbeville, at which place he overtook Clerk's steward; and the latter sent it to the deputy of Calais, by whom it was forwarded. These were the only letters he meant when he said he had received letters from Master Stephens. As to his writing "from Rome," he meant from the Court of Rome, which is always considered to be wherever the Pope keeps residence. Trusts, if the contents of Master Stephens' letters were good, Wolsey will witness for him that he would be more anxious that the King should know them by himself than by any one else; and why he should conceal them, if unfavorable, he does not perceive. Deprecates Wolsey's suspicions, and implores his mediation with the King to avert his displeasure.

Percieves Wolsey is not pleased that he sent the Cardinal's letters to Dr. Stephyns by Peter Spyna, who is an agent of Antony Vivald. Assures him that he cares no more for Vivald than Clerk does, except in the way of business. He is a Florentine, who has followed the French court for many years, and has been the main agent in procuring Francis money for his affairs in Italy. If he leaned to the Emperor, Francis would not use him. But for this assurance, would neither have put Wolsey's letters in his hands, nor these last of the French king and my Lady,—which he is assured went in seven days from Paris, and he supposes reached Orvieto on the 7th or 8th inst. Advises that no letters be sent upon this great matter, except by express messengers, the King's own subjects. The charge of 300 or 400 marks, more or less, is not worthy of consideration. Paris, 18 June. Signed.

Pp. 6. Add.: To my lord Legate's good Grace. Endd.

18 June. 4391. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

La Grand,
m. 129.

Has waited till now to send the treaty of the truce, because it was necessary to make the oath in ceremony, and arrange with Wolsey and the others about the form of the ratification. Yesterday the oath was made "en belle esglise," where the Emperor's ambassador was present, and we shook hands; so that our old quarrels are extinct, for he has repented and made amends like an honest man. Advises feux de joie to be made, as it is no small matter that such potentates have come to agreement. The Flemings wanted to dissemble the truce,—both for the reasons I mentioned, and because, as they knew of the contribution, they expected that the truce would take place, and partly acknowledged it. As to the article about restitution of their goods to those of the opposite party, they are either the most subtle dissemblers in the world, or they have extended their commission a little at their own risk. But Wolsey made such protestations in answer to me (à l'encontre de moy), in their presence, to make me pass the affair of M. de Guedres, giving me a pledge, "soubz son sein," that he would discharge me towards you; and, having thus got my consent, held out to them such menaces that they were compelled to complete the business (passer la carrière).

1528.

DU BELLAY TO MONTMORENCY—cont.

I was at Hampton Court five days, and met "the aforesaid" secretaries every day at my ordinary, which Wolsey made me on leaving the table (à mon ordinaire que me faisoit M. le Legat au partir de table). I had much conversation with them, but took care not to commit myself. Will. des Barres, whom you have seen in Spain (whither, he has confessed to me, lady Margaret sent him to prevent the return of Francis), declared to me touching the proposal of peace, that he was very glad he had found occasion to refuse the journey taken by Marnix, owing to a dispute he had with John Lalemens, whom he calls a wicked man. He thinks that journey lost labor, because Francis will make an abatement from the sum offered if he conquer Naples, and because he allowed, or, as some think, made the union of Genoa, that it might not be delivered to the Emperor. He says that, but for that, and but for a word which I shall mention hereafter reported to the lady Margaret, peace would certainly have ensued.

Reports a discussion he had with Des Barres touching the restitution of the children and the war in Naples. Des Barres showed him letters from Naples, stating that the Imperialists had ample provisions, and were so eager to fight they could hardly be kept in. They are going to send John de la Saulx to the Emperor for the ratification of the truce.

Wolsey spoke to them of the defiance sent by Francis to the Emperor, and said he could do no less after the terms the Emperor had used, but, as it was sent before the negotiations set on foot by him and lady Margaret, they need not be suspended on this account. Had several conversations with Wolsey at Hampton Court while he was walking in his gardens:—among other things, of the Pope's negotiation with the Imperialists, and his ingratitude to England. Being asked what I thought of it, I said I supposed by sending Campeggio he meant to put a bridle on the Emperor, as the Cardinal could always advance or delay, on pretext of his gout, while they waited to see the result in Italy, and could give a sap to either of the two Princes, helping himself if he pleased "de l'ombre du personnage" (the Pope?), telling the one he had made him a good Englishman (l'avoir baillé bon Anglois), and the other a good Imperialist. Wolsey looked wonderfully grave, and abused the Venetians; for if they would have restored Ravenna and Cervia, and the Pope had refused to interdict the Emperor as he promised, we might honorably have compelled him to accept our conditions. And incidentally he said the Pope could not have refused them to take cognizance of the cause at once, considering the imminent danger to this kingdom if the King died without declaration of the validity or nullity of his marriage. This he said blen legement.

On Tuesday one of the ladies of the chamber, Mademoiselle de Boulan, was infected with the sweat. The King, in great haste, dislodged, and went 12 miles hence, and I hear the lady was sent to her brother the Viscount in Kent ("Calnet"). As yet the love has not abated. I know not if absence, and the difficulties of Rome, may effect anything. This sweat, which has made its appearance within these four days, is a most perilous disease. One has a little pain in the head and heart; suddenly a sweat begins; and a physician is useless, for whether you wrap yourself up much or little, in four hours, sometimes in two or three, you are despatched without languishing, as in those troublesome fevers. However, only about 2,000 have caught it in London. Yesterday, going to swear the truce, we saw them as thick as flies, rushing from the streets and shops into their houses to take the sweat whenever they felt ill. I found the ambassador of Milan leaving his lodging in great haste because two or three had been suddenly attacked. If all the ambassadors are to have their share of it, you will not have gained your cause; for you will not be able to brag you made me die of hunger, and the King will only have gained nine months of my service for nothing. In London, I assure you the priests have a better time of it than the doctors, except that the latter do not help to bury. If the thing goes on, corn will soon be cheap. It is 12 years since there was such a visitation, when there died 10,000 persons in 10 or 12 days, but it was not so bad as this has begun. The Legate had come for the term, but immediately bricked his horses again, and there will be no term appointed. Every one is terribly amazed.

1528.

Wonders he has had no instructions what answer to make about the contribution, as to taking any of it by writing or not. It would have been much better at the beginning, and shown less mistrust. Has done, however, the best he could about the truce, and hopes he has not exceeded his commission. Has discovered partly why the other side did not wish every one to have his goods restored. The Audienccr and others of the Council, hearing that they were involved in war before the men of property knew it, had demanded compensations and confiscations of those of our party, for themselves and their adherents, great wagonners or brewers,—who, if they lost all their inheritances, would not have lost 100 sons of rent, while the poor gentlemen of the country remained fed with words (peuz de parler) to sue their compensations. Knows not if there were any other reasons. John de la Saulx, who went to urge them to agree to the truce as drawn by Wolsey, spoke so much in its favor (en parla à avant) that he was removed from the Council as one suspected.

Has written to Brienne to publish the truce on the frontier of Picardy by Monday or Tuesday at the furthest. Wolsey desired that the form of publication should be so lengthy. Is not able to send the oath of the others. Waited for them the whole of this morning, as two doctors of the Legate, who had received them from all the parties, had promised to let him have them; but found the doctors had been attacked with the plague, and it is thought they are already dead. If they die there will be no means of getting the instruments, but 100 witnesses can be got to witness the oath. London, 9 June.*

Fr. Add.

18 June.

Richms MS.
8668, f. 11.

4392. MARY THE FRENCH QUEEN to the GRAND MASTER OF FRANCE.

In behalf of Antoine du Val, who was her clerc d'office when in France. Begs the Grand Master to obtain for him a like post in the household of Francis. London, 18 June. Countersigned: De St. Martin.

Fr. Add.

There is also a letter of Suffolk, to the same effect, signed by St. Martin.

19 June.

R. O.

4393. WOLSEY to SIR RIC. WESTON.

Hears from the Lord Chamberlain, capt. of Guisnes, that Weston has not paid his and his retinue's wages, according to the King's letters to him, and the mayor and fellowship of the Staple, because the late receiver has not paid him the revenues, 400*l. gr.* Informs him that the said sum has been expended by the King's command on the repairs of the castle, and desires him to allow the said sum to the receiver, and to pay immediately the wages of the Chamberlain and his retinue. Hampton Court, 19 June. Signed.

* See here; but the heading to the letter at p. 149 is dated in margin 18 June, which is certainly the right date.

1528.

WOLSEY to SIR RIC. WESTON—cont.

P. 1. Add.: To my loving friend, Sir Ric. Weston, knt., treasurer of the King's town and marches of Calais.

19 June. 4394. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Advertises him that on the 5th he sent letters that, by the advice of the bishop of Bath, he attached Sir Philip Smith, chaplain of the Staple, &c. Yesternight a chaplain of the Bishop, accompanied with three or four others, and the Master of the Rolls' servants, brought here Denham and Corbet with a letter, stating that the three prisoners and their books should be transmitted to England. No ship will be ready to leave before Tuesday or Wednesday. Begs Wolsey will write a letter to the commissary, Sir John Butler, to take charge of them, as this is a spiritual matter. Calais, 19 June 1528. Signed. Sealed.

Hol., pp. 2. Endd.

19 June. 4395. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE.

R. O.

Advertises him of the coming of Denham and Corbett, and of two letters, which he has enclosed in one of his own to Wolsey. Has had letters from the bishop of Bath and the Master of the Rolls, ordering him to send to England Philip Smith, with the others. Smith is in the commissary's hands, who had better be ordered to take charge of the books and the prisoners.

The Burgundians before yesterday were before Montreuil, and yesterday at Margysyn. Last night John de la Sauch and De Bares, who have arrived, informed him of the truce. Hopes it may be the foundation of a general peace.

Calais, 19 June 1528.

P.S.—Had written in his former letters of the great necessity of the whole retinue in the town in consequence of their lack of wages; at which they are the more surprised, as the King had written that my Lord Chamberlain should have incontinently the wages due for Guisnes, which have hitherto always been paid last. Would be glad if the Council and others here were paid, especially considering the dearthness of the times.

Second P.S.—Sends a packet of letters from the Master of the Rolls, directed to his cousin Robert Dacres at the Temple or the Rolls.

Hol., pp. 3. Add.: Master Bryan Tuke, of the King's Privy Council, and Treasurer of his most excellent Chamber. Endd.: Mr. Wyngfield, depute of Calais.

4396. FRANCIS DYNAMIS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Confesses a previous acquaintance with George Constantine, Fische, Bilney and others, whom he abhors as pestiferous followers of Luther, at whose suggestion he had translated into English the first book of Francis Lambert, De Curvis Execrationis, and a letter which Pomeranus sent "ad fideles (sic enim eos vocat) in Angliam." He had visited Paris, and spent ten months in Constantine's house, and there he had bought Luther's works De Servo Arbitrio and De Captivitate Babylonica, Lambert's Commentarii de Prophetia, &c., De Littera et Spiritu, Luther on the Magnificat, De Institutendis Ministris, Hieronymus Sacerdotalis super Psalmum "Misere", De Curis Verbi Dei, by Gaspar Schwenckfeldius, Luther's Letter to King Henry VIII., and a little book of an author unknown against Natalis Beda; in French also, The Book of Deuteronomy, Oratio Dominica cum Expositione, De uno Mediatore Christo, De Imaginibus, De Fundamento Evangelicæ Doctrinæ, the Epistles and Gospels for 52 weeks, the New Testament in English, with an Introduction to the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans, &c. But being taken and committed to prison these books were found among his effects, and he was brought before the English ambassador at St. Germain's [Clerk, bishop of Bath]. He ends by bespeaking the usual clemency of the Cardinal.

1528.

Pp. 2. Endd.: "Frances Denhams confession."

19 June. 4397. JAMES V. to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Wrote lately to the King, his uncle, proposing to lead an army against the rebels on the Borders, and desiring that Henry would cause the wardens on his side to assemble the Illeges to assist him. Disturbances have since occurred "in the inland of our realm," and James has ordered a convention of the great barons to be hastily summoned. It has therefore been thought advisable to defer "the passing at this time upon the said thieves and rebels" till after the said council. A substantial host may be led against them at the time of year when most harm can be done them. Stirling Castle, 19 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: The Erl of Northummerland, wardane of the Est Merchis of Ingland.

20 June. 4398. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. II. 134.

Yesterday at Esterforde heard that Wolsey had broken up the term, because of the infection in London. Returned hither, and intends to go to Kenyngshale. Asks how long he may stay here before being sent for by the King or Wolsey. Is well amended of his sickness, not having been ill since Thursday week. Sends letters which he has received from Ireland. Unless Wolsey remedies the great danger of "that poor land," fears it will not be recovered without great expense. If the land is overrun and spoiled by the Irish, there will not be victuals to support the force the King will send to punish the rebels, and his Grace will be forced to begin a new conquest as Henry II. did. The only cause is the malice between Kildare and Ossory. Stoke, 20 June.

Hol. Add.: To my [lord] Legate's good grace.

20 June. 4399. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to Wolsey's letter, ordering him to see restored to a Dutchman, named Jacobson, his ship and goods taken by a Frenchman, and bought by the prior of Brunchlame, Norf., for 42*l.*, has examined the prior and others, and finds that Jacobson asked one Katcham, and then the prior, to buy it for him, and then refused to give the prior more than 30*l.* He said he could have kept his ship well enough if it had not been for the prior and his folks. But that is not true; and he has confessed that the prior hindered him in nothing but from taking the Frenchman who had come to the prior's house, on a promise of safety, to make the bargain. They ought not to have allowed the Frenchman to meddle with the ship, being on dry ground; but they say they did not know it. The affair was caused by a French baker, living in Yarmouth, named Nicholas, who manned, victualled, and ordained the ship, and hired four Englishmen to go in her; three of whom are in Iceland, and the other confessed it. Has sent Nicholas up to Wolsey. He ought to recompense the Dutchman and all others who have lost by it. Has arrested his goods, which will cover all losses. Will see it done if 1528.

NORFOLK to WOLSEY—cont.

Wolsey will commit it to him and Suffolk, who is steward of Yarmouth. Stoke, 20 June. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.: My lord of Northfolke, off the xxth of June 1528.

20 June. 4400. LEE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. VII. 84.

Wrote on the 16th of May of our deliverance, by letters sent by De Tarbes. Since then we have remained in Valladolid. Echingham departed from Bordennax back. Before his departure he delivered his letters to a Frenchman to deliver to us; who came to Fontarabie on the 17th. On the last of May, Darius was at Bayonne waiting for a safe-conduct. The English in Anadolusia are set at liberty. Other things we have written in cipher. In Madrid the Emprress is making provision for the Emperor's absence. Sends a copy in Spanish of a paper written by the French king in answer to the Emperor. Valladolid, 20 June 1528.

Hol. Add.

20 June. 4401. ITALIAN NEWS.

R. O.

Extracts from a letter of Baptista, servant of Gregory (Casale), dated Levezo, near Genoa, 20 June.

Reached this place on the 17th, where Andrea Doria, on account of the plague that was so violent in Genoa, had hardly 60 persons remaining. Urged Doria that an ambassador should be sent to England, telling him in how high esteem he was held by Wolsey. I requested him to lend us a couple of galleys, in order to transport Campeggio to Marseilles. He gave me a favorable answer, and offered one, although it was full of sick people and troops that he had brought from Naples, whom he offered to remove. On my requesting him to let me have a French galley, he offered to send in that behalf to Antonio Doria, but said he could not get an answer for 15 days. In the meanwhile he had despatched a message to the French captain, Berbeyney, who commands the galleys, and I am in hopes of obtaining my object. He thinks the more expeditious plan would be to write to count Filippino at Naples to take the Legate on board at Corneto. This cannot be done before 6 July.

Lat., pp. 3. Endd.

20 June. 4402. For NICHOLAS SYNSON, groom of the Privy Chamber.

R. O.

Annuity of 20 marks out of the issues of the county palatine of Lancaster. Lancaster, 20 June 20 Hen. VIII.

Draft for signed bill, p. 1. Below is written: "Robertus Hogan, master coke for the Kynges mouth." Endd.: "A copy of the Kynges lettre patent for Mr. Hogan diseased."

4403. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,
III.

The doubt I had of your health troubled me extremely, and I should scarcely have had any quiet without knowing the certainty; but since you have felt nothing, I hope it is with you as with us. When we were at Waltham, two ushers, two valets de chambre, your brother, master "Jesonere" (Treasurer), fell ill, and are now quite well; and we have since removed to Hunsdon, where we are very well, without one sick person. I think if you would retire from Surrey, as we did, you would avoid all danger. Another thing may comfort you:—few women have this illness; and moreover, none of our court, and few elsewhere, have died of it. I beg you, therefore, not to distress yourself at our absence, for whoever strives against fortune is often the further from his end.

1328.

Fr.

21 June. 4404. TUKE to WOLSEY.

Yesp. C. 17.

237.

R. M.

St. P. 1. 290.

According to the purpose he expressed in his last letter to Wolsey, sent to Mr. Treasurer to know if he should repair to the King. His messenger found Mr. Treasurer sick of the sweat at Wallingham, and the King removed to Hunsdon, whither he followed him, and delivered him Wolsey's letters to the bishop of London and Tuke, Tuke's to the Bishop, his answer and Tuke's to the Treasurer. The King asked the messenger what disease Tuke had. The messenger told him wrong; and the King bade Tuke come, though he had to ride in a litter, offering to send him one. Rode thither on his mule at a fast pace, with marvellous pain; for on my faith I void blood per virgam. Arrived yesterday afternoon. The King seemed to be satisfied in the matter of the truce, for which he said he at first sent for him, but now he must put him to other business, saying secretly that it was to write his will, which he has lately reformed.

As to the truce, he said the Spaniards had a great advantage in the liberty to go to Flanders, but the English had not like liberty to repair to Spain; and he also complains that my lady Margaret is not bound to make restitution for injuries done by Spaniards out of the property of other Spaniards in Flanders. Answered that the liberty to go to Flanders was beneficial to England, which would thus obtain oil and other Spanish merchandise; and, besides, English cloths, which would have been sent to Spain, can now be sent to Flanders. Showed him also the advantage that French or English men-of-war might have, in doing any exploits beyond the French havens; for directly they have returned to safety on this side the Spanish havens, the Spaniards are without remedy, as all hostilities must cease in the seas on this side.

Told him how glad the French ambassadors were when Wolsey, with marvellous policy, brought the secretaries to that point. Assured him "it was like modeling with them, seeing how little my lady Margaret's council esteemed the truce," by which the French were enabled to strengthen themselves in Italy, and their cost in the Low Countries was lost. The King doubted whether the Spaniards would be bound by my lady Margaret's treaty. Told him she had bound herself that the Emperor should ratify it, and that she would recompence goods taken by Spaniards; adding that if this order had not been taken by Wolsey, the King's subjects passing to Flanders, Iceland, Denmark, Bordeaux, &c. would have been in continual danger of capture. "His highness, not willing to make great replication, said, a little army might have served for keeping of the seas against the Spaniards; and I said, that his army royal, furnished as largely as ever it was, could not save his subjects from many great harms in the length between Spain and Iceland."

The King, being then about to sit down to supper, bid Tuke to rest that night at a gentleman's place near at hand, and return to him this day, when he would speak with him about the other secret matter of his will. "And so, willing to have rewarded me with a dish, if I had not said that I eat no fish," took his leave, and departed two miles to the lodging. On his return this morning, found the King going into the garden, who, after his return, heard three masses, and then called Tuke to the chamber in which he supped apart last night. After speaking of the advantages of this house, and its wholesome air at this time of sickness, the King delivered to him "the book of his said will in many points reformed, wherein his Grace riped me," and appointed Tuke a chamber here, under his privy chamber, bidding him send for his stuff, and go in hand with his business. Expects, therefore, to be here five or six days at least, though he has only a bed that he brought on horse-back, ready to lay down anywhere. Must borrow stuff meanwhile, and is disappointed of the physic which he had ordered at his house in Essex, whither he sent a physician to stay with him for a time, promising him a mark a day, horse meat and man's meat. Must bid him return till he has leave to depart, when he begs Wolsey to let him attend on his physician for eight or ten days; "else I shall utterly, for lack of looking to at this beginning, destroy myself for ever." The King is expected to remain here eight or ten days. Hunsdon, Sunday, 21 June 1528.

1528.

TUKE to WOLSEY—cont.

Hol. Add.

21 June.

4405. REGINALD POLE to ROMULUS AMAZEUS.

Egerton MS.
1998, f. 5.
B. M.

As he had worked for six days since their meeting, has gone into the country to refresh himself. Sends a copy of the letter he promised to write to Joannes Matthæus, that Amazeus may alter it if he wishes, as it concerns him. Will then send it to Rome. Ex villa Rovilliana, xi. cal. Quintilis.

Hol., Lat., p. 1.

22 June.

4406. BRIAN TUKE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends letters received from the bishop of Bath and from Calais. They were brought here (Hunsdon) because Tuke had given no order to the contrary. Has now appointed that all that come shall be sent straight from London to Wolsey. Sends the bishop of Bath's letter to himself, "with a piece of one comen to him (the Bishop) from Sir Gregory, lapped in a paper, perceiving well that in the end all this business shall be found to proceed of Sir Gregory's lightness." Begs that neither his nor the bishop of Bath's fidelity may be suspected. His own post is secret enough. Hunsdon, 22 June 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. and endd.

22 June.

4407. PHILIP SMITH, Priest.

R. O.

Interrogatories ministered to Ph. Smith, of Pepellynge, in the county of Guisnes, son of William ———, alias Smythe, in the presence of William Peterson and John Butteller, LL.B., commissaries in the town of Calais, 22 June 1528.

1. Says he has no degree because he has not read anything except Petrus Hispanus, the first part of Logic, Virgil, Terence, and Boethius De Consolatione.

2. Says he has the following books:—Luther on the Epistles of Peter, Jude, the Galatians, and De pseudo-Epistolis. Francis Lambert on the 12 Minor Prophets, De causa, &c., and his Paradoxes. Melaucthon on St. Paul to the Romans and to the Corinthians, and on the Gospel of St. John. The Psalter of Pomeranius. John Ecolampadius on Isaiah. The New Testament of Erasmus; his treatise De Libero Arbitrio; the two parts of his Hyperaspistes against Luther.*

3. Has had these books two years and a half. 4. Has never heard a proclamation against them. 5. Thinks the writings of Luther should not be condemned except by a General Council. 6. Says he has read them, in order to form his opinions about them. 7. Does not pertinaciously defend them.

* These names are inaccurately written, showing the ignorance of the scribe of the names and writings mentioned.

1528.

8. Has never disputed about them openly. 9. Has sometimes said, in joke, that this or that author held such and such opinions.

10. Is acquainted with Francis Denham. 11. Made his acquaintance at the Staple three years ago, where they talked about poetry, and sometimes about Luther. 12. Says Denham sent him Francis Lambert from Paris, and he gave him other books in return; also that he bought of Denham the Servum Arbitrium of Luther, and Melancthon on St. John. 13. Knows nothing of Denham's opinions. 14. Has no associates. 15. Their intercourse was by letters; 16. chiefly about books and Calais news. 17. Does not remember the particulars. 18. Accepts the opinions of Luther only so far as the Church accepts them. 19. Has had no communications with any one touching these answers.

Signed: Philip Smith, priest.
John Peterson, notary.

Lat., pp. 4. Add. by Sir Rob. Wingfield to Wolsey.

23 June. 4408. THOS. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

"Laud be Jesu, the King's grace is very merry since he came to this house, for there was none fell sick of the sweat since he came hither, and ever after dinner he shoth (shooteth?) to supper time. This morning is told me that Mistress Ann and my lord of Roxfort had the sweat, and was past the danger thereof." Mr. Carre (Carey) begs you to be gracious to his sister, a nun in Wilton Abbey, to be prioress there, according to your promise. Mr. Tuke is here, and lies in the court under the King's privy chamber, so that he may come at the King's pleasure. At every meal the King sends him a dish from his table. The King will tarry here 14 days. Hunsdon, 23 June.

This night, as the King went to bed, word came of the death of Wm. Care.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

23 June. 4409. BRIAN TUKE to WOLSEY.

Titus, B. I. 229.

B. M.

St. P. I. 296.

Yesternight late received Wolsey's letters, dated yesterday, at Hampton Court, with others out of France and Spain. After perusing them I took them to the King, then in secret communication with his physician, Mr. Chamber, in a tower, where he sometimes sups apart. When I came to speak of the truce contained in your letter, the King said I had already sufficiently explained it before; as indeed I had, else I had not been worthy "to wear mine ears on my head," or do a message between two princes. In fact, the King did not appear to wish to hear any more reasoning in that matter, complaining only that the Spaniards had the advantage of being allowed to use the havens of England. I showed him it was not in reality less to the commoditie of the King's realm than the Spaniards, and that when Wolsey had explained it, this would clearly appear. "His Highness, being singularly well satisfied and pleased, said, 'Yea, by God, they dealt with no fool;' meaning, by this word, 'they,' the ambassadors and secretaries; and so bade me read forth." I read the king of Scots' and Gonson's letter. He ordered me to write to the latter to tarry at sea. I told him this had been done by you already, and only required his signature. He ordered Norris to bring both letters; and on my asking to have them signed, Norris said the King would speak with me after supper. "And at reading of your Grace's said letter, his Highness said, 'Well, I will show you anon,' and so bade me read forth." He approves of the article touching relaxation.

In reading the letters from the bishop of Bath, he seemed to think them long; and whilst I read he sorted the letters and copies. When I read of the good offices that Morette had done, he greatly commended him, and also the bishop of Bayonne. When I came to that part of your letter expressing sorrow for my complaint, he began to tell me a medicine pro tumore testicularum. I told him my complaint was in the bladder, and proceeded ex calore in renibus. By and by he showed me the remedies, "as any most cunning physician in England could do."

1528.

BRIAN TUKE to WOLSEY—cont.

When I came to that part of your letter mentioning your counsel to the King for avoiding infection, he thanked your Grace, and showed the manner of the infection; how folks were taken; how little danger there was if good order be observed; how few were dead of it; how Mistress Ann (Boleyn) and my lord Rochford both have had it; what jeopardy they have been in by the turning in of the sweat before the time; of the endeavor of Mr. Buttes, who hath been with them in his return, and finally of their perfect recovery. He begs you will keep out of infection, and that you will use small suppers, drink little wine, "namely, that is big," and once in the week use the pills of Rasis; and if it come, to sweat moderately, and at the full time, without suffering it to run in, &c.

His Highness marvellously commends the French king's religious demeanour on Corpus Christi Day against the damnable behavior of those, worse than Jews, that would do such despite to the blessed images; and he told the gentlemen of his Privy Chamber the whole manner of it, and desired me to read to them the clause concerning it in the bishop of Bath's letter.* When in the Bishop's letter I read the clause, that many noblemen in France were right sorry the king of France had not such a councillor [as Wolsey], the King said, "Yea, by God! I blame them never a deal." He liked the rest of the letter, and the French king's letter to the Pope, and to his ambassador resident in Rome, but thought the latter more effectually worked. He said he would send copies of them to Mistress Ann for her consolation. He likes the French king's letters to the Venetians for Ravenna and Cervia; and thinks, if they are put into the hands of Francis, the Pope will be more compliant, who, he is afraid, is now sticking for fear of the Emperor, by the tarrying of Mr. Stephen's letter. All being read by 11 o'clock at night, he said he would see the news about Spain today; but he has not yet come down. Generally, in going and coming, he turns into my chamber to talk with me about his book.

At this word his Highness came in, asking me how far I had done. Thereupon I put him in mind of the news from Spain, and to sign the king of Scots' letter, which he said he would do soon; and he is gone a-walking. Mr. Cary,† whom I met after he had been with his wife at Plashey, is dead of the sweat. Will repair to Wolsey by short stages of ten miles, going by water through London Bridge. No earthly riches could persuade him to travel much now, as nothing causes the sweat more than much travel and the sun. Is worse than he was. Hunsdon, Tuesday, 23 June 1528.

Hol. Add. Endd.

4410. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,
13.

"The cause of my writing at this time, good sweetheart, is only to understand of your good health and prosperity, whereof to know I would be as glad as in manner mine own; praying God that (and it be His pleasure) to send us shortly together, for I promise you I long for it, howbeit trust it shall not be long to; and seeing my darling is absent, I can no less do than to send her some flesh representing my name, which is hart's flesh for Henry, prognosticating that hereafter, God willing, you must enjoy some of mine, which, He pleased, I would were now. As touching your sister's matter, I have caused Water Welze to write to my Lord my mind therein, whereby I trust that Eve shall not have power to deceive Adam;* for surely, what soever is said, it cannot so stand with his honor but that he† must needs take her his natural daughter now in her extreme necessity. No more to you at this time, mine own darling, but that a while I would we were together of an evening. With the hand of yours," &c.

* See Clerk's letter of 7 June.

† Married to Mary Boleyn.

1528.

23 June. 4411. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
Sc. P. iv. 498.

Has explained to the English wardens his reason for delaying the raid against the Border thieves. The estates of the realm are in part dissatisfied with the administration of justice by Angus as Chancellor. Has summoned a general council to meet at Edinburgh on the 10th July next to reform it. Stirling Castle, 23 June 15 Jac. V. Signed.

Add. Endd.

23 June. 4412. JAMES V. to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Wrote to him lately of the "continuation" of the intended diet and raid upon the broken men, and of the general convention of Lords to meet in Edinburgh on the 10th July next. Hears that greater attempts are beginning upon the Borders of both realms. Has ordered his wardens to keep good rule till new arrangements be made by the convention. Hopes the Earl will do the same. Stirling Castle, 23 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

4413. R. LORD FITZWATER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Care died on Monday last, leaving vacant the stewardship of the duchy of Lancaster in Essex, the constabship of the Castle of Plashe, the keeping of the two parks, and other offices in the King's gift. Asks Wolsey to obtain those above mentioned for him, as they are near his house. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

24 June. 4414. SIR EDWARD GUILDFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

There is great complaint here on account of the scarcity and dearness of corn in the markets. Wheat is at 7 groats and 2d. the bushel, barley at 16d. The price of wheat has risen from 18d., and it is thought it will rise higher till harvest is past, as those who have any to sell know the people must buy for their workmen in haying and harvest. Wishes that those who have corn may be compelled to sell at reasonable price, or that some other relief may be devised. Wonders the prices should rise when there is so much fall corn upon the ground, unless the sellers keep it to make the dearth continue, as it has done these three or four years. Desires him to have the corn now upon the ground viewed, the number of acres specified, and all the farmers in the shire examined as to what corn they have sold, at what price, and to whom, that regrators may be compelled to sell at the price they bought it at. Romney Marsh, where corn and cattle were very plentiful, has fallen into decay. Many great farms and holdings are held by persons who neither reside on them, nor till, nor breed cattle, but use them for grazing, trusting to the Welsh cattle. Encloses some articles which Wolsey told him to send at their last meeting. Writes this after calling together graziers, husbandmen and butchers, who affirm everything stated here. Halden, 24 June. Signed.

* So in the Harl. Misc. copy, which seems there to give the right reading. The Pamphleteer reads: "that we shall not have power to dyslave Adam."

† Meaning Viscount Rochford.

1528.

SIR EDWARD GUILDFORD to WOLSEY—cont.

ii. (1.) Every man to sow the eighth part of his land. (2.) No calves calved between Christmas or Midsummer to be killed, except for honorable men's households, as the King and the Council shall think meet. (3.) Rocks to be destroyed, and their nests taken, and those who suffer them to breed on their ground to be fined. (4.) Constables and other officers are both to arrest vagabonds and thieves, because of the expence of conveying them to gaol. Desires that such prisoners may be received by constables and householders from hundred to hundred, till they come to the gaol. (5.) That his cousin Thos. Wilforde and Thos. Harlackenden may be justices of the "comm" in the commission of the peace in the seventh hundred, as there are none there.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

24 June. 4415. FRANCIS I.

R. O.
Rym. xiv. 258.

Ratification of the truce made with England, the Emperor and Margaret of Savoy. Paris, 24 June 1528.

Fr., vellum. Sealed.

R. O.

2. Similar ratification by Margaret of Savoy, 24 June 1528.

French, vellum, badly mutilated; with Margaret's Great Seal attached. Endd.

24 June. 4416. W. STRANGWAYS and RIC. BELLYSIS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to Wolsey's order, have concluded with the men of Berwick for the "dimission" of Wolsey's fishing at Norham, for which they will pay 120*l.*, half at St. John's day and half at Martinmas, besides sending 20 barrels of salmon yearly to London, Wolsey paying the carriage. Have made a book of the lands of all wards in the bishopric, and have endeavored to find who would give most for their marriages. Will see that fines for making feoffments of lands held of Wolsey without licence are accounted for. The fines Wolsey sent for smelting the lead ore at Gateshead have not yet done it, but have "changed many and divers points of their works in devising new devices." They have promised to set to work in a fortnight. Durham, 24 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's most honourable grace. Endd.

25 June. 4417. The COMMISSIONERS OF KENT to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This Thursday, the 25th, met at Deptford, and were informed that Edmund Tebbe, in whose house they should have lodged, has had the new sickness, and is not yet recovered. Divers have been sick at Greenwich and at Eltham; of which towns great numbers would have appeared if the sessions had been held, with other prisoners from Southwark. As baron Hales also has fallen ill at London, they have, "in a croft nigh unto the street of Deptford," adjourned the sessions to Monday next before the feast of SS. Simon and Jude. Deptford, 25 June. Signed: Ric. Broke—Henry Guildeford—Edward Guildeford—Alex. Colepeper—Edward Wotton—T. Nevyle—Thomas Willughby—Christopher Hales. Sealed.

P. 1. Add. Endd. by Wolsey: Sir William Drury, Sir William Carent, Venerys (?) die domo Passioulis, in domo Icheke.

26 June. 4418. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Ella. 3 Ser.
1. 251.

Was at Court on Trinity Sunday (7 June), Corpus Christi Eve, and Corpus Christi Day (11 June), according to your advertisement. On the eve the King was shriven, and the next day shriven and houselled. "I ministered, as my weakness would serve, in pontificalibus," and found the King very gracious. Whilst I was at London, many were dying of the sweat. I tarried till it came to my house, and was then forced to flee, and therefore did not presume to come into your presence. Reached Woburn in a litter; sometimes on horseback. Several are dead there. As the sweat is in my house I dare not tarry, and therefore I wish leave to go to Rockeden. I have promised a pilgrimage to Our Lady of Walsingham. I have two Lutherans in my house, one of whom wrote the letter I sent you. He is a very heretic, and has done hurt in my diocese. I purpose to aljure them both, and after they have done open penance to consult them to two monasteries. I beg you to remember and punish the infect persons in Oxford; for if sharpness be not used, many will do ill. There are more in Oxford, as appears by libels set up at night on the church doors. I gave one of them to my lord of London. As they are in my diocese, I intend to ride to Oxford myself, about Michaelmas, with your leave, and reduce them to order. Woburn, 26 June.

1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

26 June. 4419. LORD DACRES.

Titus, B. i. 54.

R. M.

Sign manual to the lord Dacres of the North, commanding him not to molest those who served the earl of Cumberland, late warden of the West Marches, but let them enjoy their farms till the quinzaine of St. Michael. Hertford castle, 26 June.

P. 1.

R. O.

2. Draft of the preceding. Without date.

4420. THE BORDERS.

R. O.

" (ry)ots and other unlawfull actes and and tenants lately inhabytynge in of Eke and Leryn in the ce runyshe delyng and sufferaunce [wa]rdes of the same Merches partly ryth to Henry erle of Cumberland."

When the Earl was warden, he rented of the Duchy of Lancaster the ground between the Esk and Leryn, which was being continually harried by Scotch outlaws, and let it by acres to the inhabitants. While he was deputy, they occupied peaceably; but Dacre, since he has been warden, has suffered the Scots to dwell on the Debateable Ground, and to destroy and waste the country abovesaid, so that most of the inhabitants are fled, and their houses burnt. Dacre moved the watch which used to be kept betwixt that country and the Debateable Ground, to the south, leaving it open to the Scots. A list of the murders and the houses burned in the said country by the Armstrongs, Irwyns and others, from 23 April to 30 May; on which day 4 houses at Arthureth, 11 at the Howend, 19 at Stoble, 3 at the Skarbanke, 3 at Stubblepath, 8 at Grawkhal, 6 at Stubbleholme, and 7 at Netherby were burnt, and 86 head of cattle taken away. Before Dacre was deputy, the inhabitants of the country were conformable to law and of good bearing; but he says they have now become transgressors, and have fled the realm, leaving their houses and goods, which he has taken, and the corn growing after their departure is housed by them, their wives and children. It is suspected that these rebels are suffered by "sum pattishynge" made with Dacre or his deputies.

Pp. 3, mutilated at the commencement.

1528.

4421. THE BORDERS.

R. O.

March treasons, felonies, &c. committed by servants and tenants of lord Daere.

Ans. Armstrong, a tenant of Daere's, was indicted at a court held by the lord Warden at Carlisle, 3 Nov. last; but Thos. Wilson, Daere's bailiff at Askerton, and others, resisted Thos. Clifford, deputy captain of Carlisle, who was sent to take him. Robert alias Hobe Tweddale, of Orchard House, Gillesland, is indicted for March treason, but is kept amongst Daere's tenants there. Edward Wygan, also indicted, has fled to Scotland by their help. Armstrong and others have sold horses into Scotland, and, in company with Scotchmen, committed robberies. Last Christmas, when the stewardship of the lands of Holme Abbey was granted by the King to Daere in place of Thos. Dalston, who had previously held it for the earl of Cumberland, lord Warden, Chr. Lee, and other servants of Daere and the Abbot, to the number of 100, armed, went to Holme before the Earl, who was at Skipton in Craven, could send word to Dalston, broke open his chamber, and cast him and all his stuff out. Robt. Jackson, servant of Sir Chr. Daere, with others, broke open the doors, and carried away to Kirkcawald castle the corn of Kirkland tithes, which the Earl farms from the convent of Carlisle, and had collected. Thos. Yares, Daere's bailiff of Drybeke, did the same to the tithes of Bolton in Westmoreland, which the Earl farms from the abbot of St. Mary's; and there have been other similar acts. Lancelot Lancastre, Daere's steward in Westmoreland, carried John Hunt, surgeon, a servant of the Earl, from Cotegill to the house of one Talentyre at Daere, and imprisoned and punished him there for three days.

Daere, as Warden of the West Marches, has given safe-conduct to, and received in his castle of Rowelyf, Jenkyn and Robert Irwin, Chr. and Andro Gramme, and other rebels of the king of Scots, contrary to the peace; since which time they have committed many robberies and March treasons. On March 1, at Loghmabyn Stone, as soon as the wardens of Scotland and England met, Daere's servants and tenants, 200 or 300 in number, went away without licence.

Pp. 5. Endd.

26 June. 4422. SIR J. RUSSELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. L. 391.

Sends letters received by the King, from my lord of Ossory, concerning the taking of the Vice-deputy and the misrule in Ireland. The King thinks none so meet for the government as my lord of Ossory, or Master Butler, his son, and wishes Wolsey to dispatch them as soon as possible. Wolsey knows the son's activity. The father is an honorable man, wise and hardy, but stricken in age, and not so able to follow the wars. The King is much troubled with this disease of sweat. Tonight there have fallen sick my lord and lady Marques, Sir Thos. Cheyney, and Mrs. Croke. Norres and Wallop are recovered. Poynes is dead. Today the King removes to Bishop's Hatfield, accompanied only by the Privy Chamber and Master Kyngston. Last night he took Master Bryan into the Privy Chamber. Hartford, 26 June. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

26 June. 4423. IPSWICH COLLEGE.

P. 8.

Grant to Wolsey of perpetual advowson of St. Matthew's, Ipswich, Suff., with power to unite it to the college of St. Mary, Ipswich. Greenwich. Del. Hampton Court, 26 June 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 30.

1528.

26 June. 4424. THOMAS CARDINAL OF YORK, LEGATE, &c.

P. 8.

Grant of the site, &c. of the monastery or priory of St. Peter, Ipswich, Suff., suppressed by authority of Clement VII., whereby it came into the King's hand. Also the manors of Bournhall and Panington, with appurtenances, in Whersted, Suff., the manor of Hyntelsham, called "the prioric manor in Hyntelsham;" the manors of Horroldes in Burstall, Berneis in Thurlston, Suff.; the advowsons of the churches or rectories of St. Peter, St. Nicholas, St. Mary ad Clavem, and St. Clement, in Ipswich; the advowsons of the churches or rectories of Whersted, Gretingham alias Cretingham and Thurlston, Suff.; 13s. annual rent from a messuage or tenements, and 40 acres of land in Walton, called Matatiston alias Mayleston, Suff.; 5s. annual rent from the manor of Dalbhill in Thurlston, Suff.; 8s. annual rent from a water-mill, called "Horsforde milne," in the parish of St. Matthew without Ipswich. Also lands, &c. in the town of Ipswich, and in the town, hamlets, &c. of Brokes, Wykes, Erwarton, Preston, Washbroke, Chetmundeston, Sutton, Parva Belstede, Magna Belsted, Capell Holton, Stratford, Reyden, Legham, Burstall, Elmisset, Blakenham, Somersham, Neutlsted, Badley, Stoneham, Jernegan alias Jerningham, Mendelisham, Willeham, Codenham, Henley, Thurlston, Rysahmere, Kessgrave, Gretingham alias Cretingham, Clopton, Grundesborough, Haston, Bokelysham, Kenbroke, Trameley, Walton, Muston, Lenington, Whersted, Berham, Branforde, Sprowton, Whitton, Westerfelde, Nacton, Hyntelsham, Chatesham, Hennyngston, Cosbeck, Stoke near Ipswich, and Greenwich, in the parish of St. Clement, in Ipswich, Suff., which came into the King's hands by the suppression of the said monastery; with knights' fees, advowsons, and other appurtenances. Greenwich, 23 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 26 June.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 30.

27 June. 4425. CLEMENT VII. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Reminds him that when he was in the castle of St. Angelo he had recommended that Sebastian Sauli, who had bought alum from the heirs of Agostino Chisi, and taken it to London, might be allowed to sell it free of expence. As the King thought that these letters had been extorted from the Pope against his own consent, he now repeats his request. Viterbo, 27 June 1528.

Lat., vellum. Add.

27 June. 4426. TRUCE.

Harl. MS. 447,

f. 92.

B. M.

Proclamation to be published by the sheriff of London, declaring that an abstinence of war for eight months from 15 June has been concluded between the king of England, the king of France for his dominions on this side of the mountains, and the Emperor for the Low Countries. Two months' notice is to be given of the intention to break the truce. Mercantile intercourse between England and the Low Countries is to be on the same footing as a year before the intimation of war.

Although Spain and the Emperor's lands in Italy are not included, all hostilities in the narrow and main seas shall cease. Westm., 27 June 20 Hen. VIII.

Modern copy, pp. 6.

27 June. 4427. ODET DE FOIX (LAUTREC) to the PRESIDENT OF PROVENCE.

Vit. B. 1.

161^o.

B. M.

On Thursday the 26th inst.† attacked a body of troops escorting the foragers, and defeated them, taking many prisoners and horses, and some plunder. Don Ferrando de Gonzago saved himself by rolling down a mountain, leaving his horse and page. The troops in the town endeavored to rescue them, but were unsuccessful. The camp before Naples, 27 June 1528.

† The 26th was really a Friday.

1528.

ODET DE FOIX (LAUTREC) to the PRESIDENT OF PROVENCE—cont.

Fr., p. 1. Endd.: "Doubles des lettres de Mons. de Lautrech au president de Provence, ambassadeur pour le Roy devers le Pape."

28 June. 4428. J. RUSSELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since the King's coming to Tittenhanger he has been very well, and merrier than he was since his departure from Greenwich. He likes your house very well; "and where he was to fore in great fear and trouble for this plague, and that he left some of his chamber in every place where he went, and as this night, thanked be God, there was none sick, wherof his Majesty is very well comforted. I would not for all the good in England but that he had come to your Grace's house; and this day he has received the good Lord, and so has the more part that be about him, and he rejoices much that he has done so, and says that he is armed towards God and the world." He has eaten more meat today than he did three days before. When he heard you were coming hither, he was sorry that you should come in the "cfeuseon" (infection), especially as there is no lodging for you. Tittenhanger, 28 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

[28 June.] 4429. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The King removed this day from Hertford to Hatfield because of the sweat. My Lord Marquis, his wife, Mr. Chene, the Queen's almoner, Mr. Toke, are fallen sick, and the Master of the Horse* complains of his head. Nevertheless, the King is merry, and takes no conceit (?), but heartily recommends him to you, and prays you to [do] as he does. Yesterday the King sent Wolsey [as a] "preservative, nanws cresty" (manus Christi), with divers other things.

Hol., p. 1. Sealed and add.

28 June. 4430. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 86.

Understands by his letters of the 11th their prudence and industry in the King's cause, and the coming and the legation of Campeggio. Returns the King's and his own thanks. Is anxious that Campeggio's departure should be speeded. Gardiner is to go to Venice to urge the restitution of the cities (Cervia and Ravenna) in the King's name. We have pressed the king of France to do the same. At the More, 28 June 1528. Signed: ("vester tanquam frater.")

Lat., in Vannes' hand. Add. and sealed. Endd.

28 June. 4431. JOHN HACKET to WOLSEY.

Galba, B. ix.

126.

B. M.

Received on the 24th Wolsey's letter dated 18th inst., and declared the whole to my Lady. She was thankful for the truce, and will act with the King and Wolsey for a general peace to the best of her power. She will be ready at all times to make restitution for English ships and goods taken, and asks Wolsey to do the like in England. As to Wolsey's demand for the delivery of three heretics,† after consultation with the cardinal of Liege, lords Berghes, Palermo, Hoghestrat and others, it was determined that the Emperor himself could not send any heretic as prisoner to another country without previous examination here, and that "the first examination done, the execution of the forwoyance ought to be executed by the advice of the inquisitors of the faith of these countries." They have therefore concluded to arrest them with their books, and desire Wolsey to send one or two learned men, whom my Lady will assist with the inquisitors in the examination. If they are found guilty, they shall either be sent to England or punished here. Encloses letters from Berghes, one of the most loving and surest servants that the King and Wolsey have here. Machlyng, 28 June 1528.

* Sir Nic. Carew.

† Tyndale, Roy and another?

1528.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

28 June.

Galba, B. ix.

128.

R. M.

4432. J. LORD DE BERGHES to WOLSEY.

Supposes Wolsey knows that he has always been ready to assist the King and his subjects. Hears that a quantity of merchandise has been got ready to bring hither; and as the fair at Anvers is closed, asks Wolsey to order it to be sent to his town of Berghes, where the merchants shall be treated as if in their own houses. Malines, 28 June 1528. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

28 June.

R. O.

4433. JOHN CHEKYNOR to CROMWELL.

Begs to know by the bearer, chaplain to Sir Thos. Gage, if Cromwell has received his account. Is in debt and pressed for money. There is not a penny in the count but was spent on Cromwell's scholars. "I speak this because of my expenses when I did come to London first at your sending for." Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, 28 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Mr. Thomas Cromwell at London, beside the Austyns Freys.

28 June.

R. O.

4434. LORD DARCY.

Due to Thos. Lord Darcy, at Easter 19 Hen. VIII., for his half-yearly fees: As seneschal of the honor of Pountfretre, 12*l.*; as constable of Pountfretre Castle, 66*s.* 8*d.*; as constable and seneschal of Knaresburgh Castle, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; and of his annuity, 50*l.* = 72*l.*, of which 7*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* is to be deducted for the fee of Roundehey and Rothwellhey parks, and 4*l.* paid to Thos. Bonham, receiver-general of the duchy of Lancaster, John Burgoyne, auditor, and John Plumsted, clerk. The remainder received by Leonard Hall, 28 June 20 Hen. VIII. Signed by Burgoyne.

Lat. Add. to lord Darcy, and endd. by him.

R. O.

2. Pountfret.—Receipt by John Plumsted, deputy of Thos. Bonham, Esq., receiver general of the duchy of Lancaster, of 7*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* from Thos. lord Darcy, as the half year's fee of the parks of Roundehey and Rothwellhey, due at Easter 19 Hen. VIII. 28 June 20 Hen. VIII. Signed.

Lat.

29 June.

4435. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE.

For Thomas cardinal, archbishop of York, &c.

Licence to found a college in the parish of St. Matthew, in the town of Ipswich, Suff., where the said Cardinal was born, or in any convenient place in the said town, to consist of one dean or master, 12 priests (sacerdotes), eight clerks, and eight singing boys, and poor scholars, and 13 poor men, to pray for the good estate of the King and of the said Cardinal, and for the souls of the said Cardinal's father and mother, &c., and of one under-teacher (hipodidasculus) in grammar for the said poor scholars and others from any part of the realm coming to the said college. Also grant of incorporation to the said college when it shall be founded, under the name of the Cardinal's college of St. Mary in Ipswich, with mortmain licence to endow the said college to the annual value of 1,000*l.* for the erection of chantries and 1528.

CARDINAL'S COLLEGE—cont.

appointment of anniversaries and other prayers in the burial place of the said Cardinal. Hampton Court, 29 June.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 32. (Two inrolments, m. 32 and 33.)

R. O.

2. Letters patent for the same.

Vellum. Great seal attached.

R. O.

3. Duplicate; with a remarkable coloured miniature of Henry VIII. sitting on a throne, and a top line tricked with a pomegranate, thistle, rose, fleur-de-llys, and lily, with the royal arms and crests.

Vellum. Great seal attached.

R. O.

4. Other letters patent for the same; the clause respecting the statute of mortmain being altered.

Vellum. Great seal attached.

R. O.

5. Draft of the same.

29 June. 4436. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. i. 302. I have received Mr. Arundel's letters, showing that for extreme danger of the sweat your Grace intends to remove to Hampton Court. The King is sorry you will be so far from him. He is this day advertised of the death of young Browgton, by which, as he said, he had two goodly wards to bestow, namely, the two sisters; although we think that the elder is of full age, and the younger is your ward by the King's grant. My lady Russell takes the death of her son so sore that Russell fears, if he should not obtain your favor for the wardship of the younger sister, it will be her utter undoing. He will give you as much for her as any other man will do. St. Peter's Day.

Hol. Add.

29 June. 4437. J. RUSSELL to TH. ARUNDEL.

R. O.
St. P. i. 303. My son Browthton is departed this day. "Thus day the Kyng sayde that he hade to good inareage yn hys hondes as warddes, and I schwede hyne that one was owt of herre wardeschype; and so sche ys, for sche ys 15 yere wolde w'tyn 3 monethes." I think that one is Wolsey's ward, and have therefore written to Hennege to let me have the preferment [of] her for my money, paying as much as another. Will be glad of Wolsey's favor, as great solicitation will be made for her, and the King has already been asked by some to write in their behalf to the Cardinal. Tittenhanger, 29 June.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

[30 June.] 4438. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. i. 303. The King begs you to be of good comfort, and do as he does. He is sorry that you are so far off, and thinks that if you were at St. Alban's you might every hour hear the one of the other, and his physicians attend upon you, should anything happen. News is come of the death of Sir Wm. Compton. Suits are made for his offices, and the King wishes to have a bill of them. All are in good health at the Court, and they that sickened on Sunday night are recovered. The King is merry, and pleased with your "mynone house" here. Tuesday.

P.S.—I will not ask for any of those offices for myself, considering the little time I have been in the King's service. The King sent for Mr. Herytage today, to make a new window in your closet, because it is so little.

Hol. Add. Endd.

1528.

30 June.

4439. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.R. O.
St. P., I. 304.

Is glad the King has escaped the plague. Has just heard of the death of Sir Wm. Compton, and advises the King to stay the distribution of his offices for a time. Is sorry to be so far away from the King, but will at any time attend him with one servant and a page to do service in the King's chamber. Hampton Court, 30 June. Signed.

Add.

30 June.

4440. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.Le Grand, III.
143.

Such conversations as he has had with Wolsey he has pretty well foreseen. Will not presume to say things are going wrong, but if they go on, you will not gain much. I protest, if I have not my recall, I will go without it; and whoever would whip me, not being my master, shall find I fear less 100 deaths than one dishonor. Job would have lost patience in my place. Whatever you have done, I hear from Richard d'Albene that he has not a crown, and I am sure if my man had one, he has given it him. He would have spent 1,000 crowns in nine months in that stupid way;—a good thing to resolve me, seeing I had assigned all my property to bankers and bull-brokers before my departure.

News has arrived that Campeggio is coming. Dr. Stephen will be soon at Lyons, who is coming to prepare his lodging; "et puis en dancera qui pourra." The young lady* is still with her father. The King keeps moving about for fear of the plague. Many of his people have died of it in three or four hours. Of those you know there are only Poowits [Sir Fras. Poyntz], Carey and Cotton (Compton) dead; but Feuguillem, the marquis [Dorset], my lord William, Bron (Brown), Careu, Bryan [Tuke], who is now of the Chamber, Nourriz (Norris), Walop, Chesney, Quinston (Kingston), Paget, and those of the Chamber generally, all but one, have been or are attacked. Yesterday some of them were said to be dead. The King shuts himself up quite alone. It is the same with Wolsey. After all, those who are not exposed to the air do not die. Of 40,000 attacked in London, only 2,000 are dead; but if a man only put his hand out of bed during twenty-four hours, it becomes as stiff as a pane of glass. So they do need patience; but I would sooner endure that than what is inflicted on me, for it does not last so long. But, with your aid, or even without it, I mean to be off. After my protests for the last four months, no one will be able to blame me. Let those who have the charge look to it. Moreover, in choosing the persons, you had better not send an Italian, for Wolsey will not have one. Some days ago he told me he would not trust them for their partiality; besides, a man who speaks Latin is required, and he has often been in terrible difficulty for want of it; but you have plenty of bishops and others who will do. In any case, don't send a man who will not spend money, else matters will not mend. I do not speak without reason.

As Wolsey told me he would cause the money of the contribution to be paid to me for you, I spoke to a merchant that it might be paid you at Lyons. Let me know how much is due to you at the end of July, if, as I suppose, it begins on the first day of this month.

Wolsey is informed of great overtures made by the Emperor to the Venetians and duke of Bari, which he thinks they will accept, and that the Duke's ambassador had yielded to the Emperor the investiture of Milan, pretending he had been forced to do so.

The King and Wolsey wish a confirmation by France of the privileges of the isles of Grenesay (Guernsey),—a sort of neutrality which they obtained long ago from the Pope. Such a confirmation was made by Louis XI. London, 30 June.

1528.

Du BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

P.S.—There have died at Wolsey's house the brother of the earl of Derby and a nephew of the duke of Norfolk; and the Cardinal has stolen away with a very few people, letting no one know whither he has gone. The King has at last stopped twenty miles from here, at a house built by Wolsey, finding removals useless. I hear he has made his will, and taken the sacraments, for fear of sudden death. However, he is not ill. I have not written this with my own hand, as you do not read it easily when I write hastily.

Fr. Add.

30 June. 4441. CROMWELL to THOS. ARONDELL.

R. O.

Has received Wolsey's letters, telling him to be diligent about the perfection of the college in Ipswich. Wishes first to know who is to be dean, and wants the bill assigned of the King's licence for the erection of the college, so that the signet and privy seal may be made out upon it. Asks also whether Wolsey intends the next dean to be elected by the college, or whether he will remit it to be done according to his statutes; whether he intends to give absolutely to his college in Oxford the late monastery of Wallingford, the parsonage of Rudbye, and the other lands he has purchased from Sir Ant. and Robt. Ughtred in cos. York and Lincoln, or whether he intends to give them in exchange for the lands belonging to Snape, Dodneshe, Wyke, and Horkisley for his college at Ipswich.

He must not proceed to the erection of the college till 21 July, as the offices in Chancery will not expire, and he cannot have the site of the late monastery of St. Peter's till then. When he knows Wolsey's pleasure will perform everything with the help of the Chief Baron. Asks for Wolsey's signature to the letter for the poor man of Arragoser, who is lying here to his utter undoing; and to a letter in French to the governors of Dieppe for the delivery of Englishmen's goods taken at sea. The minute of the erection is ready drawn. London, 30 June. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

4442. SIR WILL COMPTON.

R. O.

Will of Sir William Compton, made on 8 March 1522, 14 Hen. VIII. Desires to be buried at Compton in Warwickshire, beside his ancestors:—That if his wife die before he return home from his journey, she be afterwards brought to Compton and buried there. Bequeaths to his wife all his movables at Bettyschorne, and at the great park of Windsor, and the plate which belonged to Francis Cheyny, "my predecessor." If his wife be delivered of a son, bequeaths to him all his household stuff at Compton, with the plate which was given him by the French king in a schedule. His wife to have the control of it till the child be of age. If he have a son, bequeaths to each of his daughters 1,000 marks for their marriages, and 100 marks in plate. Wills that 40 pair of vestments be made of one suit, to be distributed to the parish churches in the counties of Warwick and Worcester, adjoining to Compton. All his apparel to be used in making vestments and other works of charity. Bequeaths to the abbey of Wincheomb his wedding gown of tynnen satin, to make a vestment that they may pray for the souls of his ancestors. Wills his executors to release to the monastery of Denny all the debts they owe him, and bequeaths to them 10*l.* for an obit. Bequeaths goods to the value of 200 marks to be distributed to poor householders, and to the marriages of poor maids in the counties of Warwick and Worcester. Wills that a tomb of alabaster be prepared for his father, with his arms graven upon it. Bequeaths to the King his little chest of ivory with gilt lock, 1528.

"and a chest board under the same, and a pair of tables upon it," with all the jewels and treasure enclosed, now in his wife's custody; also "certain specialties to the sum of 1,000 marks, which I have of Sir Thos. Bollen, knight," for money lent to him. Wills that his children have their plate on coming to their full ages; i.e., on the males coming to the age of twenty-one, and the females to the age of eighteen.

Bequests to his sister [Elizabeth*] Rodney, and his cousin John Rodney, her son. Wills that his mother's body be taken up and buried at Compton. Bequest to the daughter of his aunt Appulby. 20*l.* to be put in a box at the abbey of Winchcombe, to make defence for all such actions as may be wrongfully taken against his wife or his executors. Two chantries to be founded in his name at Compton, to do daily service for the souls of the King, the Queen, my lady Anne Hastings, himself, his wife and ancestors. The priests to be appointed by the abbot of Winchcombe, or, failing him, the abbot of Evesham. 5 marks a year to be paid to the parson of Compton to keep a free grammar school. 100*l.* a year to be paid to his wife during her life, for her jointure, besides her inheritance in Barkeley's lands. Bequests to the monasteries of Evesham, Hayles, Winchcombe, Worcester, Croxton, the charterhouses of Henton and Coventry, for obits; to Sir William Tyler, Sir Thos. Lynne, Thos. Baskett and George Lynde; to his servants who happen to be with him this journey; to John Draper, his servant, and Robt. Bencare,† his solicitor; to Griffin Gynne, now with Humphrey Brown, serjeant-at-law, for his learning; and to lady Anne Hastings. Executors appointed: Dame Warburgh my wife, the bishop of Exeter, Sir Henry Marney, lord privy-seal, Sir Henry Guildford, Sir Ric. Broke, Sir John Dantay, Dr. Chomber, Humphrey Brown, serjeant-at-law, Thos. Leson, clk., Jas. Clarell and Thos. Unton. Appoints my lord bishop of Canterbury supervisor of his will. Gifts to the executors.

Copy, pp. 26, with title page in Wolsey's hand: "Copia testamenti Willm. Compton, militis."

R. O.

2. A catalogue of bonds, receipts, inventories, and accounts belonging to Sir Will. Compton.

Pp. 10.

ii. A further catalogue of documents belonging to Thos. Leson, Bachelor of Divinity, one of them as late as 30 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 9.

R. O.

3. Bargain and sale by Sir Henry Guildford, Humphrey Brown, Thos. Hutton and Thos. Lesson, as executors of Sir William Compton, to Sir Thomas Arundell, of certain tenements in St. Swithin's Lane, [London,] lately in the possession of Lewis . . . and Humphrey . . . as executors of Sir Richard Wingfield.

Roll of paper. Imperfect, the beginning being lost.

R. O.

4. Inventory of the goods of Sir Wm. Compton in his house in London.

Ready money, gold and silver, 1,33*l.* 7*s.* 0*d.* Jewels of gold and silver, 89*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* Gilt plate, 85*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* Parcel gilt plate, 31*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* White plate, 90*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* Silks, 210*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* = 2,634*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*

Endd.

R. O.

5. Names of the officers upon the lands late Sir Wm. Compton's.

Stewards. — Humphrey Brown: Tottenham, Middx., Rokecalds and Chobham, Essex, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Finchley, Middx., 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Thos. Pace: Bettythorn, Asheley Arnewood, Exbury and Loupe, Mynted Totton and Barkeley, Playteford, Gremsted, Byrumerton, Washford, Stowford and Chadenwyche, 40*s.* Roger Badger: Netherham, Kyngton Magna, Langenham and Elme, Somerset, 20*s.* John Goer: Lokyngton and Hope, Wilts and Gloucester, 6*s.* 8*d.* Thos. Umpton: Chepyng Norton, Oxon, 26*s.* 8*d.* John Palmar:

* Supplied from an after mention of her name.

† Elsewhere the name looks like Benlare, and even here there is a dot that seems to indicate an i instead of a c.

1528.

SIR WILL. COMPTON—cont.

Compton Vynnyata, Compton Longa, Walford Magna and Parva, Tyshoo, Whatecote and Evenlode, Warw. and Worc., 53s. 4d. Maxstock, Warwicksh., 26s. 8d. Robt. Haulbrige: Hertyshorn, Derbysh., 26s. 8d. Baudreen Malett: Overn Dencourt, Bucks, 26s. 8d. Sir Wm. Purre: Aldwyncle, Northt., 26s. 8d. Yerdley and Asheby, Northt., 10l. Harwold and Thurlighe, 66s. 8d. Scotton and Browton, Yorks., 20s. Lewesham, Wreilton and Crancholme, Yorks., 26s. 8d.

Balliffs.—Roger Tusaur: Tottenham, Middx., 4l. Gostmiph: Fynchley, 60s. 8d. John Granger: Greenwich, Kent, 66s. 8d. Thos. Pace: Bettisthorne, Hants, 60s. 8d. Ric. Tryghard: Asheley, Arnewed, 6s. 8d. Rob. Johnston: Mynsted Totton and Barkeley, Playteford, Grymsted, More Abston, Hymmerton, Quidhamton and Wilton, Wisheford and Stowford, Hants, 60s. 8d. Wm. Aubrey: Chadenwiche, Westknoyle, Norton and Kylmyngton, Kyngton Magna and Langenham, 40s. John Wales: Netherham, Somerset, 26s. 8d. Roger Badger: Elme, Somers., Lokyngton, Culston and Horton, Wilts, Chelnam and Hope, Glouc., Evenlode, Worc., 66s. 8d. Robt. Busby: Chepyng Norton, Oxon, 60s. 8d. Martin Mountford: Tyswo, Warw., 60s. 8d. John Ingram: Compton Longa, Welford Magna and Parva, Warw., 40s. Maxstock, 30s. 4d. Thos. Spencer, keeper of the castle, 53s. 4d.; of the park, 60s. 8d. Ralph De Benchehyn: Hertyshorn, Derbysh., 40s. Wm. Sambuche, keeper of Compton Park, 60s. 8d. Wm. Warrall, keeper of the garden, &c., at Compton, 6l. 13s. 4d. Ant. Fenton: Lewesham and Wreilton, Yorks., 60s. 8d. Wm. Cony: Aldwyncle, Northt., 40s. Wm. Fyll: Asheby, 40s. Wm. Thorne: Yerdley, 60s. 8d. Harold, Beds, 40s. John Brewerton: Thurlighe, Beds, 26s. 8d.

Pp. 6.

R. O.

6. Inquisition taken in Middlesex on the death of Sir Will. Compton, 20 Hen. VIII.

Found that Ric. Broke, serjeant-at-law, [Walter Rodney], Will. Dyngley and John Dyngley, now surviving, with [Sir Rob. Throgmerton and Will. Tracy,] deceased, were seized of the manors of Tottenham, Pembrokes, Bruses, Daubeneyes and Mokkynga, with lands in Tottenham, Edelmeton and Enfeld, to Compton's use; and that Geo. earl of Shrewsbury, Henry earl of Essex, John Bouchier lord Bernes, [Sir Rob. Ratclyf,]* Rob. Brudenell, justice of the King's Bench, Ric. Sacheverell [and Thos. Brokesby,]* now surviving, with [Sir Ralph Shyrley,]* deceased, were seized of the manor of Fyncheley and lands in Fyncheley and Hendon to his use. His son, Peter Compton, is his heir, and is six years old and over.

Draft in Wriothesley's hand, pp. 3.

R. O.

7. Citation by Wolsey, as legate, of Sir Wm. Compton, for having lived in adultery with the wife of lord Hastings, while his own wife, dame ———, was alive, and for having taken the sacrament to disprove it.

Lat., pp. 5: an unfinished copy. Endd. by Wolsey.

4443. SIR WILL. COMPTON.

R. O.

Inventory of the goods of Sir Will. Compton at his places in London, Compton, Bettisthorpe, the Great Park of Windsor, Sir Walter Stoner's place. Total of movables, 4,485l. 2s. 3½d. "Sperat dettes," estimated at 3,511l. 13s. 4d. "Chntell Royall," 666l. 13s. 4d.

Wards.—One ward that cost 466l. 13s. 4d.; another of 500 marks land; the third, "Sir Geo. Salynger's son and his heir." There is at Windsor Great Park plate embezzled to the value of 579l. 2s. 6d., as appears by a bill found in Sir William's place at London. Desperate debts estimated at 1,908l. 6s. 8d. Debts owing by him estimated at 1,000l.

Pp. 2. Endd.

* The names in brackets are crossed out. The inquisition actually returned adopted the alterations in this draft.

1528.

4444. HERESY.

R. O.

Articles exhibited by Wolsey against a supposed heretic.

(1) That Wolsey is legate to Henry VIII. for his whole life, by the appointment of Leo X., Adrian VI., and Clement VII., (2) with jurisdiction over all his dominions, (3) and therefore over the accused, who is a parish priest (parochianus ecclesie parochialis) of ———*, in the city of London; (4) that the accused was baptised and professed the Catholic Faith; (5) that he knew of Luther's condemnation by Leo X., and to ask him when he first heard of it; (6) and the same of his writings; (7) that he knew of the publication of the bull against him; (8) that he possessed, read, or heard read books of Luther's after the condemnation; (9) that he knows that those who read, print, &c. Luther's books are liable to be punished for heresy; (10) that he is an adherent of Luther; (11) that he held and taught Luther's heresies, that the Pope is not the successor of Peter nor the vicar of Christ over all the churches in the world, but that he and the ministers under him are Antichrists; (12) that he ate meat on fast days. (13.) That he taught that the Church could not ordain fasts, and that Christians could neglect them without mortal sin; (14) that the existence of Purgatory could not be proved from Scripture; (15) that the body of Christ is not in the Sacrament, but only bread and wine; (16) that a bad priest cannot consecrate, nor confer baptism or any sacrament; (17) that the laity, non communicati sub utraque specie, are deceived by the Church; (18) that the power of the Pope and other bishops is equal; (19) that there is no foundation in Scripture or the early fathers for the division of repentance into contrition, confession and satisfaction; (20) that no one ought to presume to confess venial sins, nor all mortal sins, for it was impossible to discover them all; (21) that the lowest priest is as efficacious in the sacrament of penance or remission of sin as a Pope or bishop, and, in the absence of a priest, any Christian, even a woman or boy, would suffice; (22) that it is a great error to take the Eucharist, trusting to this, that they have confessed, and are not conscious of mortal sin; that such persons eat and drink judgment to themselves; whereas if they trusted that they would obtain grace thereby, this faith alone would make them pure and worthy; (23) that indulgences are of no use; (24) that excommunications are only external penalties, and do not deprive a man of the prayers of the Church, and that Christians should be taught rather to love excommunication than to dread it; (25) that neither the Church nor the Pope can fix articles of faith, or laws of morals or good works; (26) that freewill after sin is merely a name, and that while a man does what is in him he sins mortally.

Pp. 6, Lat.

R. O.

2. Articles exhibited by Wolsey against some one charged with heresy.

Wolsey was appointed Legate for life to Henry VIII., by Leo X., Adrian VI., and Clement VII., (2) with jurisdiction over all the said King's dominions. (3) The accused, being a parish priest † of Stonehouse, Worcester dioc., is under his jurisdiction. (4) He was baptized and professed the Catholic Faith; (5) believed, assented, and preached certain heresies condemned by the Church; (6) expounded and wrote annotations on the Scriptures out of his own mind, abandoning the doctrines of the Church; (7) that he said that prayers ought not to be made for the dead, and that there was no Purgatory; (8) that all prelates after the Apostles, and all the Popes, were false prophets and Antichrists; (9) that no image, even of the Virgin, ought to be adored; (10) that fasts ought not to be kept, and were not appointed by Christ; (11) that all regulars living according to their rules were robbers and thieves; (12) that clerks cannot possess money or property; (13) that praying in churches, and the ceremonies of the Church,

* Blank in MS.

† parochianus parochie de Stonehouse.

1528.

HERESY—cont.

were bad, and that prayers ought only to be in secret; (14) that he held many false opinions about the articles of faith, sacraments, pilgrimages, and indulgences; (15) that all Christians were kings and priests, and that both clerks and laymen can consecrate the body of Christ; (16) that the Lord's Prayer only ought to be used; (17) that he knows that a certain Martin Luther was condemned for heresy by Leo X.; and let him be asked whether he ever knew or heard Luther or any of his disciples preach, whether he ever heard him spoken of in his province, and when he first heard of his condemnation. (18.) Ask him when he first knew that all Luther's books were condemned. (19.) That he knows that Leo published a bull through all Christendom in condemnation of Luther and his books; (20) that he knows that all who kept, read, printed, published, or defended the said books were liable to be punished for heresy; (21) that after the condemnation he kept, read, &c. some of the said books; (22) that he has approved, preached, and favored by word and deed Luther and his opinions; (23) that he brought or caused to be brought to England books by him or his disciples, and to ask him by whom; (24) that he burnt certain of the books after his arrival in England; and if he says yes, ask him when, where, and before whom; (25) that he had, sold and gave away some of the said books; and if he confesses, ask him to whom; (26) whether he was afraid of being discovered reading or expounding the opinions expressed in a German book of Luther's which he kept; if he says yes, let him confess that the book contains errors.

Lat., pp. 6.

4445.

GRANTS IN JUNE 1528.

June.

GRANTS.

4. Rich. Foster, yeoman usher of the Crown. To have the Crown free of 6d. a day, vice Rob. Withers, deceased. Greenwich, 19 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 4 June.—P.S.

4. Rob. Putnam alias Dymarabe, of London, fishmonger. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 4 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

4. Tho. Hyll of Melles, Somers., jun., tucker, and Agnes Pny of Melles. Pardon for breaking into the house of Margery Robyns, widow, and robbing her of 95*l.* on 31 Oct. 15 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 4 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 23.

5. John Pen. To be rider of the chace of Sutton, Warwick, vice Sir Hen. Willoughby, deceased. Greenwich, 21 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 5 June.—P.S.

5. Anth. Mores of Calais, a native of Alexandria de la Paye in Lombardy. Denization. Westm., 5 June.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

5. Reprisal.—Constat and exemplification, at the request of John Phylips, of patent 6 Feb. 13 Hen. VIII. authorizing reprisal against France and Brittany, in behalf of Christ. Coo.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 11.

10. John Madson, servant to Katharine, Queen Consort. Pension of 13*l.* a day. Del. Hampton Court, 10 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

10. Edw. Ingham, yeoman usher of the Chamber. Grant, in reversion, of the fee of the crown of 6*d.* a day, granted to Wm. Standon by patent 28 May 5 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 10 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 27.

10. Wm. Sparke, of Boreston, in the parish of Halwill, Devon, husbandman. Pardon for having robbed John Jackson and John Pernell at Badparke of certain white rams. Del. Westm., 10 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 29.

12. Tho. Griffith and Joan his wife. Licence to enfeof Sir Rob. Ratclyff, viscount Fitzwater, Sir John Tuchett, lord Dawdleygh (sic), Sir Ric. Whetill, Sir John Dygby, Tho. Nevill and Edw. Griffith, and the heirs of the said Edw., of the moieties of the manors of Obblegh and Childokford, Somers. and Dorset, and of the advowson of the church of Childokford; and to the said visc., &c. to re-enfeof thereof the said Tho. and Joan to hold the premises in survivorship, with remainder to Rise Griffith, a. and h. of the said Tho. and Joan, and the heirs male of his body, with contingent remainders to John Griffith, brother of the said Rise, and to others. Westm., 12 June.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 3.

12. Geo. Morys of London, merchant. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 12 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

12. The mayor and burgesses of Redyngra. Mortmain licence to acquire possessions to the annual value of 5*l.* Del. Westm., 1528.

June.

GRANTS.

12 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

15. Roger Radclyff, gentleman usher of the Chamber. Grant of the castle of Oreham, Rutland, with lands, &c., forfeited by Edw. Duke of Buckingham; on surrender of patent 24 April 20 Hen. VIII. granting the same in a different form. Del. Westm., 15 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 12.

16. John Asshton, one of the auditor-accountants of Buckingham's lands. Reversion of the office of one of the auditors of the Exchequer, the present auditors being John Sydley, Tho. Tanworth, Edw. Chamber, John Goldyng and Wm. Fryce. Del. Hampton Court, 16 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

17. Sir Edw. Beynnton. Grant, in tail male, of certain lands in Cawline, Wilts, parcel of the manor of Chirrell, Wilts, parcel of Warwyke lands, held by Henry Parsons, at the annual rent of 4 marks. Del. Westm., 17 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

Duplicate of the preceding, undated.—Pat. p. 1, m. 20.

17. Deryk Peterson alias Peter Huor, coppermith alias cooper, native of Gelderland. Licence to retain in his service four journeymen. Greenwich, 15 June.—Del. Hampton Court, 17 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 21.

17. Wm. Hutchins, gentleman of the chapel. Corrody of the monastery of Tywardeth, Cornwall, once Simon Burton, resigned. Greenwich, 14 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 17 June.—P.S.

20. Gaol Delivery.

Hertford castle: Sir John More, Tho. Inglefeld and Ric. Lynesell.

The same justices for Colchester castle, Gildesford castle, and Lewes castle.

Andoverbury gaol: Sir Rob. Brudenell, Sir Ric. Brooke, Tho. Fitzhugh and Wm. Wylt.

The same justices for Helford castle, Cambridge castle, Ipswich gaol, Huntingdon castle, Norwich castle, and Bury St. Edmund's.

York castle: Sir Anth. Fitzherbert, Ric. Lyster and Jan. Fox.

The same justices for Appulby castle, Carlisle castle, Newcastle-on-Tyne, York city, and Newcastle-on-Tyne (town) gaol.

Winchester castle: Sir John Fitzjames, Wm. Shelley and Rob. Daeres.

The same justices for Fynsherton Anger, Dorchester, Bekester, Exeter castle, and Lancaster castle.

Northampton castle: Sir Humph. Conynghesby, Rob. Norwich and John Jennour.

The same justices for Obraham gaol (Rutland), Warwick county gaol, Coventry, Leicester gaol, Leicester (town) gaol, Nottingham gaol, Nottingham (town) gaol, Derby gaol, Lincoln gaol, and Lincoln (city) gaol.

Oxford castle: Sir John Porte, Wm. Rudhale, and Tho. Brudenell, sen.

The same justices for Worcester, Gloucester, Hereford, Shrewsbury, and Stafford gaols.

Westm., 20 June.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 20d.

22. Walt. Walshe, groom of the Chamber. To be master of the hunt in the royal park of Bushbury, Wore., as held by Wm. Tracy deceased, and to have, besides other emoluments, a cottage and land called Strippeling-place. Hunnedon, 23 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

22. Nich. Gerebrande alias Clayse Calebrand alias Clayse or Classe Jerbrand, shoemaker, native of Holland, in the dominions of the Emperor Charles V. Pardon of all offences against the statute concerning apprehension of aliens. Greenwich, 15 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 23 June.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

23. Hen. Mary, of Exeter, seneschal of the duchy of Cornwall; John bp. of Exeter; Sir John Arundell, receiver; and Sir Peter Eggecombe, Sir Tho. Denys, Sir John Chammond, John Turnor, and Guthlac Overton, auditors, of the said duchy; Wm. Loure, John Tregian, Wm. Godolgham, John Thomas, serjeant-at-arms, and John Godolgham, comptroller of the coinage of tin in co. Cornw. and Devon, Walt. Berlace and Tho. Cokkes. To be commissioners and assessors of the duchies of Cornw. and Devon. Del. Westm., 23 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

26. John Middleton, man-at-arms at Calais. To be keeper of the tolls at the turnpike of Marke, in the lordship of Marke, and also at Oye Schuse, in the lordship of Oye, in the marches of Calais, with fees of 11*l.* 12*s.* a year. Greenwich, 19 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 26 June.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 18.

28. Tho. Rogers of Plynton, Devon. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Hertford, 25 June 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

28. Ric. Camme, gentleman usher of the Chamber of princess Mary. Lease of certain pastures in the lordship of Abbateley, parcel of Warwick's lands, Wore., in the several tenures of Tho. Nutte, John Fyde, Elizabeth Kay and Wm. Gladwepe; also lands in the lordship of Bushbury, parcel of Warwick's lands, late in the several tenures of John White and Rob. Cole; at various annual rents, and 12*d.* of increase. Del. Westm., 28 June 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 23.

1528.

4446. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 216.

B. M.

" of any good will but rather a de they being now so far onwards, if they should attain nothing thereby without any profit, reckoning that so nigh to the point as by all ly[keli]hood they now should be, and being in custody and could be no great treating of alterin[g] with reproach, and that the Emperor in soch[e] herald being so nigh at hand, and kn[ow]ing his message already as he doth, would do li[t]tle that was of great importance unto such time as he [had heard the said] herald's message. The best that we can is this. Master Silvester, between whose the heralds from the confines there can be in time, doubtless will use diligence will train his journey as long as know well that he is instructed so fro shall, albeit they will not now be a Master Silvester use diligence and and negligence, it is likely enough shall have trained some part of his arrival of the herald or else right wisely pondereth, it should impossible practising of this in una manu panem, in altera Emperor's letters aforesaid, ye gs demeanor, and think that h of honor if he did otherwise. A matters of Naples, the King showed [us that he had heard] by sundry advices that the city was n[ow] in great extr[em]ity, and not like to continue long unta[ken]. He also said he had word assuredly that his arm[y] by sea [was arr]yvyd at Lyvorn, and should be at Naples shor[tly] the lanceknights comen into Lombardy, the [th]ey pass not 8,000 or 10,000, and there were co ij. mil more, which with evil contentation be r[eturned back] again, and these that be remained they be and wot not what way to take. They have lien mouth in one place consuming money and vit[ails] without anything resolving themselves what th[ey shall d]o, which he reckoneth to be a very good sign said that at their first coming into Italy all was sore abashed, and feared them greatly; [but, see]yng the said Almayns thus lashely do demean [th]e[m]self, the towms and cities do begin to take cora[ge and] to assure themself and to cast away all fear good chance for the League that the said Al[mains be so] slowe, for doubtless if they had marched [o]thers for any repair sufficient that King showed us of many

f. 217.

. . . . then unto him, therefore no further mention. The Great [Master hath been in] hand with us very earnestly to ma[k]e inquiry for the letters that be missed, and s[wear]eth many and marvellous oaths, that such letters [as have come] unto his hands from time to time [he hath sent] and delivered them unto our hands, [without keeping back] them or any part of them; and to [say truth] we think verily that he so hath [done, in]somuch that it is half a miracle that any [should be missing]. Therefore, Sir, for the Passion of God, with but with these men here, God forbid th[at they should be any] thing charged with the matter more t[han] The Great Master was multus in purgando showed him that such letters were mysmy[ng] [your] Grace had commanded us to make search though your Grace made inquiry therefor [you desired] us to do the same, yet that was without 1528.

the letters might be lost by negligen[ce] servants or such other as might hav[e] them to and fro, and of the faith King's highness, and also your Grace Master as much as in any man . . .
 best we could unto him for l no fault, and we trust yth, and that he is savel[er] the French ambassador there th [High]nesses great matter goeth marvellously my lord Cardinal Campegius was d[espatched]
 t and coming away for the finishing [mat]ter and the bringing thereof to the King's desired end.
 The which end we beseech votis precibusque continuis to send his Highness

"[A]s touching the article for the enjoyment d the King hath spoken unto us to desire your Grace t[o] unto the duke of Vandome, surely it should see[m] in the same article he is very hardly dealt with is a noble prince and as free and frank a heart any liveth, and hath oftentimes offered hym[self] unto us to do the King's highness the best service [he could], and not to spare for that purpose ne body nor [goods] as frank, gentle and as liberal a heart as a[n]y man an, God forbid, but your Grace should favor him acc[or]dingly, a[s]suring your Grace that he hath all his trust a[n]d confidence in your Grace that he will. He hath de[cl]ared all his desire in writing, which we send your Gr[ace] humbly according unto our promise unto him ing, the same to be as good unto him as ye the latter that we have promised so your Grace will. Thus from "

Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's G[race].

4447. [CLERK to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 315.

B. M.

" yn with the Leg[ate] unto him, and as cause
 why they hear so is because his Holiness [w]ithe the powers of Italy to to say with the Florentines under his power or at the again the family of the Ferrara for Modena and Reg[io] Ravenna and Servia and by the pike's point with these here do the best they can to reason and sowing matter of brought the French king here . . .
 the Pope's holiness, which must doubtless the Pope shall be forced to and what evil consequents may but your Grace of your wisdom doth sheweth us that as for the Floren[tines] Ferrara, they suspect his Holiness w content to pass over those matters grieveth his Holiness in that the right color nor title do keep fr Servia, and surely there is no reaso[n]
 Therefore, according unto your commandm[ent], we will do] the best that we can in this m[at]ter for we think that Ravenna on the Pope frank and prone enow
 [an]d rather than fail if th

Hol., mutilated.

1528.

4448. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 212.

B. M.

" that yesterday
 [le]hyngham arrived here ng removed and had h days, for the which time th [t]hat the King would go about conveniently, ne he ne my L[ady] [St.] Germain attend to debate m we thought it expedient to so resorting to our instructi[ons] the ways devised for the revoc[ation] thinking it expedient that th them for the better acceloration in to Spain, and thereupon we m and went the same morning to him and divers others of the con communication upon the said ways. A made a great ground general to a treaty and concluded solemnly sworn with interposition of the censures [of the Church, that it] is not likely that any prince of side violate any part thereof, sp[ecially] beginning for his part to observe sunk right well into many off at the last we began to go f
 King should upon trust hereof cities.
 Then the Great Mast[er]
 ence of the Church reates and for other his he so that there was no gr thinking it therefore very yng should either deliver Cit any such trust.
 There wa[s] de also that if they shoul in Dolphyn and leave the duke of [Orleans] [re]vocation of the army, the Emperor Dolphyn, and so deliver him bei[ng] should not long continue, so that k Orleance he should be sure to have his hands.† At this difficulty we la [t]hat if they would stick upon such diff[iculties it would] be long or they should have their chyl[dren] e passed and the King ready to depart long debating of the first degree rejecting the same, they desired to s and so we perused them one by one, and some [of them we li]kyd very well, notwithstanding they said [ma]ke the King privy unto them and willy[d] to speak with the King, and so we tarry s, at the last the King came forth, saying [that he] had seen the King's highness' devices, a[nd that he w]old more ripely consider them, and d other and thereupon have farth[er] [t]he same. As tou[ching]
 be prolonged as [susp[er]tion of arms he gave standing in these matters [com]munication ne leisure to reys[er]n but at our next meeting I t[rust to] [and there]upon advertise your Grace more of the Great Master whet[her] that we should follow him that it was the King's pleas[ure] in Paris, till we should be so God preserve your Grace. From Paris, the"

Mutilated.

† There is a mark for the insertion of a word here.

1528.

[1 July.] 4449. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.R. O.
St. P. t. 305.

The King and his household are well, except one of his wardrobe, and a gentleman's servant. I received your letters yesternight at 10 o'clock, for the King, who marvelled that my servant made no more diligence; for he departed at 11 o'clock, and was, I trust, at Hampton Court by 3 or 4. "But I fear me there lack diligence there in some persons for the delivery of the same unto your hands, which I beseech your Grace may be amended hereafter," for he thought to have had an answer yesternight. He thought your Grace had a bill of Compton's offices, when you were last with him at Windsor. Recommends Sir Thomas Denyce for the under-treasurership. Great suit is made for Gage, the vice-chamberlain. The King wishes for the bill (prescription) that Mr. Fynche made for such as fell sick in your house, as he is informed it has been very successful. Wednesday.

P.S.—After writing the above, I received your letters and showed them to the King. The King will not speak to the Queen for such offices as Compton had of her, but leave her to bestow them at her pleasure, except the keepership of Olyam park, "for the serjeant of his Sheler (Cellar)."²² The offices which he had of abbots and others the King desires may be stayed. This morning he has given commandment to have provision made at Ampthill. Cannot make up his mind to speak for himself, but wishes Wolsey would do so in his letters to the King.

*Hol. Add. Endd.*1 July. 4450. SIR WM. SANDYS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Does not presume to visit the King or Wolsey, as he has had the sweat in his house. Desires to have some of the offices of the late Sir Wm. Compton. He was steward to Clester, Malmesbury, and many other religious places. Desires Wolsey would write letters to them, willing them to give the said stewardships to Sandys. At the Vyne, 1 July.

P.S.—Bids some of the offices for his poor brother, who has much chargesable business. Sends a schedule of the vacant places.

*Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.*1 July. 4451. CLERK, BISHOP OF BATH, to TUKE.

R. O.

Sends letters lately received from Master Sylvester, by which he will see what likelihood there is of peace, and how much wind and paper has been wasted. They have not yet resolved here on sending a safe-conduct for the Emperor's herald. Wishes it were done; then the hearts on both sides will be inflamed, as many reckon, but, as I reckon, well eased. It is said that those with Antony de Leyva have betrayed Lodi. The matter of Andrea Doria is of great importance. His loss will be a great hindrance to the Spaniards. The King has sent a gentleman to see if he can be won. The Plague is great here. Paris, 1 July.

P.S.—Hears that the Imperial lance-knights have passed Lodi and gone to Genoa, where there is a great plague, and it is badly defended in consequence.

*Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.*2 July. 4452. JOHN MORDAUNT to [WOLSEY].Titus, B. i.
320.
B. M.

Asks him to obtain him the place of under-treasurer, void by the death of Sir William Compton, about which he spoke to Wolsey at the last vacancy. Last Lent, at Hampton Court, asked him for Sir Harry Wyat's room, but he said he had determined to give it to Tuke, though he answered favorably his request to promote him to some such place. Thanks him for all his kindness. Asks his acceptance of 500 marks for the college at Oxford. Will give 100*l.* to the King, if Wolsey pleases, "for his gracious goodness to be showed to me therein."

²² "for the servant of his, Sheler," in the St. P.

1528.

JOHN MORDAUNT to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Asks for the wardship of one of the sisters of the late Mr. Broughton, for his younger sons, as their lands lie in Bradford, in which Mordaunt dwells. Will give 200*l.* more than any other will give. Cannot pay ready money, owing to his expence in buying the heir of Sir Ric. Fitzleues and in marrying his daughters, but he will give Wolsey a manor or two instead. Would have attended on Wolsey in person, but dares not presume to do so, in consequence of the sickness. When he first heard the premises, was busy in viewing the King's forest of Rockingham, where the King suffers daily great loss. His servant, the bearer, will attend on Wolsey daily to know his pleasure. 2 July.

Asks him to burn this letter.

Hol., pp. 2.

2 July. 4453. RIC. BROKE to NICH. TOWNESLEY.

R. O.

Received his letters dated at Hampton Court, 1 July, requiring him to attend my lord's Grace that day or else tomorrow. Would have done so if he had not been sick of the sweat; from which one of his clerks at London is newly recovered, and another who yesterday wrote divers letters for him fell ill shortly after 12 o'clock at afternoon. All his horses are in Mortlake Park, beside Putneyth. Has ordered his servant, the bearer, to take them out, and get ready his saddles and harness at London that he may ride the circuit. Will be with my Lord whenever his servant brings his horses. Sutton, in Kent, 30 miles from Hampton Court, about midnight before the 2 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Master Nicolas Townesley, clerk. Endd.

2 July. 4454. WM. LORD SANDYS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Recommends Rauf Pexsall for the office of under-treasurer, held by the late Sir Wm. Compton. He is Wolsey's old servant. Hopes Wolsey will excuse his being so importunate, but it is an old saying, "Where a man best loveth, there he dare be boldest." The Vyne, 2 July.

P.S.—Received a letter from my brother Essex, desiring the stewardship of Abingdon, lately held by Compton.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

2 July. 4455. SIR EDW. GUILDFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends by his servants the French priest who took church at Rye, and confessed to the Mayor that he had escaped from prison, to which he had been sent for clipping coin, as appears by his former letter of June 3. Encloses his confession, and the letter from the mayor of Rye. Asks him to remember his letter of the 24 June, and the articles enclosed, for wheat was 8 groats and 3*d.* a bushel at Cranebroke last Saturday, the market price being 7 groats and 2*d.* It is thought it will rise every market day till harvest be "inned" and the corn thrashed. Has written to Baron Halls to remind Wolsey of the premises. Halden, 2 July. Signed.

ii. Examination of Sir John Trenquart, of Herkennill in Normandy, taken by Sir Edw. Guildford, warden of the Cinque Ports.

Was attached on May Day morning at Nutteley by old Stapeley of Frankefeld and his son. They found 3*d.* clipped in his purse, and took him with it to Lord Dacres. Was in prison there four days. Dacres sent him to 1528.

Sewthework, where he was put in prison, but he does not know whether it was in the Marshalsea or the King's Bench. Next morning a keeper took him to Westminster to speak to the lord Cardinal; but as he did not come to the court that day, the keeper put him in a prison at Westminster, and went to breakfast. "And he being in prison, looked about him, and see that the prison was not strong, and broke a place of the prison and went his way." Came to his host, John Erley, at Buckestede, where he had left 2½ ells of black worsted, 1 ell tawny worsted, 1 ell black worsted, a pair of russet hose unmade, a pair of violet hose, a matins book, a razor stone, and 10 groats for a trentail. He would not deliver them, so Trenquart came to Rye, and lodged at the Rose. Changed his gown for a cloak with one of his countrymen, that he might not be known as a priest, and so took the church, fearing he was pursued. The Mayor came and asked him why he took the "franchise" of the church, and he answered as above.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

R. O.

2. John Wymond, mayor of Rye, to Sir Edw. Guildford.

Today a French priest in merchant's apparel required the liberty of Christ's church for the safeguard of his life. As he said he had broken prison, where he was detained for clipping money, in which case there is no sanctuary, has committed him to sure keeping till Guildford can examine him. He seems an ignorant person. Wishes him to be assigned to his delivery as shortly as possible, for he doubts his safe keeping. Rye, 11 May. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

2 July.

4456. J. RUSSELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.

I have received your letter dated 19 June, mentioning the death of my son Browthorn, and for the sure custody of his sisters, and the gracious mind you bore him, and the trust you have in me for their custody. This day I received another letter from you, of the 1st, saying that you understand by a letter of mine to Arundel, and by one of Henes (Hennege's), that great suit is made to the King, who thought they were his wards. I showed him that you had them from heir to heir; at which he was satisfied. I am sorry you should write somewhat sharply, as if I and my wife would bestow the eldest without your consent. I have borne my heart and service unto you above all men living, saving only the King. One is of full age; but I will do nothing without your consent. I must needs speak in her behalf, as I am bound to do. This mistrust of me comes not of your Grace only. You will remember that I moved you a year and a half past for the marriage of my younger daughter with one Dormerson, who made great offers; but I stayed for two causes; one, that I would have matched her with better blood; the other, that if my son Browthorn should depart, it would be a great hindrance to you.

I wrote to Arundel, to ask you to let me have the youngest, paying as much as any other. I desire her for nothing else but my wife's pleasure, "for she would be very loth that another should have her said daughter afore her, for it is all her joy in this world." You mentioned that you were satisfied that I and my wife should having the keeping of her said daughters, so that they be kept in clear air, which we will do to the best of our powers. But I had rather that they were out of my hands than you should distrust me. "Great labour is made to the King by Sir Thomas Cheney and Sir John Wallop, and also to mistress Ann, for that matter; and the King is very desirous to the same." Master Kingston desires the stewardship of the bishop of Worcester's lands, and I beg your Grace to give it him, as he will be very grateful. Tittenhanger, 2 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

2 July.

R. O.

4457. The EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Received on the 25th June his letters ordering him to advance and put down the Liddesdale malefactors. Has therefore come to Prowdhowe, which is within twelve miles of the Borders. On the 24th received from the king of Scots news that the intended voyage against the outlaws would not be kept. Sent a spy to Scotland to know the occasion. He reports that on the 19th the King, by the advice of the Queen, the bishop of St. Andrews, the earls of Warran (Arran), Argyle, Eglantyn and Murrey, and others, made open proclamation that neither the earl of Angwischie nor any other Douglas should come within seven miles of him, because they had spoiled the realm for their own profit and kept no justice, and that his nobles should meet him at Sterling on St. Peter's Day the 29th, go with him to Edinburgh on the 10th July, and there hold a general council, and call the Earl to account. He will be content to "leave his rooms" if he is pardoned for past acts; but if he cannot obtain pardon, he and his friends will fight with his enemies about the King. On the 31st, Ogleson, a servant of the king of Scots, brought Northumberland a letter from the King, desiring him to see good order kept upon the Borders; which, with the former letter, he incloses. Has made proclamation and sent orders to his lieutenants and deputies for this purpose. Since his coming, the Scotch have had no cause of complaint against the English. At my castle of Prowdhowe, 2 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

3 July.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 87.

4458. CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.

You will understand by Gardiner what we have done to satisfy you in consideration of your services. We wish we could add to them the recovery of our cities. The Venetians, however, will pay no attention to the King's remonstrances. Viterbo, 3 July 1528.

Hol., signed "J." Lat. Add. Endd.

3 July.

R. O.

St. P. II. 135.

4459. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

The bearer, Thomas Bath, a merchant of Drogha, has been with Norfolk on his return from Walsingham, and can give Wolsey much information about Ireland. He is a gentleman of good blood, a true man, and loves more the wealth of the land than the parties of the Garentyns or Butlers. He has done more to restrain O'Nele from war than any other. Hears from him that the Marchers, as they cannot defend themselves, allow the Irish to come through them and hunt others within. If this is not remedied, 20,000*l.* will not repair the damage that will be done before the middle of September. Bids Wolsey's attention for Ireland, which is in great danger, considering the lack of good captains of the Englishry and of men-of-war, the great dissension between the greatest bloods of the land, and the strength of the Irish. If the King does not send the earl of Kyldare thither, advises the continuance of his brother in authority, assisted either by 300 or 400 Englishmen with good captains, or else a good sum of money to wage men with, and to distribute among the Irish adjoining the Englishry by the advice of the Chancellor and Chief Justice. Money should be sent to Ossory also, to induce Irishmen to aid the Deputy, or at least to prevent others passing through them, and to do no hurt to the King's subjects. Neither Ossory nor his son should be made deputy; for, considering their distance, and their war with Desmond and O'Bryne, it will be impossible for them to defend the four shires, and scarcely their own country. Kenyngdale, 3 July.

Hol. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

1528.

3 July.

R. O.

4460. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

Commission by cardinal Wolsey to John Higden, dean of Cardinal's College, Oxford, Lawrence Staldee, his almoner, Ric. Ducke, dean of his chapel, William Capon, dean of the college to be erected at Ipswich, Cuthbert Marechal, S. T. P., and Stephen Gardiner, LL.D., empowering them to amend and reform the statutes of his colleges at Ipswich and Oxford. Hampton Court, 3 July 1528.

Lat., pp. 4. Endd.

3 July.

R. O.

4461. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

Notarial attestation by Richard Watkyne of the foundation charter of Cardinal's college, Ipswich, made in the south gallery at Hampton Court, 3 July 1528.

Present: John Higden, dean of Cardinal's college, Oxford, Cuthbert Marechal, archdeacon of Nottingham, Peter Vannes, John Gostwyck and Tho. Alford. Signed and sealed by the Cardinal.

Lat., vellum.

3 July.

Vesp. F. XIII.

112 b.

B. M.

4462. THOMAS LORD LAWARR to Dr. CROMER.

Desires to be commended to his wife. Thanks him for his manifold kindness to himself and his sister Katharine. Dr. Blewitt writes to him in what case she is, and what medicines he has given her. Fears she is in great danger. She will take nothing to do her good; she has not eaten bread or meat this fortnight. In haste, the 3rd of July.

P.S.—Sends . . . angels, and would send more if he could have Cromer with him for two or three days.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

Written under the address: "My sister K. wold have sum kastyfystelay mayd in a boxe, and as you were wout to make her."

Some medical directions endorsed, (qy. in Cromer's hand?)

[4 July.]

R. O.

St. P., l. 307.

4463. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

The King is well, but is somewhat perplexed at not hearing from you, as there are many flying tales that your people are sick. He speaks very kindly of you, and likes your house* so well that he does not propose to depart so soon as he had appointed. He expects the bill of Compton's offices tonight. As I hear nothing from you touching the abbot of Peterborough's letters, I purpose to send his servant to Dr. Staldee with such things as he has brought. The King has sometimes asked me of my reckonings with your Grace. Therefore I beseech you to look upon my books, and give me a general acquittance. As I have somewhat overcharged myself in purchasing a little land of lord Delaware, I beseech you to let me have the money that remains in your hands, which Mr. Tonyee had in his keeping before his departing. Saturday.

Hol. Add. Endd.: From Mr. Henegé, the 9th day of July.

4 July.

R. O.

4464. CLERK and TAYLOR to WOLSEY.

Wrote on the 1st. Hear that the lanceknights have not gone to Genoa, but are at Lodi. The King is hunting at Fontainebleau, and will stay there all this month. My Lady is at St. Germain's; the Council at Paris. Much rain has fallen, and destroyed the corn and the vines. It is to be feared that a universal decay and dearth will prevail through the whole of France. We are told the plague is very bad in England. Paris, 4 July.

1528.

CLERK and TAYLOR to WOLSEY—cont.

Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4 July. 4465. CLERK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received yesterday Wolsey's letter of 27 June. Is much comforted about Master Stephen's letter. Though Wolsey's former letters were very sharp, and Master Tuke's somewhat earnest, yet when he considered, first, what he had to say, and, secondly, with whom, and most of all with how wise and gracious a prince he had to do, he felt somewhat more at ease. Is now fully comforted. Has this morning received other letters from Dr. Stephens and Sir Gregory, from Ville Andre, the secretary, in two little packets, each directed to himself. As Master Stephens writes that they require haste, forwards them by the messenger sent hither by Wingfield with Wolsey's last. Wolsey's letters to Dr. Stephens will go in a day or two, so that he may have them before his departure from the Pope: for it appears by the Legate's letters that they are waiting for galleys to conduct them to Nice, and that meantime Master Stephens has gone on the Pope's matters to Venice. Paris, 4 July. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

4 July. 4466. WM. MUKLOW, cofferer to the Duke of Richmond, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Desires preferment to one of the offices in Worcestershire held by the late Sir Wm. Compton. Has been the King's, the Prince's, and Wolsey's servant for 17 years, and had nothing. Worcester, 4 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

[5 July.] 4467. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. 1. 308.

When the King was advertised this morning that you intended to visit him, he begged you to defer your coming till the times are more propitious. He is glad to be so nigh to you, and is well contented with the air and site of this your place. He wishes general processions to be made through the realm for good weather and for the plague. Tittenhanger, Sunday. Signed.

Add. Endd.

5 July. 4468. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. 1. 309.

Sends him a list of Sir Wm. Compton's offices. Begs they may not be re-granted until they have been carefully examined, and that the under-treasurership be not disposed of till he can repair to the King's presence. Commends Norris and Hennege. Begs the King, out of consideration for his long service, "to be good and gracious lord to my soul," and that what he has devised for the increase of God's honor, learning and virtuous living may, by the King's favor, be accomplished, according to the purport of his last will and testament, in which he has had a loving remembrance of the King. "And one thing, if it shall fortune the same to be the last word that ever I shall speak or write unto your Highness, I dare boldly say and affirm your Grace hath had of me a most loving, true and faithful servant; and that for favor, meed, gift, or promise of gift at any time I never did or consented to thing that might in the least point redound unto your dishonor or disprofit. And herein spiritually rejoicing, conforming my mind to God's pleasure, whatsoever shall chance of me, I most humbly, and with all mine heart, service and prayer, bid your Grace farewell." Hampton Court, 5 July. Signed.

Add.

1528.

5 July. 4469 JOHN CROKE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends a list of Sir Wm. Compton's patents. Sent also to the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster a list of those held by him under the duchy seal. Cannot learn as yet what he held in the Exchequer, as Smyth is not in London. Dares not visit Wolsey in consequence of the disease in his house. London, 5 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: John Croke, of the Chancery.

5 July. 4470. JOHN BP. OF EXETER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Begs the preferment of some of the Princess's household servants to some of the offices held by Compton. Brouley has done long service, and his fee has been abated 20*l.* Sir Edw. Croft is a man of inflexible justice, and will do well in Worestershire. Russell's secretary does well, and had in the duke of Buckingham's time the keepership of the park of Maxtoke, now vacant. Salter says his offices in North Wales do not sustain his costs in riding thither. The matter between lord Ferrers and young Mr. Riase is pacified. God preserve you from the pestilent air about London. Ludlow, 5 July.

Hol., p. 1. Scaled and add. Endd.

6 July. 4471. For THOMAS CARDINAL, ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, Legate, &c.

P. S.

Grant of the foundation, lands, site, &c. of the priory of Holy Trinity, Wallingford, Berks, which was suppressed by the authority of Pope Clement VII., and came into the King's hands, as appears by inquisitions before escheators. Also the manors of Wallingford, Westeneureth and Clopote, Berks, Chalkforde, Oxon., with the advowsons of the churches of Westeneureth and St. Mary in Wallingford, Berks, Chynnor, Garsington, Aston Rowant, with the chapel of Stokenchurch (Oxon), and Shobuden alias Shobingden, Bucks, and all tithes or portions of tithes belonging to the said monastery: viz., 14*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Donyngton, Berks, paid by the prior and convent of Donyngton, Berks; 40*s.* annual rent in Kerswell, in the parish of Buckland, Berks, paid by the rector of Edendon; 40*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in South Morton, Berks; 14*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Aston Toralde, Berks; 40*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Mulsforde, Berks; 3*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* annual rent for tithes in Sottewell, Berks. Also, 10*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Gangulnesden, Oxon, paid by the prioress and convent of Goring; 7*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes paid by the rector of Chynnor; an annuity of 2*s.* paid by the rector of Chinnor; an annuity of 100*s.* in Garsington, Oxon, paid by the vicar of Aston, Oxon; 5*s.* 6*d.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Kymbell Magna, Berks, paid by the abbot and convent of Missenden; 8*s.* annual rent for a portion of tithes in Ectelavdon, Bucks, paid by the prior of St. John's of Jerusalem in England; 6*s.* 8*d.* annual rent for tithes in the parish of Temesford, Beds; 46*s.* 8*d.* annual rent for tithes in Dorton, Beds, paid by the prioress and convent of Halywell, near London; 8*s.* annual rent for tithes in Swyndon, Wilts, paid by the vicar of Swyndon, Wilts; 6*s.* 8*d.* annual rent for tithes in Radborn, Wilts. Also a water-mill in the town of Northstok, Oxon; a water-mill called "Cuxham mylne," in the town of Crokehame, Oxon; a water mill in Edeorp, Bucks; and all messuages, lands, &c. in Wallingford, Clopote, Westeneureth, Donyngton, Kerswell, Buckland, South Morton, Arlington, Sotwell, Bryghtwell, Huddeshuddes, North Morton, Aston Toralde and Mulsforde, Berks; in Chalkeford, Aston Rowant, Stoken Church, Northstake, Garsington, Chynnor, Oxford, Bryghtwell, Watlington, Rytherfelde, Pyppard, Huddeshuddes, Coxham, Holcombe, Bensington, Chalford, Stanlake, Chalgrave, Stoke 1528.

FOR THOMAS CARDINAL, ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, Legate, &c.—cont.

Basset, Newenham, Mapilderham, Henley, Wynhall, Crowmerscha, Nettlebed and Nusfelde, Oxon; in Kymbell Magna, Schobodon alias Shelyngdon, Ethrop, Blackgrave, Estelaydon and Queynton, Bucks; in Shepeale, Herts; and in Swindon and Redborne, Wilts; which came into the King's hands by reason of the suppression of the said monastery; with knights' fees, advowsons, and other appurtenances. Greenwich, 3 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Del. Hampton Court, 6 July.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 30.

6 July.

P. 8.

4472. FOR THOMAS CARDINAL, ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, &c.

Grant of the site, &c. of the late priory of St. Mary de Pratis alias Pray, Herts, which became extinct by the death of Eleanor Barnard, prioress. Also of the manors of Pratis alias Pray, Playdell, and Beaumont, Herts, Wyng and Swanburn, Bucks; the advowsons of the church or rectory of Wyng; 12s. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Redburn, Herts, paid by the vicar of Redburn; 22s. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Sarette, Herts; and 20s. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Dolowe, paid by the abbot and convent of St. Alban's; 3s. annual rent for a portion of tithes paid by the [? sacristan] "sacristarius" of St. Alban's; 3s. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Cocyte, paid by the prioress and convent of Sopwell. Also all messuages, lands, &c. in the town of St. Alban's, and without the bars of the said town, and in Pray, Playdell, Beaumont, Hempstede Abbots, Waltham, Beacheworth, Berkehamstede, Westwycke, Whethamstede, Redburn, Sarette, Watforde, Childewyk, Lecheworth, Flaunden, Dagnale, Hexton and Hexham, Herts; Wyng, Croston, Swanburn, and Brickhill Magna, Bucks; and in the town of Cambridge; which came to the King's hands by the dissolution of the said monastery. Greenwich, 3 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 6 July.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 32.

R. O.

2. Letters patent for the same.

Vellum. Great seal attached.

R. O.

3. Draft of the same.

Pp. 5, large paper.

6 July.

P. 8.

4473. FOR THOMAS CARDINAL, ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, &c.

Grant of the advowsons of the churches or rectories of Bynsey and St. Clement, in the suburbs of Oxford, St. Peter, in the bailiwick of St. Aldate and St. Michael, at the south gate of the university of Oxford, with all tithes, &c. thereto belonging; and 27s. annual rent in the town called Bolyerth and Churche Hill, Oxon; 3s. annual rent from a mill called "Saunford milne" in Yesterly, Oxon; 4s. annual rent from a messuage and "half-virgate" of land in Tuckeley, Oxon; 10s. annual rent from a tenement and half virgate of land in Whateley, Oxon; 9s. annual rent from a messuage and a parcel of meadow in Kenyngton, Berks; 18s. annual rent in Abingdon, Berks, paid by the abbot and convent of Abingdon; all which came to the King's hands by the suppression of the monasteries of St. Frediwide and St. Nicholas, Litchmore, Oxon. Also the advowson of the church or rectory of Gyngemargarete alias Margarete Yng, Essex; an annuity of 5s. out of the manor of Barnarston Hall, Essex; all the marsh called Colharberd, in the parish of Alneithle, Essex; which came to the King's hands by the suppression of the monasteries of Blakmore and Wyk, Essex, and Lyssenes, Kent. Also all messuages, lands, &c. in the towns, hamlets and parishes of Gyngemargarete alias Margarete 1528.

Yng, Ryvenhall, Falthorne, Terling, and Fordam, Essex; which came to the King's hands by the suppression of the monasteries of Blakamore, Tiptre and Wyk, Essex. Also 26s. 8d. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Ashewyk, Suff.; 3s. 6d. annual rent for a portion of tithes in Hulton; and all messuages, lands, &c. in the towns, hamlets and parishes of Neyland, Stoke Neyland, Wynton, Bures, Reydon, Shelley, Benfleete, Oteley, Wenham, Westowe, Gipewiche (Ipswich), Leigham, Stradbroke, Hacheston, Glenham, Blaksall, Rendham, Carleton, Saxtondeham and Benhale, Suff.; which came to the King's hands by the suppression of the monasteries of Horkesley Parva and Wyke, Essex, and Snape, Suff.; with knights' fees, advowsons and other appurtenances. Greenwich, 3 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 6 July.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 31.

4474. [WOLSEY] to BULMER.

Cott. App. 3.
R. M.

Has received his two letters, and thanks him for his pains in devising and sending them. Would rather that the matter concerning the parsonage of Rudby were heard from his own counsel and lord Conyers' than that it came before the law. As Bulmer is lord Conyers' friend, he can incline him to reason. Thanks him for the advertisement he sent him concerning the constable's demes[ter]. From my manor

In Wolsey's hand; mutilated, p. 1.

6 July. 4475. For CARDINAL WOLSEY.

P. S.
Rym. xiv. 265.

Mortmain licence to appropriate the rectory of Rudby, York., (of which the Cardinal has the patronage,) to Cardinal's college, Oxford, provided the vicarage in the said church be always kept up. Greenwich, 3 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 6 July.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 30.

7 July. 4476. DR. BELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. L. 319.

In consequence of the notice from Cooksey, under-sheriff of Worcestershire, of the state of the shire, left destitute by Compton's death, the King desires you will direct a commission to Sir Edw. Feres (or Ferrers), of Warwickshire, "for the finishing of this present year," unless you know of any more suitable person. He will make a further arrangement at your next repairing here. He desires you, by virtue of your legatine prerogative, to bestow the vicarage of Thaxted on his chaplain, Mr. Wilson, and the prebend in the college of Tamworth on his chaplain, Dr. Dyngle, vacant by resignation of his chaplain, Mr. Stapulles, for whose preferment he thanks you; and that the small benefice held by Forest, servant to the duke of Richmond, named Coryngton, in Huntingdonshire, be also given to Dyngle. He wishes the high stewardship of Salisbury to be given to his servant, Sir Edw. Baynton. He desires the rest of Compton's offices to be stayed; among others, the office of Furnesse, which he intends for Mr. Treasurer (Fitzwilliam) and Mr. Chancellor of the Duchy (More), as joint patentees. He orders me to tell you that himself, the Queen, and all others here are well, and the plague so far ceased that none have had the sweat these three days, except Mr. Butt. He is very desirous for your health, and that you will put aside all fear and phantasies, make as merry as you can, put apart all cares for the time, and commit all to God. Though he commends your virtuous and religious disposition, yet he oftentimes wishes your Grace's heart were as good as his is. He desires to have an answer to my former letter to you, concerning the election at Wilton. Tittenhanger, St. Thomas's Day.

Hol. Add. Endd.

1528.

4477. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.Love Letters, xiii.

Since her last, Walter Welshe, Master Browne, Thos. Care, Yrion of Brearton, John Coke the potecary, are fallen of the sweat in this house, and, thank God, have all recovered, so the plague has not yet quite crased here. The rest of us are well, and I hope will pass it. As for the matter of Wylton, my lord Cardinal has had the nuns before him, and examined them in presence of Master Bell, who assures me that she whom we would have had abbess has confessed herself to have had two children by two different priests, and has since been kept, not long ago, by a servant of lord Broke that was. "Wherefore I would not, for all the gold in the world, cloak your conscience nor mine to make her ruler of a house which is of so ungodly demeanour; nor I trust you would not that neither for brother nor sister I should so distayne mine honor or conscience. And as touching the prioress or dame Ellenor's eldest sister, though there is not any evident case proved against them, and the prioress is so old that of many years she could not be as she was named, yet notwithstanding, to do you pleasure, I have done that nother of them shall have it, but that some other good and well-disposed woman shall have it, whereby the house shall be the better reformed, whereof I ensure you it hath much need, and God much the better served. As touching your abode at Hever, do therein as best shall like you, for you know best what air doth best with you; but I would it were come thereto, if it pleased God, that nother of us need care for that, for I ensure you I think it long. Suche (Zouch) is fallen sick of the sweat, and therefore I send you this bearer because I think you long to hear tidings from us, as we do in likewise from you."

7 July.
R. O.4478. STANISLAUS CZYPZAR, Consul of Cracow, to HENRY VIII.

The subjects of the king of Poland are grateful for the King's liberality to them in his kingdom. Has come to Antwerp, and brought from Poland at great hazard some hundreds of sables, which he begs to submit to his Majesty. Has letters from the chancellor Christopher de Schydlovyetz. Antwerp, 7 July 1528.

*Hol., Lat., p. 1. Sealed and add. Endd.*7 July.
R. O.4479. ED[MUND] FOXE to EDW. FOXE.

About a horse which he has bought for his brother. Edm. Foxe's wife sends thanks for the "letuse bonet" he sent her, and for the glass Mr. Subdean sent. She fears she cannot welcome him and the Subdean when they come to Salisbury. Asks him to speak to Cromwell, whose letters Chr. Chafyn doth little regard. If that is no use, wishes him to ask Mr. Waren to make the writer his deputy for the bailiwick of Salisbury; for as Waren's brother is slain, he has no deputy, but has asked Ant. Stileman to occupy the said room till his return from France, which will be at Michaelmas, if he can get leave from my lord's Grace (Wolsey). Salisbury, St. Thomas's Day.

*Hol., p. 1. Add.: To his right worshipful brother, Mr. Edward Foxe, att my lord Cardinalls place.4480. ANNE BOLEYN to WOLSEY.Ortho.C x 218.
B. M.
Burnet, i. 104.

In most humble wise that my poor heart can think, I thank your Grace for your kind letter and rich present, which I shall never be able to deserve without your help; "of the which I have hitherto had so great plenty that all the days of my life I am most bound, of all creatures, next the King's grace, to love and serve your Grace." I beseech you never to doubt that I shall ever vary from this thought while breath is in my body. As to your Grace's trouble with the sweat, I thank God those that I desired and prayed for have escaped,—namely, the King and you. I much desire the coming of the Legate, and, if it be God's pleasure, I pray Him to bring this matter shortly to a good end, when I trust partly to recompense your pains.

1528.

Hol., mutilated. Add.

8 July.

R. O.

4481. THOMAS CAVE to CROMWELL.

Thanks him for the good blue dog he gave him when last at Stanford, but it went home to Ph. Stafford at Daventry the day after, and he has not got it since. Next time Cromwell comes to see him, will give him any "grewnde" (greyhound) he likes. Asks him for the tithes of Westhaddon at a reasonable rent. Supposes it is in his hands, unless Mr. Stranguishe has it with his grant of Daventry. Stranguishe has let most of Thropp fields till Holyrood Day in May for more than the old rent. Asks if he can have the whole or half at the old rent from that day. Desires an answer for the bearer. Stanford, 8 July.

Reminds him of his promise to his father for Tykford for his brother Antony.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell, besides the Austin Friars, London.

8 July.

R. O.

4482. ITALIAN NEWS.

From the letters of the protonotary Casale, Venice, 8 July.

The French ambassadors have been urgent with the Venetians for the restoration of the cities belonging to the Pope. Before they had given their answer, Dr. Stephen arrived, and asked an audience. They put it off till the next day, until they should have answered the French, which displeased him and myself; and, in order to put a stop to delay, we resolved to tell them that the answer to the French ambassadors was, in consequence of the alliance of the two crowns, an answer to us, and to beware of what they were doing. When Dr. Stephen was very pressing against all delay, they asked him to wait, alleging that after they had seen the urgency of this affair they had written to declare their intentions to the two Kings by their respective ambassadors; and though we affirmed that the meaning of our two Sovereigns on this matter was well known to us, we could get nothing from them.

The Germans have been defeated at Lodi, and had resolved to leave, had they not been dissuaded by Antonio de Leyva. They have been sent for by those at Naples. They asked the Pope for passage and supplies; on which the Venetians excused themselves for not restoring the Papal cities, on the plea that the Pope had sided with the Germans. They are now, however, well satisfied, having heard that the Pontiff will grant nothing, and will remain neutral. The lord St. Pöl will soon be here.

Lat., in Vannes' hand, pp. 3. Endd.

8 July.

R. O.

4483. SIR GEO. THROKMORTON to WOLSEY.

Wrote lately, desiring to be had in remembrance for some of Compton's offices held in Worcestershire and Warwickshire. Would like the sheriffwick of Worcestershire, and to be custos rotularum of Warwickshire; also the stewardship of the see of Worcester; and the under-treasurership of England. His ancestors have in times past been the under-treasurers and stewards. Wolsey has always promised to help him; if he do so now, Throkmorton will be a benefactor to the building of his college at Oxford.

1528.

SIR GEO. THROKMORTON to WOLSEY—cont.

I waited for your Dean at Raunston these eight weeks; now he says he is not coming. Raunston, 8 July.

P.S.—Would be glad to know his pleasure by the bearer.

Hol., p. 1. Sealed. Add. Endd.

8 July.

4484. E. COUNTESS OF OXFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Would gladly have complied with the request in his letter of the 2 July, to allow the master of his works to take stone and "calions" out of her cliff of Herwiche; but on sending her receiver Danyell thither to meet Wolsey's chaplains, it was found little could be spared without injury to the town, as the cliff is not of stone, "but only the stone there remaining lieth as a forelende to defend the same; if that were gone, the cliff to be washed away within short space." Wolsey may, however, have as much as can be safely spared. 8 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

8 July.

4485. R. GRUFFYTH to WOLSEY.*

Titus, B. xi.

416.

R. M.

Elia. 1 Ser.

1 191

20,000 Irishmen have come within these twelve months into Pembroke-shire, the lordship of Haverford West, and along the sea to St. David's. They are for the most part rascals out of the dominions of the rebel earl of Desmond; very few from the English pale. The town of Tenby is almost all Irish, rulers and commons, who disobey all the King's processses issuing from the exchequer of Pembroke, supposing their charter warrants them to do so. One of them, named Germyn Gruffith, is owner of two great ships, well appointed with ordnance. They will take no English or Welsh into their service. Last year, hearing of a great number of them being landed, the writer made a privy watch, and in two little parishes took above 200, and sent them to sea again. They have since returned with many more, all claiming kindred in the country, but he has ever since expelled them as before. Throughout the circuit there are four Irishmen to one English or Welsh. Order should be given that no man in these parts retain any Irishmen in his service, otherwise they will increase more and more. The mayor and town of Tenby have committed great riots, and unlawful assemblies, with divers extortions, as appears by indictments against them in the records of Pembroke. They have also aided and victualled the King's enemies at different times. Caermarthen, 8 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's most noble grace. Endd.

9 July

4486. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. 1. 312

I delivered the King your letters, for which he thanks you, especially for the good news out of Italy from Dr. Stevyns. He has heard that my lady Marquess of Exeter is sick of the sweat, and he will therefore remove upon Saturday to Amphill. He has ordered all who were in the Marquis's company to depart. He is glad you have made your will, "and ordered yourself against God," as he has done. He intends to send his will to you, by which you will perceive his hearty mind towards you above all men living. By the death of one of his chapel, divers gifts have fallen, which he desires may be stayed until you have further knowledge of his pleasure. "Also he desireth your Grace that he may hear every second day from you how you do; for I assure you every morning, as soon as he cometh from the Queen, he asketh whether I hear anything from your Grace." He has told Herytage what alterations he desires here. Tittenhanger, 9 July.

Hol. Add. Endd.

* This letter has been already printed (Vol. III App. 44) as of the year 1528, but it more probably belongs to this period.

1528.

9 July.

4487. CLEMENT VII. to FRANCIS I.

Lettere
di Principi,
n. 105.

Notwithstanding Francis's promise to the Pope, Ravenna and Cervia are still retained by the duke [of Milan] and the Venetians. The king of England has instructed his ambassadors at Venice to insist on the restitution of those towns to the Pope. Viterbo, 9 July 1528.

Ital.

10 July.

4488. BELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. i. 313.

I have declared to the King your pleasure concerning the election of the new abbess of Wilton, at which he is somewhat moved, remembering his advertisement of my former letters that the prioress should not have it, as he had promised it to certain friends of dame Elinor Care. And though on the report of the dissolute living of dame Elinor he was content to desist, and referred to your Grace that some able and religious woman should be preferred, his mind and expectation was that in no wise the prioress should have it; at which some will find themselves aggrieved. I would rather have parted with my goods that some other might have been elected. The King is surprised that you have given away the stewardship of Sarum, considering that his and your mind was to stay such offices for a time. He desired those rooms for Mr. Baynton. He proposes also to bestow other offices, and therefore desires you to stay them; amongst others, the office of Furnes. His pleasure is that Sir Edw. Feres be sheriff of Worcester till the close of this year, so that Cookessey occupy under him. The King is glad to hear of your health. Eight or nine have been sick, but in no jeopardy. Tomorrow the King removes to Hamptyll. 10 July.

Hol. Add. Endd.

10 July.

4489. TUNSTAL, BISHOP OF LONDON, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Master Staples, the King's chaplain, has been put in possession of the hospital, after election, confirmation, &c., in accordance with Wolsey's letter and the King's pleasure signified to Tunstal before his departure from Greenwich. Dares not come to Wolsey, though he is anxious to see him, as nearly all his servants are troubled with the sweat. Had 13 of them sick at once, on St. Thomas's Day. I pray Jesu keep the King and your Grace from it! Has caused general procession to be made, and prayers offered for its cessation. Fullham, 10 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

10 July.

4490. JO. CARDINAL OF LORRAINE to WOLSEY.

[Calig. E. i.
n. 7] i. 33.
R. M.

Asks the assistance of Wolsey in their present business. Writes more fully to the bishop of Bayonne, the French ambassador in England, for whom he desires credence. Fontainebleau, 10 July. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: R^{mo}, &c., Cardinali Eboracensi, totius Angliæ Primate ac Legato nato.

10 July.

4491. JO. CARD. OF LORRAINE to MONS. DE BAYONNE, Ambassador in England.

Cal. E. ii. 167.
R. M.

Cannot get the fruits of his bishopric of Ther[ouenne], most of which is in the county of Artois, though he has remonstrated with Madame and her council on the subject. Desires him to ask Wolsey, to whom he writes a letter of credence, to speak to the Flemish ambassadors and Madame in his favor, and to suggest to him that he will be thankful for a benefice in England. Fontainebleau, 10 July. Signed.

Fr., pp. 2, mutilated. Begins: Mons. de Bayonne.

1528.

10 July.

R. O.

4492. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE

Wrote on the 8th, sending a letter from one of his spies. Sends him another of the same, showing that the people of these parts were more afear'd than needed. The French merchants taken at St. Omer's were released within 24 hours. Calais, 10 July 1528, at 4 in the morning.

P.S.—The sweat has arrived, and has attacked many. Two only are dead: one, a gentleman of Lancashire, named Syngilton, "who was toward the religion of the Rhodes," the other a fisherman.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: "First."

10 July.

R. O.

4493. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE

Wrote at 4 in the morning, and sent a letter received yesterday from a spy. Was informed by the scourer of the West Pale that, notwithstanding the great storm, the inhabitants were driving their cattle to the Marches, and conveying their goods to Guisnes and to this town, by reason of a report that war should be proclaimed between England and France, at Boulogne, at 7. Sent out horsemen to inquire the grounds of it, and comfort the people, assuring them they had nothing to fear. A man has come from Abbeville, who said that upon Wednesday morning, at the opening of the gate, the peasants came and said with a loud voice that the Burgundians had broken the truce, and the Emperor refused to ratify it with England on that account. All this has arisen from the taking of prisoners at St. Omer's. Sends his spy's letter in proof. This morning 20 horsemen armed came from Boulogne to Guisnes, conveying a prisoner, who had been taken by the Burgundians and escaped; and if the writer had not sent horsemen, the inhabitants would have removed their goods and chattels. Four more are dead of the plague. One of the men was of the number of the two sent by my lord of Bath from Paris, named Denham, "a personage of goodly fashion, and marvellously well learned, both in Latin and Greek, but was also right excellent in musical instruments." The other was the keeper of the water-house, excellent in the science of geometry. Both of them were in good health yester even when they went to their beds. Calais, 10 July 1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.: "Second."

4494. [SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 405.

R. M.

"[Please it your] most reverend Grace my last letters to the same of the month past, I have written [a letter to Master Tu]ke, containing such matter and [in]closed in the same, that I doubt not but [ere now] he hath opened the whole unto your Gra[ce]. I trust] I shall right shortly have knowledge of your [pleasure] concerning such things as were conteey[ned therein]. Nevertheless, because that in manner every things appear as of duty I must discharge advising your Grace of them, it [may please your Grace to] understand that though I have used all industry [to make the] East Pale clean from all suspicion of war, an[d persuaded the] inhabitants of the same to use their husbond[ry and] other businesses diligently without any shew because I hoped it should be the next mean [to cause the] captains on the frontiers to have the less suspicion of war,] and also the less occasion to take any avaun[ta]ge of giving] the first blow, yet the people of the said pa[ar]t[le] are in] such a sudden fear that without advisement [they] have yesterday and yet continually bring in [their] cattle into this town, with which we are not to be daily more and more, but greatest doubt shall take the doing to the worst and advantage, to the ruin of t er of Sa

1528.

..... have so happen [h]ow for my part I have done er strained myself above my p[ower] n with eorn, yet considering the soo s made by the French, and the great apparence [t]he King will join with the French king ag not only caused the most part of our pros[elons] pyd in the Emperor's countries, but also is a great let [p]arty of England there cometh almost nothing war the frontiers of France shall be so [tha]t they shall be in great peril of scarcity them[selves, co]ncyderyng that the frontiers of both parts be the nres that other both princes hath. Wherefore [I] have advised your Grace of the premises after understanding, your Grace shall also understand that an [sh]all take place many things are to be considered por e for the sure weal and safe guard of this towa, all n sure been most firmly printed in your gracious r[emem]br[ance]. Nevertheless, because that by a long continuance [there ha]ve been no war, but peace betwixt the hou[ses] of England and of Burgoyne, me seemeth under correction
 t many things are to be considered in this war wh[ic]h it be put in ure, when the war was but only b[etwixt] England an[d] France, for then it was no great business action of which there was alw[ays]

Hol., badly mutilated.

10 July. 4495. LORD DACRE to the EARL OF CUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Has received the King's letter by Nich. Denton. Marvels at the report sent to his Highness, that Dacre oppresses the tenants who served the Earl when he was warden, seeing that Dacre's father allowed the Earl, "after the discharge comen unto him," to let the King's lands about Carlisle, during the time the Earl was officer. Thinks as the Earl was discharged and Dacre appointed officer of the West Marches, he should in like manner allow him to occupy peaceably. As to the Earl's request by Thos. Blenkinsop for part of the King's meadows, there are but two, called Brode Medowe and the Swift, of which he is willing the Earl should have one. Kirkoswald, 10 July.

Copy, p. 1. Headed: Copy of the lord Dacre's letter to the earl of Cumberland.

10 July. 4496. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE at OXFORD.

R. O.

Power of attorney by John Higden, dean of the college, appointing Nicholas Gifforde and Hugh Whalley to take seisin of the suppressed monastery of Wallingford and its lands, &c. 10 July 1528.

Vellum. Part of a very magnificent seal attached.

11 July. 4497. HENNAGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. L. 315.

Received your letter this morning at 4, and showed it to the King as soon as he was up. His Highness is glad to hear of your health, and recommends you, as the plague is near, to remove to Anworth, thence to Dicten, and so to Easthampstead. He is not best content with the election of the abbess of Wilton, as you will learn by Dr. Ball's letters, for of all women he would not have had her, nor Carys eldest sister. He has showed Mr. Herytage such buildings as he desires at Tittenhanger, and is sorry for the death of Mr. Redman, his mason. 11 July. Signed and sealed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

11 July.

Vil. B. x. 102^o.

B. M.

4498. ——— to CORNELIUS, Secretary of Card. Salviati.

The count of St. Pol will not be in time to hinder our enterprise, for Anthony de Leyva has collected corn and forage for Milan and Pavia, and has taken the enemy's corn. The lanzknechts are going to succour Naples, and beat the French in skirmishes.

Three French galleys have been sunk in a sea fight. Fabritio Marraia had agreed to surrender a gate to the French, but was discovered and taken. The bishop of Colonna has defeated the abbot of Farfa, near Sulaco, who fled, and has not been found since. The Siennese have defeated John Paul, son of Renzo di Cere.

News has come that Don Ferdinand has made a truce with the Turk, and sent 12,000 foot and 2,000 horse into Italy. Viterbo, 11 July 1528.

"Non desunt qui bona Italica bona Latina reddant. Scripta fuere ista litera quarum vides exemplar cuidam Cornelio, Cardinalis Salviati, Romani Legati in Gallis, &c., secretario. Non dubito magnificentie tue recentiora esse que antiquit ista."

Ital., p. 1.

11 July.

R. O.

4499. FRANCIS I. to WOLSEY.

Has written to the bishop of Bayonne, his ambassador in England, to speak to Wolsey in favor of Pasqual Spinolle, of Genoa. Fontainebleau, 11 July 1528. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.: A Rege Christianissimo pro aluminibus.

11 July.

Cal. D. x. 286.

B. M.

4500. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

"[Mons.] de Bayonne, ceulx de ma ville et cite de [Gennes m'ont fait t]resgrande instance, me suppliant et requerant voull[o]ir sorte envers le roy d'Angleterre mon bon frere et pe[rpetuel] allye, et pareillement envers Mons. le Legat mon bon amy, a ce que d'alumes, lesquelz ont este parcedevant prins et arrestez en An[gleterre] de Pasqual] Spinolle mon subject et citadin dudit Gennes, a la requeste de disant y pretendre aucun droict, luy soient renduz et restituez que je desire singulierement ayder et subvenir a ceulx dudit que en particulier comme a mes bons, vraz et loyaux subjects et repete, a ceste cause je vous prie presenter a mondit sieur [le Legat la] lettre de creance sur vous que je luy escrips, laquelle je vous e[n]voye dictes de ma part que je luy prie tant et si tres affectueusement [qu'il est] possible, qu'il vueille tenir la main et faire en sorte que just[ice] soit faite] et administree audit Spinolle touchant ceste affaire la plus brief[ve] qu'il est] possible, et que iceulx allumes luy soient renduz et restituez, s par raison et justice que faire se deolve, et s'il est besoing que cest affaire a mondit bon frere et perpetuel allye le roy d'Ang[leterre] j'entends que vous le faciez selon et ainsi que ledit Spinolle vous informer[a plus] amplement." [Fontaine] le Blean, 11 July 1528. Signed.

Add. Mutilated.

11 July.

R. O.

4501. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

On Sunday last, 5 July, Roger Horne, of Kenerton, and John Bell, of Apuldre, came to me at Hallden, and showed me the lewd sayings of Sir John Crake, parish priest of Brensett in Romney Marsh. Sends a bill of it. Has committed the priest to Maidstone gaol until Wolsey's pleasure be known, as it was not meet to trouble him with strangers in the time of this plague. Has been ill of it himself. Would be glad to have one of the late Sir Wm. Compton's offices. Hallden, 11 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

1528.

13 July.

Cal. D. E. 299.
B. M.

4502. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

"(Mons.) de Bayonne, j'ay tout a cest h[eu]re]
 . . . rouch mon ambassadeur par levers nostre S[ain]t Pere] Il a eue de Mons. de Lautrech du 2^{sme} pour ce que par le contenu d'icelle vous verrez faict sur nos ennemyz que c'est une victoire que une bataille gaignee. Saichant le (au Roy) mon bon frere et perpetuel allye de l'entendre, (et a Mons. le Legat) mon bon amy pareillement, j'ay bien voulu inco[n]tinent depescher ceste poste expressément pour envoyer les bonnes nouvelles), afin de les en pouvoyr advertir, et j'espere [qu'ils puissent] juger par la que lesdits ennemyz sont maintenant [en telle] extremite, que bien tost je leur en pourray faire a que je suis tout assure qu'ilz ne desiront mon Et quant aux Allemans nagueres descenduz en veu plusieurs advertissemens qui me sont veouz comme ilz avoient faict quelque baterye a Lode ja donne deux assaulx dont ilz avoient este [une] grande perte de leurs plus gens de byen et de capitaines Espaignolz estans avecques Antho[ine de Leyva] est une tres mauvaise amorse pour y reto[urner] est tres bien fortifiee et reparee et gens qui ont envye de se deff[endre]
 [c]este heure bien avant en paye avec vi[vres]
 [a]rmee qu'il est possible de voyr et qui nos[t] a forces des Venitiens que de huit mille Allemans adventuriers Francoys sans une bonne troupe de g[ens] de cinq a six cens hommes d'armes avecques laquel[le] ce qu'il pourra pour les aller trouver sans ryens haz[arder] I ne voye estre plus que a son grant adventaige et es n Dieu s'ilz en vyeussent la qu'il ne fera pas moins que sieur de Lautrech a faict jusques icy qui est de les battre que part qu'ilz les trouve, soit fors ou foibles.

"Mons. de Bayonne, j'ay semblablement ce jour d'huy receu une lettre de mon cousin le duc de Gueldres, le double de laquelle j'ay bien voulu vous envoyer a celle fin, que vous puissiez f[aire] entendre au Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye et a mon[sieur] le Cardinal mon bon amy l'estat en quoy sont de present ses affaires [qui] est tel, comme il m'escrypt, que s'il n'est bien tost ayde et on il se voit luy et sesdites affaires en tres grant et erys[ent] et danger. Et pour ce, Mons. de Bayonne, que pour est et si presche comme il est et prince a qui je . .
 les services qu'il s'est tous[jours] (quel)que bonne somme de deniers il me que d'icy a ung moys pour deux fois autant . . .
 parquoy et que en cela gist le point de Qui ne sera de moindre gloire et hon[neur] au Roy mon bon frere que a moy et a mon armee vous le le plus instamment qu'il vous sera possible [pour] secourir et ayder a ce besoing, comme il a choses dont je l'ay pryé et faict prier et requierir] et que en ce faisant outre ce que ce sera le du Roy mondit bon frere et perpetuel allye son moy, je le tyendray a plaisir si grant et ay ey le Legat mon bon amy que je ne suis pour oblyer et ayant obtenu la response deulx su que je ne fays double devoir estre telle que vous pryé en toute diligence m'en devoyr adv[er]tir] je vous face entendre l'ordre que vous aurez a te[nir] pour ce que vous en recouvrierez, mais je vous Bayonne, d'autant que vous savez que cela bien et conduicte de mes affaires que vous l'instance et poursuite qu'il vous sera [vous] m'en puissiez faire f[aire]

"(Au de)meurant, j'ay commande donner ordre e pourrez

1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

entendre par ce que l'on vous en vous priez encores pour ung peu de temps ne me faire le service pardela que vous avez si bien [faict jusques] icy, car je vous advise que je l'estime tant et [la] satisfaction que j'espere vous faire congnoistre que vous n'avez pas] perdu le temps que vous y avez demeure, le voullant vous recongnoistre de sorte que vous n'avez regret de s et songneusement vous y estre conduict et acquiete [ne] voulant oblir a vous prier m'advertir de la bonne san[te] dudit Roy mon bon frere et de mondit sieur le Legat [mon] bon amy, et de la continuation de ceste malladye ou si [elle] aura prins fin que Dieu perfectte par sa grace."

Fontainebleau, 13 July. Signed.Mutilated.

13 July. 4503. DE HESDYNG to [WOLSEY].

Galba, B. ix.

125.

B. M.

Is glad to hear that the reports of his illness were untrue. Offers his services. From his house at Bayghen, 13 July 1528. Signed.

P.S. in his own hand.—Begs him to continue his favor. If so, will not fear his enemy. Begs him to be careful whom he believes in the present treating for peace. Desires credence for the bearer.

Fr., pp. 2.

4504. P. DE VILLERS LYLE ADAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has been prevented from writing since his return to France by ill health, and because the King could not see him. When he did see him, gave him the King's and Wolsey's letters, and told him how honorably he had been received. He approved of deferring our business till next year, and, on Wolsey's recommendation, will do all he can for the restoration of the Order. Thanks Wolsey for his influence on their behalf with both Kings. Will leave in two days for Nice. Begs his further protection. Paris. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: R. & c. D. Thomæ, Car. Eboracen. Legato a latere ac Magno Angliæ Cancellario, &c.

Endd.: Litera Magri Hospitalis Sti. Johannis Jerlm.

13 July. 4505. JAMES V.

Cal. B. ii. 224.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 429.

"The articles and credence to be shown by our familiar servitor and gentleman of house, Patrik Sincler, to our dearest, maist tender and best beloved brother and uncle king of England in our behalf by the advice of the lords of our council."

(1.) After recommendations. (2.) That Angus was in France by advice of the Scotch Estates, and was invited thence by Henry VIII. to England, then came to Scotland, and was put in high authority at Henry's request; (3.) applied all the commodities of the realm to his own use; as chancellor and warden of the East and Middle Marches, caused divers raids to be made upon the broken men of this realm, using the King's authority, not against them, but against the barons that would not enter into band of "man-rent" * with him to make him more powerful than the Crown. (4.) On being commanded by the King to remain in the interior of the realm, and his brother and "eme" † to "enter in ward" for the security of the kingdom during the minority, they refused to obey, fortified their strongholds, and gathered the lieges against the King's authority. (5.) Desires commissioners may be sent to renew the peace about to expire for three years. (6.) That if Angus or his adherents seek help in England it may be refused. Edinburgh, 13 July. Signed: James Rex.

* Homage.

† Uncle.

1528.

Endd.: Instructions of the kyng of Scottes.

14 July. 4506. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

In favor of Patrick Sinder, whom he is sending to the King by the advice of his council with instructions signed by James. Edinburgh, 14 July 1528. Signed.

P. l. Add. Endd.

[14 July.] 4507. HENRY VIII. to WOLSEY.

Fiddes' Collections,
p. 174.

The great affection I bear you causes me, following the doctrine of my Master, quem diligo castigo, thus plainly to break my mind to you; not from any sinister report, interest or interference of any one. Therefore, I pray you, think it spoken in no displeasure, but of him that would you as much good both of body and soul as you would yourself.

It is not the duty of a trusty loving friend and servant, when a matter affecting his master's royalty and interest is left to his judgment, "to elect and choose a person which was by him defended" (forbidden). But what displeases me more is, that you cloak your offence by ignorance, saying that you did not know my determination in this matter. What can be clearer than these words, "So that none of those who either be or have been at any time noted or spotted with incontinence, like as by report the prioress had been in her youth, have it;" and in another place which says, "Therefore his Highness thinketh her not most meet for that purpose;" elsewhere, "And though his Grace speaketh it not so openly, yet westermeth his pleasure is that in no wise the prioress have it, nor yet dame Eleanor's eldest sister, for many considerations the which your Grace both can and will best consider."

It is a double offence to do ill and color it also. Therefore use it no more, for there is no man living that hateth it more than I do; and I must have reserved these things in my breast, out of which more displeasure would be apt to breed, or else declare them thus plainly; because I think that cum amico familiari sincere semper est agendum, especially the master with his best beloved servant and friend; for so the one will be more circumspect, the other show his lothness to harbour displeasure.

Touching the redress of religion, it is a gracious act: but, if report be true, ab imbecillis imbecilla expectantur. Mr. Ben (Bell) informs me that her manners are grave. I understand, which is greatly to my comfort, that you have ordered yourself to God-ward, as religiously and virtuously as any prelate or father of Christ's church can do. "Wher in so doing and persevering there can nothing be more acceptable to God, more honor to yourself, nor more desired of your friends, amongst the which I reckon not myself the least."

As a master and friend, I must desire you to take what I say in good part: for I do it upon no other ground but the wealth of your soul and mine, and because I dare be bolder with you than many who inumble it abroad, and I wish success to the foundation begun by you. It is reported that the goods for building the same are not best acquired, and come from many religious houses unlawfully, "bearing the cloak of kindness towards the edifying of your College," which many cannot believe, since those houses would not grant to their sovereign in his necessity, not by a great deal, so much as they have for your colleges. Unless they receive some benefit, they are not apt to show kindness, tam enim est aliena ab eis ipsa humanitas. Substantial scrutiny ought to be made of those who are put in trust by you in meddling with the religious houses. I trust there is no reason for the accusation. But in talibus ignorantia non excusat peccatum. I write not this upon any displeasure. It is, first, for my discharge before God, being in the room I am; and, secondly, for the great zeal I bear unto you, not undeserved on your behalf. Your fault acknowledged, there shall remain in me no spark of displeasure.

* Dr. Bell's letter, from which the above extracts are taken, has not been found. It must have been written between the 7th and 10th of July. (See Nos. 4486, 4488.)

1528.

HENRY VIII. to WOLSEY—cont.

I and my people are well, ever since we came to Anthill on Saturday* last in marvellous good health and cleanness of air. "Written with the hand of him that is and shall be your loving sovereign, lord and friend."

14 July.

4508. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. i. 316.

This morning the King, after writing his letter to you, called Mr. Russell and me, and read us the same, and said he did with you as an entire friend and master should do. Wherefore be of good comfort, and take not this matter to your heaviness. This morning Dr. Waffham† was minded to ask the King to interpose with you for sealing his patent, but we prevented him, fearing the King might be displeased at your delay in the matter. I beg you not to stick at this present moment at so small a thing. Hamptell, 14 July, at 3 of the clock.

Hol. Sealed. Add. Endd.

[July.]

Herbert's Life of Hen. VIII.
p. 67

4509. HENRY VIII. to WOLSEY.

As touching the matter of Wilton, seeing it is in no other strain than you write of,—you being afraid and your servants sick,—I marvel not that it overslipped you. But it is no great matter; for it is yet in my hand, as I perceive by your letter; and your fault was not so great, as the election was but conditional. Seeing the humbleness of your submission, I am content to remit it, and am glad that my warnings have been lovingly accepted. As touching the help of religious houses for your college, I would it were more, if so be it were offered; but there is great murmuring at it throughout the realm, among the good and bad. They say that the college is a cloak for all mischief. I perceive by your letter that you have received money of the exempts for having their old visitors. If your legacy is a cloak apud homines, it is not apud Deum. I doubt not, therefore, that you will desist; and in so doing we will sing Te laudant angeli atque archangeli, te laudat omnis spiritus. Thus I end this rude yet loving letter; assuring you that at this hour there remains no spark of displeasure towards you in my heart.‡

14 July.

4510. BRIAN TUKE to PETER VANNES.

Titus, B. xi.
356.
B. M.

Was much consoled by Vannes' last letters, showing my Lord's great goodness to him.

His wife has "passed the sweat," but is very weak, and is broken out about the mouth and other places. Tuke "puts away the sweat" from himself nightly, though other people think they would kill themselves thereby. Has done this during the last sweat and this, feeling sure that as long as he

* 11 July.

† Dr. Wm. Vaughan.

‡ Lord Herbert, to whom we are indebted for this letter, states that it was taken from the records, and is written in the King's own hand. It has been confounded by the editors of the "State Papers" with a letter printed in Fiddes. It is clear there is still a letter of Wolsey's wanting, to complete the correspondence.

1528.

is not first sick, the sweat is rather provoked by disposition of the time and by keeping men close than by any infection. Thousands have it from fear, who need not else sweat, especially if they observe good diet. When a man is not sick, there is no fear of putting away the sweat, in the beginning, "and before a man's greense be with hot keeping molten." Surely after the greense is heated, it must be more dangerous for a man to take cold than for a horse, which dies in such a case. His belief that the sweat in men who are not sick "processes much of men's opinion," is confirmed by the fact that it is prevalent nowhere but in the King's dominion. In France and Flanders it is called the king of England's sickness, and is not thought much of there. It does not go to Gravelines when it is at Calais, though people go from one to the other. It has only been brought from London to other parts by report; for when a whole man comes from London, and talks of the sweat, the same night all the town is full of it, and thus it spreads as the fame runs. It came in this way from Sussex to London, and 1,000 fell ill in a night after the news was spread. "Children also, lacking this opinion, have it not," unless their mothers kill them by keeping them too hot if they see them sweat a little.

Does not deny that there is an infection, which he takes to be "rather a kind of a pestilence than otherwise, and that the moisture of years past hath so altered the nature both of our meats and bodies to moist humours, as disposeth us to sweat." Does not think that every man who sweats is infected, and believes that the disposition to sweat may be, by good governance, relieved. Wishes him to show this to my lord's Grace, to satisfy his mind. Dr. Bartlot, his physician, cannot deny this.

The infection is greatly to be feared and avoided, which cannot be, if men meet together in great companies in infect airs and places.

Wishes him to exhort Wolsey not to run any danger. Was sorry to see by Vannes' letters that he was doing so much with so small assistance. Can do nothing to assist him, now that his house is thus visited, and he himself is in extreme perplexity, and soon cast down by the least transgression of his diet. If he were with Wolsey, would be more likely to bring danger and trouble than do any good. Has not strength to write much or study. Writes this at his waking after midnight, fearing to be still for the sweat, with an aching and troubled head.

Remembering that, as Vannes wrote, Wolsey said that Ireland was in great danger if speedy order were not taken, sends the following news. The prior of Kilmainham, who lies within three miles of Tuke, has been with him twice or thrice. He thinks that the best thing to be done until the King and Wolsey take other order is that some fit man, as James Butler, son of my lord of Ossery, "be subrogate in the lieu of the deputy prisoner," and that raids be made to destroy the corn of the wild Irish, which is the chief punishment of the rebels. The neglect of doing this encourages and enables them to offend the English. He thinks nothing would be necessary but the King's letters to whomever it pleases him to entrust the affair to, and to the Council, to assist and to do anything else beneficial. Will draw up any minutes needed, if Vannes will send instructions, but he does not wish to come to Wolsey, considering the precarious state of his health.

Encloses letters from the deputy of Calais. Portgore, 14 July 1528.

Hol., pp. 5. Add. Endd.

14 July.

4511. JOHN HACKET to [WOLSEY].

Galba, B. ix.

129.

B. M.

Wrote last on the xxv[ij.] June, by his servant Janyn Sowhyer. Since then my Lady has caused great diligence to be made for the apprehension of the three heretics, two of whom could not be found. On the 12th caused Ric. Harman to be arrested at Antwerp, and the Margrave has also arrested his wife, as suspected of the same faction. His goods are inventoried in the Emperor's hands. The Margrave has also taken an English priest, Sir R . . . Akyrston, mass priest of St. Botolph's in London, who, as Hacket hears, has borne a fagot at home, but for all that cannot refrain his tongue from evil speaking. Advises Wolsey to send some learned persons here to assist in the examination as soon as possible, or else to send Hacket ample information and instructions. Wishes Wolsey had Harman in England, for he is a root of great mischief. Knows no better means to get him out of this country than, if the King has any action of treason against him, that he or Wolsey should write for his delivery as a traitor. Would thus have two strings to our bow. Fears that on revoking his heresy he will escape with a slanderous punishment, but they cannot pardon him for treason to the King, in consequence of the statutes of intercourse dated 1505. Thinks it would be a good thing if Lutherans were included with traitors in the intercourse, for as soon as they have passed the sea they know neither God nor King. Is told there are many "atowss . . ." in England, and divers Englishmen on this side the sea, that have such bills and "serowys" as are here inclosed, which they show to each other as a privy token. Does not know what will come of it, but "the calculation was never made for no good purpose."

1528.

JOHN HACKET to [WOLSEY]—cont.

The cardinal of Liege sends his recommendations to Wolsey, and wished Hacket to say that my lord of Montfort, a gentleman of the Emperor's privy chamber, left here for Spain on the 13th inst., trusting to the safe-conduct which Wolsey has got for him from France; and that he hears from Dutchland of a new conceit of baptism that the commonalties about the Danube and the Rhine use by nyg[ht], with congregations of many hundreds together;—the one baptizing the other with oath and promise never to obey lord nor priest; of whom the count Palatine has caused divers to be burned, and will burn more if they can be found.

Since he last wrote the Emperor's army here has taken Utrecht and Hardyrwyk. Today Hoghestrat is going to Utrecht to arrange for the keeping of the towns, and for the invasion of the duke of Geldyr's lands. The Duke will not yet accept the truce; and when he will, they will cease. There is a report that the cardinal of Bourbon and Madame Vandome are coming to this country to treat for their confiscated lands. There was a French gentleman here sent to the duke of Gueldres to know his answer about the truce. He left this place on the 6th, but nothing has been heard from him. Machlyng, 14 July 1528.

As for himself, his heart is much better than his purse.

Hol., pp. 4.

15 July.

Cott. App.

77 b.

R.M.

4512. The UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE to WOLSEY.

Thanking him for the protection he has afforded them. It has quite obliterated from their memories the bitterness they felt at a calumny which had been circulated of their being favorable to Lutheranism. They have done nothing more than practise their old scholastic disputations. Cambridge, 15 July.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 3. Add.: Rmo., &c., Thomæ Card, presb. a lat. Legato et Angl. Canc. &c.

[15 July.]

R.O.

St. P. 1. 317.

4513. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

Your gracious letters, by which I perceive "that no spark of displeasure remains in your heart," have so comforted me, being full of heaviness and sorrow, that I seem like one restored to life. I humbly thank you for your great zeal in desiring the purity of my conscience, and that nothing should be done by me, in the matter of my college or otherwise, which should give occasion to others to speak ill of me. I have received from many old friends and exempt religious persons various sums of money, but not so much as is reported; nor has any been corruptly given, as I shall be ready to prove to your Grace. But to avoid all occasion for the future, I promise your Majesty that if I should be compelled to sell all that I have, neither I, nor any other by my consent, shall take anything for the use of my college, however frankly offered, from any religious person; purposing so to order my poor life that it shall appear that I love and dread God, and also your Majesty.

1528.

Hol. Add.

15 July. 4514. The BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Announces the death on 14 July of [John] Constable, dean of Lincoln. Desires that Geo. Hennege be preferred to the vacant place, as it is his native country, and he shall keep a house there. Offers him the archdeaconry of Oxfordshire for Wynter. The Dean held St. Leonard's in York, an honorable promotion, of the King's gift, and other things. There is a house in the close at Lincoln, belonging to the late Archdeacon, which I should be glad of for a residence for my nephew, Richard Pate, archdeacon of Lincoln, whom I should like to settle there. If master Wynter were in England I doubt not that he would be a humble suitor to your Grace in this behalf for my said nephew, who hath him in his especial favor; and he is, in his learning, and otherwise, dally attendant upon Master Dean. Buckden, 15 July.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

15 July. 4515. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 88.

The King is at Fontainebleau, my Lady at St. Germain's; the Council, part here, part with her. We are expecting to hear of the success of Naples. The Great Master wrote that the French herald has returned from the Emperor, but he has not told us the news. He was handsomely entertained. The Emperor will send an answer by his own herald, for whom Francis will grant a safe-conduct, if he bring him the Emperor's election of a place to fight in, according to the law of arms, which is that the provoker shall choose the place, and the defender genus armorum. Hears the Imperials in Lombardy had assaulted Lodi, but were driven back with great slaughter. St. Pöl has passed the mountains. Sylvester (Darius), on the 28th, was still at Bayonne, but has now crossed into Spain. The ambassadors of Venice, Milan and Florence have arrived here from the Imperial Court, with no hope that the Emperor will listen to peace. They lay all the fault on the Chancellor (L'Allemand). The Great Master of Rhodes has gone to Nice. Paris, 15 July. Signed.

Add. Endd.

15 July. 4516. JOHN DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF [BAYONNE], to PETER VANNES.

Cal. D. vii. 17.

B. M.

His master, the king of France, desires the speedy payment of some considerable sum promised him by way of contribution to relieve him from the burdens of the present war. St. Pöl has under him as large a body of troops as Lautree at Naples, consisting mainly of Swiss and Germans, who require large pay. Francis is very anxious to push his advantages, and not let the victory slip through his hands. He will force the Emperor to a peace, honorable to Christendom, the credit of which will be attributed to Wolsey, but he must use all efforts, and none will be more acceptable than his furnishing the money. Begs that Vannes will lay the case before him with all the eloquence of which he is master, because he does not like to write to the Cardinal himself for fear of incurring suspicion. Is not surprised that his letters make [no] mention of the ratification. "Plane enim video ex memoria eam . . . curarent nostris excidisse satis fortasse rati se fecisse homines . . . ita valde oculati quod eam dominæ Margareta miserint." He expects it shortly. As soon as [he] receives the letters from the cardinal of Lorraine, he will include them in the parcel. The business of the duke of Vendosme is of great consequence.* John Dancius (Sir John Dauncy) leaves for the country until September. Asks for letters from Wolsey to him for the use of his house. If he is allowed the use of it he will have to make many repairs, as it has scarcely been tenanted for three years, and the pigeons build their nests in it. Does not wish to be troublesome, except in the affair of the duke of Vendôme. "Ex suburbano nostro xv^o die Julii."

1528.

JOHN DU BELLAY, BISHOP OF [BAYONNE], to PETER VANNES—cont.

Hol., Lat., much mutilated, pp. 3. Add.: "Rdo. D. tanquam fratri D. P. Vannes, Ill. ac R. D. legati secretario," &c.

15 July.

Lettere
di Principi,
II. 107.

4517. [GIO. BATT. SANGA] to [ALBERTO] FANTONI.

I cannot describe the Pope's pleasure on finding that his proceedings are approved by honest men, "come è l'essersi contenuto nella naturalità,† con laude del Reverendissimo Eboracense." No one has yet been sent to Spain. The general [of the Franciscans] has been expecting to be sent from one week to another; but we thought the bishop of Pistoia would be sent in his stead. I do not think the General could bring about any conclusion. The Pope would have sent some one else of greater ability to hasten the negotiations, but the issue of this war is still doubtful. Italian news. Viterbo, 15 July 1528.

Ital.

4518. TUKE to THOS. DERBY.

R. O.

Sends Bawdewyn, according to his letters from Windsor and Hampton Court, which he received at 9 o'clock this morning. As to the letters from the French ambassador to Tuke's clerk at London, Hawte dispatched them as soon as he had them, at 3 p.m. on Monday. Asks him to tell Wolsey that the French ambassador was never accustomed to deliver the packets to Tuke till he knew Wolsey had his. Tells his folk not to send his own letters till they have attended to Wolsey's, so they did not come till today, and he now sends them to be shown to Wolsey. His disease is mending. Tried, two days ago, to sit on his mule, "but it wolde not be; I am yet so tendre underneath, wher was like to have ben a fistula." If he were once rid of his oils and ointments would come to Wolsey. Hopes soon to be rid of his disease. Has bidden his man in London to write to Derby. Thinks the default was neither in him nor the post. Portgore, Wednesday.

Hol., p. 1. Endd.

4519. BRIAN TUKE to PETER VANNES.

R. O.

Asks him to deliver to Wolsey the accompanying book, sealed, in which is to be written the cipher between Vannes and Sir Gregory, and also to tell Wolsey that he is "so vexed with the laske," that he could not without shame stay half an hour in his presence. Has reformed the other instructions as Wolsey wished. Will have them written afresh today, except

* The passage between  is so mutilated that the sense is uncertain.

† neutralità?

1528.

the secret matters which he will leave to be put in cipher. Will put the Spanish matters in readiness before coming to Wolsey tomorrow.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

4520. BRIAN TUKE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

I sent yesterday to Peter Vannes to make my excuse to you for not coming before noon. I then hoped to have come in the afternoon, not liking to plead illness. I have, however, "I trust, but a small disease, but it is dangerous;" and within these four days I have consulted Mr. Fynche, your physician, Mr. Bartlot and Mr. Peter. Mr. Fynche warns me, unless I take care there may be ulceratio vesicae et postea stranguria. Mr. Bartlot calls it apostema nisi interveniret febris. They all say there is no danger if I take care for three or four days. Must therefore ask Wolsey's indulgence tomorrow and next day, otherwise he is ready to risk all the danger. Is nevertheless like a man in health. Sends letters received from France. London, this Tuesday.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To my lord Legate's good grace."

16 July.

4521. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. i. 318.

Has given the vicarage of Wursworth (Wirksworth) in the Peak, vacant by the death of the dean of Lincoln, to Mr. Wilson, knowing how much the King is interested in his promotion. Begs St. Leonard's, York, in the King's gift, for "the poor dean of Wells," for which he will give up a prebend in Ripon, which Wolsey will make of equal value to St. Leonard's; "and yet with the same your Grace shall, at my poor contemplation, show your gracious bounty unto my said poor scholar." Hampton Court, 16 July. Signed.

Add.

16 July.

4522. The ABBOT OF FURNESS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received on the 14th his letter dated 2 July, blaming his negligence in delaying to answer Wolsey's first letters; requiring also a grant of the stewardship of their monastery, duly sealed, to be sent by the bearer. According to his promise, was coming to Wolsey by the space of forty miles and more, when he heard of the plague and the adjournment of the term. Since his return, he and the monastery have made a grant of the stewardship to the earl of Derby; but as a former grant was delivered to the late Earl by the pretended abbot, John Dalton, they desire to have it returned, and will deliver the Earl a substantial one in the place of it. Furness, 16 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

17 July.

4523. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Cal. D. x. 289.

R. M.

"Mons. de Bayonne, depuis la derreniere depesche ay receu vos lettres du derrenier du passe, et p entendu le discours que vous me faictes de la dif[ficulte faicte] parde la sur l'obligation qui vous avoit este envoyee de ce que vous avez traite en faisant la tr contribution d'Itallye, et combien qu'il ne aucune occasion de defiance ou suspicion veu le refuserent a Mons. de Tarbes pour les p m'accorderent a Amyens pour le voyage de Mons.
 affin de leur donner a congnoistre que je ne fai suis pour jamais faire qu'ilz ne me tiennent ent et pourront parcy apres promectre, veu la bonne et 1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

... qui est entre eulx et moy, je vous pryé en c que derrerienement je vous en ay escript qui e je me tiens si assure en l'effect de leur prom[esse] que je ne] veulx autre obligation que celle qu'ilz verront pa devoir bailler, sans aucunement les presser de l'ayant eue telle d'eulx qu'elle vous semblera presser de chose qui leur saiche engendrer comme veritablement je seroy tres ma pourrez monstrier le billet que je [cong]noistre que mois la somme
 de 5732 s cest somme et secours bien petit, veu le groz fl[eu]z que j'ai m]aintenant a porter tant au royaume de Naples qu Mons. de Sainct Pol, lequel pour plus seurement de son emprinse, j'ay encores, oultre tout ce que j avoys escript qu'il menoit avecques luy, faict pay[er] mille lansquenetz qui est une belle bande et bien ague[r]rie] laquelle je foyz acheminer apres luy, esperant p moyen plus tost abreger l'affaire de dela et que n viendrons plus niscement a ce que tant nous desirons qu a une bonne et universelle paix, delivrance de mes enf[ans] et recouvrement de ce qui est deu au Roy mon frere [et] perpetuel allye. A ceste cause je vous pryé, mon[sieur] de Bayonne, le voulloir bien et vivement remonstrer a le Legat mon bon amy, luy faisant bien entendre que la qui m'a donnee de m'adresser privement a luy es chose[s] qui me toucheroient et ou il pourroit remedyer me fai . .
 [I]e prier et bien fort requerir avoir regard a ce que dessus
 e que a ce point gist la fin et conclusion de toutes noz nes qu'il vueille tant faire pour l'amour de moy e bon frere et perpetuel allye qu'il de ce monde a la ra n la necessite ou par faulte de na il pourroit tumber, comme je le vous dicelle. A ceste cause et que sur cela que lors vous m'escripvistes monditi sieur le bonne volonte, le cas advenant que l'on v m'ayder a le secourir, veu que pour le R et pour complaire audit Roy mon bon frere je comprehension de monditi cousin sy a son desir a este passee, je vous pryé, monstrant a [monditi sieur le Legat] mon bon amy lesdites lettres et lay ramentevant ce vous le pryéz tres instamment de ma part despenche que je suis contrainct porter et sous[tenir] et a l'occasion de laquelle il me seroit tres secourir monditi cousin le duc de Gueldres pro il en a besoing qu'il vueille pour l'amour de envers ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel [allye] vueille ayder de quelque somme pour po comme de ma part je suis delibere . . .
 que en ce faisant il entretiendra m pays de l'Empereur, mais les endon [tou]sjours plus d'occasion [Mons. de] Bayonne, et que cest tant j'ay a cuer que nulle autre quelle [je] vous pryé le remonstrer et faire entendre de ma [part] amy par façon que je puisse congnoistre l'envyé chose pour moy comme tant de foyz il le m s, et qu'il a congneu jusques icy que j'ay faict . . .
 ses dont il m'a voulu faire requerir et je l lle grace et plaisir que je luy en porteray toute ma vye 1528.

... ande et plus estroicte obligation, vous pryant incontinent [ma v'ouloyr advertir de ce qui vous y sera respondu, et sembla-blement d]e la reception de mes derrenieres lettres, et ce que vous
 . . . faict en ce que par lesdles je vous escripvoys." Fontainebleau, 17 July.
Signed.

Mutilated. Add.

July. 4524. TREATY.

Cal. D. x. 298.
 R. M.

" [A]ngleterre a promis fournir durant [comm]encans le premier jour de Juing et finissans le [deruier] jour de Novembre prochainement venant par chacun desdits moy[s] 27,800 sol., qui seroit pour lesdits six moy[s] la somme de

" Qui seroit pour ledit mois de Juing et le present de Juillet surquoy est a desleuyre le payement qui se doit faire au roy d'Angleterre du terme de May aussi dernier passe Item la partie de Monseigneur le legat d'Yorth dudit terme montant. x

" Et de ce qu'il fault rabatre 52,868 sol., par ainsi seroit encores a re-couvrer dudit roy d'Angleterre desdits moy[s] de Juing et ce present de Juillet v^m"

Mutilated.

17 July. 4525. TH. DORYNGTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This Friday, the 17th of July, was certified of the death of the dean of Lincoln. Wishes his master* may enjoy the hospital of St. Leonard's.
 Will do his best that neither the bishop of Man nor any other shall take possession of it till Wolsey's pleasure be known. Beverley, 17 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 July. 4526. THOMAS WYSTER, DEAN OF WELLS.

S. B.

To be warden of Saint Leonard's Hospital, York, vicer John Constable, clerk, deceased, in the King's gift by reason of the death of the dean of Lincoln. Del. Westm., 17† July 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 19.

18 July. 4527. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

I have received your letter desiring the deanery of Lincoln for the dean of Wells, but stating that you are contented to further my desire for Master Hennege, so that the Dean have the prebend of Bucks. For your goodness in suffering me to bestow my own livelihood I humbly thank you.
 I beg you to be good lord to me and my poor kinsman. If he should leave this prebend, being in his natural country, among his kinsfolk and friends, it would give me great grief, and be little liked. The scholar is as virtuous a young man as few are in England; and I trust, by the assistance of God, he shall do much good in the Church. If you will be his and my good lord, and be contented that he keep his prebend, I will offer 200*l.* to the building of your College, and will send up to you, or the dean of your College, two obligations for the money. If it be your pleasure to have the dean of Wells dean of my church, I shall be most glad. But so far as I wish one to be resident, I should have preferred Hennege. Buckden, 18 July.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

* Wynter?

† The enrolment is dated 16 July.

1528.

18 July. 4528. THOMAS BENET, Priest, to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. I. 314. Repaired to Wilton, and used every effort to bring over the nuns to Wolsey's wishes. Found them untoward, and put three or four of the captains of them in ward. Has closed up the doors, that none might have access to the nunnery. Found only the new elect and her sisters compliant. As they are now visited by the plague, and much straitened in their lodging by the burning of their dormitory, thought it best to advertise Wolsey before taking further proceedings. Wilton, 18 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Sealed. Endd.

18 July. 4529. ISABEL, ABBESS ELECT OF WILTON, to WOLSEY.

R. O. Thanks him for his goodness. Since her coming home, has acted according to the advice of his Chancellor, and urged her sisters to be "reclused" within the monastery, against which they show many considerations. Asks him to make allowance for her now coming to the governance of her sisters, and hopes in time to order herself according to his pleasure, and to rule her sisters according to their religion without any such resort as has of late been accustomed. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c. my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

18 July. 4530. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.*

R. O. Thanks him for the good reception and favorable despatch given to his messengers, and for his "wise and honest directions" in past times touching the weal of both realms. Desires credence for Patrick Sinclair. Edinburgh, 18 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

18 July. 4531. WILLIAM LORD DACRE to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. I. 17.
B. M.
St. P. I. 300. Since his repair to the North, hearing of the sudden change of affairs in Scotland, sent a servant to Edinburgh, who remained there 10 days, and returned today. The King and Queen came to Edinburgh from Stirling on Monday the 6th, accompanied by the bishops of Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dunkeld, Galloway and Brighen, the earls of Argyll, Arran, Eglinton, Rothuse and Bothwell, lords Maxwell, Avendale, Seton, Forbes, Home and Yestre, and their servants. The King remained on Tuesday and Wednesday at the bishop of St. Andrews' lodging. On Thursday proclamation was made that no one should send messages to Angus, his two brothers, or his uncle. On Saturday and Monday the King and Lords sat in the Tolbooth, where they determined to have a Parliament, to begin on Wednesday, 2 Sept. They have authorised the bishop of Glasgow, late the King's schoolmaster, to be chancellor, and lord Maxwell to be provost of Edinburgh. The Council have sent writings to the King and Wolsey by Patrick Sinclair. The King is ruled by the Queen, Henry Stue[art], now her husband, lord Maxwell and the laird of Buccleuch, chief maintainers of all misguided men on the Borders, with the sheriff of Ayr, who slew the earl of Cassilis, "and now bestfellow to the said King." Sees no likelihood of good order in Scotland. All the time the King was in Edinburgh he was nightly watched by sundry lords in their most defensible array, and one night watched in like array

* James appears to have been at Melrose on the 19 July 1526 (see No. 2203), and it is possible he may have left Edinburgh for that place the same day or the day before. If so, this document must be referred to 1526. If not, the date Edinburgh is merely official, as Dacre states in his letter (No 4531), that on Tuesday, 14 July 1526, the King had left Edinburgh for Stirling.

1528.

himself for fear of Angus's party. On Tuesday last,* the King and Queen removed to Stirling, and the Lords left Edinburgh in disorder.

Thinks Thos. Muregrave should be ordered to lie in Bewcasteldale, which is most exposed to the incursions of the borderers. Has received the King's letters, granted on a wrong surmise, at the suit of my lord of Cumberland, "for the King's lands adjoining Carlisle, parcel of the sheriffwick of Cumberland, taken this year by me." Has made answer to my Lord, and written to the King. Sends copies, with the original, to the King, which Wolsey may deliver or not, at his discretion. Wishes to know the King's pleasure before the time "of shoring† of the corns come," for the sake of the present tenants. Has several times demanded of my lord of Cumberland deliverance to himself, as the King's officer, of "two common trew breakers, errant thieves of Scotland," named Daude Armstrong and Dyk Irwen, called Dik of the Wedfote, now in Carlisle Castle. Their not being punished has encouraged other malefactors, and Irwen's brother and friends have taken a kinsman of Dacre's, named Jeffray Middleton, on his return from a pilgrimage to St. Ninian's, as a hostage for Irwen. Naward, 18 July. Signed.

Add. Endd.: "From the lord Dacres the 18th day of July. In another hand: "Lettres of the lord Dacres, mensibus Junii, Julii et Augusti. Item, other letters of his, mensibus Martii et Aprilis 1528."

4532. SCOTLAND.

Cal. B. vii

f. 79.

B. M.

"The credence given by the queen of Scots to Walter Taite, her servant and messenger, to show to my lord Warden, as he saith."

1. The king of Scots has taken from her Stirling Castle. Bids no war or provocation for it may arise between the realms. 3. That her letters be sent to her brother. 4. The Scottish king rode privily from Edinburgh to Stirling, with five or six horse, and had an interview with those lords who had not frequented the court since Lennox was slain; sc., the earls of Murray and Argyll, lords Eryndall, Syncler, Malxfield, and the sheriff of Ayr. 5. A change is expected. Signed: "H. Northumberland."

P. 1. Endd.

18 July.

4533. [GEO. BATL. SANGA] to CAPTAIN ANDREA DORIA.

Lettre
di Principi,
n. 108.

Cardinal Campeggio is to embark at Corneto on Tuesday. Viterbo,

18 July.

Ital.

20 July.

4534. HENRY DUKE OF RICHMOND to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

I have received your letters and the goodly apparel you sent me by Master Magnus, director of my council. According to the purport of your said letters, I shall apply myself to learning, and proceed in virtue. Sherifftutton, 20 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

20 July.

4535. THE DIVORCE.

Cont. App.
K. VII. 12.
B. M.

Notarial attestation of the presentation to the Pope, on 20 July, 1528, 5 Clement VII., by John Anthony Musettola, nobleman of Naples, and imperial ambassador to his Holiness, of a petition and protestation, in behalf of queen Katharine, to the following effect.

Hears that the Pope intends to send cardinal Campeggio to England to determine the pretended suit by which the King intends to annul his

* July 14th.

† sc., reaping. In the St. P. the word is misread "shoring."

1328.

THE DIVORCE—cont.

marriage. Prays his Holiness to forbid the suit, and impose perpetual silence, as the marriage was contracted in accordance with an apostolic ordinance, and consummated by the cohabitation of many years and the birth of children. Wars between Christian princes will be the result. It is intended to separate what God has joined, mutual will has confirmed, and the Holy See has ratified; to impugn the decrees of the Roman church, and restrain the Pope's power. The enemy of man will profit much from this seed of wickedness and discord. No marriages will be secure if this is dissolved. The cause should on no account be decided, except at the court of Rome, because of its importance, and because it turns upon the interpretation of a papal dispensation. Least of all should it be determined in England, where the Queen fears the power of the King, and there will be no security for her defence. In his Holiness's court she is ready to show her rights.

The Legates are much suspected, especially the cardinal of York, who is chancellor of England, and councillor and vassal to the King, and has often urged the Pope to grant the King's request about this matter. Petitions his Holiness therefore to revoke all commissions to try the cause away from Rome, and appeals to his tribunal in the name of the Queen and of the Emperor. Protests that as she is in England, and in her husband's power, no acts executed by her concerning the place or mode of trial must be understood to the prejudice of her rights.

Viterbo, "in aedibus S. Sixti," where the Pope resides. Witnesses: Peter Ruiz de Alacron (sic), of Spain, and Julian Visconti, clerk, of Milan.

Attested by Baldus de Nigris, of Civita Nova, in the diocese of Fermo, notary of the Apostolic Chamber.

Lat., copy, pp. 8. Endd.

21 July.

4536. DUKE OF RICHMOND to HENRY VIII.

R. O.
St. P. 1. 321.

I have received two of your letters, dated Tittenhanger, the 10th, desiring the preferment of Sir Giles Strangwishe and Sir Edw. Seymer, master of my horse, to rooms vacant by the death of Sir Wm. Compton. I send a list of the offices and the fees appertaining. I presume you mean that one of the said gentlemen is to be preferred to the stewardship of Canforde.

It was signified to me by the Cardinal that it was your pleasure, when any office fell vacant, that I should dispose of it, considering the great number of my servants who have no other reward. Hearing, then, that the stewardship of my lands in Dorset and Somerset shires was void, I have disposed of one of them to Sir Wm. Parre, and the other to Geo. Coton, who attends upon me. Sheriffhutton, 21 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

ii. Lordships belonging to my lord of Richmond and Somerset.

Dorset.—Canforde, Corfe Castle, Cockden hundred and the Isle of Purlyke. The steward's fee is 100s.

Somerset.—The borough of Milbourn Port. The manor of Kingsbury Regis and the hundred of Horsethoru. The manor of Quene Cammell. The lordship of Martock. The hundred of Stone and Cattisayshe. The manor of Coryrevell. The hundred of Abdyke and Bulstone, and the borough of Langporte.

The steward's fee is 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, besides 60*s.* for his clerk.

P. 1.

R. O.

2. Duplicates of the two preceding documents, in the same hand.

1528.

4537. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.Love Letters, AL.

The approach of the time which has been delayed so long delights me so much that it seems almost already come. Nevertheless, the entire accomplishment cannot be till the two persons meet; which meeting is more desired on my part than anything in the world, for what joy can be so great as to have the company of her who is my most dear friend, knowing likewise that she does the same. Judge then what will that personage do whose absence has given me the greatest pain in my heart, which neither tongue nor writing can express, and nothing but that can remedy. Tell your father on my part that I beg him to abridge by two days the time appointed that he may be in court before the old term, or at least upon the day prefixed; otherwise I shall think he will not do the lover's turn as he said he would, nor answer my expectation. No more, for want of time. I hope soon to tell you by mouth the rest of the pains I have suffered in your absence. Written by the hand of the secretary, who hopes to be privately with you, &c.

Fr.

21 July.

R. O.

4538. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

I have this day put the King in remembrance of the letter of his own hand, which he said he would write, but he complains of his head, and therefore is not disposed to write at present. Tomorrow he intends to go to Grafton, to stay the Thursday, and return on the Friday. I will get him to write without fail, when I can. I beseech you continue gracious to my poor brother the archdeacon of Oxford, for whom I thank you. Amptill, 21 July. Signed.

P.S.—There is no news here. The King is well, saving his head. My lady Rocheford and Mrs. Anne cometh this week to the Court. My lord Rocheford was to have come, but because of the sweat he remains at home.

*P. 1. Add. Endd.4539. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.Love Letters, AV.

Is perplexed with such things as her brother will declare to her. Wrote in his last that he trusted shortly to see her, "which is better known at London than with any that is about me; whereof I not a little marvel, but lack of discreet handling must be the cause thereof." I hope soon "our meeting shall not depend upon other men's lyght handlyleness but upon your own. Written with the hand of hys that longeth to be yours."

21 July.

R. O.

4540. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

St. P. i. 320.

Sends letters, dated the 20th ult., from Valladolid, containing nothing of importance, excepting the enlargement of the King's subjects, with orders of the Empress for restitution, as at that time neither Ichingham nor Sylvester had arrived. Sends letters from my lord of Bath, containing news of the progress of the Almain in Lombardy, with a good hope that Naples is by this time taken; stating also that Sylvester had entered Spain, and that Guienne herald, sent by Francis to offer duel, had returned. The Emperor intends to make answer by his herald, desiring a safe-conduct; which the French king refuses, unless the Emperor give him option of place, to which it is supposed he will never agree. "So that, I trust to God, these young outrageous passions shall be finally converted into fume." I have made an expedition for your dominion of Ireland in no small agony of mind, and weakness of head and stomach. I send intercepted letters, written in Italian, and translated into Latin, by which you will perceive what labour has been made to the Pope on the Emperor's behalf to impeach your secret affair; and though the answer may have been wisely made by the Pope to avoid jealousy, a good eye must be had to that matter, and specially to the journeying of the Legate, lest it be delayed on the pretence of the gout or other cause. I purpose by my present letters to accelerate the Legate, and I expect to hear of his arrival in France. Hampton Court, 21 July. Signed,

1528.

WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.—cont.

Add.

[July.] 4541. IRELAND and SCOTLAND.

Lambeth, 607,
f. 2.
St. P. II. 136

"Certain considerations to be showed by way of memorial unto the King's highness by Master Peter Vannys and Uvedale, moving the lord Cardinal to make the expedition of Ireland after the form and manner as was lately sent unto the King's highness."

1. Letters had been sent to Wolsey by the King's command, stating that harvest being so near at hand some other measure should be adopted immediately for the defence of Ireland; that Ossory's servant should be despatched for the purpose; and that either Ossory or his son should be appointed to defend the country. Though Wolsey was then very ill able to attend to such business, he proceeded to the devising of the said expedition. For reasons which will appear hereafter, he thinks the present an inconvenient time to discharge Kildare. The execution of all exploits might be committed to James Butler, notwithstanding his young years, his father being incapacitated by age, unwieldiness "and other passions," provided he were enjoined not to do anything without the advice of the Irish Council. Letters had been devised accordingly to the said James his father, the Council and O'Donnell. 2. That the cost of defending the land may not fall upon the King, authority might be given by the Council to take coyne and livery; and the profits which the earl of Kildare enjoyed when he was there might be appropriated to that purpose. 3. The authority given to James Butler must not affect the old quarrels between the earls of Kildare and Ossory, but every question must be referred to the Council. 4. Letters should be written to O'Donnell to continue him in his loyalty, and desire him to aid Butler. 5. "There be also sharp letters written to Okoner for the delivery of the earl of Kildare's deputy, taken by fraud and under color of friendly communication."

Wolsey's reasons against putting Kildare from his room at this time are: 1. Harvest being at hand, the rebels, if not restrained by "dulce and fair means," and some hope of Kildare's return, would lay waste the whole Englishry. They would be joined by Kildare's kinsmen and servants if it were known he were in the King's displeasure. 2. As long as he is Deputy he is responsible for anything done by his party. 3. If the King is determined to make a new deputy, Ossory is more fit than his son James: if no new deputy be made, young Butler should have the charge of the defence, all his enterprises being directed by the Council. 4. Leaves it to the King whether anything should be altered in the draft letters to the king of Scots and the earl of Angwishe. 5. Patrick Sinclere has arrived here with letters and instructions from the king of Scots, of which they are to show the King a copy, and to know whether, when, and where Sinclere is to repair to the King. The substance is, 1, that nothing has been done against Angus without good cause; and, 2, a very reasonable request that commissioners be deputed on both sides to renew the truce, which expires at St. Andrew's Day, for other three years, by the end of which time the king of Scots being of more mature age proposes to treat for a perpetual peace. Thinks Northumberland and Magnus, or Magnus alone, might be commissioned to go to the 1528.

Borders on this matter; who might take means at the same time to reconcile Angus to the king of Scots. Signed by Wolsey.

Pp. 14. Endd.

21 July. 4542 DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
150.

Has informed Wolsey, by long letters directed to Vannes, of the contents of Francis's letters of the 9th and 13th. He is very glad of the news from Naples, and from Italy generally. The point of all my letters, Sir, is the contribution. The first time I sent to him he determined that it should commence in the middle of June. I applied to him again, and I think if I can speak to him tomorrow I shall gain my purpose, for he has consented that I shall go to the village of Hampton Court, when he will consider whether I shall speak by trumpet or by myself. I will do what I can about the advance of money, for I have not had a word yet in answer; but you must know the Angelots are worth here 69 sous, and I think they will deliver them to you for the weight, for they have no other money except these cicous à la couronne, which are still worse. Let me know how to remit, or send a man to receive them. If you desire it I will try and get Wolsey to send the money to Calais free of cost.

The danger in this country begins to diminish hereabouts, and to increase elsewhere. In Kent it is very great. Mademoiselle de Boulan (Boleyn) and her father have sweated, but have got over it. The day I sweated at my lord of Canterbury's there died 18 persons in four hours, and hardly anybody escaped but myself, who am not yet quite strong again. The King has gone further off than he was, uses great promotions, confesses himself every day, and receives Our Lord at every Feast. So also the Queen, who is with him, and Wolsey for his part. The notaries have had a fine time of it. I think 100,000 wills have been made off-hand, for those who were dying became quite foolish the moment they fell ill. The astrologers say this will not turn into a plague, but I think they dream. Has no doubt the King and Wolsey will be gratified with Francis's condolences on this visitation.

I have determined to send off this despatch, not to keep you in suspense till I have seen the Legate; but till next voyage I do not mean to put hand to pen (n'ay voulu mettre la main à la plume), that I may not cause suspicion to any one; for this is a regular pestilence (n'est que belle peste), and the moment a man is dead "il en devient tout couvert sur le corps."

Thanks for remittances, &c. I am quite content to stay here, or even in Turkey, if the interests of Francis require it, and to spend all my goods if need be. All I have is but 4,000 livres of rent, and the expence being here so great, you will have to provide for the excess after I and my friends have done what we can. If I were as rich as some other bishops, or were I at a place of small expence like Venice, you should hear no complaint from me. London, 21 July.

Fr. Add.

21 July. 4543. GEO. THROKMORTON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

I thank you for all kindness, and according to promise send you by bearer 20*l.*, though my duty be not so much, trusting you will keep your promise for the reparations, and a letter to the abbot of St. James, for such money as he received for wood, above 7*l.*, standing at the time of my entry. My Lord commanded me to stop it out of the money he was to receive of me. Therefore I trust you will see me no loser. Ravanston, 21 July.

P.S.—Send me word when my Lord will be at the More, and when I shall find him best at leisure. Signed.

P. l. Add.: To my assured friend Mr. Cromewell this be delivered 1528.

21 July. [4544. THOMAS DENYS to WOLSEY.

Titus, B. iv.

107.

B. M.

Applying for the office of under-treasurer of the Exchequer, for which he was a suitor during Sir William Compton's life. Hopes to do better service than others in that office, as Sir Robt. Lytton, Sir John Cutte and Sir William Compton had no learning in the law. 21 July.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace. Eadd.

21 July. 4545. HERETICS.

Harl. MS. 421,

f. 28.

B. M.

i. Confession of Edmund Tyball, of Bumstede, husbandman, before Mr. Wharton, in St. Mary's chapel in the monastery of Walden, 21 July, "anno Domini supradicto."

About Christmas last heard Sir Richard Fox, parish priest of Bumstede, say in John Darkyn's house that he wished he had my lord Cardinal's authority, and he would pull down these images in the church, for he feared many sinned in idolatry. John Lond was angry with him for these words, said he would bear a fagot to burn him, and after that took his "portyse" in his hand. Sir Richard replied "that there is never a word that God ever made." At this Darkyn was very "wode," and bade him get out of his house. At the same time Fox said, "Ye make a vow or a behest to go in pilgrimage to Our Lady of Ipswich, Walsingham, or to Canterbury, and there by a candle of wax think ye do well." Darkyns replied, "Yea. How say you?" To which Fox gave no answer. After that Fox said openly that God commanded no fasting days except the "Imbren days," and men were not bound to other days, except after their devotion.

Was shriven last Lent by Fox, who, during his confession, asked him how he believed in the Sacrament of the Altar. Answered, that he believed that God was there in form of bread, Redeemer of all the world; and then Fox said, "Nay; it is but a remembrance of Christ's Passion." Never believed nor consented to this teaching, but did not disclose it. Was much in company with and very familiar with Fox.

Abjuration of all heresies by Tyball, and promise to discover all persons whom he knows to be heretics. Signed with a cross.

21 July 1528.—Wharton absolved Tyball, on his confession, from the sentence of excommunication, and enjoined him, as penance, to carry a fagot before the procession at the church of Steple Bumstede on the following Sunday, and to hear high mass throughout. Present: Dr. Jynner, Mr. Core, rector of Radwinter, Richard, curate of Heydon, John Goldyng and Thomas Turner.

Pp. 4. Contemporary foliation, ccccxv.—vi.

Harl. MS. 421,

f. 30.

B. M.

ii. Various examinations.

15 July, "anno Domini supradicto."—In St. Mary's chapel, in the monastery of St. John, Colchester, before Dr. Geoffrey Wharton, vicar-general of the bp. of London, Thomas, prior of St. John's, Colchester, Nicholas Evererd, his commissary, and Matthew Grefton, registrar.

Thomas Turner, John Mully and John Goldyng, apparitors, proved having served citations on Agnes Pikes, the wives of John Bradley, Thomas Parker, William Raylond, Henry Raylond, John Thompson and John Girlyng, on Margaret Bowgns, Margaret Cowbrigde, John Clerk, Rose, wife of Robert Bate, the wife of John Hubbert, Richard Jonson alias Collins, Thomas Hilles, Richard Chapman, of Boxstede, John Wyley, of Horkesley, and Thomas Parker, or, if unable to find the persons, affixed the citations to the church doors. Catharine Swayne, Margaret Cowbrigde and Margery Parker appeared; Hacker and others being sworn as witnesses. Robert Hedyll, of Colchester, was condemned to carry a candle before the procession on the following Sunday, for calling John Thompson, fletcher, "malliciose horson heretyck." John Hubbert's wife was dismissed in default of proof.

1528.

16 July.—Robert Sizar, Robert Braaxstede and William Brewster were examined concerning Alice Jonson, and on the following day John Hacker.
21 July.—At Walden, John Tyball was examined concerning her.

17 July.—At St. John's monastery, Colchester, Margaret Cowbrigde purged herself, producing as compurgators Thomas Burton, Bartholomew Culpack, John Sterlyng, Robert Dowe, Emma Harkyn, Ann Christmas, Margery Draper and Joan Norman. Present: Thomas, abbot of St. John's, Richard Cawmond and Nicholas Evererd. Margaret, wife of Thomas Bowgas, produced as compurgators Alice Page, Margaret Smyth, Margaret Haile, Catharine Cristmas, Joan Fairstede and Joan Hudson.

17 July.—Thomas, abbot of St. John's, by commission from Dr. Wharton, absolved widow Denly from the sentence of excommunication.

20 July.—In St. Mary's chapel, in the monastery at Walden, Robert Fayre, Isabel Holden and John Wigen were sworn to reply to the articles; and John Cranford, Henry Chapman, William Browne, John Hacker, John Tyball and Thomas Hempstede received as witnesses.

21 July.—Joan Agnes alias Smyth, of Bower Hall, and John and Agnes Smyth, of Rydeswell, were sworn to reply; John Hacker and William Browne being witnesses.

Lat., pp. 8. Contemporary foliation, ccccliii.-vi.

22 July. 4546. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This day I received your letter, with one to the chapter of Lincoln, in favor of my brother, the archdeacon of Oxford, for the deanery of Lincoln; which, without your aid, had not taken effect. As the plague is at Grafton, the King will not go there. As for your wish that Wilson should have some promotion, the King is in doubt whether he shall give the archdeaconry of Oxford to Mr. Wilson or Dr. Bell. The King cannot write, in consequence of his head, and begs you will send him the presentation of the prebend of Ripon, as you promised him. The vicarage you gave to Dr. Willson was resigned to Dr. Dayceots for a pension five years ago. The King wishes you to dispatch the earl of Angus's servant. He will not fail to send you "these letters of Ireland" in two or three days, but his head is not the best, or he would have dispatched them now. He desires you to be good lord to his barber Pennie, for the daughter and ward unto your Grace, of one Chevall, within the liberties of St. Alban's, for his money. It is not in value above 12*l.* a year, her father hath tangled it so, and laid it to mortgage for 60*l.* Cade can inform you of the truth. Ampthill, 22 July, about 7 in the afternoon. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd. Wolsey has written at the back "intungellyd."

22 July. 4547. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The King has written to my lord of Richmond for two stewardships in the Duke's gift by the death of Sir Will. Compton;—the one of Canforde and Corffe, and my Lord's lands in Dorsetshire, fee 100*z.*; the other of my Lord's lands in Somersetshire, fee 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*;—which he wishes given to Sir Giles Strangwishe and Sir Edw. Seymour. The King's letters mention only the first office, which cannot well be given to two persons. Sir Edw. Seymour writes that both are intended for him. My Lord, however, had already given the stewardship of Canford and Corffe to Sir Will. Parre, his chamberlain, and of the Somersetshire lands to Geo. Cotton. Encloses copy of my Lord's letter. The sweating sickness is bad in those parts, and has carried off two of Mr. Holgill's company, the surveyor of Wolsey's lands, who was at Beverley. The Duke has removed hither from Pontefract. Sheriff Hutton, 22 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

1528.

22 July.

R. O.

4548. E. COUNTESS OF OXFORD to WOLSEY.

Has received his letters of the 15 July. Regrets that he should think her refusal of the stone and "calions" was but a pretence of ländrance to her town of Harwich. Requests him to take his pleasure in her said haven, be it hurtful or otherwise. 22 July. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

22 July.

S. B. b.

4549. NUNNERY OF ST. EDITH, WILTON, Salisb. dioc.

Petition for assent to the election of Isabella Jordayn as prioress, on Wolsey's nomination, to whom the convent, at their meeting on the 17 June last, delegated their rights. 22 July 1528.

23 July.

VII. B. xii. 198.

B. M.

Burnet, vi. 26.

4550. THE DIVORCE.

Promise of Clement VII. that he will grant no letters of inhibition or other letters interfering with the execution of his commission to the Legates, but will confirm their decision. Viterbo, 23 July 1528, 5 pont.

Copy, Lat., pp. 11.

R. O.

2. Another draft of the proceeding, with interlineations in the King's hand, and with considerable variations from the copy printed in Burnet.

23 July.

4551. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

The letter printed in St. P. iv. 504, is of the year 1526, q. v.

24 July.

R. O.

4552. CALAIS.

Report of commissioners appointed by virtue of letters of privy seal, dated Hampton Court, 5 April 18 Hen. VIII., commanding the Deputy and other officers of Calais to survey the mansions, &c., lately belonging to Will. Rosse, viz., certain tenements adjoining the King's wardrobe at Calais, and others on the west side of Bollingate Street, used by his Grace as bakehouses and brewhouses, and to take the same to farm of the owners, John Sakville and Christian his wife, for twenty years, terminable when the King no longer requires them. The report gives the measurements of the grounds and tenements, with some notices of localities, e.g., the street going from the Bullenwell northwards. The King entered on the ground in April 1512, when there were certain buildings, viz., "a woolhouse made of timber, with two gables of brick, and their chimney therein tiled with tile," well worth 20*l.* at that time. There was then an old barn thatched with reed, worth 6*l.*, where a brewhouse is now built. The void ground will suit no man but the King, who has spent a great deal upon it in building two bakehouses with three great ovens to each, offices, and a brewhouse. Signed: "Per me, Wylliam Baker, mason. Per me, Hew Flode." (Lloyde in the text).

This report of the said "landsckettours" is approved by the deputy treasurer and controller, who also report on the arrears due by the King to Christian, widow of John Sakville, which are of ten years standing, and amount to 173*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and refer it to the King's council whether the lease should be renewed. 24 July 20 Hen. VIII. Signed by Sir Rob. Wingfield, Sir Richard Weston, and Sir W. Husey.

On parchment, pp. 8.

25 July.

4553. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 90.

I, the bishop of Bath, have received a short letter from Dr. Stephens, dated Venice. He says he can get nothing but fair words in the Pope's matter. He and his servants have been ill of the flux. Within two days he goes home, and expects to meet Campeggio at Lyons, whom he left at Rome, ready to start. I have also received a letter from Master Peter (Vannes) and Sir Gregory Casals. The Imperialists have been defeated before Lodi. One Menford is in the Court, sent from lady Margaret. The King is at Fontainebleau, but next week goes to St. Germain's. Paris, 25 July. Signed.

1528.

P.S.—They are greatly discontented with the Pope here, and complain of the report made by the prince of Orange's servant to the Pope, to delay the King's matter.

In Clerk's hand. Add. Endd.

25 July.

4554. EDW. TYNDALE to ———

R. O.

Thanks him for his gentleness to him "as a slow and dull witted instrument not acquainted [with my] duty to serve the time of this age." When he left London his correspondent's wife and family were all well. Hopes he has received a letter from her, which he delivered to John Bowser the younger. Since coming home has not had perfect health three days together. Hopes to be with him at the end of this week. Hopes he has told his wife what he means to do, for the plague has taken many in the city. Advises him to send her to the country. Asks him to defer the answer of Slymbryng and Hurst till his coming. Sends a paper from Mr. Moyle, of a certain parcel of land in Hamme, Alkyngton and Bradeston. Perceives he takes much pain; hopes a good effect will succeed.

His business, after his correspondent's departure, went on very slowly. His harvest is behind, and has delayed him. Recommends himself to his correspondent's father and mother. Pulecourt, St. James's Day.

Hol., p. 1, mutilated.

25 July

4555. JOACHIM HOCHSTETER to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Sends him back his horse which he had hired. He was wholly unfit to travel, and could hardly get through a day's work. He had better sell it, or keep it till Hochsteter returns to London. Reading, 25 July. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.

26 July.

4556. RUSSELL to WOLSEY.

R. O.

I have received your letter, and perceive that you are good lord unto me, which is a great comfort. I cannot recompense your Grace with anything except my poor heart and service. The King is merry, and I am sure he would that you were so likewise. You must comfort yourself, and be of good cheer; "assuring your Grace that the King is well appeased and satisfied, as I well perceive when he speaks of you, and doubt you not but you shall have him as good to your Grace as ever he was in his life." He is a prince of so many good qualities that he will remember the good service and pains you have taken for him, and the great familiarity between you. Sometime the father and the son be in displeasure, and brother and brother "by yelle reportes, has may fortune has bene downe by tuxt you Grac and the Kyng." I think it would be well if you could find means to come near the King, to speak with him; which should be to the comfort of you both. I did not write an answer to your letter, because I was advertised that "my son Brouthon's evidens (evidence?) that ys a Tyrryngton was yelle orderyd." Amphyll, 26 July.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

26 July.

4557. PRIORY OF ST. MARY, BILSINGTON, Cant. dioc.

Assent to the election of John Teunterden as prior. Hampton Court, 26 July.

Pat., 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

1528.

PRIORY OF ST. MARY, BILSINGTON, Cant. disc.—cont.

S. B. b.

2. Petition for the above, stating that the prior's office was void by the resignation of Arthur Sentleger, and was filled up by Wolsey, to whom the convent delegated their right of election. 4 July 20 Hen. VIII.

26 July.

4558. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Grant of the site of St. Peter's, Ipswich, &c. to cardinal Wolsey. Hampton Court, 26 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Great seal attached, in excellent preservation. The royal effigy and arms, beautifully tricked, in the top margin. In this miniature the likeness of Henry VIII. to Henry VII. is very clearly traced.

R. O.

2. Confirmation of a Papal bull, dated 14 May 1528, granting St. Peter's, Ipswich, to Wolsey, for the foundation of his college there. Hampton Court, 26 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Great seal attached; with a portrait of the King in the initial letter, and the royal arms.

27 July.

4559. [CLERK and TAYLOR to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 199.

B. M.

" owe well yno[ugh] of Flanders nothing [th]e Great Master also shew ambassador residing with the the 21st of this month deter[mined] Imperial lanceknights w they were not then removed number of them had and dyd ways homewards, that George other of their captains in Myl[an] the duke of Bromswyke, themper[or] had lost a great number of his bo[ys]emen, and his foot[men] were returned home a-foot. And the matters of Italy very clear. [The count] de St. Poule being now without [doubt] Ast, accompanied with 10,000 footm[en] [men at] arms and as many light horses. A [we] were had to my Lady. After sal[utation] done she said] that the King her son was now he glad to see us, and that he that she thought verily that and also your Grace would be rig[ht] and that for to certify the

. on of the truce, which was an ation of such words as had been Lady unto us concerning my Lady was reported unto my lady Margaret had written unto your Grace, that my [lord Cardinal ha]d spoken evil words of my lady Mar[garet]. She said she told De Barrys that she ha[d] spoken n[on]e words unto us but honorable, and th[at she] was assured that we had none other written [unto the King and] your Grace. She said that this Mountford have departed into Spain and carried not ith the King, and that supposing that he [ha]ve made some evil report in Spain of h rnes and knowing that the King her so[n] a merry and lusty, thereupon determyn in any wise; the said Mountford a"

From 27 July.

Mutilated.

27 July.

4560.* JOHN CHEKYNG to CROMWELL.

R. O.

His son Gregory is not now at Cambridge, but in the country, where he works and plays alternately. He is rather slow, but diligent. He had been badly tutored, and could hardly conjugate three verbs when committed to Chekyng's care, though he repeated the rules by rote. If this is Palgrave's style of teaching, does not believe he will ever make a scholar. Will have to unt teach him nearly all he has learned. He is now studying the things most conducive to the reading of authors, and spends the rest of the day in forming letters. The plague, happily, is abating. Pembroke Hall, 27 July.

1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2. Add.: Clarissimo viro et domino suo optimo, D. Crunwello in asibus Re^m (Wolsey). Ex Cantabrigia.

4561. GREGORY CROMWELL to CROMWELL.

R. O.

"Most dere father, I humbly recomend me unto yow, and hertily beseeche yow of yowr daly blessing, naturally bounden thayreunto, for the wiche and other yowr manifold benefittys to me colatyt, I am and schalbe yowr daly bedman, interely desyryng the continwans of the same, trusting soo to accomplysse and fulfyll yowr parentall commandments in the passage of myne erudicion, that yow my good father schall tharewith be ryght wel contentyd, by God's helpe, the wiche with hys grace Hee send hus. Amen. Frome the howse of yowr bedman, Mr. Doctor Lee, thys Ester day, in the mornyng. By yowr vigilant sone, Gregori Cromwell."

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To hys right worschipfull father, Mr. Thomas Cromwell, at London.

28 July.

Tit. B. 21. 399.

B. M.

4562. J. RUSSELL and T. HENNEGE to [WOLSEY].

The King thanks Wolsey for the collation of the prebend of Ripon, and desires him to bestow the benefice of Hurworth, in his gift "by reason of old Mr. Tailboys," which is worth 24*l.* a year, on Croke, the duke of Richmond's schoolmaster, for it is too small for Wilson or any other of his chaplains. Croke has had nothing, and does very good service. The King desires Wolsey to examine the executors of Sir William Compton, Sir Walter Stoner, and his brother, one of the yeomen of the Guard, concerning the embezzlement of Sir William's goods, and to send commissions for the attachment of his goods, and the persons who have perloined them, into all the shires where he had property, and to the sanctuaries of Beaulley and Bewdley. He does not wish the earl of Kildare to have any of the King's wards or goods in Ireland, but that the Deputy should have all the customary wards, farms, and royalties. He thinks the Earl tries to make it believed that the King could not be served without him.

The King thanks him for giving to Penne, his barber, the ward of the daughter of Sheuall. Trusting that the matter would take effect, "he sent his said servant to look upon her, who like very well, and have concluded, and be sure together."

He will bestow another ward, or a recompense in money, at Wolsey's pleasure, for he esteems it as if it had been ten times the value. One, Dockwra, who made a bargain with her father, has taken the evidences and possession, but the King has given orders for his being dispossessed. The King has granted to "me" [Russell?] the offices of constable of Killingworth Castle and keeper of the park, as held by Sir William Compton.

Mr. More, chancellor of the duchy, is about to let the herbage, the pasturage, and the waters, to Mr. Wiggiston, but the King wishes [Russell] to have it. Asks Wolsey to speak or write to More about it.

The King does not like the instructions of Ireland or Scotland, and wishes Wolsey to send Tuke or Fox that they may be newly made. Desire credence for the bearer. Bragbarie, 28 July, at three o'clock.

The King thinks Bonteller is too young to have so great a charge, and that his father were better. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my Lord's grace.

1528.

28 July.

Vesp. C. iv.

239 b.

B. M.

4563. EDWARD LEE, Almoner, to HENRY VIII.

In the beginning of July sent a copy of a letter from the French king to the Emperor, accepting his challenge. Sends now the Emperor's answer. They both, for the sake of their honor, make countenance of readiness for the duel, which would be a strange case, and produce many inconveniences. Thinks God has reserved the King to mediate between them. Valladolid, 28 July 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

28 July.

Vesp. C. iv.

243.

B. M.

4564. GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY.

Received on June 26 the King's and Wolsey's letters, dated March 24, by a French post sent by Echyngham, who tarried long at Fontarabia, and came at last without safe-conduct. The Pope's collector came the same day, and also Wolsey's letters of January 19 (sic), and instructions from my lord of Bath. After deciphering their instructions, they conferred with the collector what was to be done. On July 2 he went towards Madrid, hoping to find the Emperor there, for it was reported that he had left Mons. The Emperor, however, had not come, so he proceeded towards Montau. Have already written to Wolsey that Radcliff, a London merchant, who arrived here about June 10 with Wolsey's letters, for a ship taken in Bayonna, in Galicia, told them that Mons. St. Bonet had taken his despatch from this French post, which he knew by a letter from St. Bonet to Mons. de Tarbes, taken from the said post by the captain of Fontarabia. Perceive now from the collector that my lord of Bath devised that the commission should remain with St. Bonet until [it] were time to send for it. It is, therefore, likely that he wrote to M. de Tarbes, and that that letter is intercepted and sent to the Emperor. "The French post told this to one of my servants, the almoner, and peradventure more of the said writings left at Bayonne, and had a letter of St. Bonet's acknowledging the receipt, which I took to him." The thing is therefore not so secret as it should be. Know now that Radelyff deceived them, but nevertheless it is true that their letters were opened at Bordeaux by the President and the Council, and so came open to the Master of the Rolls, and from him to Duke. This the merchants at Bordeaux do write.

Perceive by the King's and Wolsey's letters that they are displeased that Lee and the rest proceeded to the intimation, although such was the tenor of their instructions, thinking that it would have been wise if they had first sent information of the state of things. Endeavored to avoid the intimation, but were forced to it to prevent what would have been more prejudicial. After Bayard's arrival, because the Emperor said that he would have the army revoked and Genoa and other places restored before the deliverance of the children, "they" (the French ambassadors) showed themselves much altered, and determined no more to resort to the Emperor, speaking of nothing but hostility and war. Had great difficulty to restrain them from the intimation, and did not do so until all the Italian ambassadors were called in as to a common council. They (the French) alleged that the instructions were plain and open against us. Put off the intimation thus for a few days, and did all they could, both with them and with the Emperor and his council, to remove the occasion of war. Tried to induce the ambassadors to write to their princes before the intimation. Lee told them that there could be no loss of time; for they, if they liked not the offer, could prepare for war, and warn their subjects in the Emperor's countries to remove, before letting the Emperor know. Could not bring them thereto. They showed a letter from the French king, bidding them look for no farther commandment from him, and write no more. Persuaded them to relent if the Emperor would have consented to the alternative, but as he rejected it they refused to write again to their Prince unless the Emperor would consent to other practices; but as he stuck utterly upon mine, they wholly set themselves to the intimation of hostility. The last time they came to council together in the count of Nassau's chamber, before the Imperialists arrived, Lee said to the president of Bordeaux and Bayard that it was a serious thing to intimate war, and that he thought they had better write to their masters, knowing how they desired peace. They answered angrily, "What, shall we lose more time? We dare not for our lives." This conversation they repeated to the bishop of Tarbes, who forthwith came to Ghinucci's house much troubled, and said the English must speak their mind openly, meaning that if they would not come to the intimation the French must act in another way.

1528.

After taking leave of the Emperor they all went to Lee's house, except De Tarbes, who had gone to Mons. de Bublance (Bouclans). The President of Bordeaux, in the name of De Tarbes, proposed that the war should be intimated that day. Would not consent, thinking that the Emperor might alter his mind. Ghinucci and the President came to an altercation about it. Said that before the intimation they must ask for the King's debts, which the others did not wish. Said that the denial or delay of payment would the better justify the intimation, which should be made forthwith. The night before the intimation the bishop of Tarbes sent to ask Lee whether the heralds should intimate on the morrow. Replied that Ghinucci and he would be with them at 8 o'clock, intending to see whether they could do any good. On receipt of this message, Tarbes sent again, and Lee returned the same answer. He then sent, not without heat, a bill to the bishop of Worcester, saying it was no time to "deliver" any farther. Ghinucci then came to Lee's house, and, after a little conference, concluded that they should not refuse the ambassadors again, as they could not bring them to their purpose. Feared that further refusal would make them suspect the King and Wolsey, considering the instructions and the commands they had to act with the French ambassadors. As they had hitherto done so, a refusal would have caused suspicion of secret instructions not to make the intimation. They were already inclined to think this, for the bishop of Tarbes said to Ghinucci more than once about the time of the rupture, that De Buclans had told him that the Emperor was sure the King would never fight against him; and once he said that, if any faith were put in the letters of one who was so nigh his prince, he was sure they would have no war with England. Saw that De Tarbes was troubled at these words. Feared lest the suspicion might increase, and cause jealousy between England and France, the sequel whereof might have been greater prejudice to the King than the intimation of the war. Have always perceived, even before the intimation, that the Emperor is displeased with the King, both on account of his junction with the French king and the pretended divorce from the Queen. Have been told that, for this latter cause only, the Emperor would do nothing at the King's instance, and he has done all he could to provoke the great men and the country against the King. Feared that if, at the very point of intimation, they separated themselves from the French ambassadors, the French king might have practised with the Emperor without the King, "for they have used practices besides us."

Considered that there was nothing more to be avoided than such jealousy, for although the intimation has been made, the King may still induce the French king to conditions of peace. As to the King's complaint that they did not inform the nobles of the offers, that they might have changed the Emperor's mind, no great men were in the court, except the duke of Fyvier, who is of but little authority; but they found secret means to bring the offers before divers great men who were absent, and also to spread the offers in time of the Parliament. If the case shall so require, will circulate them everywhere. Will not allow the Emperor to consider the intimation as proceeding from unkindness on the King's part, but will take the fault on themselves. Beg Wolsey to remove the King's displeasure. Thinks that the Emperor was privy to the contents of his answer in writing, by the answer given to Lee. Would have stopped the publishing of it after Clarenceux told him thereof. Moreover, it is in print in the Spanish tongue. Will dissemble about it until the treaty of peace is progressing. Do not think they much regard the book here, and some of the Council pretend to be evil content with the publishing thereof.

1528.

GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY—cont.

Remain still at Valladolid, for the comendador had commandment from the Emperor that they should remain till he came out of Arragon to Madrid. Arranged with the collector that they should be called sooner if he considered it expedient. The collector wrote, on July 16, from Saragossa, that when he was within three posts of the Emperor at Montson, he received orders to wait for him at Saragossa, where he arrived on July 12, and found the Emperor's council also waiting. He is not expected until the end of the month, or the beginning of the next. The collector spoke to Alemand about Lee and Ghinucci's coming. He said that the ambassadors were so well treated in England, that it was reasonable that they should be treated likewise, and at the Emperor's coming he would find out his pleasure. Do not think it well to speak of the injuries mentioned in the Emperor's answer, nor of anything else that may hinder peace, as long as they have any hope of it. The Emperor's chancellor, and other of the Council, made difficulty about the deliverance of his obligations to the King and the fleur de lys, saying they would have them delivered at the time of the delivery of these Princes. Answered that it was not safe to carry so much so far, especially by sea. Ask Wolsey to take some order about it with the Imperial ambassador.

Would have written before, if they could have had conveyance. The sea is closed, English ships being arrested; and as to the land, the Emperor has sent down good provisions, but they are not obeyed. Valladolid, 28 July 1528. Signed.

Mostly cipher, pp. 7. Add. Endd.

Ibid. f. 245.

2. Decipher by Tuke. Pp. 7.

July.

4565. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Cal. D. x. 282.

B. M.

" [Mon]sieur de Bayonne, j'ay veu par ce in mon cousin le Grant Maistre, ce que vous [avez fait dans les] choses contenues au traicte de la tresve suyvens escripre et puis qu'autrement ne sy est a bien faire garder et observer chacun de son a et accordees, ce que de ma part je suis y estre contrevenu en aucune maniere.

" Et affin que vous entendez comme il y a este [je vous] advise que le secretaire de Madame Marguerite, [M. Guillaume des] Barres, est venu devers moy a Paris apres la m'apporter la ratification de sa maistresse e et parle a luy, je l'ay renvoye despesche sur ce en la compaignye du sieur De la Hargerye l'un ordinaire, par lequel j'ay envoye ma ratifi[cacion] des biens des subgectz de l'Empeur qu'ilz ont et seigneuries pour enjoyr selon le contenu du ay depesche ung de mes varietz de cham[bre] le duc de Gueldres, a celle fin de pouvoir e sont ses affaires et la deliberation qu'il treuve, affin que selon cela je me bien delibere, toutesfoiz, de ne a doubte que le Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye et Monseigneur le Legat mon bon amy ne soient bien vous le m'avez escript.

1528.

"[A]usurplus, Mons. de Bayonne, pource qu'il y a long temps [que vous n']eustes de nouvelles de nostre armee de Naples, je vou[s] envoie un double d'une lettre intercepte du prince d'Orange pour mon[st]rer au Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye et a mondit sieur le Cardinal, mon bon amy, afin que par la ilz connoissent l'extremite a laquelle ilz sont reduitz dedans Naples, laquelle depuis est tellement creue que par ce que m'escript mon cousin [le sieur] de Lautrec du 20^{me} du passé, le vin et les chair [leur] estoient faillez, et estoient remis en telle necessite qu'il] esperoit dedans peu de jours rendre sy bon compte de [la ville] qu'il reviendrait a temps pour ayder a rachasser de la Lo[m]bardie le secours qui y est arrive, lequel jusques luy a faict si peu d'effect, veu de long temps qu'il y a qu'il y est, qu'il est a esperer que ce qu'ilz feront pour ce coup ne sera grant car ilz ont donne loyer a mon cousin le sieur de St. Pol d'assembler et faire passer ses forces qui sont de huit mille [A]lemans, tant Suysses que lansquenetz, 8,000 adventur[iers] les gens de pye de la Seigneurye et du due de [a ce]ste heure 12,000 ou 13,000

. que de vivres. J'espere que mon [t]outes les forces desauldites, jointes et unyes de brief, il les pourra aller veoir de l'ayde de Dieu que nous en aurons bonne pource que ceste despence de l'une et de sy grosse et lourde, et sy malaisee ne la sauroye plus longuement porter ny dudit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye cause remonstrer et faire bien entendre a Mon[seigneur] le Cardinal mon bon amy, le priant vouloir tant faire envers [le Roy mon bon] frere que de ceste heure, la somme qu'il [doit prester pour] la contribution d'Italie soit promptement e que Morette m'a dict que vous l'avez arres entendez que sans cela mon affaire se pour et conduire, et croyant fermement qu'il n'y aura aucune] difficulte, je ne les en presseray au[trement] mais le remettray a ce que vous leur en p[ro] remonstrer de ma part, sachant contribution estre despeechee des je ne

. [pu]isse connoistre que nee d'eulx mais entierement tro [s]eurete qu'ilz voudront me bailler, ne voulant bre qu'ilz soyent pour faillir a chose qui m'ayent [p]romise comme de ma part je suis resolu de faire tant que la vye me durera.

"Au demourant, vous avez peu veoyr ce que derronierement [j']ay escript] a nostre St. Pere de ma propre main, par le double que [je] vous en ay envoye, et avez peu savoir l'instant et pou que j'avoys commande au viconte de Turanne allant dev[ers] sa Saintete de faire de ma part envers icelle pour l'expedition] et despesche du docteur Stephanno et autres ambassadours] dudit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allye et combien qu[e] sur cela la deliberation de nostredit Saint Pere ait este de despesche le cardinal Campregio pour venir pardeça auquel j'ay commande et escript expressément au sieur de Barbesieux, capitaine general de mon armee de mer offrir pour son passage tout tel nombre de mes gallaires [qu]e bon luy semblera. Toutesfoiz, ayant veu par lettres inte[r]ceptees] r du prince d'Orange estant devers sa Saintet[e] nt ceste 1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

affaire, j'ay bien voulu vous avoir a mondit sieur le Legat prendre tel jugement qu'il verra devoir ce qu'il verra, et congnoistre que de ma non seulement en cela mais en toutes a[utres] choses que pourront] toucher ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetu[el] allye] jamais riens moins que pour mon propre

" Monar. de Bayonne, vous continuerez a so vos nouvelles, et mesmement de la bonne sa[n]te de mon bon] frere en ce temps si dangereux, et semblab[lement] de Monar.] le Legat, mon bon amy, et si ce mal de suti[n] appaise; et quant a vostre affaire, ayant enten[du] encorres depesche encorres que je lousse comin[ande] temps j'ay ordonne et envoye expressement de pour ceste affaire, de sorte que j'espere que en payne; et sur ce je vous diray adieu [qui] vous nit en sa garde. Escript a Fonta[ine-bleau] . . . jour de Juillet." Signed.

Mutilated. Add.

28 July.

4566. ARTICLE OF TRUCE AT HAMPTON COURT.

Cal. D. x. 288.

B. M.

" Comme par le traicte de tresves naignres [faite et conclue] entre les roys de France et d'Angleterre, [et Madame l'Archiduchesse] d'Austrie, &c., pour l'Empereur et les pays a le gouvernement, soit entre aultres choses d que madame la duchesse douairiere de Vendosm[ois] tresve des biens qui luy sont succedez esdits pays deces des feuz sieur et dame de Ravestain a con de Chalon prince d'Orenge jouysse de ceulx dudit sieur roy de France.

" Pour l'effect d'icelluy article a este par le pour ledit sieur roy de France, et le conseil de ma [dite dame l'Archiduchesse] accorde et convenu en la maniere suyvante.

" Assavoir, que ledit sieur de la Hargerye a la diligence de madite dame duchesse douairiere de Vendosmois se le prince d'Orenge, desaisissement et main levee de sa [principaute] d'Orenge, et de toutes et chacune les aultres ter[res] rentes, revenuz et biens qu'il a eu et soubz l'obeissan[ce] du roy de] France, tant en Bretagne, Dauphine que ailleurs ladite tresve, et luy en fera ou a ses procureurs [par] lettres patentes dudit sieur Roy tres Chrestien depeschees [en bonne] et ample forme. Pour par icelluy sieur prince d'Or[eng]es] esdites terres durant ladite tresve, ensemble des f depuis la publication du traicte de Madril jus tresve paisiblement et paisiblement ainsi qu'il f les guerres d'entre l'Empereur et ledit sieur roy de France]. Et si aulcune chose desditz fructz escheuz jusqu de ladite tresve, se treuve avoir este France et leve par cuy que ce so[it]

. tene le faire bon audit sieur prince d'Or[eng]es] rembourser ou faire rembourser dedans v les lectres du don dudit sieur roy de France et r esdits deniers receuz luy auront este delivrez de la part sieur prince d'Orenge, ou que par certifications auctenti[ques] luy en sera apparu.

" Et en baillant lesdites lettres patentes de main levee et desa[isissement] dudit sieur Roy tres Chrestien audit sieur prince d'Orenge ou a ses p[ro]

1528.

curseurs] et commis en la forme et maniere que dit est, iceulx sieur pr[ince] d'Oranges fera quant et quant avoir et delivrer semblables [autres] patentees de l'Empereur a madite dame de Vendesme, pour jouy[r] des biens que luy sont advenus et escheuz esdits pays de l'Empereur ja[r] ledit deces diceulx feuz sieur et dame de Ravestain, fruletz et le diceulx depuis le trespas dudit feu sieur de Ravestain, et des de Saint Pol, terre d'Oyey, et autres terres d'Arthois arrestees[s] a la requeste dudit sieur prince d'Oranges et des fruletz escheuz de(puis) le traicte de Madrid. Ainsy accorde et conclud entre les dessusdits." 28 July 1528.*

Mutilated.

4567. FRANCIS I. and MARGARET OF SAVOY.

R. O.

Extract of a letter of Francis I. to Mons. de Bayonne, his ambassador in England.

Has sent the sieur De la Hargerie to Madame Margaret, not to treat any thing new, but only for an explanation of the truce lately concluded, and to carry the ratification of it; also to appoint commissioners on either side for restitution of goods seized during the war. De la Hargerie has executed his commission, of which a copy is sent, to be shown if necessary. Has informed De Bayonne that, if he see fit, he may communicate it to the English, so as to treat them as they do us.

Fr., p. 1. A portion cut off at the end.

28 July.

R. O.

4568. LEE to TUKE.

Sent this morning towards Bilbao a great packet, of which I keep the double for next post. I think we shall soon be dispatched. The Emperor is now at Saragossa, and will be at Madrid by 2nd August. He who writes the ciphers does not understand the figures, nor yet English. Valladolid, 28 July 1528.

P.S.—I find the cipherer makes 4 for 3, and 3 for 2, et c. contra.

Ital., p. 1. Add. Endd.: From Master Almoner, the 28th day of July and 9th of August.

28 July.

Galba, B. ix.

131.

R. M.

4569. RICHARD HARMAN.

Petition of Richard Harman to the Emperor, showing that he had been put in prison by the Margrave of Antwerp for selling some English New Testaments to a merchant out of England, and for harbouring Lutherans in his house, &c.

Dutch, pp. 2.

Ibid., f. 132.

2. Another petition for the same.

Dutch, pp. 3.

In the margin: "The 28th day of July it is ordained by the lords of the Emperor's Privy Council at Machling, that the King's ambassador shall cause his information to be brought or sent out of England for the examination of Richard Harman within three weeks from the date above written, else that the said Council shall proceed according to the laws of these Low Countries."

Endd.: "1528. Copy of Richard Harman's request to the Emperor's Council at Machlyng."

28 July.

R. O.

4570. RIC. BANK to CROMWELL.

Thanks him for his goodness to his master and himself. Sends the bearer for the letters of which he left a remembrance, to be obtained from 1528.

RIC. BANK to CROMWELL—cont.

Wolsey; one to my lord suffragan, another to the abbot of Cristall (Kirkstall), and the third to Bank himself. While Bank was absent, Sir Ric. Warde, a priest of Sir John Hussey, has let, in his master's name, all my Lord's demesne lands, the herbage of the park, and the benefice of Mellynge, to divers of my Lord's servants, for Sir John's profit, which lands Bank occupied with such cattle as my Lord had left. To support Ward, Sir John has written letters of assistance to Mr. Edw. Stanley, my Lord's bastard brother, and his other servants. Warde has also taken large sums of money from the tenants, besides their rent. The country would be much obliged if he can provide some remedy.

Promises him 20 nobles a year, if he can get my Lord's first tack of the benefice of Mellynge to take effect, Mr. Wyngfield's to be admitted, and the new increase that the abbot of Croxton has set on it, to be laid down. Must have help in his lord and master's causes, or can do nothing. If my Lord could have what the King has assigned for his keeping, to be at his servant's ordering, trusts he would be better found than now by Mr. Hussey. Would like a subpena for the priest for next term. Reminds him of the bill he gave him about Laurence Starky, and his wrongful suit with my lord of London and the abbess of Syon.

Many poor men in this country would complain of Wm. Tunstal if they thought to have as good remedy as Ric. Cowpland. Sends Cromwell a gelding for his mail. Asks him to advise his lord. Hornby, 28 July.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell, being with my lord Cardinal's grace.

28 July. 4571. JOHN AT WOOD.

His will. Proved, 28 July 1528. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 640.

28 July. 4572. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. Wolsey's foundation charter for the above. Hampton Court, 28 July 1528. Signed, and seal attached.
Lat., vellum.

R. O. 2. Duplicate.
Lat., vellum. Signed and sealed.

R. O. 3. Another of the same, with Wolsey's arms and supporters beautifully tricked, apparently by some foreign artist.
Lat., vellum. Fine seal attached.

29 July. 4573. ROBT. PORRETT to CROMWELL.

R. O. Asks him to send a recordare concerning Mr. Denton's matter. Sent him a letter by Mr. White, vicar of St. Laurence in the Old Jewry, enclosing Pecok's answer for Denton upon the replevin for the distress which Porrett took of Pecok. Must have the recordare before the next shire day, 7 Aug. Mr. Dean would like to have it as soon as possible. As to the rent of 20s. concerning the dean of Powles, Mr. Essex does not know whether the Dean ought to pay it. Cromwell had better consult his lease with the Dean's counsel. Showed Mr. Essex the acquittance for the last payment. Edw. Fetyplace, farmer of Sandford and treasurer to the duke of Suffolk, has agreed to come to Mr. Dean or to Cromwell to pay all his duties. Can have no sufficient distress of the land Mr. Brown withholds, but will wait his time. Mawden Coll., Oxforth, 29 July.

1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell, of my lord Cardinal's council.

29 July. 4574. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. Grant to Wolsey of St. Matthew's, Ipswich, with licence to appropriate it to his college there. Hampton Court, 29 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Great seal attached. Royal miniature and arms, exquisitely tricked, in the top margin.

R. O. 2. Duplicate.

Vellum; with the great seal and royal miniature.

30 July. 4575. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. 1. Grant by Wolsey of St. Peter's, Ipswich, with appurtenances in Bornehall, &c., to his college at Ipswich. Hampton Court, 30 July 20 Hen. VIII. Signed by Wolsey.

Lat., vellum. Seal attached.

R. O. 2. Grant by Wolsey to his college at Ipswich of the priory of Horkesley, with its appurtenances. Hampton Court, 30 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Seal attached. The Cardinal's arms and insignia tricked at the top.

30 July. 4576. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

R. O. Licence by Wolsey to the dean and canons of Cardinal's college, Oxford, to assign the priories of Typtre, Wykes, Dudenassh, &c., to his college at Ipswich. Hampton Court, 30 July 1528.

Lat., vellum. Seal, with silk and gold fringe.

R. O. 2. Duplicate of the same; with Wolsey's arms and supporters, beautifully tricked.

Vellum. Seal attached.

30 July. 4577. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. Confirmation by Wolsey to Wm. Capon, dean of Ipswich, of the manor of Sayes Court in Deptford, and that of Cheshunt, &c. Hampton Court, 30 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Seal attached.

R. O. 2. Duplicate of the same.

Vellum. Seal attached. Wolsey's arms and supporters tricked.

R. O. 3. Similar confirmation of Horkesley. Same date. Signed and sealed.

Lat., vellum.

R. O. 4. Similar confirmation of the site and lands of the priory of St. Peter's, Ipswich. Hampton Court, 30 July 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Seal attached.

30 July. 4578. FRANÇOIS DE RAISSE, SIEUR DE LA HARGERY, to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Galba, B. vii.

89.

R. M.

I have already written of my communications with the dowager of Savoy and the Emperor's council. The latter think that the arrangement that we have made for the fruits "des recompenses du passé," from the treaty of Madrid till the present truce, does not affect the king of England, because his subjects have no lands on this side of the sea, from which differences might arise, "des levées passées." It is well, however, to notify the King and Legate of everything, that they may not suppose we are making treaties apart. You must show the Legate, however, that complaints are daily made of depredations by land and sea, and more on the side of the Emperor than on ours. And as the Legate is appointed one of the conservators of the truce with the cardinal of Lorraine on our part, and the cardinal of Liege for Madame of Savoy, we have thought it advisable that each should send a commissioner to Cambrai, as a neutral place, empowered to execute justice and make redress. Malines, 30 July.

1528.

FRANÇOIS DE RAISSE, SIEUR DE LA HARGERIE, to BE. OF BAYONNE—cont.

Copy, Fr., pp. 2. Endd.

30 July. 4579. TRUCE WITH MARGARET OF SAVOY.

Galba, B. VIII.
180.
B. M.
Léonard,
II. 342.

In consequence of the truce between the kings of England and France, and the Archduchess of Austria on the part of the Emperor, for the Low Countries, it is agreed between Fras. de Raïsse, sieur De la Hargerye, maître d'hôtel to Francis, and Jehan de Carondelet, archbishop of Palermo, that three commissioners from each party (Francis and the Emperor) shall meet at Cambrai by 4 Sept., to adjudge the restitution of goods, &c., for all injuries committed from 15 Feb. 1525 till 15 June last. This is to be published in both countries before 28 Aug. The Archduchess, the dowager duchess of Vendôme, and the Prince of Orange are not to be included. Letters patent from the two Princes to be produced in three weeks. Malines, 30 July 1528.

Fr., pp. 4. Headed: Coppie.

31 July. 4580. JOHN HACKETT to [WOLSEY].

Galba, B. IX.
174.
B. M.

Since his last letter on the 14th inst., has received one from Wolsey, dated the 15th, the contents of which he has showed to my Lady. She took the articles of peace in very good part, desiring Wolsey to continue his good mind, and she would not fail to keep hand with him to the uttermost of her power. She fears, however, that the odious letters between the Emperor and the French king will do much to retard peace, but she will always employ herself in mediation. As he stated in his last letters to Tuke, Mons. de la Harger[ie] came to my Lady from the French king, with the ratification of the truce, and letters of credence. He was honorably received, and has today returned with good despatch. As to the enterprises done by Frenchmen, Burgundians and English, it is concluded here that Wolsey and the cardinals of Lorraine and Liege shall send each a commissary to Cambrai to settle them, and my Lady promised to write to Wolsey in that behalf. De la Hargerie left two letters for the bishop of Bayonne, which Hackett sends to Tuke. Encloses the copy of his last letter. Harman is fast in prison at Antwerp, and makes great solicitation to come to his examination. He has sent two requests to the Emperor's council, of which Hackett encloses copies.* Is daily required to bring him to his examination, and has deferred it, as he is waiting for instructions. The Council has given him a term of 18 days from now, at which time they will do justice according to the laws of the country. As they will not send any heretics out of the country, the sooner the information is sent the better. Cannot write himself, as he is suffering from ague. Malines, 31 July 1528. Signed.

Pp. 2.

* See No. 4569.

1528.

31 July.

4581. T. DERYE to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Cannot resort to Cromwell, being here at the marriage of his old master's daughter. Sends, therefore, one of his old companions, that Cromwell may explain to him "at what point Mr. More and I be at concerning our reward for passing of my Lord's warrants." Bega him to deliver Derye's part to the bearer, William Brown. Portgore, 31 July.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Master Cromwell, councillor unto my lord Legate's grace.

4582. ——— to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Asks him to procure for him some room which Sir William Compton had. Will not fail to do the King service, and your Grace may rejoice to see his Highness truly served by your Grace's pupil and servant. Has not refused any labor to serve the King in that whereto Wolsey has appointed him. It is known how well he has behaved for the case of suitors before Wolsey. Never got as much as 20*l.* from his office in one year, though he got 100 marks from the previous office, which he gave to Mr. Taylor's kinsman, at Wolsey's desire, besides selling it to him for 200 marks less than another would have given. Asks Wolsey not to regard his poor estate, but his true intent. The offices commodious for him are the under-treasurership and the stewardship of Warwick's lands, Oxon, and the keeping of Cornebery park.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace.

4583. For SIR NICH. CAREW, Master of the Horse.

R. O.

Draft patent appointing him constable of Warwick Castle and town, with a mansion called the Steward's Place there, and 10*l.* a year as constable, and ten marks for the stewardship; also, keeper of the manor of Goodrest, with the garden and waters in Weggelok Park, with fees of 4*d.* a day. All these fees to be paid out of the issues of the manors of Warwick, Snytterfeld, Kyngton, Barkswell, Moreton, Lyghterne, Clareden, and Henlyarden, as enjoyed by Sir Edward Belknappe, or Sir Fras. Bryan, and Sir Wm. Compton. Also, to be parker of Weggelok Park; with 6*d.* a day, and the appointment of inferior officers and master of the hunt in the said park.

Draft in Wriothesley's hand, pp. 6.

4584. RICHARD PAGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has ascertained that the King answered those who sued him for Mr. Cheyny that he was proud and full of opprobrious words, and endeavored to dishonor those who were most glad to serve him, and that he shall never come into the Chamber until he has confessed his fault and agreed with Mr. Russell; for he will have no grudge amongst his gentlemen. He has, however, consented that he shall come before the Council, and state his suit, and they shall report it to his Highness. Hears that some of his friends have sent for him privily to be here today.

Some of those who sued for Cheyny say that they also asked the King for him touching the age of young Mrs. Broughton, telling him that she was of full age at her brother's death, so that he had no interest in her. To this the King answered that he knew nothing but by her mother's report, and the laws should try whether she were his ward or not. Can learn nothing further. Cheyny seems to have little other comfort, but there are some who make such suit for him as they can.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.: A letter of Maister Page concernyng Sir Thomas Cheyny.

1528.

4585. [WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.]

Cott. App. 1.

B. M.

Thanks him for his gracious letter written with his own hand. Has instructed the bearer, whom he trusts the King will henceforth find conformable in all things, as well in giving better attendance as in leaving his prodigality. He submits as if he were Wolsey's son, and promises to be ruled by his counsel.

Draft in Wolsey's own hand; mutilated, p. 1.

4586. [WOLSEY to JOHN EARL OF OXFORD?]*

R. O.

Thanks him for the venison he sent while the King was with him at his manor of Tytenhangor. The young countess of Oxford has complained to the King, the writer, and others of the Council, that he has expelled her and her servants by force out of the park of Lanam, the castle and park of Camps and the manor of Bumsted. At the same time his letters containing contrary matter arrived. Showed them to the King, and it was thought advisable, as he had entered forcibly and she had three years peaceable possession, that she should be restored and the matter tried at the beginning of next term by the writer and another of the Council. Asks credence for his servant Sencler, the bearer. From my manor.

Draft, pp. 2.

4587. JOHN EARL OF OXFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Asks to be excused for not having come at this time. Asks for Wolsey's countenance in his causes. Is very ill, but trusts to be able to come up before the end of the term. Thanks him for sending Mr. Hansard, whom he perceives to be a very wise man, and discreet in entertaining the Earl's causes. Asks that he may be his counsellor and officer, as steward of his house and surveyor of his lands, for he is sore hindered of his inheritance for lack of such a one. Signed: John Oxinford.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's grace.

4588. The EARL OF OXFORD.

R. O.

Petition to Wolsey of Sir Ant. Wingfield and his wife Elizabeth, John Nevell, Esq., son and heir of Sir John Nevell and Dorothea his wife, deceased, Edm. Knyghtley, Esq., and Ursula his wife.

The possessions of John late earl of Oxenford in Hednyngham, Essex, and elsewhere, yearly value 2,260*l.*, ought to descend to the said Elizabeth and Ursula as his sisters, and to John Nevell as his cousin, but the present Earl claims them as being [ne]xt cousin and heir male. He has obtained permission to hold them till Wolsey has decided the case, promising to restore all issues if it is decided against him, and not to procure any office to be found, or anything to hinder the petitioner's inheritance. He has broken this promise, and caused feoffment to be made to divers persons unknown to the petitioners. Beg Wolsey either to settle the variance, or else to cause the Earl to revoke all such acts.

P. 1, mutilated.

4589. SILVESTER DARIUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Writes in behalf of the bishop of Worcester, to whom Brian Tuke refuses to pay, besides his diets, the costs he has incurred in providing post horses. If he have to pay them out of his own pocket he will spend 3*l.* or 4*l.* a day, which will be very serious, the Bishop being poor, for when he has paid the pension due to the bishop of Verona out of the fruits of the see of Worcester, very little will remain to him. His house was spoiled at the sacking of Rome, and his brother taken prisoner, for whom he had to pay a heavy ransom. Hears also that the collarer of the monastery of Worcester intends to ask Wolsey for the office of sacrist of the monastery, and expel the present holder, who had it of the gift of Wolsey, and has exercised it with so much modesty. Hopes Wolsey will not allow a thing so detrimental to the cathedral.

* Addressed, "My Lord."

1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2. Add.: Cardinal Ebor, Angliæ legato.

4590. THE SIEUR DE LA HARGERIE.

Add. MS.
4620. C. 274.
R. M.

Extract from a letter from the king of France to Mona. de Bayonné, his ambassador in England.

Sent the lord of la Hargerie to Margaret of Savoy, not to treat of anything new, but merely for the explanation of the last truce, to take the ratification thereof, and agree upon a neutral place for the meeting of the commissioners for restitution of injuries. Encloses a copy of what he has agreed to, that he may see that nothing has been concluded touching the king of England, and that he may make it known to him.

Copy of the article agreed upon between Hargerie and Margaret.

Fr., copy, pp. 2.

4591. JOHN EDMUNDES, D.D., to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Petition to Wolsey, as chancellor, to be excused from the loan of 100 marks, for which he has received a privy seal. Has had much expence in the building of his benefices; has spent 100*l.* in conveying a common conduit for his parishioners, and 400 marks about the foundation of a grammar school in Somerset, where the chief laron, Sir John Fitzjames, lives. Was robbed by his servant of 40*l.* when ill. Could not raise 100 marks if he sold all his substance.

P. 1.

4592. WOLSEY'S DISPENSATIONS.

R. O.

Summary of the account of John Hughes to my lord Cardinal of money received by him for dispensations.

Dispensations dated May and June 17 Hen. VIII., 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* From 30 June to the death of Mr. Toneya, 206*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Others not mentioned in Hughes' account, but noted in Toneya's register, 46*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Others fetched by Hughes since his account, 15*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Others remaining with Hughes, 55*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* = 334*l.*

Discharge.—Hughes has paid to Robt. Toneya, by three acquittances dated May and June 17 Hen. VIII., 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*; by three acquittances dated Aug., Jan. and March 17 Hen. VIII., 93*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; to Dr. Stubbes, 68*l.* Asks allowance for the dispensations not yet delivered, 55*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* = 283*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Allowing the first three acquittances only for 8*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, as their date purports, there is due to Wolsey 108*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* But allowing them for their whole content as Hughes desires, there remains due 50*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Pp. 3.

4593. SIR WILLIAM COMPTON.

R. O.

A valor of the possessions of Sir Wm. Compton in 22 Hen. VIII. Clear yearly value, 230*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*

Lat., p. 1, large paper.

1528.

4594.

GRANTS in JULY 1528.

July.
GRANTS.

1. David ap Griffith, of the lp. of Gower, S. Wales, yeoman. Pardon for the death of Hopkin ap David of the said lp. Del. Westm., 1 July (no year).—S.B. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 23.

2. Humph. Ferrers, Wm. Repyngton, Hen. Hopwood, draper, Hen. Sell, merchant-tailor, and Wm. Reynolds. Grant of the advowson of the first prebend and canonry void in the collegiate church of Tamworth, Cov. and Lich. dioc. Del. Hampton Court, 2 July 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 14.

3. Wm. Lane, grocer, of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Tetinghanger, 30 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 5 July.—P.S.

8. Tho. Richardson, of Norwich, dyer. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Tetinghanger, 8 July 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

11. Sir Tho. Rynon, priest. To have the pension which the abbess of Wilton, Wilts, gives to a clerk of the King's nomination till promoted to a competent benefice. Del. Hampton Court, 11 July 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

Duplicate of the above, undated.—S.B.

11. Tho. Wescott, one of the ministers of the Chapel Royal. Presentation to the prebend of Wylmeot, in the collegiate church of Tomworth, void by the death of Wm. Blakden. Del. Hampton Court, 11 July 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 26.

12. Wm. Vaughan, LL.D., King's chaplain. Presentation to the church of Mark and Oye, marches of Calais, Cant. dioc., void by death. Tetinghanger, 10 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 12 July.—P.S. Added at the foot: "This passed not by the King's warrant but by my Lord's gift as chancellor of England."—Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

13. Roger Dingley, clk. Presentation to the canonry and prebend of Wiginton, within the collegiate church of Tamworth, vacant by resignation of Edw. Stapels. Tetinghanger, 10 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 13 July.—P.S.

14. Wm. Beynam, of Calais, merchant. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Tetinghanger, 5 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 14 July.—P.S.

14. Owyn Griffith, of Poweshland, Wales. Pardon. Having on the 11 Jan. 19 Hen. VIII. alleged the realm for felony, before Wm. Hothache, coroner, at Rokby, Warw., and had the port of Angulsey in Wales appointed him by the said coroner to leave the kingdom, going from the churchyard of St. Andrew's, Rokby, and to be conveyed from town to town to the said port by the constables of the said towns, a wooden cross being placed in his hands, &c., he escaped from the custody of the said constables into Wales. Tetinghanger, 10 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 14 July.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 14.

14. Wm. Barlee, King's chaplain. Presentation to the church of Wotton, Linc. dioc., void by the death of Wm. Blakden. Tetinghanger, 10 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 14 July.—P.S.

18. John Resle, of Lyunc, Norf., vintner. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Anth. Ughtred. Amphill, 18 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 18 July.—P.S.

20. Ric. Gawen, gunner of the King. To be a gunner in the Tower of London, with sal a day, viz Wm. Verhayte. Amphill, 14 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 20 July.—P.S. Encl.: "You must remember thys patent, and the payne shalbe deservyd."—Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

20. Wm. Kele, mercer, London. Inspecimus and exemplification, at his request, of the following documents:—1. Petition by Tho. Keyle, mercer, of London, to Tho. card. of York, chancellor, showing that Christ. Appowell was seized in his demesne as of fee of the manor of Bakker, and certain messuages, &c. in Shaftesbury, Bakker, Mafleton, Corffe Molen and Corffe Habbert, Dorset, on 20 Jan. 18 Hen. VIII., when he sold the same to the petitioner, and made estate of the premises to Tho. Baskett, John Davester, John Clerke and others, by virtue whereof the said Tho. Baskett and his co-tenants were seized to the use of the said petitioner, &c. Nevertheless, Wm. Clement, of Wylton, Wilts, pretends title to the said manor, &c. by a former sale made to him by the said Christopher. If any such bargain had been, it would be void by the said Christopher not being of age at the time. In order to clear his title the petitioner desires witnesses may be examined who will give evidence as to the full age of the said Christopher at the time of the bargain made to the petitioner, and as to his nonage at the time of the supposed former bargain; and sues a writ of subpoena to be directed to Pat. Savage, John Metyard, Tho. Abraham, Wm. Butler and John (Joan) Bogarde. 2. Writ of subpoena, dated 12 June 20 Hen. VIII., directed to the said Pat., John, Tho., Wm. and Joan Bogarde, summoning them to appear before the King in Chancery in the quinzaine of St. John the Baptist next. 3. Depositions of the said Pat., John, Tho., Wm. and Joan. Westm., 20 July.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 4.

23. Ric. Yarrowe, page of the Pantry. To be keeper of the park and woods called Parvetyrn, in the lp. of Broomfield and Yale, marches of Wales, viz Elias ap Edwards, dec. Amphill, 20 July 20 Hen. VIII.—Del. Hampton Court, 22 July.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 15.

1528.

4595. THOMAS ABRAHAM, citizen and mercer of London.

R. O.

The finding of Rie. Gresham, William Lock, Robt. Smyth and George Klyott, appointed by the merchants of the Synaon mart, 15 Aug. 1528, that the said Abraham is indebted to a factor of Portugal 207*l.* 12*s.*, in consideration of a purchase made by his agent, Henry Ellington, from the said factor, of certain pieces of chambletes.

Pp. 4, imperfect. Corrected by Crumwell.

Aug.

Otho, R. ix.

77.

R. M.

4596. The MAYOR and ALDERMEN of SOUTHAMPTON to WOLSEY.

" but also the maister and y barks contrary to the truce
 [hi]ghness our most dread sovereign (lord)
 [Emp]erour to thentent that uppon complaynt to be . . . n not only due restitution may be made but also as a violator and a breaker of the said truce may be duly ponyss[hed] is gracious lord the Frenchemen of the said barkes byn here have agreed with the Spanyards and redemyd theyr shippis agayne further pursute; and because we would not suffer them so t[o] day, they] are discontent with us, and some have used unsdityng words, [saying that they would] leve theyr shippis here, and the first Englisheman that ca[m]e] shoulde pay for it, and the Sparyard thynckith we be ageynst
 Frenchemen wolde agree and we lett theym; so we have lytell th[anks]
 Neverthelesse, forasmuche as the said Frenchemen were mynded to here and departe home without making farther pursute, whereby th longe here wolde turne to cost and be lytell thyng worth and y make it a grent mater and peraventure trouble some of the King's su[bjects]
 To prevent this, and considering that they have no authority to make delivery to them of their ships, have sent the masters of the two barks to Wolsey [to make their] complaints, and the captain of the pinnace "to make a[n]ewer for] hym and hys to the same." The pinnace was gone to sea before the arrival of Wolsey's order to arrest it and the master of it. The captain would have been gone likewise, but they arrested him as they wrote before. The town is in great necessity, owing to the fee-farm and charges for the defence of the sea. Southampton, . . .
 Aug.

P. 1, mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate his grace.

4597. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters, xvi.

Writes to tell her of the great "elengenes" he finds since her departure, "for, I ensure you, me thinketh the time longer since your departing now last than I was wont to do a whole fortnight." Could not have thought so short an absence would have so grieved him, but is comforted now he is coming towards her; "inasmuch that my look maketh substantially for my matter; in token whereof I have spent above four hours this day, which caused me to write the shorter letter to you at this time by cause of some pain in my head. Wishing myself specially an evening in my sweetheart's arms, whose pretty dubbys I trust shortly to cusse."

Hol.

1 Aug.

R. O.

4598. WOLSEY'S COLLEGER.

Grant by John Higden, dean of Wolsey's College, Oxford, to William Capon, dean of the College of Ipswich, of the priory and appendages of Typtre, Wyke, Dolnesh, &c. Also appointment of Tho. Rusche and Wm. Bambarne, as their attorneys. At the College, 1 Aug. 1528.

Lat., vellum. Part of a seal appended.

1528.

WOLSEY'S COLLEGES—cont.

R. O.

2. Duplicate, with Wolsey's arms and supporters beautifully tricked, with the columns and cross keys.

Lat., vellum. No seal.

1 Aug.

4599. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

Inspecimus of a bull of Clement VII., dated 31 May 1528, exempting Cardinal's college, Oxford, from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. Hampton Court, 1 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Great seal attached.

P. S.

2. Privy seal for the preceding. Undated.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 33.

R. O.

3. Draft of the same.

1 Aug.

4600. STAUNTON DREW.

R. O.

Fragment of a conveyance by Hen. lord Daubeney to Thos. Arundel of the manor of Staunton Drewe. Dated 1 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.

2 Aug.

4601. [DEPUTY and COMPTROLLER of CALAIS to HENRY VIII.]

Cal. D. s. 350.

B. M.

This day Thomas Palmer, sewer for the mouth, presented your letters dated Tittenhanger the 9th ult., to me your Deputy, granting him the captainship of Newnham Bridge, with certain soldiers of the retinue here, named in the placard to Sir Rob. Jerningham, late warden of the said fort, herewith enclosed. As Sir Ric. Weston, the treasurer, has left for England, the Council here has considered Palmer's grant, to which they find various objections (specified), and therefore cannot proceed till Weston return, and they hear further of the King's pleasure. I have had express commandment by various privy seals to put upon ordinary wages certain footmen appointed to wait upon Palmer, and it is impossible for me to follow both ordinances. My patent is long after the date of Sir Rob. Jerningham's; so that, though the lord Berners, deputy before me, put two of his retinue with Sir Rob. Jerningham, yet, considering that the whole number is expressed in my patent, and in that of every deputy before me, I trust you will see that my number ought not to be abridged. Calais, 2 Aug. 1528.

Badly mutilated, pp. 3.

R. O.

2. Official copy of the preceding.

Pp. 3.

3 Aug.

4602. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

He and the Comptroller have sent a letter to the King, signed with both their hands, of which he encloses a copy, touching the patent of Th. Palmer, presented yesterday. If he is to be keeper of Newnham Bridge, hope it will be on conditions suitable to their duties and privileges. Calais, 3 Aug. 1528.

Hel., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

3 Aug.

4603. II. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to THOMAS ARUNDEL.

Cavendish's

L. of Wolsey.

by Singer,

462.

Bedfellow, after my most hearty recommendation,—this Monday, the 3rd of August, I received your letters of the 20th of July, delivered to my servant the same day at Newcastle, expressing the Cardinal's wish to have the Chapel books of my late father. I shall be conformable, though I trust to be able to set up a chapel of my own. "But I pray God, he may look better upon me than he doth," as I am no better regarded: first, by his detention of my treasurer, and his very hasty and unkind words unto him, not deserved by me also by the news blown all over Yorkshire by Mr. Manyng, that I am not regarded by the King or the Cardinal, as he will tell me when I meet him in Yorkshire, which will be this month. I fear my word to Mr. Manyng will not please my Lord, "for I will be no ward." My pains since I came hither are not better regarded; but by a flattering bishop of Carlisle, and that false Worm, I am brought to my present misery, and am in such slanders that the Cardinal cannot bring me out of them if he would. Will send four Antiphonars, such as "were not seen a great while," with other chapel books. If the Cardinal will give me leave to put William Worm into a castle of mine at Anwyk until he has accounted for more money than ever I received, I will give him 200*l.* and a benefice of 100*l.* for his College. At my monastery of Hulpark, the 3rd of August.

1528.

Add.: To his beloved cousin, Thomas Arundel, one of the gentlemen of my Lord's privy chamber.

4 Aug.

4604. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. i. 323.

The King, the Queen and the Princess, with all others in Court, are in good health. Suit has been made to the King for the abbot of Morgan, in Wales, and the King desires he may be sent home again. He wishes the benefice of Horworth for the duke of Richmond's schoolmaster (Croke), and is dissatisfied with the Chancellor of the Duchy (More) for letting Kelyngworth to Wyggston, which he intended for me. Norfolk, who has been long sick and absent from Court, intends coming tomorrow. On Tuesday the 11th the King removes to Windsor, where I hope he will meet with you. I moved the King this morning, according to your commandment, touching the wardship of young Compton. Amphilil, 4 Aug.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

4 Aug.

4605. [SANGA] to CARDINAL SALVIATI, Legate in France.

Lettere
di Principi,
n. 114.

Italian news. Cardinal Campeggio embarked at Corneto on the 25th, and will go by sea to Provence. I send the enclosed letter in cipher for him. Obtain a copy of his cipher, so that I may use the same in writing to both of you. Dr. Stephen [Gardiner] has quitted Venice, well acquainted with the great wrong done to the Pope, and is going to England with an intention to do good service to his Holiness. I hope the King is well disposed to the Pope. Viterbo, 4 Aug. 1528.

Ital.

4 Aug.

4606. TH. HENNEGE to — MORES.

R. O.

Begs him to solicit my Lord's grace for an answer to the letter brought by the bearer touching the abbot of Morgan. Begs to be recommended to Arundel, Anford (Gulford), and other friends in my Lord's house. Amphilil, 4 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my right well-beloved friend Mores, gentleman of the privy chamber with my Lord's grace, this be delivered.

4 Aug.

4607. JOHN CLERK, Canon of Cardinal's College, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Asks his favor with Wolsey for a letter to the Dean to admit his (Clerk's) brother to a petty canonry. Sends a pair of gloves as a token. Polesley, 4 Aug. Wrote on Whitsunday, by a fellow of the College.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell. Endd.

4 Aug.

4608. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Ratification, by cardinal Wolsey, of the grant of Typtre, Wykes, &c. from the college at Oxford to the college at Ipswich. Hampton Court, 4 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Sealed.

1528.

4 Aug.
S. B.4609. For PIERS BUTLER, EARL OF OSSORY.

To be deputy of Ireland, vice Gerald earl of Kildare, who was created deputy, 13 March 16 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 4 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.

6 Aug.
R. O.4610. PASQUAL SPINULA to WOLSEY.

Was unwilling to wait upon him during the prevalence of the sickness, to explain to him the loss of his alum, which had been sequestrated and sold, and the papal briefs he has received on the subject. Now that matters are quiet, begs that Wolsey will take his case into consideration. London, 6 Aug. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

7 Aug.
R. O.4611. CLERK to WOLSEY.

Dr. Stephens writes that your Grace bids me send my horses to Lyons, to bring Campeggio and his company to Calais. As I cannot spare them, I have sent Dr. Stephens 200 crowns out of my purse, with advice for ordering the journey; of which I send you a copy. I reckon that Campeggio is now at Lyons, if he took shipping on the 23rd ult. My horses shall be ready to convey them to Calais. Begs he will write to Dr. Tayler, that his horses also may assist. Fontainebleau, 7 Aug.

Hol. Add. Endd.

7 Aug.
R. O.4612. CLERK to TUKE.

The Imperial lanceknights have returned to their country, cursing, hanning and begging. Naples is expected to surrender. Vaudemont, the cardinal of Lorraine's brother, is dead. Andrea Doria has forsaken the French. Master Stephyns is at Lyons, waiting for Campeggio, who took shipping on the 22nd. The French king is recovered, ut præ se ferat speciem miraculi. Fontainebleau, 7 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

7 Aug.
R. O.
Elix. 2 Ser.
ii. 141.4613. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CROMWELL.

Has found an iron chest, such as Cromwell wants, but fears the price, 8*l.* Fl. is more than he wishes to give. It is very strong and cleanly made, and 100 years after would be worth as much, with the loss of less than 40*s.*, besides the security Cromwell would feel, when absent, knowing that his money was in it. Will buy it if he wishes for it. Asks him to see to the money coming from Clarencieux, and make an end for all his obligations. If Clarencieux is good to him, will do him more pleasure than he thinks of, if Penn or any of his goods come into these parts.

Exchange is at 25*s.* Fl. for 1*l.* st. The slack trade is owing to the abundance lately coming, and to the war between the Gelders and these parts. Sent an answer to Cromwell's letter by a servant of Mr. Palmer's. Antwerp, 7 Aug. 1528.

If Cromwell could get a licence for cheese they might both make much money.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Cromwell in London.

7 Aug.
R. O.4614. ROBT. PORRETT to CROMWELL.

The shire day is Aug. 7. Distrained Mr. Pecok for Mr. Denton's quit-rent in Whitley. Wrote four weeks ago by Mr. White for a recordare. Has written to White to ask if he delivered it. Mr. Dean wishes all matters done as soon as possible, now at the beginning of my Lord's college. Has asked the subdean to give Cromwell information about other matters. Mawdlen College, Oxforth, 7 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell, of my Lord Cardinal's council.

1528.

8 Aug.

Bibb. MS.
8527, f. 48.4615. MARY the FRENCH QUEEN to the GRAND MASTER OF FRANCE.

Thanks him for procuring a speedy despatch for George Hampton, the bearer, whom she sent over lately on the matter of her dower. Begs him to continue his good offices. Wingfield Castle, 8 Aug. 1528. Counter-signed: De Sainet Martin.

Fr. Add.

8 Aug.

ib. f. 59.

4616. SUFFOLK to THE SAME.

To the same effect. Same date.

8 Aug.

R. O.

Rym. xiv. 266.

4617. FRANCIS I.

Commission to John du Bellay, bishop of Bayonne, to give acquittance for money received from England. Fontainebleau, 8 Aug. 1528.

Lat., vellum. Sealed. Endorsed by Vannes.

8 Aug.

R. O.

4618. ARTHUR NEWTON to WOLSEY.

As upon Wolsey's application in his favor to the earl of Arundel for the stewardship of Oswestre, the Earl agreed to give it to the petitioner upon the first vacancy, and it is now void by the death of Sir Wm. Compton, begs Wolsey will interpose in his favor. Felton, 8 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

10 Aug.

S. B.

4619. For WILLIAM WARHAM, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

Licence to alienate lands to the annual value of 20*l.* to the prior and convent of Christchurch, Canterbury, for the support of one or two secular chaplains to pray for the good estate of the King and Queen, &c., at the altar of a certain chapel there, lately built by him under the great wall of the said church, near the place commonly called "The Martindom of Saynt Thomas." Del. Hampton Court, 10 Aug.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 12.

10 Aug.

R. O.

4620. WILL. [WARHAM,] ARP. OF CANTERBURY, to WOLSEY.

Is thankful that the King hath signed the bill presented by Thos. Bedyll, his secretary, for a new patent giving lands in mortmain to the monks of Canterbury, for the exhibition of one or two priests to say mass for the King, and for the souls of Henry VII., queen Elizabeth, and others. Objections had been made to the old patent on the words "Thome," "capitulum," "cathedrals," and "predicte." Canterbury, 10 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: My lord cardinal of York and legate de latere. Endd.

10 Aug.

Letter
di Principi,
n. 116.4621. [SANGA] to CARDINAL SALVIATI.

I sent you a letter for cardinal Campeggio. We have heard nothing of him since he quitted Piombino with the galleys of Rhodes, taking the direct road to Nice. On landing, he will have to provide himself with horses. Viterbo, 10 Aug. 1528.

Ital.

10 Aug.

Add. MS.
12,401, No. 2.

R. M.

4622. WOLSEY to JAMES V.

As one devoted to your honor, I regret to learn that you have been alienated from the earl of Angus by those who seek your hurt more than his. His fidelity has always been regarded here as sincere, and the thing surmised against him sounds to the offence of the King my master. And though the King touches it but succinctly in the letter he now writes you he cannot but wonder at your conceiving suspicion instead of assuring your self by "making large answer for justification of the truth." If ever so virtuous a prince had intended getting you into his hands, there have been better opportunities, and, if he had meant it now, other orders would have been given upon the Borders, where answer was made at your request to assist you in repressing the broken men of your Borders, and apprehend such as came to England. Angus has done much to promote good understanding between the King and you. Hampton Court, 10 Aug. Signed.

1528.

WOLSEY TO JAMES V.—cont.

Pp. 2. Add.

10 Aug. 4623. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Power of attorney by William Capon to Ralph Sadleyer and Nich. Gyfforde, to take possession of the property of the priory of St. Peter's, Herkesley, granted to the above by cardinal Wolsey. The College, 10 Aug. 1528.

Lat., vellum. The College seal attached (fine impression).

R. O.

2. Power of attorney by the Dean and Canons to Ralph Sadler and Nicholas Gyfforde, to receive from the dean and canons of Cardinal's college, Oxford, possession and seisin of all the possessions of the late monasteries of Typtre, Wikes, &c., in co. Essex, and Dodnessh, Snape, &c., in co. Suffolk. Dated at the College, 10 Aug. 1528.

Lat., vellum; with the College seal appended.

11 Aug. 4624. MARGARET OF SAVOY to [WOLSEY].

Galba, B. ix. 135.

B. M.

Has received his letters of 27 July. Is astonished at the remonstrance made by the bishop of Bayonne to Wolsey about the affairs of Madame de Vendosme. She ought to thank Wolsey instead of being angry with him, because the prince of Orange enjoys certain goods, and a small part is reserved to lady Margaret, so as not to break the treaty of Madrid. In treating with De la Hargerie as to the property of the prince of Orange, the matter was settled by consent of the deputies of the lady of Vendosme, as will be seen by the enclosed extract.

As to my lady Margaret, it is true that the deputy of the lady of Vendosme has urged the valuation of the property now, instead of at the end of the truce, but he has ceased doing so in consequence of the answers made to him. What lady Margaret holds is charged nearly to the full value. In such short truces it is not usual to make any changes; but, to please Wolsey, she has acquiesced in everything. Wishes him to tell this to the bishop of Bayonne. As to the cardinal of Lorraine, makes no difficulty about his enjoying his property according to the truce. He has been advised to fix a day at Cambray to provide for all his affairs, and she asks Wolsey and the other conservators of the truce to send deputies thither.

Expects daily news from Escuyer Marnix. Will continue her endeavors for peace. Malines, 11 Aug. 1528. Signed.

Fr., pp. 2.

4625. TRUCE between ENGLAND and the EMPEROR.

Cal. D. x. 370.

B. M.

" traffic, sail and return elsewhere as they shall think good be or freshwater, paying only the customs duties, rights, and impositions such in the time of peace, without any disturbance to be done unto them in their persons, merchand[ize or] goods, whatsoever they be; Provided if any person haunting, dwelling, or sojour[n]ing countries one of the other, by virtue of this pr[oclam]ation, conspire against the weal of the country of the same, he shall be punished and infractor thereof, and nevertheless the remain and stand for all other in his for The subjects also and inhabitants lands

1528.

. disturbance or let, may fish be in the seas, where the said truce where any fishing of herring may be [hav]e done before the war, and as they might [an]d were accustomed to do in time of peace. [It] is also covenanted and accorded that the intercourse [of] merchandise between England and the Emperor's said co[un]tries, their vassals, merchants and subjects whatsoever be of the same, shall have wholly and entir[e]ly and course, not only for the said eight months afore, but also for as long time after as the [said truce] shall endure: In such form and manner as it [was in the] year before the intimation of war made [by the] King's highness to the said Emperor, without pay[ing] of any customs, tolls, gabelles, duties t such as the

. to pay in the time aforesaid year before the said intimation of [war. And] the said truce shall not have place in [the parts] of Spain, nor in other countries and s which the said Emperor hath and pretendeth [to have,] as well beyond the mountains [Pir[en]ces] also in Italy. Yet nevertheless it is concluded, accorded and expressly declared by [the] same truce that as long as the same [shall stand] and endure there shall cease between [the said] princes, as well in the sea which is call[ed] the Narrow sea as in the rest of the sea oce main sea foranent England, Wales, [Ireland,] Scotland, France, Normandy

. regions of the Low Countries Emperor and also in all other seas on the confines and havens of Spain how[e]ver they may be called or named, all hostility, invasion exploit or feat of war for and betw[een] the said princes, their vassals and subjects, so that all an[d] sundry the merchants, subjects and vassals of the said [princes shall] now, with their ships and other vessels w[hate]soever they be, sail, go, tarry, sojourn, return, pass [and] repass with their said ships, equipage same, their merchandises and goods, whatsoever [they may] be, by all and every the said seas, safely, surely peaceably without any manner damage, grief, let, [impediment] or disturbance to be done unto them in th[ei]r bod[ies], merchandises or goods

. y the subjects, vassals or men of [war] or other being at their commandment or occasion whatsoever it be wherefore sovereign lord willeth and commandeth."

Draft, in Duke's hand. Endd. by Wolsey: Copy of the truce and with letters appertain 4626. ANDREA DORIA.

Terms granted by the Emperor to Andrea Doria.

The Emperor will maintain Genoa in liberty, with the administration appointed by the people. He will pay Doria 5,000 ducats a month for 12 galleys, and give the security of merchants for it. Doria is to be the captain-general at sea. His wages to commence when he leaves the French king. The Emperor will give him benefices to the amount of 3,000 ducats for a kinsman.

Besides these things, the Emperor promises him a dukedom or marquise in Naples. Doria remits to the Emperor his differences with the lord of Veep. C. IV.

251.

B. M.

1528.

ANDREA DORIA—cont.

Monaco. It is said that on the same day that Doria's ambassador left, he started to succour Naples. Many trust in the delay of the count of St. Pol. The Franciscan general is expected here from Rome; with whom the Emperor wishes to speak before he speaks with me [Silvester Darius], as he has already spoken to the bishop of Pistoia, that he may give me a more certain answer.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.

12 Aug.

R. O.

4627. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

I am advertised that you have written to the mayor of Rye, commanding him to send to you one Nicholas Whyte. As he does not belong to Rye, but to Winchelsea, the mayor of the latter place gave him knowledge of your Grace's pleasure, and I have ordered him to appear before you. I shall be glad if you will direct your pleasure to me in all matters within my jurisdiction. The said Whyte is surveyor of the works at Tylyngham, where there has been a sea-breach, which will destroy the country unless it be repaired before Michaelmas. The said Whyte had been accused by the parish priest at Rye, before the bishop of Chichester, but after twice appearing his accusers could prove nothing. He is appointed to appear again at Lewes, on Friday next. Halden, 12 Aug. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

12 Aug.

R. O.

4628. GEO. THROKMORTON to CROMWELL.

Sends him a greyhound. Will be at my lord Cardinal's on the morrow after Lady Day, and stop there five or six days. Will be glad to meet him there; for I mind to go through with my Lord's grace for Ravanston, and other causes, and would fain have your counsel. Will content Cromwell for his pains. Will be glad to know when he will be at Ravanston, and agree about the reparations. If he cannot come, he is to send his mind in writing. Artylborough, 11 Aug. Signed.

P.S.—Pray help the bearer to some sturgeon and quails.

P. 1. Add.

12 Aug.

R. O.

4629. EVERS DON PARVA.

Sequestration by Rob. Clyf, LL.D., commissary of Nich. bishop of Ely, of the fruits of the church of Eversdon Parva, Ely dioc., belonging to the abbey of St. Alban's. Will. Rogers, of Eversdon Parva, to collect the same. Cambridge, 12 Aug. 1528.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.

13 Aug.

Cal. D. x. 348.

B. M.

4630. FRANCIS I. to WOLSEY.

In behalf of Jehan du Vernoy of . . . whose two ships loaded with woud have been arrested. F[ontaine]bleau, 13 Aug. 1528. Signed.

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.

13 Aug.

Cleop. F. vi.

342.

B. M.

Ellis, 3 Ser.

ii. 29.

4631. WARHAM to [WOLSEY].

I have assembled eleven deaneries adjoining to Canterbury, and I perceive they are very well minded to the loan, but their substance is not equal to their wishes. They are very poor. As the chief benefices are appropriated to religious houses, the vicar's portion is so small they can scarcely live. If there be any good vicarages the religious obtain faculties from the Pope to have them served by the religious. In all the deaneries there are twenty-two benefices at the sum of 40*l.*(?), and six or seven are so decayed as to be nothing like that value. As I have no power over religious men, they must be left to your Grace; and unless they contribute to the loan according to the value of their benefices, the clergy will complain. Had the religious houses not been exempted, but appeared before me, the loan derived from my diocese would be much greater than now. The value of all the benefices in the diocese of Canterbury would then amount to a tax of 1,903*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

1528.

The clergy will not declare the quantity of their corn, their plate, or their cattle, as they say they cannot estimate them, and they are afraid of perjury. 300 priests have appeared before me, but I have not told them what their loan shall be, lest they should be dissatisfied and draw in others to the dissatisfaction. It would be better to appoint collectors to levy the sums in two or three deaneries at once, and not assemble great multitudes. No man will contribute to the loan without the King's writing; therefore nothing can be done till the privy seals are ready. I have caused the farmers of those who were sick or absent to appear before me. Against those who have benefices in other dioceses, and so removed before the time of the loan, I cannot use the censures of the Church, as that belongs to the ordinary in whose diocese they are. Oxford, 13 Aug. Signed.

13 Aug. 4632. TH. LUCAS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was appointed by Wolsey to levy the arrears of the King's loan. Great sums have since been paid to the treasurer of the King's chamber, but much more is due. Supposes Wolsey does not mean to soss the lords, knights and other great men in the King's wars, but the commissioners should account for the sums they have received. Sends "a boke" for privy seals to be directed to them, and the names of those not sessed. Understands Wolsey means to send Sir John Dauncey and baron Hales to Calais to view the King's lands and revenues. The late King was informed that he was deceived in his revenues by the treasurer and controller of Calais, and commissioned Sir Gilbert Talbot, his deputy, to inquire; but what was found was not certified, in consequence of the King's decease. Lucas received a letter and instruction about this matter at the time, which he forwards for Wolsey's guidance. Sends an exemplification under the Exchequer seal of the process against John Growrode, Herman Ryng, and Coort van Elais, merchants of the Steelyard, who were fined 680*l.* for carriage over sea of woollen cloths unbarbed, unrowed, and unshorn, with a bill of instruction and a forfeited recognisance of 20,000*l.* by the whole body of the Steelyard, and their surety, one Bukberd, then a customer of London, in 20,000*l.*, which was also exemplified under the Exchequer seal, "and by me delivered in Hilary Term, anno 24th, to Hugh Denys." Proceedings on these cases were respite by the King, to be put in execution if the then Emperor or his subjects "misordered themselves." Delivered a copy to Wolsey long ago. Would not have troubled Wolsey with writing, but after waiting to speak to him since the end of the term till Wednesday last he was always told Wolsey had no leisure, and meantime his wife had died, so he had to go home. Saxham, 13 Aug.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Cardinal's grace.

14 Aug. 4633. THE SWEATING SICKNESS.

R. O.

Number of the persons who died with the plague, or otherwise, in the city of London, from 5 to 12 Aug. Also, of the parishes clear from the infection.

ii. Similar list for the 14th Aug.

Pp. 10. Endd. : "So appeareth there be dead within the city of London, of the plague and otherwise, from the 6th day of this month of August to the 14th day, which be 8 days complete, the full number of 152 persons. And this day se'night your mastership shall be certified of the number that shall chauce to depart in the meantime. Yours, as I am bound, John Champenrys."

1528.

14 Aug.

R. O.

4634. RICHARD BELLASSIS to CRUMWELL.

Since he wrote last the finers at Gaytsyd have "put your coining in exercise," but the furnace would not hold the metals, which ran out on every side. They ask for a new one, made of a whole stone, which he has allowed them to make, thinking that as "my Lord's grace" has spent so much, it is well to spend a little more, to see the uttermost of their cunning, and if this fail, then to cease further expenditure. Will send a final report after Michaelmas. Thanks him for taking so much trouble in his causes. The Chancellor will not yet comply with his desire in the said causes, but Bellassis hopes, with Cromwell's help, to bring them to a good pass. Tynmouth, 14 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Thomas Cromwell.

16 Aug.

R. O.

4635. W. BATHE to JUSTICE AYLMER.

Has no news to write, except that this matter of my lord of Ossory's deputation is determined. Is not quite sure whether the father or the son is to have the dignity. Thinks it is the father, but Aylmer himself will sooner learn the truth. They have a grant to hold a Parliament, and to have many resumpcions, "with other matters, as ye know before many of their crakes, I fear not most expedient for the commonweal of the country." Begs Aylmer to inform him of the truth, "and peradventure such a clyte may be cast in their tail that they shall not come to all their purpose this seven years;" and that if any folk have complaint against them for extortion or other misdemeanors they need not fear to put it forward, "and the sooner the better, for causes that I know." Begs Aylmer to let no man know of this, unless he wish to show his mind to James Cusake. Islenton, the morrow of the Assumption of Our Lady.

Begs him to burn this bill.*

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To his worshipful cousin, the Justice Aylmer, give these. With speed. From London, &c.

17 Aug.

[Cal. E. 1.11. ?]

I. 148.

B. M.

4636. GUILLAUME DE BARRES to [WOLSEY].

Has received his letters concerning the property of Madame de Vendosme here, stating that she claims (se p[retend]) some interest in it. As to the goods to which she succeeded by the death of Mons. de Ravestain, De Barres presented while in France "la main levée de l'Empereur," but could not obtain in return that of the French king for the property of the prince of Orange, which they said they would send to Madame by the [sieur] De la Hargerye, who has not brought it, and consequently Madame does not yet enjoy her own. As soon as the prince of Orange is satisfied by France, the same will be done here for Madame. His mistress does not mean to do wrong, but to follow Wolsey's letter. As to the other property of Madame de Vendosmes, which Madame has confiscated in recompense for her county of Cha[rolois] and the salt stores, she intends to observe the form of the truce, which is that the party which has received more of the goods of the other shall make restitution. "ce Monsieur, pour plus satisfaire a ladite dame a ca a fait poursuyr de jouyr du revenu des biens le prince d'Oranges a tenu d'elle pardeça pour reco[m]pense en France, depuis la publication du traicte de jusques au jour de la tresse, madite dame ma maistresse a este contente encoires qu'il n'en soit fait men tresse et que les dits biens soyent meilleurs que [ceulx dudit] prince d'Orange, que faysant joyr icelluy sieur p revenu des siens pour ledit temps, elle en joyssse a qu'elle desire." [Sends] a copy of the agreement between la Hargerie and a councillor (conseiller) of Madame de Vendosmes. Malines, 17 Aug.

1528.

Hol., pp. 2, Fr., mutilated.

17 Aug.

4637. SILVESTER DARIUS to ———.

Vesp. C. iv.

253.

B. M.

Extracts from letters of Sylvester Darius, dated Madrid, 12 Aug.

At last got permission to see the Emperor. On asking him for a resolution, he replied that he had not yet read the articles given him by Darius, being fatigued by his journey; that they were in Latin, which he did not understand, and he had ordered them to be translated into French; besides, his chancellor and Lashau were absent. He desired universal peace, and was willing to postpone the French king's defiance for the good of Christendom. He thought the proceedings at Burgos might form a foundation. Asked him whether he made a difficulty as to the conditions or the methods. He said the former. Answered that Wolsey had said nothing about the conditions, because he supposed the Emperor was always contented with what had once contented him. He replied that he had then protested that if the matter was not concluded he would not afterwards acquiesce. Said he was not asked to acquiesce as if bound to do so, but as a kindness. He laughed, and said he would not absolutely deny that he would agree to the conditions, but he would see the articles, and then answer. Recollected that he had some suspicion of fraud, and told him that all possible faith and sincerity would be used. Alemand refused Darius's request for letters from the Emperor to the governor of Fontarabia to allow Darius's letters to pass, as the Emperor thought he ought not to write without a resolution, and he was hourly expecting the Franciscan General from Rome; and in two or three days after his arrival, Darius should be despatched, even if the Chancellor had not come. The Chancellor is said to be ill with gout, and is coming hither a league a day, being very desirous of seeing the Emperor before he dies.

He (the Emperor) has said nothing about the divorce, and seems to hope that it will not proceed. Thinks it would be well to defer Campeggio's arrival in England until the conclusion of peace, as the Emperor cannot be ignorant of the intention of his coming, and may procrastinate about the peace until he sees how the divorce ends. If the Spanish nobles hear of it, they may incite the Emperor to war. The whole of Spain is displeased about the divorce. Madrid, 17 Aug. 1528.

The Emperor objected to ratify the truce, thinking it too long, but he will probably do so. Alemand desired him to ask Wolsey to obtain a safe-conduct for the return of Marigny, who came hither with Darius.

The Emperor told the bishop of Pistoja that he does not desire peace, except with the conditions of the treaty of Madrid, and he will never trust the French king. The Bishop asked him if he trusted the king of England. He said he did as long as the King does not send away the Queen. The Bishop says also that he praises the king of England much. Alemand says that Darius will carry back peace. It is thought here that Wolsey has written to blame the French king for sending the challenge. The Imperial ambassador in England labors for peace, and writes honorably of the King and Wolsey. When the Emperor knew that a safe-conduct was not sent to his herald, he thought it was owing to Wolsey, and it is greatly approved of by those who desire peace.

Andrea Doria's man has not yet gone, and is waiting for money. It is wonderful that the Emperor does not send him off.

Lat., Vannes' hand, pp. 4.

1528.

18 Aug.

R. O.

4638. SIR JOHN STILE to WOLSEY.

The merchants had already left London for the mart at Antwerp; so it was not possible to alter their coming. Has made overtures to the company of merchants here, respecting the King and Wolsey's wish for their going to the town of Barrow, which they admit, and will perform the same.† They have had a very slack market at Antwerp. Their cloth, tin and lead remain yet unsold. After All Hallows the mart at Barrow will begin, to which they will repair. They wish to have from you knowledge of what will be done for their security.† Isselstein and the margrave of Fryse have been at war with Gueldres, and done the Duke much harm. They have laid siege to Tyne; but, in consequence of a suspicion of treason, will proceed no further this year. Has been well entertained. Intends to stay, to put the affairs of the merchants in good order. Antwerp, 18 Aug. 1528.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

18 Aug.

Vit. B. xx.

161.

B. M.

4639. LAURENCE STARBER to WOLSEY.

Has written what was doing where they are, and what out of Fr[ance] "quas litteras Antuerp[er]iam in ades Angli[ca]s delatas fuisse] existimo; quod si est factum, meum obsequendi [desiderium] R.V. Paternitati satis testatum confido. Postea autem non quidem turbulentarum apud nos extitit. De quibus posset, exempla litterarum ex quibus principia nu trans-misi. Comparaverant exercitum Princeps Sax[onia] et] Lantgravius minime contemnendum. Nec dubium est qu[od] in [instru]ctissimorum equitum et peditum milia amplius decem con Et jam ad invadendam ditionem episcopi Moguntinensis et Bambergensis accingebantur, quod dicerent se vivi ab vicin essent potissime metuere. Et quia haberent compertum Ferdinando et Marchione Brandepyr-gensi electore episcop Georgio Saxonum, et fratribus Bavarie ducibus contra se Et sibi ab illis, nisi provideant, imminere certissime exitium Lute[ranorum] nomine, quod antevertere protectione et armis depellere, optimo si Atque hæc cum exemplis conjurationis ad principes et civitates Reg Ipsi tamen interea pacem et pacis conditiones, illis quæ supra episcopis, quos primos sibi statuerant impetendos detulerunt. Itaq[ue] Comes Palatinus Rheni, et Treverensis episcopus, medios sese offeren[tes] [tolera]bilibus conditionibus composuerunt. Et quia maximo sumptu L[antgravius] exercitum collegerat, ab episcopis centum milia aureorum exacta illorum sumptum parte levaretur, sed Saxonum dux de ea tum maximarum profecto calamitatum metus beneficio Magni Dei leviter. Nam si ita hæc tempestas, ut inhorruerat, desævisset, nihi[l minus] fuerat quam totius Germanicæ nationis eversio. Illi quorum nomi[na] tionis exemplis posita fuerant, quomodo suam causam publici placuit V.R.P. simul transmittere. Quæ omnia, quo n R.V.P. melius probarem, curaturus fueram in Latinam sed neque arbitraber hoc heri necesse esse, neque tabellarii Ex Italia quotidie certiora de reditu earum copiarum milia Brunsuicensis dux, et Marcus Sittichus asseruntur. Neque quicquam ab iis memorabile diam expugnare aggressi

Sed nescio quomodo serius accepta sit, quam ut sua nos benignitate miratur, ne Christiani sanguinis prof[usio] iurias cades gliscat, sed ut concordia et pax ad ipsius [rogatum] eis restituatur.

• De Turca quod ad Pannonas attinet o septem castrorum jam diu

1528.

profundum silentium est. Quosdam tamen . . . ex Illyricum incursionem fecisse in fines ditionis regis Ferdinandi quam Carinthiam nominant et juxta oppidum Labacum magnam multitudinem hominum et juvenum abegisse accepimus. Apud nos comitia intra menses adhuc duos futura putantur."

Balthasar de Waldkyrch, the Emperor's vice-chancellor, has been sent into Germany lately on these and other matters. He arrived at Nuremberg on the 7th Aug. The Emperor demands,—(1) aid against the enemies of the empire by the Germans; (2) decision on the innovations and dissensions in religion by some person authorized by them, and reform as far as can be effected. The aid is not asked "nominatim;" but in these things, and in all, the Germans have overwhelmingly shown their zeal, obedience and promptitude to the Emperor. The Legate came to Ferdinand, 10 Aug.

It remains to tell Wolsey of his success with the metals, touching which he received Wolsey's commands. The first give no hope of copper or silver. The second, "metalla fusa," ditto. The third metals give no silver, but 35 lb. of copper. Blown, they yield 1½ oz. of silver. The fourth, "metalla fusa," are void of silver. The fifth, "metalla plumbi," have no silver, but give 58 lb. of lead out of 100 lb. The sixth, "spissa metalla et gilva," give 1 oz. of silver out of 100 lb. The seventh, "metalla," in 100 lb. yield 56 lb. of lead, . . . 1½ oz. and 2 drachms of silver. [The eighth in] 100 lb. give 57½ lb. of . . . but yield no silver.

Has found a man very expert in these things, who might be of great use to the King. "In explorandis metallis . . . laudatus. Is meis sermonibus adduc[tus] . . . tamen constituit ut [nie]bam, in Brit[anniam] . . . autem mercedis nomine et in universos . . . linquat, singulis diebus septem, Anglos tres . . . initia postulat ad viaticum Anglos quadragi[nta] . . . Rhenenses. De quo quid me R.V.P. facere u . . . ut pro illius voluntate omnia transigam. Quantum . . . impenderim proximis literis V.R.P. significabo . . . qua Regie Majestatis nomine exposui, qua simul omn . . . mittam. V. R. P^{tas} si quid mihi rescribere bene dignat[ur] . . . literas miserit in ades Anglicas Antuerpnam, unde . . . istie rerum procuratores ad me perferentur. Ego me . . . commendo. Norimbergæ," 15 cal. Sept. Signed.

Hol., pp. 3. Add.: "R. in Christo patri," &c. "D. Thomæ Card. Archiepiscopo E[bor.] legato A[ngliae]."

18 Aug. 4640. MARGARET OF SAVOY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his letter by the ambassador here resident. As the matter was of a nature that could not be determined without due consultation, referred it to the Emperor's council with her. The Council has given a reply to the English ambassador. Begs he will take it in good part, and not ask anything which is unreasonable. Mechlin, 18 Aug. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

4641. [CLERK to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 232.

B. M.

" . . . and conjectures . . . t they must study . . . [a]rmy there, which doing . . . [not]withstanding, I am but raw . . . as I shall here so I shall advertise [your Grace, and thus] 1528.

[CLERK to WOLSEY]—cont.

Almighty God preserve your Grace. From Sunday night.

P.S., in his own hand.—The French king is lusty as I h[ear] the one of his cheeks is not yet is somewhat higher than the other [and this causes an] impediment in his speech."

*Mutilated.4642. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 201.

B. M.

"[A]fter our most humble recommenda[tions, please it your Grace to] understand that yesterday we spa[ke with the King at Fontaine]bleaulx after his dinner, his Ma[jesty] as singular good liking as ever, w and mouth clean, without spot or ble[mish] is not yet clearly returned for the his upper teeth before, but with proc to his perfection, whereof there lacketh His Majesty after salutations shewy[d us that the] air here hath profited him unto his [health. He spoke unto] us of his building, which surely is ve[ry fair and] commodious, and after a little communication he told us that, thanked be God, the King's hig[hness] and his affairs went well forwards he remembered often times what your [Grace said unto] him at your being at Amyas, where [you told] him that when that he should have [by marriage] allied himself with the King's highness [his affairs] should prosper and go well forwar[ds. And he said your] Grace told him truth, for ever since [that period] his affairs have right well pr[ospered]. He also spoke to] us of the money lately sent r [and said he was] obliged unto the King's high[ness and unto your Gr]ace, for being so good d answering such letters as h[ad] had written to [the Pope's Hol]ines concerning the King's matter should be sent unto your Grace.

"[As for Cervia] and Ravenna, if it might be brought [about that the V]enetians would put those cities in def[ence] he would not fail but incontinently [restore them into] the Pope's hands, and that to induce the Ve[netians there]unto he would do all that should lie in him [and] also that the matters of Italy, proceeding as they [did, he] doubted not but that some good demonstration s[hould] proceed from the Pope, also concerning the common a[ffairs].

"From the Emperor he showed us that by divers w[ays he] is advertised that the Emperor now doth nothing [else but] consult where he may find sure harness for th[e duel, and] that the Emperor might be deceived though h[is w]er never so sure, for the Emperor must appoint the [time and] the place, but how and wherewith they shall fl[ight, he] said that the choice thereof was in himself. [He said] that albeit he for his honor could do no less than answer the Emperor with the cartel, as he did, yet he kn[ew well] enough that the thing was never likely to ta[ke effect] and that the default thereof should rest on t[he] [of the par]tye who should not lightly mow for the camp. He

"[As touching] to the cartel, he said refused to come upon this saul[ve]-[conduct] a sign that he hath in his m appointment of any camp acco[rding] rather some new cartel or some whereunto the French king said further audience. Of Naples h Mons. de Vadymont was departed th[is] life, and he] greatly lamented his death; howbeit [the duke] of Lorraine, his brother, knew nothing th[ereof] unto such time as it should be confirmed [by Mons. de] Lautree's letters, for it was not yet know[n] from Florence. Item, whereas lately [he had sent to] Mons. de Lautree 110,000 crowns, 1528.

. [being] advertised thereof issued in a great almost taken the said money, had better rescued, and how that at th was taken by the Spaniards, Count H . . .
 a captain of the Florentines' fote[men] taken by our part a couple of capit[ains] of the Emperor's party; howbeit he [said that he knew not their] names. Of Lombardy, he shew[ed] unto us] that there was already depart[ed] 5,000 or 6,000 of the p duke of Bronswyke, had to pass with his company in us to see a copy of the letter, and a[send the same] unto your Grace. We spake also with my [Lady, whose communic]ation was much of like matters, and [full of your Highnesses] goodness toward the King her son ly he and she reckoned themselves obliged [unto the King's highness] for the same, and likewise unto your G[race, to] whose good endeavor she attributeth a great p[art of] all their good fortune, wherein she rejoiced moe[he, as] she did also in the recovery of the King her son [to] health, showing unto us that she reckoned him [to be a]s clear from all diseases as ever he was, and [that it] is half a miracle to see him as he now is [in co]mparison of that he was seven or eight weeks ago [a]he desired us to recommend her unto your Grace, a[nd to d]esire and pray your Grace on her behalf that y[our Grace w]ould vouchsafe now to give the King her son [your best adv]ise and counsel what is now further to be do[ne] this retire of the lanceknights in Lombardy ally upon such good success as hourly is l[ooked for at] Naples.
 She showed us also of a letter w[ritten] [fro]m the Pope of his own hand, in the [which] or like and conform u[nto] he shall see his Holiness as n the one so also do well in al that the poor Pope, while the were in Italy, and in likelyhood in fear, and durst do nothing fear of those lanceknights by t ceased; she said she trusted to h[ave your adv]ice] in all their matters, specially in which she said the King her son then he did any other his particular good and as affectionate words as could it should seem at this present time th the Pope in better opinion and somew[hat] his causes than they have done in time [past. The] Great Master hath been very sore a[crased] first, for that your Grace complaineth of Bayonne of letters sent by Ichyngham, w that it shall never be proved that or any other sent thither by Ichyngham and that the Governor of Bayonne not do it for his life; and that such a purgation of that mat[ter] he knoweth right well, it sha[ll] touching this matter we letters from master Sylv[ester Darius]
 [Ichyn]gham. Another matter
 [ver]y sore with us was that your Gr[ace] words unto Mons. de Bayona [Gr]eat Master in some point should [have taken] some thing otherwise than well conce[rning] meaning as though your Grace should [have been] informed of him by some envious person [(althou]gh he would not speak it) peradventure, also we showed him that as touching us [letter]es of all ambassadors in the Court be seen, if [in any other m]annys letters were spoken more honor of him then [in ours] that then we would lose our heads. We showed hy[un also] that we knew your Grace so well, that we durst venture our heads that there was no such matter, and t[hat Mo]nsieur de Bayonne misunderstood your Grace. We s[aid] also t[hat] we knew for a surety that your Grace lov[y]d a[n]d favoured him of all men in France, a[n]d ke him, and desired him not to think the contr[ary]. He] sware great oaths that your Grace was the parson of all creatures living, after both princes h[e] honored and lov[y]d and ought his service unto, and that if [he had thought] that this matter were of that importance [he would not] fail but send some trusty friend of [his thither]e to make his purgation; and tongue out of his head."

1528.

[CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY]—cont.

Mutilated.

. . Aug. 4643. [CLERK and TAYLER] to WOLSEY.
Cal. D. x. 210.

B. M. " [Please it] your Grace there is not a [th]en the Great Master is, nor cannot be a person more devo[t]ed unto your] Grace than he is, nor that ha[th] spoken better things] of you, not only in our presence from whence it hath comen to o[ur] his procuring. It is truth that [he being] of counsaill, we have found him [not alway so conven]able to our demands as we have ee wherein egit personam suam, for being [chief of the] counsaill here, and having the whole. it was his part to stick, which the somewhat too much, (as in our opinion) u stomach trusting upon successes; ho[wbeit] malitia, sed magnitudini animi, cui potius venia danda est, quam expectand[um] a est vel] exigenda maturitas senilis consilii think that upon any our letters wherein mention hath been made, your Grace to impute any matter unto him in manner. In good faith the man and in manner, if we ourself displeasure, we could take than he doth, therefore our communication Grace, that ye be as ye in such your fortune ving of his degree." Fontayn [le Bleauxe] . . . Aug.

Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's good Grace.

19 Aug. 4644. CLERK and [TAYLER] to WOLSEY.
Cal. D. x. 204.

B. M. " that forasmuch [o]f the 3rd of this month w[e wrote of the d]eparture of the cardinal Camp[egius] hither to the Legate and divers pe[ople] by Sir Gregory Casalis, we made no [scruple to ask the] French king for his galleys, ne sp confirmation of the truce for there had been a gentleman sent hence the same. The news now here be [of a] surety the Cardinal Campegius is arry[ved] in Savoya, out of all danger both se [the] Legate here showeth me that he hath this [day letters from] Lyons, dated there the 14th day of this [month, and that he thinks the] said Cardinal is by this time undoubt[ly] or on this side Lyons hitherwards, so that [we expect] your Grace shall have him at Calais, within days at the furthest. This day we we[re again] with my Lady. They both rejoiced much in report of such kind and loving affect of theirs who came lately from your Grace had reported that he had 1528.

found and also in your Grace towards them much bound unto you both for the us of the arrival of my lord Nyece, in Savoya, and how [c]onduct him and to for fear of him a ee, but all that they can m [s]hall be ready to do the King's highness service]. whose affairs they say they [will repute no other]wise than they do their own, confe[ssing that of o]ngruence they ought so to do, seeing that [the King's highness]s esteemeth and taketh their affairs a[s his own.] The news from all parts be old and of sma[ll account, but th]e King showed us that the last letters from M[ilan] be of the 15th of the last month. Howbeit there [have come] other of his camp of the 23rd, containing n[o other] thing but only the confirmation of the safe a[rrival] of the money last thither sent, not without some d[ifficulty], as your Grace hath heard; also the recovery of M[onsieur de] Lautrec, who had been sore vexed with a fever, a[nd of Mons.] de Vademont, who was here noised to have been [dead]. The duke of Bromswyke was yet still in Myla[n, and was as ill] contented with the Emperor as any man could be. [He said the] lanceknights imperial were all departed, th[at] said Duke and Ant. de Lova both of them tog[ether ha]d not there remaining with them old and new [pa]sing the number of 2,000 lanceknights, where [th]e said Anthony de Lova had before the said in Italy 3,000 lanceknights with him touching Andrea Doria the speration of him his hands of the ande with other like be so hyg thought that the Emperor and An[drea] all, or not so soon agree upon th cause and because also they h John Jonchym whom they sent [into Italy] to the said Andrea Doria they be howbeit as in no great hope h[e will fore]cast the worst, and provide for the [The news of] Spain here is nothing, but that th to Madrill both the King and have now right good opinion that will now deal faithfully, uprightly and the King's highness in his matter. Th in very hearty and gentle manner rec unto your Grace. Surely the goodness of this the prince resteth in him. There is none [that] desireth more to be in your Grace's fav[or] than he doth, ne that take it more [hardly to be] out of the same.
 He hath eftsoons for the matter we wrote unto your Gra[ce] wherein we doubt not but either or else by such communication as de Bayonne, some thing shall for surely the m
 you of him, whereof were it not that he both e as much as he doth any man [r]eason that your Grace should somwh[at] doubt not but your Grace will. As f[or his] s[lackness in sending the confirmation] [ther]eunto he answered nothing, nisi quod bo[nus aliquando do]rmitat Homerus, that he himself was [a]nd desired your Grace therefore to take it paci[ently] the King his master's ministers in setting f[orth] master's matters were not always the quykk[est]
 19 Aug." Signed: "Your Grace is most h[umble] chapleyns and ser[vants], Jo. Batoni[ensis].
 [J. Tayler]."

Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's good Grace.

* Tayler's signature is entirely lost by the mutilation of the MS.

1528.

4645. CLERK to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

"Master Dean* dothe well and gothe to his boke very well." His expenses are excessive by reason of "reassort," which cannot now be eschewed. Wolsey must either increase his exhibition, remove him to some other study, or put him to commons in some other man's house. They all think the last plan best, under color of his learning French.

Hol., p. 1. Endd.: A clause of a letter of my lord of Bath concernyng the dene of Wellis.

19 Aug.

4646. JOHN CLERK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Master Dean* has more maturely debated his affairs with the wise men about him; in whose advice Clerk concurs, and thinks that now Master Dean may right well continue with such exhibition as Wolsey lately appointed. The fault was only a little evil husbandry in keeping his house, "wherein it is no marvel though scholars be not so shortly expert; but now they have learned. And your Grace will be so good unto them as to let them begin now the year, and abolishing the time past, to let them begin a new year, all woll be well enough, and that that is past shall be a good learning unto them. Surely the living here is very chargeable." Paris, 19 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: Concerning the dean of Wells.

20 Aug.

4647. THOMAS EARL OF ROCHFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Begs the living of Sonderych for Barlow, the bearer, on the promotion of Dr. Allen to Dublin. Pensherst, 20 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

4648. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.Love Letters, vii.

Has got her a lodging by my lord Cardinal's means, such as could not have been found hereabouts "for all causes," as the bearer will explain. Nothing more can be done in our other affairs, nor can all dangers be better provided against, so that I trust it will be hereafter to both our comforts; but I defer particulars, which would be too long to write, and not fit to trust to a messenger till your repair hither. I trust it will not be long "to-fore" I have caused my lord your father to make his provisions with speed.

20 Aug.†

4649. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.Le Grand, iii.
157.

The day Wolsey and I had our discussion we kept looking at each other sideways. Next day we were great friends, and he told me a long story of all he had done against the opinion of all England, and of what he was determined still to do, saying he required to use a terrible alchemy and dexterity in his affairs, for there were men who watched him so narrowly that they would take the first opportunity of calumniating him as being too strong a partizan of France;—that if his influence were diminished it would not be well for us, and that we should weigh well what he could honorably do, and not expect too much of him, for he could show Francis that this amity was by no means to his disadvantage, and Wolsey cared more for him than for any one but his master; that he was always ready to hear suggestions, and give his advice, either for the common good of both Kings, or of either of them; and that if better reasons are given him than those advanced by himself he will yield to them. He talked a whole day with me in this style, walking about his park, and hardly got any further. Another day he sent for me thither again, and declared his satisfaction at the confidence shown by Francis in not desiring any other surety for the contribution but his word; and after discussing other matters, part of which I shall mention presently, for about two hours, he spoke of you, commending most highly your devotedness to Francis,—then touched upon the news of Italy, and the danger it would be to Francis to lose all his allies through him, if they were not compelled at this time to shut themselves up with him by reason of the great forces there are at present, and various other things which he has already said to Morette. He said he had a fixed and rooted friendship to you, because you were so well inclined to the amity of these two Princes, of which he hoped to be a firm pillar while he lived; but he was much concerned to hear that you had used language a little unfriendly to him, while, for his own part, if you were his brother he could not have greater regard for you. I made such assurances on your part as I might, and tried to ascertain what was the matter (le menu que c'estoit), but could learn nothing further. At last I said I knew long ago, and for certain, that when it was a question about the despatch of Sylvester, my lord of Bath was so unreasonable and so angry that I should not wonder if one so devoted as you to the interests of his master expressed yourself a little unwontedly; but that I could answer for your entire affection for him. He told me he could say nothing further about it, and would not have mentioned it at all but for the great friendship he bore me. Has tried since to discover from what quarter this wind came. Suspects it was from the Chancery.* It is certainly not owing to anything that has passed through my hands, but I know many things leak out from thence in the packets of my lord of Bath, and I assure you nothing is said or done at the (French) court but they soon know it here.

* Winter.

† So dated by Le Grand in the margin at the head of the letter; but no date appears in the letter itself.

1528.

Mademoiselle Boulan has returned to court. The intercepted letters that you sent me about this matter have disquieted them (leur ont donné à penser). I have been told, in reference to what I wrote to you had been said to Wolsey more than a month ago, that I am a bad prophet. I fancy that the King is so far committed to it that none but God can get him out of it (que le Roy en est si avant, qu'autre que Dieu ne l'en scauroit oster). As to Wolsey, I do not believe he knows the state of matters (où il en est), however much he pretends to do so. I have been told on good authority, though I do not give it as certain, that, a little before this sweat, the King used most terrible language to him, because he seemed desirous to cool him, and shew him that the Pope would not consent to it. Sometimes in walking with me, while he spoke of his affairs, and of the course of his life up to that time, he has said to me that if God permitted him to see the hatred of these two nations extinguished and firm amity established, as he hopes it will shortly be, with a reform of the laws and customs of the country, such as he would make if peace came, and an assurance of the succession, especially if this marriage took place, and an heir male came of it, that he would then retire, and serve God to the end of his days, and that undoubtedly he would take the first opportunity to abandon politics. I think he sees that if this marriage is accomplished he will have much to do to maintain his influence; and when he sees himself in despair of it, he will give out that he retires voluntarily, "guarney de ce qu'il debvra estre;" and, in fact, for these three months past he has been building and administering in his bishopries, and completing his colleges with great diligence. I think his idea was, if this divorce took place, that he would fall back upon Madame Renée. At all events, I see that it will take place if nothing else happens; but I see little hope of peace coming from this side, for the Emperor suffering this injury I do not think he will accept it through their means, and perhaps you will see that he will tell Silvester that he will come to the said peace at the request of his uncle, if he will give up this purpose. Thus I think Wolsey will do all he can for Francis in good earnest. His great difficulty is that he knows his master to be the most avaricious man in the world, "et le vray moyen de l'avoir mis en credit, ce fut, comme sçavez, de luy dire qu'il le remettoynt en laye." Thus it is we must talk of expence (the Devil is in it !), for he will have to persuade him that all he does for you is for his own profit, especially as the rest of the Council are won over to the Emperor, both by natural inclination and out of opposition to him. He has, as you know, much influence, but the more he has the more he fears to lose it; and if he cannot show the King that he is doing every thing to enrich him, he will have lost a great defence. I think if he could have agreed with me honorably for the beginning of June he would have done it; but the King, as I imagine, meaning otherwise, he has reserved for himself this defence of his own private profit. You must also remember that though he leads the Council, whatever is once past he will never revoke it (ce qui est une fois passé, pour rien il ne viendra à l'encontre); and I doubt if he would dare, for if he were once to stumble there are plenty on the watch to pick him up (relever). Part of these things I have said to Morette.

* "qu'il vienne devers (qu. de devers ?) la Chancellerie.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

Fr.

20 Aug.

4650. JOHN HACKETT to WOLSEY.

Galba, B. ix.

177.

B. M.

Since he last wrote has received two letters from him, dated the 4th and 5th. Has delivered the King's letters patent, and two of Wolsey's, to my Lady, in presence of the cardinal of Liege, lord Berghes, Mons. de Palermo, the chancellor of Brabant, the treasurer and receiver general, and other lords. After my Lady had read the letters, declared his credence. She answered that there should be no fault in lady Vendosme's business. Has delivered Wolsey's letters to Lassaux and De Barris, and encloses their answers. De Barris wished Hackett to write that there is no need for Wolsey to show the Emperor's ambassador that he has written so amply, for my Lady has written to the ambassador to bid him deliver to Wolsey a copy of the accord, which De Barris incloses. To Hackett's request for the delivery of Harman and Akerston, she said it was a heavy matter, and she would deliberate with her council. Today she has asked for a declaration of how they have committed treason. Answered that by the acts of intercourse the King's letters were sufficient declaration. My lord of Palermo then said that it was necessary to know the particular offences. After much debate they granted that the prisoners should be kept till he can advertise the King.

The people of Antwerp make great petitions for Harman, saying that as he has been Burgess for many years, he ought to be exempt from the subjection of England. Thinks the King had better send some person to be joined in commission with Hackett, with instructions on the matter, or else that Wolsey should ask the Emperor to write to my Lady. Does not think there will be much difficulty about delivering Akreston. Encloses a letter from my Lady.

Supposes Wolsey has heard how my lord of Burre, with the Emperor's army, besieged Tylle, and were compelled to retreat. The margrave of Antwerp has told him secretly that the town will in no wise suffer Harman to be taken away till he has been convicted by the justice of the town, but they do not care about Akreston. These matters cannot be managed without money, and it would be better for Wolsey to give money there to be paid here, than to take it up here to be paid there. Machlyng, 20 Aug. 1528.

De Reux has returned from Spain with a number of ill-ordered Spaniards, some say 2,000. Thinks they will be sent to Gueldreland to fight with the cold, for winter is coming.

1528.

Hol., pp. 5. Add. Endd.

20 Aug. 4651. [JOHN DE LA SAULX to HACKETT.]

R. O.

He may write to the Cardinal in England that he has received the letters written by him to Will. des Barres and Jean de la Saulx. Those of La Saulx have been presented, but not yet those of Des Barres. Touching the affairs of the duchess of Vendôme of which Wolsey wrote, La Saulx replies that they are in good train. She has sent the bailly of Hen and Mons. de Hargerye, and they are only waiting the consent of France. 20 Aug.

Fr., p. 1. Endd. by Hackett: "1528. Answer fro Mestre Jehan de la Saux touchyng my Lady Vandome ys besenys."

20 Aug. 4652. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Confirmation by the King of the bull of Clement VII., exempting the college from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. Westm., 20 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum. Great Seal attached. A beautiful miniature of the King, the royal supporters, &c., with an architectural column by the side of the initial letter, and an angel bearing the letters "H. R."

21 Aug. 4653. MARGARET COUNTESS OF SALISBURY.

R. O.

Three bills of the expences of the countess of Salisbury's court at Cottingham; viz., of the court held 4 Nov. 19 Hen. VIII., 7s.; of the court held 24 April 20 Hen VIII., 11s. 6d.; and of the court held 21 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII., 7s. 4d. The latter two are signed: "Per me, Thomam Gryce, clericum curie."

4654. ——— to ———.

R. O.

His very good lady, my lady of Salisbury, is sued for an obligation of 5,000 marks, in which she stands bound to the King, though she is probably not aware of it. As her charge of attending on the Princess keeps her at a distance from the King so that she cannot sue in person, those about her do not like to trouble her. Requests his correspondent to move the King for her. Her counsel say the 5,000 marks were given by her to the King after the lands of the earldom of Salisbury were restored to her. Of these the lordship of Canford and other lordships, to the value of 500 marks a year, were parcel, and she took the profits until the late Sir Will. Compton, "for that he obtained not his purpose of her in marriage according to his suit," surmised to the King that they belonged to the dukedom of Somerset. On this she was commanded by my lord Cardinal "to amove her possession" till her right could be tried; which matter is still undetermined, though her counsel are clear as to her right. The 5,000 marks were granted by her to the King of her own free will, in the belief that he meant her to enjoy those lands, and 1,000*l.* were paid to my lord Cardinal. Hopes he will get Wolsey to stay the suit till the question of the title is determined.

Pp. 2.

21 Aug. 4655. JOHN CASALE, Prothonotary, to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 103.

B. M.

The French ambassadors and himself have never ceased to press upon the Signory the restitution of Cervia and Ravenna. The viscount of Turenne (Torrina) has also assisted them; and when he had asked leave to depart, they desired him to stay, saying that they had written on July 9 to the kings of England and France, and to Wolsey, asking them to procure "ut pontifex summus de ea re qu secret," for they were determined to act to him with justice, and would abide by the arbitration of the two Kings. Hearing this, went to them with the Viscount, and they repeated their promise.

1528.

JOHN CASALE, Prothonotary, to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Told them that the two Kings would consent to no composition which was not founded on the restitution of the two towns. Has written to the Pope. John Joachim has come into Italy to desire Casale and the French ambassadors to keep pressing the matter. They have also received letters from Francis, saying that, whatever the Venetians may desire or say, he is determined on the restitution. The Signory give no answer but that they have not yet heard from their ambassador. They had, however, promised to reply today.

Yesterday spoke to the Signory on the same subject, telling them that Gardiner, who had just come from England, says that the King and Wolsey are determined about it, and think they can justly make the request, considering their old friendship with Venice; but if it is refused, they will feel as offended as if two English cities had been taken by force. The King would not only use his own strength, but that of his allies, and had already shown what he could do, even with a less cause. He had often declared his intention of protecting the Church, had gone to great expence to deliver the Pope, and has persuaded the French king to assist him. It is well known that he intends the state of the Church to be restored, without any diminution; and if he proposes to compel the Emperor to do so, he will be much more displeased at failing to obtain this from a friendly power. If the Signory were a single prince he might hope to enjoy his possessions while living, and care nothing for the future; but the Signory is immortal, and should consider, not the events of the next two or three years, but what may happen in a century.

They answered that they knew all this, and would consider, but could not decide now. This morning the French ambassadors went to them to ask for a decision, but they will not give one till they hear from their ambassador. The duke of Urbino and St. Pól met three days ago to do some exploit. Part of the enemy were at Mariliano. There are only 2,000 Germans left. The rest refuse to go to Milan unless their demands are granted. The forces at Naples are in the same state as before, but there is much disease. Sends a copy of his brother's letters to Vannes, that Wolsey may see the state of the Pope. 21 Aug. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 6.

21 Aug. 4656. SIR FRANCIS BRYAN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

"I dyd intyttyll shuche things as your Grace dyd gyve me in charge." As for the horsemen of Calais, who are to meet the Cardinal at Monstrell, in my foolish opinion it will be more honorable if Sir John Walloppe, marshal of Calais, were employed for that purpose. He can well be spared, as he is not coming to court these four or six weeks. "I wonderston that Sir John Walloppe will be here, or else your Grace shall have him at Leds till Monday." London, 21 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

R. O.

2. Instructions given by Wolsey on the King's behalf to Sir Francis Brian, whom the King now sends to France.

The King is informed by letters from Dr. Stephyns and Sir Gregory Cassniles how the Pope is sending hither cardinal Campegius, who took shipping at Cornet, the 24th July last, for Marseilles. By this time he is probably past Lyons, and well on his way to Paris. Brian is sent with a mule for the Cardinal's use to Calais, where he shall instruct the Deputy and Council to furnish him with as many spears and horsemen as they can spare; and with these shall pass from Calais to Boulogne, and so by Monstrell and Abbeville to Paris, unless they meet the Cardinal on the way. On meeting him he is to thank him for his diligence on behalf of the King and Wolsey, to deliver the King's letters and the mule, and conduct him to Calais, accompanied by the said spears and horsemen.

1528.

If he arrive at Paris before the Cardinal, he is to visit the bishop of Bath and Master of the Rolls, and go with them to the French king, to whom he shall deliver letters from the King and Wolsey, thanking him in both their names "that it would please the same to send a gentleman of his privy chamber hither into England to see, know and understand of the prosperous estate and health of them both; which (lauds be given unto God!) have escaped the great and furious danger of the pestilent plague of sweat lately visiting the realm of England; which plague at this day is well assuaged, and little or nothing heard thereof in any place." He and the ambassadors shall also express the satisfaction of the King and Wolsey at hearing of Francis's convalescence, and of the success of his affairs in Italy under count Sempoll; which they expect, if no time be lost, will altogether fulfil the French king's purpose at the despatch of the said Count thither, seeing that the Almaines are already fled, and that the marquis of Gwaste, who is now made captain, is as yet a stranger to them, and unfurnished with money.

They are also to urge Francis to entertain Andrea Dorea in such wise as not to give him any occasion to join the Emperor. Even if his demands be unreasonable, they had better be acquiesced in for a time, so as to prevent Naples being revictualled while the French are lying at siege before it.

After this they are to repair to the French king's mother, to whom they shall deliver the King and Wolsey's letters, declaring their advice about Italy, &c. They shall ask her mediation with Francis to provide Campeggio, who has entered France by water, with mules and horses to convey him and his train to Paris.

The bishop of Bath shall then take his leave of the French king and his mother, and return to England in the Cardinal's company, leaving the Master of the Rolls behind him.

If on Campeggio's coming to Paris he be in need of horses, the Master of the Rolls shall supply him with such as he has in those parts, to be sent back again with some of his own servants.

Pp. 17. In Cromwell's hand, with corrections in Wolsey's.

21 Aug. 4657. JOHN HACKET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The bearer, John Craen, comes "dedyr" at this time for some "erontts" (errands) of his own, which the bailly can show him, concerning the heretics. When friar West comes, will order himself according to Wolsey's instructions. Mechlin, 21 Aug. 1528.

Hof., p. 1. Add. Endd.

22 Aug. 4658 LEE to TUKE.

R. O.

On 29 July, sent a packet to Bilboa for Tuke, containing letters of our excuse and of other things. Reserved the doubles to be sent by another hand, and will communicate what he has to say when he and Tuke meet. Has advertised him of what occurred, but as it was of no importance forbore to write to the Cardinal. Hopes things will come to a good end. Has no conveyance by France. The way of Fonternabia is not yet opened to armed merchants. Are expecting the General of the Observants, now cardinal,* with a great commission. "I have been dull sithen the arrival of your letters. I pray you recomfort me, if you can. In the mean season, gloria mea est testimonium conscientie, &c." Deferred sending to Bilbao till they came from the Court. Forgot to put the ciphers in Wolsey's letters. Valladolid, 22 Aug. 1528.

* Francesco Quizon.

1528.

LEE to TUKE—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd. The last ciphered passage deciphered by Tuke.

23 Aug. 4659. RIC. [NIKKE], BISHOP OF NORWICH, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

As Wolsey's kinsman, Winter, is possessed of the archdeaconry of Norfolk, asks that the bearer, his chaplain, Edm. Steward, may enjoy the archdeaconry of Suffolk, which the former now holds. Would be glad of the promotion of Dr. Legh, and would not be so desirous for that of the bearer, if he had half as many promotions as Wolsey has. If he misses this, would not probably be able to give him any other during his life, and he daily does the Bishop good service, and deserves well for his conditions and learning, as Dr. Stephen could show Wolsey if he were with him. Asks for an answer by the bearer. Hoxne, 23 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's good grace. Endd.

23 Aug. 4660. GEORGE HAMPTON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Between Canterbury and Dover, met a scholar of Oxfordshire going to Paris, who told him that the benefice of Melton in Oxfordshire, in the gift of the dean of Wells, was fallen vacant. The Dean promised him the next vacant, for a boy of his at school, James Hampton, and he asks Wolsey to give it to him. Dover, 23 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's good grace. Endd.

24 Aug. 4661. SIR FRANCIS BRYAN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 93.

Had never a worse passage. Was ten hours at sea in a boat of six ton. Could not make Calais, as the wind was E.N.E., and ran the boat aground at Sandgate, and were nearly lost. When they landed, at 10 at night, were fain to hire a wagon, and reached Calais at midnight. Delivered Wolsey's letter to the Deputy. Have arranged to set forward the spearmen and horse. Is at Boulogne. Did not find Dew Bees, but his deputy, who brought him to his lodging with many gentlemen. The mayor sent him a present of wine, and offered to put the town under his command. Intends to leave tomorrow at three in the morning. Hopes to be at Paris on Wednesday night or Thursday early. Begs Wolsey will excuse his rude hand, as his secretary has fallen ill. Boulogne, 24 Aug.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

24 Aug. 4662. HOCHSTETTER and the GRESHAMS,

R. O.

1. Joachim Hochstetter to Thomas Cromwell.

Has received his letter about the matter of Grexam. If my brother has not complied with your decree, it is no great wonder; for, owing to my absence, I had not written to him of it. I have done so since, as I believe you must be by this time informed. Will, however, write to him again an open letter, which I have not time to do at present, as I am writing to him of other matters, but will send to you tomorrow both one and the other without fail. "Ex Anthoncorte," 24 Aug. 1528. Signed.

Thinks Gresham has no cause yet to complain of breach of promise.

Ital., p. 1. Add.: "D. Thomæ Cromwel amico singularissimo, Londini." Endd.

1528.

R. O.

2. [Richard Gresham] to Wolsey.

Solicits Wolsey's favor in a dispute with Joachim Hoegsteter, "merchant of August in Germany," who covenanted "with me and my brother John Gressam" for delivery of 11,000 qrs. grain in the port of London. Demanded fulfilment of the contract on his arrival in England, but he put them off till he had "eloynd himself beyond sea," and on our proceeding against his factor, he, being in Brabant, accused us to the King, who appointed a commission to examine the subject of dispute. Owing, however, to Joachim's absence, nothing has been done. Urge that the commission may report as soon as possible that they may repair to the approaching mart [at Antwerp] without molestation from Joachim.

In Wriothesley's (?) hand, pp. 5.

R. O.

3. Joachim Hoegsteter to Henry VIII.

His vindication against the calumnies of Ric. and John "Grassen," showing that the detention of the grain was by order of the authorities of Nieupoort in the Low Countries, on a rumor that England and France were going to make war upon them; that he had returned to Burgundy; that the Greshams had in his absence denounced him as a bankrupt who had fled from England with other people's money, and tried all they could to do him injury, so that he was defamed all over Spain, Italy, France, Hungary, &c., and was obliged to sell a mass of silver 5,000*l.* below its value,—that he recovered his credit by paying ready money.

The Greshams accused him of lending money to the Geldrois for the war against the Emperor, "ejus prassulis ductu, quem ob nominis sui venerationem nunc non nomino." People are still angry at him in Burgundy because the Greshams said he had been endeavoring to establish a mart for English wool in France to their prejudice; and he would have been punished for it but that he proved his innocence before the Burgundian senate. He has suffered a loss of 30,000*l.*, of which he demands restitution.

Lat., pp. 19. Add.

R. O.

4. Bill of sale, acknowledged by Joachim Hossetir, in the name of Ambrose and John Hossetir, brothers, showing that Ric. Gresham, merchant of London, has sold to the said Ambrose and John 1,330 pieces of carseys, of which he has delivered 500, and is to deliver 500 more at the next Easter mart, and the remainder at the fair at Whitsuntide following. He has also sold them 100 English cloths, called plonketts, to be delivered by instalments. In payment for which goods the said Hossetirs are to deliver at London wheat of Ostelande to the value of 3,200*l.* gr., money of Flanders, at 19*s.* great the qr., measure of England, by the first fleet that comes from Ostelande, which is to be twenty days before or after Easter next if the weather serve, otherwise the payment to be in money;—one third at the fair at Whitsuntide, the rest at that of St. Martin. These presents, drawn by Barnard Cavalcante, at Antwerp, to be signed and sealed by the said Ambrose and John. Dated 31 Dec. 1527.

P. 1. Endd. in the same hand: "The first bargain is of 3,368 quarters wheat.—Richard Gresham."

R. O.

5. Bill of sale, similarly acknowledged by Joachim Hoster, that Ric. Gresham has sold to Ambrose and John Hoster 100 "coxsaill" cloths at 7*l.* great the piece, 200 pieces of carseis at 2*l.* great and had paid them 500*l.* gr. money, making in all 1,600*l.* gr., money of Flanders. In payment for which the Hosteretirs are to deliver daily at London 700 qrs. of wheat at their own risk, and 100 qrs. by the middle of Lent, at 19*s.* gr. the qr., and 200 qrs. rye of Osteland at 15*s.* the qr. The rest, amounting to 1,600*l.* gr., Joachim promises to deliver at London, in wheat of Ostland, by the first fleet, at 19*s.* gr. the qr., at his own risk. Dated 31 Jan. 1527.

P. 1. Endd. in same hand: "The second bargain is of 1526 quarters wheat and 200 quarters rye.—Richard Gresham."

1528.

HOCHSTETTER and the GRESHAMS—cont.

R. O.

6. Duplicate of the preceding.

R. O.

7. Bill of sale by Richard Gresham to "Yonker Joachim Hosteter," of 200 "coxsall" cloths for 7*l.* Flemish the piece, 500 carsies at 40*s.* gr. Fl. the piece, as good as he received of Gresham "now this Cold mart," of which he shall deliver 100 coxsallez and 300 carsies in the next Singson mart at Antwerp; the rest in the Balmes mart, "as far as the English merchants then do ship," or, if they have no shipping then, in the Colde mart in 1528, —on condition that if there be war between England and the Emperor it shall be delivered at Gravelines. In return for which Joachim is to deliver a third part in quicksilver at 19*d.* Fl. the pound; another third in Ostriche rye at 15*s.* gr. Fl. the qr.; 600 qr. Ostriche wheat at 19*s.* gr. the qr.; and the rest in barley at 13*s.* gr. Fl. the qr. The corn to be delivered at London on 30 May next.

P. 1. Endd. in the same hand: "The 3*d.* bargain is of 1,066 quarters rye and 600 quarters wheat and 354 quarters barley, and as much quicksilver as shall amount to 800*l.* Fl.—Richard Gresham."

R. O.

8. Statement of Joachim Hochstetter touching his transaction with the Greshams of the 14 Feb. 1527(–8). Signed.

Dutch, p. 1.

R. O.

9. Statement of the deficiency in four bargains for wheat made by Ric. Gresham.—Total, 7,475 qr. 6 b. 3 p., on which the profit would have been 3*s.* 4*d.* a qr. Total, 1,245*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* There is also quicksilver lost to the amount of 300*l.* or more.

P. 1. Endd.

R. O.

10. Statement of the deficiency of John Gresham's four bargains with Hochstetter:—1,731 q. wheat, at 31*s.* Fl. = 1,096*l.* 6*s.* st. 966 q. barley, at 13*s.* and 13*s.* 6*d.* Fl. = 429*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* st. 640 q. rye, at 15*s.* Fl. = 320*l.* st. Total, 1,845*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*

P. 1.

R. O.

11. Alternatives proposed by Ric. Gresham for the fulfilment of a bargain with Hogesteter about wheat, quicksilver, and vermilion, some of the latter being lost at sea. The price named for quicksilver is 12*d.* Fl. a lb., and for vermilion 14*d.* Fl. the lb.

In Cromwell's hand (?) Pp. 2.

R. O.

12. For Joachim Owsteter of Augsburg.*

Draft bill for a patent licensing him and his partners who have not hitherto resided in England to export woollen cloths, "kareseis," tin, lead, hides, &c. for the term of [10] † years. [No date].

Lat., pp. 5.

25 Aug.

4663. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 106.

B. M.

Extract from a letter of Gregory [Casale], dated Viterbo, 25 Aug.

Lautrec died of fever on the 17th. The marquis of Saluzzo, who was his lieutenant, is appointed captain-general, and all the leaders have sworn obedience to him. Two days ago Renzo di Cere left Aquila for Naples, having garrisoned it with 2,000 foot. The abbot of Farfa will also go thither with a good body of troops. This morning the French ambassadors wrote urgently to St. Pöl to leave the expedition of Milan and hasten to Naples, for the pestilence has destroyed nearly two thirds of the French forces, and they have moved three miles off, so that the Spaniards begin to come out.

* "De Augusta in Alamannia."

† The term is at first blank in MS., but is afterwards mentioned.

1528.

The best informed do not think the Imperialists can attack the French, for they have plenty of provisions, and are in a stronger place than Naples. Besides the loss of Lautree, the King's councillor is seriously ill, to the great disadvantage of the army.

D. Joachim is ill here with tertian fever. He intended to go to Venice to urge the restitution of the cities. If the Venetians do not now fear the Pope, they never will.

Lat., in Vannes' hand, pp. 2.

25 Aug. 4664. GEO. WALDEGRAVE

His will, 6 July 1523. Proved, 25 Aug. 1521. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 630.

26 Aug. 4665. CLERK, BISHOP OF BATH, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Have word from Lyons that Campeggio arrived there on Saturday last. Wrote to Wolsey yesterday, answering his letters of the 21st. The courier is with Campeggio by this time. Paris, 26 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

26 Aug. 4666. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 107.

B. M.

Extract from a letter of Gregory [Casale], dated Viterbo, 26 Aug.

Wrote already that the suspicions rising from the letters of Muse[t] were groundless. The Pope said that he told Musset, the Emperor's agent here, that he was nourishing a false hope. Is ill with his labor in trying to hasten Campeggio's journey. The Pope sends Giacomo Salviati, or one of his secretaries, twice a day to see him, and is very kind. When the Rhodian galleys were at Piombino, they had special orders from the religion to beware of Doria, and therefore determined to go by Cape Corso.

Tried to persuade the Legate to go by these galleys instead of by a Venetian galley, but he refused.

The Rhodians then set sail, hoping to arrive at Marseilles in four days. Remained in the Venetian galley to sail to Porto Venere, that he might advise Dr. Stephen to go to Lyons. Was caught by a storm, and suffered shipwreck. Asks his correspondent to commend his poverty and his brother's to the King and Wolsey.

Lat., in Vannes' hand, pp. 2. Endd. at p. 110.*

26 Aug. 4667. SIR ROBERT WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received his letter yesterday by Sir Francis Bryan. Will leave nothing undone. Received this morning letters for him from Sir Francis. Calais, 26 Aug. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Sealed. Add. Endd.

27 Aug. 4668. CHARLES V.

R. O.

Confirmation of the eight months' truce with the Low Countries, made at Hampton Court on the 15 June, between Don Ynigo de Mendoza, Will. des Barres and John de la Sauch, for the Emperor, with Tunstal and Tuke for England, and Du Bellay for France. Madrid, 27 Aug. 1528. Signed.

Fr.

27 Aug. 4669. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has this day received a letter from Mr. Broke, chief baron of the Exchequer, conveying Wolsey's orders that he should speak with the parson of Lanham to learn how and by whom the matter came to his knowledge, and to see that the King's peace be kept. Has done all he could, both by persuasions and threatenings, but he will name no one; "so that I think, surely he for malice, and upon no ground, did untruly imagine the said tale; for, on my truth, I believe there be no subjects within the realm better contented, nor that less do use any unfitting words, than they do and have done sith their great offence committed. And surely I have so good espial amongst them that I believe if any such words should have be spoken, I should have had knowledge thereof as soon as the parson." Will, however, speak with him, and see if he can get anything out of him. Stoke, 27 Aug. Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

1528.

NORFOLK to WOLSEY—cont.

27 Aug. 4670. SUFFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

John Colby, the bearer, was robbed by the Spaniards on St. George's Day. He has found the culprits in Sealand, and brought them before lady Margaret, to obtain restitution. Eye, 27 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

28 Aug. 4671. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

Cal. B. i. 33.

B. M.

Complains that Francis Bothvile and Adam Hoppare merchants of Edinburgh, are not able to carry salmon and salt fish to London, to Stributhe* fair, and other places, as they used to do, because Berwick claims to be the staple of salt fish. Stirling, 28 Aug. Signed.

Add.: "To the right excellent," &c., "our derrest uncle and brother ye king of England." Endd.

P. 1.

28 Aug. 4672. [SANGA] to CARDINAL SALVIATI.

Lettere
di Principi,
n. 122.

Gio. Gioachino [di Passano, lord of Vaux,] has used many arguments to persuade the Pope that it is the French king's intention never to restore Naples to the Emperor, not even to release his sons. The Pope does not credit this, as he believes Madame (Louise) would counsel the restitution of Naples, out of the affection she has for her grandchildren. We desire to be made acquainted with the French king's designs, and to know whether it is still possible, as you believe, that the king of England is reconciled to the French king's remaining lord of Naples; also, what interest the English have in these Italian affairs besides the abasement of the Emperor; for this knowledge would afford us great light in conducting the negotiations with Gio. Gioachino (Joachim). Italian news. Viterbo, 28 Aug. 1528.

Ital.

29 Aug. 4673. T. DUKE OF NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Wishes to know if the house of Fylstowe, of the Duke's foundation, is really to be suppressed for the college at Ipswich, leaving it in fee-farm to him and his heirs from the college, as he told him.

Asks where he will be at the beginning of next term. Stoke, 29 Aug.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

29 Aug. 4674. ROGER LASSELLES to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. III. 289.

B. M.

St. P. iv.
309 (note).

Informs him of the variance between the king of Scots and the earl of Angus. Last Wednesday at noon Archd. Douglas was at Edinburgh with all the household servants of Angus, and the abbot of Holyrood house, and Geo. Douglas. He was surprised at dinner by Maxwell with a small company, and his men "was scalded in the towne." They were fain to get away on horseback, and are all banished from Edinburgh. Angus is at Tentallen, and has sent the abbot of Holyrood House to the writer to know if they may be "resett" at Norham. Promised them a chamber in the outer ward till the Earl's pleasure were known. Expects them daily, for they cannot stay in Scotland, "and the lord of Buccleuch should have taken the town with the lord Maxwell, and he came not tonight." The King entered the town on Friday or Saturday. Angus is to be attainted in this Parliament, and they are discussing who shall have his lands. A servant is coming from Angus to the Earl. Alawick, 29 Aug.

1528.

Pp. 2. Headed: "The copy of the first letter to my Lord from Roger Lasselles." Endd.: "The copy of a letter of Master Lassellis to the earl of Northumberland of 29th of August."

30 Aug. 4675. FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sends by the King's order some of the venison he killed yesterday. As the King will continue to send him venison while in the Forest,* will keep the deer he promised him till the end of the grass season. Easthampstead, Sunday, 30 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

[30 Aug.] 4676. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. i. 325.

The King sends you the greatest red deer killed by him or any of his hunters this year. Yesterday he took great pains in hunting, from nine in the morning till seven at night, but could only kill this one. I shall not fail to wait upon you after the King's coming to Oking. Easthampstead, this Sunday. Signed.

Add.

30 Aug. 4677. WOLSEY to the BISHOP OF WORCESTER and EDWARD LEE.

R. O.

A complaint has been made to the King by Robert More, of Alburgh, Suffolk, owner of a ship called the Cuthbert of Alburgh, Benet Bartram, master, that it had been robbed off the coast of Brittany, about Easter last, by Martin Destayne and other Spaniards of Biscay. They are to endeavor to obtain restitution from the Emperor. Hampton Court, 30 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

30 Aug. 4678. SIR WILL. EURE to DR. BELLYSIS.

R. O.

I send the 20*l.* due at Christmas and Midsummer last to "my good lord and yours." I beg you to speak to my Lord, that I may have a receipt. When I was arrested "at my late being above," for the accounts of the sheriffwick of Northumberland, my Lord caused me to be released; but processes have since come down against me. I beg you to obtain of my Lord the King's special pardon, for which I will bestow 20*l.* "for the furniture of one ambling gelding to his Lordship." My brother, Sir Geo. Conyers, has a suit to my Lord for mitigation of his fine "anent his being of one jury in Yorkshire." My Lord has promised to be good to him. He is "a young gentleman, and very bare of substance." Newcastle, 30 Aug. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

31 Aug. 4679. CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Yesterday Francis sent us word of the death of Lautrec, and wishes us to be at court today, to prevent the inconveniences that are likely to follow. Spoke with him after dinner, with the ambassadors of Venice, Milan and 1528.

CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY—cont.

Florence. His Majesty told us he had heard from the Marquis of Saluce that Lautrec died of the plague, after 24 hours' sickness. Francis greatly regrets his loss. He has ordered his captains to pay obedience to Saluce, who thinks he shall be able to take Naples. In that town there are not more than 5,000 or 6,000 foot and 300 horse, and in Lautrec's camp 10,000 foot and no horse. When we marvelled, he assured us there were not 80 horses in the camp. Francis also assured us that St. Poull should march forwards to Naples, as if that should keep Naples from rebellion. Their affairs are in some disorder. He has written to the Florentines for reinforcements, and sent Morette with ships from Marseilles. The French army in Normandy has been much beaten by weather, and he reckons it of little account. At this time of the year he thinks that Andrea Doria can do little hurt. The Venetians wish to detain part of St. Poull's army. No resolution was come to at their conference. St. Germain's, 31 Aug. Signed.

P.S. in Clerk's hand.—The Cardinal leaves Lyons today or tomorrow. "I have borrowed for him of the Pope's legate a fair well-trimmed and furnished mule, and four carriage mules; the which, with 20 horses of mine own, and four carriage mules also of mine own, and 10 horses of the Master of the Rolls, I shall send forwards tomorrow towards Orleans." St. Germain's, 31 Aug.

Pp. 5. Add. Endd.

31 Aug. 4680. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 108.
B. M.

Extract from letters of the Prothonotary Casale, dated Venice, 31 Aug.

In his last letters to Wolsey, told him of their demands to the Signory on the Pope's behalf. They put off answering till the 27th, and then a written answer was read, by which, after many excuses, they refused to restore the cities, and desired the viscount of Turenne (Turini) to ask the Pope in their name to find some way of settling the matter, and to remind him that all Romagna was then despaired of, and of all they have done for his liberation. The Viscount and his colleague complained of their having detained him so long by hope, and of their insulting their master by saying they would do what he thought best. The Doge added that they meant to keep the cities until the Pope showed better proofs. Spoke of the services the king of England had rendered to them, and his great expence in preserving Italy. It was no use, and something else must be done, or the cities will never be recovered.

Lat., Vannes' hand, p. 1.

4681. [WOLSEY to ———.]

Vit. B. x. 50.
B. M.

It is impossible to express how much this king (Henry) was moved when he knew, from the letters of the prothonotary Casale and yours, as well as from the relation of Stephen [Gardiner], the obstinacy and faithlessness of the Venetians in refusing to give up Ravenna and Cervia to the Pope. He has told the ambassadors of the Signory that he intends to use more severe persuasion than hitherto, and, if that has no effect, will avenge this insult to the Holy See, jointly with the French king. Knows that he can easily persuade the King to do this, as he feels and expresses that he owes all the aid he can give to the Pope.

Draft, in Vannes' hand, Lat., pp. 2.

4682. [WOLSEY to CLEMENT VII.]

Vit. B. x. 65.
B. M.

Professes his gratitude and readiness to serve the Pope. The King is very indignant at the answer given by the Venetians, for whose sake the 1528.

* Pope has suffered so much, and he is determined to revenge the insult. Desires credence for Sir Gregory.

Lat., draft, pp. 2, in Vannes' hand.

4683. [WOLSEY to ANDREA GRITTI, DOGE OF VENICE.]

Vit. B. x. 66.

B. M.

The King and he will do their best to assist the League. He must know how necessary the Pope's favor is for their success. Urges the restoration of Ravenna and Cervia, which his ambassadors say were only taken to protect them from the Imperialists. The Pope's anger at their want of faith will injure the common cause. The King writes more fully to his ambassador. London.

Draft, Lat., pp. 2, in Vannes' hand.

4684. HENRY VIII. to [ANDREA GRITTI, DOGE OF VENICE].

Vit. B. x. 71^a.

B. M.

Urges the restitution of Ravenna and Cervia to the Pope. The French king writes on the same subject.

Draft by Vannes, Lat., p. 1.

[Aug.]

Arch. of Univ. of Cambridge.

Fiddes' Coll.

p. 212.

4685. The DIVORCE.

"A memorial of such communication as my lord Legate's Grace had with the Queen's almoner." †

First, explaining his wish to exterminate such heresies as were daily increasing in Cambridge, and rather employ his commissaries than the bishops of Rochester and Ely for that purpose, he told the Almoner that he was to be sent there for his reputation, his former employment in like manner, and his credit as master of a college. The Almoner, excusing himself for omitting to visit his Grace, desired that he might have twenty days' respite, in order to perform his residence at Windsor. Then Wolsey suddenly asked him what tidings he had heard. He answered none, except the bruit of a legate coming to England. The Cardinal asked what the Queen thought of his coming, and for what purpose. He replied, that she was fully persuaded that he only came to decide the matrimonial cause between her and the King.

Then, dwelling much on the benefits which the King had done to the Almoner, and his obligation to be true and faithful, Wolsey adjured him, on his fidelity, and under the seal of confession, to keep their communication secret, and to let him know what were the Queen's intention and purpose in this matter. The Almoner, protesting his devotion, answered that he had heard the Queen often say that, if in this cause she might enjoy her natural defence and justice, she trusted it would take such effect as would be acceptable to God and man. First, because she was never known by prince Arthur. Secondly, because neither of the judges were competent, being the King's subjects, and she had never been heard in her defence. Thirdly, she had no indifferent counsel. Finally, she had two bulls in Spain, removing all impediments to the marriage.

Hereupon Wolsey replied that he marvelled not a little at her indiscreet and ungodly purposes and sayings, which caused him to conceive that she was neither of such perfection nor virtue as he had once thought her to be. He then entered into a disproof of her first statement, showing that they had lived together as man and wife three quarters of a year, and referred to proofs of the consummation. It was generally believed in Henry VII.'s time that she was pregnant; and therefore he would not allow the present King to take the title of Prince. Secondly, if she refused the judgment of the Legates appointed by the Pope, she would incur the hatred of his Holiness and of all Christian people, and bring a stigma on all learned men in England; for if the cause could not be judged here, it could not be impartially decided anywhere else. Thirdly, as to having counsellors from Spain, it was not meet to make any stranger privy to the cause; and therefore she should not insist on so frivolous a petition, but be content to employ such learned men as are here in the realm. If she persevered in the contrary course, she would only set forth her own sensual affection, and desire what the law had justly condemned.

† Rob. Shorton, D.D., master of Pembroke Hall, dean of Stoke, Suffolk, and dean of the Cardinal's chapel, and employed by him in discovering and inviting scholars at Cambridge to enter Wolsey's college at Oxford.

1528.

The DIVORCE—cont.

Aug.

4686. ERASMUS to the BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

Er. Ep. xxix.
38.

A letter of compliments on sending him his exposition of Psalm lxxxv.
Basle, Aug. 1528.

Lat.

4687.

GRANTS in AUGUST 1528.

Aug.

GRANTS.

1. John Herfert, yeoman of the Crown. To be keeper of the park of Yarnewood, Salop, an office lately held by Sir Wm. Compton. Ampthill, 24 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 1 Aug.—P.S.

1. Ric. Verney. Farm of the rectory of Asseby Lygear, Northt., forfeited by Wm. Catesby, who had a lease of the same from Tho. Frysby, late prior of Laund, Leic., for the term of 99 years, whereof 55 years are still to come; at the annual rent of 16 marks. Greenwich, 11 May 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 1 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

4. Tho. Tofte, merchant tailor, of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Ampthill, 21 July 20 Hen. VIII. Teste Hampton Court, 4 Aug.—P.S.

5. Jas. Fisher of Eltham, Kent, bricklayer. Pardon for having killed Wm. Alec at Eltham. Ampthill, 19 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 5 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 27.

6. *Sir Wm. Kyngeston. To be steward of the manors of Claredon or Claverdon, Lyghterum, Moreton, Brayles, Barkseswell, Bereford, and Kynyton, Warw., with 2d. a day for each manor. Also to be bailiff and provost of the manors of Moreton and Lyghterum, with 4d. a day in each office, as held by Sir Wm. Compton. To be keeper also of the woods of Barkseswell, Claredon or Claverdon, Henley-in-Ardern, and Kyngton, with 2d. a day for each office. And to be master of the Hunts in Henley park in Ardern and Claredon park, with the usual fees. Del. Hampton Court, 6 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 26.

6. Sir Wm. Kingstoun. To be keeper of the manor and park of Wanstede, Essex, lately held by Wm. Cary, dec., with fees of 2d. a day, and to be chief steward of the town and hundred of Tewkesbury, Glouc., with the appointment of a bailiff in the said hundred, as lately held by Sir Wm. Compton. Del. Hampton Court, 6 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 29.

6. Anth. Kyngeston, a steward of the King. To be keeper of Sedbury park, Glouc., an office lately held by Sir Francis Poyntz, dec., and lord Berkeley. Del. Hampton Court, 6 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 15.

6. Hen. Jernygan, steward to princess Mary. To be constable of Gloucester castle, vice Sir Wm. Compton. Del. Hampton Court, 6 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 15.

8. Wm. Dancaster, M.A. Presentation to the church of Ampthill, Line. dioc., void by death. Del. Hampton Court, 8 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

8. Dorothy Fyloll, widow. Licence to alienate the manors of Sellyng juxta Horton Monks, and Harynge, Kent, and certain land in Romeney Marsh, near the lands of John Fosse, and 7l. 13s. 4d. rent in the towns, parishes, and fields of Sellyng, Lydene, Ostryngangre, Horton, Wodechurche, Romeney Marshe, and Demechyrch, Kent, to Sir Wm. Stourton and Sir Thos. Trenchard, Wm. Uvedale, Hen. Trenchard, Rob. Morton, Alf. Fitzjames, Geo. Chalcoate, Geo. Strangwyah, Humph. Gay, and Wm. Harte. Westminster, 8 Aug.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 7.

10. For ———.† Presentation to the parish church of Bramston, London dioc., void by death. Hampton, 10 Aug.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

* The name is unintelligible on the S.B.

† Blank on the roll.

1528.

Aug.

GRANTS.

12. Angel Uke and Henry Archer. To be messengers of the receipt of the Exchequer, with same wages as Ric. Easingwold had; on surrender of a grant of Hen. VII. to the said Angel alone. Le Moore, 10 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 12 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

12. Walt. Walshe, page of the Privy Chamber. To be master of the hunt and keeper of the deer in Busheley park, Worc., with the usual fees out of the lordship of Busheley, as enjoyed by William Tracy. Also herbage and pannage of the said park, and a cottage with half a virgate of land adjoining Busheley, which the said William lately held by grant from Henry VII. Hampton Court, 12 Aug.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 33.

16. John Ford, the King's foodary in co. of Devon. Custody of the possessions, of the annual value of 20s., in Rockley, in the parish of Highbury, Devon, late of Brian Travers, who held of the King as of the castle of Barnestaple, parcel of the duchy of Exeter; during the minority of George Travers, s. and h. of the said Brian; with wardship of the said heir. Del. Westminster, 16 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 31.

19. Walt. Walshe, page of the Privy Chamber. To be constable and keeper of Sudeley castle and park, Glouc., and master of the hunt of deer in the said park; constable and keeper of the castle of Elmeley castell alias Elmeley Bredon, Worc., and of the park, lodge and warren there; steward of the manor of Elmeley and master of the hunt of deer in the said park and warren of Elmeley castell; also herbage and pannage of the said parks of Sudeley and Elmeley and the warren of Elmeley; with 30d. a year in the said offices in Sudeley, payable by the abbot and convent of Wyndesore, out of the fee farm of the said lordship of Sudeley; and with the same fees in the office of Elmeley castell as Sir William Compton enjoyed. Amphill, 10 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—Teste. Hampton Court, 19 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 14.

20. Ric. Lee, page of the King's cups (obbarum). Annuity of 6d. which the abbot and convent of Shrewsbury are bound to pay for the forest or "haya" called Lethwood, Salop, granted to Ric. Crump, deceased, and John Pole, in survivorship. Amphill, 29 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 20 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 22.

20. Edw. Goldisborowe. To be a serjeant-at-arms, with 12d. a day. Amphill, 16 July 20 Hen. VIII. Teste. Hampton Court, 20 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

20. Wm. Thynn, chief clerk of the Kitchen. To be bailiff of the town and keeper of the park of Beauldry, Salop, vice Sir Wm.

Compton. Del. Hampton Court, 20 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 24.

21. And Symson, skinner, of Mounthall, native of Scotland. Denization. Greenwich, 15 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 21 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 27.

26. John Wrey, gentleman of the Queen's lavatory, and John Bankes, doorward of the King's gate. Grant, in survivorship, of the office of bailiff of the manor of Brayles, Warw., and keeper of the warren there, lately held by Sir Wm. Compton. Also grant to farm of the said manor at the same annual rent as others have paid. Amphill, 10 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 26 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 27.

27. Ric. Ceyll, groom of the Robes. To be porter of Warwick castle and keeper of the vineyard near the same, with a tenement, besides the usual wages, lately held by Sir Wm. Compton. Windsor, 14 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 27 Aug.—P.S.

27. Ric. Williams, of Hungerford, Berks. Pardon for having killed Rob. Harrold in the highway leading to Hungerford church. Del. Hampton Court, 27 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

27. Chris. Dyckynson, mason. To be master mason of the buildings in Windsor castle, with 6d. a day, vice Henry Redman. Esthampstead, 21 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 27 Aug.—P.S.

27. Tho. Greves, purveyor of the King's stable, and Jas. Sutton, clk. Annuity of 5l. in survivorship, out of the issues of the lordship of Denbigh, N. Wales; on surrender of patent 23 April 8 Hen. VIII. granting the same to Greves alone. Esthampstead, 21 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 27 Aug.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 21.

28. Sir John Russell, knight of the Body. To be bailiff of Burley, in the New Forest, Hants, with 6d. a day payable by the sheriff of Hants out of the small parcels of serjeanty and of asserts, purprestures and wastes, rented, &c. in said co. Del. Hampton Court, 28 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 29.

28. Sir John Russell. To be steward, surveyor, receiver, and bailiff of the lordship of Stoke under Hamden and Corymbelet, Somers, and Dorset, late of Wm. earl of Huntingdon, with the usual fees, vice Sir Wm. Compton. Del. Hampton Court, 28 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 29.

31. Wm. Ingelard or Ingledy, stockfish-monger, London. Protection, going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Esthampstead, 31 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

1528.

4688. IRELAND.

R. O. Instructions to be shown to the King, Wolsey, and the Council, on St. P. II. 145. behalf of the Deputy and Council of Ireland.

1. The earl of Kildare's brethren and kinsmen can do more harm to the King's subjects than any others, as they have a great retinue, and inhabit the county of Kildare, in the heart of the English country. 2. The King should write to Sir Walter Delahid, Kildare's steward, to deliver to the Deputy the ordnance and artillery supplied to Kildare and his father when deputies. 3. Kildare's adherents will have no peace with the Deputy and the King's subjects without pardon for their offences, and exemption from being called to any council or hosting. 4. They have compelled the Tyrrelles, Daltones, Dyllones, Petites, Tuytes, and Ferollis, the King's tenants, to take their part against all men. 5. They and O'Connor lay in wait to attack the Deputy and his son, at their coming into the English Pale. 6. There is much surprise here that they should rebel so openly, unless they had privy procurement of some persons. Kildare should be kept safely in England until the land is quieter. 7. Their attacks on the King's subjects were made when Ossory was far off, punishing the earl of Desmond. 8. When Gerot Delahide gave O'Conour the King's letter, he said that the King's grace greeted him well. O'Conour asked, what King? He said the king of England. To which O'Conour replied, with pomp, that he hoped that in one year the King would have no jurisdiction or intromitting in Ireland, and that there would be no more mention of him there than of the king of Spain. 9. The King should write to persuade O'Donyll to make war on O'Nele if he attempt to hurt the King's subjects. 10. Considering the misdemeanor, both of English rebels and Irishmen, it is impossible for the King's subjects to resist or maintain forces for a quarter of a year at their own cost, unless the King will send an army, with ordnance and other necessities, till he can provide otherwise. 11. The army should consist of Northumberland spears, light footmen fit for labour, like the marchers of Scotland. 12. Kildare's daughter, Ellis, came from him in England, three weeks before the 28th August, and rode straight to O'Connor's house, soon after which he made the said invasions.

Headed: Copia. Endd.

1 Sept.
R. O.

4689. WINGFIELD and SIR W. HUSAY to WOLSEY.

Yesterday there was a marvellous high tide. The jetties are much hurt or broken, and the sea has run over the highest bank. Unless some remedy be provided, the next spring-tide will prove so outrageous that nothing can prevent the water from deluging the surrounding country. There is no money here to set men to work. Calais, 1 Sept. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

1 Sept.
R. O.

4690. THOS. BYRD, Priest, to CROMWELL.

The reigning sickness troubles my lord Cardinal's college. Mr. Clerke's brother and another scholar died about three weeks ago; last week, Mr. Summer, that was accused; and on Monday last, Mr. Clerke. "Jesus pardon their souls! They were buried in Christian sepulture, but the Sacrament was denied them by the dean." Hears that they were penitent, but confessed no erroneous opinions. The other three, who are still alive, remain in their old custody. "The university is little infect but there. Our Lord preserve it!" It is said the other three will be released on sureties. Bega Cromwell to get him speedy payment of the five marks due of his last pension; and, if God send him something to live on meanwhile, will reward Cromwell on his return from Ipswich. Desires also a letter from Mr. Marcus Anthonius and Jacobus to Mr. Bygges, for payment of the other five marks for the half year ending at Michaelmas. Cromwell may retain a noble for his pains. "God knoweth how gladly I would be at rest in Oxford at my learning." Oxford in Hynxsey Hall, 1 Sept.

1528.

Begs to know his mind this week, else on Monday he must go to his uncle, for pure need, either to beg or to borrow.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Mr. Thomas Crumwell, one of my lord Cardinal's good Grace's council. Endd.

1 Sept.

4691. WOLSEY to the MASTERS OF IPSWICH SCHOOL.

Fiddes' Coll.
p. 130.

Strype's Mem.
ii. 139.

Ib. ii. 140.

Sends them a grammar for the use of their scholars. "Ex audibus nostris," kal. Sept. 1528.

Lat.

ii. Scheme of the studies and mode of instruction to be used in the different classes. In the fifth class the mode of instruction is left to the discretion of the teachers, with a caution against severity, even in looks, which is apt to discourage the learner.

1 Sept.

4692. ERASMUS to JOHN BISHOP [OF LINCOLN*].

Er.Ep. p.1099.

Has received by Quirinus his two letters. According to his advice follows the example of St. Augustine in revising his writings. Defends his Colloquies and other works at some length, and exposes the malevolence and ill faith of the monks. The Dominicans and Franciscans have been more bitter of late, and were proceeding to exercise their tyranny on an innocent man, for saying that the expence laid out on a monastery had been better bestowed on the poor; and on two others, for merely eating flesh in Lent. Thinks it would be conducive to the concord of the Church if the immense diversity of rubrics, vestments and rites were done away with, and monks were brought more completely under the authority of the bishops. Professes his adherence to the Catholic Church against Lutheranism. Your friend Aldridge has undertaken much labor on my account in collating MSS. Begs the Bishop will repay him. Basle, 1 Sept. 1528.

Lat.

2 Sept.

4693. JOHN WESTE to JOHN HACKET.

R. O.

Master Governor saw yesterday Ric. Harman's letters from England, with four letters of certain persons: two from London, and two from Cranbrooke in Kent, where Harman was born. The first is from Ric. Hall, iron-monger, of London, dated 14 Oct., desiring two books of the New Testament in English. The second is from John Sadelere, dated 3 Sept. 1526, stating that the news in England was that the English Testaments should be put down and burnt. The third is from Thos. Davy, of Cranbrook, urging Harman to have patience in the true faith in Christ, and stating that no man may speak in England of the New Testament in English on pain of bearing a faggot. The fourth is from John Andrews, of Cranbrook, dated 20 Feb. 1527, about the New Testament. The said Andrews is in prison in the Fleet. The Governor tells him that those who have the custody of Harman's letters "made many great cracks to Master Governor, and many high words, and Richard's wife also." Advises him to get a letter from the lady Margaret to have the letters delivered.

The priest that is in prison is sick of the ague, and has no refreshing of meat or drink. Therefore I pray you that he may have some, for I would he should not die here. By a letter of your hand to the Margrave, I trust to catch another priest, come out of England, called Constantinus, who dresses like a secular. Will send them both to England. I have spoken to

* Or Fisher, bishop of Rochester ?

1528.

JOHN WESTE to JOHN HACKET—cont.

Francis Brykman, bookbinder, of this town, and he tells me that Petygnele, Roye and Jerome Burlowe, friars of our religion, and Huethyns, otherwise Tyndall, made the last book that was made against the King and my lord Cardinal; and that John Scott, a printer of Straysbourg, printed them. There is a whole pipe of them at Frankfort; and he desired me to write him a letter whether he should buy them or not. If so, he intends to send Roye with the other two to Cologne, to receive the money for the books, where I and Herman Ryng, of Cologne, shall take them. Our convent at Antwerp, 2 Sept. 1528.

P.S.—Mr. Crane took shipping for England on Tuesday se'nnight.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

2 Sept.
R. O.

4694. SIR JOHN STYLE to JOHN HACKET.

Received his letter on Aug. 28, asking him, by friar John West's advice, to view all the books in Ric. Harman's house here. Has done what he could, though many crafty delays have been made to prevent him. Hacket's letter to the Margrave was delivered on the same day, and he immediately ordered the scout to tell the Skepyns, who had the keys of Harman's counter, to be ready to show the books to Style; but in the afternoon the scout came, saying that he could not get the Skepins together. The next day, Saturday, he came again, saying that the Margrave had left the town, and the Skepins did not wish to be present at the visitation, but he would return on Monday and compel them. At 2 o'clock on Tuesday went to Harman's house with the scout and one of his own servants. Found there the commissary and Arte van Vellycke, merchant, with four or five other persons, but the Skepyns sent word they could not come, as they had so many matters to attend to. Found that the seals on the counter door had been plucked off, and that it had been lately opened. It was then opened by Van Vellycke. Began to look at the writings in a great box on the board, when Van Vellycke and the others said it was a great shame for the Emperor and for the town that the king of England's commissaries should visit any merchant's house; but the scout took Style's part so soberly that he saw all the writings in the box, whether they would or no. Those in Dutch the scout read; those in English Style read himself. Found four letters mentioning the New Testament: one from Ric. Halle, ironmonger of London, dated 10 Oct., no year, asking Harman to send two books of the New Testament, as those he had before were gone; another from John Sadler, of London, 3 Sept. 1526, saying that the news in England is that the New Testament is fordone,—which God forbid; another from Thos. Davy, of Cranebroke, exhorting Harman to take his tribulation patiently, for so the children of Christ must do in adversity, and that no man may speak of the New Testament under pain of a faggot; and another from John Andrewe, of Cranebroke, dated 20 Feb. 1527, concerning the New Testament.

Cannot be sure of all the circumstances of the said letters, for they would not allow him to copy them nor take them. These letters remained in the counting-house by themselves, sealed with the seal of the commissary. As to those in Dutch, the scout said they related to nothing but feats of merchandise. All the other books in Harman's house at the time of his attaching are in the Margrave's keeping. "Wretyn layserles at Andwerpe," Wednesday, 2 Sept. 1528.

Harman's wife is a mischievous woman of her tongue, and as ill of deeds. Has given West 10s. Fl.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. To the right honorabille John Hacket, ambassatur of the kyng of Yngland our soverayn Lorde, in Meygghelyn. Endd.

1528.

3 Sept.
R. O.4695. WILL. GONSON to WOLSEY.

Since his arrival, has received all the "yoores gotten owtt of the grownd," by command of Joachim Hochster, and put it on board ship to be conveyed to Coommartyen. Hopes it may prove as good as reported. Has paid Joachim 75*l.*, "which, in mine opinion, may scantly despatch him out of this town." Hopes Wolsey will be satisfied with his services, but "I fear myself more in this business than in all other services to which your Grace heretofore hath commanded me." Brystowe, 3 Sept.

Hol., p. 1. Scaled. Add.: "To my lord Legate's grace." Endd.

3 Sept.
R. O.4696. WOLSEY to the YOUNGER COUNTESS OF OXFORD.

Asks her to send two bucks next Lady Day to the College at Ipswich, for the entertainment of Drs. Stevyns and Lee, whom he is sending thither for the induction of certain priests, clerks, and children for the maintenance of God's service there. Hampton Court, 3 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

3 Sept.
R. O.4697. CROMWELL to WOLSEY.

Asks for orders for the "synours" of Durham, whose stay here is to their great cost, and hinders the works there. Incloses the yearly values of the lands Wolsey has purchased in Yorks. and Bucks, and also of the late monastery at Wallingford. Asks in whose name the college at Gipswich is to be dedicated, and what the masters and fellows shall be called. Has caused the bills already signed to pass the privy signet and private seal, and will write the patents for the broad seal, so that after the three months Wolsey may give the lands at his pleasure. Reminds him of the appropriation of the benefices to his college in Oxford. Has spoken to Mr. Babington, now lord of Kylmayne, about the exchange to be made between him and the college as to Saundforde. Asks whether Wolsey's counsel shall speak to him about it further.

Encloses instructions for Mr. Holgill, devised by the judges. They should be sent him directly. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: "To my lord's grace." Endd.

ii. Instructions to Mr. Wm. Holgill for taking possession, livery and seisin in the parsonage at Rudby, Cleveland.

To cause lord Conyers to search his evidence touching the advowson, whether it be appendant or in gross, and to receive the said evidence. To find out whether it is entailed, and to receive the deed of entail or fines. The attorneys mentioned in the deed of feoffment must enter into the acre of land, and deliver seisin to Holgill by a turf, and then by the ring of the church door. They must then deliver him possession of the parsonage. The deed of feoffment must be read in all these places, and thirty or forty witnesses present; as many young children as possible.

P. 1.

4698. DECLARATION OF WILLIAM WORME

R. O.

At his coming to this country from London he was sworn to the King, and then sent by my Lord* in commission to Cockermouth, where he found some silver ore. Sent some to Thos. Trewe, in London, to be tried. He said it was very fine, and worth 4*s.* 8*d.* Sent a servant with this information to the Council; but my lord of Northumberland had him taken at Durham, saying that the ore would cause the King to have Cockermouth. Mr. Ingraham Percy has one of the pieces of ore, and he and John Graye, of Alnewick, have a quantity of old nobles. The person who showed him the place where he found the ore told him he would find some gold ore. The names of the places are mentioned in his letter to Lister, as Worme's servant knows, who was imprisoned a year and a quarter (?) Sir John Lamplugh knows of the ore, and one Hodeson showed it to Worme.

1528.

DECLARATION of WILLIAM WORME—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Endd.: "The bill of William Worme, made at Newcastle."

3 Sept.

4699. The DE BARDI.

R. O.

Indenture, dated 3 Sept. 1528, between Wolsey, Sir Hen. Wiat and Sir Andrew Windsor, master of the Great Wardrobe, in behalf of the King, and John Francis de Bardi, Reynerio de Bardi, and Francis de Bardi, merchants of Florence; witnessing that the said De Bardi are indebted to the King in 3,154*l.*, by 19 several obligations, for payment of which they, by their indenture dated 29 April 11 Hen. VIII., were bound to deliver yearly into the King's great wardrobe cloth of gold and silk to the value of 300*l.* till it was all paid. 10 of these obligations remain due, containing the sum of 3,154*l.*, the last payment to be made in 1539. The said De Bardi are also indebted to the King in 7,294*l.* and 14*d.* for customs and subsidies by 16 several obligations, the days of payment being yet distant. These sums amount in all to 10,294*l.* and 14*d.* (sic), contained in 26 obligations, which are now cancelled, and payment provided for by 26 new bonds, as the terms of payment were remote, and the King has occasion for a larger quantity of cloth of gold and silks. The annual payments are now to be at the rate of 400*l.* a year for 25 years, beginning in 1529, and on the 26th or last year 294*l.* 14*d.*, which is to be delivered in cloth of gold and silk to Sir Andrew Windsor at the Wardrobe beside the Blackfriars.

Signed by the De Bardi, whose seals were formerly attached.

4 Sept.

4700. SCOTLAND and FRANCE.

Add. MS.
4133, f. 6.

B. M.

Minute of four petitions presented by Francis I. to the Scotch ambassador.

In addition to the charge committed to him, the Scotch ambassador presented four requests in the French king's council; to which, after consultation, the King gave the following answers: 1. His intention remains the same about the marriage mentioned in the treaty of Rouen, and he trusts that the Scotch king means to fulfil his promise. 2. As to the confirmation of previous treaties between their predecessors, he is not less well disposed to Scotland than his predecessors, but circumstances have rendered it necessary to enter into treaties with England, which he cannot infringe, but he will not refuse any new treaties which do not interfere with his treaties with England. 3. The King will use his influence with the duke of Albany to obtain the delivery of Dunbar Castle to the Scotch king. 4. He will try to prevent the Duke returning to Scotland. St. Germain en Laye, 4 Sept. 1528.

Lat., copy, p. 1.

5 Sept.

4701. The PARLIAMENT OF SCOTLAND.

Acts of Parl. of Sc. II. 321.

Edinburgh, 2 Sept. 1528.

3 Sept.—Lords of the Articles chosen. Safe passage assured to Archibald earl of Angus, George Douglas, his brother, Archibald Douglas, his uncle, and Alexander Drummond, who are summoned to appear in this Parliament on Friday, 4 Sept., to answer upon certain points of treason.

Proclamation that as the King is to leave Edinburgh on Monday next, for Haddington and the Merse, for pacifying the country, all persons in Edinburgh who have been previously summoned, and all "fensable persons" within the bounds of Lothian, Merse, Haddington, Tevidale, Selkirk and Tweeddale, make ready to attend upon him for fifteen days.

1528.

4 Sept.—John Ballentyne, secretary to Archibald earl of Angus, appeared and gave in a set of reasons why the Earl, his brother George Douglas and Archibald Douglas, of Kilspindy, should not be compelled to answer the summons of treason against them:—first, because they are not men of law, and can get no advocate to speak for them; and secondly, because it is holiday time, when no courts can be held without a dispensation of the superior, and there is no superior to the King, to dispense with him, for a man cannot dispense with himself; therefore, by all laws, civil and canon, the King can no more hold his Parliament in this holiday time than he could do so on Easter or Christmas Day. Further, without departing from this process, they may reply to the special charges:—first, whereas the Earl is accused of having passed north of the Spey, and having entered his brother and uncle in ward in the castle of Edinburgh, "ilkane to freith uthir," they say that the King was moved by their enemies to charge them to do things dangerous to their lives, the non-performance of which ought not to be counted treason. 2. As to the charge of making an assembly against the King's coming to Edinburgh, it was only to do him service. 3. They know nothing of the laird of Johnistoun's doings, and never stirred him up to spoil the country. They believe it was a private feud between lord Maxwell and the laird of Johnistoun. 4. As to the charge of treasonably stuffing the House of Temptalloune, Colbrandspeth, Newerk and Douglas against the King, all their houses have been always ready to do him service. 5. They deny having had the King in their rule, contrary to the order of the Council. 6. As to the debates made at Melrose and Linlithgow, touching their bearing towards the King, they have a declaration of Parliament that they committed no crimes.

The same day John Ballentyne offered, in Angus's name, that he would come in person to undergo the sentence of Parliament, provided the master of Argyle, lord Maxwell and Sir James Hamilton were delivered to his friends as sureties.

5 Sept.—This day Lien king-of-arms appeared and gave in a summons from the King, dated 3 June 15 James V., requiring him to summon the earl of Angus and George and Archibald Douglas on their allegiance at the Crosses of Edinburgh, Lanark and Haddington, to appear before the King in the next Parliament on the 4 Sept., of which summons he proved the execution. On this Parliament pronounced judgment of treason. Judgment was also pronounced after similar process against Alexander Carnok for assisting Angus.

The King in Parliament absolved Sir Walter Scott, of Braxhelme, of the charge of treason imputed to him on account of his gathering at Melrose, as he had repaired thither by the King's command.

18 Sept.—The Parliament was continued to the 1 Sept., and then to the 18 and 22 Jan., but nothing very important occurs under these dates.

[6 Sept.]

R. O.

4702. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

The King is in good health, and glad that he shall shortly meet with your Grace a-hunting. Master Norice has had no convenient time to show the King the writing you sent concerning the stewardship at variance betwixt Bacon and him. I have spoken with Master Bell for the priest of Wilton. He says he has not seen him since the King was at Easthamstead. If he come to Court, I shall not fail to order him according to your Grace's commandment. Oking, Sunday. Signed.

P. I. Add. Endd.

1528.

6 Sept.

R. O.

4703. DR. JOHN BELL to WOLSEY.

Master Hennegge showed me it was your pleasure to know of the repairing to Court of the priest, the importunate suitor for the preferment of Dame Elinor Care. He has been here at divers times,—at Windsor, Easthampstead, and Amptill; but what he is soliciting I cannot discover. He avoids my sight. The last time I saw him was at Easthampstead, when I begged of him to know his business, offering to serve him, but the fellow craftily used me, saying he had business with Mr. Nores. He is most frequently with Dr. Vaughan. I told him he had been too busy in Dame Eleanor's matter, and hindered her suit in divers ways, and that I was well aware of his unlawful suits. Since then I have not seen him. If he returns, I will send him to your Grace. It were a gracious deed to punish him according to his demerits. 6 Sept.

Hol., p. 1. Sealed. Add. Endd.

7 Sept.

R. O.

4704. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

You promised, at your last being in this town, to send a commission of sewers hither. On the faith of this promise I undertook to cleanse certain watercourses, and make a new dyke two miles long and 12 feet broad. If great things be not done within a month or six weeks, great harm will ensue. Begg a commission may be sent to himself, the corporation, constable, Sir Ric. Wheethill, and Th. Prowde. Calais, 7 Sept. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Sealed. Add. Endd.

7 Sept.

R. O.

4705. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to BRIAN TUKE.

Wrote on the 1st. Sent with it a letter to Wolsey. Sends another by this. Has heard from Thomas Tychett of Tuke's good health, and his journey to Hampton Court. I am glad that you are with my lord Legate, as I expect to have answers from you, especially respecting money. Has heard that Sir Francis Bryan rode on Thursday last to Orleans, hearing that Campeggio would be there, as yesterday. Lautrec is dead, and the French affairs in Italy are far from prosperous. Calais, 7 Sept. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

7 Sept.

R. O.

4706. IPSWICH.

Presents sent by various persons, among others the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, lady Oxford and Sir Philip Boothe, for a dinner given at the college. 7 Sept.

Pp. 5. Endd.

8 Sept.

4707. ST. MARY, BYLSYNGTON.

Writ to the escheator of Kent for restitution of the temporalities of the Augustine monastery of St. Mary, Bylsyngton, Canterbury dioc., on the election of John Tenterden, canon, as prior, whose fealty is to be taken by John Loff, LL.D. Hampton Court, 8 Sept.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 13.

8 Sept.

R. O.

4708. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

Has been several times at Peterborough, and sent many letters thither for the matter the Abbot there hath given to the buildings of your college. After much difficulty, has got it sealed this day, and now sends it under the conventual seal. Begg Wolsey's indulgence if the words are not well couched, for he was afraid to take any one to counsel in drawing it, but trusts it is sufficient in the law to bind them and their successors. Could not obtain better terms from them. Would have had 500 marks paid at All Hallowtide, and 500 at next Easter, but could not bring it to pass. Desires Wolsey to write letters of thanks to the Abbot and Prior. Cannot yet bring the matter of Spalding to pass. The Prior will not resign, though all legal means have been used. Has taken an inventory of all their goods, "bearing him on hand to be put to a confjutor." He has promised to give answer the second day post Exaltationem Crucis. There is a rumor that the prior of Tynmoo is to be the prior, "and they do much fear that man." There will be much difficulty to bring him there. Would have written ere this, but has been troubled with scintica, and unable to leave his chamber these fourteen days. Is now well, but dares not yet labor. Returns the congé of Spalding. The date is past. Thanks him for a mule. Ludington, 8 Sept.

1528.

Is grieved he cannot ride on the King's commissions, but hopes to perform some of them.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate.

8 Sept.

4709. ROGER LASSELS to EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. i. 29.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 509.

"The copy of the second letter sent to my lord [Northumberland] from his steward Roger Lassels, the 8th day of September."

Parliament at Edinburgh closed Saturday last. Angus and his party have been attainted on the charge of keeping the King against his will these two years. His lands have been given to the lords Bothwell, Maxwell, Buccleuch, and the sheriff of Ayr. The King selected for his trial six bishops, five earls, and others his greatest enemies. The King moves from Edinburgh to Haddington with 8,000 men to drive the Earl into England, and lay siege to Tentallon, Coperspath (Cockburnspath), and Coldingham. The Homes have refused the Earl's lands in the Marches, to the King's great displeasure. On Saturday, 6th Sept., had a visit from Angus and the abbot of Holyrood, desiring to know what the Cardinal intended; also that he might have a chamber for his daughter, and the young earl of Huntley, and the wife of Archibald Douglas to wait upon them; another chamber for himself, the abbot of Holyrood, George and Archibald Douglas. If he be driven to necessity, he wishes his friends may be sheltered at Norham till the King withdraw. Does not fear his enemies. Has consented to his desire, on condition that he do no harm to Scotland while there. The thieves on both sides of the Borders "never did steal so fast," expecting open war. If not stopped promptly it will be past redress. The King's company and the friends of Angus rob each other. Desires to know his Lord's pleasure shortly, for Angus will be driven into England on the morrow of Our Lady Day, or Thursday, at the latest. Norham, "this Lady's Day," 8 Sept.

Pp. 2. Add.: "To my lord Legate's good grace." Endd.: "From Roger Lassels, my lord of Northumberland's steward."

4710. A, DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was glad to learn from Wolsey's servant Forest, whom she met on Lady Day while going in procession to her parish church, that Wolsey was in good health, and none of his servants dead, though some had been sick. Begs to be informed if he catches the sweat, and she will send Hogon and William Hastings, who will keep him "as well as is possible after the temperate fashion." Has daily experience in her house of all manner of sorts, good and bad, and none have miscarried yet. Neighbours send to her when they are ill; "and if they be sick at heart I give them triacle and water imperial," which has saved many who have swooned repeatedly, and received the Sacraments. "And divers doth swell at their stomachs, to whom I geve setwell to eat, the which driveth it away from the stomach ; and the best remedy that I do know in it is to take little or no sustenance or drink unto 16 hours be past." Wolsey should not let those who have had it come near him for a week after. "Vinegar, wormwood, rosewater, and crumbs of brown bread is very good and comfortable to put in a linen cloth to smell unto your nose, so that it touch not your visage." Hears that my lord of Norfolk has had the sweat, and several in his house are dead,—through default of keeping, as she believes. Hears that the King has given the two daughters and heirs of Master Broughton, the one to Master Cheney, the other to Wallop. "My Lord, I never saw people so far out of the way in no disease as they be in this ; and about 12 or 16 hours is the greatest danger. There be some that sweateth much, and some that sweateth very little, but brynneth very sore ; but the greatest surety is in any wise to keep your bed 24 hours." Signed.

1528.

A., DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

9 Sept.

R. O.

4711. SIR THOS. STRANGWAYS to WOLSEY.

Requests to have the captainship of Norham, if given up by my lord of Northumberland. Will find good sureties for its custody ; and, if he may have it for life, will engage to spend 100 marks a year for five years on its repair. This will make it so strong it will have few fellows. Few repairs have been done there since the "departure" of my lord of Durham ; and, as no man was in surety to continue, the arable lands belonging to it have not been well managed. Agrees to pay, besides, the same sums of money and barrels of salmon as my lord of Northumberland. If it be objected that an officer of Berwick should not be captain of Norham, Ric. Chamley was both, and the castle was never in such good case as in his time. Berwick is more secure, having an officer who can command so many men. Berwick, 9 Sept. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add. : To my lord Cardinal's good grace. Endd. : "Mr. Strangwise of Berwike, ix^o Octobris" (sic).

10 Sept.

R. O.

4712. SANDYS and FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

The bearers, baron Hales and the King's solicitor, will tell him of the order they have taken at Guisnes. Both of them have ordered themselves wisely, and taken much pains. Calais, 10 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Cardinal's grace.

10 Sept.

Vit. B. x. 109.

B. M.

4713. JOHN CASALE, the Prothonotary, to WOLSEY.

Thinks Wolsey may have heard of the recent disaster to the French in the kingdom of Naples, from the ambassador sent to the king of France by the Pope. No messenger has yet brought the news from our party. Fears the defeat may have been such that they cannot send messengers. Lautrec is dead. Suspects the generals did not foresee the evils that might happen. The marquis of Saluzzo was detained by slight illness ; and Guido Rangone, count Hugh de Pepulis, and the Provéditeur-General of the Venetians, by severe illness. The enemy knew this, and watched their opportunity. No preparations had been made for removing the army, and everything was in confusion when the enemy attacked them. The marquis of Saluzzo went to Aversa, where the enemy besieged him with the guns they had just taken. He was obliged to surrender on a promise of safety for himself and his soldiers, on condition of procuring the surrender of the towns and castles of Naples. There are various reports. Sends the last letters he has received from Viterbo. Has advised the Signory to send St. Pöl, or some one else in authority, to collect the remains of the army. They said they would do all they could, but have yet determined on nothing; for the reports do not seem to them certain, and they fear for themselves and for the duchy of Milan, which they will gladly protect. Thinks this a more serious defeat either than the capture of the King or the sack of Rome, for the Venetians and the Pope are exhausted. Venice, 10 Sept. 1528.

1528.

Signed.

Lat., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

10 Sept.

Galba, B. ix.

180.

B. M.

4714. JOHN HACKETT to [WOLSEY].

Wrote last on the 20th ult. Was sent for yesterday by the Council. Found the burgomasters and pensionaries of Antwerp making great complaints of Hackett, for having kept their burgess, Harman, so long in prison, contrary to the statutes of the town, and that the people are daily crying out for his liberation "upon caution," or for his examination. Told them that he was daily expecting to hear from the King. They have now granted him a new term of 12 days, beyond which time they cannot delay the administration of justice. Asked them to deliver Akerston and the other rebels, who have no privileges here, without delay. They answered that their offences ought to appear as clear to them as to us, without which they ought not to deliver any prisoners. Alleged that the intercourse makes no mention of giving such particular knowledge, but only that the King's letters should mention the names of those who are born in England, declaring them his fugitives, and that they should deliver them, at our costs, with sure conveyance through the Low Countries; that these acts were concluded before Harman was a burgess of Antwerp, but, even if it were of later date, no privileges can alienate him from being a subject of England. They answered that the probation ought to be before the condemnation, and that when the instructions come from England, they will make such answer that Hackett shall have no cause to complain.

There is no certain news here, but that Hoghstrate has letters from France that Mons. de Lettrecht (Lautrec) is dead of pestilence, and that St. Pöl is retiring. Has had very familiar conversation with the governor of Bresse, great master of hows (hold), who came from Bourgoigne, and departed yesterday to Seland to take ship for Spain. Finds him very honest and discreet, and that he knows the great honor, kindness and pleasure that the King and Wolsey have shown to the Emperor aforetime, which have not been recompensed as they ought to have been. Told him of the difficulty about the prisoners. He said he doubted not that, if the Emperor were here, no such difficulty would be made; he will do his best in the matter, and desired to be recommended to Wolsey. Machlyng, 13 Sept.*

Hoghstrat told him today at dinner that he had received letters from France that Wolsey has sent 60,000 angelots to refresh the French army at Naples against the Emperor, saying, "Ce n'est pas le vray chemyn pour garder amour et amyte intre le prynsis." Said he had not heard of it, and he thought it was a report spread by the French.

P.S.—Has received Wolsey's letter by friar West, Observant. Supposes Wolsey has received letters from Mr. Governor and friar West about the visitation of Harman's letters, but he encloses their letters to himself in case he has not heard from them.

Wished to have the four suspected letters that were found in Harman's counter, but the Council will not consent to it, saying that when he is examined, all such letters "ought to be per . . . actum." 13 Sept. 1528.

The cardinal of Liege is here, and, next my Lady, may speak boldest of all in the court; yet Hoghstrat governs as he was wont to do.

Hol., pp. 5. Add. Endd.: 13 Sept.

* See his letter of Sept. 12.

1528.

10 Sept. 4715. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his letters and loving counsel by Patrick Sinclair. Sends his mind at length to the King by the bearer, Lyon, herald. Hopes Wolsey will help to prove James's innocence with respect to the unkindly information made to his uncle, and solicit the speedy despatch of the bearer touching the meeting of the commissioners on the Borders for peace. Edinburgh, 10 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

10 Sept. 4716. The CHANCELLOR and COUNCIL of SCOTLAND to HEN. VIII.

R. O.

Have seen his writings sent to the King by Patrick Sinclair, which they regard as conceived of great kindness and wisdom. The King immediately called the three Estates together; and the matters against Archibald sometime earl of Angus being examined without partiality, he was found guilty, as James has written at large. Edinburgh, 10 Sept. 1528.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

10 Sept. 4717. ANGUS to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 305.

Has received his letters, dated Amphill, 9 Aug., to himself and king James. Caused the letters to be delivered, hoping by his true service and offers of gifts to have obtained justice; but was the worse heard for appealing to Henry, and a "pretendit dome" has been given against him and his friends, though he never committed the crimes imputed to him, as Henry will learn by a friend of his, whom he will send after one part of this business is done. Hopes the earl of Northumberland will be instructed to receive him in England, and cause the borderers to ride with him when he commands them. Coldingham, 10 Sept. Signed.

Add. Endd.: Therle of Angwishe of the 10th of September 1528.

11 Sept. 4718. ANGUS to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. vii. 95.

B. M.

By the solicitation of his enemies, Argyle, Arran, and Maxwell, Sir Jas. Hamilton, sheriff of Ayr, the lairds of Buccleuch and Keir, the King has forfeited his lands, and is proceeding to pursue him and his friends to the death, expecting they will have no help from England by the letters brought by Patrick Sinclair. Has written to the king of England for help. Desires the borderers will ride with him when he wishes it. Coldingham, 11 Sept. 1528.

P.S.—Encloses copies of his letters to the King and Cardinal.

Signed: Zours, Ar^d erl of Angus.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord earl of Northumberland, lieutenant and warden of the Marches.

11 Sept. 4719. [ANGUS] to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. vi. 176.

B. M.

Thanks him for his letters to the King and himself, and for his "greit humanite, faith and kyndnes." The king of Scots, abused by perverse counsel of "evil disposit personis," is led on "wringusly" against him and his friends, alleging that he had sought succor from England, notwithstanding that Wolsey and the King wrote "als effectuosly and tenderly as was possible" in his behalf. Patrick Sinclair declares that Angus has no friends in England, which makes them more cruel and sharp against him. Sinclair is to return "in tha partis with writingis and credence in my contrar." The earls of Argyle and Arran, lord Maxwell, Sir James Hamilton, laird of Buccleuch, sheriff of Ayr and Ker, with their complices, are his enemies. Will send special friends of his own to the King's highness. Begs as an "innocent and saikles man" that England will give no credit to his adversaries, and that Wolsey will write to the lord of Northumberland to give him refuge in England. His enemies will besiege his houses, and pursue him to the death. Coldingham Abbey, 11 Sept. 1528.

1528.

P. 1. Add. Endd.: From the erle of Angwysch.

11 Sept.

4720. LASSELS to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. vii. 14.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 510.

"The copy of the third letter to my lord from Roger Lassels."

As the king of Scots and his lords could not agree, they have returned to Stirling, and the army is dispersed. If the Earl can get any help, he declares he will rule the King and all Scotland. He has sent four-score men to burn the country about Edinburgh, that the King may have light to rise with on Friday morning. The King has sealed patents of those who had the Earl's lands, but refuses to redeliver them until those who held them have chased the Earl out of Scotland. On Saturday John Maydor comes from Angus to Northumberland; three days after, George of Douglas and Patrick Sinclair, who has promised openly to obtain three years' peace from the king of England. Scotland was never so easy to win as at present. No redress for theft. Norham, Friday, 11 Sept.

Copy, p. 1, (broad sheet). Endd.: "The copy of a letter of Sir Roger Lassels to the earl of Northumberland of the 11th of September."

11 Sept.

4721. GIO. BATTE SANGA, the Pope's Secretary, to CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO.

Porcacchi,
Lett. di XIII.
Huom. Illust.
p. 18 b.

Has written to his son, [the legate Salviati in France,] touching the result of the enterprise in the kingdom [of Naples]. The Pope would do anything to please the [French] king; but as the Emperor is victorious, and has made overtures for peace, the Pope must not give him any pretext for a fresh rupture, lest the Church should be utterly annihilated. As soon as you can do so without scandalising the [French] king, proceed on your journey to England, and there do your utmost to restore mutual affection between the King and Queen. You are not to pronounce any opinion without a new and express commission hence. Viterbo, 11 Sept. 1528.

Ital.

12 Sept.

4722. CHARLES V. to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. C. iv.

256.

B. M.

Has received his letters concerning the restoration of the Order of Jerusalem at Rhodes. Will contribute 25,000 ducats for the purpose, and would have done more, but is unable, on account of the expence of the war. Madrid, 12 Sept. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

12 Sept.

4723. [CLERK, TAYLER and SIR F. BRYAN] to WOLSEY.*

Cal. D. x. 221.

B. M.

"This was the effect, substance, and which we assure your Grace he spake very eloquently and with a

* This letter is described in Masters' MS. (f. 120), as follows:—"Sept. 12, 1528. From our ambassadors in France, viz., bishop of Bath, J. Taylor, Master of the Rolls, and Sir Francis Bryan. The herald came from Spain. The French king at Paris prepares to hear him; and as soon as he came he showed us (say our ambassadors) his leg, whereon he had the Garter, saying that, seeing he went about an act wherein consisted the honor of knighthood, he thought he could not a better remembrance (sic), he don anything that should better move him and stir him to the defence of his honor, than the wearing thereof.—At this time the French king expected the appointment of the field from the Emperor, and would not hear the herald, because he brought it not."

It appears from this description that the letter No. 4156, printed in April 1528, is out of place, being really the beginning of this letter.

1528.

[CLERK, TAYLER and SIR F. BRYAN] to WOLSEY—cont.

bold spirit satisfaction and admiration that the herald was sent for. He came in in cloth of gold, a little pert fellow, nev[er making any] courtsey till he came within four yards bowing the knee scant an inch, mad[e] without reverence, and thinking him[s]elf somewhat to have spoken, the King spa[ke] and the herald answered him so ent five or six times.
 But because the words sp[oken] by both of them were not many but material, [for fear lest we] should misrehearse them, we remit us [to a relation] made thereof by notaries, which were [there present] for the French king, because his honor [was therein touched, and] fearing singularity and misunderst[anding] [in this] matter, desired us to have special rega[r]d unto what we] should write, and that we would first s[ee] the draft of the thing taken by notaries; and al[though we have] seen the said draft, because it m[ay] not] be ready to be sent by this courier, the remembrance was that the French king [not] suffering the herald to speak, dem[anded] of him if] that he had brought the letters pat[ent] to the chartell sent unto themp[eror] ntion of his salf-cond[uct] d licence him to say what h that he would first say his commy[ssion] his office or ever he did anything else be suffered so to do.

"Then he desired to ha[ve] a salf-cond]uyet to depart as he came. The French king [rep]lied that if he had the patent for the ca[m]p, he would ac]cept it, without that he would take no mess[age] from him, u]e by mouth ne by writing; and as to the salf-[conduct h]e answered not directly to our hearing, but upo[n the] herald's denial to exhibit first any patent of from the Emperor, the French king licensed the he[r]ald, and] rose up himself, and so the congregation was dis[solved]. The next day in the afternoon the Great Master [sent] for us. We found them sitting in council th also the Legate, and the ambassador of Venice and Florence. There was read a letter sent from tham[bassador] resident in the court of Rome, who writeth by th[e Pope's?] commandment, upon a letter sent from Hieronymo M[orone] to Andrea Doria, and from Andrea Doria to the P[o]pe that the 28th day of the last month the Imperialls [within] Naples came out and entered the strengths of [the] French army, and there finding not passing the no[m]ber o[f] 4,000 men able to fight, and an infinite num[ber] of] sick folks, took their artillery, slew and put to flyg[ht the re]st, who, retiring themselves to such towns before taken there adjoining [fo]unde the gates shitt [w]hat by sickness and what by sword The said letters also contained the of his natural death three or four days af[ter] how that Peter Navarre was taken pr[isoner]; and by other it appeared that there is [by the sickness] raynyng in seven days above 7,000 [men dead, and] not ten whole horses left in all their ca[m]p of horses and scourers. They in the French [camp die in like] manner for thirst and hunger, in so much [that a drop] of water to drink was worth two Ju sterling. This lamentable and pitiful there a long season greatly bemoaned an surely these men here seemed to be in gre[at grief, not] so much for the loss of the enterprise, as so nobles and gentlemen which were the number, and of the best sort. We were t reasoning with them upon such remedi[es] as we thought] necessary in this case, and in effect t opinions. Some said that reliquia exerci[tus] might be gathered, and tha[t

1528.

when they were] refreshed with new succore, which sam[ed near] at hand under the conduct of Signor [they might] restore the enterprise in Naples, specially [the enemy] being but few in number, and m[uch more] afflict with sickness than the other [but the] most part thought the enterprise [impossible] to be restored, and that bet[ter it was M.] de Saynet Powll in Lomb[ardy] [likeli]hode would write the worst his [e]readence unto them, notwithstanding [all that we coul]d make of the matter was that the camp [was] reduced to the number of 4,000 fight[ing men] they for the sickness did remove, and that y might peradventure have suffered with the l [ar]tillery having no horses to convey the sam[e] [s]o that his Majesty reckoneth that the nom[ber of the fo]ressayd 4,000 men be retired in safety under [the] conduct of the marquis of Saluce. His Majesty [saith] that he hath 150,000 ducats in I[taly untouched], and that he had sent commission to the viscount T[urenne], his ambassador in Rome, that he should in all [haste] repair to the said marquis of Saluce and Signo[r] , not doubting but they together should be at the [head of] 6,000 or 7,000 men, and that the said Viscount s[hould] both pay them, and restore the numbers with such [haste] as might be made in those quarters, and in effect [his] Majesty showed to have as good heart and stomach [in this matter as] could be wished. It seemed that his Majesty mynd[ed] that Mona. de St. Powll for all this shall depa[rt] Lombardy. As for the act before yesterday done with the herald there is yet nothing published in writing, w[e] [thi]nke that these evil tidings will cause them to b[e the m]ore ware what they put forth. In as much as th[erefore] they ha[ve] nothing published, it shall like your Gra[ce] not to mentio[n] to their ambassador there of any par[ticulars] [w]ritten in that behalf.

. companies to meet him only to speak with him. We shall as can be possible for his accel[eration].” Paris, 12 Sept.

Mutilated. Add.: [To] my lord Legate's good [gr]ace.

Sept.

4724. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Cal. D. x. 292.

B. M.

“[Mons.] de Bayonne, je vous vueil bien adver[tir que l'herault] que je vous avoys escript estre party pour [renvoyer de l'Empereur] la seurete du camp, est icy arrive devers faict recueillir deffrayer et accompagner par bien voullu ouyr en plaine et grande audience pe ladite seurete, laquelle toutesfoiz apres la luy a il m'a refuse de bailler en ladite compaignye qui pourrez veoir par l'acte qui a este redige par [notaires, et que je] vous envoie. Enquoy je pense qu'il a sy peu son maistre estoit tenu et devoit faire qu'il m et descharge envers tout le monde de ce qui pou[rroit] approcher mon honneur, comme par le tesmoign[age] il se pourra clairement savoir et entendre, et par ledit acte vous pourrez mieulx veoir comme l passees pour avoir este faict et redige a la verit[e] comme il a este faict; je ne vous en diray autre [chose, sinon] qu'il me semble que par la on pourra facillemen[t] congnoistre pardela comme l'Empereur veult plust[ost faire delais] et dissimulations que de venir a l'effect com[me] escript par mon cartel, qui est la fin de to[utes] escriptures. Et pource que c'est chose vous pavez bien penser, je vous pry e ledit Roy mon bon frere, mondit sieur [le Legat] ceulx a qui vous en parlerez 1528.

FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE—cont.

..... este faict soyent pardela pour en s l'on n'en feist autre rapport contre le con s en envoie qui seroit entierement contre la ve[r]ite) se pourra plus amplement et particulièrement

" Au demeurant, j'ay veu ce que vous m'avez escript ce moys, et combien qu'il n'y ait grande chose a r[es]pondre,] sy ne veul je laisser a vous faire entendre particu[li]erement] toutes les nouvelles qui me sont depuis survenues, [affin] de les faire entendre au Roy mon bon frere et perpetu[el] allie] que je veul faire participant de toutes choses t[ant] bonnes que mauvaises qui me pourront survenir, com[me] que je scay certainement y avoir pareille et semblable et a qui il touche comme a moy en ung mesme degre. [Et] affin que vous luy puissiez conter les nouvelles que j'ay [re]ques] et a Mons. le Legat, mon bon amy pareille-ment, cest [en] effect que de Viterbe il m'a este escript que la estoit arrive une lettre d'Andre Dorya a nostre St. Pere, par laq[uelle] il luy faisoit savoir que Jheronyme Moron luy avoit mande de Naples que mon camp s'estoit leve de devant pour les mauvais temps et par faulte de vivres, aq estre trop foibles de gens de cheval, ilz n'avoye[nt] drer, ilz s'estoient retirez

..... se mettre en la campagne, dont il combien que la nouvelle soit venue par ma qu'il y eust quelque apparence de se lever u en mondit camp, qui a este telle que depuis la m[ort] de Mons.] le sieur de Lautrec, il y est mort en six jou[rs] mille personnes. Pour tout cela je n'ay lais[s]e[e] mes affaires le meilleur ordre qui m'a este p[ossible] ainsi que sy je croyois la chose estre advenue sauroit survenir, entendant tresbien que ayant p bonne heure comme j'espere avoir faict, que il que les ennemys sceussent faire aucun effect qui enmy ny grant dommaige, et n'en ayant encores e d'homme qui feust en mondit camp ny d'ailleurs adjouster foy ny creance, je ne vous en diray autre chose, mais attendray a le vous mander lo m'en sera venue, qui ne peult gueres plus tarder ne faudray a incontinent vous advertir qu[e] estre.
 Pour le departir audit Roy mon bon fr[ere] et perpetuel] allie, auquel, comme j'ay ja dit, je ne v[eul] aucune chose] estre cellee de ce qui me pourra estre ad[verti] le Legat mon bon amy pareillement en toutes choses, je suis res[olu] ne comme des meill[eurs]

" [Au sur]plus, Mons. de Bayonne, ce matin [le] cardinal Campegio, audevant duquel j'ay envoieevesques et prelatz qui sont icy affin de le recuy[l]ler comme tresbien il le merite, tant pour venir de la qui y vient que pour estre personnaige si estime et [qu'il] est, et la principale occasion pour laquelle il a f[ai]ct ce] voyaige, laquelle pour toucher en aucune chose ledit
 R[oy] mon bon frere et perpetuel allie, il est assure que je [ne l'ay] moins a cuer que sy c'estoit pour moy mesmes, je l'ay ouy en audience privee, que je luy ay ceste apres dine[r] Et a ce que je voy, il faict son compte partir de [en] deux jours pour le plustost qui luy sera possible p de dela, et messieurs de Bathe et Bryant en sa comp[agnie], desquelz ledit Roy mon bon frere et perpetuel allie q estre plus au long et particulièrement informe de toutes choses, comme ceulx qui les auront bien veues et retenues, et ausquelz j'ay tousjours faict communiquer ce qui m'es[t] survenu, comme je croy qu'ilz ne faudront a en faire leur rapport pardela.

" [Mon]sieur de Bayonne, je vous avoyz parcydevant escript faire fournir rette, sur les deniers de la contribution du roy d'[Angleterre] 1528.

mon bon frere] et perpetuel allye du present mo[is] je lay ay faict don a quoy j'ay enten[du] et pour ce que je veulx et entens que entierement paye et satisfait de ladite so[mme] deniers dudit present moys de Septembre ou s'il sur ceulx du prochain moys d'Octobre je v de rechef escrire et vous prier le faire ce que je vous en ay escript parcydevant faulte, et vous me ferez plaisir et ser[vice] en ce faisant." Paris, Sept. Signed.

Mutilated.

12 Sept.

Galba, B. IX.

186.

B. M.

4725. JOHN HACKETT to WOLSEY.

Wrote last on the 10th, dating the letter in haste the 13th. Yesterday a post went from my Lady to don Inigo with the Emperor's ratification of the truce, trusting that the King will dispense the failing of the limited time that is past. Some of the Council suggested that Lassaux and De Barrys should be sent, for more reputation; but others thought that don Inigo alone was sufficient. Yesterday after dinner Friar West and Friar Fleggh, an Englishman of his order, set out for Collen, with a true man for guide, to whom Hackett has given money for their costs. Will furnish West with what money he requires to execute Wolsey's commission. Trusts he will bring it to a good perfection. He intends at Collen to change his raiment.

Has had a letter this morning from the factor of Portugal, saying that Italian affairs are not so greatly to the Emperor's advantage as the letters to this court say, and that St. Pöl had gained some advantage over Antony de Leva; but it is always late here before they know the truth. "Some of these lords of the High Council, as men of no great experience in such matters, have sayings among themselves, as a thing that ought not to be said again, and like as it is reported to me by him that heard the words, which is, that it is said that the cardinal Campeggio comes now into England for some particular business, which business, if it come to the intent that it is thought, that it were cause sufficient to cause the stones come out of the streets to cry vengeance upon us. I asked him the names of these Lords, and what that the matter was? He told me that the matter was not declared there, and that the words were spoken in secret company and in secret m[anner], and prayed me for God's sake never to m[ake] mention of it. Yet methought convenient to show your Grace in what nature that some of this people converts the virtuous and good acts that other people pretends." Wishes Wolsey could speak with the governor of Bresse, if he is driven by the wind into any English port. Mach[lyng], 12 Sept. 1528.

Harman never ceases to desire expedition of justice, but Hackett thinks that if Wolsey's instructions were come the justice would not be greatly to his awan[tage].

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

12 Sept.

R. O.

4726. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD and SIR WM. HUSEY to WOLSEY.

Received his letters, dated Hampton Court the 8th, acknowledging theirs of the first. Excuse themselves for the rudeness of their writing in consequence of the great storm. "Waterworks be strange and marvellous to keep in order." Will use their utmost diligence for that purpose. Unless a surveyor be employed to repair the damage, and take charge of the business, the 200*l.* sent by Fowler to be employed by us will not avail. The jetties are rent down at both ends. In the new wharf before the Lantern Gate, which Master Treasurer made last year, there is a hole which will cost 20*l.* in stopping. The water has carried away the frame of timber before the Beecham tower. The sea has washed over the highest bank between the castle and Newnham Bridge. As they are not able to judge of 1528.

SIR ROB. WINGFIELD and SIR WM. HUSEY to WOLSEY—cont.

the damage or its cost, hope that Wolsey will provide a substantial remedy. Calais, 12 Sept. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Pp. 2. Add. Endd.

13 Sept. 4727. WILL. LORD DACRE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. iv. 506.

"After my departure, at mine arrival in these North parts upon the West Borders, mine uncle being my deputy," met lord Maxwell at Loughmabaustan on St. Laurence day (10 Aug.), and no redress could be made. A new meeting was arranged for St. Bartholomew's day (24 Aug.), when they assigned six bills to be redressed on either side, "and the assizes of either realm elect and chosen for the performance of the same." Sir Christopher demanded the arrest of Waugh, an English rebel, who was present on the ground; but the warden refused to deliver him. Sent accordingly a servant to the king of Scots, demanding not only deliverance of the said rebel, but redress of Liddisdale, and the liberation of the writer's servant, Miles Halton, who has been imprisoned in the castle of the Armitage (Hermitage) since the slaughter of my servants on Lambs' even was a twelvemonth. Encloses copies of his letter, and the king of Scots' answer.

The Scotch warden "did shoot" the said meeting appointed for St. Bartholomew's day to the 2 Sept., alleging that his brother Edw. Maxwell and the laird of Johnston had lately burned the mote of Liddale, parcel of the King's land within Nichol Forest, and slain one Gilbert Richardson; as Wolsey will see by copy of his letter, enclosed. Met with Maxwell accordingly on the 2 Sept. Could obtain no redress for the burning of the mote of Liddale; but after long conference Maxwell declared it was his sovereign's pleasure that commissioners should meet at Loughmabenstan on the 22 Oct., and that he had appointed on the part of Scotland the King's secretary, Sir Will. Scott of Balwery and Adam Oeterburn, "and proclamations made upon the same at the said meetings." Desires to know if the King will send commissioners. Wolsey will see by some copies enclosed of letters from the earl Bothwell, and Dacre's answer, (the originals of which he has sent to the King,) that there is no hope of justice for Liddisdale. Desires the King's permission to liberate Dande Nicson to redeem his servant Miles Halton. Naward, 13 Sept. Signed.

Add. Endd.

13 Sept. 4728. SIR ROGER LASSELS to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. vii. 13.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 512.

After the army was dispersed from Edinburgh, by the advice of Argyle and other of Angus's enemies the King made a proclamation for a muster at Douglas dale, the centre of Angus's enemies. The whole country was besieging the castle of Douglas. They will defend it in spite of its weakness, except the King bring his ordnance against it. Sends a bill of all that have attainted the earl of Angus, and those who had his lands. Sees no redress, except Angus have the rule. Angus ravages Lothian, and will do so till he hear the King's pleasure. Norham Castle, 13 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: "To my Lord." Endd.: "A letter of Maister Lassels to the earl of Northumberland, of the 13th of September." In another hand: "The lost letter."

Cal. B. iii. 36.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 513.

2. [Enclosure in the above.]

"The names of the persons that sat and concluded upon the earl of Angus's forfeiture, spiritual and temporal:"—Archbishop of Glasgow; bishops of Dunkeld, Aberdeen, Galloway and Dumblane; prior of St. Andrew's; earls of Argyle, Arran, Eglinton and Murray; lord Maxwell;—all great enemies of Angus.

1528.

ii. Names of those to whom his lands "is disposed :"—Argyle, Arran, Murray, Maxwell, Sir Jas. Hamilton, and the sheriff of Ayr, the lord of Buccleuch, Mark Carr, the controller, the lord of Keir, and master John Camelle;—stating the lordships given to each. Temptallante and the superiority of Angus are reserved to the King.

P. 1. Endd.

[14] Sept. 4729. ARCHIBALD EARL OF ANGUS to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Wrote on the 10th, of matters then occurring, leaving other things to be shown the King by a special friend of his. Thought none so convenient as this bearer, his brother germane, for whom he desires credence, as he is so "wrongusly done to" by his unfriends. Coldingham Abbey, — Sept. 1528. Signed.

P. 1, broad sheet. Add. Endd. by Wriothesley.

14 Sept. 4730. ARCHD. EARL OF ANGUS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Wrote on the 11th of such matters as occurred, deferring the remainder to be sent by a great friend of his. Sends now his brother germane, and hopes Wolsey, whose wisdom has pacified "mekill of the hail Cristianite," will take pains to redress his wrongs. Coldingham Abbey, 14 Sept. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4731. THE SAME to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

To the same effect. Coldingham Abbey, 14 Sept. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

[Sept.] 4732. DARCY to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

Has heard from several persons who came from London of the death of my lord of Winchester. In Doncaster some that came straight from the term last, said they had seen him buried. Was thus reminded to look up a bond he has of Wolsey for payment of 200*l.*, which Wolsey has since renewed and confirmed, as he will see by copies and letters sent to Mr. Lister and Darcy's son Arthur by his servant Roger Aytten. The originals are in Wolsey's own hand. As Wolsey has the bishop of Winchester's bond, of which the day is long past, hopes he will send the 200*l.* by Mr. Lister, for this year has been the dearest he ever saw; his house-keeping has cost him double what it ever did.

Draft, fol., p. 1.

[Sept.] 4733. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 209.

B. M.

"[After o]ur most humble recommen[dations, please it your Grace to und]erston[d that my lord cardin[al Campegius arrived] here in Paris, the 14th day of this [month at] [of] the clock in the afternoon, recey- by fifteen or sixteen bishops and arch[bishops, the] said Cardinal to eschew the m[ultitude] had prevented his hour in comy[ng, so that the] prelates met him but at the en[trance to the town.] And the legate Salviati, who came him within the town, we with a right [good company,] met him three miles without the town. [We would have] met him farther off, had not he a[rrived] hour, and we have been letted by th[e obsequies of] Mons. de Lautrec, wherent the King [desired us] to be present that day. The same n[ight we went to him], and saluted him in the King's high[ness's name, and] also in your Grace's, and delivered also [your letters] making unto him such offers as we and as we knew right well should [be in accordance with the] Kinges highnesses pleasure and yours, the he gave thanks accordingly; but he [said he would] take but horses and mules for h[is journey] the rest. He said he would not sp[are] ne yet your Grace's, when need [were] himself bound of duty ff to do the had, but that he sho[uld] [for t]hat the King's highness and a[ls]o your Grace should thin[k]e if he took nothing of us tha[t we had not done] our duty in offering it unto h[im] the; because I have been famyl[iar with him in tim]es past, a part by myself, desyry[d] es ceremonies, and to take 500 or 600 cr[owns or m]ore, if need should be, in effect none oth[er] it plainly that he had sufficient till [he came] into England, and now would nothing [but that if] necessity should require, then he would be [He] was that day visited by the duke of F [and] many other noblemen. The next day the visited him, and was brought to the Ky[ng] dinner by the cardinal of Bourbon. The Ki[ng received] him very honorably and lovingly, and ca him bareheaded a good part of a long g and offered him the right hand, and th refused, he had him to a window and h[eld] communica- tion with him two long hours. The communy[cation being] finished, the said cardinal Campegius took [his lea]ve of the King, and was brought unto my Lady [wh]o also received him with great humanity, and held [a] communication with him the better part of a e showed us all this communication the ways of "

1528.

[CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY]—cont.

Mutilated.

16 Sept.

R. O.

4734. GEO. THROKMORTON to WOLSEY.

Has written at various times since the death of Sir Wm. Compton. Begs to have an answer by the bearer. Would have been with him, "but Mr. Dean of your college will be with me this week." Sends his son. Ravanston, 16 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

16 Sept.

R. O.

4735. CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO to WOLSEY,

Has received his two letters dated 21 and 22 August; one at Orleans, and the other at Paris, which he reached on the 14th. As he cannot sit on horseback, requires a litter and other conveniences. Will have to stay at Paris two or three days. Will say no more, as he hopes soon to see him. Paris, 16 Sept. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 Sept.

Theiner, Mon.
Hist. Hibern.
et Scotorum,
p. 567.

4736. CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO to GIACOMO SALVIATI, the Pope's Secretary.

On the 8th at Orleans I received yours of the 21st August, and on the 13th your second letter of the 28th. Since then I have arrived in Paris, and received yours of the 3rd by the hands of the Legate here. I will say nothing of my journey and its perils, or of my infirmity. My negotiation proceeds smoothly. As you recommend, I will endeavor to give no cause for scandal. These [English] ambassadors urge me to depart. The bp. of Bath returns with me to England, and Dr. Tayler remains here. Master Francis Brian, of the King's chamber, is here; he came many days ago to accompany me to England. In order to obtain a litter, and to get some clothes made, I shall not depart hence for two days. As to proceeding prudently, I will follow your instructions, and what I know to be the Pope's mind. I promised him that I would exert all my powers to move [the King from his determination]. As to not binding myself, or giving any promise, his Holiness may trust to my fidelity. Neither with all his kingdom, nor with all his treasure, will he (the King) be able to cause me to deviate from my duty. I will be careful, when speaking with him, not to promise any sentence. If you mean to say that I am to do nothing whatever without informing the Pope, I do not see how, in case it should be impossible to shake the King's opinion, the trial can be avoided without scandal. They would think I had come to hood-wink them, and might resent it. You know how much that would involve. But, so far as the sentence itself is concerned, I will observe all your instructions, and they shall never learn my opinion until I am about to give judgment,—that is to say, if the cause should proceed so far.

1528.

I made my entry into Paris on the 14th, and had audience of the King (Francis) on the 15th. We discussed the universal peace, and the affairs of Ravenna and Cervia. Francis said he desired nothing more than peace, in order to recover his children, but he would rather leave them in Spain forty years than stain his honor. He declared that all the fault rested with the Emperor, and referred himself to the king of England his good brother, to the Pope, and to the whole of Christendom. The result of the siege of Naples, and the nature of the Emperor (who will not be influenced by force), together with the Pope's authority and the king of England's assistance, will probably prepare the way for this peace. We also discussed this matrimonial cause.* Subsequently I had audience of the Queen mother (sic, i.e. Louise). The duke of Albany has visited me, and explained his desires with respect to the affairs of Scotland. According to the Pope's command, I will not fail to render him every assistance. He desires to return thither for the benefit of the kingdom and of the King, being summoned by the King with the consent of the king of England. In this matter he desires to be authorized by the Pope, and that the Pope will promise to confirm all his negotiations with the king of England. Paris, 16 Nov. (sic, for Sept.) 1528.

Ital.

16 Sept.

Forcacci,
p. 19.

4737. SANGA to CAMPEGGIO.

I am ashamed of repeating the same thing so many times, especially as you were well informed of the Pope's mind on your departure; but every day stronger reasons are discovered which compel the Pope to remind you that you are to act cautiously, and to use your utmost skill and address in diverting the King from his present desire, and restoring him to his former love towards the Queen. Should you find this impossible, you are not to pronounce in any manner without a new and express commission from hence. If in satisfying his Majesty the Pope would incur merely personal danger, his love and obligations to the King are so great that he would content him unhesitatingly; but as this involves the certain ruin of the Apostolic See and the Church, owing to recent events, the Pope must beware of kindling an inextinguishable conflagration in Christendom. The Emperor declares himself well satisfied with the Pope's neutrality, and is willing to agree to a peace through his medium. But if so great an injury be done to the Emperor, all hope is lost of the universal peace, and the Church cannot escape utter ruin, as it is entirely in the power of the Emperor's servants. You will not, therefore, be surprised at my repeating that you are not to proceed to sentence, under any pretext, without express commission; but protract the matter as long as possible, if haply God shall put into the 1528.

* As in Campeggio's letter to Sanga, 18 Sept.

SANGA to CAMPEGGIO—cont.

King's heart some holy thought, so that he may not desire from his Holiness a thing which cannot be granted without injustice, peril, and scandal. Viterbo, 16 Sept. 1528.

Ital.

[Sept.]

Lettere
di Principi,
ii. 127.

4738. [SANGA] to CARDINAL CAMPEGGIO.

Your letter of the 16th from Paris gave much satisfaction to the Pope, as also your good offices with the French king. Your Lordship must understand once for all that you are to regard whatever shall be written to you by cardinal Salviati as if you received it from the Pope himself, for I shall generally refer you to my letters to him. The Pope will anxiously await your letters from England. You are to acknowledge the Pope's obligations to the King and the cardinal of York, and to allude to his trust in their support under all circumstances; for this letter will find you so recently arrived in England, that you will scarcely have had time to execute your first commission. The principal reason for the Pope's satisfaction with his own neutrality is this, that he has done nothing contrary to the opinion of his Majesty and the cardinal of York, who approved of the course which he has taken. Had the Pope acted otherwise, he would now be plunged in total ruin. He has great hopes of concluding peace with the aid of the King and Cardinal. I write to the cardinal (Salviati) that the duke of Albany should send to the Pope, written with his own hand, the matters for which he desires his Holiness to enter into an obligation for him to the king of England. The Pope will become security for him very willingly.*

Ital.

[Sept.]

Lettere
di Principi,
ii. 128.

4739. [SANGA] to CARDINAL SALVIATI.

Cardinal Campeggio has written hither of the duke of Albany's desire to return to Scotland, and that the Pope should become surety for him to the king of England, in order that the latter might not take it amiss. The Pope will do so willingly, if the Duke will explain his wishes more clearly, and write a letter with his own hand containing the matters for which he desires the Pope to enter into an obligation.†

Ital.

16 Sept.

R. O.

4740. The TOWN of HAMBURG to HENRY VIII.

Complaining of a piratical attack made by Nicholas Buckbrock and other Englishmen on a vessel freighted from their port to Iceland, under the command of Hans Schomaker, at the port of Gamelwick. Hamburgh, 16 Sept. 1528.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 Sept.

R. O.

4741. JOHN PHRYERUS (FRYER) to WOLSEY.

Wolsey's generosity has caused him to break his silence occasioned partly by his great grief at these very sad times. Speaks highly of Wolsey's generosity, which he had often experienced before. His memory will be dear to all posterity. Owes to Wolsey his restitution to life from that destruction into which he had precipitated himself by his own folly. "Nam in hac universa tragœdia nihil erat omnium, quod animum meum æque disturbabat ac dolore lacerabat, quam quod verebar semper peccatum meum

* The date and signature are omitted; this letter being inserted between two others of 29 Sept. and 3 Oct. 1528.

† Placed between two other letters of 29 Sept. and 3 Oct. 1528.

1528.

in tantam iracundiam animum tuum convertisse, ut eum posthac nullis victimis aut lachrymis propiciari queam." Londini, ex publico carcere qui vulgo dicitur the Flete, xvi. die Sept.

Lat., pp. 2. Add.: Thomæ Card. et Archiepiscopo Ebor.

4742. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,
VI.

"The reasonable request of your last letter, with the pleasure also that I take to know them true, causeth me to send you now these news. The Legate which we most desire arrived at Paris on Sunday or Monday† last past, so that I trust by the next Monday to hear of his arrival at Calais, and then I trust within a while after to enjoy that which I have so longed for to God's pleasure and our both comfort. No more to you at this present, mine own darling, for lack of time, but that I would you were in mine arms or I in yours, for I think it long since I kissed you. Written after the killing of an hart, at 11 of the clock, minding with God's grace tomorrow mytely tymely to kill another, by the hand of him which I trust shortly shall be yours.—HENRY R."

4743. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 219.
B. M.

" a wretch who called La er of his faith that would n he sware a great oath that his de[fi]ance was made long ago and now sit[h] Emperor's letter, if the said defiance he sware he would powder it on a no with worse words. And as touching by us unto him of exasperating the[m]peror his great appearance of peace to the le enterprise, he said this with other successes [should cause the] Emperor to know himself and to come to [reason. He then laid] his hand upon his sword and said da pacem, and said that as for him h[e] was defendant] and the Emperor provoker, by the reason [whereof the Emperor] must appoint the field, and he genus
a[rmorum] Emperor would come to Calais by the f he would fight with him according to h unto the Emperor, which he called his in deed libellus ille provocatorius ad in the vulgar Italian tongue, and sa would be ready to fight with the Emperor the King's highnesses his brothers a mitigation and redulcing of
in his chartell, he said th [an]d conditional, u[pon]
 being in the Emperor's h[ands] [suc]he time as the Viceroy brought signed, wherein mention was m[ade] n his promise; at which time he the Viceroy that if the Emperor would s[ay] que il mentoyt par la gorge. He said that [de]siryd him to spare such language, for exasp[erating the] Emperor; and Alarcon said, "Juros Deos esto [h]ablar de pultrono mas de valent cavallero [t]hat he could no less of his honor. He said he had already solemnly spoken the words opyn[ly in the] presence of the Emperor's and all other ambassadors [to whom he] delivered sundry copies, as well to the Emperor's a[mbassadors] as other, so as all the world knew it well ynough, and] as he was right well assured also the Emperor. H[e] said that] the Emperor hath not only provoked him by his [cartel], but sent it him by writing subscribed with his o[wn hand, y]ea and spoken unto divers of the noble of

† He reached Paris on Monday, 14 Sept.

1528.

[CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY]—cont.

Spain [and even u]nto his own ambassador that he was a man of no h[onor] and if he had esteemed his honor he would have a[n]swered his] message; the which reproach and exprobat[i]on seem [to gri]eve him marvellously, insomuch that he said [that he] should never have peace ne his children, the[m]p[er]or not being] answered. We said, God forbid, but th[at] Emperor, but now the Badly mutilated.

4744. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 220.

B. M.

“[After] our most humble recom[m]endations, please it your Grace to un]derstand that your Grace’s letters arrived here the 16th of the same French king and my Lady his m[other removed from] Saint Germainys to St. Denys b[efore] day we followed and spake with the [French king] after his dinner. We showed first of the truce, thanked be God, then concluded. He said that he had sh[owed the Emperor that] between him and his brother the king [of England there] should be no difficulties. We then made with him advertised by a letter of mast[er] difficulties were agreed and surely being once assured of the contribution reckoned the contrary but to conclude th sub quibusvis conditionibus. Their fear w[as that the Emperor] would have coartyd them, and an ar[ticle been made] upon new offers before ye would have [agreed to] the contribution. As touching the rev showed him heretofore upon advertise[ment] Silvester, what was thought exped[ient] last letters, we certified your Grace w in that behalf. We now eftsoons moved unto the King the matter your Grace thought expedient honor and upon a [c]ommandment hath been we should read it and behold ale and make relation thereof un[to] [the] same as we did by our last letters. He say[d] [the] recey[t of the same letter, he should not sen[d] [he]rald, his honor should be too highly stayny[d] evir, and that the King’s highness his bro[ther, whom he] knew to be a prince of as much honor as [any prince c]an be in earth, would never counsel ne advise [him so] ne your Grace nother, after ye shall have seen of the Emperor’s, a copy whereof was sent you by depeche. And after many words at the last h[e asked] us, what your Grace would that he should do. We [said that] your Grace was as studious of his honor as ye w[ere of the] King’s highness your own master’s, and like a had counselled his Highness to suspend the sh of a very sharp answer made unto the Emperor’s s[aid] book, unto such time as it should appear what e[ffect should] come of this new treating of peace. So likewise we your Grace now with great instance required his m[ajesty] likewise for the good of peace to spare and suspend [the dec]laring of this message sent by the herald and ing, then might his message be done by his [li]kewise the King’s book should be delivered in t consisted as much the honor of his l in the executing”

Badly mutilated.

17 [Sept.]

4745. [CLERK and TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 224.

B. M.

“ que otherwise in danger heed lest the Pope for the re compelled to take some extreme way diplease them. Their answer was that they were desirous thereof; as fo[r] should be, and what should be devised [by the King's highness] and your Grace, for the attaining of the [same, they would not] fail to follow it. As for the restitution [of Cervia] and Ravenna, it was not unknown [to us what they had] done already, and that they would not ce[ase] as in deed they should be restored, as of g[ood] cause they] ought to be, and that herein they would not [fail to do their] uttermost, and that as much for the King's [sake] as for any other cause, in whose cause they cardinal Campegius to be favorable d that if he so did, they would deserve it v wise then they would if it were showed parsons. As for the news of Naples be into the worst part then otherwise, viz., that [the marquis of] Saluce, the prince of Navarre, the king of and the countie of Ragon been taken pri[soners] nulle sunt reliquie exercitus gallici, vel i yet there is no certainty." Paris, 17

1528.

Below, in Clerk's hand: Your Grace is m[ost] humble] servants, (signatures lost.)

Badly mutilated.

17 Sept. 4746. JOHN HACKET to TUKE.

R. O.

Wrote on the 12th. Madame Vendôme arrived here yesterday, and was received here "cassy honorably." She brings with her Vendôme's eldest daughter, and is not as welcome as methinks she is worthy. She has some particular credence from the French king and his mother to the lady Margaret. "Wheddlyr the ton commission sall sweyt the todyr, as yet I cannot say." The lords of Antwerp are laboring much for Richard Harman. Is certified by my lord of Palermo, chief of the Privy Council, that justice can be no longer delayed touching Harman. Wishes for instructions touching the acts and treasons of Harman. Mechlin, 17 Sept. 1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

17 Sept. 4747. NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal.B.iii.291.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 308.

In answer to Wolsey's letters received 11 Sept., sends certain letters of his servant Roger Lassels about the earl of Angus. Will receive the Earl as the King desires, if he be driven out of Scotland. Has written to the king and queen of Scots for the appointment of personages to meet on the Borders, urging them, on his own head, to the expedition thereof, as the Borders are disturbed both by Angus and others, and are in doubt whether they shall have peace or war. Sir Ralph Fenwick lately stopped an invasion from Lyddersdale, and took prisoner Edmund Noble, the chief outlaw the King had in Scotland, who will be put to execution. Would like to wait upon the King and Wolsey for eight weeks, on matters touching these Borders, and that Sir Thos. Tempest and Rob. Bewes should be charged to come up with him. Sends also letters from Angus and Lasselles, received this day. Topelyf, 17 Sept. Signed.

Add.

18 Sept. 4748. LORD JAMES BUTLER to GARDINER.

R. O.

Since his arrival in Ireland, has partly certified my lord's Grace of affairs here by letters and instructions. Is compelled to be importunate, and begs Gardiner will secure attention to his suit in his great necessity. Powkes Cowrte (Powerscourt?), 18 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my singular good friend, Mr. Doctor Stevyns. Endd.

1528.

18 Sept.

Cal. D. x. 225.

B. M.

4749. [CLERK to WOLSEY.]

"[Ple]ase it your Grace, the cardinal C[ampegius] [th]at your Grace and he together shall publican, and that, as it was at h[is] former visit to] Englonde, one of his folks shall ha[ve] to make an oration], he hath none other man meet to do [it] . . . [for he] hath not a learned man with him, bu[t] whom your Grace knoweth well enough have the oration, which oration, as h[e] saith, shall] consist in laude pacis, and in exhorting [the King's] highness to persevere as he hath begun, to he[lp and carry] forwards the ways of peace; inasmuch [as he] is only the prince who having least ca[use] himself, with other princes, may with his wi[sse counsel] and authority interpone himself for th[e good of the] same, with much more profit than a[n]y other prince] should, with such other reasons as may se[em] best for the] purpose, without any speaking in specie of [the King's] great matter, but only in genere, that [it hath] comen to the Pope's knowledge that th[ere are] difficulties risen in that realm conce[rning the King's] person, for the declaration whereof the auc[tority of the] See Apostolic, was thought very ne[cessary by his] Holiness for the King's highnesses g[reat service and] merits towards the same See [for which end he hath sent] you both right large and am[p]le commission] tate to take order [high]nes. The cardinal Campegi[us wished us to adv]ertise your Grace hereof, to the intent th[at in case your Gra]ce should think any other thing mee[t to be spo]kyn, your Grace would vouchsafe to adv[ertise him th]ereof, for he would order himself accordy[ngly. We t]hought it also good to advertise your Grace th[ereof, to the] intent your Grace may give warning thereof [to him] that shall make the answer, which I beseech your] Grace may be some other than I, for on my [conscience I] have not best my health, and am and shal[l be] occupied with the conducting of my lord card[inal] Campegius, and with attending and entertainin[g him] by the way, that I shall very evil enow [during this] journeying intend to any such business." Pa[r]is, Friday, 18 Sept.

Mutilated.

[18 Sept.]

Cal. D. x. 207.

B. M.

4750. [CLERK] to WOLSEY.

" my lord cardinal [Campegius] means of treating of peace [dif]ficulties were alleged. The said said that he would take the pain t himself, and desired that they wol[d] give him licence to pass through Spain for that purpose. They said u marvelled that he would return by S[pain] that he should not be welcome thither that matter to pass; for the which h this journey into England. The French [king told] us that the said Cardinal answer[d him that] at his coming into England, when he [should have] spoken with the King's highness, his hig[hness should] peradventure change his purpose or the matter. My Lady shewed us Cardinal answered her that when should be done and justly done, that not do none other, but be also contented [How be] it both of them said that the sai[d cardinal] Campegius made the matter very The which if he did, I do thy[nk] did make the matter the more saw them peradventure and inquisitive then his opinion and s some cognition as judge in 1528.

... vyd both the King, and also my nt to their satisfaction, for they h[ave] such an opi[n]yon in my said lord cardinal
C[ampegio] to give judg[ement] rather upon an old grudge without [cause than u]pon any good ground. I thought to ad[vertise] your Grace hereof, for I think there shall be writt[en] hence to the ambassador of France somewhat matter to be declared unto your Grace."

(In Clerk's hand.)—"The news been still uncertain. It should now seem that was retired to a place called Aversa, and that th . .
. were compelled to dedition at the discretion of thenny[my].
Andrea Doria with his gallies is arrived at Jeen w meen. It is thought that Jeen is revolted and at l [but] these tidings be not yet believed in the Court, albe[it by] many they be spoken for a truth.

"My lord cardinal Campegio is arrived this day here seven leagues out of Paris in a horse litter, troubled [with] the gout all the way.
Tomorrow being Saturday he at Clermont, other seven leagues;
Sunday, at Bryghtwell† [l]egis; Monday, at Amyas, seven leagues; Tuesday, at Abavyll[e] [We]dnesday, at Motrell; Thursday, at Boloynge; Friday ace at Calais, which I have written un[to] Mr. Win[g]field to prepare accordingly.

" to cause provision to "

Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

18 Sept.

Laemmer,
Mon. Vat.
p. 24.

4751. CAMPEGGIO to SANGA, the Pope's Secretary.

I have had audience of the King (Francis). We discussed the universal peace, and the affairs of Ravenna. I then endeavored to ascertain his sentiments respecting the principal occasion of my legation. His Majesty inquired how this matrimonial cause was progressing. I replied that I was one of the judges deputed, and that the sentence depended on the evidence; but it was impossible as yet to say what determination would be taken, except that there would be no lack of justice. I added, "But what is your Majesty's opinion?" He answered that he was not learned, and in such cases he would adopt the opinion of any one who understood more about it than himself; though he regarded the King his brother as wise and good, and [believed] that, when he knew she (Katharine) was his wife, he would not attempt any such thing; but if she were not his wife, it would be a great matter to persist in a sin which involved the salvation of the soul. Paris, 18 Sept. 1528.

Ital.

— Sept.

Cal. D. x. 358.
B. M.

4752. [TAYLER] to WOLSEY.

"[W]here it hath pleased the King's highness and [your Grace that my l]orde of Bath shall return home in to Eng[land, and I to r]emayne here, saving the pleasure and comman[dment of the King,] it were to my discomfort and great labors h for sith my said lord of Bath's coming in[to France] he hath had all the cure, labors, charges, and con . .
. matters and causes as have here passed or hav[e been done by] your gracious commandment, all which he with fresh a furthwise and discreet ordering with moderate diligence after his desire, hath ever brought to [good effect,] and where any difficulties hath required reasoning by authority of learning, his opinions with laud
. finally obtained and were allowed. I assure your [Grace that if any] other man had come, saving he only, many things should not so desiredly a passed or with long [delay and] slow expedition. With the King, Madame and C[ouncil] here his wisdom is greatly esteemed and allowed[, and 1528.

[TAYLER] to WOLSEY—cont.

now] that inconstant fortune of war hath somewhat [turned her] whele, I fear greatly lest here shall arise some matters, in] the which I shall greatly lack the substantial and [good advice of] my said lord of Bath. Howbeit, with your gracious instructions, I shall do the best] of my little power wit, assuring your Grace that faithful diligence a . . . shall never lack nor fail. Furthermore, beseeching [your Grace to] thank my said lord of Bath for the loving and [good entertai]nement that he hath showed to me for the time [of his being] here. His Lordship made me partner of all thy[ngs that were] done, but the cure, labor and ordering was of his penning, as evidently it might appear by his [and the] pure tenor of his writings. The state of this news as we have, his Lordship can better [tell unto your Grace] than I can write." From P[aris], . . . Sept. 1528.

Mutilated. Add.

18 Sept.

4753. CLERK to STEPHEN GARDINER.

R. O.

If there is no remedy but that the Cardinal* must lie in my house, I must take it patiently. It is strange that as there are other houses better than mine, "men cannot be contented with them." I should like to know where I am to lodge. My lord's Grace must give his commandment to the owners, or else my folks will not be admitted. I have told my servants to sue to you, and to no one else, except Tuke. Do for me in this case as ye would I should do for you. Paris, 18 Sept.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful master Dr. Stephyns, with my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

18 Sept.

4754. CLERK to GARDINER.

Harl. MS. 6989,

f. 14.

B. M.

Has received his letters of Sept. 2. "I assure you that lewd knave Jamys that never del good hath so paynted Norwyche place to the Cardynall (Campeggio) that it seemyth that logyng hym ther ye wold have logyd him in a pygge sty." He must therefore be lodged in Bath Place; but Duresme Place would doubtless have been better, as it is a goodlier house than Bath Place. If Wolsey cannot spare Durham Place, or otherwise disposes of Bath Place, Gardiner must ask Wolsey for some convenient lodging for Clerk, as it would grieve him to be turned out of his own, unless it were the King's and Wolsey's pleasure. Asks Gardiner to find out Wolsey's wish, and let Clerk's people know. Knows Campeggio would be better lodged at Durham Place, but would not tell him so here, as he would think he did not wish to let him have his house. Asks him to tell his servants to provide against his coming. Luzerche, 18 Sept.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Dr. Stephyns, with my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

18 Sept.

4755. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

On 9 Sept. 1528, in the priory of Felixstowe alias Fylstoue, Norwich dioc., before Stephen Gardiner, LL.D., archdeacon of Worcester, and Rowland Lee, doctor of Decrees, canon of Lichfield, sitting as judges, there was presented a commission of cardinal Wolsey, under his seal, the effect of which the said Gardiner declared to the prior and two other monks; and, with the authority of the Pope, and consent of the founders, proceeded to the suppression of the said monastery, appointing John Irlond, notary public, as his scribe; applied the goods of the priory, both movable and immovable, to

* Campeggio.

1528.

Wolsey's college at Ipswich, and decreed that the prior and convent should enter other monasteries of the same Order. On the prior and monks being asked what monastery they would choose, they asked time for consideration; which was allowed them until the arrival of the Legate at London. There being then present Thos. Cromwell, ——— Hanes, Batchelor of Theology, Geo. Pole, and others, named.

On 11 Sept. 1528, in the convent of Romberowe, Gardiner proceeded to suppress the monastery by virtue of the same authority, and apply the goods in the same way, and before the same witnesses.

On 18 Sept. 1528, Gardiner suppressed the priory of Canons Regular, Bromhill, in the same way, and before the same witnesses.

Lat., pp. 4.

19 Sept. 4756. REGINALD POLE to ROMULUS AMAZEUS.

Egerton MS.
1998, f. 4.
B. M.

Performed the promise he made when Amazeus departed, of recommending him to the English ambassador as soon as his health allowed him, Gave a letter for him to Marmaduke, who forgot it, and went without it; at which he was much troubled, fearing that Amazeus would suspect his diligence. Padua, 13 cal. Oct.

Hol., Lat., p. 1.

19 Sept. 4757. For JOHN ALEYN, ARCHBISHOP ELECT OF DUBLIN.

Rym. xiv. 266.

Grant of the issues and money which the Archbishop is bound to pay for the temporalities during the voidance of the bishopric. Hampton Court, 19 Sept.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 24.

19 Sept. 4758. For JOHN ALEN, ARCHBISHOP ELECT OF DUBLIN.

S. B.
Rym. xiv. 268.

To be chancellor of the lordship and land of Ireland. Del. Hampton Court, 19 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 19.

19 Sept. 4759. SIR JOHN RAWSON, Prior of Kilmaynam in Ireland.

S. B.

To be treasurer of the Exchequer in Ireland, with the usual fees out of the customs and subsidies in the ports of Dublin and Drogheda. Del. Hampton Court, 19 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 23.

20 Sept. 4760. [TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 337.
B. M.

"Please it your Grace, the while that the French kyn[g] cardinal Campege, the duke of Albany come to [and had] communion with me. He enquired of the state an[d health of your] Grace, of the which he said he would be right gla[d to hear. He] further showed to me that young Mr. Sandys, at h[is coming] out of England, told him that your Grace enquired [after the] said Duke, and that your Grace had many good an[d favorable words] of him, and that your Grace would a spoke with him if that he had be there, with many other fair words to [this effect], which he replied after immediately to Mr. Bryan, gre of long peace and unity betwixt England and [Scotland], heartily praying God that the King's highness and your [Grace might] have the bringing up and the nourishing of [the young king of] Scots in his youth, and wished that he were in t[he King's] hands out of the wanton counsel of the Scots. [He said he would give his] soul to the Devil if he said not as he thought, add[ing that it] were feasible and easily to be brought to pass, consy[dering the] sure amity and firm peace betwixt England and [France], saying that he would be right glad to come in message [from the] French king to the King's highness and your Grace, [at his] own charge and cost, to solicit and to bring the [same to good] effect. And somewhat to show the declaration of [his mind] he hath sent to me a letter desiring me to send by Wherefore I beseech your Grace I may have knowledge [if the said] letter please you, and how hereafter I shall use m[yself to him] in familiarity, and that he may understand th[at your Grace] hath received his letters." Paris, 20 Sept. 1528.

1528.

[TAYLER to WOLSEY]—cont.

Mutilated.

20 Sept.

R. O.

4761. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE, Treasurer of the Chamber.

Wrote last on the 17th. Sends him a packet of letters from the bp. of Bath. Wishes that Wolsey would order Sir John Butler to take charge of the chaplain of the Staple and young Corbett, or that the bp. of Bath may convey them hence now at his passing. Calais, 20 Sept. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

20 Sept.

Cleop. E. iv.

46°.

B. M.

Strype's Mem.
ii. 133.4762. EDMUND, ABBOT OF YORK, to WOLSEY.

Is informed by letters from the prior of Romeburgh, that, with the view of suppressing the priory and uniting it to St. Peter's, Ipswich, Wolsey's officers arrived there on the 11th, and after reading letters commissisional from Wolsey, from the King, and from the Pope, entered and took away the movable goods of the priory, "being a member of our monastery, and given unto us by Alien Niger, sometime earl of Richmond, and our second co-founder." Among them were certain muniments belonging to the monastery of York, lately sent to the priory for the trial of certain rights now in dispute between the abbey of York and men of worship in Cambridgeshire. As a great part of the lands of the abbey of York were granted by the said Alien Niger, wherewith they are charged under censures, begs that the priory be allowed to remain a member of their monastery, as it has been 300 years.

The rents are little more than 30*l.* a year, and it will relieve the minds of the Abbot and his brethren. Is quite willing to give him 300 marks towards his college instead. York, 20 Sept. Signed.

Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

21 Sept.

R. O.

Ellis, 3 Ser.

ii. 149.

4763. WARHAM to WOLSEY.

Received today his letters, dated Oking, 18 Sept., bidding him receive the legate Campegius, and accompany him to Rochester. Was at Canterbury lately, intending to stay there most of the winter, but was obliged for his health's sake to remove. Fears that if he went thither now or in October, at which time he is usually troubled with his old disease in his head, he would not escape without extreme danger. In spite of all precautions he feels signs of it, and he fears that after the shaking in his horse litter he should not be able to do anything. Would be right glad to wait on the said Legate, but it would not be meet for him to go in a litter while the other rode on horseback, and he cannot now ride three miles on horseback. Asks therefore to be excused. Desires credence for his steward, whom he sends. Otforde, St. Mathies (Matthew's) Day. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To, &c., my lord Cardinal of York and Legate de latere.
Endd.: A letter from my lord of Canterbury. 21 Sept.

1528.

22 Sept. 4764. NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 313.

Sends a letter from Angus which was brought to him on the 21 Sept., with a credence, desiring Northumberland to mediate for him to the King, and stating that the king of Scots, who paid little regard to the letters of the King and Wolsey, intended to raise an army on the 29th, ostensibly against Angus, but probably against England, as the Earl was at Coldingham, within seven miles of Norham. Thinks no redress will be made on the Borders unless Angus be reinstated. Topelyf, 22 Sept. Signed.

Add. Endd.

22 Sept. 4765. [KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, to WOLSEY.]

Cott. App. 69.

R. M.

Confess themselves not learned enough to write even to bishops of the lowest class, but they write as he desired them to do in his letter, which they kissed, on account of his commendation of Dr. Fox and his promise of favor. In consequence of it, have elected Fox provost, and hope he will answer to the recommendations of the King and of the Cardinal. Beg him to listen to their complaints. Mention their foundation by Henry VI., and their endowment with ecclesiastical benefices as rewards for the deserving. "Defuncto jam vita Doctore Hacumblen [de nobis] optime merito rediit ad nos jus presentationis vicarie de Prescott reripuisse an jus . . . e viderit ipse. Nihil enim nos volumus dero en . . . [ob]secramus te per gloriam tuam, imo per Christi meminere nos scholares esse non ejusvis adduci profecto adhuc non possumus ut clientulos. Caterum lint atque optimis literis ornavit, quique modernas hareses sic arcere atque extingu[ere] est ut atletam dixeris esse Christianissimum. Hunc si quid apud te valet con nostra candide excepias et dilige, clientulosque tuos omnes solito amore p E sodalitis nostro [de]cimo kal. Oct."

Pp. 2, mutilated.Incipit: Etsi celsitudinem tuam, ter maxime heros, &c.

23 Sept. 4766. FITZWILLIAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

St. P. i. 326.

The King, hunting in this park, showed me he was advertised from you that the Legate (Campeggio) intends to be at Calais tomorrow. He will therefore be glad to be at your manor of Hampton Court on Saturday next. As I told him you could not conveniently remove by that day, he wished to be at your house on Saturday or Monday at the furthest, where he will spend three or four days before his repair to Greenwich. Guildford, Wednesday, 23 Sept. Signed.

Add. Endd.: Sir William Fitzwilliam, treasurer of the Kinges House, of xxij. of September.

24 Sept. 4767. [CLERK to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 297.

R. M.

"[After my] most humble recommendat[ions], please it your Grace to unde[r]stand that my lord Card[inal] Campegio ever si[n]ce our departing from Paris h[as] been very sore troubled with the gout in both [hands and also] somewhat in his feet, and for all that [he has put himself] to as much pain as was possible. [Without tarrying] or sojourning any day, thanked be G[od], he has arrived here in Moottrell, still carried [in a litter], for he cannot ride, his feet being n[ot able to] abide the squasse of the stirrup, ne h[is hands] to hold the bridle, as more plainly [Sir Francis Bryan] will inform your Grace, who hath ry[ght well done] his part here, I assure your Grace, in a[ssisting] diligently and conducting the said C[ardinal], as in providing him from time to time h[orses for] his carriages with all other manner of and was contented to depart from us t to advertise your Grace of his arrival, [and of the] estate and disposition he is in, and to p[rovide such things] as shall be necessary for his transport [from] Dover to London, as well a mule f[or the Cardinal], and horses for his company, as a hor[se litter in case the] gout shall continue, as it is likely [to do] for, as he saith, this is the ty[me during] the which he is accustomed [to be most troubled with]e that disease.

1528.

[CLERK to WOLSEY]—cont.

 T [ve]rye necessary for his re ther serving God willing ng, but that your Grace hath wry[tten to us t]hat we shall there find such assur the case shal require.”
 Mott[reul, Thursday mo]rning, 24 Sept. Subscribed in Clerk's hand: Your Grace is most humbyll cha[plain.] (Signature lost.)

Mutilated.

— Sept.
 Cal. D. x. 228.
 B. M.

4768. [CLERK to WOLSEY.]

“[After m]y most humble recommendation, [please it your Grace to] understand, that according to the with my former letters yesterday, being month, we arrived here in Calais
 [where my lord Cardi]nall was right honorably received [with] spears and other horsemen a mile bey[ond] After, on the side Newnam Bridge, t the town and the lieutenant of the s accompanied, and last of all by the de[puty] and comptroller, a little from the gate [to] his lodging in my lady Banester's th marketplace, ranged on both sides all in very good order, and every thing trimmed for that purpose. The same night [I received] your Grace's letters of the 23rd of this mo[nth, and] immediately Master Deputy and I to gy[ther, going] unto the Legate, made congratulations u[n]to him in your Grace's name of his arrival, and [I informed him] how sorry ye were of his disease [in such] words as came to my remembrance all to his great consolation and comf[ort]. The gout troubleth him still in so much [that he entered] the town in his horse litter, all tho[ugh he had other]wise determined to have tak[en horse at] Newname Bridge. Saving content that everything be yned, and saith he will take p[ains, be he ne]ver so troubled with his gout, . . .
 [I as]sure your Grace he hath been marvello[us] . . .
 [si]nst his coming from Paris, and hath many a bitter kyrieleyson. I have declared [your] Grace is pleasure unto Mr. Deputy, and oth[er officers of t]his town here, concerning the Cardinal's in[terta]ynement, as well for presents as otherwise, they be right glad to follow your pleasure in the [same], and they made him yesternight right honor[able] presents, as I myself divers times since met with him have and will do in ly[ke manner], assuring your Grace that there hath fallen no [lack] of gratitude or humanity since our first mee[ting] but it hath been showed him, so that I dowg[ht] not but the said Cardinal is right well satisfied. As for transporting of any horses from hence for his conducting to London, as for they of this tow[n] had but six horses, and the owners be very loth [to sen]d them over the sea. There were ten here of the [Ma]ster of the Rolls which must needs be sent h[ome] again], for he hath not many left him. I do day 40 horses and mules of mine to my folks to London to send me conduct him and his folks . . .
 at Loudon, where I am right w[illing] that] he be 1528.

lodged in Bath Place, as I would [be to do the] King's highness service in any other th[ing that it] shall please his Highness to command in[^e] beseeching your Grace that I may have whole, for it is showed me that there be and inhabitants that dwell in the better so far forth that there is no room to so that my lord of London when he fain to lodge his servants in London pa your Grace that there may be some provision to appoint me Chester or Exeter Place, for where I shall lodge my servants.

"Upon Tuesday next, by the grace of God, [wind and tide] serving, we shall take the seas. It may l[ike your Grace to] remember to send some harbinger and ma again to take up carts and make log

"The oration shall be sent your Grace by [this post], or else at the next infullenter."

Calais, . . . Sept.

Mutilated.

24 Sept.

4769. JOHN KING OF PORTUGAL to HENRY VIII.

Nero, B. 1. 74.

B. M.

Desires restitution of the goods in the ship of Antony Paciecho, which was wrecked on the English coast about a year ago. Asks that they may be given up to Roderic Fernando, his agent in Flanders, or to Francis Perso, who is now in England. Coimbra, 8 cal. Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

24 Sept.

4770. JOHN KING OF PORTUGAL to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect. Coymbra, 8 cal. Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

24 Sept.

4771. The TRUCE.

Le Glay,
Analectes
Hist., p. 196.

Reconnaissance de Henri VIII. d'avoir reçu l'acte de la ratification par Charles V. du traité de la trêve cidessus (referring to No. 4376). Oking, 24 Sept.

25 Sept.

4772. TUNSTAL to [WOLSEY].

Cleop. F. vi.

343.

B. M.

Intended to have come to Wolsey today to inform him what he had done in his progress in the diocese of London, but will not do so, as a servant of his has fallen ill, it is feared, of the great sickness. Has summoned all the clergy of his diocese, and taken their oaths as to their substance, and has taken the valuation of the benefices of men who are not resident in the diocese. Has deputed collectors in every deanery for levying the King's loan. In London, the collector has paid Mr. Wiat 450*l.*, and is collecting the rest. In the country they are likewise busy, but many of them write that few of the priests can pay ready money till after Michaelmas, when they have thrashed and sold their tithe corn; and, as the loan touches every man, none will lend money. Has taken the substance of many persons and monasteries which were excepted by a bill in his first instructions. As to those of whom he discovered that the King's demand by his letters was under the fourth part, has put the residue of the said fourth part in the collector's books, to be levied by them. In the case of some monasteries, he does not know for what the King has written, for the bill of exceptions does not always mention the sum. The abbots of St. Osythes and Bylegh, and the lady abbess of Barkyng, have received no letters, though he knows that letters were ordered to be sent to them. They have given him bills, by which it appears that the fourth part of the lands of St. Osythes amounts to 150*l.*; of Barkyng, to 155*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*; and of Bylegh, to 49*l.* 10*s.*

1528.

TUNSTAL to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Advises Wolsey to send letters to them for these sums, deducting what has been paid in accordance with former letters. Could not put these sums in the collector's books, not knowing for what the King had written. Will call upon the collectors to bring up the money as soon as levied. London, 25 Sept. Signed.

Pp. 2.

[25 Sept.] 4773. HENNEGE to WOLSEY.

R. O.
St. P. 1. 325.

The King is glad you liked your pastime of hunting as well as you did when you were with him, and devised that you shall come to him on Monday next, that you and he may have pastime together two or three days. He will receive the ambassador of Florence on Sunday next, but said nothing of his reward, and I durst not urge it. The King is favorable to Norris, as you will see by his letter. I have delivered your letter to Wolman, who will not fail to wait upon you. The King is favorable for the ordering of Hampton Court and Richmond. Oking, Friday. Signed.

Add. : To my Lord's grace. Endd.

25 Sept. 4774. JOHN KING OF HUNGARY to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. F. 1. 81.
B. M.

Was elected King after the death of king Lewis by all the peers except three, these having been corrupted by the promises of Ferdinand king of Bohemia, who has now invaded the country with great cruelty, and refuses king John's offer to submit to the arbitration of the king of Poland or any other. He has forbidden all persons, on pain of death, to speak of the writer as King, or to pray for him. Though he promised to recover the castles taken by the Turks, he has lost those which remained, and among others Jaijca, a seat of the kings of Bozna, and began to treat with the Turk for assistance against king John. Hearing of this, sent Jerome de Lasco, lord of Rythwan, palatine of Sirad, who negotiated a peace with the Turk, with promise of assistance. Defends his conduct. Tharnovia, 25 Sept. 1528, "regnum a^o 2." Signed.

Lat., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

25 Sept. 4775. [TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 338.
B. M.

" now by the advice and counsel of thambassa[dor] . . .
 ordained and provided for 25,000 footmen horses that immediately should go into Italy and as there may be provision for victual; for upon come all this sickness and pestilence.

" The second article of Andreas Doria is now so far is without hope of recovery. The King told me Andreas asked nothing reasonable or unreyson[able, but he] granted it to him; and when the King ag[reed to all his] demands and desires, then finally he said h[e would not] serve him, and now is returned from Naples, [and has] laid his galleys in the haven of s e the town finding never a man to resist him water nor land. I said to the King it w[as great] negligence to leave such a town so without The King imputeth it to the treason of the said [Doria], the which compacted and consented with seni[or] de Threvolsis, that within 20 days that he sh[ould take] upon him to be Caesarian, he would not attempt anything against the French king, and came in[to the town] with a white banner; wherefore Theodore de Tre-[volsis had no] doubt in him; but when he entered into th[e town, he] cried Libertas, libertas, and Saynt George. T[revolsis went] into the castle, and shall shortly have eyd [from the count] de S. Pawll, and the King says that h galleys in the haven that he may surely fle[e] come to rescue. I asked of the King wher water to let Andreas Dorea to flee out of th[e haven] quyre. He answered me he trusted it was pro d it may be so, for it was told me in secre[t] in out of Cecilia seven gallyes to Andreas Dorea to s commandment, and how he reputeth himself [ready for] sea with 19 galleys, and two that he took of the Fre[nch].

1528.

"The third article, where in the King our master's name [I thanked] his Majesty for his honorable receiving and good [entertain]ment of the cardinal Campege. He said he did no[thing] but as he is bound in his loving brother's cause, and [as he] doubteth not but that his brother of England would [in like] case do for him. Farther, he told me that in recommend[ing the] King's cause to the said Cardinal, he marvelled greatly [when the] Cardinal told him that he would return home by [Spain]. Then the King said to him that the King his brother [was] a prince of such virtue, wisdom, and estimation tha[t he] would enterprise no matter but righteous and of good wherefore he thought that after the Cardinal had sp[oken unto] the King's highness, his mind would be changed going home by Spain, if his brother's cause took g[ood] effect, as he trusted it should.

"To the fourth article, as concerning the duel, his Grace thynk[yth] that your Lordship shall be clearly and well satisfied, for my lord of Bath, the which was present at everything, bring[eth] to your Grace a copy authentical of everything that was spo[ken and] done therein.

"The fifth article, as touching the King's and your Grace's prosperous hea[lth and laborious solaces and pastimes in hunting, of [a]bundance of all things within the realm of the swete, finished standing before the [he th]anked God of those tidings, beseeching his good and continuance for us long as his dear broth[er] and did well, he could not do amiss. And h he had some time discouragious and displeasent these tidings comforted him very much whe shortly send one of his chamber to the King's high[ness and your] Grace, the which should ascertain you of all su[ch] take for the maintenance and renewing of his [army by] land and water. Here is an answer to all the cont[ents of your] gracious letter. And because the Grand Master being a[bsent from] the court, neither by the King, the Chancellor, nor [any] other of the Council, I could know the truth of the the army at Naples, by secret ways and d fre[nds I have] sent your Grace the copy of all the order and final def[eat of] all that army being at Naples. Surely if there ha[d been a] good captain they would never a yielded them in th[at wise,] being 4,000 men. And all those that were in Nap[les with] those that persecuted them, were not 6,000 men. Se[d amisso] pastore facile disperguntur oves gregis. I beseech your [Grace to] keep these copies secret to yourself, that the ambassador [may] know not of them. It is enough that your Grace kn[ow] there would follow much business to know how they [came] to your hands, for the King himself knoweth not things." Paris, 25 Sept. 1528.

Mutilated.

26 Sept. 4776. [TAYLER] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 356.

B. M.

"Please it your Grace, the 25th of this I wrote [lett]res, and this day the King sent for me. I found all the ambassadors of the League. When they went [away the King's] grace called me to him, and showed me a letter of [the count of St.] Paull's own hand, and caused it to be read [In it] was contained that the 19th of this present [month, by assault] and manly violence, Pavia was taken and th 2,500 Spaniards and Cassurians and th defended. He could not tell how many men h he lay sick of an ague within Pavia.

1528.

[TAYLER] to WOLSEY—cont.

"After this the King showed to me and bade me [write to your Grace] that Mons. Rens was in Aquila with [8,000 men, and more] daily resorting unto him, and 12,000 shall g being waged and made in the country there s in good comfort that Naples shall soon be recov[ered, for the] Cæsarians be retired into Naples and did sor and at the most they be not 6,000 men of wh[om] speak, they will fight no more till they have th[eir wages] the which the Emperor oweth them, and is behind v Also the King bade me write unto your Grace that [he hopeth] that Gene be in his hands or this day, for by th be a great band of Suches and other there for hy Andreas Doren had sent in terras ecclesie and o of Ferrare to wage men. Both the Pope and have forbid any to take wages of him or to be ment, and he is very naked, for none of the c to his entry into the town. The great part of were out for fear of the sickness, and so tha Gene have made their excuse to the King. An such outrageous weather that if he have [g]o to his galleys; wherefore the King here is in [good hope t]o have good tidings from thence.

"Finally, the King showed me that the Emperor [is gone t]o Victoria, and that he hath taken a displeasure w[ith the ambassador] of England; but he could not tell which of tha[m]bassadors] it was, and that the Emperor had commanded hy[m] to be] lodged remotely from the Court. Specialties his [Grace would] not tell me, why or for what cause, nor how he h[ear]d the] news. At the Great Master's coming I shall know the King added that, if the Emperor would invade hi[s realm], he trusted that his brother would help him. Oth[er news] we have none, but I beseech your Grace that I may kn[ow your] pleasure concerning the duke of Albany's letter." Paris, 26 Sept. 1528.

Mutilated. Add.

4777. SILVESTER DARIUS to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. 1v.

260.

B. M.

P.S.—News has come this morning from Genoa and Gaeta to the Emperor that the French army in Naples is defeated, that the allied fleet has fled, that Andrea Doria has taken six French galleys and three ships of burden, and that the French governor and garrison have been driven out of Genoa. The Emperor has enrolled 2,000 foot to send to Italy, with thirteen galleys, which are being equipped with all haste at Barcelona.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.

26 Sept.

Titus, B. 1. 275.

B. M.

Ellis, 1 Ser.

1. 185.

Fiddes' Coll.

p. 128.

4778. WILLIAM CAPON, Dean of Cardinal's College, Ipswich, to WOLSEY.

On Sunday, 6 Sept., Master Stephyns, Dr. Lee and Mr. Crumwell came to Wolsey's college at Ipswich, and brought copes, vestments, plate, &c. as specified in a pair of indentures between Capon and Crumwell, of which each retains one part. The parcels are all engrossed in your Grace's book indented which remains with me. Mr. Stevens, Lee and Crumwell remained four days, and Crumwell was at great pains seeing Wolsey's stuff carried hither safely, and in preparing the hangings, benches, &c., for the hall, which is now well trimmed. On Our Lady's Even, Capon, with the company of the college, viz., the sub-dean, Mr. Ellis, six priests, eight clerks, nine choristers, and all their servants, after evensong in the College church, repaired to Our Lady's Chapel, and sang evensong there. They were accompanied by Stephens, Lee and Cromwell, by Mr. Humphrey Wingfield, to whose kindness they are much bound, the bailiffs of the town and port-men, and the prior of Christchurch. Next day, 8 Sept., it rained continually, so that they could not go in procession through the town to Our Lady's Chapel, but made as solemn a procession as they could in the College church. All the honorable gentlemen of the shire were present, as Mr. Wentford, Sir John Willoughby, Sir Philip Tylney, Mr. Bowth, Sir Thos. Tey, Mr. Benefylde, Mr. Pyrton, Mr. Jermeyn, and Mr. Humphrey Wingfield, besides the bailiffs and port-men, the priors of Christchurch and Butley, Dr. Grene, vicar of Aldborough, as commissaries to Wolsey, the bishop of Norwich and the duke of Norfolk's almoner, Mr. Hege. They all dined in the college.

1528.

Your singing men are well chosen, but some of them who are very excellent say they got better wages where they came from. Fears that the commons allowed are not sufficient, for they can neither provide becs nor muttons for want of pasture near. The Sub-dean and I, with Mr. Rushe, have viewed Bornebrige, but find it incapable of supporting fat cattle. As to the College church, one man is not sufficient to keep the revostry and the church clean, ring the bells, prepare the altar lights, &c. Has, therefore, put in another man, and named him sexton. There are but five priests under the sub-dean,—too few to keep three masses a day; and the sub-dean cannot attend, as he is required to survey the buildings. But for Mr. Lentall we could do nothing in our choir, he takes such pains at matins and masses. There shall be no better children in any place in England than we shall have here shortly.

Has made fifteen albs of the new cloth, delivered by Mr. Alvard, Wolsey's servant; but there are fourteen more to be made, besides fourteen albs for fourteen tunicles, and twelve pair of odd "parrers" for children. Nine "books" (bucks) were sent to the College against the day of the Nativity of Our Lady, viz., two from the duke of Norfolk, two from the duke of Suffolk, one from my lady of Oxford, the younger, one from Sir Philip Bowth, one from Mr. Pyrton, and one each from Mr. Senteler and Ric. Cavendish, Wolsey's servants, "which books were spent on our said Lady's Day in your Grace's college," and distributed, with money, to make merry withal to the chamberlains and head men of the town, the bailiffs and port-men's wives, and the curates. Mr. Rushe also gave them six couple of coneyes, two pheasants, and one dozen quails, and the prior of Butley two pheasants and a fat crane.

Have received of Mr. Dawndy 121 tons of Caen stone. Expect 100 tons more a fortnight after Michaelmas, so that the workmen may be well employed, and Mr. Dawndy has promised us 1,000 tons more before Easter next. From your Grace's college in Gipswicke, 26 Sept. Signed.

Add. Endd.

26 Sept. 4779. GEORGE BULLEYN, squire of the Body.

S. B.

Annuity of 50 marks, payable by the chief butler of England, out of the issues of the prizes of wines. Del. Westm., 26 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 20.

26 Sept. 4780. SIR THOS. LOVELL

His will, 10 Dec. 1522. Proved, 26 Sept. 1528. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 640.

1528.

27 Sept.

4781. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. L. 327.

Since you signed the papers when I was last with you for a diet with the Scotch, news is come that the earl of Angus is attainted by Parliament, and he himself compelled to remain, for security, in the March country. Bothwell, Buccleugh and others are taken into favour, and the Borders exposed to danger. News is also come of a conspiracy against the duke of Ferrara. Though I am now on my journey to London, I will diverge from my purpose, and repair to your Grace, unless you appoint some other place. Richmond, 27 Sept. Signed.

Add.

27 Sept.

4782. SIR EDWARD GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has sent to Calais four passengers (ships) for transporting cardinal Campeggio. Among the others "the Peter Baily, for his own person, which is the ship that your Grace hath passed in divers times, and hath a bed in her, and the cabin, appareled after the best fashion." Wishes to know whether the charge is to be at the King or Wolsey's cost. The Legate cannot stay more than one night at Dover, as it is infected with the sickness, and as the priory is in that quarter of the town, has appointed the bailiff's house for the reception of the Legate. The town is prepared. Dover, Sunday, 27 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

27 Sept.

4783. N. BISHOP OF ELY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Received on the 27th your letters dated the 23rd at Hampton Court, conveying the King's pleasure that I should be at London, Sunday, 4 Oct., at the reception of cardinal Campeggio at St. George's bar. Am so impotent in my legs that I can neither ride nor stand, "a mass while," without intolerable pain. Sit I may not, unless my legs are as high as the stool I sit on. I beg you will make my excuse, and as soon I can ride or stand I will wait upon your Grace. Dodynton, 27 Sept. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

27 Sept.

4784. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

Cal. D. x. 327.

B. M.

..... [Mon]sieur de Bade (Bath), estoient telles que je [au]ra en deplaisir de les entendre. J'ay bien voul[u] vous advertir des bonnes qui me vindrent hyer dit[allie pour] les faire entendre au Roy mon bon frere et perp[etuel allie, et a mons.] le Legat mon bon amy, qui sont telles que de St. Pol, mon lieutenant general pardela, n de ce moys apres avoir batu Payve par deux jou[r]s ceste grace qu'il la print de bel assault et par y eust deux mil cinq cens hommes de guerre ded[ans, comme vous] pourrez veoir par la lettre mesme qu'il m'en a escripte de laquelle je vous envoie pour leur pouvoyr monstrier.

"Semblablement, m'est venu nouvelle que des Mardy d avec troys mille lansquenetz et mille harquebusiers arrive a Genes, ou je ne faietz doubte qu'il ne soit Chastellet ainay que bon luy aura semble, n'estant dens Andre Dorya que de quatre a cinq cens hommes sans au[cune] esperance de secours qu'il n'a seu recouvrer de lieu qu encores qu'il eust faict son devoir d'y envoyer pour ce espere bien la mettre en telle seurete qu'elle 1528.

ne discretion dudit Andre Dorya ny de mes ennemys par l'inconvenient de la peste qui y esto[it].

"Au demeurant, il est puis hyer j [dem]andes des Fleurentins qui s[ont] hommes [d'ar]mes et deux cens chevaulx ligiers, qui est [dev]ant le parlement dudit gentilhomme joinctz et Rence, en esperance non seulement de garder et a l'Abrusse et tout ce que nous tenons oudit royaume qu [u]ne bonne part des meilleures villes de la Po[ui]lle l'occasion qui se pourra a donner essayer a faire de me et beaucoup plus grans effectz, estans mesmement noz [ennemis] comme j'ay secu par seur advertissement de dela tellement affoiblyz par peste et malladies qu'ilz ont este contrai[n]ts a] retourner dedans la ville de Naples, d'o[u] ce qui est rest ne voulloir partir qu'ilz ne soient entierement payez et satisf[ai]ctz de ce qui leur est deu, qui est plus de neuf moys, et par ce m[oyen] donneront lieu a nostre dite armee de leur empescher le moyen de recouvrer argent, mesmement de la douanne qui est le principal [moyen] qu'ilz avoient d'en recouvrer, et sy sera tenue en seurete la Tuscannie et tous les bons serviteurs, amys, alliez et confederez, que je y ay de present. Parquoy je ne faictz doubte que rien tost ledit sieur Rence qui a avec luy la plus grant partie des plus groz princes dudit roy[aume] ne treuve facon de bien tost recouvrer et revolter une partie dicelle [pourvu qu'il soit] secouru et ayde, comme j'ay delibere de faire par le conse[il] de mesditz alliez et confederez. Et pour autant que noz mais aussi pareillement en la Lombardye.
 Il

. temps nouveau j'ay faict dres[ser]
 les ambassadeurs de mes alliez et confeder[ez] semble devoir entretenir pour cest yver en Italye communique a l'ambassadeur du Roy mon bon frere esta[n]t j'ay bien voullu vous envoyer ung double pour le communiquer au Roy] et a mondit sieur le Legat mon bon amy pareillement [pour avoir] leur bon conseil et advis, sans lequel je ne suis pour delibe chose en quelque maniere que ce soit, mais entiereme[n]t faire ce] qu'ilz m'en voudront mander et conseiller, comme chos[e qui ne] sauroit estre que au grant bien honneur et advantaige [de nos communes] affaires. Parquoy je vous prie, Mons. de Bayo[nne], sur les choses dessusdites entendu leur opinion et advis veuillez en toute diligence mander et faire savoir; ensemble de la bonne sante dudit Roy mon bon frere et de tout [ce qui est] survenu pardela." Paris, 27

Asks him to remind Wolsey "du faict de cest" of which he wrote in his last letter. Signed.

Mutilated. Add.

27 Sept. 4785. CHARLES V. to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv. Has received his letters by Silvester Darius, the bearer, seen the 256*. articles, and heard his commission.

B. M. Assures him of his desire for universal peace, and for renewal of the friendship with England. Has given Darius an answer in writing. Desires credence for Don Ynigo de Mendoza and the bishop of Burgos. Madrid, 27 Sept. 1528. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

27 Sept. 4786. SYLVESTER DARIUS to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv. Has been here three months, but can obtain no answer from the 259. Emperor, who makes continual excuses for his delay. Some ascribe the
 B. M. delay to the Emperor's carelessness, others to the quantity of business, others think he waits for news from Italy. Was many days before he could tell whether there was any hope of success or not. Asked the Chancellor to procure his speedy dispatch, but could obtain nothing further from him, except that he had given his vote, and hoped the Emperor would reply in two days. Asked whether he should hope for or despair of peace, and he answered that Darius would know from the Emperor's words. Will either bring or send the answer as soon as he has it.

1528.

SYLVESTER DARIUS to WOLSEY—cont.

The bishop of Pistoja has returned to France. Madrid, 27 Sept. 1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

27 Sept.

4787. CHARLES V.

Vesp. C. iv.
257.

B. M.

Answer of the Emperor to the articles presented by Sylvester Darius from Wolsey. Madrid, 27 Sept. 1528. Signed by L'Alemand.

Fr., pp. 2.

Ib. f. 204.

2. Latin translation of the above. Dated, erroneously, 27 Sept. 1527.

28 Sept.

4788. THOS. BENET to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This day, 28 Sept., I delivered your letter to my lord of Canterbury, who is content to send his litter to Dovor for my lord Legate, and so conduct him to Canterbury. He refuses to lend it any further, as he cannot do without it.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

28 Sept.

4789. [CLERK] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 230.

B. M.

"[After my most humble recommendations, please it your Grace to] understand that according to my fo[rmer letters] . . . at night we shipped all our horses, an . . . time, I sent your Grace the copy of th[e oration, but] by rage of sea and tempest, with great . . . the ship was driven again yesterday [back into the] haven. The other ship there can no [man tell] what is become thereof. The weather [has been very] troublesome; howbeit, it is now fair, bu[t the wind is] contrary. The Legate hath been meetly . . . greatly troubled with his gout since his [arrival at] Calais. The horse litter in the which he hath [come must] needs be sent again to Paris, therefore t . . . your Grace must needs make provision of another . . . and his gout trouble him no more than . . . he saith he will ride. If the wind serve [we intend] tomorrow to take shipping. Master Gulde[ford has sent] over a ship for his transporting . . ." Monday, 28 Se[pt.]

Hol. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

28 Sept.

4790. HENRY EARL OF CUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. i. 84.

B. M.

Reminds him that he was appointed by the King last term to settle the differences that arose between himself and lord Dacres touching his office of warden of the West Marches. The term being adjourned in consequence of the sweating sickness, he received a summons for this next term; but, fearing that Dacres would ill treat the King's tenants in these parts, he procured a letter from the King to Dacres, commanding him not to interfere;* nevertheless, Dacres sends bailiffs, with from 10 to 400 persons, to cut down their corn, has imprisoned some of the tenants in the castle of Naward, and would show no authority for so doing. Would have been glad to defend the tenants, but it seemed to touch the honesty of himself and his brother

* See 26 June.

1528.

Sir Thos. Clifford. Obtained letters from the duke of Richmond to Dacres, commanding him in the King's name to desist, but to no purpose. A sessions of peace was appointed by warrant addressed to Sir Edw. Musgrave, the sheriff, in the names of Sir Thos. Clifford, Sir Christ. Dacre, Sir John Lowther, and Geoffrey Lancaster, justices; but Dacres wrote to the sheriff, commanding him to repair to Naward castle for the King's affairs, so that he should be absent on the day appointed, and also kept the said Geoffrey, justice of the quorum and custos rotularum of the county, at the said castle, as appears by Lancaster's letters to Sir Thos. Clifford, the bearer of this. Begs Wolsey not to give credit to evil reports against him. Will be with him at the beginning of next term. Carleton, 28 Sept. Signed.

Pp. 5. Add. : "To my lord Legat." Endd.

29 Sept. 4791. H. BISHOP OF WORCESTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

As the Almoner has written the news communicated by Sylvester, finds it unnecessary to write. Valladolid, 29 Sept. 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

29 Sept. 4792. PAUL CASALE to [GREGORY CASALE].

Vit. B. x. 111.

B. M.

On the 27th arrived Herasmo, a servant of Andrea Doria, sent by the Emperor with the articles for his engagement, and he has now returned. The Pope tells him that he brought a confirmation of all Doria's demands, 20,000 cr., and provision for the payment of the fleet for six months. Mentions the arrangements with the merchants for money. The bishop of Legia, who was sent to Spain by the Pope, writes that he will return in two days, bringing the liberation of the cardinals, and the restitution of Civita Vecchia and Ostia. The general, who was declared cardinal by the Consistory, had arrived two days before the departure of Herasmo, but is detained by illness. He said that 1,500 foot were provided for Genoa at his departure. John Joachim has letters from Savona, of the 21st and 24th, stating that count Philipppo had desired to hold a parley with six men of the town, but the governor had forbidden any to go, and he retired. The citadel was taken, as his brother has heard. Renzo has 3,000 cr. to levy infantry. Visconte has obtained from the Florentines 10,000 cr., and asked them to send the promised 2,000 infantry. They have made all possible preparations. Viterbo, 29 Sept. 1528.

Copy, Ital., pp. 2. Endd. in English at f. 116.*

[29 Sept.] 4793. THOS. ALVARD to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has received his letter by Mr. Page, asking when he can come and speak with Wolsey about his Grace's business. Can as yet see no time, for the Legate comes tonight, and goes hence before Sunday to the court. Cromwell must wait till his Grace returns from the court. Alvard's father has sent a letter to him, and another to Cromwell, saying that the Chancellor has compromised the matter to Wolsey's hands, who has given a very good answer about it. Richmond, Tuesday, 4 o'clock.

Hol., p. 1. Add. : To hys rythe hartely lovyd frende Mr. Cromwell att London. Endd.

29 Sept. 4794. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

Total receipts from the lands of Cardinal's college, Oxford, from Mich. 19 to Mich. 20 Hen. VIII., 1,602*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, over and above 1528.

CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD—cont.

215*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* allowed for repairs, and 128*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* received by Tho. Cromwell of the issues of the year.

Issues of fines for the year, 120*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.*, allotted for repairs.

P. 1. Endd. : Concernyng my Lord's college.

R. O.

2. Valor of the lands of Cardinal's college, Oxford, Mich. 20 Hen. VIII. Total, 2,263*l.* 15*s.* 1½*d.*

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O.

3. A valuation of the lands of the suppressed monasteries assigned to the treasurer of the Household, Sir Ric. Page, Sir Francis Bryan, the earl of Worcester, Sir Anth. Ughtred, Sir Edw. Seymour, and John Pen.

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O.

4. Fragment of a rent roll of Cardinal's college.

Badly mutilated; only one side remaining.

R. O.

5. Valor of the possessions of Cardinal's college, Oxford, for the year ending Mich. 20 Hen. VIII. Total yearly revenue, 2,158*l.* 18*s.* 9¾*d.* Annual expences, 1,922*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*

Lat., pp. 4, large paper.

R. O.

6. Valor of the possessions of Cardinal's college, Oxford, for the year 20 Hen. VIII. Total, 2,014*l.* 10*s.* 7¾*d.*

Lat., p. 1.

4795. SIR HENRY GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

According to Clerk's letter from Dover, my lord Legate (Campeggio) intends to be at Dartford on Monday next. There is no wine to be got there. Asks Wolsey to provide some. He has been well entertained since his arrival in England. Wants a harbinger to be sent to meet them at Rochester to attend on the Legate to London. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

30 Sept.

4796. JOHN BISHOP OF LINCOLN to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Is greatly pleased that his services have given satisfaction. Has both written and sent to the prior of Spalding by his chancellor and by another Doctor his chaplain, for the waters in the Fens are now great and dangerous, but cannot get him to resign. He says he will die prior. He is himself very good and gentle, but is led by others. Encloses his answer in writing, which he would have sent ere this, but has been occupied in the view of these enclosures under the King's commission. Goes tomorrow to Northampton, and the week after to Leicestershire and Rutland. My lord Brudenell and Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam have taken great labors therein with great goodwill. Must ask further time. Many things will yet come to light. There was never thing done in England more for the common weal than to redress these enormous decays of towns and making of enclosures; "for if your Grace did at the eyes see as I have now seen, your heart would mourn to see the towns, villages, hamlets, manor places, in ruin and decay, the people gone, the ploughs laid down, the living of many honest husbandmen in one man's hand, the breed of mannery * by this means suppressed, few people there stirring, the commons in many places taken away from the poor people, whereby they are compelled to forsake their houses, and so wearied out and wot not where to live, and so maketh their lamentation." Never saw people so glad as they are now, hoping the King and Wolsey will see reformation made. They pray for the King and your Grace everywhere. Lodington, 30 Sept.

1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

30 Sept.

4797. [ALBERT MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG] to HENRY VIII.

R. T. 149.

R. O.

Has received the King's letters, with thanks for the falcons he sent. Notifies that he is no longer Grand Master of the Teutonic Order, having been promoted to the dukedom of Prussia by Sigismund king of Poland. The king of Bohemia and Hungary, the Electors and other Princes have asked him for falcons; but he has reserved for Henry the first choice, as Henry's messenger can bear witness. 30 Sept. 1528.

Lat., pp. 2.

30 Sept.

4798. CALAIS.

R. O.

"The book of watches and wards kept by divers persons who furnished the rooms that should have been furnished by the spears, which had men in extraordinary wages, and was appointed to Newnham bridge."

Memoranda of watches to be paid by Mr. Treasurer out of the King's money, and of those to be paid by such spears as have had men in extraordinary wages since Mich. 19 Hen. VIII.; "which money is paid by the hands of Mr. Deputy." The amount for each watch is generally a little over 2s. "gr." a month, and was to be deducted from the extraordinary wages of each spear.

Pp. 6.

4799. ROBERT COWLEY to WOLSEY.

Lamb. MS.

602, f. 56.

St. P. II. 140.

While the earl of Ossory and his son attend Wolsey's pleasure and deliberation in Irish affairs, "others run in at the window the next way, making immediate pursuits to the King's highness," by means of Antony Knevet, by which Ireland will be ruined. The archbishop of Cashel is making suit by subtle means for grants tending to the establishment of the earl of Desmond and the ruin of Ossory and his son. Hears the Archbishop has a bill signed by the King for all the premises, directed to the chancellor of Ireland, thinking to gain his suits without Wolsey's knowledge. He and his chaplain have fraudulently obtained the King's letters to the Council against Ossory, in favor of Sir Jas. Butler, Desmond's greatest friend, who, with the Archbishop's aid, by the seditious practice of the man Wolsey knows, have caused so much disorder in Ossory's country that he cannot serve against Desmond, or even defend himself. Gerald Aylmer, menial servant to Kildare, is appointed Secondary Justice of the Common Pleas, and has a bill signed to the Chancellor. Anthony Knevet has obtained the bishopric of Kildare for "a simple Irish priest, a vagabond, without learning, manners, or good quality, not worthy to be a holy water clerk," and hears the King will pay for his bulls. Those who have done the King service are much surprised. Wolsey might send a commission to the bishop of London, More, Masters Dean and Secretary, to call the Archbishop and his chaplain, Gerald Aylmer and the Irish priest, before them to examine their warrants, &c.; and might also order Sir John Russell, Dr. Bell, and others, who promote letters to the King's signet, to pass no Irish matters till Wolsey has seen them. Wishes to know his pleasure concerning the earl of Ossory's causes and his son's, and who is to be the Deputy. Hopes he will remember his old servant James. One Bathe of Ireland has lately made a book for Wolsey, "feigning it to be for the reformation of Ireland, but the effect is but to drive the King to the extremity to send home my lord of Kildare with authority, to accomplish his inordinate affection to my lord of Kildare. He hath no more experience of the land than I have in Italy; and if he were a little touched for his presumption in repugning at the King's pleasure, and provoking to be done that which should sound to his dishonor, it would make others fear to attempt such matters."

1528.

ROBERT COWLEY TO WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace, with speed.

Sept.

4800. DOVER.

Egerton MS.
2108, f. 56.

B. M.

Receipts of the money of the Wyke of Dover, from the Sunday after the Nativity of Our Lady, 13 Hen. VIII., to the same Sunday, 14 Hen. VIII.

Half passage of a horse, 2s. Half passage of a "cache" of Calais, 9s. Half passage of a hoy of Calais, 15s. Half passage of a boat of Calais, 3s. The sums paid for vessels vary from 2s. 10d. to 24s. for the Christoffer of Calais. 16 and 22 Dec., received for the shift of the ferry box, and for setting over the lord Cardinal, 11l. Total, 23l. 19s.

Payments to masons, for hewing stone; to labourers, for felling the pier; and to John Payntour and Thos. Godelad, collectors of the half passage.

Receipts of the Wyke in the hands of John Clerk, master of the Mesondue, from the Nativity of Our Lady, 14 Hen. VIII., for one year.

Procured by Mr. Mayor for the Wyke, from such as carried horse to Rome, 4s. St. John's Eve, half passage of a Fleming man-of-war, 8s. St. Mary Magdalen's Day, half passage of my lord Admiral's bark, 7s. 8d. Total, 31l. 5s. 5d.

Paid for masons mending the wall at Snargate, for stone, sleds, drays, and other things for the Wyke. 1 March, thorns to stop the hole at the Wyke, 3s. 17 March, to the man of Hastings, for his counsel for making chains for tuns to draw rocks to the Wyke, and for his wages, 3l. 10s. 4d. Wages for dragging, and other expences, 31l. 11s. 1d.

From the Sunday after the Nativity of Our Lady, 15 Hen. VIII., for one year. Receipts, 5 Nov., from John Alowe, for his voyage to Calais with Mr. Vice-admiral, 6s. 8d. 13 Dec., from Mr. Mayor, for the Emperor's voyage from Dover to Calais, 40s. Christmas Eve, from Sir Robt. Yong, curate of St. Mary's, "coming, by the grace of God, for the reparation of the Wyke," 6s. 8d. 28 Feb., received in the Mesondue, for half passage of Welsh pilgrims to Rome in the year of grace, 5l.

Receipts and payments from the Sunday after the Nativity of Our Lady, 17 Hen. VIII., for one year. Payments, for iron and steel to make "hadsys to plane the rockes where the gey shoulde stonde," 15d. Hauling away the rocks from the same place, 8s. 6d. For piles, wattles, dragging, wages, &c.

From the Sunday after the Nativity of Our Lady, 18 Hen. VIII., for one year. Receipts, 1 May, from my lord Warden, half a forfeit of John Mighell, lodesman, 6s. 8d. Total, 9l. 17s. 7d.

Payments, 20 Dec., to Mr. Couche, mayor, for sending to London a letter to Mr. Waren to show to the Merchant Adventurers the mind of Mr. Mayor and his brethren concerning the 100l. they promised to the Wyke, 3s. 4d.

9 Feb., dragging six tides for the ambassador of France, 6s.

3 July, to the vicar of Ewell, for the tithe of an acre of wattle and four loads of piles, 5s. 6d. For attending the wattles in the storm at the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, 2s.; and other payments for wattles, dragging, &c.

From the Sunday after the Nativity, 19 Hen. VIII., for one year. Receipts, 5l. 15s.; 3l. having been lent to Mr. Mayor to fetch home St. Martin's jewels that lay to pledge at Sandwich.

Payments, 24 Sept. Dragging four tides against my lord Cardinal's coming, 4s. The Prior gave half a tide dragging when my lord Lyle went over. The master of the Mesondue gave 23 tides when my lord Cardinal went and came over, and when lord Lyle went. 6 June, to Anthony Mores, servant of the commander of Swynfeld, for half an acre of wattle rod, 8s.

1528.

Total, 14*l.* 18*s.*

Due to the said master [of the Mesondue], the Sunday after the Nativity of Our Lady, 20 Hen. VIII., 35*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*

Pp. 48.

4801.

GRANTS IN SEPTEMBER 1528.

Sept.

GRANTS.

1. John Nerbonne alias Rysbank, pursuivant-at-arms. To be Blewmantle, viz Guisnes, pursuivant, with 10*l.* a year. Del. Hampton Court, 1 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

4. John Wellisburne, squire of the Body. Annuity of 50 marks. Ampthill, 20 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 4 Sept.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 22. (undated.)

4. John Wellisburne. Grant of lands in Moreby, Yorks., late of visct. Lovell, attainted. Eathampsted, 28 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 4 Sept.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 25.

4. Sir Ralph Ellercar, jun., squire of the Body. Annuity of 50*l.*, to commence from Easter 19 Hen. VIII. Ampthill, 20 July 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 4 Sept.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 22. (undated.)

8. John Olyver, clk. Presentation to the church of Whitechurch, Line. dioc., void by death. Oking, 4 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 8 Sept.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

11. John Matheus, of the island of Colam, in the marches of Calais, brewer, native of the county of Horne, in the dominions of the Emperor. Denization. Del. Hampton Court, 11 Sept.* 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 23.

12. Joan Wyatt alias Whyte, of Willesdon, Middx., spinster. Pardon. Del. Westm., 12 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 22. (undated.)

12. John Kirke, of London, leather dyer, alias gold refiner. Pardon. Del. Westm.,

12 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 25. (undated.)

17. Rob. Acton. To be the King's saddler, with 12*d.* a day. viz Nich. Maior, deceased. Oking, 6 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Hampton Court, 17 Sept.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

19. John Drake, of Wethecombe Raleght, alias of Exmoth, Devon. Licence to alienate to his second son John, 25 messuages and lands in Hyll and Exmoth, Devon, a portion of which was alienated to him by Thos. Coole, and the rest has been lately recovered by him against And. Hillersdon and Nic. Deny, who had sued out their liveries; with certain remainders. Westm., 19 Sept.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 5 and m. 17.

19. John Croke, one of the Six Clerks of Chancery. To be comptroller and surveyor of the Hanaper of Chancery, with 10*l.* a year out of the issues of the said Hanaper. Del. Hampton Court, 19 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 23.—Vacated, on surrender by the said John, 12 July 3 Edw. VI., in order that the office might be granted to Thos. Powle.

20. Thos. Earl of Rutland. Reversion of the offices of warden forester of Thorne-wood, in the south bailiwick of Sherwoode forest, Notts, granted (on surrender of patent, 17 March 11 Hen. VIII. by Hen. Parker,) to Sir John Bryon, 12 Dec. 15 Hen. VIII., and of one of the four foresters of the said forest, which was also granted to the said Sir John, 20 May 11 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 20 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 13 (undated.)

4802. GHINUCCI and LEE to [SIL. DARIUS ?]

Vesp. C. iv.

240.

B. M.

"Right honorable." Have received his letter, dated Sept. 29, with a schedule of answer from the Emperor. Will advise him how to reply, but meanwhile he must not let the Emperor or his Council suspect they have any commission to meddle in the matter committed to him.

He may use as a cloak what John Almayne said to him, that if they had any commission to treat of particular peace between the King and Emperor, they might come to court, and say that he, doubting thereof, had written to ask them. He must also be careful, in matters not expressly comprised in his commission, to speak only as of himself.

1528.

LEE and GHINUCCI to [SIL. DARIUS ?]—cont.

As to the answer he is to give the Emperor, he may satisfy the Emperor's doubts as to the sincerity of the French king by reference to Wolsey's circumspection and sincerity. Whereas they say that he has no mandate nor commission, he may say that on Wolsey and the lady Margaret's behalf no mandate was needed further than what he has, because they only interpose as mediators for the zeal which they have to peace; and no special mandate could be conceived from the French king before it was seen how the parties would agree. As for a general mandate, it would be hard to draw one up sufficient to pass without difficulty. He may refer to the frivolous objections that have been made to general commissions, but they remit this to his wisdom, as it touches the Chancellor. He may suggest that the first agreement should be made by parole, and commission then be given to conclude it. If they say that the Emperor should not open his mind to one that hath no mandate, he may say that he was not sent to conclude, and needed none to report Wolsey's mind to the Emperor and his to Wolsey; and that if the Emperor trust Wolsey, there can be no inconvenience in his declaring his mind to him, were it even in writing. To their saying that it is right that, before the deliverance of the pledges, all that is agreed on should be fulfilled, it may be answered that the French king likewise should have surety. To their pretence of confidence which the Emperor showed in the past treaty, and the insinuation that by occasion of the intimation the thing is altered, he can say that he wonders the Emperor is so changed, and he should not so much consider the intimation, which is a thing of ceremony, as the King's conduct in attempting nothing by virtue of it, treating the Emperor's subjects like his own, although he hears that the Emperor has not done the like. Not only has the King shown no hostility, but Wolsey has shown friendship in endeavoring to induce the French king to the Emperor's purpose, and in sending [Darius]. He has heard Wolsey say that if the King had known the point of rupture, he would have devised something to remove the difficulty. He can then lay all the fault of the intimation on Ghinucci and Lee, saying that he well knows that when he passed this way they could not avoid acknowledging their error.

Touching the Emperor's request for particular peace with the King, he may express wonder at his having altered from his desire of a universal peace, and say that he thinks Wolsey only commissioned him concerning peace between the Emperor and the French king, which would produce an easy composition of all other matters. He must find out whether John Alemand spoke of his own mind, or with authority, when he said that if universal peace does not ensue the particular peace between the King and the Emperor should be of no effect; also when he said that the Emperor would put pledges in the King's hands, when the particular peace was made,—meaning that he would not otherwise. He may make them disclose their minds by alleging the great inequality, if the French king has not assurance for the delivery of the pledges, and the suspicion he might have that they would be retained. If he cannot discover otherwise, whether they mean to give pledges, he can recite Alemand's words; and if he find they mean to give none, he may protest against the Emperor receding from what he once was content with, now that he is so prosperous.

If the news of the defeat of the French in Italy and the liberation of Genoa be true, and if his Majesty will stand to the treaty of Burgos, all difficulties cease, for there is no doubt of the French king's constancy. If it be said that the count of St. Pol is still there, and that perhaps the castle of Genoa is held for the French king, he may say as of himself that it is to be supposed that the French king may be induced to do what remains, and he can then speak of the French king's assurance for the delivery of the pledges. Do not reprove the ways devised by [Darius], but fear that the successes in Italy will make them more untractable. Leave everything to his wisdom, beg him to omit nothing to advance the peace, and try to find out their intentions.

1528.

He knows that the King and Wolsey do not wish them to meddle in the new treaty until they see a chance of the peace taking effect, lest the King should seem to sue for peace to the Emperor. Think, therefore, they had better not come, lest it should be thought they had a commission for a particular peace.

My lord of Bath has written to them for a general safe-conduct for couriers, but they see no need for it yet. He may get a special safe-conduct for one to go with all diligence when the matter is settled, for Wolsey must be desirous to hear. Have sent on the tenor of his letters to Wolsey by sea, and by land by the bishop of Pistoja. Signed.

In Lee's hand, pp. 6.

1 Oct. 4803. CAMPEGGIO to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Crossed over from Calais on the 29th. Had a prosperous voyage, but is very ill of the gout, and is much shattered. On reaching Dover, would have sent a message to Wolsey, but found difficulty in procuring a messenger, as he has few or none about him who are well. Begs credence for his brother Antonio, who has offered to take this letter, and will continue his journey as soon as he is able. Canterbury, 1 Oct. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

1 Oct. 4804. CAMPEGGIO to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. VII. 94.

To the same effect as the above. Sends his chamberlain, Giacomo. Complains much of the gout. Canterbury, 1 Oct. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

1 Oct. 4805. SIR FRANCIS BRIAN to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. XII. 2.

B. M.

"Please it your Grace to be advertised, I [was with the Legate (Campeggio) on] Wednesday, on Barron Downe, to w[el]come him with congratulations both of the King's behalf [and your Grace's,] the which he was very glad of, fur[ther] showing him how, seeing] that your Grace understood that he w[as] troubled] with the gout, for that ye sent by [in a litter,] which lytter I presented unto him, [which he graciously received,] thanking the King and your Grace [for your care of him], saying that he was so glad to come [to do the King and your] Grace service, that the remembrance of [it took] away all his pain. I found him [mounted on a mule], and so rode all the way, and as far [I stayed] by him. If the weather be fair he wy[ll] continue] on his mule. My lord of Chichester [Mr.] Comptroller and many gentlemen i met with him upon the Down, a[nd my said] lord of Chichester made a little orra[ti]on to which] he himself making an answe[r] till we came to the town, where met him a canopy, the which h[e would not] go under, but bade them go on a[fore] him. There met him the mayor [and] aldermen making unto him a[n] oration] and he himself making answer again The street from the gate where he ent[er]ed unto] the gate of the priory was set full with the orders of the friars and all other priests and clerks. At the entering in to [the church] there was another canopy, and a little afore] . . . his clothe and cushions laid for him downe. My lord of Caunterbery, wyt the p[ri]or of Christchurch], the abbott of St. Awsteynes, and a sufferyg[an in] pontificalibus, sens hym, and so wau to t[he high] awter, ware he sange himself, and bless his lodging into the priory where your so for that night we departed. I have of this Spaniard. He is no great clerk fear in him. He came from Rome with [un]der this manner. The Romans made all Rome for Spaniards, and as many [as they c]ould get they killed, and for saving [of this] man's life the Cardinal took him with nt, there is no fear of him for no great g. Sir, in this and in all other things I [shall] be ready at all times to fulfil your [command]ment." [Canter]bery, 1 Oct.

1528.

SIR FRANCIS BRIAN to WOLSEY—cont.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. : My lord Legate's grace.

1 Oct.

4806. WARHAM to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Elizabeth,* a religious woman, professed in St. Sepulchre's, Canterbury, "whiche hadd all the visions at Our Lady of Courtopseet," a well-disposed and virtuous woman, as he hears from her sisters, wishes to speak with him, and has asked Warham to write to that effect. Canterbury, 1 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add. : To, &c., my lord cardinal of York and Legate de latere.

1 Oct.

4807. FLORENTIUS [VOLUSENUS†] to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Thanks him for his horses, which have brought him hither swiftly and smoothly. The Cardinal, it is said, will not come to London till Monday. Sends regards to Anthony Bonvisi‡ and Vincent de Cassaliis, who, he hopes, will not get on too well with his English before he comes, lest with his eloquence and other gifts he ingratiate himself too much with that girl of mine, the daughter of Mrs. Lauson,§ who supped with us the day before yesterday. Richmond, between 8 and 9 o'clock.

P. 1. Headed : Florentius Do. Crumuello. Endd.

1 Oct.

4808. R. NIX, BISHOP OF NORWICH, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Complains of the prior of Cokisforde, and the ruin he has brought on his house. Sent one fully instructed to Dr. Stephens, desiring him to inform Wolsey, that some remedy might be provided before it is too late. The Bishop's hands are closed by the inhibitions granted by "the judges of your audience." By the costs and expences of the suit the poor house will be ruined. Wishes Wolsey would provide some one to take the rule of it. Refers him for further information to Sir Roger Towneshende, or any other worshipful person of these parts. Hoxne, Suffolk, 1 Oct. 1528. Signed and sealed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

* Barton.

† Wilson or Wolsey, author of the celebrated treatise De Animi Tranquillitate. He was tutor to Wynter, dean of Wells, generally reputed to have been Wolsey's son. He mentions his coming over to London, probably with Clerk, and his conversation with Fisher. See De Tranquillitate, p. 250.

‡ Ib., p. 163.

§ "puellæ isti mære, filiæ inque (inquam?) dominæ (or domini?) Lausone."

1528.

1 Oct.

R. O.

4809. CHRISTOPHER COO.

Bargain and sale by Richard Fernor, merchant of the Staple at Calais, to Christopher Coo, of his interest in the wardship and lands of Francis, son and heir of Richard Pulter, of Northburgh, Northt., which were originally granted by patent, 8 Feb. 12 Hen.VIII., to John Castell and Miles Forest, and afterwards made over to him.

Draft, in Wriothesley's hand, pp. 5.

4 Oct.

Vit.B.xxi.43.

B. M.

4810. HERMAN RINCK to WOLSEY.

Received on . . . Sept., at Frankfort, his letters, dated Hampton Court, Aug. 5, sent by Friar John West, an Observant, concerning buying up English books, and arresting Roy and Huckyngk (Tyndall). Neither they nor their accomplices have been seen at Frankfort since Easter. John Schott, of Strasburg (Argentiniensis), their engraver, knows nothing of them. Heard that their books, full of heresy and slander of Wolsey and the King, had been pledged to Jews at Frankfort. Obtained from the senators and judges, by gifts, power to collect them; and believes he has them all, except two, which John West asked for. It was intended to send them packed in bales of linen to Scotland and England. Thinks few or none have been sent. The magistrates have promised that they shall not be reprinted, and the engraver will send him the copy. Will do all he can to arrest Roy and Huckyngk, as West, Herman Rynck, his son, and John Geilkyrche, his servant, will testify.

Reminds him of his services at the election of the Emperor, and of the promises made to him if the King's daughter married the Emperor. Hopes for a reward, although the marriage has not taken place. Reminds him of his services in obtaining privileges for the English merchants from Maximilian in 1502, and offers to go to the Emperor in Spain, or elsewhere, to obtain their renewal, as there was a clause for the prevention of English rebels or heretics taking refuge in the empire, by virtue of which king Philip was required to send Edmund de la Poell to England. William Roy, William Tyntaell, Jerome Barlo, Alexander Berekley, and their adherents, and George Constans and others, ought to be delivered up. Has no copy of the privilege. Will use all his power to get possession of heretical books. Went to the fair at Frankfort, armed with mandates from the Pope and the Emperor, and compelled John Schott to confess that he had printed in English, German, French, and other languages 1,000 books of six quires (quaterniones), and 1,000 of nine, at the order of Roy and Huckyngk, who were unable to pay for them. Has nearly all of them at Cologne. Asks what he shall do with them. Cologne, 4 non. Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 4. Add. Endd.

4 Oct.

R. O.

4811. HERMANN RYNGK, sen., to HENRY VIII.

To the same effect. Cologne, 4 non. Oct. 1528.

Lat., pp. 4. Add. Endd.

4 Oct.

Cal. B. vii.98.

B. M.

4812. ANGUS to [NORTHUMBERLAND].

The king of Scotland came, Oct. 3rd, with his powers to Coldingham, to drive out Angus, but was repulsed by him, as was Home. The King never alighted off his horse till he came to Dunbar. The King intends to besiege him on the 18th. Requests aid. Coldingham, 4 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: "To my Lord," &c.

1528.

4 Oct.

4813. WOLSEY to SIR G. CASALE.

R. O.
St. P. vii. 95. Praises him for the good services he has rendered, and will not be ungrateful. The King will bestow some good benefice on your brother, and bounty on yourself, and not forget his gratitude to the Pope for sending the Legate. He is most anxious to show his zeal for the Church. The benevolence of the Pope has offered Wolsey the best opportunity for promoting his interests with the king of England, who is extremely indignant at the refractory conduct of the Venetians. The designs of France and England for extricating the Pope and the whole of Christendom from their miseries have nearly been brought to perfection; and therefore it behoves the Pope to remain firm. He is to urge the Pope to use all possible means to conciliate Andrea Doria on the promise of receiving Savona, with the rule of Genoa. If the Pope cannot take any course so directly opposed to the Emperor, they are to see what they can do with Doria, and shake his faith in the Emperor, persuading him to accept the offers of the king of England. Is greatly obliged to cardinal S. Quatuor, whose services are highly extolled by Gardiner. Would like to know what present would be agreeable to him. Knows that he desires the edification of St. Peter's. Will do what he can to advance it by recommending it to the King. London, 4 Oct. 1528. Signed. Lat., in Vannes' hand. Add. Endd.

Vit. B. x. 190.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 174.

2. Draft, in Vannes' hand, of the first part of the preceding, with an additional passage to the following effect:—

I find it absolutely necessary that the decretal bull which Campeggio brings with him should be secretly shown to some of the King's council, not with a view of producing it at the trial, but to justify myself as having omitted nothing which can contribute to the King's cause or the security of his realm. I beg you will, therefore, entreat the Pope for this on your knees, and I will take care that no danger shall arise from this indulgence.

Sends him the foreign news. Hears that Doria and the king of France are at variance. [Here the draft resumes as in St. P. vii. 98.]

Continuation of the subject—The King thinks it advisable that the Pope should take Doria into his pay; to which matter the King will himself contribute, and furnish expences.

Vit. B. x. 67.

B. M.

3. Draft of the latter part of the preceding, in Vannes' hand, printed in Burnet, iv. 46.

P. 2.

Ib. f. 68.

4. Draft of another part of the same letter, in Vannes' hand.

Pp. 4.

[4 Oct.]

R. O.

4814. WOLSEY to CARDINAL [S. QUATUOR].

The King and Wolsey are anxious to make him some reward for his services, and will gladly do anything for him or his which would prove to his advantage or honor. They learn from Gardiner how zealous and affectionate he is in expediting the King's matter. Begs that he will continue so. Begs credence for Sir Gregory Casalis.

Lat., pp. 2, in Vannes' hand. Endd.: Tulit has literas Taddeus cursor qui missus fuit die sexta Octobr. 1528.

[4 Oct.]

R. O.

4815. HENRY VIII. to CARDINAL ST. QUATUOR.

Acknowledge the value of the Cardinal's services, especially this last, by which he has bound the King and his whole kingdom to him. Will seek occasion to reward him worthily.

Lat., p. 1. In Vannes' hand. Headed: Ad cardinalem S. Quatuor.

1528.

ii. Henry VIII. to [Clement VII.]

Gardiner has reported how benignly the Pope has heard the King's cause, and endeavored to advance it, so that his children may be for ever secured. Hopes, now that the King refers everything to the Pope's authority, he will do his best to strengthen his cause, and the King will labor to his utmost for the restoration of his Holiness and the preservation of the Church of Rome.

Draft, in Vannes' hand. Lat., p. 1; crossed out.

4816. HENRY VIII. to the COLLEGE OF CARDINALS.

Vit. B. x. 52.

B. M.

Burnet, iv. 44.

Thanking them for their services in reference to his cause, and promising to be grateful.

Draft, Lat., p. 1, in Vannes' hand. The heading in Burnet, "Januar. 1528, ad collegium," is in the original MS., but in a modern hand, and is of no authority.

5 Oct.

4817. JAMES V. to NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. vii. 149.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 514.

Has received his letters dated Topliff, 14 Sept., stating that he is instructed by the King to inquire the term and place of the diet desired by James, and the names of the personages he means to send. Has sent Lyon, master-of-arms, to the King, with large writings on that subject. Intends to send three of the following commissioners; viz., the abbots of Kelso and Cambuskenneth, the provost of Trinity College, the official of Lothian, the lairds of Balwere, Farnihurst and Lundy in Angus, and Adam Otterburn our advocate. Hopes he will suppress any rumors of a breach being likely to arise from the misconduct of Angus. Edinburgh, 5 Oct. 16 Jac. V. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: The erle off Northumbreland, wardane of the East and Middle Marches of Ingland.

5 Oct.

R. O.

4818. QUEEN MARGARET to [the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND].

Has received a good letter from him, by his servant Matthew Hallyday, with a copy of another to her son, dated Topclif, 14 Sept. Is glad he is so well minded for the continuance of the truce. Good answer has been made by the King her son, the better because she saw the copy of the Earl's letter to him. Edinburgh, 5 Oct.

P. 1. Headed: "The copy of the queen of Scots' letter to my Lord."

5 Oct.

R. O.

4819. HENRY LORD OF METHWEN to the EARL OF NORTH-UMBERLAND.

On Friday, 2 Oct., while riding in company with the King between Haddington and Dunbar, Matthew Hallyday was brought to him. Conducted him to the King's presence, and furthered the receipt of his writings for the Earl's sake. Sent him yesterday to the Queen, who received him well. Edinburgh, 5 Oct.

P. 1. Headed: "The copy of the letter sent for (fro?) the lord of Methwyn to my lord."

5 Oct.

R. O.

4820. CLERK to WOLSEY.

This Monday, at 10, the Legate arrived at Dartford. On hearing of your pleasure by the Controller and by Brian, he determined not to pass Lewisham "far tomorrow," and intends to be there by ten, "for he can in no wise labour after his dinner." On Wednesday he will be at your pleasure. Begs provision may be made at Lewisham, and the meeting of my lord of Suffolk be spared till Wednesday. The Legate is at present very well, but has been sore vexed since leaving Canterbury. Dartford, Monday, 2 at the afternoon.

1528.

CLERK to WOLSEY—cont.

Signed and sealed.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

P.S.—The Legate is very ill appointed for wine. That sent was very bad.*

5 Oct. 4821. RICHARD BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S to WOLSEY.

R. O.

His letter of the 23 Sept., touching the receiving of the Cardinal and Legate de Latere, was not delivered till the 5 Oct., although it contained an order to be at London on the 4th. Sends a chaplain in all haste "to intimate to your Highness" the circumstance for his excuse. Will be glad to come up if the sickness he has had every winter since he has been here does not prevent him. Lanteseye, 5 Oct.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace. Endd.

5 Oct. 4822. THOMAS LORD DARCY.

R. O.

Rental of his lands and tenements at Tempilnewsum, Buttercramp, Templehirst and Assheforde, 5 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., pp. 27.

5 Oct. 4823. ISABEL LADY POYNINGS.

Her will. Proved, 5 Oct. 1528. Printed in Nicolas' Testaments Vetusta, p. 634.

6 Oct. 4824. WOLSEY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. i. 328. Has news of the death of the bp. of Winchester (Fox); and as, in your communications with me, you have expressed your desire "for drawing my promotions near unto your Grace," I thought it convenient to put you in mind of the great commodity now offered "for establishing my things after such sort" as I might do you greater service. I beg also to put you in mind of my poor scholar, the dean of Wells, "towards whom I have found your Highness of gracious disposition touching the bishopric of Durham, when I should fortune to leave the same." By his promotion you will have preferences to the yearly value of 2,000*l.*, and I shall be more able to finish my poor college. Durham Place, 6 Oct.† Signed.

Add.

6 Oct. 4825. LEE to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 101. Have written at divers times to Wolsey, and since the 10th and 30th of Sept. a recapitulation of all. Send the Emperor's answer to the Pope's collector in cipher, and their communications with Alemayne. It is reported that the French host at Naples is wholly vanquished, that the French have lost Genoa, and that Trivulcio has retired to the castle. Many great men, it is said, have been taken prisoners. It is said that the Emperor will go into Italy, at which this country is not glad, and wish they had not a foot in Italy. Valladolid, 6 Oct. 1528.

Part in cipher, deciphered by Tuke. Add. Endd.

* This postscript was found apart.

† This letter is three weeks later than the date of Fox's death as given in Le Neve (14 Sept.); yet the words of the letter seem to imply that he had just heard of it.

1528.

7 Oct.
R. O.4826. JOHN HACKETT to WOLSEY.

Has advertised him of occurrents by his letters 20 Aug., 12 and 13 Sept., and 5 Oct., as the bearer, Friar West, will show him. Will be glad of an answer to his letters. Antwerp, 7 Oct. 1528.

P.S.—To bring his purposes to pass West must be dispensed with for his grey habit.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

7 Oct.
R. O.4827. HACKETT to WOLSEY.

This morning, before leaving Antwerp for Harman's business, I left a letter with Friar West. Since coming to this town M. de Chevance, my lord of Palermo's brother, delivered me the letter, enclosed from Madame Vendôme, for your Grace. The bearer of it is Harman Ryng's son, who brings letters from his father, who is a true knight to the King. Mechlin, 7 Oct. 1528.

P.S.—Wishes an answer to his former letters touching the prisoners at Antwerp.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

7 Oct.
R. O.4828. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

St. P. iv. 515.

My lord of Richmond is in good health and merry. Since the beginning of this sweat he has lain in a private place with few attendants, but has now come hither. He lately paid a visit for one night to my lord of Northumberland, who pressed him to come and see his house at Topcliff, and conducted himself more like a man than a child of his tender age. Cannot be at London this term, as lady Salisbury expects; but my Lord's receiver and auditor in the South are instructed to search for evidences touching Canford. The lord Daere called here on his way South to see the King. There is great business between him and the earl of Cumberland about the rule of the town and castle of Carlisle, which Magnus thinks should be annexed to the wardentry.

Sir Will. Parre, who is or will be with Wolsey this term, will show him what he has done in reducing my lord of Richmond's household to better order and less charges. Sheriffhutton, 7 Oct.

Hol. Add. Endd.

9 Oct.
R. O.4829. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

Has received his writings, dated Oking, 19 Sept., complaining that Jeffray Middleton, of Landesdall, and Rowland Bland, his servant, were taken by John Ireweyn, about Midsummer last, when on pilgrimage to visit the corpse of St. Ninian, and delivered to Will. Airmstrong, an outlaw, who released them on giving as pledges Oliver, the said Jeffray's son, and the brother of Bland. Will send order to the warden that the pledges be put to freedom. Edinburgh, 9 Oct. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

9 Oct.

4830. NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. vi. 459.

R. M.
St. P. iv. 517.

On the 2 Oct. the king of Scots with 700 men came to Coldingham abbey. The prior, brother to Angus, was dead before their coming. The Earl, who had warning, escaped with 200 men, and pursued the King on his return, who had put in the abbey lord Home and his brother the abbot of Jedburgh, so fast that he drove him to Dunbar. Returning to Coldingham, he drove out the Homes, as by his letter enclosed, and has sent lady Margaret, his daughter, to Norham castle. The Earl must, of necessity, take refuge in England, to avoid the army which the king of Scots is bringing against him, and has asked for protection. In his attack upon the King he was secretly assisted by many on the Borders. Can obtain no redress from the Scots, who have lately been on the water of Tyne, taken 23 men and 16 cattle. All wrongs done by Englishmen are sharply corrected, except that Sir William Elercar, "to the parlous example of all the country," hath ridden into Scotland, and brought with him Mark Carre, and other Scotchmen, to Werke Castle. Wishes to know how he is to deal with them. Begs credence for Leonard Musgrave. Received letters from the king and queen of Scots on the 9th, which he encloses. Newcastle, 9 Oct. Signed : "Hy. Northumbreland."

1528.

NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY—cont.

Pp. 2. Add. : "To my lord Legate's good grace."

9 Oct. 4831. ROB. BISHOP OF CHICHESTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since he left Wolsey his knee has begun to swell. If he were wise, as he is not, would remain where he is, even if he did nothing. Begs Wolsey to allow him to go while he can ride. From his small house at Clapham, 9 Oct.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.

9 Oct. 4832. CHARLES V. to MARGARET OF SAVOY.

Lanz, 290.

Has written to England, as she will see by the copy of his answer to the Cardinal's messenger, who came here with Marnix. Wrote also to the bishop of Burgos, directing him to take leave of the King, and to return upon safe-conduct through France to Fonterabia, as the English ambassadors here will not be allowed to depart until his arrival. As king of Spain it is impossible for Charles to retain a Spanish ambassador in England; but if Margaret thinks peace or truce would be desirable for the interchange of merchandise, and for the purpose of learning the news, she may send an envoy from Flanders, charging him to inform Charles of whatever he can learn, by the merchants who often come hither. Madrid, 9 Oct. 1528.

Fr.

10 Oct. 4833. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 112.

B. M.

Extracts from the letters of Gregory [Casale], dated Loretto, 10 Oct. The Imperialists at Naples, after the defeat of the French, were found not to exceed 4,700, both Spaniards and Germans. There were 1,200 Spaniards at Gaeta, and a few Sicilians in Calabria, in all not more than 8,000 foot. The Spaniards and Germans are clamoring for their wages, which amount to an immense sum. The Imperialists are trying to extort them from the cities and nobles of the kingdom. After a consultation between Renzo, the viscount of Tur[enne] and others, it was determined that 5,000 foot should be sent to garrison Barletta, Trani and Brindisi, if they were still safe. Renzo has embarked for Barletta with 1,000 foot. The prince of Melfi and the Florentines will raise 4,000, and send them after him. Renzo does not think the Spaniards will attack these towns, as they are strongly fortified. He wishes St. Pöl to send him 5,000 Germans and 2,000 Italians, to make up the number of 12,000, with whom he thinks he can easily recover the kingdom and blockade the enemy, or at least prevent their exactions of money. The Imperialists want both men and money, and would be destroyed if the French king would act with energy, which he has never done yet. He ought to trust more to Italian forces than to French. De Guise should bring with him about 6,000 Germans. Is still at Loretto, and will return to the Pope when he has recovered from the fever.

In Vannes' hand. Lat., pp. 2.

1528.

10 Oct. 4834. SIR LAURENCE STARBER to WOLSEY.

R.O.

Recommending John Bauer as a skilful judge of metals and minerals, and fit to be in the King's service. Germany is quiet at present. If he hears of any movement, will let him know. Sends him specimens of metals found in Germany. Nuremberg, 10 Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

11 Oct. 4835. SIR CHR. DACRE and GEOFFREY LANCASTER to the DUKE OF RICHMOND.

R.O.

Received his letters on Saturday at quarter sessions,—the one touching riots committed by lord Dacre's tenants, the other touching those between Sir Will. Pennyngton and Thos. Dykes. Declared to the inquest impannelled by the sheriff the causes according to the bills in both cases. The inquest sat all day till 8 p.m., and would give no verdict, so we left them in the sheriff's custody till they should make up their minds; but they departed without leave into the town, and next morning at the Mute hall we found only six or seven of them. Could get no satisfactory explanation from the sheriff. Asked those present if they were agreed upon a verdict; but they were not, and gave none till noon, when Sir Christopher had to go, as he had to keep my lord Legate's court and sheriff's turn at Hexham next day. At 1 they gave in their verdict to Geoffrey Lancaster. Copies enclosed. Carlisle, 11 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

ii. Indictment against Thos. Dacre, of Nawarrt, Cumb., and 101 other persons, named, for a riot committed at Carlisle, at the instigation of Will. lord Dacre, on 21 July 20 Hen. VIII., when they broke into a meadow called Swyft medoy, in the tenure of Sir Thos. Clifford, and attacked eleven of his servants, whose names are given. Signed by Sir C. Dacre and Lancaster.

Lat., pp. 2, large paper.

iii. Indictment against Will. Threlkeld, of Burgh upon the Sands, Cumb., bailiff of the same, and 140 others, named, for a riotous meeting at Stanxx (Stanwix), at the instigation of Will. lord Dacre, on the 25 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII., when some of their number crossed to Swyft Hyll to a place in the tenure of Nich. Denton of Carlisle, and assaulted his wife Margaret, and three of his servants, named. Signed as above. In margin: Billa vera.

Lat., pp. 2, large paper. Endd.: Copies of the indictments within the county of Cumberland.

iv. Indictment against the above Will. Threlkeld, and twenty-three others, named, for a riot at Swyft Hyll, committed at the instigation of lord Dacre, 7 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII., when they assaulted Gerard and Thos. How, sons of Ric. How, of Carlisle, and took the said Thos. prisoner to Naward castle.

Lat.

v. Indictment against Will. Threlkeld, and seven others, named, for a riot committed 31 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. at Carlisle, when they broke into the house of Nicholas Denton, carried off grain to the value of 10s., and assaulted Geo. Haysty, his servant. Signed as before.

Lat. This and the preceding are on one large sheet of paper.

vi. Indictment against Ric. Sewell, of Blakell, and thirteen others, named, for a riot instigated by lord Dacre, at le Garthes, in Bochardaytt feld, 1528.

SIR C. DACRE and G. LANCASTER to the DUKE OF RICHMOND—cont.
Cumb., on the 24 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII., when they assaulted Ric. How, servant of Sir Thos. Clifford, and took him prisoner to Nawarrt castle.

Lat.

vii. Indictment against Ric. Sewell, of Blakell, and nine others, named, for a riot committed at lord Dacre's instigation, 9 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII., at Over Cuerok, when they assaulted Rob. Sanderson, of Upryghtby, and took him prisoner to Nawarrt castle. Signed as before.

Lat. This and the preceding are on one large sheet of paper.

viii. Indictment against Nich. Denton, and thirteen others, for a riot at Swyft Hyll, near Carlisle, 25 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII., when they assaulted John Calvert, of Carlisle, weaver, and John Heythryngam, of Rychargait, and drove the former to Carlisle in fear of his life. Signed as before.

Lat., p. 1.

12 Oct. 4836. JOHN CASALE, the Prothonotary, to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 113.

B. M.

Has been unable to write, from the scarcity of couriers. Trani, Barletta and Monopoli remain subject to the Venetians; and, as his brother Francesco, captain of the cavalry there, writes, can be easily kept, for the Imperialists are too few to attack them. The Signory are preparing to send assistance by sea. News came today that Renzo had arrived at Senegaglia. The Signory will send ships as soon as they can sail. It is reported that St. Pól is at Genoa with his army. He asked the city to surrender, but the citizens replied that they wished to preserve their freedom. He was unable to besiege, as his army was reduced by desertion, and so departed.

The last letters from France state that the King had agreed with the ambassadors of the Allies that 25,000 foot, 800 men at arms, and 1,500 light horse should be kept in Italy this winter,—10,000 in the kingdom of Naples, and the rest in Lombardy. The King promises to pay 10,000. The same number are to be immediately levied for Naples,—3,000 by him, 4,000 by the Florentines, and 3,000 by the Venetians. The Florentine ambassador told Casale that they would willingly provide the number assigned; but Visconti, who is at Florence in the name of the French king, says that 2,000, with 100 horse, would be enough. The Venetians will send 800 foot; the rest are already in Apulia. Visconti has wages for his own men. St. Pól wrote to the Florentines to retain the infantry for certain reasons. The Florentines wrote to the Venetians not to send their ships so soon; by which they now excuse their slowness.

The ambassador of king John of Hungary tells him that the ambassadors sent to France have obtained a promise of 100,000 gold pieces, and the King has written to the Signory to ask them to assist. One of the ambassadors is going to England. King John is on his frontier, and with a little help could do great harm to Ferdinand.

The son of the duke of Ferrara will act as captain general of the Florentines.

Sends a copy of a letter from his brother, who is with the Pope. His brother, the knight (Gregory), is going to Our Lady of Loretto after his illness. Venice, 12 Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

12 Oct. 4837. JOHN CHEKYNGE to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Gregory and the rest of your scholars are in good health, and getting on well in learning. Are now in Cambridge, the University being free from sickness. Have been long in the country, where they had country fare, and paid well for it, with simple lodging. Desires him to send, for Gregory, to keep him from the cold this winter, five yards of marble frieze for a "galberdyne," for Christopher nine yards, and for Nich. Sadler seven yards; also a bed and a pair of sheets. Pembroke Hall in Cambridge, 12 Oct.

1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Maister Thomas Crumwell, beside the Augustyne Freys in London.

12 Oct.

4838. SIR JOHN NEVEYLL, Sheriff of Yorkshire, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Asks Wolsey to help him to retain the office for another year, as his expences were so heavy last year in consequence of the dearth. The duke of Richmond's council, the justices of assize, and Wolsey's servants can inform Wolsey of his demeanor. "From the Chett," 12 Oct.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my [lord C]jardnall gud graice. Endd.

12 [Oct. ?]

4839. T. MAGNUS to [CROMWELL].

R. O.

" u[n]to youe And [for] somyche as being fatte doth fall
 he canne not contynue to be devided, the oone
 the other halve to be that Sir John Houseman good cher made unto for thair parte and good ale, pigeons and to commaunde me to [y]ong shovellards may [t]ymes in case thay shall geven unto thaym.
 arke besides guttes and
 oos the said shovellards [sho]vellards to reasoorte and that this thing wer hider.
 for tenne pounce moor
 and the other for the Cawsay ther coustide
 te purchase with myn
 e reparing and
 and to spare money
 eete thenne the laste
 litle nd mought have doon elied to some good [e]ffecte. At that and not mete to have spared so myche good and a grete acte with some further doon with the same. Sory I am that I tune craving, requeste and desir of er cometh to noe better purpoos. Yf for the said Cawsay, it shalbe doon by soe light an oppynyon as I have [wi]sdom or discretion.
 the said buk. I had lever thay were ther shulde be any suche withynne my that shulde be thoccaseion of that dissenas and [su]che as it is, that thay be not well stirred ous and specially at the begynnyng of the n myche from eding and sleping in the 1528.

T. MAGNUS to [CROMWELL]—cont.

..... [e]anne moor at large shewe unto youe. This or els ther wolbe noe remedy. This places for saving of der, specially with myche ye well. At Sherefhooton, the 12th ase provide that the timber ordeyned led, with drawne, nor taken away, and as to to lye ther, notwithstanding I remitte that to en in that behalve. Your owne. T. Magnus."

P. 1. More than half lost by mutilation. Signed.

P.S. on the back "..... the said buk to Thomas Gibon to make cher to my neighbors."

12 Oct. 4840. The MONASTERY OF NOTLEY.

i. Writ to the escheator of Beds and Bucks for restitution of the temporalities on the election of Robert Brice, late prior of Burcestre, vice John Marston, the last abbot, deceased; the fealty of the new abbot being ordered to be taken by John London, clerk. Westminster, 12 Oct.

ii. Similar writs for cos. of Oxford, Lincoln, Hants and Middlesex.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 1.

[13 Oct.] 4841. The DIVORCE.

Vit. B. x. 160.

B. M.

Pocock, i. 181.

Notarial attestation made in the presence of Cuthbert bishop of London, John bishop of Ely, John bishop of Bath and Wells, and Robert Shirton, S.T.P., by William Claibourgh and John Talkern, that Katharine of Arragon promises to send to Spain for the original brief concerning her marriage with the King. Greenwich, 1528, 5 Clement VII., "mense . . .
 . . [tert]ia decima."

Lat., vellum, mutilated.

4842. The DIVORCE.

R. O.

"A divise to be gyven to the Quenis grace by hyr cownsellours."

Have delivered the copies of the bull and brief concerning the marriage to the King. The brief cannot be found in the treasury, and is considered a forgery. The copy will be of no advantage when the process begins; and she must endeavour to obtain the original, which is in the Emperor's custody. They advise her to write to the Emperor to send the original, telling him that the King will send to receive it at Bayonne; the want of it may ruin her cause, and endanger the inheritance of her child; that a lawful copy made by some judge or bishop will be as useful to him as the original, but nothing can serve her purpose so well, as it is a common instrument of the King and herself, and that she has promised to exhibit it in three months,—which failing, sentence will probably be delivered against her.

If it appears that she has not done what she ought to do to obtain the brief, it will be imputed greatly to her hindrance. They themselves would consider they ought to act as if no such brief had been spoken of.

Advises her to ask the Emperor's ambassador, from whom she had the copy, to write to the Emperor also, and, say, if he refuse, the Queen will ask the Pope for compulsories and other reminders. In order that the King may not have cause to think that she intends any frivolous delay, she should depose before a notary that she intends to use all possible means and diligence to recover the brief, wherever it be, and that, to her knowledge, it is in Spain, and nowhere else.

Pp. 10. Endd.

1528.

13 Oct. 4843. THOMAS BYRD, Priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Reminds him of the 5 mks. of his pension which is behind from Lady Day, and that he promised him, his uncle and son, to get him the patent for the pension. Hears that my lord of Salisbury is come to London, and one word to him will be enough. Will lose his pension if the bishop is translated by the vacation of Winchester, unless he has his patent. Sends the copy of his writ, and the patent that his predecessor had. The benefice of Boscombe was given to one of the chapel five weeks before it was void. Hynxsey Hall, Oxford, 13 Oct.

Another half year expired at Michaelmas last.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Thos. Cromwell, dwelling by the Friars Augustines in London. Endd.

13 Oct. 4844. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 114*.

B. M.

Extract from letters of Paul Casale, dated Rome, 13 Oct.

Confirmation has arrived of the report that captain Simon Romanus had defeated the count Burelle in Calabria, killing 1,500 Spaniards whom he had brought from Sicily, and taking him prisoner. The Venetians have sent money to raise cavalry.

Lat., in Vannes' hand, p. 1.

14 Oct. 4845. TAYLER to BRIAN TUKE.

Cal. D. x. 360.

B. M.

"Right worshipful and my singular loving friend, [after most hearty] commendations, I thank you for your friendly and ky[nd] letter, which bears] date the 6th of Oct., and came to my hands the 9th [of this present,] delivered by Thadeus, the which hath used very [great diligence] and departed in post incontinent after his letter delivered [by the which] I was marvellously comforted, and if I could recognize [in myself] any of those qualities, the which you so accumulate [upon me,] I would be very joyous. You write discreet, substantia[1] diligent, and circumspect. If there had remained [any way] whereby a man might be brought into a foles p[aradize] you would not have left it behind, but would [have discovered every] one of these things in me, the which you of your go[od] nature impute] unto me, whereby you bind me for ever, so fully and [to] certify me of such things as I was desirous to [know] of. And no man know better to do it than you [by virtue of] your authority and place. And to these great bonds and yet you have added a great hope and accumulation p so heartily to be friendly to me in the authority of your off[ice] concer]nyng my diets, the which cause I heartily commend [unto you; sed] de his hactenus.

"And whereas you write that you had in co[mmandment] to show unto me somewhat of the cause of T[addeo] his] coming, according to your writing and tenor of th[e same] the morrow I went to Fonten de Blewe, where th[e King and] Madame was returned from Blesse, were with both which there speaking after commendations made of th[e King's] highness and my lord Cardinal's grace behalf declared and showed the great cordial affe[ction and] good mind they had to the affairs of France that they had sent a post in great diligence . . . [to] recover Andreas Doria, if it were po[ssible] to the King such promises as should Andrewe. The King told me that he will s[end word of] all things that the King our master promiseth and that he had offered aforetime as much to [the said Andreas] as he could desire. And because other letters I had from you, therefore an answer I write to you, desiring [you to] certify my lord's Grace of the same, thinking not best (both for lack of news, and because also the bishop [of Bayonne] hath writ unto the Grand Master all the said m[at]ters, who is] writing to him answer of all things which he shall de[clare unto my] lord's Grace,) to trouble my said lord's Grace with any [letter] at this time, whom, as soon as any news shall oec[ur or] happen worth writing, I shall with diligence certify [thereof]. The King was very desirous to have known some ty[dings] of the cardinal Campegeus coming, and the Gr[and] Master covetous to hear what news came out of Sp[ain since] the last letters, for hither cometh nothing out of Spay[n]. . . . I pray you send this letter to my priest at the Rolls. Th[us God] have you in his keeping. From Mel-dunc, four leagues from Fonten de Blewe, in haste, the 14th of Oct. 1528 : wh[ere I] am commanded to get me a lodging to be nigh the Court."

1528.

TAYLER to BRIAN TUKE—cont.

Signed. Add.

14 Oct. 4846. P. EARL OF OSSORY to WOLSEY.

R. O. On the arrival of the lord of Kilmainham with the King's letters, St. P. II. 143. instructions and commissions, was invading the earl of Desmond. Left part of his retinue to defend his lands, and went with the other to the Pale. Oconour has made several invasions of the Pale with Kildare's brethren and adherents, and attempted to stop Ossory's coming. These practices have been devised by Kildare, thinking that he will necessarily be sent home as his father was, when his brethren and kinsmen made war. The King's subjects in the Pale, seeing that Kildare and his father have been pardoned and set in authority after committing high offences, bear allegiance to him, trusting that he will come again and rule. Showed this when in England, and it might have been prevented if his desires had been followed. Drogheda, 14 Oct. Signed.

Add. : To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

14 Oct. 4847. LORD JAMES BUTLER to WOLSEY.

R. O. Thanks him for his letters expressing the King's confidence in his St. P. II. 144. service. Has certified the perverse and heinous demeanour of the brethren and adherents of the earl of Kildare, to the sore decay and impoverishing of the King's true subjects. Considers himself unequal to the charge committed to him by the King, to execute all exploits and journeys upon the King's rebels, in consequence of the smallness of his revenues, his youth, and lack of experience, and the certainty of high malice being borne him. Asks for assistance. Desires credence for Robert Cowley and the prior of Kilmainham, the bearer. Dublin, 14 Oct. Signed.

Add. : To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.

15 Oct. 4848. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

R. O. Hampton, the bearer, will tell him all about Wynter's affairs and the house. Has before written of his great desire to please Wolsey. Expresses his great obligations to Lupset. There is a report that Wolsey is displeased with him, which has grieved both of them very much. Could not bear to be separated from him. Has before written, and Hampton will tell Wolsey of the trouble Cyprianus the Italian has taken in teaching him. Paris, id. Oct.

Lat., Hol., pp. 2. Add. : R., &c., card. Ebor. Angliæ primati Sedis Apostolicæ a latere Legato, &c. Endd.

15 Oct. 4849. LEE to TUKE

Vesp. C. IV. Mr. Silvester writes now the uttermost that he can get from the 260°. Emperor, which is much the same as they sent by the bishop of Pistoja on Sept. 30, and by sea. The Emperor desires particular peace with the King before any treaty of universal peace, saying that then the King may, if he likes, mediate for the universal peace, but Darius could not tell whether he meant with the condition mentioned by Alemand, that the particular peace is to be of no effect if the universal peace does not follow. Darius told the Emperor that he seemed to fall from the universal peace. He answered there is no mediator. Cannot tell whether Alemand spoke with authority when he mentioned that condition. As they are always speaking of the divorce, desires instructions thereupon if it is mentioned during the negotiations. Thinks a good answer would be that the King does not act from displeasure towards the Queen or any other private cause, but only for the discharge of his conscience, and that he will not be his own judge, but will follow the judgment of the Church. Does not think the Emperor can reasonably reply to this. To express ignorance or dissemble would increase evil opinion, and perhaps hinder the treaty. Haste should be made, for they are raising men here, though for what purpose he does not know, but the Emperor's journey to Italy is commonly spoken of. Two new councillors have been appointed for the Queen, the archbishop of Toledo, who is never away from her, and the count of Miranda, her chamberlain, brother of Don Ynigo, the ambassador in England. 15 Oct. 1528.

B. M.

1528.

Hol., p. 1. Cipher, deciphered by Tuke. Add. Endd.

15 Oct. 4850. HERESY.

Harl. MS. 421,

f. 34.

B. M.

Examination of a heretic, not named.

15 Oct.—About four years ago was contracted to Joan, daughter of one Dyer of Fynchenfeld, now dead, who taught him the 1st chapter of James. One Quynnyne, butcher of Coggeshall, now dead, taught him the 2nd chapter of James, and erroneous opinions about the Sacrament of the Altar, pilgrimages, images, and fasting. Worked at Bumstede at Towre, with John Tyball, who read Paul's Epistles and the Evangelists to him, and taught him heresy. Went with Sir Richard Fox, John Tyball, John Smyth of Bumstede, friar Topley, and friar Gardyner, to the house of one Gilbert, shipwright, where they read the New Testament and talked of heresies. They also met at Bowre Hall, Mother Bocher's, and Mother Charte's, where sometimes Fox, or the respondent, or John Smyth, would read the New Testament in English, in presence of them and their households. John Smyth, of Redeswell, also resorted there, but "he saith he never heard speak of any manner of opinions." About a year ago last Whitsuntide, being in London with John Tyball, went to friar Baron at the Friars Augustines, to buy New Testaments. Found him reading the New Testament to a young gentleman, with a chain round his neck. Tyball told him Sir Richard Fox was well learned and would do well, and asked him to write him a letter. Does not remember what was in it. Each of them bought a New Testament for 3s. Kept it until the Sunday before last Mid Lent. Read it in the houses of Roger, a tanner of Bures, Gyfford, Bower Hall, Mother Bocher's, and Mother Charte's, and at last sold it to Fox.

Sentence given:—"Quod citra septimam in quodam die festo, offerret cereum unius libræ imagini Beatæ Mariæ et quod jejundet quinque diebus Veneris in pane et aqua in honore Quinque Vulnerum citra festum Pasche. Et proficiscatur peregre in abbatiam de Ipswico citra festum Purificationis. Septem spalinos (sic) penitenciales et quinquies spalterium Beatæ Mariæ."

Pp. 3. Contemporary foliation, cccclx-i.

16 Oct. 4851. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, iii.

169.

Wrote on the 6th of the arrival of Campeggio, which did not take place next day in the way expected, for he was so tormented with gout that he could not endure to be borne in his litter. He was taken to Suffolk's lodging, and next day passed secretly by water to the bishop of Bath's, where he is at present confined to his bed. Wolsey has paid him three visits, and had on each occasion a long conversation with him. Knows not what will be the issue. Expects that those who manage this business will have to use all their understanding to conquer the difficulty. Those of this country talk plentifully, but if that be the only obstacle they will go on, for the whole thing is well arranged. A good number of the lords of the kingdom are assembled here, and shortly there will be others, more than have been seen for a long time, and it will not be the fault of the one party if the affair is not despatched very soon. The other makes such cheer as she has always done in her greatest triumphs, nor could one perceive anything, looking at the two together, and to this hour they have but one bed and one table. I have been to see Campeggio, who is much gratified by his reception in France, and speaks wonders of the Pope and his good will, not forgetting to speak about Ravenna and Cervia.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

Received on Wednesday morning the packets of my lord of Bath, sent me by the bailey. I sent them to him, and went to him yesterday to learn what he had to say about the contribution, about which I am much vexed to see the despatch dragged on to this hour, after having written so long ago that the affair was ready. More than four times since my last letters I have sent to Wolsey for an audience, but have been quite unable to obtain it. This I showed to my lord of Bath in as gentle manner as I could, and he has promised to represent the matter to Wolsey, and get me an answer by Sunday. He excuses the delay by the great complication of affairs at present, which will in that time be a little cleared up.

"Or, Monseigneur, il fault que je vous en dye ma fantaisye, la chose estant baillée pour preste de maniere que je pensoye dedans deux jours toucher deniers, Maistre Bryant va venir, dict que pour affaires de consequence, et mesmes pour mettre sur le bureau nouvelles deliberations et entreprises, Montpezat devoyt bientost venir decza." From that time, although I did not at once perceive it, I have been continually put off. I know what they want to do, but I think they will try to put off till Montpezat's arrival, that they may always have some excuse to put before you, and, if asked to grant anything for the future, may always pay you with present things. I have warned you sometimes, when sending a gentleman hither, not to notify it so long before; and for this I had my reasons, for I have found by experience it only makes the despatch of business more difficult.

As to news from Spain, my lord of Bath says no answer has yet been made to the offers of Silvester, which are the first he had to propose, but that the Emperor continually puts him off for want of leisure to read them. At the very time that Silvester was writing, Andrea Dorea had agreed with the Emperor, at which they were making great rejoicings. His conditions were only what the others report, viz., the maintenance of so many galleys, with a large pension assigned in Naples, and assurance of the liberty of Genoa, including the town of Savona. It is said Gueldres has agreed with the Emperor, having been surprised in one of his towns without provisions; but I doubt this report, especially as the ships which brought Mons. de Ren are now upon the coast waiting for wind to go to Spain, and in them are several Spaniards going back with him. Among them also are three Portuguese vessels. London, 16 Oct.

P.S.—I wrote lately of the arrival of a brother of the earl of Angus at this court. He has come to complain of the Earl's treatment, who has been banished from Scotland, while they say the Queen has taken another husband, who is a still finer fellow than himself. On the Borders great inroads are made on both sides. The Legate will no longer be their neighbor, for he has this day taken the bishopric of Winchester, the richest hereabouts, and will give up Durham. The Imperial ambassador speaks much about the affair of Mons. de Gueldres, even showing a copy of the capitulation, which bears that he has agreed with the Emperor to be friend of friends, and enemy of enemies, leaving the Emperor his heir should he die without children. The Spanish ships have come, and the merchants say that the Emperor has caused 200,000 ass-loads of corn to be brought from Andalusia into Biscay, apparently intending to seize a new opportunity of making war in that quarter.

1528.

French. Add.: Mons. le Grand Maistre de France.

16 Oct. 4852. LEE to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. C. iv.

262.

B. M.

On Sept. 30 sent the Emperor's answer to Darius by the bishop of Pistoja. On Oct. 6 sent by sea a reply conceived by them and sent to Darius, but he was unable to find out whether the Emperor would be content with the condition expressed by Alemand. It is evident that he wants a mediator. The success in Italy makes them more close than they otherwise would be. Men are being raised both openly and secretly. The people of the country disapprove of the Emperor's journey to Italy, and impute it to the Chancellor. Some think his money will not serve, and it will be hard to get any more here. The great men are summoned to Toledo. The Emperor's confessor is removed from the secret council. The archbishop of Toledo and the count of Miranda are now of the council. They are perhaps chosen to attend on the Empress during the Emperor's absence in Italy, and he perhaps intends through them to get money from the great men. He used the same policy two years ago; for, before calling a Parliament, he took to his council the said Archbishop, the duke of Alva and others, but discharged them as soon as the Parliament was dissolved.

Has already written the words said to Darius by the count of Nassau concerning the divorce. Wishes for instructions what to say if it is mentioned. Has hitherto pretended ignorance, and said that if the King had any such intention, it was only to follow the judgment of the Church, and for the discharge of his conscience, and not from any displeasure toward the Queen. The report that the King has sent for advice to the doctors of Paris has confirmed this. Some say that the French are the original movers of this trouble, by their doubts as to the legitimacy of the Princess. Said that if such a doubt were moved, the King could do no less than try the sufficiency of the matrimony, on which it depends. They say here that Campeggio is arrived in England to judge the matter. Tell them that if it is so, it is plain that the King does not intend to do anything of his own will, but to abide what justice may require. Hears that the Emperor has sent to the Pope, by the general of the Observants, lately made Cardinal,* certain considerations against granting the King a dispensation for the divorce. Said that the King would not want a dispensation, but a declaration whether the marriage was valid or not. Valladolid, 16 Oct. 1528.

Hol.; cipher, deciphered by Tuke; pp. 3. Add. Endd.

16 Oct. 4853. GHINUCCI and LEE to [WOLSEY].

Vesp. C. iv.

261.

B. M.

John Radecliff, who brought Wolsey's letters of 26 April, asking them to assist him in obtaining restitution for a ship taken at Bayona in Galicia, went to Madrid, but, not finding the Emperor there, made supplication to the Queen and her Council, of whom he obtained a good provision, which was afterward revoked on the suggestion of the other party that Spanish ships have been taken by the English. He is renewing his suit. Had other letters from Wolsey, of June 2, and a letter from Don Ynigo to the Emperor, concerning two ships of Dartmouth, but the party never came.

* Francis Quignones.

1528.

GHISUCCI and LEE to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Have agreed with the captors of the ships. Another poor man of the West country has obtained provision for his ship, but is not able to answer the costs. Gives an account of the suit of a young merchant, who has been here three months, for two ships taken. In consequence of a safe-conduct of don Ynigo, he has at length obtained power to sell the two ships, and have half the proceeds. Thinks that others will have much worse speed. Valladolid, 16 Oct. 1528. Signed.

Lee's hand, pp. 2.

16 Oct.

4854. LEE to TUKE.

Vesp. C. iv.
263*.
B. M.

After writing his other letter it came into his mind to write fancies to him touching the answer to be made to the new demand of the Emperor of a particular peace with the King. Thinks there are many things to induce the French king to allow it. Otherwise it will be hard for him to find a mediator. If he will consent, it would be well to find out whether the Emperor will accept that condition. This will soon appear if answer be made that the King trusts the Emperor will desire him to do nothing contrary to his honor; which saved, that is to say, the universal peace ensuing, he can be content either to make a new treaty with the Emperor, or else to declare the old treaties in force, as before the intimation. Thinks this answer will save the King's honor and discover the Emperor's mind; for if he is not content with the answer, he does not mean to conclude the universal peace. Must endeavor to prevent the Emperor's accustomed delays, for he may agree, and yet put off the time for his own advantage, finding cavillations to have everything for the universal peace concluded before the particular peace is taken. He may make vain excuses about the judges or arbiters. Perhaps after the conclusion of the particular peace "he will give ears, which he will not give yet;" for they declare nothing of their mind to us now.

It is said that the Emperor has sent for don Ynigo. Does not wish Tuke to mention what he says, except to those whom he knows to be Lee's friends. Has written to the King much in the same manner. It is said here that Campegius has arrived in England. Valladolid, 16 Oct. 1528.

Hol., p. 1; cipher, deciphered by Tuke. Add.: To the right honorable Mr. Brian Tuke, 16 Oct. Duplicate.

16 Oct.

4855. HIGDON, MAGNUS and BOWIS to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Sir Thos. Clifford has exhibited to my lord of Richmond's council, on behalf of the earl of Cumberland, a complaint against lord Dacre for misdemeanors in Cumberland against the Earl's tenants, and that a special sessions of peace to inquire into it was "disappointed" by Dacre. The Council, therefore, wrote to the justices of peace, and a sessions was appointed at Carlisle, when heinous indictments were found against many persons. Send copies, signed by Sir Chr. Dacre and Hen. Lancaster, justices. Advise Wolsey to adjust matters between the Earl and Dacre, who both intend to be at London this Mich. term. Have committed four of Dacre's servants to ward at York, and sent for others of the chief rioters. Sheriff Hutton, 16 Oct. Signed.

Ip. 2. Add.: U[nto] my lord Legate's g[ood] grace. Endd.

16 Oct.

4856. WALES

R. O.

Notification to Wolsey by the King's tenants of the lordship and town of Breknok, S. Wales, that they have appointed John ap Ll's Havard and others as their proctors, to petition the King for reformation of "unlawful customs, usages and laws here occupied," and to "bargain and conclude for 1528.

the redemption of the King's last sessions in oyer there holden " about arrears of taxes and talliages. 16 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.

On parchment.

17 Oct.

4857. CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI.

Theiner,
p. 570.

I have not written since leaving Paris. When I arrived within four miles of London I wrote to Di Feltro. On Wednesday, the 7th, I reached the suburbs of London, and lodged at the house of the duke of Suffolk. It was arranged that my entry should be made publicly the next day, and the cardinal of York was to take part in it. But I was so prostrated by the gout, that I could not travel any further, either in a litter or on horseback. So I remained in the Duke's house all the next day, and in the evening the Cardinal conveyed me to the river, and I proceeded in a barge to the lodging assigned to me, namely, Bath House, without any noise or pomp. I have remained there till this present time, and am confined to bed, my agony being greater than usual, owing to the journey. I do not know when I shall be sufficiently free from pain to be able to visit the King.

The day following Wolsey came to see me. I had believed and hoped that he would not discuss any business with me; but he entered immediately into the cause of my coming. He showed me that, in order to maintain and increase here the authority of the Holy See and the Pope, he had done his utmost to persuade the King to apply for a legate on the ground of the desire and scruple which he has in his conscience, although many of these prelates declared it was possible to do without one. The Pope will have received abundant information on this point from Wolsey's letters.

As the Cardinal and the King were both resolved to proceed to the dissolution of the marriage, I presented the Pope's letter of credence. I told Wolsey that at my departure the Pope anticipated that he would be willing to labour with me in inducing the King to change his mind. (Here follows a long account of his conferences with Wolsey, as in his letter to Sanga of 28 Oct.)

As soon as I am able to stand, we shall go to the King. At the first interview I shall do no more than listen to and interrogate the King, in order to make discoveries, and to see how far his mind coincides with the information I have received about it. On presenting the Pope's letter I will exhort him according to my instructions. This has been arranged by the cardinal of York and myself. Subsequently I will do my utmost to persuade the King (i.e., to abandon the divorce), though I feel sure it will be in vain. I will do the same with the Queen, who, I doubt not, will show less repugnance. Although the importunity and solicitations of these people are well known to you by their past negotiations in this affair, I thought it necessary to write all this discourse, even though I have not yet spoken to the King, in order that I may obtain a speedy reply [from the Pope], and some remedy for the great burden under which I labour, and which I cannot bear for long. Let me know how far I am to proceed in this cause.

I will endeavor with all diligence to procure the peace. Wolsey tells me he has the management of it, having heard from Spain of [the Emperor's] good intentions by letters from Darius, who writes that the most Reverend General was about to be despatched to the Pope.

This matter has come to such a pass that it can no longer be borne, and it is unnecessary to leave all the burden upon me, because the cardinal of York and all the kingdom take so much interest in it that they will wait no longer. I pray you to solicit for a determinate answer to be given me, either one way or the other; and let the answer be sent with diligence and in duplicate. As York found me so firm and constant in persuading that the separation should not be attempted, and as the Spaniards have been so successful in the kingdom [of Naples], he suspected that on the way I had received fresh commissions to delay the matter. He said to me that although the affairs of Italy since my departure may have been diverted, they have not been subverted (inversa, non tamen sunt eversa). I denied it with all earnestness, but I do not know how in this dilemma they will be able to procrastinate, or what they will think. Some resolution must be taken [by the Pope].

1528.

CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI—cont.

The King, being desirous to give me audience, removed to his palace here in London on the river, not far distant from my lodging. Although I could neither ride nor walk, and could not sit without discomfort, I was compelled on the 22nd to go for my first audience. I was warmly received and welcomed by his Majesty. The ambassadors and all the prelates and princes of the kingdom were assembled in a large hall. Public audience was given us, and, in the name of us two Legates, my [secretary] Floriano made an appropriate speech.* Dr. Fox replied. The King then withdrew with us into another chamber, where I presented the Pope's letter. The King was well disposed to the universal peace. I then read to him your letter of 3 Aug., respecting Ravenna and Cervia. The King replied that he had done all in his power, and that he and the cardinal of York had a very bad opinion (sono molto male edificati) of the Venetians. I urged him to use his influence with the Most Christian King to procure the restitution of Cervia and Ravenna, and of the territory held by the duke of Ferrara, on pain of their losing his (Henry's) assistance and favor.

The King told me plainly that the king of France wished that a fresh arrangement should be made by the League, and that this matrimonial cause should first be effected according to his (Henry's) desire; otherwise he (Francis) could not see why Henry should compel him to obtain so much from the Venetians, who were such good friends in this war, and who would not fail to make the restitution so soon as Henry attained his object with regard to the marriage; for they had expressly declared that they would make no restitution until the cause were despatched. I used many arguments to show it was not right to compel the Pope to do anything for the restitution of property of which he had been unduly deprived. The King replied, "We did not deprive him of it, but the Venetians." I rejoined that it was enough that they (Henry and Francis) were their confederates. But they have evidently resolved as above.

In these and other words, and in his manner, the King exhibited a most ardent desire for this divorce; and he seems to me to be so persuaded of the nullity of the marriage, and so firmly to believe it, that I have come to the conclusion that it will be impossible to persuade him otherwise.

Next day the King visited me privately. (Here follows an account of his interviews with Henry and Katharine, as in his letter to Sanga of 17 Oct., word for word.)

This post is despatched [to Rome] to obtain the bishopric of Winchester for the cardinal of York. Considering his merits, I recommend him to the Pope and the Sacred College.

London, 17 Oct. 1528.

Ital.

17 Oct.

Laemmer,
Mon. Vat.,
p. 25.

4858. CAMPEGGIO to SANGA.

As the King was desirous to give me audience, he removed to his palace here in London upon the river, not far distant from my dwelling. My friend Florian made an appropriate speech, composed of such matter that he gained an attentive hearing from all present. When, insisting upon a universal peace, he alluded to the calamity of Italy and of Rome, all were moved to tears. Dr. Fox made an elegant reply. After this public ceremony, his Majesty drew us two [Legates] into another chamber, where I explained to him the Pope's good will, and presented the Pope's letter, which he read. At this first interview I did not discuss particulars, but spoke only of the general peace. The King seemed heartily to desire it, and promised me, sopra la sua testa, that he would not fail to do everything in his power.

* See the letter to Sanga, 17 Oct.

1528.

Next day after dinner the King visited me privately, and we remained together alone about four hours, discussing only two things. First, I exhorted him not to attempt this matter, in order to confirm and clear his conscience, to establish the succession of the kingdom, and to avoid scandals; and that if he had any scruple, he could have a new dispensation. I adduced many reasons which appeared to me very efficacious, and the whole was patiently listened to. The King's reply was evidently premeditated. I believe York (Wolsey) had well instructed him, because his Lordship used the very same reasons.

In the second place, we disputed whether the prohibition existed in the Divine law, or whether the Pope could grant a dispensation; and, if he could, whether the dispensation would be valid. His Majesty has so diligently studied this matter, that I believe in this case he knows more than a great theologian and jurist. He told me plainly that he wanted nothing else than a declaration whether the marriage is valid or not,—he himself always presupposing its invalidity; and I believe that an angel descending from Heaven would be unable to persuade him otherwise.

We then discussed a proposal for persuading the Queen to enter some religious house. With this he was extremely pleased; and, indeed, there are strong reasons for it: "et fra l'altre che la Regina non perde se non l'uso della persona del Re, quale ha perso piu di dui anni, ne è per riaverlo quomodocunque res cadat." In all other matters the King is determined to allow her whatever she demands, and especially to settle the succession on her daughter in the event of his having no male heirs by another marriage. It was concluded that I and York should speak to the Queen about this on the day following.

Accordingly on Saturday the 24th, being conveyed in a boat by the Cardinal (Wolsey), we went to execute this mission; but first of all we had another private interview with the King. He desired to see the bull of the commission, which I read. His Majesty then stated he had some suspicion that he should be abandoned in this affair, saying that within the last twenty hours, since he had spoken with me, he had heard from some merchants of London that they would engage their credit that his Holiness would come to an agreement with the Emperor. I replied that the Pope would do nothing unworthy of a good pontiff, but he was bound to have regard to many things. The King professed to be satisfied.

Taking leave of his Majesty, the Cardinal and I repaired to the Queen, with whom we conversed alone about two hours. After our greetings I gave her the Pope's letter, which she received, and read with good cheer (cera). She then inquired what I had to say to her. I began by telling her that as the Pope could not refuse justice to any one who demands it, he had sent the cardinal of York and myself hither to understand the state of the question between her Highness and the King's Majesty; but as the matter was very important and full of difficulty, his Holiness, in right of his paternal office and of the love which he bore her, counselled her, confiding much in her prudence, that rather than press it to trial she should of her prudence take some other course which would give general satisfaction and greatly benefit herself and her affairs. I did not further explain the means to her, in order to discover what she would demand. The cardinal of York spoke to the same effect, as far as I could understand, though he spoke chiefly in the English language.

Her Majesty replied that she knew the sincerity of her own conscience; that she wished to die in the holy Faith [and in] obedience to the commands of God and of holy Church ; that she wished to declare her conscience [only] to our Lord ;* and that for the present she would give no other reply, as she intended to demand counsellors of the King her lord and consort, and then she would hear us and make answer. She stated that she had heard we were to persuade her to enter some religion. I did not deny it, and constrained myself to persuade her that it rested with her, by doing this, to satisfy God, her own conscience, the glory and fame of her name, [and to preserve] her honors and temporal goods and the succession of her daughter; that she would lose nothing, "se non l'uso della persona del Re," which she had lost already, and which I knew she would never recover ; that she should rather yield to his displeasure (ira) than submit herself to the peril of a sentence, considering, if that went against her, in what grief and trouble she would be, and in how little honour and reputation ; and that she would lose her dowry, because in cases of matrimony it was concluded that on the dissolution, whensoever and howsoever, of a marriage, the dower could not be recovered. I begged her to consider the scandals and enmities which would ensue. On the other hand, instead of all these inconveniences, which should be avoided, she would preserve her dower, the guardianship of her daughter, her rank as Princess, and in short all that she liked to demand of the King ; and she would offend neither God nor her own conscience. Then I alleged the example of the queen of France that was, who did a similar thing, and who still lives in the greatest honor and reputation with God and all that kingdom.

1528.

CAMPEGGIO to SANGA—cont.

The same arguments, and probably more, were impressed upon her by the cardinal of York, who requested her to ponder these counsels, and to recognise their importance, and the good or the evil which depended on both sides of the question, hoping that of her prudence she would resolve for the best.

Thus we left her, resolved, as she assured us, to manifest to our Lord the sincerity of her conscience ; to which I replied, that I was sent by the Pope to hear whatever she chose to explain to me, and that I would faithfully tell him my opinion, seeing that I should relate the whole to his Holiness, by whose reply she would be convinced that I had sincerely done my duty. She rejoined that she intended to demand counsellors of the King her consort, as she was a foreigner without any friend ;† and then she would give us audience. London, 17 Oct. 1528.

Ital.

17 Oct. 4859. WOLSEY to MAGNUS.

R. O. Bids him cause the abbot of St. Mary's to pay 100*l.* to Geo. Douglas the bearer, brother of the earl of Angus, whom the king of Scots is endeavoring to annoy. Wishes him to have intelligence with the Earl for the furtherance of his affairs. Sends the copies of the King's and his own letters to him. Duresme Place, 17 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

18 Oct. 4860. JAMES V. to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Requests a safe-conduct for Will. Stewart, ambassador of France, with sixteen servants in his company. Edinburgh, 18 Oct. Signed.

P. 1, broadsheet. Add. Endd.

* i.e., the Pope. Campeggio often calls the Pope "nostro signore."

† "che era femina forestiera et senza alcuna."

1528.

18 Oct.

R. O.

4861. SIR ROBT. WINGFIELD to [WOLSEY].

Sends a list of all the books, bound and unbound, and all the quires, which he found in Sir Ph. Smyth's chamber, and committed to the commissary's keeping by desire of the bp. of Bath. It is signed by himself and the commissary. Has packed them up in canvas, and sent them sealed to Sir John Butler, another of Wolsey's commissaries, who wrote for them from Dover. Sends also Smith's confession. Calais, 18 Oct. 1528.

Hol., p. 1.

R. O.

2. Letters and books referred to.

(1.) 12 letters to Philip Smith. (2.) 24 small books in print, bound either in leather or parchment, sc., Nov. Testament. Erasmi, Salamonis Sententia per Malangtonem, Franc. Lambertus in IV. Ultimos Prophetas, The same in Primum XII. Prophetarum, The New Testament in English, The same in Dutch, Luther in Epist. Pauli ad Galathas, "Ad Gasperis, &c," Melancthon in Epistolam Pauli, Lambertus de causis Execrationis multorum seculorum, Cecolampadius in Epistolam Pauli, Sermo Mart. Lutheri, Enarrationes Lutheri in Epistolas Petri, Hyperaspistes, Adversus falso nominatum ordinem episcoporum, "Ad Gasperis," Jac. Latomius de Confessione Secreta, Symbolum Fidei, In Jesaiam Prophetam, Postulatio Johannis Bugenhagii, Epistola Regia contra Lutherum, The same in English, A written book of certain authorities, (Economica Christi.

Of eight unbound books, besides those already mentioned, Lambertus in Amos, De Servo Arbitrio. Various quires of paper, some printed and some written. Signed by Wingfield and William Petreson.

In Wingfield's hand, pp. 2.

18 Oct.

R. O.

4862. THOS. STRANGWAYS to WOLSEY.

Rode by Wolsey's command to Darente, and made a clear reckoning with Master Dean of Wolsey's college. Hopes the Dean will report that Strangways has paid all duties. Sent his Deputy to Berwick to discharge the duties of marshal, but the vice-captain would not admit him, nor more than 12 soldiers of the retinue. Got Dr. Gardiner, Henegge and Arondell to write for him to the vice-captain, but he disregarded it. Came, therefore, to Berwick with his whole retinue of 24, which has him at his cost since the date of his patent; but the vice-captain allowed only 12 to enter, saying, his patent allowed him to put in and dismiss soldiers at pleasure. Never was marshal so treated since the town was English. Requests that Geo. Lawson, who, he thinks, has been chief cause of the difficulty, be instructed to pay his whole retinue from the date of his patent. Lawson is at Berwick receiver and treasurer, master of the ordnance, letter and setter of the King's revenues, customer and controller, bridgemaister, master carpenter, and master mason. Wishes Wolsey knew how these offices are discharged. Durham, 18 Oct. Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

18 Oct.

Vit. B. xxi.

49.

B. M.

4863. The TURKS and BOHEMIANS.

Account of a defeat of the Saxons, Bohemians and Austrians by the Turks, owing to the desertion of John Catzinner and the Styrian cavalry.

18 Oct.

Lat., pp. 2.

20 Oct.

S. P.

4864. For THOMAS CARDINAL OF YORK.

Grant of the custody of the see and temporalities of Winchester, void by the death of Richard the last bishop, during such voidance. Del. Westm., 20 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 37.

1528.

21 Oct.

Le Grand, III.
175.4865. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Yesterday evening I had audience of Wolsey, who spoke a great deal of the affairs of the King (Francis); but as to the contribution, I found him terribly cold. He alleged that the said contribution was arranged for their part of the maintenance of 30,000 men of war for six months. He had always had a great deal to say about this number, and now more than ever, finally declaring that a great abatement would have to be made in it. This is what I always expected, as I wrote to you on the 17th*, when I spoke of the coming of Montpezat. Had a good deal of discussion with him, and at last he said he would pay† me, but not as being bound to do so, and that he must speak again to the King his master, who, till now, did not expect that affairs would take this turn. I took no notice of this, that I might not be under the necessity either of confessing the debt or concluding nothing, but merely loaded him with reminders of the benefits we have received from him, and turned the conversation until an opportunity should offer to recur to the subject. At this moment he has promised to despatch me in five or six days, complaining, however, that he had not received an acknowledgement, as demanded, of what he had delivered of the first quarter. This, he says, is a serious inconvenience to him, adding that although, at my urgent request, he was content with the commission I had, it was a great trouble not to have it according to his intention, which might have been done just as easily. I have promised him that he shall have it in the very form he demands, praying him, nevertheless, to be satisfied with the above commission. It is merely a matter of style, and he has given me his word to despatch me on my promise, just as he did before, but I shall give him no rest about it, though he is as busy now as can be.

For the rest he made me a long story, beginning about the affairs of Francis in Italy and elsewhere, stating that Silvester had not yet had an answer from the Emperor, who had shown himself at first somewhat inclined to peace, all the more so as he had heard that his herald had not been able to obtain a safe-conduct, by which the affair of the combat had been brought back to such terms that there would be no obstacle; but since his herald had passed he had pretended to be very much piqued, and to have changed his mind. This Silvester reported to the bp. of Winchester and the Almoner, who were commanded to keep away from the Emperor, and were very ill treated. The Emperor had, moreover, asked Silvester if he had a commission from Francis; who replied that he had not. With regard to which Wolsey says Francis ought, if he has not done it already, to have a commission ready at Bayonne, as agreed at the departure of Silvester, in case matters take such a turn. Wolsey had also been informed that the general of the Cordeliers,‡ that good prophet whom our Holy Father has made a cardinal, has agreed with the Emperor, in the Pope's name, to enter into alliance with him; without, however, being bound to take arms on his account, or to help him in anything, unless he be attacked in Naples; that the Emperor gives up to him Civita Vecchia, and whatever he may still keep from him, and delivers the Cardinals, whom he holds as hostages; that when the bishop of Pistoye arrived in Spain, he had news of this treaty, and with it, of the revocation of his commission by the Pope, which was to make a totally different agreement, as he had confessed to the English ambassadors, at whose request he returned immediately to the Pope, in order to keep him right before the arrival of the said general.

Pistoye complained much that he was stopped in France when he was going into Spain, because he was expressly charged to exhort the Emperor to a reasonable peace, according to the articles offered to him, which would have made proceedings against him sure, if he had refused. Wolsey thinks

* 16th ?

† conteroit, evidently a mistake for contenterolt.

‡ Francis Quignones.

1528.

that there is something more unreasonable concealed in these negotiations, which ought to be carefully guarded against by making those overtures to the Pope, which he knows Francis has despatched, viz., that signor Hercules should be put in the duchy of Milan, with instructions to make a composition about Reggio and Modena; that the Pope has heard of these overtures, and is waiting to see what they will say to him. Wolsey thinks Ravenna and Cervia should be added, without which the Pope will never do anything to the purpose, as he knows well by cardinal Campeggio; also that great diligence should be used to surprise the said general, either by sea or land, to learn from him more fully the whole story of the negotiations. This would even be a greater satisfaction to the King, his master, than to himself.

The reason why the affair of his marriage does not proceed quite according to his demand is, that he promised the Pope before his liberation that he would never pass this point.* I did not fail to put before Wolsey's nose the fine demonstration of his good will, which the Pope had made in these acts; but he said we must not be too much surprised, considering the treatment he has received at our hands, not only in the way we have always spoken of him, but in the arrest of Pistoye, and other things, showing extreme distrust of him, against which Wolsey has a thousand times protested; that he had been reduced to despair, seeing his acts were always taken in bad part; and that if we had taken Wolsey's advice at the coming of Gambara, matters would not have been in their present condition. He warned me at great length that if Francis do not pay better attention to his own interests, and to the support of his friends, he will bring an irreparable ruin upon his affairs, and wondered that in France you do not see clearly what is proclaimed by all the world; and he earnestly hopes Francis will use his own good sense according to what he showed him at Compiègne.

Such was part of our conversation, during which his countenance betrayed the utmost possible anxiety, tears sometimes coming into his eyes. I took great pains to excuse all the mischief that had been done, but I promise you he did not take all my excuses for payment, but alleged plenty of other things, e.g., as to Naples; that if Lautrec had been in time, and been sufficiently supplied with money, his enterprise would have had a different issue. He also assured me of the treaty of Gueldres in such terms as I wrote to you on the 17th, adding the restitution of all the Duke had lost, and a pension from the Emperor of 20,000 florins. This Wolsey attributed to Gueldres not having been included in the truce, and took me to witness how he had urged that he ought to be; that if it had been spoken about at first he would have had more power to accomplish it, but that when it was mentioned the Flemings saw that matters were so far advanced that we were obliged to accept their conditions.

Returning to the subject of Ravenna and Cervia, he said the King his master was in the greatest perplexity to find himself so disdained by his good brother, in whom he had placed his entire confidence, and who should have acted in this matter very differently, even if the advice given him had not been so equitable and so much for his own advantage; that if he had proceeded without dissimulation the Venetians would not have made the slightest pretence for refusing, and that some of the Venetians themselves knew the state of matters to be so; that this had been a great vexation to Henry, both by retarding his marriage, and by diminishing his reputation, considering the assurance he had given to all the world that his good brother would deny him nothing; that the Pope had evidently been led to think that the union between the two Princes was by no means so firm as pretended, or that they both abused him,—an impression very damaging to their common interests, and tending to a complete breaking off of the said marriage. This, Wolsey says, even counting the loss of the Pope as nothing, is a matter of such importance as any man can easily see when it is known that the first terms of the divorce were set forth by him, in order to separate for ever the houses of England and Burgundy, which was what he meant when he said to my Lady at Compiègne that if she lived one year she should see a perpetual conjunction on one side, and disjunction on the other, as great and as well assured as she could desire; bidding her take note of this word, to remind him of it thereafter.

* This passage is ambiguous, and there appears to be some error in the text. As printed by Le Grand, it stands thus:—"A quoy le Roy son maistre auroyt plus grant plaisir que luy, est cause de quoy l'affaire de son mariage ne va du tout comme il le demande et qu'il fist promectre à nostre S.P. avant que sortir de prison qu'il ne passeroit jamais ce point."

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

Wolsey thinks you should recommence negotiations with Gueldres by indirect means, as by Mons. de Lorraine, so that when he has recovered and fortified his towns, he may take occasion to show that what he has done was under compulsion, and that meanwhile he may do nothing against us. He begged for one more interview before I wrote to Francis; but as I see he is so busy, and will be all this week (for the King comes tomorrow to his town house, whither Campeggio will go to meet him), I thought it best to write to you now. Campeggio can hardly yet leave his bed, although he is somewhat better. London, 21 Oct.

Fr. Add.

22 Oct. 4866. FRANCIS I. to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. L. II. ?]

I. 209.

B. M.

Has written to Henry, his ally, begging him to pardon my Lord Marquis for having used certain expressions about him. Begs the Cardinal will intercede that the Marquis may be pardoned and set at liberty. Fontainebleau, 22 Oct. Signed.

Fr., p. 1, mutilated. Add.: "A Mons. le Cardinal d'Yort."

22 Oct. 4867. JAMES V. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Requesting a safe-conduct for Will. Stewart, ambassador of France, to return by England. Edinburgh, 22 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

23 Oct. 4868. JOHN TAYLER, Master of the Rolls, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

This day the Chancellor and Grand Master came to Meldune, and, summoning the ambassadors, told them of the King's mind to the vayvode of Hungary, and how he had granted him 30,000 scudi, wishing that the other sovereigns of the League should do the same. The Hungarian ambassador is going to England. The Grand Master has returned to Fontainebleau, to the King; the Chancellor to Paris. The abbot of St. Denis is dead; the cardinal de Bourbon is abbot; the cardinal of Lorraine abbot of Clugny. Meldune, 23 Oct. 1528. Signed and sealed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

23 Oct. 4869. WILL. BUCKMASTER, Priest, to DR. BELLOCESSE.

R. O.

Thanks him for his kindness in always furthering "our" causes. Begs him to help the bearer in his suits to "my lord your master." Need not write the urgency of the case, for which he desires to labor to "my Lord our chief patron," but refers him to the bearer, whose faith and diligent service in causes of our University are well known to you. Cambridge, 23 Oct.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.: Mr. Buckmaster letters to my master.

1528.

23 Oct.

R. O.

4870. The OFFICERS of TEVIOTDALE to ———.

"Worshipful Sir,"—Attempts have been lately committed by your countrymen in these parts. Last Tuesday evening, Wm. Archbold's son, of Cornhill, and others of the laird of Cornhill's servants, thirty in number, came to Hosley, and took thirty kye and oxen and other property of Wille Davyson's. Are surprised at this, considering the strict commands to the contrary. Ask for redress. Will do the like for any wrongs committed by their countrymen. 23 Oct.

Copy, p. 1. Headed: By th'officers of Teviotdaill.

24 Oct.

4871. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 117.

B. M.

Extract from letters of Gregory [Casale], dated Rome, 24 Oct.

Hears that the French king has told the Venetian secretary that if the Pope manages his affairs incautiously he will suffer for it; that he did not wish to contribute more than 40,000 er., but would supply 20,000 more if the Pope would grant him the tenths, which he is not bound to assign to his Holiness; and generally blamed the Pope, and commended the Venetians. He also wished the Pope to send a letter to the Emperor to exhort him to peace, in consequence of the progress of the Turk. He complained that the Papal and Venetian ambassadors have not made the protestations to the Emperor which they ought to have done. The Papal ambassador has had no letters for six months, except one from the bishop of Capua. The Pope held a consultation about the news from France, and determined to send a mandate according to the form declared to Sanga, and a letter of exhortation to the Emperor, and to grant the tenth to the French king on condition of his sending 100,000 er. to the Pope. Used every argument to urge that, as soon as the Swiss and the cavalry have come to the Pope, the whole army should be turned to the attack of Campania, the frontiers of Naples and the Colonnas, that the Pope should help the Orsini, and send them to recover their lands in Abruzzo. He will not break the treaty by doing this. Has told the Pope that as soon as the Viceroy comes, if he perceives the Pope has shut himself up in Rome, he will be sure to march thither at once, notwithstanding the treaties; but if he sees his Holiness has already occupied those places, and is waging war at a distance from him, he will gladly ask for peace, or, at least, for the observance of the truce. Has tried to get the Papal fleet sent to Corsica to join the French fleet. Two things prevent the Pope from doing this: first, that he hears that the French king will not send him money; and, secondly, that he intends to raise money by selling provisions assigned for his own table, and by appointing men to offices in perpetuity. By this means he has already raised 200,000 ducats; but these officers are so frightened that they will pay no more money, and the merchants also refuse to contribute more. Unless the Pope's courage is raised by help from France, things here will end disgracefully. If his Holiness had done two months ago what he is willing to do now, he would have raised 400,000 ducats. He has granted a tenth to the French king, but not the jubilee, which is reserved for an expedition against the Turks. Advises the Pope to apply to Francis for a loan, on condition that it shall not be used against the Emperor, but only for the recovery of what he has lost; and also to create cardinals, though the dignity should only be conferred on more deserving persons than are now in the College. He does not know how to recover the money owed to him, nor how to raise more. It is long since the Florentines have paid anything. The Nuncio with the Emperor is too much of an Imperialist, as his letters show. The French king has not yet determined how to act towards the Pope, and was waiting for Paul Rexius. It might even be arranged that the Pope should go to France and Spain for the recovery of the King's children. His Holiness forbids 1528.

ITALY—cont.

any one to write to France except to say that he can do no more unless the King grants him 100,000*er.* from the tenth. He complains that these misfortunes have come to him in consequence of his having helped the French king, for whose sake he entered the war.

Lat., in Vannes' hand, pp. 4.

24 Oct. 4872. W. CAPON, Priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Thanks him for his letter received by Dr. Cranemer, and for his remembrance about the wheat at Felixstow, for which he wishes to have good expedition. The price of grain is increasing. Wheat is 11*s.* and malt 9*s.* a quarter.

Thanks him for what he has done about the reversion of the lands in Southwark belonging to Jesus College. Asks whether he shall write to his friends to assist Myddilton in that matter. Asks him to take pains, and use the best sergeants of the law. Will spare no money about it. Gipswicke, 24 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful, &c., Mr. Thomas Cromwell.

25 Oct. 4873. G. EARL OF SHREWSBURY to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his letter directing him to repair to the King. Is unable to do so by reason of his old weakness in the limbs. Sends his chaplain to make his excuse. Wynfyld, 25 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legat. Endd.

25 Oct. 4874. JAMES V. to the EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Has received two letters from the King, his uncle, by the Earl's servant, this bearer, to which he has written in answer. Northumberland has always shown himself friendly to Scotland; but the "attempts," of which he complains, committed by the Niesons, Elwolds, and Croysars, cannot well be redressed while England "resetts" Scotch traitors. The Scotch wardens cannot surely meet till "their auld and accustomat pride" be repressed. Edinburgh, 25 Oct. 16 Jac. V. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: "The earl of Northumberland, warden of the East and Middle Marches of England." Endd.: "Sundry letters of the king, queen, and council of Scotland, mensibus Marci, Aprilis, Maii, Julii, Augusti, Septembris, et Octobris, 1528."

26 Oct. 4875. CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI.

Theiner, p. 573.

I do not despair of success in persuading the Queen to [enter some] religion, though I see it is difficult and more than doubtful. I wish it were possible to gain over the Emperor to this course, and cause him to write, or rather to send some personage, to persuade her. Imagine my condition, when, besides the indisposition of my body, my mind is in such infinite agitation. As she is nearly 50, and would lose nothing whatever, and as so much good would ensue, I cannot see why it should be impossible to induce her to take this course, which would be less scandalous and more secure. As the bishop of Rochester (Fisher) is in favor with the Queen, and I believe she will depute him as one of her councillors, with the King's consent, on the 25th I had a long interview with him, and exhorted him to this course for many reasons; and when he left me, he seemed to be satisfied and well instructed. God grant the best counsels may prevail!

These people warmly insist on the affair being despatched with all celerity; but it is necessary that the Pope should take some resolution, and write what I am to do, in such a manner that I may exhibit it, so as to leave no burden on my shoulders ; for I am unable, being here, to defend myself from their constant solicitations. At Christmas (Natale) all the barons and prelates of the kingdom are to be here for this "expedition," and therefore this movement cannot be suspended without peril. Again I humbly implore that such a reply may be given me that I may be able to breathe freely. You may judge of my condition, when, in addition to bodily indisposition, I find myself in an infinite agitation of mind. For twenty days I have had the gout (gomma) in one of my knees, so that I am unable to use it without great pain.

1528.

Yesterday I wrote thus far. This morning at daybreak, being in bed not a little tormented by the gout, the cardinal of York came to visit me, and gave me to understand that the King had spoken with the Queen, who had demanded of him foreign councillors, proctors, and advocates, and that the King had granted her for councillors the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishops of Rochester, Bath, and London, the Queen's confessor, bishop —, and the bishop —, and the chancellor of Ely (Helien). As he will not agree to her having a Spaniard, he is contented that she shall have a proctor and another advocate from Flanders, and a Spaniard named Ludovico Vives, whom she herself nominates, and who was formerly in this kingdom, and read lectures at Oxford.

Then the Cardinal told me the Queen had asked permission of the King to come and confess to me ; which he had granted her. Accordingly, at 9 o'clock, the second hour of the day, she came privately, and was with me for a long space. Although she told me all under the seal of confession, yet she gave me liberty, indeed she besought me, to write to our Lord (the Pope) certain resolutions (conclusioni), and [she requested me] to take an oath from my secretaries to keep silence, saying that she would declare her intentions in proper place and time.

Her discourse ranged from her first arrival in this kingdom till the present time. First, she affirmed, on her conscience, that from the 14th of November, when she was espoused to the late [prince] Arthur, to the 2nd of April following, when he died, she did not sleep with him more than seven nights, "et che da lui restò intatta et incorrupta, come venne dal ventre di sua madre."

Secondly, after I had exhorted her at great length to remove all these difficulties, and to content herself with making a profession of chastity, setting before her all the reasons which could be urged on that head, she assured me that she would never do so ; that she intended to live and die in the estate of matrimony, into which God had called her, and that she should always be of that opinion, and would not change it. She repeated this many times so determinately and deliberately that I am convinced she will act accordingly. She insists that everything shall be decided by sentence, and if that should go against her, she would then remain as free as his Highness ; saying, that neither the whole kingdom on the one hand, nor any great punishment on the other, although she might be torn limb from limb, should compel her to alter this opinion ; and that if after death she should return to life, rather than change it, she would prefer to die over again.

In the third place, she prayed me to supplicate and to prevail upon his Majesty to allow her to remove this phantasy from his Holiness, and to regard her as his consort, as she had been till now, and [to tell the King] that she offered her head to use her influence with the Emperor for the conclusion of the universal peace, and that his Majesty (the Emperor) would, for her sake, abate so much of his demands that the peace at least might take place.

As I had not failed to say all I could to persuade her [to adopt] the profession [of some religion], and had found her so firm, nothing more occurred to me, and she left me. I assure you that from all her conversation and discourse I have always judged her to be a prudent lady, and now more so. But as she can, without prejudice, as I have said above, avoid such great perils and difficulties, her obstinacy in not accepting this sound counsel does not much please me. London, 26 Oct. 1528.

1528.

CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI—cont.

*Ital.*Laemmer,
p. 27.

2. Letter from Campeggio to Sanga.
As above, word for word.

26 Oct.

4876. THOS. MERYNG to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was appointed this year escheator* of Notts and Derbyshire. Wrote to Wolsey at Easter how he thought the King could be best served in those counties, suggesting a commission and articles touching the King's prerogative. Has had no answer yet, to the King's great loss and hindrance. If Wolsey intend that the King be served after the plan he has written, begs him to get Sir William Perpoynce or Sir Godfrey Folgeham made escheator, and a sheriff appointed who will act with them. 26 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To Thomas lord Cardinal, legate, &c. Endd.

26 Oct.

4877. GEORGE LAWSON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Although Master Chamber procured, through the good offices of Cromwell and Dr. Stevens, a prevention of a donative or annual service in St. Edmund's chapel at Gateshead, the prioress of the nuns of Newcastle, who pretends to be patroness of the chapel, will not suffer him to enjoy the fruits. Master Blythman, registrar of Durham, is now in London, and can inform him further. Requests to have such writings that the grant may be effective. Sheriffhutton, 26 Oct.

Begs him to remember his matters with the prior of Lees and Grenefeld. Desires to be commended to his gossip, Mr. Bonvice and Mr. Woodhall.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my right worshipful Master Cromwell, with my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

26 Oct.

4878. T. BATCOCK to ———

Vesp. C. IV.
264.

B. M.

"My singular good Lord." On the 16th instant, a ship came to San Sebastian, from Ireland, with four Irishmen. The chief man, named Sherek, a big man of person, is a great ruler, and holds a high place with the earl of Desmond. He has brought hawks and two brace of greyhounds to the Emperor, and letters of credence. His master and other gentles of Ireland desire the Emperor to take him and them as his subjects, because the King does not administer justice, and because their first progeny came from Spain. They ask for handguns, artillery, and powder. Sherek is gone to the Emperor at Toledo. Does not think he will be shortly dispatched. When he returns will find out what he has concluded. Will write to Mr. Amner (Lee), who is with the bishop of Worcester at Valladolid. They have sent him "four in bulteris," three of which he has sent to the bishop of Bath, and he now sends the fourth packed to Brian Tuke. It is always his fortune to spend his money and labour in vain. His mind is always to serve the King while he lives; and now that what he had is all spent, he cannot do such diligent service. The Rendre, 16 Oct. 1528.

Begs him not to discover what he has written. It would be no great mastery to take the ambassador on his return with all his writings, if the

* Thomas Meryng was escheator of Notts and Derbyshire in the year 19 and 20 Hen. VIII.

1528.

King would send a galleon with letters for the Emperor or his ambassador, and then to wait till the man left. There are ships of this town in Bristol, by which he can write.

Hol., pp. 2.

28 Oct.

4879. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
188.

I trust you require little assurance that it is not owing to my remissness that I do not get money. The more I touch upon the subject, the more I am convinced of the truth of the conjecture which I have two or three times written to you; and at this moment I know the very seat of the malady. It is true Wolsey is wonderfully busy, and more than he ever was in his life; but I declare I have sought so frequently for my despatch, without anything gained, that I have need of patience. However, after all dissimulations, they will do it; but this coming of Montpezat is my ruin. God bring him soon, but another time when you have to pluck the iron from the loadstone do not add to its force by such means.

On Thursday last Campeggio was brought to do reverence to the King, and Wolsey took him into his house upon the way. We were all called to be present. His secretary made a fine oration, in which, after deploring the ruin of Rome, and after great expressions of gratitude for the great offers made to the Pope, both before and after that event, by the Defender of the Faith, and some exhortations to peace, he promised on behalf of his Holiness that both in general and in particular, and especially in the affairs which he had mentioned to him, all that a good son can and ought to expect from a most indulgent father, as he would be informed more particularly by the two cardinals there present sent by his Holiness for those causes. A reply was made by Dr. Fouques (Foxe), the same who made the oration at St. Paul's; "bien assailly, bien defendu." They entered the King's chamber, and were a long time together. The King has several times since come privately to visit the Cardinal, the Queen also has been once, and the Legate is there almost every day. Yesterday began the approaches. The two Cardinals came together towards the Queen, who was at no loss for an answer, complaining much, without the least degree of anger, that they came to question her upon a matter so high, and so nearly concerning her, without giving her notice beforehand, or allowing her time to take counsel, especially she being a woman and a foreigner. They went on, and were a long time together, having called to them the bp. of London, the Cordelier bishop (Standish), the alp. of Canterbury, and another. This day there has been a pause, and Wolsey has been closeted with the King for most part of the time. They appear to have enough to do, though some say they will go on, and do the most they can. I believe Campeggio would like to delay, but the matter is too hot. (Here occurs in the original a long passage in cipher).

Hopes at last to have his despatch shortly, or at least that when Montpesat comes it will help him to get money. Writes nothing of what Campeggio has said to him, for it was only about the Pope's good intentions. As to the present matter, for all his professions of friendship I do not mean to trouble him. Sometimes he touches upon it to me, but I shut my ears. The Imperial ambassador came to him this morning, I understand, not without making some protests.

Forgot to mention that the Florentine ambassador left yesterday. Advises that he should be well received in France. London, 28 Oct.

French. Add.

28 Oct.

4880. CAMPEGGIO to SANGA.

Laenimer,
Mon. Vat.,
p. 29.

Yesterday it was the King's pleasure that York and I should go to the Queen, with whom we found the deputies and counsellors. In the presence of them and the Queen I explained the cause of our legation, and repeated the commissions, and all that I had previously said to her Majesty, especially the exhortations and counsels which I had given her not to attempt this course of [going to] trial, but content herself with a chaste profession of living in the service of God, and in tranquillity of mind and conscience, with satisfaction to God and man, and principally to the tranquillity of this kingdom and of the King, from whom she would obtain all she chose to demand. I spoke at great length; and when I ceased York commenced, but in the English language. At the end he kneeled down before the Queen, and for a long while prayed and supplicated her to accept these good counsels and the goodwill of the King, to her honour, convenience and benefit. Her Majesty replied that she would do nothing to the condemnation of her soul, or against God's laws; and that she would consult with her counsellors, and then give us an answer. Then I caused my secretary to read the bull of the commission, which all heard. We shall see what they will advise her Majesty to do, and which of their counsels she will adopt, though as yet it does not seem likely that she will bend either one way or the other. London, 28 Oct. 1528.

1528.

CAMPEGGIO to SANGA—cont.

*Ital.*Theiner,
p. 574.

2. Similar letter to Salvati.

28 Oct.

Laemmer,
Mon. Vat.,
p. 29.

4881. CAMPEGGIO to SANGA.

At my departure his Holiness believed that his most reverend Lordship (Wolsey), with the King, was not so resolved in this matter but that I should find him willing to labor with me in persuading the King to hold another course; and that I should probably be able to persuade his Majesty to rid himself of this idea, and conform his mind to persevere in this marriage, without the publication of a judicial sentence. For this purpose his Holiness gave me express commissions to exert myself both with his Lordship and with his Majesty.

I detailed all the reasons which moved his Holiness to procure this result in a matter so greatly affecting the conscience, honor and dignity of his Majesty, the well-being of himself and his kingdom, and his Lordship, as also all Christians, and the present calamities. But though I spoke with my utmost power, I could not in the least move his Lordship (Wolsey) from his opinion. He alleged that if the King's desire were not complied with,—fortified and justified as it was by the reasons, writings and counsels of many learned men who feared God,—the speedy and total ruin would follow of the kingdom, of his Lordship, and of the Church's influence in this kingdom.

As I have been and still am confined to my bed, his Lordship came three or four times to visit me. We argued the question for three or four hours together. But although in the Pope's name I have constantly debated this matter, and striven to reconcile the mind of his Majesty with his Eminence and with the Queen, in order that things might continue as they were, I have no more moved him (Wolsey) than if I had spoken to a rock. His objections were always founded upon the invalidity of the marriage, and upon the [in]stability of the realm and the succession. They (the King and Wolsey) have so abandoned themselves to this opinion, that they not only solicit my compliance with them, but the expedition of the business with all possible celerity.

Thus I find myself in great straits, and with a heavy burden on my shoulders; nor do I see how judgment can be deferred even for a brief space. They will endure no procrastination, alleging that the affairs of the kingdom are at a stand-still, and dependent on the issue of this cause; and that if it remains undetermined, it will give rise to infinite and imminent perils.

1528.

We (Wolsey and Campeggio) are agreed in opinion to test the mind of the Queen, and to persuade her to consent to the separation, and to enter the profession of some religion. For this purpose his Lordship promised me the assistance of himself and all the prelates of the kingdom, and the favor of the King, and that the Queen shall have any honorable conditions which she demands, retain her station as Queen, and not lose anything except "l'uso della persona del Re," which he (Wolsey) says she has lost for many years; allowing her her dowry, rents, ornaments, and assignments for her support, and many other things; especially that the succession of the kingdom for the present shall be established in her daughter, by the ordinance and consent of all the estates, in case there should never be any legitimate male heir. They have thought of marrying the Princess, by dispensation from his Holiness, to the King's natural son, if it can be done. At first I myself had thought of this as a means of establishing the succession, but I do not believe that this design would suffice to satisfy the King's desires.

When I said that the result of this divorce would be perpetual, and cause mortal war with the Emperor, and all hope of the universal peace would thus be lost, Wolsey denied that this would be the case, because he (the Emperor) would not take it so badly, as the affair would be conducted and determined with so much benefit and honor to the Queen; nor was it credible that the Emperor would choose to burden his back with a greater war and quarrel for this sister than he had done for his other two sisters, who had been expelled from their kingdoms and states.

With regard to the peace, his Lordship (Wolsey) says he has the management of it, and is well inclined to it; nor does he trouble himself on this account; but he insists upon the necessity for expedition in this business. As I could find no other expedient, I represented that according to the Pope's instructions I was bound first of all to make him acquainted with my opinion, and to await further directions, and that I was not yet resolved; but as soon as I could make up my mind I would write to the Pope, before proceeding to give judgment. He (Wolsey) was greatly exasperated at this, and said, "Si sic est, nolo negociari vobiscum sine potestate, neque sic agitur cum Rege." I proved to him that I had not spoken thus because we had no powers, but because it was necessary to perform my promise to the Pope. We then left the consideration of this point; but if it be again brought into discussion they will be displeased, and I do not know how I shall be able to persevere, considering the present state of things. They are so determined and engrossed by their own opinion that it is impossible to shake them, to judge from what I have been told by York. From what I hear from various persons in all quarters, I fear that nothing but evil can result if this matter be brought into dispute and altercation.

In my last conversation with his Lordship he said and repeated many times (in Latin), "Most reverend Lord, beware lest, in like manner as the greater part of Germany, owing to the harshness and severity of a certain cardinal, has become estranged from the Apostolic See and from the Faith, it may be said that another cardinal has given the same occasion to England with the same result." He (Wolsey) often impresses upon me that if this [divorce] is not granted, the authority of the See Apostolic in this kingdom will be annihilated; and he certainly proves himself very zealous for its preservation—having done and still doing for it very great services—because all his grandeur is connected with it. London, 28 Oct. 1528.

Ital.

28 Oct. 4882. NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal.B.vii. 135.

B. M. of Scots. Received, 10 Oct., Wolsey's letters, with those of the King to the king St. P. iv. 519. of Scots. Forwarded the letter by a servant, who, after being detained till the 25th, was despatched with a letter to the Earl, which he encloses, with 1528.

NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY—cont.

copy of his own to the king of Scots. Wolsey will see that he still bears malice against Angus. Has made proclamations, as commanded, throughout Northumberland, for all men to be ready at an hour's warning, as James was raising an army against Angus, and it was feared would invade the English Marches. He has laid siege to Temptallon. Received from Magnus, on the 17th, by a pursuivant, the letters of the King and Wolsey, commanding him to be near the Borders to attend the Commissioners. Will accordingly remain at Alnwick. On the 27th, received his letters by Geo. Douglas, directing him to let the people slip, if they will, with Angus, he being in great necessity. Since these assemblies in Scotland began, has placed Roger Lassells in Norham Castle, who will let none enter but the Douglasses. Alnwick, 28 Oct. Signed.

Add. Endd.: "1529.* My lord of Northumberland the xxviiith."

29 Oct.
R. O.

4883. JOHN CASALE to PETER VANNES.

Prays that his last pay may be delivered to Marco Antonio Venero, Venetian ambassador with the King, who will make it payable here. Desires to be remembered to the Cardinal. Venice, 12 Oct. 1528.

Hol.

P.S. by "Francesco Catulo, Brixiano."—This letter has been detained till today. When it was written the ambassador firmly believed he should be despatched into France. Please to excuse this delay to the Cardinal. On the 13th, the ambassador departed from Venice for Bologna to consult with the "cavalier" his brother (Gregory Casale), who has come to Bologna to recover his health. When the ambassador was about to return to Venice, a courier arrived from the king of England, and as the "cavalier" found himself unable to endure much fatigue the ambassador mounted on horseback, and rode post to Rome. This was on the 23rd instant. Venice, 29 Oct. 1528.

Ital., p. 1. Sealed. Add. Endd.

29 Oct.
R. O.

4884. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CRUMWELL.

Today a merchant to whom he spoke about the chest showed him the keys, which are goodly. He expects the chest daily, but the ways are so foul that the delay is no marvel. Will send it by the next passage, if he likes it, and the price is reasonable.

Reminds him of his affair with Clarencieux. Will not be able to depart till Lent. No news. Antwerp, 29 Oct.

Wishes much for a letter from him.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c., Mr. Crumwell, in London.

29 Oct.
Fiddes' Coll.
p. 46.

4885. DR. CLYFFE and the UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

An account of the excommunication passed upon Dr. Clyffe, chancellor of the bishop of Ely, in the year 1528-9, for infringing the privileges of the University by citing before him one Sir Henry, of Barnard hostel, commonly called the Conjuror. On the matter being referred to cardinal Wolsey, and argued before him by Dr. Stephen Gardiner against Dr. Clyffe, the latter was compelled to submit and ask for absolution.

ii. Copy of his excommunication, dated Cambridge, 29 Oct. 1528.

* The "29" is blotted over.

1528.

Cott. App.
xlviii. 66.

B. M.

Fiddes' Coll.
p. 48.

2. University of Cambridge to Wolsey.

Thanking him for maintaining the privileges of the University against Dr. Clyffe. Think it will contribute much to the exclusion of error from the University if they have three booksellers with royal privilege, who shall sell no book which has not been examined. Think that they ought to be foreigners, as books may be thus purchased more cheaply.

*Lat.*Fiddes' Coll.
p. 49.

3. Speech of Dr. Buckmaster made in 1529 in reference to the same subject.

*Lat.*Cott. App. xlviii. 79.

B. M.

4. University of Cambridge to Wolsey.

Thanking him for the reconciliation he has promoted between them and the bishop of Ely Mention is made of Croke, but the passage is so mutilated that the sense cannot be made out. Cantab., kal. . . .

Lat., pp. 2, mutilated.

R. O.

5. Dr. Robert Cliff to Wolsey.

As one who has been long unused to converse with men, though living among them, and who has not for many days performed the office of a priest, beseeches him in the name of Christ, whose Nativity is at hand, to hear and make an end of his cause. If he cannot grant a perpetual absolution, begs that he may at least have one for the holidays. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add.: Rev^{mo} D. Legato Eboracensi. Eudd.: A Roberto Cliff, doctore.

30 Oct. 4886. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 119.
B. M.

Extract from a letter of the prothonotary Casale to Peter Vannes, dated Rome, 30 Oct.

His brother Gregory has received letters from Wolsey and Vannes, brought by Tadeus to Bologna, and sent him to Rome, as he was unable, from his illness, to go himself. Has spoken to the Pope about gaining Andrea Doria by promising liberty to Genoa. His Holiness feared that the Emperor might be offended. Told him he need not appear in it. John Joachim also approved of it, and thought if the Genoese had their liberty, and if Savona was given to them, they could easily induce Doria to remain neutral by sharing with the Pope in the payment of his wages.

He asked Paul Casale to go to Doria, and the Pope has given him a short credential. It is a good opportunity for preserving the Pope's authority, for the Emperor will not venture to insult him while Doria and the Genoese have a fleet. The Pope would not write to the Genoese. These preparations were frustrated by a letter of Doria's that he had entered Savona on the 28th Oct. It was a great pity the town was not succeeded. Has fulfilled his instructions relating to the card. S. Quatuor and others, and will continue to do so till Gregory arrives. Desires him to thank Wolsey for his kindness.

The erection of the cathedrals was proposed in the Consistory, and all seemed ready to assent to the King's desire; but as it is a matter of the greatest importance, it should be granted with greater authority than could be done then. Power might be asked for the Legates to decide which monasteries are fit to be erected into cathedrals, to arrange the revenues, &c., and then the whole referred to the Pope for confirmation. Cardinal S. Quatuor and De Monte advise this, thinking it too important to be finally settled except in the Consistory, the Pope being present, lest it should be thought that the Legates were influenced by private interest. Wishes to know exactly the form in which the King wishes it. Sends a minute of the former matter.

Lat., pp. 5.

1528.

30 Oct.

R. O.

4887. RICHARD WESTON to WOLSEY.

Has received from the lord Chamberlain his letters, telling him to pay to the said Lord his wages as captain of Guisnes, 56*l.* of his annuity also due, his wages and fees as treasurer of Calais till his leaving the office, and the remaining 50 marks out of the 100 marks which Weston promised him before Wolsey. Has several times called together the Company of the Staple for the money they should pay for the retinues, but they say they have none, and know not when they will be able to pay. It is always customary for the retinue here to be first paid, as they have no living but their wages. As to his wages as treasurer from 6 April till he departed, reminds Wolsey that he surrendered his patent, and Weston received his on that very day, and he was sworn in on the 21st, so that he thinks he ought to have the wages from the said date; but he will pay them if Wolsey think it right. Beside the 56*l.*, the Chamberlain demands 70*l.* for his half year's fee as treasurer from the custom of wools and other things. Annuities and fees here are only payable at Michaelmas, and must be levied from rents, customs, &c. coming to the Treasurer's hands for the time being. He has already received 153*l.*, which is more than his annuity by 27*l.*, but he says he will account for it to Daunce. Wishes further instructions. The King's servants here are in great need of their wages. Calais, 30 Oct. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add.: To my lord Cardinal's grace.

30 Oct.

R. O.

4888. GEORGE LAWSON to CROMWELL.

Begs him to remember the letter which, in consequence of Cromwell's promise, he has so long looked for. It would do him much good many ways. Refers his matters with the prior of Lees and Grenefeld, and "my money of Tiptree," to Cromwell's discretion. Will not fail to requite his kindness in sending the letter. Sheriff Hutton, 30 Oct.

Desires commendations to my cousin Smyth.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my right worshipful master Cromwell, with my lord Cardinal's grace.

31 Oct.

R. O.

4889. SIR W. BULMER to WOLSEY.

Wishes to know, by the bearer Sir John Bulmer, his pleasure touching Norham Castle, now that the King's garrison is discharged. Requests Wolsey to consider his age and ill health. Is daily more unfit for that country, and cannot now give attendance on my lord of Richmond. Cannot mount or dismount his horse without help. His son Sir William is ready to serve if Wolsey think fit. Wilton, 31 Oct. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4890. SIR W. BULMER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Though Wolsey appointed him steward of the duke of Richmond's household, his diseases during the last three years have interfered with the performance of his duties, and are now increasing so, that he does not expect to live long. Will advance Sir John Bulmer and his other sons to do the King service. From Wilton. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

4891. HENRY DUKE OF RICHMOND to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Has passed this last summer without any peril of the rageous sweat that hath reigned in these parts. Thanks the King for the preservatives he sent. There are now with him my lord of Westmoreland and his wife, and their son lord Nevell. Sheriff Hutton.

Hol., p. 1. Add.

1528.

4892 The COMMISSION FOR SCOTLAND.Cal. B. viii. 52.
B. M.

Instructions from Henry VIII. to Magnus and Sir Thos. Tempest, as commissioners to the Diet on the Scotch Borders.

1 and 2. As the king of Scots has desired by Patrick Sinclair that a Diet should be held of the two kingdoms, Henry, out of regard to his nephew, accords the same, trusting when James grows more in years he will recognise the favor. Has appointed for this purpose Magnus and Tempest as his plenipotentiaries. 3. They are first to confer with Northumberland and Dacre, and endeavor to have the Diet fixed at Berwick; if not, at Norham or in a neutral place. 4. As no truce can be lasting without redress of grievances, they shall begin with redress. 5. If this is out of the Scots' power, they shall get what they can;—6, especially they shall demand redress for the murder of Dacre's servants. 7. They shall remonstrate against the usage of Angus,—denying his attempt to deliver the king of Scots into Henry's hands,—exaggerating the falsehood as a heinous offence,—stating how well he has acquitted himself since he returned from France, and to labour in this with all dexterity. 8. But not to insist too strongly on it, so as to peril the treaty. 9. If they cannot procure Angus's return to favor, they are to send privately some discreet person to Angus, and persuade him to come into England, and tell him that by so doing he can recover his authority; and if Magnus thinks fit, he may give the Earl the enclosed safe-conduct. 10. A blank has been left for Magnus to insert in the commission the name of any person equivalent in rank to any named by the Scotch, and he may enter the earl of Northumberland's name, if a Scotchman be named equivalent in rank.

Signed, "Henry R." top and bottom.

11. After the writing and signing of the above, letters came from James, which induced the remodelling of the above instructions, inserting therein the abbot of St. Mary's, York, the prior of Durham, Dr. Magnus, Anthony Ughtred, captain of Berwick, Will. Frankeleyn, chancellor of Durham, and Sir Thos. Tempest. 12. As the king of Scots is afraid of the restoration of Angus, the commissioners may insist the more on full redress, and make their advantage. 13. As the King has received more ample information by Alexander Douglas, fears that the Emperor may have intelligence with James for a treaty of marriage. He considers it necessary the Earl should be preserved. They shall therefore demand his restitution to his lands according to the effect of the King's letters sent to Scotland at this time. They shall remonstrate against the late attainder of the Earl, and exculpate his conduct on the Borders, refusing to proceed without satisfaction. 14. It will be better, therefore, that he remain in Scotland, doing all the harm he can, than come into England, and supported by England he can do them more annoyance than the Emperor can do good. 15. But if this be totally impracticable, they shall offer, as of themselves, for a separate article, leaving this point in abeyance till the king of England has had time to become more fully acquainted with the truth of the charges against Angus.

Pp. 24.

Cal. B. v. 40.
B. M.

2. Copy of the preceding.

4893. SCOTLAND.

R.O.

"For Mr. Magnus.—The King's commission for the truce. A safe-conduct for the earl of Angus. My lord Legate's letters to Mr. Magnus and other from the King. Other from Mr. Tempest to them both. Other to my lord of Northumberland from them both. Other to my lord Dacres from them both. The instructions. An article to be inserted in the truce in a case. Copy of the King's letters to the king of Scots sent by Lion. Copy of the King's other letters to the king of Scots touching the army. Copy of the king of Scots' letters sent to the King's highness.

1528.

SCOTLAND—cont.

"For Lion.—The King's letters marked with L. A safe-conduct for the commissioners of Scotland.

"For him that shall go with the letters touching the army.—My lord Legate's letters to my lord of Northumberland, with a copy in it of the King's letters sent to the king of Scots, touching the army. Like letters, with a like copy to my lord Daeres. The King's letters to the king of Scots, marked with A. All Mr. Douglas' copies.

"Mem.: To date the writings under the great seal, and to put in the term that the safe-conduct shall endure."

P. 1. In Tuke's hand. Endd.: "A memorial of the expedition of Scotland."

4894. HENRY VIII. to ANNE BOLEYN.

Love Letters,
xvii.

"To inform you what joy it is to me to understand of your conformableness to reason, and of the suppressing of your inutile vain thoughts and fantasies with the bridle of reason, I ensure you all the good in this world could not counterpoise for my satisfaction the knowledge and certainty hereof. Wherefore, good sweetheart, continue in the same, not only in this but in all your doings hereafter; for thereby shall come, both to you and me, the greatest quietness that may be in this world. The cause why this bearer tarryeth so long is the business that I have had to dress up yer (geer?) for you, which I trust or long to see you occupy, and then I trust to occupy yours, which shall be recompense enough to me for all my pains and labors. The unfeigned sickness of this well-willing legate doth somewhat retard his access to your presence; but I trust verily, when God shall send him health, he will with diligence recompense his demowre, for I know well whereby he hath said (lamenting the saying and bruit that he should be Imperial) that it should be well known in this matter that he is not Imperial. And thus for lack of time," &c.

4895. The WARDROBE.

R. O.

Account of Sir Andrew Wyndesore from Mich. 19 to Mich. 20 Hen. VIII. Receipts 1,766*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* Payments 3,064*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.*

4896.

GRANTS IN OCTOBER 1528.

Oct.
—
GRANTS.

2. Sir Edw. Guldeford and Sir Anth. Brown. The office, in survivorship, of standard-bearer, with 100*l.* a year, on surrender of pat. 13 Sept. 16 Hen. VIII., granting the same to Guldeford and Sir Ralph Egerton, deceased, in like manner as Sir Thos. Knyvet and Sir —* Cheyney held the same. Del. Westm., 2 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

Copy in R.O.

5. Geo. Rowles, Hen. Edgare, Roger Fisher and Hen. Rowce. Grant of the next presentation to the chapel of St. Mary Magdalene, of Brigenorth, Salop. Del. Westm., 5 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

6. Tho. Garton, page of the wardrobe of the King's Beds, and Tho. Anthony, page of the wardrobe of the Queen's Beds. To be bailiff, in survivorship, of the lordship of Budbroke, otherwise Hampton-on-the-Hill, Warw., in same manner as Sir Wm. Compton held the office. Esthampede, 24 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 6 Oct.—P.S.

6. Sir John Audeley and Elizabeth his wife. Licence to alienate the manor of Leghcombray, and messuages and lands, and 20*l.* rent in Leghcombray, Wapensale, Parva Dalley (Dawley), Malynslegh and Kettleley, Salop., to Jas. Leveson and Sir Anth. Fitzherbert, justice of the Common Pleas, Rob. Norwiche, sergeant-at-law, Nic. Leveson, Walt. Wrotesley, John Nicholls and Guy Crafford, to hold to them and the heirs of the 1528.

Oct.

GRANTS.

said James for ever. Westm., 6 Oct.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 1.

7. Wm. Daunce. To be one of the tellers of the Exchequer on a vacancy, with the usual fees. Del. Westm., 7 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 13.

8. Ric. Mylborne. Livery of lands as s. and h. of Hen. Mylborne. Del. Westm., 8 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 1.

10. Ric. Besell of Wretell, Essex, and of London. Pardon for the death of John Vavasour. Del. Westm., 10 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 18.

10. Leonard Skevington. To be a gunner in the Tower of London, vice Tho. Dolyng, dec., with 12*d.* a day. Oking, 27 Sept. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 10 Oct.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 1.

10. Peter Bawde, gunner in the Tower. To have a pension of 16*d.* a day. Oking, 4 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 10 Oct.—P.S.

12. John Palmer of Angmeryng, Suss., squire of the Body, and Ric. Begrave of Billygherst, Suss. Pardon for the possession of nets called bakstallis and derehages, and all injuries to vert and venison in the King's forest. Del. Westm., 12 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 9.

14. Sir Tho. Cheyne. To be chief steward and hold other offices in the manor of Writtle, Essex, part of the honor of Beaulieu, in the King's hands by the death of Wm. Cary. Del. Westm., 14 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 9.

15. Roger Dyngley, S.T.P. Presentation to the church of Bradley, Cov. and Lieh. dioc., in the King's gift by attainder of the duke of Buckingham. Greenwich, 14 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 15 Oct.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

16. John Danyell of Messyng, Essex.—Exemption, during the time he remains in the service of Eliz. countess of Oxford, from being made sheriff, &c. of any county in England. Del. Westm., 16 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 10.

16. Wm. Tynswike, draper, of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Robt. Wingfield. Del. Westm., 16 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 10.

18. Geo. Croft, clk. Presentation to the church of Shipton Malet, Bath and Wells dioc., vice Geo. West, resigned. Greenwich, 16 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 18 Oct.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 11.

18 Tho. Caye and Eliz. his wife, John Smyth and And. Barnard. Licence to the said Thomas and Elizabeth to enfeoff the said John and Andrew of four messuages, &c. in Ikford and Wornall, Bucks; and to the said John and Andrew to regrant the pre-misses to the said Thomas and Elizabeth, and the heirs of their body, with remainder to the right heirs of the said Elizabeth. Westm., 18 Oct.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

19. Bernard Tunbroke, a native of Cologne. Denization. Richmond, 23 April 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 19 Oct.—P.S.

19. John Dale, yeoman for the mouth in the Queen Consort's privy kitchen. Grant of the ferry called Sandford Ferry, Oxon and Berks, lately held by Wm. Busshe, dec. Easthamstead, 26 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 19 Oct.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 6.

21. Walt. Mounforde alias Mowfourde of Shae or Shaa, Devon. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Hertford, 28 June 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 21 Oct.—P.S.

21. Rob. Holt. Wardship of Rob. s. and h. of Rob. Evers of Belton, Lanc. Del. Westm., 21 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

23. Tho. Smyth of Gouthurst, Kent, smith. Pardon of all treasons committed before 4 June, for which he was condemned at Rochester Castle, before Tho. Broke, lord Cobham, Sir Rich. Broke, and other justices of oyer and terminer. Westm., 23 Oct.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 10.

28. Sir Wm. Ascue. Custody of the manors of Estwykam and Thornistoo, with certain other lands in Linc., during the minority of Eliz., kinswoman and heir of Sir Wm. Hanshart, dec. Del. Westm., 28 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

28. John Knyght. Lease of a meadow and a pasture in Pulkesley, in the tenure of Wm. Clerk, and a close called Brownstocking, in the tenure of Ralph Adington, in Pulkesley, in the lordship of Covesgrove, parcel of the lands late of the earl of Warwick, Northt.; for 21 years, at the annual rent of 60*s.* for the said meadow and pasture of Wm. Clerk, and 26*s.* 8*d.* for the close called Brownstocking, and 10*s.* of increase. Del. Westm., 28 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 9.

28. Christ. Wren and John Knyght. Lease of all demesne lands in Casteltorp belonging to the manor of Hanneslap, part of Warwick's lands, Bucks, and land in Tutteland and Michelholme; for 21 years, at the annual rent of 2*sd.* 8*d.*, and 2*s.* of increase, on surrender of patent 17 Feb. 13 Hen. VIII., granting a 21 years' lease of the premises to Tho. Slade, general receiver and surveyor of Warwick's lands. Del. Westm., 28 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 33.

28. Tho. Grey, yeoman of the Guard. To be keeper of Grove Park, Warwick, an office lately held by Sir Wm. Compton; and to have the herbage and pannage of the park, besides the usual fees. Ampthill, 8 Aug. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 28 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S.

1528.

1 Nov.

4897. WOLSEY to SIR GREGORY CASALE.

R. O.

St. P. vii. 102.

After many inconveniences Campeggio has arrived in England, and has been honorably treated, so far as his disease would allow him. As, in consequence of his illness, he could not visit the King, I have frequently called to see him; and after his first audience his Majesty and I have been often with him. A courier has been sent to you with letters. You shall visit his Holiness, and state the course taken by the King in this matter,—your desire to have the cause referred to Campeggio and Wolsey,—the commission, and the difficulties found in obtaining it, &c.

You shall further say that his Holiness was contented to grant to the Legate a commission for his own instruction and the King's counsellors', not to be used in the process, at which the King was greatly dissatisfied; but Wolsey now grieves to say, after so many indications of candor and kindness, Campeggio has taken a course entirely different from his instructions, and attempts to dissuade the King and Queen from the divorce until he has made a report to the Pope of what he has seen and heard here. What is worse, although I am his colleague, he will not entrust me with his commission; so that the King, who had hitherto assured his Privy Council that the Pope would not fail to do what he could in his cause, now finds himself deceived, and can get no information about the commission; whilst those who asserted that nothing but causes for delay would be invented are right in their judgment.

The King feels his honor touched by this, especially considering what a benefactor he has been to the Church. I cannot reflect upon it, and close my eyes, for I see ruin, infamy, and subversion of the whole dignity and estimation of the See Apostolic if this course be persisted in. You see in what dangerous times we are. If the Pope will consider the gravity of this cause, and how much the safety of the nation depends upon it, he will see that the course he now pursues will drive the King to adopt those remedies which are injurious to the Pope, and are frequently instilled into the King's mind.* Without the Pope's compliance I cannot bear up against the storm; and as often as I reflect on the conduct of his Holiness, I cannot but fear lest the common enemy of souls, seeing the King's determination, inspires the Pope with his present fears and reluctance, which will alienate all the faith and devotion towards the See Apostolic. The sparks of that opposition here, which have been extinguished with such care and vigilance, will blaze forth, to the utmost danger of all here and elsewhere.

It is useless for Campeggio to think of reviving the marriage. If he did, it would lead to worse consequences. Let him, therefore, proceed to sentence. Prostrate at the feet of his Holiness, I most urgently beg of him to set aside all delays. If the divorce be carried, we may expect an alliance between the kings of England and France and the Emperor, who can take no offence at the King's honorable proceedings.

Gives advice respecting the affairs of Italy, which are not so Imperial as the Pope supposes, nor such as to induce him to enter into the league proposed by the Emperor through the Friar General. His Holiness must take care not to give offence to the kings of France and England. If he wishes to preserve the See Apostolic and appease the evils of Christendom, he must look to those potentates who will encourage his efforts. This will be the best way of opposing the designs of the duke of Ferrara; and the King will support him in all ways if he will not oppose his cause. The Emperor, in reply to propositions submitted to him by Silvester Darius in my name, has made so favorable an answer that, with the consent of the king of France, a happy result may be expected. If the Pope is favorable to the King's cause, he is resolved that the glory of it shall be the Pope's; by which he may become the mediator of a most binding alliance between the Pope, the Emperor, and the kings of France and England, and the security of the Church will be preserved.

* Qu. by Anne Boleyn?

1528.

You shall ask the Pope to send to me and Campeggio jointly a suitable commission, and another to the same effect to him alone, for concluding what is requisite; so that when the King's divorce is finished, I, or he alone, may go to the place appointed for the diet, and settle the terms of universal peace; only he must not protract the time by these vain delays; for, should anything untoward occur, the blame will be ascribed to himself alone. If no attention be paid to my loyalty, words, advice, and judgment, whatever may be the result, the world will be conscious that this King has never failed in his obedience to the Holy See, and that I have omitted no part of my duty.

This only I will add, in conclusion, that if the Pope wishes to preserve his honor, to show his gratitude and his sincerity, to preserve the dignity of the Church and the safety of this kingdom, now is the time. Let him, then, expressly command Campeggio to proceed to sentence, and enjoin him to deliver into the King's hands or mine the decretal commission. You shall assure him it shall not be perused by any one, except by a few privy councillors, whose life will depend upon their fidelity.

No labour will be spared on my part to induce the Queen to enter a nunnery, although much must not be expected. I request that a sufficient commission and authority be sent to Campeggio and me jointly and severally, with the necessary clauses, that, on the Queen's entering a nunnery, the King may marry again, and the offspring of both marriages be legitimate. Take S. Quatuor's advice on this point,—that if the Queen can be induced to comply, she be not compelled to assume the monastic habit, or bound by any other vows than that of chastity; for as she is very charitable and has large possessions, she could do more good in this way than the other. The King trusts they will exert themselves in this matter.

The King has offered me the see of Winchester; but as I have spent a large sum of money in my promotion to Durham and upon my colleges, I have delayed expediting this matter till I know what sum I shall have to pay for holding Winchester in commendam with York and St. Alban's. Begs them to see what can be done. If his request is complied with, the Holy See will be enriched by the bulls required for Durham; but if he retains Durham it will only have the bulls for Winchester.* London, 1 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Lat., in Vannes' hand. Add. Endd.

1 Nov. 4898. CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI.

Theiner, p. 574.

Wolsey has resolved to despatch this courier, who will depart tomorrow. Today he sent for my secretary, and showed him a letter of 20 Oct., from the king of France to the bishop of Bayonne, his ambassador here, proving that Wolsey, in the name of his King, has used his influence with the French king for the restitution of Ravenna and Cervia. Francis has no doubt the Venetians are willing to act reasonably, and has given particular charge to the bailli of Rouen, whom he is sending to the Pope, to speak authoritatively to the Signory. Wolsey sent the letter by his secretary for me to read. Francis is favorable to the universal peace, provided he can accept it with the advice and consent of this King and the cardinal of York, who have some hope from Spain with respect to this negotiation, and who believe it cannot be accomplished except here, or in some place where it may be conducted from hence. They desire a commission from the Pope to Wolsey and myself, and another to myself separately, to negotiate this peace.

* A paragraph at the close of this letter has been carefully obliterated in the original, and part of it cut off.

1528.

CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI—cont.

This King will have to be the mediator between the two parties. I write all this at Wolsey's request. They have given instructions to the "cavalier" (Casale), their ambassador, to speak on this subject [to the Pope], and desire a speedy and resolute answer.

From the report of the Queen's counsellors I can gather no firm hope that the Queen will take upon her the profession of religion, but I do not utterly despair. In case it should come to this, the King would wish to be sure of having a dispensation or an indisputable licence from the Pope to proceed to a second marriage. Although as yet we have no hope that this will be the case, they wish to have this matter settled beforehand; nor will they on this account cease to insist on the trial. Let me know the Pope's pleasure.

This cardinal (Wolsey) has a grant from the King of the church of Winchester, but has resolved not to accept it until he learns from Rome whether he will be allowed to hold it at only a small expence, because its value is no greater than that of Durham, that is, 300*l.* (libre di queste).

It is true that it is nearer here, and in the centre of the kingdom, but he would prefer it to the one he now has, provided he be not put to too great expence. As it is not long since he paid for the bishopric of Durham, and as he deserves well of the Pope and the Holy See, which, owing to his vigilance and solicitude, still retains its rank and dignity here and elsewhere, I pray you urge the Pope to content him in this matter, and to let his agents know that I have written warmly in his behalf. London, 1 Nov. 1528.

Ital.

1 Nov. 4899. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
192.

I have taken no small pains to speak with the Legate again, who has given me to understand that he has been persuaded to await the arrival of Montpezat before seeing me. I have pressed him so far that at last I have compelled him to save himself in the rampart of the said arrival, after he had exhausted all evasions to my remonstrances, both good and bad, hard and gracious. For these difficulties I think I am partly indebted to my lord of Bath, to whom I found it perfectly useless to go from one end of the town to the other to make suit about this affair; I being a bishop like himself, and, although of not so great a bishopric, ambassador of the king of France. God be praised, I have done nothing that he does not think quite due to himself, and perhaps more. Moreover, I still expect that I shall have money [only] when they think proper, and I assure you I bite the end of my fingers to be obliged to have so much patience. It would be tiresome to tell you all our disputes about it. I ought to return tomorrow or Tuesday; for yesterday evening at my audience Wolsey did not wish me to depart (?) (que depeschasse) with so cold a countenance as I had on leaving him, and desired me to wait till he had made answer of this matter, and of all others, of which I should make him a memorandum. This I did that night, and this morning I sent early to salute him, but I expect that today all the souls in Paradise, and tomorrow all those in Purgatory, will come to his assistance, so that on the days following he may be able to get rid of some business of his master: I have, therefore, set myself to pen you a little despatch about this and other matters. I assure you the Legate will have to do this time with the most impudent beggar that ever carried a wallet. I hope you will take care that before it is time to begin again, another will come to do as much.

I have reported to you at length the Emperor's reply, which arrived, or perhaps was dated, 13th ult., in the long letter (legende) the Legate commanded me to write in answer to yours of the 20th. The purport of it is, that if the king of England will first make peace with him, so that he may have honorable cause to trust him, he will afterwards do marvels. Wolsey thinks it would not be bad if the peace were made on condition that it should not be valid if the Emperor do not pass articles of peace with you such as he shall have approved beforehand. Wolsey and the Council also think that if the overture of Salviati appear favorable it might be followed, though they prefer the other way.

1528.

The divorce is at present in this state. After the Queen's answer to the Cardinals, of which I told you, and some remonstrances which they may have made to her on the part of the Pope to enter into religion, it was found that she was determined to stick to her opinion. She has been given the choice of the whole counsel of England, that is, of my lords of Canterbury, Bath, Rochester, Ely, Exeter, and the Cordelier (Standish), the dean of the chapel, and others, with liberty to call an advocate from Flanders, a procureur and a counsellor, but she is not to be at liberty to summon any from Spain, on the ground that they are at war with Spain. Already a safe-conduct has been sent into Flanders for the said counsellor and advocate. This is the way the matter stands, but it must be kept perfectly quiet. Rochester and London, I understand, are of the Queen's opinion, and also the dean of the Chapel; but I think they will lose their cause, for I hold the same opinion as when I wrote last. All things considered, I hold that even if all the Cardinals had, both in the past time and the present, approved the marriage, that they could not have [made it valid], it being proved, as they say it is, that the late King^o and she have lain together, for God has long ago himself passed sentence on it.†

I make no answer to your letters of the 26th ult., except that I will make the best use I can of the breaking off of Montpezat's mission, of which I wish I had never said a word in England. London, All Saints' Day.

Fr. Add.

1 Nov. 4900. JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 127.

B. M.

Went to his brother Gregory, who had gone to Bologna to recover his health. When Tadeus arrived with Wolsey's letters, went to Rome in his brother's stead to perform his commission. On the day of his arrival, went to the Pope, and gave him the King's and Wolsey's letters. He expressed his pleasure at their kindness, but said that it did not serve him against the obstinacy of the Venetians. Told him that himself and Gardiner had used every means of persuading the Venetians, except declaring war, and that the King and Wolsey would never rest until the matter was settled. As to Wolsey's requests, showed his Holiness the integrity of his intentions toward the Church, the necessity of the reformation of English monasteries (of which when in England I had often written to him, and about which Sir Gregory had had conference with the King and Wolsey), and the suitability of the present time, when a legate had gone to England, that Wolsey might not be suspected of acting for his own advantage.

Showed him the instructions of Gardiner, which he read through, to the parts relating to public and private matters. Saw that he was only persuaded of the advantage of the erection of the cathedrals, and the reformation of the monasteries, but he thought the desired indulgence for the King of five days "pro qualibet" would bring both indulgences and the place where they were granted into contempt. He considered for some time the alleged necessity of suppressing monasteries of any Order. Is sure the ^o Of course the writer meant the late Prince, i.e. Arthur.

† "Et quant tout est compté, je tiens qu'encores que le Pape et tous les Cardinaulx eussent, et par le passé et par le présent, approuvé le mariage, qu'ils n'ont peu ne pourroient faire, estant prouvé, comme l'ont dit qu'il est, que le feu Roy et elle ont couché ensemble, car Dieu en a piecça luy-mesmes donné sa sentence."

1528.

JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY—cont.

matter will be managed with dexterity. Warned him of the danger of adhering to the Emperor, alleging the reasons Wolsey mentions.

He answered that Wolsey's advice always pleased him, and he knows that now he must be on his guard against the Imperialists, but the conduct of the Venetians moves him more than anything else, and he would use the assistance of any one, except the Devil, to avenge their injury. He wishes, first, to have our assistance, and, if that is not successful, the aid of others who are more capable of recovering the cities. Advised him not to ruin everything on account of one injury, and said that letters had already been sent to the kings of England and France and to Wolsey to urge them to see to this.

Will write to Vannes about the negotiations with Andrea Doria. Their trouble is wasted now that Savona is lost. Gave the letters to card. S. Quatuor, who will do all he can for the King.

Doria sent letters from the General who has just been created cardinal (Quignones), saying that he had arrived at Rosas, and would soon be at Rome, bringing many commissions from the Emperor, by which he hoped to draw the Pope to his side, the liberation of the cardinals who are hostages, and the restitution of Ostia and Civita Vecchia, which is necessary if the Pope wishes to reside in Rome. Rome, 30 Oct. 1528.

The Pope has proposed to the Consistory the matter of the cathedrals, praising Wolsey. The Cardinals were of opinion that power should be given to Wolsey, and everything confirmed by a Consistory. A minute has been drawn up for dissolving the monasteries, and for the union of the two colleges. Rome, 1 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 6. Address pasted on.

Vit. B. x. 123.
B. M.

2. Copy of the above letter, incomplete.
Lat., pp. 5. Headed and endd.

1 Nov.
R. O.

4901. W. FRANKLEYN to WOLSEY.

On the 24 Oct., Sir Wm. Bulmer, being sore diseased, departed to his own house. Believes he is in great danger. As Bulmer wishes to be discharged of his office in the North, wishes to know what is to be done with Wolsey's castle of Norham, for the garrison have left. Sheriffhutton, All Hallow Day.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: My lord Legate's grace. Endd.

2 Nov.
R. O.

4902. WINDSOR and CAMBRIDGE.

Bull of Clement VII., granting to cardinal Wolsey the faculty of suppressing certain monasteries for the colleges of Windsor and King's College, Cambridge, wherever the revenues of the said houses do not exceed 8,000 ducats. Rome, 4 non. Nov. 1528.

Lat., vellum.

Vit. B. x. 130.
B. M.

2. Contemporary copy. Pp. 6.
Endd.: [Bulla pro] collegio regis de Wyndesore.

2 Nov.,
Theiner,
p. 575.

4903. CAMPEGGIO to SALVIATI.

After I had sealed my last, and delivered it to the Cardinal (Wolsey), he received fresh advices touching the universal pence from the French King, who does nothing without the counsel and consent of this King and the Cardinal. While the negotiation for pence is in course, the Pope should endeavor to obtain a general abstinence from war. London, 2 Nov. 1528.

Ital.

1528.

2 Nov.

R. O.

4904. JOHN TAYLER, Master of the Rolls, to BRIAN TUKK.

This day the Chancellor is gone to the King at Fontainebleau. I hear "that Savona is in treaty to yield him to the Jannes, except he be succored shortly. Madame is at St. Germain, where the queen of Navarre has taken her chamber; God make her a glad mother; and there the count of Geneva, brother to Madame and to the duke of Sabadia, shall marry the sister to the duke De Longa Villa." Paris, 2 Nov. 1528. Signed.

P.S.—Wishes an answer to his letter about Albany.

P. l. Add. Endd.

2 Nov.

4905. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 122.

R. M.

Extract from letters of the prothonotary Casale to Vannes, dated Rome, 30 Oct.

Has concluded with the Pope for the bull of indulgence, not without entreaties. Told the card. S. Quatuor of it. He said the King and Wolsey should not exhibit them too much, and that alms should be first of all sent to St. Peter's at Rome, for the foundation of a chapel.

Letters have arrived from St. Pöl, stating that he was unable, from the shortness of the time, to succor Savona; that he was waiting for fresh Germans, who had already arrived at Susa, and he wishes to complete the number of 10,000 foot. Does not know what he can do now winter is approaching.

ii. From letters of Paul Casale to Vannes, Rome, 2 Nov.

Has just returned from the palace. Has obtained the bull for the aggregation of monasteries, to the amount of 8,000 ducats, for the two colleges. Does not send it, as he fears the dangers of the road, but will send it in eight days by Taddeo, with the rescripts and the bull of indulgence.

iii. From letters of John Joachin, 25 Oct., Camerino.

Renzo left on Saturday with all the ships. Yesterday a Venotian galley arrived at Ancona, with news that the first 1,000 foot had arrived in Apulia, where they were received with great joy; but the arrival of Renzo and the prince of Meli was looked for still more eagerly. It is said that the people of Barletta do not fear the Spaniards, but they need a leader. Yesterday 300 infantry embarked, and today 300. The Florentine forces are expected, which the viscount of Turenne, now at Senegaglia, will send to Apulia. Camillus Parlus and Octavius Ursinus are enlisting 100 horse each. The viscount of Turenne has assisted many of the captains by distributing 3,000 cr. among them.

Lat., pp. 2.

2 Nov.

R. O.

4906. JOHN CHEKYNGE to CROMWELL.

Desires his good offices with my lord Cardinal in favor of his kinsman, the bearer. Promises him an ambling nag, if successful. Cambridge, All Souls' Day.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Maister Thomas Crumwell, beside the Austyne Freers at London.

2 Nov.

R. O.

4907. NORTHUMBERLAND to ARUNDEL.

Sir Will. Elicar, who hath of the King the castles of Wark and Dunstanbrough, lies at the mercy of God, not likely to recover. Wishes to have them of the King, as other wardens have had. Wark is the stay and key of all this country. "Wherfor yff I shall contewn thes rooms I must have (?) some thyng to ber houth my charges, and not all way to con do my self and have no thank, and put to thes playes and houthreks besyde." In haste, 2 Nov.

1528.

NORTHUMBERLAND to ARUNDEL—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my bedfellow Arrundell.

5 Nov.

4908. JOHN TAYLER, Master of the Rolls, to BRIAN TUKE

R. O.

Divers letters out of Italy have remained in my hands for lack of a messenger. The bishop of Pistoja has been with the Emperor, and is now at Paris, sick of an ague. He has brought divers letters from our ambassadors there. This is the third post I have despatched to Calais. I have visited the Bishop, and he tells me there is no comfort of peace, and that Sylvester could get no answer till 28 Sept., in very general terms. Since the ruin of the French at Naples, the Emperor was so strange that he could get no answer, and our ambassadors are not allowed to come to Court except under custody. The Emperor is much displeased with the King, and will be more so if the divorce proceed. Francis is still at Fontainebleau, where no man can see him. Have heard nothing of Thadeus since he left. Paris, 5 Nov. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

5 Nov.

4909. SILVESTER DARIUS to [WOLSEY].

Vesp. C. iv.

265.

B. M.

Wrote on Sept. 26, by the bishop of Pistoja, that he hoped to be despatched by the Emperor in two days. Went accordingly to the Emperor, who told him that he had put his answer in writing, and desired him to ask John Alaman for it, and he might then return when he pleased. Obtained leave to make a reply to the answer. When Alaman gave him the answer, he told him that a special peace between the Emperor and the King must precede the universal peace, for otherwise it was not possible to find a mediator or a person to receive hostages. Said there was no need of a peace, for Wolsey would be a good enough mediator. Alaman replied that if the King did not mediate, the Pope would be the most suitable person. Said that means must be found for concluding the universal peace immediately after the other, for it would not be honorable for the King to abandon the French king. He replied that the particular peace might be made on the condition that, if the universal peace did not ensue, it should be of no effect. Said that if the Emperor would declare his mind, Darius would write to Wolsey, who might desire a more direct method of attaining peace. Alaman replied, that as Darius had no commission to treat in the name of the King, it was not to be hoped that the Emperor would declare his mind to him; and he advised him to ask the ambassadors at Valladolid if they had any commission to treat for the particular peace, and he doubted not that if they had, some good might be done, for the King would then be the Emperor's friend. Now that he is an enemy, he cannot interfere as a mediator, for the Emperor cannot trust him. Said he would gladly write to the ambassadors, but he believed that they had no such commission. Added that he was surprised that they made so much of the defiance, as they knew that the King had committed no hostile acts in consequence; and that the King was of such a generous mind that, if the Emperor trusted him, he would rather lose his kingdom and his life than deceive him; that if they really desired universal peace, as they said they did, they ought to propose methods, as they did not approve of what Darius proposed. Alaman told him to write to the ambassadors; if they had a commission, things would go well; if not, the Emperor would not declare his mind any further.

Immediately sent a courier to ask the ambassadors for advice. They had not yet been allowed to come to Court. Alaman sent to ask him if he wished to reply to the Emperor's answer. Answered that he could not do so until he heard whether the ambassadors had any commission or not. Received in two days an answer from them, saying that they had none, and they sent special letters about the matter, which he might show to the Imperialists. Drew up an answer from their suggestions, which he sent to the Emperor, and of which he encloses a copy. The Emperor expressed wonder at his having answered his proposals. Reminded him that he said that he would be content to conclude universal peace, and to postpone the duel; but these proposals seemed to express a contrary intention. He replied that there was no mediator. Asked whether Wolsey would not be the best mediator. He replied that he was a party. Said that his Majesty knew well that Wolsey did not act as a party, and he might see from the state of affairs when he sent over Darius that he acted as a friend. He then said that he would look at the replies, and answer them, and retired to his chamber.

1528.

Went to the Great Chancellor, and expressed wonder at the answer he had received. He said we should have none other. Said that if the Emperor would give him no other answer he must be patient; but he could not help saying that it was hard for the Emperor to expect the French king to fulfil all his obligations, and then to leave the restoration of his children to the Emperor's mere will. *The Chancellor answered that it was no use urging this, for there would never be peace between the Emperor and the French king unless the latter fulfilled all his obligations before the return of either of his sons, and that he must acknowledge that he had spoken ill concerning the duel. Asked whether one son could not be restored in return for the performance of certain conditions, but he said the Emperor would never consent to this. *Tried to persuade the Chancellor that there was no need for the French king to acknowledge his fault in speaking of the duel. He said they must expect the Emperor always to consider his honor. Said that, to speak as himself, not as connected with Wolsey, he thought that they were the more difficult about this peace because they hoped to dissolve the League and gain over the Venetians and Florentines; but he was certain that they could never do this, for they were afraid the Imperialists desired peace with them to crush the French king, and that then they would do the same to them. He replied, if the Venetians will not make peace, there will be war, and they will be the cause of the subsequent evils. Said they could not fairly be considered so, for whatever they did would be in defence, not offence. Said further that the Emperor had hitherto gained nothing from the League, but still the king of England was quiet, and had attempted nothing against the Emperor; but, if he took up arms, in what state would the Emperor's affairs be? The Chancellor answered, why do you talk of the king of England? If we wished, we could expel him from his kingdom in three months. Said he did not believe that the Emperor, with the aid of Flanders, was strong enough to do so. He answered he was not speaking of Flanders, but he knew what he was saying.

In order the better to find out what he meant, said he did not believe that if Scotland were joined with Flanders the Emperor could drive out the King. He asked what men the King had. Answered that the men of his own kingdom were able to resist the Scotch, the Flemings, and any one who attempted to injure them; for the King himself was courageous, and had experience in war, his subjects were strong and bold, and had often made trial of themselves against the Scots and others, and gained the victory. The Chancellor answered that he did not mean Scotland, but that he would be driven out by his own [subjects] in three months. Said he knew for certain that Alaman was mistaken, for all his subjects were obedient and loved him. He answered that they knew well how matters were. Said that if he thought otherwise than what Darius had said, he was mistaken. Said also that if the King did not wish to take up arms, he might still injure the Emperor so much that Darius did not see how he could resist. The Chancellor answered that God would help them because the cause was just. Said he would not dispute about the justice of the cause, but he knew well that the Emperor and he were so prudent that he did not believe they would govern their affairs on the idea that God would help them, for that would be to tempt God. He said that they relied on their own strength also. Darius answered that they knew their inferiority in strength, and that if they contended with their superiors it would be tempting God. The Chancellor asked if Darius meant that the Emperor had no money, and asserted that besides the money granted by his subjects from their affection to him, and besides what he was about to receive from a contract concerning India, he (the Chancellor) had devised a method for raising two millions of gold. Said he supposed that if the Emperor could raise this sum by this means, other powers could raise much more. He said other powers could not use these means. Answered that if they could not, they might find others of no less utility, adding that it would be a good thing if the Emperor would declare his mind, even partially, that some means might be devised for concluding a peace, which was at once necessary and useful to all parties. He said the Emperor would never do that, for it was not usual. Darius said he did not think that the Emperor should consider what was usual in a matter so necessary to Christendom, but all ought to further it with sincerity and alacrity, and he was sure that if the Emperor and he had seen the cruelties of the war, they would rather give up part of Spain than allow it to continue; if the Emperor would not declare his mind, the Chancellor surely could do so, and if he could not to him as Wolsey's servant, he might as Sylvester Darius, and he could then report it to Wolsey, and would promise not to mention it to any one else. He answered that that would be the same as the Emperor doing so. Said that if he, as Chancellor, could not speak, let some one else, either in the Council or outside, and Darius would immediately go to the Cardinal. He answered that they could not otherwise declare their master's intention, and asked if Darius thought the challenge and the words of the French king honorable. Said that they should not be noticed; and reminded him that when pope Julius and the French king called the Catholic king a Moor and a Jew, he only laughed and disregarded it. He replied that the Emperor dismissed all rancor, but could not dismiss what affected his honor, and he had passed over his saying at the time of his election that he was a monster without sense, and that he did not know how to speak. Said that even if these things touched his honor they were only worthy of ridicule, for it was impossible for the duel to take place, as neither a mode of fighting nor a safe place could be found. The Chancellor said the Emperor would go to the middle of France with his army, and there meet the King. Said these things had better be passed over, and the means of making peace considered. The Chancellor said this could not be, for there was no mediator. Suggested Wolsey, but he replied that he was a party, and the king of England had defied the Emperor. Said that the King had committed no hostile actions. He answered that they knew of the money which he was paying to the French against the Emperor. Said he did not believe that he had paid any money to be used against the Emperor, and that he knew if the Emperor trusted the King, the King would rather lose his life or his kingdom than deceive him; he might easily persuade himself of this, for the King could gain nothing by perfidy. He replied that the French king said the same, and then deceived them. Said the cases were not the same, for the king of England had no cause to deceive the Emperor, but the French king had, as the Emperor had so loaded him with severe conditions. The Chancellor said that the king of England should first make peace with them, and then treat for universal peace. Asked if he thought it fair for the King to desert his allies without hope of peace. He answered that the king of England, the Pope, the Venetians, and the duke of Ferrara had deserted them. Said he did not know their reason, but was sure they did not do it without a cause; which he denied; and Darius rejoined that, although neither the Emperor nor he might have given a cause, some other Imperialist agents might have done so. Finally, he said, that he could give no other answer than the Emperor had given, and so dismissed Darius. Three or four days after, John Alaman intimated to him that he ought to ask the Emperor's leave to depart. Went accordingly to his Majesty, who said that he would give no further answer. Thought, from the words in the Emperor's answer, that it is not honorable for the French king's sons to be restored before the King fulfils what may be concluded; that the Emperor will not be content with the treaty of Burgos. Asked him this question, but he replied that he would give no further answer. Said he thought from the answer that his Majesty would not be content with the offers accepted by him at Burgos, and that he wished Francis to fulfil his obligations, but for the return of his children to be still at his disposal, which to honorable men would seem severe. He said he should do what was fitting for honorable men, and those who were displeased with his conduct were not honorable; if the king of England would make peace he would be content, and, in fact, desired nothing more. Asked for licence to send a courier to Wolsey with the answer. He said Darius had better go himself, for now no licence was granted to couriers.

* These passages are marked in the margin by Wolsey.

1528.

SYLVESTER DARIUS to [WOLSEY]—cont.

1528.

Went to the Chancellor for a licence to depart. He said he was sorry Darius was not returning better contented. Said he must take what they gave, but he was grieved to take back war when he came for peace. Asked whether what was said in the answer about the French king performing his obligations before the restoration of his children, referred to the offers made at Burgos, or to new conditions which were to be made. He answered that it was not his business to explain the Emperor's answer. Said that he could easily explain what he had drawn up. Then he said that the Emperor did not intend to stand to the conditions made at Burgos. Asked if the Emperor intended the French king to perform his obligations, and then leave matters to the Emperor's disposal without his giving hostages as he had promised at Burgos. He answered that he was certain that Francis would never have back one son.

Went to Alaman, and asked him the same questions. He answered plainly that the Emperor would not be content with the conditions of Burgos, nor even with those of Madrid, but that he wanted more; also that he would not give hostages for the French king's security, but would return his sons when he had performed everything.

Went to Nicolas de Pernodi (Perrenot), one of the Privy Council; complained that the Emperor seemed so adverse to peace; tried to show him how far the answers were from what was honorable, and asked him to urge the Emperor and his Council to declare his mind for making peace, and send to him at Valladolid, where he would stay for a few days to recover his health. This he promised to do, but feared it would be of no use.

The Emperor is levying men. It is said that he will send either 1,000 or 5,000 men to Genoa, to go to the defence of Milan. There are also reports that he has written to the prince of Orange to go thither, and that he is expecting 5,000 Germans. The herald sent by the Emperor has returned from France. He reports that the French king would not allow the reading of the cartel, and that he gave him as reward 500 gold pieces, and a robe of cloth of gold. The following day the Emperor summoned several persons, but it is not known what they decided. He blamed the herald for not throwing the cartel at the King's feet, and for receiving the reward. Many persons praise the French king for his answer. At the Court it is thought certain that the Emperor will send 9,000 or 10,000 foot to Italy in the spring. Some think he will go himself, and with these troops and those of Antony de Leva, who is at Milan, attack the Venetian territory. It is said that he has used threats and offers to detach them from the League, and considers that his success depends upon them. Stopped for some days at Valladolid to recover from an illness which he had caught at Madrid. Writes thus fully because he cannot travel fast. Writes also to Clerk, and sends a copy of the answer of the Emperor. Sends to Wolsey letters from the Emperor. Bayonne, 5 Nov. 1528.

1528.

SYLVESTER DARIUS to [WOLSEY]—cont.

Hol., Lat., pp. 22. The passages in cipher deciphered by a modern hand.

4910. SYLVESTER DARIUS to CHARLES V.

Vesp. C. iv.
279.
B. M.

Cannot, without incurring the blame of negligence, refrain from answering the reply which he has received from Alamann.

It is said that the articles brought by him only regard the French king, and therefore do not regard universal peace, and must be disapproved. Wolsey mentioned only the French king, thinking that there would be no difficulty in making peace between the Emperor and other powers, and because he had heard that the Emperor had told the Italian ambassadors that he wished to settle his affairs with Italy without the intervention of the French king or any other. If the Emperor please, Wolsey will persuade the Italians and other powers to send ambassadors to his Majesty, or to settle their affairs with his agents there. Is sure that Wolsey will refuse no labor for the sake of peace. Thinks it would be well if the Emperor would declare his mind, and agree on some method by which, if peace could be made with the other potentates, matters might at once be arranged with the French king, lest, after treating with the former, universal peace should be hindered by the difficulties arising with the latter. Thinks the requiring a commission from him a subtlety of law, for the Emperor must know that whatever is promised by Wolsey, or by him as sent from Wolsey, in the name of the French king, will be inviolably performed. Besides, mediators and amicable negotiators do not usually have commissions, but try to persuade parties to agreement, and discover their intentions so as to bring it about. Thinks it expedient that the method of arranging peace with France should be first concluded, and then a commission should be sought from the King to consent to it, which he does not think that he would refuse, as it would be settled in the name and by the authority of Wolsey, whom the Emperor knows to be acting from a desire to benefit all, and not to deceive any one.

The Emperor thinks the articles should be rejected because they propose the restitution of the hostages before the French king has performed his obligations. Replies that the articles do not say this, but they propose that all the obligations should be performed before the restitution of both hostages. It seems hard that since suspicion has arisen between the Emperor and the French king, his Majesty should demand the fulfilment of all the conditions, and that then the restoration of the Princes should depend solely upon his will. Lady Margaret and Wolsey thought the same, and tried to find some means to mitigate it. She has sent to him on the subject. It is said that the king of England declares by the defiance that he means to act as an enemy, and therefore the Emperor ought not to trust him. To this he replies that no hostile act has been committed since the intimation, and the Emperor knows what was the state of affairs when Wolsey sent him, and can see that no fraud is intended. He knows also that Henry is too generous and upright to break his promises, and in this instance he could gain nothing by perfidy. Both he and Wolsey earnestly desire peace, and know that it could not last unless they kept inviolable their engagements with him. Touching the proposal to settle matters with the king of England, and then, with him as mediator, to negotiate a universal peace; has no commission on this point, but considers that it would be dishonorable of the King to forsake his confederates, especially as there is no need for him to mediate, as Wolsey would be a most fit person. Suggests that all that concerns the universal peace should be first treated, and the means agreed to, so that when peace was made between the King and the Emperor there would be nothing to do but to proceed to execute what had been concluded.

1528.

Thinks the Emperor should assemble his Council and devise some method; for when two parties desire to conclude anything, it is not usual for one party to do nothing but confute the proposals of the other.

Hol., Lat., Copy. Endd.: Responsa D. Silvestri Darii.

5 Nov. 4911. SILVESTER DARIUS to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

In returning from Spain, fell in with one who had come from Ireland with three or four falcons and as many dogs, and two Spaniards, going to the court of the Emperor. Afterwards on my road I met with Thomas Bedechoe (Badeock), an Englishman, who told me that he had heard from certain Spaniards in Bilbao that the said Irishman had been sent to the Emperor from the marquis of Desmond, to offer the Earl's service to the Emperor, and promise him that if he would give certain aid and artillery to the said Marquis, the latter would take up arms against the King. I thought it right to inform you of these things. Bayonne, 5 Nov. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

5 Nov. 4912. LEAD.

R. O.

Bill indented between Oliver Flynt, vicar of Chesterfield, executor of Edward Basforde and Raphe Alen, whereby the former covenants to deliver to the latter at the Boolhill, Wirkiswurthe, Derb., a certain quantity of lead at 5*l.* 10*s.* the folder, Bool weight. 5 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII. Signed.

P. 1.

7 Nov. 4913. JAMES V. to NORTHUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Has received his loving writings, dated at his castle [of Alnwick, the 3*d* inst., showing his good will to peace. Lion herald brought, as the Earl wrote, a safe-conduct for the commissioners, who are now departed, and will keep diet in Berwick. Edinburgh, 7 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Add. Endd.

7 Nov. 4914. SHERIFF ROLL.

S. B.

Cumb.: John Lamplewe, *Sir Wm. Penyngton, Cuth. Musgrave.

Northumb.: Sir Ralph Fenwike, Thos. Eryngton, *Sir Edw. Grey.

Yorks.: *Sir Jo. Constable of Holderness, Thos. Strangways, Jo. Norton.

Notts and Derby: *Nich. Strolley, Sir Hen. Sacheverell, Sir Jo. Horsey.

Linc.: *Geo. Fitzwilliam, Sir Rob. Dymmok, Sir Jo. Thymelby.

Warw. and Leic.: Jo. Harrington, Sir Jo. Villers, *Roger Ratcliff.

Salop.: Ric. Maynwaryng, *Rob. Nedeham, Thos. Laken.

Staff.: Wm. Bassett, Geo. Gresley, *Edw. Aston.

Heref.: Wm. Clynton, Thos. Monyngton, *Sir Jo. Lyngen.

Glouc.: *Sir Ant. Poyntz, Wm. Throgmerton, Rob. Witney.

Oxon. and Berks.: Jo. Brome, *Sir Simon Harcourt, Wm. Stafford.

North'ton.: Sir Wm. Gascoigne, *Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, Edw. Mountague.

1528.

SHERIFF ROLL—cont.

Camb. and Hunts: Giles Alyngton, Thos. Hutton, *Ph. Parrys.
Beds and Bucks: *Sir Jo. Hampden, Sir Edw. Donne, Sir Francis Brian.
Norf. and Suff.: *Sir Wm. Paston, Jo. Tyndale, Thos. Jermyyn.
Essex and Herts: Jo. Bollys, Rob. Forster, *Sir Giles Capell.
Kent: *Wm. Kempe, Ric. Fane, Wm. Wallor.
Surrey and Sussex: *Sir Nich. Carewe, Ric. Belyngeham, Sir Edw. Bray.
Hants: Sir Wm. Uvedale, *Ric. Andrewes, Rob. Bulkeley.
Wilts: *Jo. Erneley, John Horsey of Marten, Sir John Seymour.
Soms. and Dorset: *And. Lutterell, Sir Edw. Gorges, Sir Nich. Wadham.
Devon: *Sir Piers Eggecombe, Ric. Hals, Andr. Hillersden.
Cornw.: *John Chamond, Wm. Godolghan, Sir Jo. Arundell.
Rutl.: Edw. Catesby, Geo. Makworth, *Sir Everard Digby.
† Worc.: Sir Geo. Throgmorton, Sir Edw. Croft, Roger Wynter.
Cheshire: Sir Hen. D. . . . , *Thos. Fulshurst, George Bothe.
Lancashire: (Three names illegible).
Westmor.: *Henry earl of Cumberland.
Del. Westm., 7 Nov. 20 Hen.VIII.

8 Nov.

Le Grand,
iii. 197.

4915. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Since I wrote to you on the 27th (28th ?) ult., I have done all that the most importunate and troublesome fellow in the world could have done to get money, and in spite of all hindrances presented myself three times to the Legate. On one of these occasions he kept talking to me a long time about the great letters I sent, the second time he asked to see them (l'autre à les voir), and each time I pressed the matter of the money as much as I could. My cause being well pleaded my good right prevailed, with the good will which I believe Wolsey really feels, though he never spoke frankly to me till yesterday, when he went to the King expressly about this matter, and, so far as I can see, had some discussion about it. I know he took with him all the letters and papers which could be of use to show the expences you have been at in Italy. Mark that in this, as will be the case in everything in which we shall have to do with him, matters have turned out quite according to the long letter to which I have so often referred you. I had written one word, finding myself so much hindered, to my lord of Bath, and spoken to some others who might have helped to lay the evil wind. Finally, Wolsey has assured me on his life that I shall be despatched in three or four days.

Wolsey told me yesterday the King and he approve of your proposal for "practising" the peace by means of the Pope. To say the truth, I used to see clearly that Wolsey preferred his own, and no wonder, but now I see he frankly agrees to the Pope's plan, and, in fact, is already thinking of sending some one to Rome to join with your ambassadors that they may negotiate in good earnest; for which they desire to know the intentions of Francis as soon as possible. I fancy they are beginning to see that in the present state of the divorce question they must not wait assurance of it on their side, and as the Pope much desires this honor, they are willing to gratify him. And really Campeggio preaches so continually of the Pope's great good will, and what he is resolved to do and endure for this end, that I can hardly help believing something of it.

Yesterday Wolsey, after being very angry at my importunity about the † None of the names in Worcestershire is pricked.

1528.

money, (though we afterwards came to agreement,) asked me if I had thought about what he one day before had requested me to consider, viz., if I could find that the King's marriage never was valid, the Pope never having had power to dispense. Mark, Monseigneur, that after many disputes that very day we came upon this subject of the divorce, he showing the great rupture with the Emperor which will come of it, and the perpetual confirmation of our amity, which will be quite according to his plan. And he desired me, as one of my master's most faithful councillors, whom he regarded as his friend and brother, to consider the state in which they were, sc. what I wrote to you on the 29th, for I had learned it on good authority. He had also heard that I was a great theologian, and was anxious for my opinion on this point, as it was that on which they chiefly relied. Although I told you four days before what I thought of this, after some excuses of my age and little knowledge I said that I had never thought well about it, and could not easily answer. However, he pressed me much to think over it, and declare my mind simply according to Scripture, apart from the opinions of doctors. In the end I could not refuse, and told him my conscientious opinion, which, if I had thought otherwise, I would have withheld. I will send it you next time, for I have not had time to copy it, having had but one day of term. M. de Bourges will understand it better than you, and will translate it to you. This last time I was with the Legate, so far as he had had leisure to look at it he seemed pleased, and, after many thanks and praises, prayed me, in behalf of his master, to write surely and secretly to Madame, as I am doing. His reason for making this request to her, he says, is to convince Campeggio that not only the English but learned men abroad also agree in this opinion; for he has no doubt that when the matter has taken the form I wrote to you, the Queen, who has demanded counsel, will make great remonstrances to Campeggio, especially as he understands she has long been prepared for it. He has therefore asked me to take an opportunity, in conversation with Campeggio, to show him the arguments which occur to me in this matter, knowing that the Cardinal would value my opinion; and that he may see that what is sent from France is genuine. Wolsey would like it to be signed by those who draw it up (des ouvriers). I paused to think what could make him say this to me. It is certain that some of those here who do not like the business say, that in any case he who marries the Princess will be king of England hereafter; and I suspected, for all his apparent frankness, he wanted to get us by indirect means to acknowledge the marriage as null, in case the marriage of Mons. d'Orleans should go further. This you will have to consider about. For my part I thought I must satisfy him. I have signed nothing; and, even if I had, my opinion is quite informal, not being founded on a commandment or will of the master; so I delivered to him my conscientious judgment.

That you may be able to form a judgment I give you full information of what I see. They are certainly much perplexed, as I wrote before, especially because few of their doctors agree in their opinion, "et si ne sont pour y condescendre, encores qu'ils pensassent le pouvoir faire et devoir, pour les causes qu'autrefois vous ay mandées." The Cardinals have full power to take cognizance of it, and, I think, with the clause jointly or separately; but even if the English cardinal can do it, he would never do it without the other; for, the matter being so far advanced, it would be a great injury to the cause hereafter, if the other on some pretext had not likewise given sentence; and of him they do not hold themselves sure, for he maintains he will follow the judgment of his conscience, and only if he can acknowledge that the divorce is lawful will he take the leap. This may be the cause why they ask your aid. If there be any other hidden reason, I do not know it. In any case, if you wish to please the King and Wolsey, keep the matter secret. I believe you know what they say they will do with the Princess if the divorce proceed, viz., give her a good marriage, leaving her, as far as they can, no claim to the succession. I enclose the articles on which you must get the opinions.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

Wolsey has asked me to write to you to make arrangements for the passage of couriers in Lombardy. I believe that one has been killed, which is an obstacle to the common affairs. As to the colors you asked for, there are some of two kinds. I suppose you do not want the common ones. Those most liked are black, yellow and violet. I do not say yellow gilt. I would have sent them sooner, but did not like to make a dispatch without better assurance of money. This is why I kept the King's great letters so long to show to Wolsey. I showed them to him on the morrow of All Saints. I send you a copy of the last letters received from Viterbo. There is a report here of a great mutiny at Milan, in which the Spaniards have been illtreated, and Anthony de Leva killed. The Imperial ambassador told it to some one yesterday in secret, but the King got wind of it, and made great rejoicings at it. I assure you he makes greater demonstration of friendship than ever. Nothing is yet known of the man Babou wrote about. They spoke of sending him to Spain. London, 8 Nov.

Fr. Add.

8 Nov. 4916. JOHN CHEKYNG to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Various reports were spread here about Cromwell, which he is glad proved false. Gregory is well, et reliqui tui have now got cloaks to shield them from the cold. They have also a blazing fire to keep them comfortable. Little Gregory is becoming great in letters. Christopher* does not require much stirring up. Acknowledges a bundle of cloth received yesterday from Cromwell. Pembroke Hall, 8 Nov.

P.S.—The plague which sent us into the country has nearly consumed our money.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: Suorum studiorum nequaquam vulgari patrone, D. Thomæ Cromwello, viro ut claro ita multis nominibus inclyto. Ex Cantabrigia.

8 Nov. 4917. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

Bargain and sale by Sir George Throgmerton to Wolsey, of the manor of Ravenston, Bucks, of the clear yearly value of 38*l.*, for 20 years' purchase. Wolsey at the same time covenants that he and the dean and canons of Cardinal's College, Oxford, will grant a 21 years' lease of the premises and of the late priory of Ravenston to Robert Throgmerton, son and heir apparent of Sir George. Dated — May 20 Hen.VIII. Signed: Per me, George Throkmorton.

Pp. 5, large paper. Draft in Wriothesley's hand, with corrections by Cromwell.

R. O.

2. Another draft, dated 8 Nov. 20 Hen.VIII., in which the covenant for the lease to Robert Throgmerton is struck out.

In Wriothesley's hand, pp. 6, large paper.

11 Nov. 4918. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 115.

R. M.

Extract from the letters of Gregory [Casale] to Peter Vannes, dated Bologna, Oct. 23.

Will use all diligence in executing his last commissions, but, being too weak from his illness to go to Rome, has sent his brother the prothonotary, who had come to see him. Will follow him as soon as possible. Asks him to thank the King for the 200*l.* he has sent him, and for his other kindness to himself and his house. Fears that Andrea Dauria has offended the French too much to trust them, but Casale will do his best. Thadeus was obliged to come by a circuitous route to avoid the Spaniards, and brought testimonials to that effect from the count of St. Pól and others. The prothonotary Gambarà, the governor of Bologna, told him that Savona has surrendered to the Genoese, and that St. Pól's army contains only 1,000 infantry, and the Venetians' 2,000; which Casale cannot believe. Does not think the expedition of Milan will succeed. Wishes Wolsey to tell George Arlizon not to exact any tax from his pension, as he is the King's servant.

1528.

The ambassador of the duke of Ferrara complains that he has not endeavored to obtain from the King and Wolsey a confirmation of the capitulation with the Duke in the time of Lautrec. Wishes to know what he is to say.

ii. From letters of Gregory Casale, dated Bologna, 11 Nov.

Has received letters from his brother the prothonotary that he is doing his best to procure what the King wishes from the Pope and the cardinal S. Quatuor. The general of the Franciscan Order,* who lately came from the kingdom of Naples, is created cardinal. The bailiff of Rouen will depart tomorrow; he had been sent to desire the Pope to keep neutral. It is said that the French king wishes to make war in Naples and Lombardy, and wants both Italian and German troops.

iii. From letters of Jacobo Salviati to Gregory [Casale].

Being desired by the prothonotary Casale, spoke to the Pope about the request of the King and Wolsey. His Holiness answered that he was ready to grant all they asked.

Lat., pp. 3. Endd.

11 Nov. 4919. The EARL OF DESMOND.

Add. 28577,

f. 306.

B. M.

A memorial by "Galfrigidus" or Percit (?), a messenger of the earl of Desmond in Ireland, that he has been sent to the Emperor by his master to desire an alliance, as friends of the Emperor's friends and enemy of his enemies; that he desires two or three pieces of artillery and ammunition sent him at the Earl's cost, and that the Emperor would send some one to conclude with him, &c. Toledo, 11 Nov. 1528.

"Dixo yo el dicho Pero, que en latyn me llamo Galfrigidus," that the earl of Desmond and Macart More are both of one conformity; that Macart More pays tribute to Desmond, and can bring into the field 19,000 foot and 200 horse, and Desmond 16,000 foot and 2,000 horse.

Spanish, pp. 5, modern copy.

[Nov.] 4920. [JACOBO SALVIATI] to CAMPEGGIO.

Lettere
di Principi,
ii. 149 b.

I have received no letters from you since those of the . . . , but I learn from my son, the cardinal, that you had arrived in England, although indisposed through the gout, and had been well received by the King† and the cardinal of York. The Pope is pleased to hear of your safe arrival, but does not condole with you on account of the gout, as it is a common complaint. We are anxiously expecting your letters.

Your Lordship is aware how positively the King and Cardinal have always promised the Pope that his territories should be restored; and, indeed, the King has done in this matter as much as could reasonably be expected. But as he will have understood from Dr. Stephen (Gardiner) that the Venetians are very obstinate, and disregard the intercession of so great a King, it will be necessary for his Majesty, in order to confirm the trust which the Pope reposes in him, to resent this affront in such a manner that the Venetians may perceive they have offended him, and not the Pope only. Unless the King and Cardinal take up this subject warmly, it will appear, after the King has used his good offices in vain, that the French king's authority is alone sufficient. I do not speak of the restitution of the lands of the duke of Ferrara, as the Pope is at present more aggrieved with the injury done him by the Venetians. I constantly inform my son of the occurrences here, with which he will make you acquainted.

1528.

[JACOBO SALVIATI] to CAMPEGGIO—cont.

Sir [Gregory] Casale, in order to recover from the illness which he took on returning from accompanying your Lordship, went to Loretto, and from thence has removed to Bologna, where he received letters from the King and the cardinal of York, with orders to obtain certain favors from the Pope. Not being in a fit state to ride, he has caused his brother, the elect of Bellun, to repair hither. You will have learned what the King and Cardinal desire, namely, the union of certain monasteries to the value of 8,000 [ducats?], for the two colleges established by the grandfathers* of his Majesty. As the Pope was able to grant this sine consilio fratrum, the bull will be expedited. They also desire the erection of certain monasteries into bishoprics; but as this is a difficult matter, and cannot be done except de consensu fratrum, the decision has been deferred until the form is obtained of the erection of a former monastery into a cathedral, which they say has been done several times in that island. The Pope will then be better able to satisfy the King and the cardinal of York, to whom this see is so much obliged that no favor, however great, provided it be honorable (honesta), can be denied them, especially as it is certain that the object of his Majesty and the Cardinal is the service of God only. The King also requests an indulgence, to which his Holiness is willing to consent, but only for a few days, because, in order to remedy the discredit (viltà) into which they have fallen, owing to their too liberal concessions in the past, it is necessary not to grant too many of them. The Cardinal further demands the union to his college of three monasteries, which are not mentioned in the other bulls. This, too, shall be granted, although his Holiness could have wished that it had not been requested of him; but as it is his most reverend Lordship who makes the demand, and for such a purpose, he cannot refuse him, as the elect of Bellun is to write to him at greater length,—the elect being here, and soliciting this "expedition" with much importunity. We have letters from the King and Cardinal to the Pope, to which an answer shall be sent when the "expeditions" shall have been made.

Your Lordship is aware that when the Pope was importuned by the French, during their occupation of the kingdom, to declare himself, he always remained firm in his purpose not to depart from his neutrality, which he hopes will be the means of concluding peace, especially as he finds that course is not displeasing to the King and the cardinal of York, who have no other object or end than the good of Christendom. The Pope is still of the same mind with regard to not taking up arms for the Emperor for any offers whatever which they (the Imperialists) might make him,—though, indeed, the Emperor has made no overture as yet, the matter being only hinted by his agents. But seeing that the Venetians and the duke of Ferrara are not only averse to restoring his territories, but seem to be designing further mischief, the Pope fears he shall be compelled to relinquish his purpose; and you know he would not lack allies. He also suspects the Florentines. It is asserted that the French favor the tactics of these parties. The Pope has therefore written to Salviati to remonstrate gently with the French king; but if Henry and Wolsey would write to France, it would have more weight.

* "dall'avi materno et paterno."

1528.

The diet which was to have been held at Ratisbon has been deferred by order of the Emperor, but a meeting will take place this winter to discuss some very scandalous matters. They propose to call a council of the German nation. Only a good peace can remedy these evils. The General of the Franciscans, now cardinal Santa Croce, is on his way to Italy, and is bringing [the order for] the liberation of the Cardinals who are hostages, and the restoration of Ostia and Civita Vecchia.

Ital. Signature and date omitted.

12 Nov. 4921. CATHEDRALS and MONASTERIES.

Rym.xiv. 273.

R. O.

Bull of pope Clement, empowering Wolsey to inquire as to the expediency of suppressing certain monasteries and erecting cathedrals. Rome, prid. id. Nov. 1528.

Lat., vellum.

Rym.xiv. 273.

R. O.

2. Bull of pope Clement for the suppression of monasteries having fewer than 12 monks or nuns, and uniting them to larger monasteries. Rome, prid. id. Nov. 1528.

Lat., vellum.

13 Nov. 4922. ANGUS to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

St. P. iv. 322.

The commissioners met at Berwick on the 8 Nov., and have appointed to meet there the 9th prox. for final conclusion of peace. Hopes the King will command them to make none "bot gif my matteris be dressit in the sammyn," otherwise he and his friends are utterly destroyed, and will never be able to serve the King, for the peace is desired by Scotland only for his destruction. Coldingham Abbey, 13 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Add. Endd.

[14 Nov.] 4923. ANGUS to NORTHUMBERLAND.

Cal. B. vii. 99.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 321.

Notwithstanding the King's letters James assembled his army on the 18 Oct., and besieged his house of Temtalloun with artillery of his own and of Dunbar castle, and ingenious men, both Scotch and French. Never was so much done in vain to win one house. On Wednesday, 4 Nov., the King removed to Edinburgh, leaving a band of foot and a company of horse to bring home the artillery. That night Angus issued out with a body of eightscore horse, attacked and defeated them a little after moonrise, before day, and slew David Falkeoner, their principal captain of foot, their best man-of-war on sea, who was taken lately by the English. Took the master of the artillery; but not to dishonor his King, especially for Henry's sake, conducted the artillery out of danger, and let the master pass, praying him to show his Sovereign that Angus had been his true servant. Has written to the King that the commissioners be instructed to take no peace unless Angus and his friends be restored. Coldingham Abbey, this Saturday. Signed.

Add. Endd.

14 Nov. 4924. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. ii. 175.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 330.

Supposes Wolsey has been informed of the siege of Temptalon by the king of Scots, and of his return to Edinburgh, &c. During the siege, Arch. and Geo. Douglas, the uncle and brother of Angus, met at Cobornespath with Sir Jas. Hamilton and the sheriff of Ayr, and consulted about getting the Earl back into favor; but the terms did not please him and his friends. Geo. Douglas has received the 100*l.* assigned by Wolsey for Angus's use. Will do what he is commanded, but thinks it would be a pity to alienate the king of Scots for the sake of Angus. Orders were given to allow any of the English borderers to go over to the Earl, but very few would, unless specially commanded. Geo. Douglas says the Scots are obliged to send to France for gunpowder, of which they have none, unless it be at Dunbar. Upon his assurances sent to Angus by word of mouth, the Earl has just come to him with his uncle and brother. He seems to expect to be received again into favor since the king of Scots failed at Temptalon; but Magnus thinks this very unlikely, as the slaughter of Davy Fawconer is grievously taken. The Earl wishes us to rest still in calling for redress and negotiate no further, which will compel the Scots to listen to our terms. Believes the contrary is true. We were asked by the Scots what redress we ever obtained from Angus these three years, and could make no good answer. The English borders do not praise his administration. Angus says the Scotch king has sent Will. Hamelton to the Emperor, desiring marriage and amity with him; and the Scotch commissioners have confessed as much, saying it was Angus's doing. Berwick, 14 Nov. Signed.

1528.

MAGNUS to WOLSEY—cont.

*Add. Endd.14 Nov. 4925. MAGNUS, &c. to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. II. 95.

B. M.

St. P. IV. 523.

Have endeavored to fulfil the commands of the King and Wolsey given in their letters of the 5 and 6 Oct., and a book of instructions signed by the King touching their meeting with the Scotch commissioners at Berwick. On their way to the Borders visited the earl of Northumberland at Alnwick, where they met the lieutenants of the East and Middle Marches. Except the great attemptate against Dacre's servants, and one or two high robberies by the Scots, there is as great redress to be made by England. On the 8th met at Berwick with the Scotch commissioners, the abbot of Kelso and Mr. Adam Otterburn. Expressed their surprise that the king of Scots' commission was only for a three-years' peace, and refused to negotiate, but only call for redress; which put the Scots not a little in doubt what redress should be made for the attemptates of the Armstrongs and men of Liddersdail, who were not in due subjection to their prince. They offered to conclude a peace for four or five years, and send for a new commission, as redress could not be made in brief time. Urged that, in case of redress being denied by the Armstrongs, an article should be included in the treaty, or a schedule annexed to it, allowing the King to molest them without breach of the peace. To this they could give no answer without consulting their prince. They admitted the reasonableness of our demand that prisoners taken on English ground by the Armstrongs should be put at liberty, but could not promise a remedy. Discussed the matter two or three days to no purpose. Asked what the king of Scots intended to do for Angus. The Scots said it was no part of their commission, and they were commanded, if the matter were put to them effectually, to take their leave; but they knew their master wondered the King would favor a person whom he regarded as a rebel. Replied that the King was induced to do so, seeing that James was ruled by thieves and murderers rather than by the noblemen of his realm. Mentioned Sir James Hamilton, who slew Lennox, the sheriff of Ayr, who slew Cassillis, the lord of Buccleugh, who caused the death of Dau Carre, warden of the East Marches, and the lord Maxwell, chief maintainer of offenders, by means of whom, and of Harry Steward, now married to the queen of Scots, Angus is attainted. Perplexed the commissioners with these answers, and made them desirous of peace. They said, if the King would regard a stranger more than his own blood, James must seek friends for himself. Replied that the King only intended to give his nephew his best advice, but that it was not "convenient" to enter into peace without redress being made. At last the Diet was prorogued till 9 Dec., the peace remaining in full effect till 15 Jan., and strict orders given for proclamations for its observance on both Borders.

1528.

Desire instructions whether to refuse peace unless order be taken for the earl of Angus. It is openly rumored by Geo. Douglas and Lyon Herald that Henry will not do so otherwise; which is much grudged at. Think that peace should not be delayed till the justice of all grievances be inquired into, and that the King should be empowered to pursue the Armstrongs if the Scots will not answer for them. If the King will have no peace without provision being made for Angus, garrisons must be ordained for the defence of the Borders. The men of Tyndale and Riddesdale were lately in Scotland, where many were taken prisoners, and they lost eightscore horses. Think peace should not be refused either on account of Angus or for want of redress. Magnus will remain here till next day of meeting, to note what goes on in Scotland; and if the commissioners do not make a good report to their Sovereign, will write to him and his Council. Meanwhile I and Sir Tho. Tempest, controller of the duke of Richmond's council, "intend to repair into those parts, and to look upon some part of my duty," and return. Adam Otterburne, one of the Scotch commissioners, asks Wolsey's favor in a cause before the Cardinal between one Mr. Miller and Saunder Keye, a Scotchman, about salmon. Berwick, 14 Nov. Signed: T. Magnus—A. Ughtred—T. Tempest.

Add. Eadd.

4926. MAGNUS, &c. to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Since the arrival of the Scotch commissioners, have had several conferences with them of the trouble imposed on sundry merchants of Edinburgh, and on Adam Otterborne, for conveying salmon to England. This they had long done under the King's safe-conduct, but are now informed against by the poor merchants of Berwick under an old grant which was never put in use. The merchants of Berwick cannot buy much salmon, and the Scots would rather send it to France or Flanders on account of the danger of the harbour. This would enhance the price of salmon, and be "a let to the profit that cometh in by the same by their exchanges made for all their spiritual promotions that they send for to Rome."

P. 1. Headed: "Copy of an article lately written to my lord Legate's grace in favor of merchants of Edinburgh by T. Magnus and other the commissioners late at Barwik."

14 Nov.

4927. THOMAS BISHOP OF BANGOR to WOLSEY.

R. O.
Ellis, 3 Ser.
ii. 151.

Informs him of the state of Master Pace, dean of Paul's, who is now with him by Wolsey's command, to his no little discomfort. Has got several physicians to see him, and paid them large sums to cure him, to very little purpose. Thinks he is incurable. In his rage he tears his clothes, and no man can rule him. He has wastefully consumed such poor stuff as the Bishop allows him. Desires that the keeper of his goods may make delivery of what is necessary. Requests that the bearer, a young man of the Inner Temple, a kinsman of the Bishop, may continue steward of the lands which Sir William Compton* had in Hampshire, whose children Wolsey has in rule. There is no little joy in Hampshire because it has pleased God and the King to call your Grace to Winchester, especially in the town of Hampton, whereof your

* There is no mention of Sir Will. Compton in the letter as Ellis has printed it, a line being there left out.

1528.

THOMAS BISHOP OF BANGOR to WOLSEY—cont.

Grace is Earl.* The townsmen in their great necessity hope to have succour of Wolsey, for there is now little resort of shipping, and the town custom is very heavy. "Leisureless," 14 Nov.

P.S.—Hopes Wolsey will not impute it to presumption in him if anything in the above do not give him satisfaction. Signed.

Pp. 3. Add. : To, &c., my lord Legate's grace. Endd.

14 Nov.

4928. [TAYLER] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 362.

B. M.

"Please it your Grace, lately I sent a post to Calais w which came out of Spain and Italy. I hear say for tempestuous weather they have been let of passage at and from Calais I received a letter of Mr. Tukes directed to Mr. Gregorius de Casalis, the which th November at 12 of the clock at midday, I sent by p delivered with good diligence in the hands of Mr. The same 13th day I received letters from Mr. Sylve[ster Darius], the which hath been sick at Bayonne. Those letters I s[ent] by post this day to Calais, for Mr. Sylvester did [send me] word they required haste, and within three or four [days he] trusteth to be at Paris, and so to make speed un[to your Grace]. Eight days past arrived here Episcopus Pistoriensis ow[t of Spain], and lieth here in a fever [qu]artane, the which hu[m]bly him commended to your G[race]. He remains still in abiding the King's coming, the which hath be coming [this whole] month from Fonten de Blewe, and yet is not come. [Ma]dame is at St. Germyns. I have divers times v[is]y[ted the] said Pistoriensis, and by familiar communication he hath [told] me many things of his affairs with the Emperor, [and how] he oft times joined with Mr. Sylvester in their besy[ness] and causes to the Emperor, as more plainly your Grace shall [hear] of Mr. Sylvester, for he telleth me that every time [he was] with the Emperor he advised him to much regard [the King] our master. Cesar answered him that if he had [the Pope] surely joined with him, he cared little for the Fre[nch king] or for the king of England, or their adherents, adding [that] the truce betwixt England and Flanders was more [for gain] than for love, seeing that Englishmen could not lyv[e with]out Flanders, and also that Englishmen would ha[ve no war] with him. And in all his communications with the Emp[eror he] noted in him magna crudelitatis signa, et nihil paciscere. And the cause wherefore Cesar so gretl[y desires to] have the favor of our Holy Father was b[ecause he] was sore moved with the crudelity that was done [unto the] Pope and the Cardinals; insomuch that if there [had been], on the Pope's part, excommunications and interdicts, [his subjects] had been in jeopardy to have forsake the Emperor; wh[erefore] now to recover the favour popular he hath sent unto [the] Pope the Cardinal S. Calixti, the which was a Grey f[r]iar, and giveth him authority to release and put in lyb[erty] the cardinals that were captivi, and also to restore to [the Pope] all such cities, towns, or castles that were taken f[r]om him. By these behaviors your Grace doth lightly perceive w mean ut invicem uniantur, and Cesar maketh great [preparations] both by sea and land, and, as it is said, to come in [his own] person this next year in to Italy. Furthermore the C[olonnas] prepare great power against the Ursynes. Andrea [Dorea] hath Januam, the castle, and Savonam, and, as [it is] here reported, he hath caused the castle to be r[azed and] utterly to be destroyed. By these premises your Grace [may] evidently perceive how the affairs here go forwa[rd]. At the coming of Mr. Sylvester I shall know more, and [by] that time the King will be come to St. Germyne.

* "whereof your Grace is lie" (Ellis). The word is written "Ete."

1528.

where [I] shall speak with the Grand Master, and so farther to ce[r]tify] your Grace." Paris, 14 Nov. 1528.

Mutilated. Add.

14 Nov.

4929. JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 135.

R. M.

Sends a copy of his letter of Oct. 30 in case it has not arrived. Sends all the expeditions by Tadeua. If the bull for the erection of the cathedrals pleases him, he can use it at once. Nothing more is needed, except its confirmation. If it does not please him, he must return it, and state what he desires. There will be no loss, except the writing of the bull. Does not send the bull of indulgence for the King, as Gardiner did not give him full instructions about it. Asked the cardinal S. Quatuor to draw up a minute according to the instructions he has; but he thought it better to wait for further instructions from Gardiner. Agreed to this, not wanting to be troublesome to the Cardinal, who has done much for him, and knowing that this matter did not require haste. If he has not done exactly as Wolsey wished, asks him to excuse him, as he has been fully occupied in making minutes and writing bulls, which are sent directly they are written and registered.

The lord of Villebon, bailiff of Rouen, has come from the French king, as it is said, in consequence of the coming of the General, newly created cardinal, (Quignones) with great offers from the Emperor. There is reason to fear the Pope's adhesion to the Emperor. The offers to the Pope are said to be the restitution of Ostia and Civita Vecchia; the liberation of the Cardinals; the gift of 150,000 gold pieces which he owes for his ransom; licence to import corn from Sicily and Naples without duty; tribute for the kingdom of Naples; whatever the Pope wishes to be done with the duchy of Milan; the recovery of Florence for his Holiness; the gift of Modena and Reggio; declaration of war against the Venetians for the recovery of Cervia and Ravenna; further, that the Emperor shall not come personally into Italy, and shall leave the Holy See in its former state; shall accept peace from the Pope's hands, and wage war against the Turks. Even if the Emperor do not observe all these conditions, the Pope will probably accept them, as he says that the Emperor's power is too great, and he wishes also to be revenged on the Venetians. These are the arguments the General will use, and it is easy to guess the threats he will employ. As the confederates have no strong army in Italy, his Holiness will be influenced by fear.

The French king has done wisely in sending an ambassador. Has said much to him on this subject, and has besought the Pope, in the name of the King and Wolsey, not to adhere to the other side, comparing the good deeds of the two Kings with the outrages of the Imperialists. Writes more at length to Yannes; and his cousin, whom Sir Gregory sends with this expedition, can tell him more. His Holiness dismissed the French ambassador quietly, telling him he knew the good intentions of his master and the ruin caused by the Emperor, but he must consider that he is abandoned by every one, and exposed to the armies which occupy the kingdom of Naples and the duchy of Milan; the King must therefore excuse him if he seeks to humour the Imperialists; the conduct of the Venetians is not to be endured; he has always said that he would rather recover the cities by the help of the confederates, but if they cannot assist him, he must seek assistance elsewhere. The bailiff of Rouen returned today with this answer. Asked him to persuade Francis to apply again to the Venetians for the restitution of the cities. Spoke to the Pope today; his Holiness replied as above, and asked for the help of the King and Wolsey. Begged him to do nothing to offend them. The French ambassadors and many others suspect him of an inclination to accept the Emperor's offers. Has received letters from the King and Wolsey about the see of Dublin, which he has presented to the Pope. Rome, 14 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 9. Add. Endd.

1528.

14 Nov. 4930. THOS. HERON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has received his letter. Will do Wolsey's pleasure. As to his wish that it might be this week, has never since he was in office been able to get a jury returned in less than three weeks. Will, however, make out his præcipe, and deliver it to the sheriff tomorrow, telling him to warn the jury to appear at Croydon, next Monday if possible. Will be glad to see him at his house that day. Croydon, 14 Nov.

Hel., p. 1. Add.: To Mr. Cromwell.

14 Nov. 4931. RECORDS.

R. O.

Receipt, dated 14 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII., for four writings under lead from the Treasury. Signed: T. Norfolk—Thomas More—Will'm Claiburgh. P. 1.

15 Nov. 4932. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 140.

B. M.

Extract from letters of the prothonotary Casale to Peter [Vannes], dated Rome, 15 Nov.

Sends the bull for the erection of the cathedral. The Pope bears great affection to the King and Wolsey, and will take care to do nothing to offend the King; he hopes they have the same feeling towards him, and consider his position. Said to him that his return to the city without the restitution of the citadels had caused suspicion. He tried to show Casali that it was done for a good purpose, for when he was at Viterbo he saw no one to take care of his cities, and therefore thought it better to return. He would always keep before his eyes the danger to be expected from the excessive power of the Emperor, and his regard for the King and Wolsey. Provision has been made for the towns of Apulia, so that it is thought the Imperialists can do them no harm. It is reported that they left Naples to invade Apulia, but mutinied on the road, and were at last appeased by promises of money. There have been disturbances in some towns in Apulia, the people having plundered the Imperial troops. There is no news from Lombardy.

Lat., Vannes' hand, pp. 2.

15 Nov. 4933. The COUNCIL OF IRELAND to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Thank him for his care of this poor land, as shown by Patrick Bremyngham. Owing to division and lack of captains, the Englishry were never weaker since the Conquest, nor were the Irish ever stronger in the days of any man living. They are so leagued together, that, unless Wolsey will devise some means of resistance, we fear that they will do the King's subjects some injury that will be felt for many years to come. "This unfortunate rebel, the earl of Decymon," does what he can to excite the Irish against the English, "trusting that und[er that] way he may have some miserable living for th at length will be his final confusion, [and he will wish he] had never be borne. His apprehension w[ould be difficult], but it be by very crafty and secret train; for the Irishmen, whatsoever they p[retend] outward, they rejoice inward of this division," and try to increase it. "These two honorable men now being with the King's grace, confirmed in amity, should never do our sovereign Lord better service in this poor land than now." Hopes Wolsey will help their speedy return, or that some means may be provided for the defence of the King's subjects. If it be determined that Kildare return as the King's deputy, think he should find sureties for the accomplishment of the King's command. Dublin, 15 Nov. Signed: H. Dublin—G. Armachan—W. vic. of G. (Gormanstown)—Patrik Bermyngham, justice—Patrik Fynghlas, baron.

Mutilated, pp. 3. Add.: My lord cardinal of York, legate, &c. Endd.

1528.

15 Nov.

R. O.

4934. RICHARD THOMLYN, Canon, to CROMWELL.

Thanks him for the good cheer he had in his house. Asks him to speak to Wolsey in his behalf for the abbacy of St. Austin's of Bristowe, which is in the Cardinal's hand. Desires credence for the bearer, Mr. Jerome Grene. Would have written before, but he thought Cromwell was absent on Wolsey's business, and wrote to Mr. Claway and Sir Win. Gascon, treasurer of my Lord's house. Brewton, 15 Nov.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To maister Cromewell.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4935. CARDINAL S. QUATUOR to WOLSEY.

A letter of compliments and professions of service. Rome, 16 Nov. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4936. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to TUKE.

Wrote yesterday. At 9 received a packet of letters from the Master of the Rolls, directed to Tuke and Vannes. Writes for assistance. Their neighbors at Gravelines continue their fortifications. Guisnes is in ruins, though it has ordnance enough to be laid before a right strong town. Calais, 16 Nov. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4937. RICHARD RYCHE to WOLSEY.

Knowing Wolsey's great zeal for the reform of the common law, which, however, he is too busy to attend to, begs to be called before him that he may declare the abuses that are daily used, and suggest remedies. Wishes to be heard in private before anything of this matter gets abroad. 16 Nov. "this present term."

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Thomas lord Cardinal and Chancellor.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4938. HACKET to HENRY VIII.

Received on the 10th his letters dated the 27th ult. My lady Margaret sends two jurists with Luis Vives; one named Gilles De la Blekerie, and the other Luis Van Scoere. Though they are young, they are great clerks. They will leave for Calais tomorrow. Mechlin, 16 Nov. 1528.

P.S.—Tuke understands his cipher.

Hol. Add. Endd.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4939. HACKET to WOLSEY.

To the same effect. Same date.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

16 Nov.

R. O.

4940. HENRY EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

On Tuesday, 3 Nov., Magnus and Sir Thos. Tempest, the King's commissioners, came to Alnwick, and declared to him their instructions. Sent a letter to the king of Scots to notify their coming. Encloses copy, with his answer. On Saturday after they went to Berwick, and were met by the abbot of Kelso and Adam Otterburn from the king of Scots. They have doubtless notified to Wolsey the conclusion they have taken. On Monday, the 9th, came to Norham to be near the commissioners, and show the Scots that he was ready; also to see the castle of which Wolsey has given him charge, and of which Thos. Wharton, who takes up a plot of the same, will report the state. Sends letters also received from Angus, who afterwards overtook him on his return from Norham, and told him that John Camell (Campbell), uncle to the earl of Argyle, was sent over sea to procure guns in case of war with England. Alnwick, 16 Nov. Signed.

1528.

HENRY EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add. : To my lord Legate. Endd.

16 Nov. 4941. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. II. 241.

B. M.

St. P. IV. 533.

Hears that the king of Scots some time ago sent one Will. Hamilton, who passed by Wolsey on his way to France, to conclude a firm peace with the Emperor, and a marriage with one of the Emperor's sisters. He has now received letters from Hamilton, and has summoned a parliament at Edinburgh on St. Andrew's Day, at which all the Lords are to be present on pain of death, only to send an ambassador to the Emperor and conclude the matter. Wishes to be allowed to come up and declare the state of the Borders. His servant, the bearer, will report how the king of Scots conducts himself by light counsel. 16 Nov.

Hol. Add. Endd.

17 Nov. 4942. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
209.

Received, on Thursday last, the King's letters and yours of the 1st, which I did not show to Wolsey, as I thought it unadvisable to spur him too much, for several reasons : (1) because I had already got assurance of the money ; (2) because I had shown him your advertisement of the 28th ult., touching the mutinies which appeared to be brewing in France (par là), and an article in the King's letters came as if directly to prick him, saying that, thank God, his kingdom was quite united,—which might have been construed as a reproach, so soon after the other matter was announced to them. Communicated, however, the substance of the rest of the letter, and touched pretty sharply on the loss of Gueldres,—on which he made no comment ; and I passed on, that I might not appear to seek a quarrel. I then justified Francis touching Ravenna and Cervin, and made overture to him to send some one to the Pope, if he desired it, with the despatch contained in the King's letter, showing that, although Francis might run some risk of losing the Venetians, and had lost one of his best friends by abandoning him in the truce, at the instance of the King and Wolsey, which he would not have done for all the world besides, he was nevertheless willing to run that risk, if the King's interests required it, provided arrangements were made that if so important an ally was lost another should be obtained, if not as great, at least somewhat to their advantage, viz., that the Pope should enter the league beforehand. To this Wolsey answered that he would consult with the King his master. I think the alternative set forth is not a bad one to present to them, to show them that the wrong is not on your side ; and, if it is so offered to the Pope, no doubt he will accept it. “ Si tiendray terriblement et verray qu'ils m'en respondront.”

I told Wolsey that having been informed by me of the Spaniards who held all this sea, and destroyed all the Frenchmen they found, you had not thought proper to write to me anything of such weight, excepting in cipher, which was the reason I did not show him my letters. Wolsey thanks you in his own name and the King's for the good affection you show them. They have weighed much your advertisement, intending to use such diligence as the case requires, but they beg you to spare no expence to sift the thing to the bottom ; and, if you can ascertain anything more, to send secret word of it through me, promising not to divulge from whom the information proceeds.

They will shortly send Dr. Allen to the Pope, with a commission to treat for peace with your men, if matters are favorable. He has lately been made chancellor and vice-legate of Ireland, with a good archbishopric in that country. I expect he will despatch the matter along with Wolsey's bishopric, and that he will have some charge about the matters which are in treaty, for he is a man who understands them. Wolsey does not easily find means to supply him with money there, and he has asked me to inquire of you truly, in what time and by what means you will remit to seigneur Rence. You will do him a great pleasure if you can convey to him there safely 15,000 or 16,000 crowns. The interest demanded by the banks is enormous, for they say there is no ready money at Rome. Here follow some private money matters.

1528.

As to this marriage, they are waiting for the counsel from Flanders, of whom I wrote to you, which consists partly of Spaniards. I have had a long talk with Campeggio about it, who shows himself obstinate, and I fancy few people know how matters stand (où l'on en est). We had a long discussion, he showing me the difficulties, and asking my opinion at every point. At last we came to this: he said that my opinion was invincible, but the other quite capable of being maintained; but to say that the Pope could not have dispensed, would be to subvert his power, which is infinite; as though he feared that they would take up the matter "par là" (upon that ground?) Wolsey, therefore, seeing this, desired that this should be put to him stiffly, so as to compel him to declare the dispensation ill grounded, rather than fall into the other awkwardness. Whatever I do in this matter I shall not put myself too forward.

On Sunday week* the King made a great representation of this affair to the lord mayor and council of London, who were all assembled, with those of his Privy Council, and a greater part of the lords of the land, and other personages having charge of his affairs in different places. He spoke of the good turns done him by the Emperor, both in the present and the past; and, on the other hand, of the great friendship shown him by Francis, declaring that the scruple of conscience he has long entertained has terribly increased upon him since a French bishop (De Tarbe), a learned man, who was then ambassador here, had spoken of it in his council in terms dreadfully plain, —so that he was anxious to secure the succession of his realm, and wished to learn from his good subjects and friends what was to be thought of it in law and reason; that he was determined to follow entirely what was reasonable, and that if meanwhile (cependant, qu. ce pendant?) any man should speak of it in other terms than he ought to speak of his prince, he would let him know that he is master. I think he used this expression, that there was not a head so dignified (si belle) that he would not make it fly.

A few days ago the Queen said to a familiar servant that they would leave Francis and the king of England alone, and at last the Emperor would come to terms, but in any case they might be sure that what he did would be only to attain his end more easily; which is very much the same language she held once before. Now, six days ago it was reported that Francis and the Emperor were making an agreement, and leaving England in the lurch; but I imagine this is not certain. Another rumor is that you have made truce in Italy and in Spain; also that Mons. de St. Pôl is in France, which people cannot understand, unless it is true about the truce. I believe that in consequence of the threats of the Flemings it is proposed to send to Calais my lord Fennastre (Fitzwalter?) † as lieutenant. As to matters here everyone is shaking. There is some war going on, on the borders of Scotland, for the earl of Angus, whom the King is helping to replace in his lands. A great meeting was to take place at Berwick between ambassadors of both sides at All Saints. Wolsey says he would neither encourage nor discourage Francis to make the overture about don Hercules, and that what

* 8 Nov. Fee Hall.

† This is a suggestion of Le Grand.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

he had said about it was only by way of warning (avis), and that the reasons alleged by Francis were very good. He thought you must already have given charge to lay the matter before the Pope.

Yesterday the King returned to Greenwich,* whither the Queen had gone six days before. She appears much more depressed than she was, but remains firmly determined to make no compromise, and consults much about her matters. I have not yet obtained a quittance from Wolsey for this year's pension, which he is bound to give me, as I do not wish to give him an opportunity for more discussions (pour ne luy bailler au pourchaz d'icelle à quoy s'attacher). London, 27 Nov.†

Fr. Add.

17 Nov. 4943. MARGARET OF SAVOY to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

According to his desire has dispatched the provost of Tongres, vicar general of the cardinal of Liege, and Loys Schore, LL.D., with Loys Vives, for the purposes which he and the Queen, "vostre bonne compaignie," shall desire. Desires credence for them. Malines, 17 Nov. 1528. Signed and sealed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 Nov. 4944. THE SAME to WOLSEY.

R. O.

To the same effect; begging him to use his services in this affair, and give the above the benefit of his aid. Malines, 17 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Fr., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 Nov. 4945. JOHN HACKETT to HENRY VIII.

Galba, B. ix.

136.

B. M.

Yesterday after dinner my Lady sent a post to the King with letters, and the minute of the safe-conduct desired by Luys Vives and the two doctors jurists whom she sends to the Queen, for which safe-conduct they will wait at Gravelines or Calais. Writes in answer to the King's letter of the 27th ult. Letters have lately come from France that St. Pöl has retreated from Italy, and is now at the French court, and that the French have lost this year in Naples and Italy above 4,000 gentlemen and 25,000 common men, but there is no mention of the losses of the Imperialists and Italians. "But how some ever the game goes, it is great pity to have so many Christian people slain, for the contrary opinions of twain; but one thing, that is this, that God suffers punishment of sins, and yet for all that by nature we must die; he can strike invisibly. I pray God save your most noble Highness from his anger, and also from all worldly slander. Amen." "There be some humane ingenys in these parties that presumes to know somewhat from other parties," who think that before August there will be a peace made between the Emperor and Francis, and the Emperor trusts to come to a better appointment than in times past. However, Hackett thinks that "tel quoyde que fault."

My Lady told him that a few days ago a gentleman came from France to her, saying he was sent from my lady Regent without letters of credence to desire her mediation, and if she would keep good hand at it, that the Regent doubted not that all would come to a good end.

* Henry appears to have been staying at Bridewell in the beginning of November, and if the dates of Privy Seals may be trusted he was still there on the 20th, and also on the 22nd and 29th.

† So here, but the date given by the Editor at the head of the document is 17 Nov., which seems to be correct, as the King's declaration to the mayor and council of London, which is said to have been made "on Sunday week," took place, according to Hall, on Sunday, 8 Nov.

1528.

My Lady answered that there were other mediators about beside herself, and, considering the odious writing of the Princes to each other, she thought the matter was not to be so soon pacified. He said that if she would write and send a man of credence to the Regent, she would show him at large of her mind. My Lady answered that she had no lawful cause to write or send to the Regent, except her hearty recommendations; and so the gentleman departed.

Does not write to Wolsey, as he supposes that he will see this letter. It is said that the French king is making great preparation for the wars, but they do not think he will do better than last year. Machlyng, 17 Nov. 1528.

Hol., pp. 3. Endd.

17 Nov. 4946. HACKETT to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Louia Vywen, with the two jurists, is going to England with Ochoa de Salzedo, servant to the Queen. Has written to the King such advice as the lady Margaret showed of a gentleman lately come to her from France, sent by the Regent. Wonders he has had no answer to his former letters. Mechlyng, 17 Nov. 1528.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

18 Nov. 4947. SPAIN.

R. O.

Extract from the letters of the bishop of Worcester (Ghinucci) dated 18 Nov., Burgos.

The Venetian and other ambassadors suspect there is some secret intrigue between the Emperor and the king of France, because, whereas a few days since he had intercepted all the roads to prevent them from sending messages to Italy, he has since altered his determination. He has allowed also the French ambassadors to write into France, contrary to his former prohibition. Moreover, a French courier has come with great expedition to the Emperor, and the French ambassadors say he has brought them no letters; yet the Papal ambassador had letters from Salviati and others from France. The French ambassadors admit they have received letters from persons at Court, which they do not allow to be seen; and the intercourse with Tarbes, Alleman and Emanuel has been more frequent. Tarbes told us he wished to inform the French king of the departure of the Emperor to Valencia; and there is a rumor that Francis is going to Lyons. Alleman has sent to Tarbes a packet of letters for France, and affirmed it would be advisable for the three sovereigns to meet. The Emperor has expressed himself pleased, according to Alleman, with a proposition made by Tarbes for nominating a successor to the duke of Milan.

Lat., pp. 4. In Vannes' hand.

18 Nov. 4948. GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv.

276.

B. M.

Received on Nov. 10, letters from Thomas Badcocke concerning the arrival of Scherece, a cottrell of the earl of Desmond's, on Oct. 15. States the contents of his letter, which he showed to the Papal collector when he passed. Does not think so light a messenger can have so high a commission. Hear from the Court that two gentlemen from the king of Hungary, and a Portuguese, vassal of the French king, are there. Truce is taken on the frontier of Spain and Guyenne, allowing both parties to trade at the ports of the other, but not to go inland; and trading is also allowed at the water of Fontarabia. Motion is made also for Brittany. It is said that the Emperor will go to Italy in spring. Men are being levied secretly and sent away, some say to Italy. Valladolid, 18 Nov. 1528.

P. 1, cipher. Add. Endd.

Ibid. f. 276^a.

ii. Decipher of the above by Tuke. P. 1.

1528.

18 Nov.

Vesp. F. i. 47.

B. M.

4949. JOHN A LASCO, Provost of Gneznaw, to ANTHONY RYNKON, Chamberlain of Francis I.

Has many things to write concerning his master the king of Hungary, but he has no cipher, and it is not safe to write without. The King has left Poland, and entered Hungary on 3 Nov., being received by 8,000 Hungarian horse, with lord Homonnai. He is now at Seged, with a large army sent to his assistance by the Turk, and brought thus far by the help of a Lasco's brother the Palatine. The force can be raised to 60,000 horse in fourteen days, if needful. Ferdinand is said to be raising men at Vienna. All the Hungarian commonalty and nobility are gathering round king John, partly from fear of the Turks, and partly in consequence of his kindness. Andrew Bathori, brother of Naderspan, was taken in a battle, and is detained at the King's castle of Wyhel. The King has won six victories since his arrival. Simon Litteratus destroyed 3,000 infantry and 300 horse of Cassow, taking 20 guns (machina). The Turk has levied another army of 400,000 men, with which he will invade Austria next summer. He will reduce the whole of it unless the King and Ferdinand come to terms before he moves. The former will, however, accept no terms without consulting the Turk. The King's German army under Nicholas Myneckwycz has occupied Swydneyz, and it is hoped that the other cities in Silesia will surrender. The people of Breslaw have written to ask Ferdinand to confirm their evangelical faith (as they call it) by his royal oath, and to free them from the obligation of 400,000 in which they are bound to the Hungarian crown. The people of Cassow have sent to Ferdinand to say that unless he makes peace in two months they will take care of themselves, and not allow their property to be plundered. Peter Perenii, who gave the crown to Ferdinand, has sent secret messengers to ask pardon of the King, promising to bring it back to him. Ferdinand has summoned the assembly of Hungary to meet at Presburg, but no one from Hungary has gone thither, except Turzon and Naderspan. Lubnicz, 18 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

18 Nov.

R. O.

4950. DR. THOMAS BENNET to WOLSEY.

Confirmed the election of the abbess of Wilton on Friday last, 13 Nov. On the 15th she was installed. Defers the inclosure of the nuns, whom he finds very obstinate, till the coming of the King's attorney, in whom they put their trust. If he perform his promise made to your Grace, I trust the abbess and I shall accomplish your pleasure, otherwise we shall have great trouble. Sarum, 18 Nov.

Hol., p. 1. Add. Endd.

18 Nov.

Cal. B. ii. 63.

B. M.

4951. MAGNUS to JAMES V.

With other the King's commissioners, had assembled at Berwick for prorogation of the truce or a further peace, as mentioned in the instructions sent by James to England by Patrick Sinclair. Desirous of his welfare during his minority, his uncle has forborne hitherto to take the advantages he might, notwithstanding the provocations he has received, for the wrongs done upon the Borders. Complains that the Scotch commissioners had only power to conclude a peace for three years, and not determine all causes which tended to the tranquillity of those realms. Without this the English commissioners cannot agree to their demands for a further peace of three years. Hopes he will send home English prisoners, and redress the murders of the lord Dacre's servants, and the wrongs done in Northumberland by the thieves of Liddersdaill. If, as he says, he cannot send ambassadors to England, Henry is content that a diet should be held by commissioners on both sides to make arrangements for the present. His commissioners refuse to entertain their proposition for the restoration to favor of the earl of Angus, who is his true subject. Rebuts sundry reports of ill will between the two Princes. Berwick, 18 Nov.

1528.

Pp. 5. Headed by Magnus: "Copy of a letter sent to the king of Scots from T. Magnus."

18 Nov. 4952. MAGNUS to QUEEN MARGARET.

Cal. B. vii.
106.
B. M.
St. P. iv. 536.

Sends commendations from the duke of Richmond, on whom he has been attending since he left Scotland. Was authorised to meet the Scotch commissioners at the late diet at Berwick,—to the proceedings of which Margaret is doubtless privy, especially the correspondence between Henry and James touching Angus. Hopes Margaret will help that the King's letters be not wholly without effect. Cannot believe but she would be sorry to see Angus pursued to utter destruction. The things laid to his charge can be reformed more easily if she show him pity, especially for the King's sake. Berwick, 18 Nov.

Copy by Magnus.

18 Nov. 4953. MAGNUS to the ARCHBISHOP OF GLASGOW.

Cal. B. vii.
119.
B. M.

Has written to the king of Scotland. Hopes that he will take some means for the redress of those who have been injured by the Scots, and will listen to the advice of his uncle, and his mediation for the earl of Angus. Berwick, 18 Nov.

P. 1. Copy, with heading by Magnus, and the following memorandum below: "The effect of this letter was written by T. Magnus to the bp. of Aberdeen, whereof answer followeth from the said Bishop."

20 Nov. 4954. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, iii.
222.

Is writing to the King of this treaty, about which Wolsey is more urgent every day. He trusts the assurance you have given him. I write more fully by Castillon, who is to leave tomorrow. Yesterday I wrote by another gentleman, who is returning to France. Pray do not forget my bargain for 100 muits, though, no doubt, you will have many other applications. London, 20 Nov.

Castillon will tell you how much your departure is regretted here.

Fr. Add.

4955. JO. CLERK [BISHOP OF BATH] to WOLSEY.

[Cal. E. i. ii. ?]
55.
B. M.

Chatillon desires a charge to the following effect, viz.: 1. The King and "your Grace's" hearty recommendations to the French king. 2. A general report of the same towards the French king and my Lady, his mother. 3. Of the coming of the bishop of Bath with full instructions. 4. Of the preparation of lord Sandes to go over with a good number of men.

Added, in Clerk's hand: Chatillon would gladly depart. Signed.

P. 1.

20 Nov. 4956. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 141.
B. M.

Extract from letters of Gregory Casale to Peter Vannes, dated B[ologna], 20 Nov.

Has received letters from Wolsey and Vannes dated Oct. 30. As he is unable from his illness to travel post to Rome, sends on his cousin, Vincent Casale, who had received instructions when Gardiner was at the Papal court. Has told his brother, the prothonotary, and Vincent, that impertunity is the only way to get anything from the Pope. Will follow them and do his best, but he fears for his success, as the Pope thinks he is completely in the power of the Spaniards, now that Genoa and Savona are taken, and the army of St. Pöl is scattered. The Spaniards and the Colonnas reign at Rome. Has instructed them to solicit certain cardinals for the expedition for Wolsey, and thinks they will be successful in this, as many cardinals are their friends and relations. Is sure the Pope will grant the commission to Wolsey and Campeggio to treat for peace. The cardinal general of the Franciscan order (Quignones) is expected. Jacopo Salviati writes that he brings a commission for a general peace, but Casale thinks only for a particular peace with the Pope. There is great scarcity at Rome. Hopes the King and Wolsey will assist him. Is expecting the 1,000 cr. promised by the King.

1528.

ITALY—cont.

Expects at his house today the bailiff of Rouen, who is returning to France. Does not think this is according to his instructions. Thinks the Pope has dismissed him that he may act according to his own judgment, and that the bailiff may press upon the King the restitution of Ravenna and Cervia, and the preparation of an army for Italy.

St. Pöl's troops are daily deserting him, and all the men-at-arms have returned post to France.

Wishes Vannes to tell Wolsey that he thinks all Francis's expenditure this winter will be useless, for the army is neither strong nor disciplined enough to take Milan or Genoa.

Continued at
f. 144.

A strong army should be prepared in Lombardy, and Germans enrolled three months before, and then at the end of April Milan could be taken either by assault or starvation. A treaty of neutrality should be made with Genoa, for the French can never take it, as the Spaniards are masters of the sea and of Savona. The Pope will never do any good with Andrea Doria unless Ravenna and Cervia are restored or placed in the hands of the kings. If this was done, knows that the Pope would speak differently, and Doria would fulfil his [promises]. The French must compel the Venetians to make the restitution, or place the cities in the King's hands.

Lat., pp. 3.

20 Nov. 4957. NORTHUMBERLAND to ARUNDEL.

R. O.

The earl of Angus has desired him to request Arundel to be good to him in his affairs. Begs he will also show my Lord's grace, secretly, that he believes the King's bastard brother, the earl of Murray, and the bishop of Ross are to go in embassy to the Emperor immediately after Candlemas; and that the King has obtained an aid of the spirituality for the costs of the voyage. Will bring up furniture for his house if Arundel will tell him how much he requires. Alnwick Castle, 20 Nov.

P. 1. Add.: To my bedfellowe, Arrundell.

20 Nov. 4958. G. EARL OF KYLDARE "to my LORD OF THE GREAT SEAL" [OF IRELAND ?].

Vesp. F. xiii.
104 b.
B. M.

Has received his letter commanding him to deliver to John Woulf such stuff of his as remained here to be sold for the behoof of his creditors. It had been ordered by my lord of Norfolk, before Kildare left Dublin, that they should remain in the custody of certain Dublin merchants until the King's pleasure were known. Has written to Norfolk on the subject. Begs that the day of the said John's appearance before the Council, according to his recognizance, may be deferred. Novan, 20 Nov. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

1528.

21 Nov. 4959. ITALY.

Vit. B. x. 142.

B. M.

Extract from letters of Gregory [Casale] to [Vannes], dated Bologna, 21 Nov.

His opinion about the General's (Quignones') commission is confirmed. It is five months since an Imperial ambassador ought to have come to the Pope, and then it was put off till the General's coming. Is sure his commissions have been changed since the change of fortune in Naples, and that he only brings good words for the Pope, to prevent him from adhering to the League, especially as the Imperial agents say that only the smallest quantity of corn can be spared from Sicily. Tadeus will leave tomorrow with the bailiff of Rouen, and will go with him past Cassello, which is held by the Spaniards, and difficult for couriers to pass. Wolsey's last letters were in great danger there. Will start for Rome tomorrow. On his arrival, his brother, the prothonotary, will return to Venice. Advises the King to write a letter of thanks to Jacopo Salviati, and to send a present of plate to the card. S. Quatuor.

Lat., pp. 2. Endd.

21 Nov. 4960. GREGORY CASALE to [VANNES].

Vit. B. x. 142.

B. M.

Has received his letters from Uso, the courier, together with a letter from Wolsey, dated the 2nd inst. The courier has been at great expence and in great danger at Casello. The couriers must be warned not to go to Tortona without a guard from St. P[ol]. Will procure an escort of Papal soldiers for them from Tortona to Piacenza. Fears that the poor, compelled by hunger, will rise against the rich, who alone eat bread, the rest living on vegetables. Is staying here to send Thadeus with the bailiff of Rouen. Thadeus says he has spent more than 900 gold pieces, which sum Casale has given him. Asks him to repay them to Antony Bonvisi. Bologna, 21 Nov. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 2.

. . Nov. 4961. [TAYLER] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 364.

B. M.

" Germyns and have your Grace g that the Emperor is nothing inclined to p[ea]ce nd all other princes of the League all manner of he is surely a prince of high courage. And now the have been with the King, and have determined to make many of the lanceknights be departed from Milan in to th and payments of their wages, and if this good occasion be few people there, if there come new aid to the Casarians difficulty to get Milan than it is now. Out of N 600 footmen and 100 of the light horses of the Casarians

" After the great clade of sickness and death of Frenchmen, t[he] Casarians exalting themself of the victory had, nothing by their have sith that time used great crudelity, and have behedd[ed several] gentlemen, whom they had suspect to be French, and be cyons upon the people, the which hath caused the gentlemen [to be] very desirous of the returning of the Frenchmen, and the s in Naples, whereby the Casarians be greatly diminished thought that the matters of Naples if they be effectuous likely to do well.

" Out of Hungary be come letters to the King that Vivoida Germyns the which were come into Hungary with the Ky[ng]
 Fernando, as more plainly your Grace shall be informed by th[e] ambassador of] Hungary the which cometh shortly in to England, and wi[th] him]

1528.

[TAYLER] to WOLSEY—cont.

Mons. Lange, brother to the bishop of Baiona, the which to the princes there. He is a gentleman well learned, Grace [et Latine. The queen] of Navarre is delivered of a daughter. Madame is so d . . . [that we] cannot speak with her. Furthermore please it your Grace to h[ave a care] what strangers do resort into the King's court and to y[our Grace, for there is] nothing so secretly done in England but the Emperor is shortly [aware of it], insomuch that he knoweth of the receiving and all other Card. Campege both at Cales and in England.

"Our ambassadors in Spain lie from the Court 150 miles, [and hear] no secrets of the Court. And Caesar's ambassadors in E[ngland lie at] the Court, that ever he knoweth what is done. And h[ow they are] there intreated Mr. Sylvester more at large shall show [unto you. More news] we have none at this time; but Almighty Jesu preserve you from the inimicorum visibilium et invisibilium insidiis Nov. 1528."

*Mutilated. Add.3 Nov. 4962. SPAIN.

R. O.

Extract from Ghinucci's letter, dated Burgos, 23 Nov.

The Venetian ambassador and himself are of opinion that some intrigue is going on between the Emperor and the French king, who is very desirous for the liberation of his children, but that the Emperor is not sincere on his part, and is preparing for war.

*Lat., pp. 2, in Vannes' hand.23 Nov. 4963. The BISHOP OF ABERDEEN to MAGNUS.

Cal. B. vii.

117.

B. M.

Has received his letter this 19 Nov. from John Ray, dated Berwick the 18th, desiring his favorable consideration of the proposals made to the king of Scotland by Magnus and other commissioners late at Berwick. Will use his best efforts in that behalf. Does not doubt his letters will be received with favor. The King will have the prisoners unlawfully detained in Liddisdale delivered. Will not undertake to labor in favor of Archibald umquhile earl of Angus, who made promises to the King that he never kept. Two merchants, Francis Bothwill and Adam Hoppare, had a ship taken, laden with fish, in England. Hopes he will help them in their just actions. Adam Otterburn has shown the King Magnus's desire for peace. The dislike to Angus does not proceed from any private cause, as Magnus has been informed. Edinburgh, "the 23rd day of this instant month." Signed.

Pp. 2. Add.: "To my lord archidene of Estiredene." Endd. by Wriothesley: "1528. Letters from the Chancellor of Scotland to Mr. Magnus, dated the 26th day of November. Item, other letters to him from lord Aberdeen, of the 23rd day. Item, a copy of a letter sent by the said Mr. Magnus to the said Chancellor, of the 18th day of November."

24 Nov. 4964. JAMES V. to MAGNUS.

Cal. B. vii.

104.

B. M.

St. P. iv.

535 (note).

Understands by his letters dated Berwick, 18 Nov., and by the report of Adam Otterburn, his continual labor to increase the amity. Acknowledges Henry's kindness to him during his minority. As to the powers given to the commissioners, it was understood by James and his council that there was nothing to be done at this meeting but to take peace for three years, provided due redress were made on both sides; but the commissioners shall have more ample powers, at the next meeting on 9 Dec., to take peace for five years. Has ordered all English prisoners in Scotland, who have been unlawfully taken, to be set free. Hopes Magnus will cause the same to be done on the part of England. Trusts he will not be asked to incline further to the desire of Angus and his accomplices, considering that when he offered them grace for the King's sake, according to the desire of Angus under his hand and signet, they refused it. Strivelling, 24 Nov. Signed.

1528.

Add. Endd.: "Letters from the king of Scots to Mr. Magnus, dated the 24th day of November. A copy of the said Mr. Magnus' answer unto the same."

24 Nov. 14965. MAGNUS to the LORDS OF SCOTLAND.

Cal. B. VII.
109,
B. M.

Adam Otterburne will inform them that the meeting of the commissioners of the two realms is prorogued till the 9th, the peace to be observed till the 15 Jan. next. Has sent word by John Raye, messenger of Berwick, of forays made by divers Scotchmen, called Trombells, and others, household servants to Dan Karre of Farnehirste. A town called Mony Lawes wasted, and many Englishmen spoiled. England will be greatly displeased. Regrets that all his efforts for mediation are thus ended. Berwick, 24 Nov.

Pp. 3. Headed by Magnus: "1528. Copy of a letter sent from T. Magnus to the chancellor and lords of the council of Scotland." Endd.: "Letters sent from the chancellor and council of Scotland to Mr. Magnus, dated at Edinburgh, the 26th day of November. Item, a copy of Mr. Magnus' answer unto the same."

24 Nov. 14966. ——— to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 335.
B. M.

"..... de iis quæ D. tua nobis mandavit, nihil ad
..... Caletî ad multos dies equos meos expectantem, qui
..... trajeceram, non potu . . prius et voluntati tuæ et desi[derio]
..... d aut primum ubi significandum duxi accidit culp
..... spiceris. Regi Ch^{mo} tuo nomine quæ voluisti nunciavi e quæ amplitudini tuæ ac probitati plurimas ob causas debetur respondit quod ad ea quæ adversa evenerant putere magis tribuendum quam suorum militum ignaviæ aut ducis temeritati argumentis declarare conatus est, eaque at. animo ut esse. Ad ea vero quæ circa orum suorum versatur d quam de virtute suorum questus paucis respondit. Ceterum tum M^o sum ..... quam prapenso erga eam animo ac voluntate esses non egere hoc inq me quando M. R. longe antea et hoc potissimum tempore quanta f esses facile demonstraveris. Hæc ad te quam primum possum scribe nihil a me prætermisum esse quo possem meritis erga me t respondere. Ego, D. nostrorum jussu in patrium redeo quam fieri velis studium voluntatem atque observant[iam]"

Faint and mutilated. Headed, in modern hand: "Francia, 24 Nov."
Add.: Ill^{mo}, &c. D. Thomæ Eboracensi, Cardinali ac Legato. Londini, &c.

24 Nov. 14967. The MONASTERY OF WILTON.

Writ to the escheator of Hants and Wilts for the restitution of the temporalities of the above monastery, on the election of lady Isabella Jurdayn as abbess, whose fealty is ordered to be taken by Richard Sudley, clk. Westm., 24 Nov.

ii. Similar writs for eos, Somerset and Dorset, Devon and Cornwall.
Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 2.

24 Nov. 14968. ST. EDWARD'S, SHAFTESBURY.

Congé d'Elire to the prioress and the convent of the above monastery, vice Eliz. Shelford, late abbess, deceased. Westm., 24 Nov.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 3.

1528.

25 Nov.

Cal. B. vii.

107.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 538
(note).4969. QUEEN MARGARET to MAGNUS.

Has received his letter, dated Berwick, 18 Nov. Thanks the duke of Richmond for his commendation. Thinks none of his estate more "convenient" to negotiate than Magnus, and now is the most special time for the King to show his good mind. The letters he has sent to her son show little affection to her, considering the wrongs she sustained from Angus. Wonders that "your said writing contenit our procuracion in favouris of the earl of Angus," considering that since his offences he has given her no cause to continue good princess to him. Notwithstanding that she was exiled for his sake, on her return to Scotland he "behide him rycht uncourteslie" to her, and has so continued, especially during the last three years. Has, nevertheless, forborne to make evil report of him, and superseded executorials and sharp process, which she has against him. Will do him no hurt if he and his friends will be good subjects to her son. Has written often to the King for the promotion of peace, but received no answer. Edinburgh, 25 Nov. Signed.

Add. Endd.: "Letters from the queen of Scots to Mr. Magnus, dated the 25th day of November. Item, a copy of Mr. Magnus' answer to the same."

25 Nov.

Cal. B. vii.

115.

B. M.

4970. GEO. BISHOP OF DUNKELD to MAGNUS.

Archd. Douglas has taken one of the Bishop's servants, named William Creichton, who is now in Norham castle, and "ane barne called John Murray, quhilk was ane chylde, passing to the scule with his maister, and innocent of all crymes." Archd. desires money for their ransom. Begs he will solicit the earl of Angus, and have them delivered. Has seen Magnus's writings to the king of Scotland. Edinburgh, 25 Nov. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

25 Nov.

Cal. B. vii.

116.

B. M.

4971. ADAM OTTIRBURN to MAGNUS.

Has received his letter from Berwick of 18 Nov. On his return, upon communication held, they had agreed to his desire to postpone all private hatred, and secure the peace of the two realms. Edinburgh, 25 Nov. Signed.

P. 1. Endd.: "1528. Letters from certain of the council of Scotland to Mr. Magnus, dated the 25th day of November."

26 Nov.

Cal. B. vii.

110.

B. M.

4972. The CHANCELLOR and COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND to MAGNUS.

Have received his letter touching the attemptates of the Trumbulls. Will write to Dand Ker, of Farnyherst, to make restitution. Hope he will continue his good offices. Edinburgh, 26 Nov. Sealed.

P. 1. Add.

26 Nov.

Cal. B. vii.

120.

B. M.

4973. GAWIN ARCHBISHOP OF GLASGOW to MAGNUS.

Received his letter, dated Berwick the 18th, on Thursday 19 Nov., mentioning the meeting for redress and for peace between the realms. The King has convened his Council, and takes this matter well in hand. Touching Angus, the King has written to Magnus. Edinburgh, Thursday, 26 Nov. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

1528.

26 Nov.

Cal. B. VII.

116 b.

B. M.

4974. SIR WILLIAM SCOTT, of Balwery, to MAGNUS.

Does not write to him at length, because he has appointed to be at Berwick, 9 Dec., for the peace of the realm. Desires remembrance to the captain of Berwick and Master Tempest. Edinburgh, 26 Nov.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: "To my gud auld maister, Maister Thomas Magnus, archdene of Est Ryding, etc."

26 Nov.

S. B.

4975. For GEOFFREY BLYTHE.

To be warden of the college called the King's Hall, in the university of Cambridge, on surrender of a patent of Hen. VII., granting the office to Geoffrey bishop of Lichfield. Del. Westm., 26 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.

27 Nov.

Le Grand, III.
223.4976. HENRY VIII. to COUNT BEAUMONT.

Has sent as ambassadors to Francis for the peace Sir Francis Briant, gentleman of the Privy Chamber, and Peter Vannes, one of the King's secretaries, who are to go on to the Pope. London, 27 Nov. 1528.

Fr. Add.: "A nostre trescher et tres amé cousin, le comte de Beaumont, grant maistre de France."

4977. The POPE.

Vit. B. x. 146.

B. M.

Instructions to Sir Francis Bryan and Peter Vannes, sent to the Court of Rome.

On their arrival they shall communicate their charge in France and at Rome to Gregory Casale, who will inform them of what has been written to him in Oct. and Nov. At their audience with the Pope, after delivering the King's letters, they shall explain their charge to the French king touching peace, and say that the King, hearing of the mission of the bailiff of Rouen, sends them to congratulate the Pope on his return to Rome; to understand the overtures for peace made by Giacomo Salvati; to tell him of the strange answer made by the Emperor to Silvester Darius upon the articles newly devised for removing the difficulties, on which the intimation ensued, which seems to the King merely devised to put suspicion between him and the French king, as there is no word of accepting the overtures; and, finally, a device which the Emperor should know to be impossible, that is, a particular peace with the King, without Francis. They shall also mention the other qualification spoken of by the Chancellor and John Alman, asking what advertisement the Pope has had thereof from Spain. Nothing will be done without the mutual consent of the two Kings, and Henry will do all he can for the furtherance both of particular and of universal peace.

The commission given to Knight, Brian, Casale, Benet and Vannes need not be shown till it is requisite to use it, and they are not to conceal the peace upon any overture that may be set forth till the coming of Knight and Benet, who will bring more ample instructions. They shall, however, not refuse to treat of the peace, if the Pope desires it, and are to proceed jointly with the bailiff of Rouen and the other French agents. They shall tell them the objects of their mission, and say that the overtures of peace by the Pope's hands may conceal perilous consequences, for the Emperor, knowing that his subjects were likely to mutiny in consequence of the treatment of the Pope, in order to bring the Pope and all Italy more into his power, has, by means of the new cardinal, the general of the Cordeliers, "set forth a visage" of restitution of towns, with liberation of the Cardinals who were hostages, "and further amity to be established betw[een the Pope and] the said Emperor, showing some conformity towards at the hands of his Holiness, after such a form and fash[ion as is] to be marvellously suspect." It may, perchance, be to the Pope's benefit, and yet not further the obtaining of peace. M[any] things show this; for instance, the Emperor's saying to Mr. Silvester that if he had a firm conjunction with the Venetians, he cared neither for France nor England;—which proves that he more regards the establishing his affairs in Italy than peace. Besides, it is known that the Emperor and his Chancellor and other councillors trust in a [prophecy] which hath been bruited, that there should be a Pope named [Angelo], who should go barefoot, and do many things superfluous [to] rehearse. And the Emperor “now und[er colour of] amity and restitution of the Pope's towns and pledges [has sent] the said general of the Cordeliers, whose name is Angell, [and who goes] barefoot, as other Observants do, being also by the Emperor's me[ans promoted] to the cardinality, with six or seven great personages of Spay[n] into Italy, with a great power and puissance of men [not] meet or needful for the thing which he pretendeth outewar[dly] to do. What may thereof succeed when he hath once the ov of the Pope's holiness and Cardinals' is hard to judge.” If the Emperor has any such intention, it will be easy for him to subdue the Pope, and forcibly advance the friar to the Papacy, alleging, as he has done before, that he could not rule his own men, and that it was done without his orders. The friar being Pope would live like a friar,—without possessions; and the Emperor, on that pretext, would take all the possessions of the Church, attain the monarchy of Italy, establish his See Imperial in Rome, and hold the See Apostolic and all other Princes in contempt, seeking new occasions to continue the war. If he can so easily bring it to pass, by this demonstration of peace and union with the Pope, all wise men will judge that he will surely do it, notwithstanding any demonstration made to the contrary. It is the more to be feared, for Mr. Silvester writes that the Emperor is preparing a great army to accompany him to Italy, and is practising with the Venetians with great hopes of success.

1528.

The POPE—cont.

The King, therefore, thinks that this thing must be prevented, and that no trust must be put in the Emperor's sincerity, who has hitherto done everything by fraud, and bears extreme malice to the French king, and for his sake to the king of England. He wishes the ambassadors to say that he has charged Brian and Vannes to warn the Pope against trusting the Emperor, and to take good care of his person and estate; for since the Emperor is resolved on obtaining the monarc[hy of Italy], which cannot be without great loss to the See Apostolic, no confidence must be put in any of his demonstrations of friendship for his Holiness, which are craft, subornation, falsity, and circumvention. Whenever he puts himself into the Emperor's power, he will not fail to find this true. The only way by which he can keep himself out of these perils is firm adherence to those princ[es whose] prosperity cannot be but to his surety, and their [misfortunes] to his danger and calamity. The King has caused his ambassadors to declare this to the French king, who has agreed to the King's proposition for a remedy, that they shall contribute to the maintenance of a guard for the Pope's person until it is known whether the Emperor will proceed sincerely to peace or no. Meantime the Pope will remain neutral, and forbear to declare himself; and the Emperor, being disappointed in his craft, will come to peace; the honor and merit of which will be ascribed to the Pope's [endeavors] and prudent demeanor. If then the Emperor would in no way be induced to accept reasonable terms, the Pope might with surety declare against him, with censures of the Church and otherwise. In this case the kings of England and France would never abandon him until he had recovered the pieces detained from him, and his pledges, and had perfectly reintegrated his dignity and estate. The French king thoroughly approves of this, and will give power to his ambassadors to conclude it.

They must desire the Pope to ponder this, and to declare to them his opinion concerning it. He cannot fail to thank the King for his admonition and device, and to follow it; which the ambassadors must by all means procure, so as to alienate him as much as possible from the Emperor, and confirm him in love towards the King, so that he may be the more ready to grant any petition of the King's, as in the great and weighty matter of the divorce. This matter, however, the ambassadors shall not at first mention, as though the premises were the charge committed to them, and for which they were purposely sent. While remaining at Rome for the conducting of the peace, they shall, by great and high policy, secrecy and circumspection, endeavor to investigate the truth of the great and apparent craft and abusion that seems to have been used in disappointing the direct and due course of truth in the decision of the matter of divorce by process and judgment. Some marvellous falsity and corruption must have been used, which ought to be perfectly tried and punished; for, as was written to Sir Gregory in the last letters, there has been exhibited on the Queen's behalf an authentic copy of a brief, of which she affirms the original to be in the Emperor's hands, passed by pope Julius and subscribed by Sigismund, then scribe or secretary apostolic, containing such words as might seem totally to remove all the faults found in the dispensation of pope Julius "remaining in the King's hands, [the like of which] have not been heard of to have been found or [seen at] any time either in king Henry the VII's days, either in the court of Rome, in England, Spain or [elsewhere], till now of late, that by such manner and circumstance [as] heretofore hath been declared unto the Pope's holiness t[he] same happened to insure and be brought in question, and consequently was thing far unlike to have been thus in those special and material points only provid[ed] for by pope July by a brief apart from the princip[al] bull, of the same date as the bull was, and tha[t] brief to be only in Spain, and none like in this [country]." For, as appears by the treaties between Henry VII. and Ferdinand, both Princes were bound to obtain bulls and dispensations in most available form, and after one sort, order, a[n]d tenor], so that if any doubt in preamble, narration or of the bull passed had or cou[ld have] been found, it is evident that either Prince would have had the bull reformed or the supplement thereof, and that it would not have been in one Prince's hands or knowledge alone, but would have been provided for by both. This brief, however, has never been mentioned or heard of in England, which causes manifest suspicion of forgery. Sir Francis and Vannes will take with them a book containing the reasons for doubting its authenticity. They, with Sir Gregory, must make careful search to find out the truth, but secretly, lest the other party, knowing it, find means to correct the faults and to corroborate the falsity. They had better make use of some trusty person among the scribes, writers [of the] registers, making sure of him either by ready money or continual entertainment. The records of popes Julius, Leo and Adrian must be searched to see whether any alterations or erasures have been made, or whether the handwriting or anything else causes suspicion. The scribe whom they engage must study the handwritings of Sigismund and the writers under him and subsequent to him; and must compare the seal of the annulus Piscatoris in Julius's days with those of his successors, as each seal is broken on the Pope's death. He must try to discover whether any one now in the Court says that he wrote the brief in Julius's time; for if so, being a scribe, he may find out from him what no one else could. He must notice who in the Court are Imperialist, and what agents they have had since this matter of matrimony has been brought in question, and who has penned their causes, especially about the Card. S. Quatuor, when the Pope was delivered out of captivity, and who wrote the despatches of the general of the Cordeliers and other agents of the Emperor. Any knowledge they gain must be sent in authentic form by some sure man in post. Great care must be used both in searching, proving and sending information of the forgery; for persons may be implicated to whom the matter could not be imputed without further consultation between the King and his Council. But if it has been done by the craft of the cardinals, officers, or others, they shall inform the Pope of it, that he may the more easily grant the commissions which they are sent to obtain. If they find that the matter has been so craftily handled that they cannot prove the forgery, but that it seems to have a visage of truth, they shall keep all their doings secret, sending information of what they have done, in cipher, [and proceed no] further till the coming of Mr. W[illiam Knight,] the King's principal secretary, who will bring the letters of both Legates to the Pope, a copy of which is sent to Brian and Vannes, and who will be amply instructed concerning further proceedings.

1528.

1528.

The POPE—cont.

Meantime the ambassadors must secretly retain the best advocates whom they can find in Rome, by secret rewards and conven[ti]on, and must learn from them whether, if the Queen can be induced to enter into "la pe (sic, qu. laxa?) religion," the Pope may, ex plenitudine potestatis, dispense with the King to proceed to a second marriage, with legitimation of the children; and, although it is a thing that the Pope perhaps cannot do in accordance with the divine and human laws already written, using his ordinary power, whether he may do it of his mere and absolute power, as a thing in which he may dispense above the law; what precedents there have been, and how the Roman court shall define or determine and what it doth use or may do therein, so that no exception, scruple or doubt may be hereafter alleged in anything that shall be affirmed to be in the Pope's power. Similarly, as the Queen will probably make great difficulty in entering religion, or taking the vow of chastity, means of high policy must be used to induce her thereunto; and as she will perhaps resolve not to do so unless the King will do the like, the ambassadors must find out from their counsel if, to ensure so great a benefit to the King's succession and realm, and to the quiet of his conscience, he takes such a vow, whether the Pope will dispense with him for the said promise or vow, discharging him clearly of th[e same, and] "thereupon to proceed ad secunda vota cum legitima[tione prolis] as is aforesaid."

Furthermore, to provide for everything, as well *propter conceptum odium as for the danger that may ensue by continuing in the Queen's company, "whose body his Grace for marvellous great and secret respects is utterly resolved and determined never to use," if they find that the Pope will not dispense with the King to proceed ad secunda vota while the Queen is alive in religion, but that she will still be reputed as his wife, they shall inquire whether the Pope will dispense with [the King] to h[ave duas] uxores, making the children of the second marriage legitimate as well as those of the first; w[hereof] some great reasons and precedents, especially of the Old Testament, appear. The ambassadors being thus secretly informed of what the Pope may do, will be more ready at the coming of the secretary and Benet to carry out their instructions. Meantime they must not fail to send information in cipher to the King and Wolsey by post. They must be very circumspect in making searches and engaging advocates and counsel, that the King's cause may not be published, always propounding it as another man's; by which means the lawyers will speak more freely, without respect of the Emperor.

During their conferences with the Pope, they must impress upon his Holiness the great love the King bears to him, and his desire for his weal and for the maintenance of the dignity of the See, for which he has spent more money than all the princes of Christendom, and he is therefore worthy of "thank reward of the graces of the Church," and of due respect and consideration.

As his merits towards the See are incomparable, so the treasure of the See and Church ought in the most liberal and abundant manner to be extended to him, "and not to be restrai[ned] or minced with the quiddities and discrepant opinions [of the] laws." As his Holiness knows how much the King takes to heart the insufficiency of his marriage with the Queen, and that such great consequences depend upon it, they must say that he cannot do too much for so noble and loving a prince, and ought to show him a special and singular grace herein, corresponding to the excellence of his acts and merits; "beseeching therefore his Holiness, on my lord Cardinal's behalf, most humbly, and in most affectuous wise upon his knees, to have that thing in his special recommendation," and to act so that the King and his friends, with their nobles and subjects, will be encouraged to act for the Pope and for the Holy See, thinking that their labors will be well employed. Mr. Peter shall say as of himself to the Pope, that he, being an Italian, desires more fervently than another the weal of the Pope and of the Holy See, and is compelled to tell the Pope frankly that if he, continuing in fear of the Emperor, delays the accomplishment of the King's desire, and to impart to him bounteously of the treasure and graces of the Church and See Apostolic, it will alienate from him the King, so that he, with many other princes, his friends, with their nobles and realms, will withdraw their devotion and obedience from his Holiness and the See, studying how they may repay his ingratitude; and he therefore begs him not to cast away the heart of this virtuous prince, who cannot fail, when peace is had, to have such power that he will be able in the amplest way to recompense his friends and acquit the contrary. Signed at beginning and end by the King.

* Printed omnem, St. P. vii. 136 (note).

1528.

Pp. 25, mutilated.

28 Nov. 4978. The DIVORCE.

R. O.

Instructions for Knight, Bennet, Sir Fras. Bryan, Sir Gregory de St. P. VII. 117. Cassalys and Vannes.

Considering the age and infirmity of Knight, Bryan and Vannes are sent to the French king, and thence to Rome, with ample instructions. Bennet and Knight are to come after, and, joining with the Master of the Rolls and Cassalys, are to proceed to the accomplishment of the causes for which they are sent. Knight, Bennet and Tayler are to repair to the French court, and inform the French king of what has been done. Knight shall exhibit to him the copy of the breve of pope Julius, as if their charge to the Pope was no other than to procure the original, considering it is more fit to be in the King's hands than to be in Spain. They shall not exhibit any suspicion, by which the French king may infer that, if the breve were a good one, "the King's grace is sorry and not contented therewith." They shall ask him to promote the King's cause at Rome, and obtain letters from him by good dexterity and policy, "so couched with general words thought very effectual, as, though the French king be not made privy of any secret pursuit to be made to the Pope's holiness for reprobation of the said breve," yet the general tenor of the letters shall be interpreted to the advancement of the King's desires. They shall get the French king to write to his ambassadors at Rome to the same effect. These letters are to be presented to the Pope.

They shall inform Francis of a treaty between the Emperor and the king of Scots for a marriage between that King and the queen dowager of Hungary, and that a parliament has been called together in Scotland for that purpose. They shall get Francis to admonish the king of Scotland, exhorting him to beware of doing anything that might tend to the diminution of the good affection between the two kingdoms, or assisting Albany to return to Scotland. They shall make it appear to my lady of Savoy that their proceedings are guided by her advice.

On reaching Rome, they shall inquire of the other ambassadors what has been done in discovering the falsity of the breve; and if this is clear, they shall repair to the Pope, and deliver the King's letters and those of the two Legates. As it would not be fit for the King, as a party, to enter into such specialities as the ambassadors may use, after telling the Pope that the Queen had sent a copy of this breve to Campeggio, they shall say that the King, having his mind fixed on the certainty of eternal life, hath in this cause "put before his eyen" the light and shining brightness of truth, as the best foundation for the tranquillity of his conscience, knowing, as the Apostle says, that there is no good foundation except that which Christ has laid;—that the King, finding his conscience touched by plain suspicion of falsity in the breve, can recur to the only fountain of remedy on earth, the Pope himself.

1528.

The DIVORCE—cont.

They shall desire him to set aside all vain allegations, and in this matter bring the truth to light; and, considering the importance of the thing, how many may be touched by it, &c., urge, that by consenting to put an end to the cause, as he may do by the plenitude of his power, all suspicions may be removed; that nothing can be a higher indignity than that so noble a prince should be frustrated of his expectation by the falsehood of one most wicked person forging the Pope's breve; and that it rests with the Pope alone to decide, whether, in his opinion, the breve is false and counterfeit. They shall urge the suspicions which appear on the surface of it; sc., its being of the same date as the bull, the manner in which it was obtained, its preservation in Spain and not in England, the slander which it will throw upon the Pope, as coming from the Emperor, with whom he is at enmity; that approval of the breve will create suspicion, and the reprobation of it none, but rather clear the fame of many noble men, &c.

They shall urge further that the breve is directed to the King and Queen, but no record of it can be found in England, although the bull is here. Arguments against the probability of its having been stolen or sent away. Its variation from the bull in particular sentences. Technical objections to its style and date. They shall urge it would be more reasonable to consider it as false than as genuine; that the Legates would have required the Emperor to have the original exhibited before them; but as he might allege they have no jurisdiction beyond the limits of their legation, it might occasion delay. Therefore they shall urge the Pope to write peremptorily to the Emperor in that behalf, to send the breve within three months.

They shall also obtain a commission decretal to the Legates to pronounce the breve forged; of which decretal a minute is sent by Knight and Bennet. If he refuse to send the breve to England, a minute for the decretal has been devised accordingly; and also a third form, in case the Emperor refuse to exhibit it within three months. Instructions as to what they shall do in the event of obtaining any of the said decretals.

If, after great solicitation and rehearsal of the urgent reasons in Latin, delivered to Knight and Bennet, the Pope will not consent, they shall deliver to his Holiness the other letters of the two Legates desiring the avocation of the cause, and a written promise from the Pope to give sentence in the King's favor, on certain grounds, of which a summary is sent; e.g., that the Emperor will not send the brief, that the brief is false on the face of it, and that the King is in great perplexity and his health in danger, &c. But they shall obtain a promise from the Pope before the avocation. They are not, however, to consent to this course until the hope of obtaining the commissions be desperate; but, above all things, they are to make sure of the Pope's promise.

If they fail in these two purposes, rather than they should return empty-handed, they shall attempt to carry the device mentioned in the instructions given to Brian and Vannes, enabling the King to contract another marriage, if the Queen can be disposed "to enter lax religion." They shall use their dexterity to obtain a commission for that purpose. "Yet to the more cautele, and to show that nothing shall be pretermitted on the King's behalf which man's wit can excogitate or devise, for lack of one thing to devise another, to the surety of the King's succession, and remedying of the inconvenients that of the doubts of the King's marriage may insurge, the King's said orators, being first duly informed, by inquiry made before and otherwise, how far the Pope's power and authority may extend, and finding the same to be feasible for setting forth the overture mentioned in the said instructions de duabus uxoribus, and because they deal with matter right rare, new and strange, so much the more the King's said orators ought to see substantially to the fundament and ground which is to be taken to come unto such requisition and desire."

1528.

They will find the preamble of a decretal for that purpose sent by Knight and Bennet, showing by examples from the Old and New Testaments the reasons for such proceeding on the part of the Pope. They are to note whether the Pope is inclined to oblige the King, so that if this mode is not feasible the Pope may adopt some other. In that event, they are to use wisdom in trusting the King's affair to his Holiness; urging him that the King is resolved on a second marriage, and will not suffer his hope to be frustrated.

Whatever they obtain must be competent for the Pope to grant, and available for the purpose desired.

Sends papers touching the peace and the proposition of the Emperor. Directs them how to proceed in this matter.

In Derby's hand, mutilated. Endd.

4979. VANNES' INSTRUCTIONS.

R. O.

"Capita rerum expediendarum."

1. To expedite the commission for compulsory powers (compulsorialibus) to the Legates. 2. To expedite the decretal commission in one or other form. 3. Avocation of the cause, on a written promise from the Pope that within two or three months at most sentence be pronounced for the King. 4. Declaration of the Pope by bull that the marriage ab initio was, for reasons perfectly satisfactory to himself, not a true one. 5. That if the Queen enter a monastery, the Pope may enable him to contract a second marriage. 6. For the King to marry two wives, with a legitimation of the issue of the second. 7. The words to be uttered by Vannes to the Pope, in the event of the King not being satisfied. 8. Of bringing over friends to the King's party, &c. 9. Hiring advocates. 10. Making a scrutiny with all caution, so that the matter be not divulged. 11. Writings from Julius to Clement VII. 12. Letters of Campeggio to Salviati. 13. Presents and an annual pension to be given him, in the event of bringing the King's cause to a successful issue. 14. Gaining over the cardinals to the King's side, especially S. Quatuor. 15. To be diligent in writing. 16. To make strict inquiry into the proceedings of the general [of the Observants]. 17. That the ambassadors bring copies of all that is here conceived. 18. Commission of the peace. 19. Letters of the King and the Legates to the Pope. 20. Exchange of money.

Lat., pp. 2. In Vannes' hand. Endd.: "Capita rerum expediendarum Romæ per Petrum Vannem."

Vit. B. x. 197.

B. M.

2. Another copy of the above. Mutilated. Printed in Pocock's Records of the Reformation, i. 189. This copy contains two small additions in Wolsey's hand, not found in the preceding, and likewise the article "De rebus Scotiæ," &c. The words added to the title, "ex instructionibus," &c., are in a more modern hand.

1528.

4980. [WOLSEY and CAMPEGGIO to CLEMENT VII.]*

Vit. B. XI. 235.

B. M.

Burnet, i.ii.24.

Expounded by their previous letters the state of the cause here. Have since endeavored by persuasion to cause one party to yield to the other, but, that being in vain, have discussed the method of trying the case. The Queen has exhibited a copy of the brief of Julius II., dated at the same time as the bull, but they suspect its genuineness. Besides its unexpected appearance on such an occasion, it seems incredible that such a document should have been obtained. The King, therefore, urges the production of the brief; which they also approve, and will endeavour to procure. It will be necessary to grant them an additional power to summon all kings and others to exhibit the brief, without which the cause cannot be concluded. On obtaining it, they will proceed to the investigation, and the King will offer no opposition. People will always suspect the truth of the brief, because, although it is of such importance to the King and the kingdom, it has never been heard of before, and no account of it has been found in the royal archives. It is not likely that there should be more care in Spain of what concerned England than in England itself, nor that any one could have supposed that such a dispute would have arisen 25 years afterwards, there being no memory of it, as we have before said, in England. If they compare the slenderness of the brief with the pregnant words of the bull, and the care to exclude all exceptions, and listen to what can be said on both sides about apostolic rescripts, they fear lest they will endanger the authority of the Holy See, and lessen their own dignity. Disapprove strongly of having to hear arguments about the validity of apostolic letters, and they therefore desire him, if the brief is exhibited, and its genuineness or falsity is not apparent, to avoke the cause to himself, and settle it, for it cannot be longer protracted without danger to the kingdom and to the dignity of the Church. Hope that the King will acquiesce in this, trusting, according to his Holiness's writing, that he will be at length freed from this marriage, in which he thinks he cannot remain either by human or divine law, for the reasons already explained to his Holiness by the King's ambassadors. If the Pope prefers to grant a decretal, they will prepare the King's mind for this. A form for the decretal is sent to the English ambassadors. Meanwhile, the Pope can still try the mind of the Queen, and by letters and messengers urge her to enter religion. They consider many things of this kind, for the good of the kingdom and the King, who patiently waits for the Pope's assistance, though oppressed by great anxiety. Enlarge on the King's troubles, and the necessity of the divorce. Those who think the King is moved by hatred of the Queen, or by the desire of another wife, err greatly. As neither disagreeable manners nor the despair of future offspring could impel the King's mind to hatred, so no one could think him to be so weak as, for the pleasures of sense, to wish to break a connexion in which he has spent his life since his youth. He is influenced by a fear of divine law and a respect for human law.

The King does not wish to determine anything on his own judgment, but leaves it to the Holy See, from which he expects a requisite remedy. If he must have recourse to some other aid, it will be all over with this King and kingdom. Seditions and tumults will spring up, and the Apostolic dignity will be destroyed. The nobles and people are extremely angry at being kept in this suspense, and observations are made which cannot be repeated without horror. We use all our endeavours to avoid these dangers, and dread what the effect may be if a favorable answer be refused. He will learn more by the bearers.

Lat., Vannes' hand, draft.

* The reader must be upon his guard against supposing that any of these drafts were really sent or submitted to the persons to whom they are addressed. They are, probably, like other papers on the great question of the Divorce, devices which occurred to the King or Wolsey from time to time, and might or might not be used as occasion served.

1528.

4981. [INTENDED ADDRESS OF THE LEGATES to the QUEEN.]*

Vit. B. xii. 64.

B. M.

Pocock, I. 212.

She will doubtless wonder why they [come to] her, as in times past they have not done so except when she commanded them; but since they last waited on her they have heard that [the King's] grace and his council have been advertised by men of honor and credence that certain ill-disposed persons intend to conspire against him and the Legate, which is thought to be done for her sake or by her occasion, by such as be the fa[vorers] of the Emperor. Think it their duty to inform her thereof; for if anything should be attempted against the King's person or the Legate, it would be imputed to her, even if she were not guilty, and would be her utter undoing. The King takes this very earnestly, and doubts the more because she does not show such love to him, neither in [nor] yet out of bed, as a woman ought to her husband. "What was [in] bed between both your Graces we pass over," but openly she does not behave suitably; for though the King is in great pensiveness on this account, she is not so, but shows many signs and tokens to the contrary.

1. She exhorts other ladies and gentlemen of the court to dance and pass time, though it would be better for her to exhort them to p[ray] that God would set some good end in this ma[tter].
2. She shows no pensiveness in her countenance, nor in her apparel, nor behavior.
3. She shows herself too much to the people, rejoicing greatly in their exclamations and ill obloquy, and by beckoning with her head and smiling, which she had not been accustomed to do in times past, rather encouraged them in their so doing than rebuked them, as she ought to have done.
4. She ought to have informed the King of the brief which she pretends to have had for a long time, and not to have kept it close, for the exhibition thereof might have given much ease.

Considering all this, the King cannot persuade himself that she loves him as she ought, but that she rather hates him; and therefore his Council think it not safe for the King to be conversant with her either at bed or at board, specially after the beginning of the process. Think that if the King has such fear, he may lawfully withdraw from her company, and for like suspicion he will not suffer the Princess to come into her company; which should be a very grievous thing to the Queen, as the Princess should at her age be near her for her better education.

They should then, as occasion may fall, urge her, as in times past, to enter into religion; and if she still makes difficulty, they may say that perhaps she thinks that if she did so the King would marry some other; but she need not fear this, for the King could not by law take another wife during her life, nor could the Pope [dispense] with him to do so. They may advise her to go boldly to the King; and with humble submission and prayer that he will be good to her, she may offer to do anything, entering into religion or any other thing; so that both their Councils will say that it will be to the ease of his conscience, the surety of him and his succession, and the weal of his realm, and not contrary to the laws of God and the Church. This submission and offer will greatly stir the King to have compassion on her. The King would be contented with her entering religion on condition that if sentence is not given against the marriage she may then come again out of religion. If she shows herself to be conformable to what may be devised by both their Councils, she will greatly move the King to be good and gracious unto her; but if not, she will cause him to be much more angry than hitherto.

Pp. 3, mutilated. Added by Clerk †: Quod stulte facit, si contendit cum Rege. Quod male successit ipsi in foetibus. De brevi et suspicione falsitatis. Quod diu habuit breve. Quem misit pro brevi? Quas literas scripsit per eum et ad quem? Quis attulit breve? Et an habuerit alias literas simul?

* See note on preceding page.

† Not Wolsey's hand, as Mr. Pocock thinks.

1528.

28 Nov.

R. O.

4982. CLEMENT VII. to CARDINAL WOLSEY.

Requesting that the price of a certain cargo of alum belonging to Sebastian Sauli, now in the hands of Antonio Bonvixi, of London, may be delivered to Pasquale and Jeronimo Spinuli. Rome, 28 Nov. 1528, pont. 6.
Vellum, Lat. Add.

4983. ANTHONY CAVALLARY to [WOLSEY].

R. O.

Respecting alum in the possession of Sauli, a bankrupt merchant. Spinola claims it, and says Wolsey will soon have it delivered to him. Sauli has never paid the Pope's agent for it, and therefore it belongs to them. Any sale made by him is fraudulent. Expects daily a commission from the papal agents to settle the matter. Sauli bought the alum for 6,000*l.*, to be paid over a long period, and it is now worth 12,000*l.* Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Endd.

4984. ANTHONY BONVISI to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Requesting his protection against Philip de Senis, executor of Augustine Ghisi, who proposes to infringe a contract about a cargo of alum made with his consent by his co-executor dom. Sigismundus. Refers to the testimony of Russell and Wolsey's secretary, Stephen,* when they were at Rome. Not signed.

Lat., pp. 2. Endd.

29 Nov.

R. O.

4985. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

Received his letter, dated Bridewell, 24th inst., stating that my lord Chamberlain and Sir Ric. Weston would be sent as commissioners to Calais; and also that the vintners and constables should forbear sending to the King. Had taken measures to recall them. Found them somewhat heedless; "but it is an old saying that hunger causeth the wolf to leap out of the wood, and, also, when he returneth to the wood, he careth not who doth look in his tail." Wolsey knows of what nature the French nation is, better than Wingfield himself. Is told that had it not been for the English angels, peace would have taken place long since. On Friday last John Joachim and others arrived here out of England, and a courier of Flanders. He said he was now in England to take account of such sums of money as the King's highness "hath borne quarterly with the French king in his wars of Italy," and he carried with him a sum for that purpose, packed in divers "beesaschis" carelessly enough. Calais, 29 Nov. 1528.

Hol., pp. 3. Add. Endd.

30 Nov.

4986. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. II. 123.

B. M.

St. P. IV. 534.

Understanding that in consequence of reports made in Scotland by Geo. Douglas, Henry would not make peace with his nephew unless Angus, the said George, and Archibald Douglas were comprehended, the young King was so perplexed and pained that Angus should be well received by his uncle that "he braste oute of weping that the teers ca[me] rennyng downe by his chekes," and the lords of the Council were greatly moved. Not knowing what report the English commissioners might have made on coming home, wrote to the king of Scots the purport of Henry's instructions to himself and others, to induce him to put more confidence in Henry, by showing him what advantage England might have taken for redress of wrongs. Encloses a copy of his letter and of the answer of the king of Scots. Hearing that the Queen relented towards Angus, wrote also to her, the archbishop of Glasgow, the bishop of Aberdeen, and Mr. Adam

* Gardiner.

1528.

Otterbourne. Sends copies. Thinks James received the said [Earl], his brother and uncle, upon their submissions, copies of which had been sent to Magnus by Wolsey, and the Earl afterwards "revoked the same, a[s] is" alleged to be proved by his own handwriting." As to the treaty, the term of years, delivery of prisoners, and redress, Wolsey will learn all from the said answers. Little favor is yet shown to Angus, "the said Earl being a good, honorable, and an hardy man, and, I suppose of truth, totally ordered not of himself but by his friends," especially by his brother George, as Archibald is by his wife, "which twain have brought them all to this trouble and business." Since the Scotch commissioners were here many attempts have been made upon the East Marches by the inhabitants of South Tivedaill, supposed to be favorers of Angus. Had written to the Chancellor and lords of the Council on the subject. His remonstrance was well received. Transmits copies of his letter and their answer. The Council being thus in trouble have made friends again with the archbishop of St. Andrew's. Knows not how he will lean, but will soon ascertain. Angus, with his brother and uncle, was with him yesterday, and asked to have 200 or 300 men of the Borders with him into Scotland. Declined, as having no authority to give them, and reminded him of the goodly reward he had delivered for the use of his brother George, by which, with friends in Scotland, he might easily have 300 or 400 fellows at command, besides those about him, who, when all together, are not more than 100 or sixscore persons. Angus consulted with him how to show his service to the Scotch king. He intends, on the coming of the commissioners, to see what can be done by friars or other like personages. Magnus thinks it will be useless without the King's mediation. The result will be known on their next meeting here on the 9th Dec. If answer be required to any of the above matters, begs that it may be sent speedily. Will delay the Scotch commissioners here for the purpose. Berwick, 30 Nov.

P.S.—After closing this letter, Wolsey's letter, dated Durham Place, 23rd inst., arrived. Will take measures for the execution of the King's pleasure. The latter part of his letter being important, will experiment in Scotland within these three or four days by his letters, which he will take care shall come to the knowledge of the King and Council.

Add. Endd. : "1528. Letters from Mr. Magnus," &c.

4987. JAMES V. to MAGNUS.

Cal. B. VIII. 1.

B. M.

St. P. IV. 547

(note).

"Thir ar the speciale poyntis eftir inseywyng, gevin by credens to Maister Thomas Magnus, archidiacone of Estriding, till schaw to our derrest uncle the king of Ingland."

1. Hopes the King will not think he was displeased when he wrote last, though he was surprised that for all he had written Henry took no account of Angus's treasons. 2. When, by the King's advice, James obtained possession of his authority, Angus was made principal of the Lords Regents, but he removed the other lords, except such as assisted him in his evil deeds, and kept the King under his guidance two years, during which time many dangers occurred to the King and realm through him. 3. He twice in one year "disponit our person" to battle against our will, when there were slain the earl of Lennox, the laird of Cesford, and others. 4. He conspired the King's own slaughter, as will be proved by the noblemen of the realm. 5. He allowed thieves to go unpunished and to increase, so that they cannot easily be destroyed; and they made many attempts to break the truce. 6. He diminished the King's influence with other princes by illtreatment of ambassadors. 7. He made his uncle the King's treasurer, and promoted his kinsmen to James's prejudice. 8. Last Easter, James called Angus and his friends before himself and five or six of his Council, urging them to reform the abuses so much complained of; on which they, fearing punishment, endeavored to put to death several of the King's servants; to accomplish which they feigned to make a raid upon the thieves and broken men. On this the King withdrew to Stirling for his safety till a convention was held in Edinburgh for reformation of the premises. 9. James has done everything by the counsel of the wisest lords. 10. Begs Magnus to show what appointment he lately offered to Angus and his friends at Henry's intercession, which will appear by the labors made in that behalf by the minister of the Friars Observants; also to represent the displeasure he did to James on his return from Tamtalloun by murdering the captain of his foot band, and taking part of his munitions. Thinks Henry will admit that he cannot now with honor do otherwise than expel Angus and his friends from the realm. It will be time to intercede for them afterwards. Signed.

1528.

JAMES V. to MAGNUS—cont.

Nov.
Cal. E. II. 144.
B. M.
Chronicle of Calais,
206.

4988. JOHN CHEYNY to LORD [SANDS].

"Pleaseth your Lordship [I received a letter directed] unto your Lordship the 22d day of which letter I did send unto Mr. Wat . . . [desiring] him to see it conveyed unto you with delyg[ence, but the] letter went not at that passage, which w[as on] Sunday last, and since then hath been no pass[age]."

Sir Fras. Brian has been at Calais these . . . [d]ays. Sent [Sands'] spy, Gyles Kevall, into Flanders and to Dunkirk, where he saw a writing, of which a copy is enclosed, set on the church doors, and he heard that it was done all through Flanders. On his return, he met at Gravelines with a Spanish soldier of the castle, who had married his wife's sister, and they drank together. The captain sent for them, and asked Gyles what he wanted in those parts. He said he had been at a pilgrimage of Our [Lady] a mile out of Dunkirk. "The captain swa[re that] and he should do him right, he should hang [him] by the neck, and send his captain word th[at he] had done him true justice," and ordered him to leave the town.

[Fri]day the 27th inst., my lord [Deputy] of Calais sent for him and the bailly, asked them for news, and bade them take heed to their charges, for there was to be war with the Emperor, and he heard that 30,000 Alm[ains] were coming, and that Brian said that the F[rench] king would take part with England * * *

Has sent into all the parishes to see what store of grain there is, and to order them to be ready to bring it into the castle at a day's warning.

Are in want of wheels and stocks [for the artillery]. The bridge from the Pyrtons bulwark is so weak that no can go over it. Thos. Fowler has promised to see to it, and asks your Lordship to obtain more money for repairs, especially for a new brewhouse, as the old one is [not likely] to stand long. All [Sands'] company are in good order, and willing to do their duties. Desires to be recommended to his lady and to Sir Richard Guynes, . . . Nov.

Has but five gunners, and there is no salt, which must be provided. Signed.

Pp. 2, mutilated.

4989. WARHAM to WOLSEY.

Otho, E. XI.
28.
B. M.

Proposing a proclamation prohibiting any person who possesses harness from parting with it to any other persons but [such as he shall] answer for under pain of imprisonment [and forfeiture] of all his goods. "At my manor, day of Nov." Signed.

Very mutilated, pp. 2. Add.: To, &c. my lord cardinal of York and legate de latere.

4990. LODOVICUS VIVES to ———.

R. O.

Is ordered to state his communication with the Queen. Hears great complaints of the Emperor, that he has violated human law by taking the ambassadors of many nations ; but this is not less an outrage to compel any one to divulge what was secretly entrusted to him, especially a servant trusted by a mistress whose fidelity to her husband is undoubted. Not that it would injure any one to relate it, even if it were published on the church doors. But the example is a bad one, for a great part of the intercourse of life rests upon the faith of secrecy, which, if destroyed, everyone will be on guard against a companion as against an enemy. But since he is compelled, will state these things, especially as they seem more worthy of praise than blame. Last May when Vives asked leave of the King to return home, the King asked when he was going. Vives replied, he would go when Henry thought fit. After the hunting, said he, that is at Michaelmas. To this Vives agreed. The Queen at the same time requested him that he would this winter teach the Princess Latin. Accordingly, to please both King and Queen, he returned hither on 1 Oct. The Queen, afflicted about this controversy as to her marriage, as she thought him well read in matters of morals and consolation, began to open to him as her countryman, who spoke the same language, her distress that the man whom she loved more than herself should be so alienated from her, that he should think of marrying another, which was the greater grief the more she loved him. Vives replied that it was an argument that she was dear to God ; for thus He was accustomed to exercise his own, to the increase of the highest virtues. Can any one blame him for attempting to console her ? As they went on, they spoke more warmly, and proceeded to the discussion and examination of the cause. What the King has since done in this affair, the Queen could not know ; it was only rumored that the cause was referred to Rome. The Queen then desired him to ask the Imperial ambassador to write to the Emperor to do what was just with the Pope, lest she should be condemned without being heard. The ambassador promised he would do so. Whether the Emperor has received the letters we know not. Who will not admire the Queen's moderation ? When others would have moved Heaven and earth, she merely seeks from her sister's son that he will not let her be condemned unheard. This is all. Nor do I willingly meddle with the affairs of princes.

1528.

Hol., Lat., pp. 2.

Nov. 4991. CHARLES V. to HENRY VIII.

Add. MS.
28,577, f. 308.
B. M.

Has always preferred the common weal to his private interests. Has, therefore, neglected nothing to restore peace to Christendom, when the king of France had disturbed it. Has had first recourse to force of arms in order to subdue the king of France. God favoured his cause. Routed several times the French armies, drove them out of Italy, and took at last the King himself prisoner. When that was done he used clemency towards the king of France, and set him at liberty. Thought that he would be grateful. When his clemency also failed to reconcile the king of France, there remained no other way to him to avoid further effusion of the blood of Christians but a single combat between him (the Emperor) and the king of France. A true prince is not afraid to shed his blood for the welfare of his people, but this king of France preferred his personal security to the interest of Christendom. He liked better to fight with words than with swords, used strong language, and exposed his subjects to dangers. The king of France refused to accept his letters, in which he indicated to him a safe rendezvous for the deed. Asked then all his councillors, grandees, his knights, lawyers, and other persons, whether he had satisfied his honor ? All of them answered that his honor remained as bright as before, and that he could do nothing more in this case.

It would be wrong, if he should not conform himself with the advice of his faithful servants and subjects. Toledo, — Nov. 1528.

No address. Lat., modern copy, p. 1.

1528.

Nov.

4992. CHARLES V. to JAMES KING OF SCOTS.

The same as to the king of England. Toledo, Nov. 1528.

*Lat., draft or copy, p. 1.4993.*GRANTS in NOVEMBER 1528.*GRANTS.

4. Sir Wm. Kyngeston and Sir John Seyntlowe. To be stewards of the hundred of Thornebury, part of Buckingham's lands, Glouc., with 7*l.* a year; constables of the castle there, with 5*l.* a year; and masters of the hunt there; on surrender of patent 29 Jan. 13 Hen. VIII., granting those offices to the said Sir William alone. Del. Westm., 4 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

4. Gervase Middleton, Edw. Grenehall, Edw. Mountague, Edw. Warner, John Denyas, clk., John Saynt John, s. and h. of Sir John Saynt John, and Ric. Olyff. Pardon for all entries on the manor of Barnewell, the advowson and lands there, and lands in Coterstoke, Northt., (held of the King as of the duchy of Buckingham,) and on the manor and advowson of Overton Longvile, with lands there and in Overton Waterfelde, Hunts, also held of the King; of all which they, with Sir John Saynt John and Hen. Gale, both deceased, were enfeoffed by Geo. Kyrkham, deceased, to the use of his son Rob. Kyrkham and Sibilla his wife, and their heirs male. Also grant to Rob. Kyrkham of the issues of the premises. Del. Westm., 4 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

5. Thomas Clerke, oylor, the alderman, and the brethren and sisters of the guild of the Holy Trinity, Wysbeche, Camb., Ely dioc. Insuperimus and confirmation of patent 24 Oct. 32 Hen. VI., being a grant of incorporation to the said guild. Westm., 5 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 10.

6. Hen. Norrys, squire of the Body. To be keeper of the manor of Plesaunce, in Estgrenewyche, Kent, and of the great and little garden and orchard there, and keeper of Estgrenewyche park and the tower there, with certain daily fees in each office. Del. Westm., 6 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 11.

Copy of the preceding.—R.O.

6. For the dean and canons of St. Stephen's, Westminster. Grant, in frank-almoigne, of the manor or alien priory of Welles, Norf., formerly granted by Wm. de Estois to the church and monks of St. Stephen of Caen, Normandy, but which came into the hands of Edw. III. by reason of the war between him and the king of France, and remains in the King's hands by the Act of 2 Hen. V., together with the rectory of Gayton, Norf. Divine service to be renewed there, with prayers for the King and queen Katharine. No aids, subsidies, tenths, &c. to be levied on the premises. Bridewell, 3 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 6 Nov.

7. John Harryngton. Wardship of Nicholas s. and h. of Gilbert Pynchebek, with custody of 40 and 14 acres of land in Surflete, Linc., late of the said Gilbert Pynchebek, of the which 14 acres Rob. Brudenell, chief justice of the Common Pleas, Sir John Hussey, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, sen., Wm. Hussey, Wm. Fitzwilliam, jun., Ric. Ogle, and John Hyll, sen., yeoman, were seized in their demesne as of fee to the use of the said Gilbert and the heirs of his body at the time of his death. The premises were held at the time of the said Gilbert's death, of the heir of Sir Wm. Willoughby, lord Willoughby and Eresby (he being under age and the King's ward) as of the manor of Pynchebek. Del. Westm., 7 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 10.

7. John Harynton. Custody of possessions in Okeham and Burley (Rutland), and in the city of Lincoln, late of Ric. Flower, grandf. of Ric. Flower, s. and h. of Roger Flower, and of one Roger Flower, f. of the said Ric.; and wardship of the said heir. Del. Westm., 7 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 9.

7. Jas. Grose, of Southampton. Exemption from serving on juries, or being made justice of the peace, &c. Del. Westm., 7 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 24.

7. The master, wardens and commonalty of Bakers, London. Constat and exemplification, at their request, of patent, 22 July 1 Hen. VIII., licensing Rob. Broke, John Jenyns, John Parrowe, Wm. Bond and John Melton, citizens and bakers, London, to found a guild of one master and four wardens of the commonalty of freemen of the said mystery in the said city. Westm., 7 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 12.

Copy of the preceding.—R.O.

9. Rob. Chapman, of Normanby, Linc. Pardon for killing Tho. Wylson, of Normanby, in self-defence. Westm., 9 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 10.

10. Rowlle Van Queyke, native of the duchy of Gelderland. Denization. Del. Westm., 10 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 11.

10. Tho. Jones, steward of the King's Chamber. To be ranger of Beare forest, Hants, vice Simon Guldeford; the same fees as the said Simon had out of the issues of the co. Del. Westm., 10 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.—Vacated on surrender, 15 Feb. 22 Hen. VIII., in order that the office might be granted to John Cooke.—Pat. p. 1, m. 11.

12. Barnard de Ferrariis, native of the bishopric of Asti in Lombardy. Denization. Del. Westm., 12 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 8.

12. Nich. Ristico alias Rustico, clk., native of Lucca, Italy. Denization. Westm., 12 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15.

1528.

Nov.

GRANTS.

12. Fulk Grevill and Eliz. his wife. Livery of lands as one of the two ss. and hs. of Anne Willoughby, late one of the three ds. and hs. of Edw. Willoughby, and h. of Sir Rob. Willoughby, late lord Broke, and Eliz. his wife, who was one of the ds. and hs. of Sir Ric. Beauchamp, late lord Beauchamp; on all the portion or purparty falling to the said Eliz. on the death of the said Anne, of the manors of Powyk, Farnburgh, Alencestr' and Clutton (Somers., Warw. and Worc.); and on the purparty of the said Eliz. of all the possessions in England and Wales lately belonging to the said Ric. Beauchamp, Sir Rob. Willoughby, lord Broke and Eliz. his wife, or to Sir Rob. Willoughby, late lord Broke, f. of the said Rob., grandf. of the said Edw. Willoughby, or to the said Edw., or to the said Anne. Del. Westm., 12 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 2.

15. Wm. de Salper Wyke alias Wm. Salperwike, native of Artois. Denization. Del. Westm., 15 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

15. Geo. Bulleyn, squire of the Body. To be keeper of the palace of Beaulieu, alias the manor and mansion of Newhall, Essex; gardener or keeper of the garden and orchard of Newhall; warrener or keeper of the warren in the said manor or lordship; keeper of the wardrobe in the said palace or manor in Newhall, Dorhame, Wakefare Hall and Powers, Essex; with certain daily fees in each office, and the power of leasing the said manor, lands, &c. for his lifetime. Del. Westm., 15 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 25.

16. Jasper Arnoldson, of St. Margaret, London, basket-maker, native of Brabant. Denization. Westm., 16 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 5.

16. Sir Geo. s. and h. of Sir Robt. Throkerton, and John Gostewyk of London. Licence to enfeof the manor of Towyslond, Hunts, to Edw. Peke, Edw. Copley, John Mytton and John Odell, and their heirs for ever. Westm., 16 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 15, and p. 2, m. 2.

16. Wm. Bourne. Presentation to a corrody in the monastery of Shirbourne, vice John Baunfyld, deceased. Del. Westm., 16 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

16. Arthur Seyntleger, prior of St. Mary and St. Nicholas, Ledes, Kent. Licence of entry without suit of temporalities out of the King's hands on the manors of Eastsutton and Townland, Kent, which Ric. late prior of the said house acquired to himself and his successors for ever, and of which he died seized in right of the said house. Del. Westm., 16 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. (Dated 24 Nov. on Pat. roll.) Pat. p. 2, m. 3.

16. Anthony Malery. Licence to enfeof Hen. Faryngton, Tho. Lynne, Guy Lynne, Ric. Craford, Ranulph Lynne, Ric. Lynne, Tho. Wolffe and Guy Craford, of the manor of Papworth Annes, Camb., to hold to them and their heirs for ever, to the use of Alice wife of the said Anthony, during her lifetime, and after her decease to the use of Henry, s. and h. of the said Anthony, and heirs male of his body; and on death of the said Henry without heir male of his body, to the use of the said Anthony and his heirs, in fulfilment of the will of the said Anthony. Westm., 16 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 5.

17. John Tregyan, squire of the Body. To be steward and surveyor of the possessions of Eleanor, late duchess of Somerset, called "Copercioners londs," and particularly of the lordships, manors, &c. of Alwerton, Pensans, and Tywernayle, Cornw. Bridewell, 16 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 17 Nov.—P.S. Pat. p. 1, m. 16.

18. Wm. Burston, of Mylton, near Gravysend, Kent, deputy to Christopher Villers, searcher in the port of London and places adjoining. Licence to hold wharves and quays, and an inn or tavern, notwithstanding the Act 20 Hen. VI. Del. Westm., 18 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 14.

20. Willm. Peneson. Licence to import 600 tons of Tholouse woad and Gascon wine. Del. Westm., 20 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

20. The burgesses of Lanbadar (Lampeter). Insuperimus and confirmation of patent 24 Feb. 4 Hen. VI., inspecting and confirming (with additional grant of privileges) the following:—

i. Charter 28 March 4 Edw. III., inspecting and confirming charter 28 Dec. 6 Edw. I.,—being a grant of liberties and fairs.

ii. A charter of Edw. prince of Wales, dated 4 Aug. 33 Edw. I., ordering proclamation to be made of a market in the borough of Lamp'. Westm., 20 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 7.

23. Rob. Nassy, merchant of Florence. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfeld. Del. Westm., 23 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

24. Willm. Stokdale, yeoman of the Crown. Custody of lands in Flambrough, Irton, W[ea]verthorp and Searwsby, York, not exceeding the annual value of 7*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, belonging to Ric. Ford, an idiot. Del. Westm., 24 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

27. John Williams. Lease of all rents and services of free tenants and natives, demesne lands, &c. belonging to the lordship of Grafton, Northt., which is to come in the King's gift by an exchange made between the King and Tho. marquis of Dorset, with reservations, for the term of 21 years, at the annual rent of 60*l.* Del. Westm., 27 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—P.S. Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 9.

28. Ric. Lvster, attorney general. Custody of lands in Waterton, Carethorpp, Westwode and Lyddyngton, Linc., late belonging to John Twiselton; with wardship of 1528.

GRANTS in NOVEMBER 1528—cont.

Nov.

GRANTS.

Christopher s. and h. of the said John. Del. Westm., 28 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

28. John Rowte, yeoman of the Crown. To have the fee of the Crown of 6d. a day, vice John Clogge. Bridewell, 20 Nov. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 28 Nov.—P.S.

28. Arthur Seyntleger, the prior, and the convent of the house or church of SS. Mary and Nicholas Ledes, Kent. Licence to alienate the manors of Eastsutton and Townland, Kent, and 100 acres of land, 50 acres of meadow, 200 acres of pasture, and 100 acres of wood in East Sutton, Ulecombe, Sutton Valaunce, and Woodchurche, Kent, to Tho. West, lord Delawarre, Sir Edw. Guldeford, Sir John Gauge, Sir Francis Bryan, Sir Anthony Brown, Sir Matthew Browne, Sir Edw. Wotton, Sir Hen. Isley, Geo. Guldeford, John Cromer, James Pekham, John Poyntz, Hen. Browne, Tho. Wotton, Edw. Gawge, John Guldeford, Ric. Hill, Walter Hendley, Hen. Poyntz, and Hen. Hyll; to hold to them and their heirs, to the use of Sir Hen. Guldeford and his heirs, in fulfilment of the last will of the said Henry. Westm., 28 Nov.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 14.

2 Dec.

R. O.

4994. MAGNUS to BETON.

Is glad he is recalled, Magnus believes by necessity, to the court of Scotland, where his counsels have long been for the weal of the realm and maintenance of justice. But for the troubles and variances that have been these three years between the Pope, the Emperor and the French king, the King and Wolsey would have held more communication with him. Has been during that time for the most part with the duke of Richmond in Yorkshire. Is anxious to promote concord between the two realms. Berwick, 2 Dec.

P. 1. Headed: Copy of a letter sent to the archbishop of St. Andrew's from T. Magnus.

2 Dec.

R. O.

4995. MAGNUS to ADAM OTTERBURN.

Trusts that, according to their communications here and Magnus's late letters to James, he will consider what is to be done for the earl of Angus, that the King's letters may not be altogether without effect. "Practise you, and I shall do, for my part, to devise so much as may be, the honor of both the kings our masters saved," that no more unkindness arise on either side. A clear negative or denial would not be honorable in this case, the two Princes being so nearly related. Is much more influenced by his love for James than any affection for Angus, and is the more urgent as he has not seen any "fruitful answer" from the Scotch court. Berwick, 2 Dec.

P. 1. Headed: Copy of a letter sent from T. Magnus to Mr. Adam Otterborne for the earl of Angus.

3 Dec.

Cal. D. x. 319.

B. M.

4996. FRANCIS I. to the BISHOP OF BAYONNE.

* * *
 "... mon bon amy à Messieurs Gregoire [de Casal] ...
 ... cardinal de Ste. Croix devers nostre S[ainct Pere] ... sur l'accord qu'on dit secrettement avoir esté [fait entre sa] Saincteté et l'Empereur par le moyen dudit Cardi[nal] ... et treuve les raisons que vous m'escripvez estre ... despesche estre si vives et si expresses qu'estant ... remonstrées à sa dite Saincteté comme ledit de Casal le saura [faire, je] ne faictz aucun doute que elles ne soyent non seulle[ment] ... pour empescher nostre dit Sainct Pere de conclurre et faire ledit ... fait. Il ne la, mais pour le mettre en telle craincte
 ... perdre et estre mis hors de ses estatz, contenus en vostre dite lettre ... ayse et facile à le faire, pour le moins demeurer pour ne[ut]re ... sans prester ne bailler aux Imperiaux aucune ayde, fave[ur]
 ... comme il est tres raisonnable qu'il soit. Et affin [qu'il] ...
 congnoisse que nous sommes en toutes choses conform[ables] ...
 mesmement en oppinions, volonteiz et advis, jay fait [un] despesche au 1528.

bailly de Rouen, et aultres mes ambas[sadeurs] estans de present pardevers nostre dit St. Pere, luy mandant [de tenir la] mesme langaige à sa Sainteté apres avoir le tout audit Messire Gregoire de Casal ; à celle fin qu[e sa dite Sainteté] congnoisse que la parolle qui luy sera en cela por[tée] et consentement de nous deux, et que ce de part de l'ung n'est sans le conseil et qui me faict esperer que s'il na e ces remonstrances

* * * * *
 pouvoir garder et empescher q viendra, je ne fauldray à incontinent vous faire entendre.

“ Au surplus, je vous vueil bien pour fin de lettre le faict de ceste contribucion que je pense tou vous avoir esté de ceste heure accordée et mis e[n] mains suyvant la promesse qui vous en avoit est[é] car la despence que j'ay si longuement portée et q[ue maintenant] je porte et soustiens seul en Italye me contra[inet] et force de ce faire, vous advisant bien qu'elle [n'est] pas moindre que de souldoyer au royaume de Napl[es] mil hommes de pied, et quatre ou cinq cens chev[aulx] lesquels sont avecques le sieur Rence dedans Barlett[a et] aultres villes de la Poille, qui tiennent encores et s[ont] deliberez de tenir pour moy en esperance non seulle[ment] de tenir toute la Poille et l'Abrusse en subjection ve[u] le petit nombre enquoy sont reduictz les ennemys, mais de garder que de tout le royaume il ne se lieve pour l'Empereur ung seul escu, et que de la il parte ung seul homme pour venir secourir Anthoine de Leyve qui est dedans Millan en grande necessité de vivres devant lequel j'ay encores avecques cinq mille Italyens et deux m[ille] [les]quelz et quelques gens que les Venitiens il esperoit bien tost nectoyer toutes les en Lumelyne et reserrer les ennemys jusq[ues] qui est tout ce que pour cest yver ilz peuv[ent faire].

* * * * *

Mons. de Bayonne, je vous vueil bien advertir depuis que j'ay eu nouvelle[s] par la voye de Romme par lesquelles [je suis adverti] que le sieur Rance à son arrivée en la Poille avoit de mille hommes de pie qui estoient à Fabrisse Mar pris quelques pieces d'artillerye qu'ilz avoient ay en advertissement que à la Matrisse princi[palle ville] de l'Abrusse les gens de la ville s'estoient revol[tés et avoient] taillé en pieces de quatre à cinq cens chevaulx le[giers, qui la] estoient en garnison ; qui sont choses de quoy je [vous ay] voullu advertir pour les faire entendre au Roy mon [bon frere] et perpetuel allye, et a Mons. le Cardinal mon bon a[my, vous] priant continuer à me faire savoir de vos nouvelles.” Paris, 3 Dec. Signed.

Add. Mutilated.

3 Dec.

4997. STRANGERS ARTIFICERS.

R. O.

Certificate of the commissioners appointed by Pat. 3 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII. to enquire within London and a compass of two miles from the suburbs, how many householders were strangers artificers and craftsmen not born in England, Ireland, Wales, Calais, or Berwick, with the number of their servants strangers ; and to elect ten of the most substantial strangers cordwainers, being householders, to remain, with two alien servants each ; the rest to be compelled either to do service with any of the King's native subjects, or to be commanded to leave the kingdom, and be expelled from the city. Transmit a book containing the number and names of all the said cordwainers strangers, and the number of artificers who have appeared before them. Have appointed the ten householders to remain, and have commanded the strangers cordwainers who have refused to serve with Englishmen to leave the kingdom. 1 Feb. 20 Hen. VIII. Signed: Per me, 1528.

STRANGERS ARTIFICERS—cont.

Sir John Aleyn—[Per m]e, Johannem Rastell—Per me, Edmundum Walsyngham—Per me, Sir Wylliam Bayly—By me, Rychard Gybson, sargant ede (?)

On parchment.

4 Dec.

4998. CROSS BOWS and HAND GUNS.

Harl. MS.
442, f. 97.
B. M.

Proclamation to be published by the sheriffs of London, forbidding the using or keeping of cross bows and hand guns, and the playing at tennis, dice, and other unlawful games, contrary to the statutes for the maintenance of archery; and ordering the King's subjects to inform against regraters, forestallers, and engrossers of grain. Westm., 4 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.

Modern copy, pp. 8.

4 Dec.

4999. SCOTLAND.

R. O.
Rym.xiv. 275.

Commission of James V. king of Scotland to Sir William Scott of Balvery, Adam Otterburn, and Andrew Ker, to treat with the king of England for an abstinence of war. Edinburgh, 4 Dec. 1528.

Lat.

5 Dec.

5000. INIGO DE MENDOZA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Complains of certain vessels having been attacked by the French in the Camber, contrary to the late truce. Demands restoration of the goods, and punishment of the Frenchmen. From my house in the suburbs, 5 Dec. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

Galba, B. ix.
222.
B. M.

2. Petition of the consuls of the Spanish nation, and Jehan d'Accorde, to the Emperor. The ships of d'Accorde, after discharging their cargoes at London, were driven by the weather to Chambre, and there attacked by French ships, about the first of this present Dec. Two of the ships were sunk; the other four were driven ashore. The crews fled, and the French plundered the ships. They applied to the king of England, who ordered the remaining goods to be seized. They have as yet been only able to obtain the restitution of their ships, without the artillery or rigging; and ask the Emperor to grant them letters of marque or reprisal on English and French subjects. The damage amounts to 30,000 ducats.

Fr., pp. 3. Endd.: Copy of a supplication to the Emperor's council resident in Flanders, by the Spaniards.

5 Dec.

5001. GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. iv.
(302.)
B. M.

Since their last letter on Nov. 20, the rumor of the Emperor's journey to Italy is much increased. Most people believe it. Hear daily of many preparations. The Emperor has called away from them the Comendador, who has hitherto accompanied them by his order. He was a captain in Italy when the French king was taken. Men are being raised here to go to Barcelona, where are thirty-two new galleys. There were ten or eleven ships ready to go to the Spicery, which have been stopped, and ordered to wait for the Emperor, who, it is said, will go to Barcelona after Christmas. Wish to know what to do if he go thither. Valladolid, 5 Dec. 1528.

Lee's hand. Cipher, deciphered by Tuke; p. 1. Add. Endd.

5 Dec.

5002. LEE to HENRY VIII.

Vesp. C. iv.
255.
B. M.

By his last letters of Nov. 20, sent by the governor of Bayonne, informed him of the rumor of the Emperor's going into Italy, and of the preparations being made here. It is now thought that he will go as soon as he can make ready, and will leave for Barcelona soon after Christmas, where there are thirty-two new galleys. Men are daily prepared and sent thither. The Emperor has just sent for the Comendador who has accompanied Lee. He thinks he shall be sent to Italy, for he was a captain there when the French king was taken. All are sorry that the Emperor is going, and wish he had nothing in Italy, and no title to Naples, for they are sure it will undo them. Wrote to the King of the messenger sent by the earl of Desmond, with dogs and hawks to the Emperor, and letters from the Earl and others in Ireland. The messenger told some of the Emperor's subjects, who told an Englishman, that his master would be under the Emperor, and that he desires the Emperor to send them military equipments. Heard this from Thomas Badcoc, who lives on the coast where the messenger landed. Has written to Suter at the court to watch the affair, and also to Batcoc to see what the man has with him at his return, and whether any ordnance is made for him at Biscay or Lepusqua. Valladolid, 5 Dec. 1528.

1528.

Hol. Cipher, with decipher by Tuke. Add. Endd.

5 Dec. 5003. BISHOPRIC OF PALENCIA.

R. O.

Monition by Carolus Bacchius Aretinus, proctor of Ghinucci, auditor of the Apostolic Chamber, to the abbots, priors, and other officials of the diocese of Palencia, commanding them, on pain of excommunication, within six days after requisition, to pay to cardinal Wolsey or his representative the sum of 2,000 ducats a year out of the fruits of the bishopric; by virtue of papal letters sub plumbo granted by Leo X., of the date 6 id. Mart. 1519, 7 Leo X. Rome, 5 Dec. 1528, 5* Clement VII. Signed: "Anthonius de Grangia, dictæ curiæ Canc' Camera Apostolicæ notarius." Added by De Grangia: Gratis pro reverendissimo Cardinali Car. locumt'.

R. O.

2. Duplicate of the above. Dated Rome, 5 Dec. 1528, 6 Clement VII. Signed as above.

Endorsed by the notary to the effect that he on April 20 went to the bishop of Palencia on behalf of the Cardinal, and found him at the house of Alfonso de Arragon, count Ribagorsa, in via Predicatorum nuncupata in the parish of St. Paul, Saragossa, and presented him with this monition from the auditor of the Chamber, desiring him to pay Wolsey his pension on the first fruits of Palencia. Gave him a copy of the monition. After reading it, he replied that he would do what he ought to do. Witnesses present: Barth. Butheler and Antony Male, of the dioceses "Tumiensis" and "Tornanensis," and Dominico Beltran, notary, of Saragossa.

Certificate of Beltran, endorsed.

Another certificate endorsed, name not legible, dated Saragossa, 20 April 1529.

5 Dec. 5004. MAGNUS to OTTERBURN.

Cal.B.vii.121.

B. M.

St. P. iv. 543
(note).

His letters to the king of Scots, if their effect be noted, will show the regard he has for James's honor. Spoke with Patrick Sinclair on his return from England, and found he was not much pleased with the answer he had received. Urged him to encourage James to put no doubt in his uncle, from whose favor Magnus expected "great things should succeed" to him. Had a special reason for thinking so. Regrets to hear that Otterburn, who, he knows, desires the weal of the two kingdoms, seeks to win "other far foreign friends than England." For three years Henry's attention has been distracted by the variances of the Pope, the Emperor, and Francis; but they need not despair of the marriage with his daughter. He may suggest this to the Council, but only as coming from Magnus himself. Berwick, 5 Dec.

1528.

MAGNUS to OTTERBURN—cont.

Headed: Copy of a letter sent from T. Magnus to Mr. Adam Otterborne. Endd.: 6 Decembr' 1528. Lettres written with the king of Scottis own hand to Mr. Magnus. Also a copy of Mr. Magnus lettres sent unto Mr. Adam Otturburn.

6 Dec.

5005. JAMES V. to MAGNUS.

Cal. B. VII.
120 b.

Praises his zeal for peace. Begs credence for Master "Adalm" (Otterburn). Edinburgh, 6 Dec.

B. M.
St. P. IV. 544.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Tyl our awin clerk, Master Thomas Magnus, arshdene of Estriden."

6 Dec.

5006. JAMES [BETON], ARCHBISHOP OF ST. ANDREW'S, to MAGNUS.

R. O.

Thanks him for his letter, dated Berwick, 2 Dec. Since Magnus left Scotland he has not haunted the court, but confined himself to his spiritual cure. Is here at the desire of his sovereign, and will be of the same mind as before for the good of both kingdoms. Knows how Magnus has been with the duke of Richmond as his director, chosen for his great wisdom, and expects as before he will do much to further the amity. Refers him to Adam Otterburn, who will be at this diet. Edinburgh, 6 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

* * * A blank leaf which was used as a wrapper to the above bears these words: "Letters from the archbishop of St. Andrew's to Mr. Magnus, of the 6th of December.—A copy of Mr. Magnus' letters unto the said Archbishop."

5007. [VANNES to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 258.

B. M.

"[Ill. et R.] Domine, Domine mi, &c. Interea dum Domini B[riani] adventum ex]pecto, agere coepi cum Vahacano [de tran]sfretatione, quem audio navem ha[bere] atis, tum ad maris impetum sustinend[um], tum ad] arcendos insultus. Hæc heri a Calet[o] venit s[ed] vi ventorum in planiciem quandam a miliaria hinc procul, quam dicunt d appellere coacta est, et ubi advene[rit] Brianus, aspiraverintque venti, hanc n[avem], hic si liceat, vel ubi nunc subsistit [as]cendemus, nunc totus in expendendis tandis instructionibus versor, ut, quod et ingenium nequit præstare, id fide et voluntate assequor.

"Accurate deinde exploravi quid actum [sit] de navibus illis Hispanis, quas regis [Franciæ] orator in insidiis latitare suspicaba[t] nil tale esse; sed duas naviculas [quas] dicunt adversa tempestate coacta[s] a Sandwico mare pacatis e mox illinc ad biduum solverunt [op]time nobiscum actum iri, si non a tus h[o]stis m"

Hol., mutilated.

6 Dec.

5008. BRYAN and VANNES to WOLSEY.

R. O.

After a severe tempest, arrived at Calais at 8 o'clock, after dreadful nausea and vomiting of blood by one of us, whom we do not wish to particularise. Will proceed on their journey without delay. Sylvester [Darius] and Thaddeus sailed for England the moment we arrived, and we had therefore no communication with them. Hear from one who attended on the new Venetian ambassador that St. Pôl is in Alexandria, and the 1528.

duke of Urbino at Pavia. Expect to pass safely by the letters of the French king, the duke of Urbino, and the Count. Calais, 6 Dec. 1528.

Pp. 2. Holograph by Vannes, signed by Bryan. Latin, except Bryan's signature. Add. and sealed. Endd.

6 Dec.

5009. VANNES to WOLSEY.

R. O.

After their united letter, heard from an Englishman that 200 Spaniards and others were at Gravelines. The commander treated the Englishman well, and said they would have no war with England; and he inquired about the divorce. About 500 Spaniards are near St. Omer, as they are afraid that the French, in consequence of their loss in Italy, will make some attempts hereabouts. Calais, 6 Dec. 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. and sealed. Endd.

6 Dec.

5010. LONDON.

R. O.

Writ of certiorari to the mayor and aldermen of London, concerning a recognizance for 315*l.* of Nic. Waren, salter, of London, to Nic. Matok, chamberlain of the City. Westm., 6 Dec. 20 Hen.VIII.

Endd.

7 Dec.

5011. PHILIP DE SENIS, Dean of the Apostolic Chamber, to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 161.

B. M.

Desires him to allow certain alum in London to be delivered to and Geronimo de Spinulis, agents for John and Pasquale de Spinulis, of Genoa. Rome, 7 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1, mutilated.

7 Dec.

5012. FERDINAND OF AUSTRIA to HENRY VIII.

Vit. B. xxi. 45.

B. M.

Desires credence for Charles of Burgundy, "D Bredam et Louregham." Vienna, 7 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1, mutilated. Add. Endd.

7 Dec.

5013. SIR FRANCIS BRYAN and PETER VANNES to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 162.

B. M.

Cannot travel with speed, owing to the shortness of the days and the bad state of the roads. Arrived last night at Boulogne, where they were well received by the captain. He told them that the bailiff of Rouen had returned to France, and that the count of St. Pól is in good case at Alexandria, and Renzo is successfully promoting the French cause in the kingdom of Naples. This morning the captain and the Venetian ambassador conducted them hither. Were told by an Englishman that the French king has received letters from Renzo; that the French have still a strong army in the kingdom of Naples, and it was only the pestilence that prevented their taking the town, and he hoped that the whole kingdom would be shortly in the power of Francis.

Public rejoicings have been held in consequence of this news. The King went from St. Germain's to the abbey of St. Genevra, and thence to St. Mary of Boleyne, not far from Paris, thanking God and St. Mary. Shortly after, taking a piece of the Holy Cross, he went with public thanksgiving to Notre Dame de Paris. Heard these reports while on their journey. Montreuil, 7 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 2. Address pasted on the following letter.

8 Dec.

5014. The DIVORCE.

R. O.

Instructions to Sir Francis Bryan and Peter Vannes.

Are to go to the French court with Dr. Tayler; where Master Peter, "because the French king perfectly understandeth the Italian tongue," shall 1528.

The DIVORCE—cont.

say that the King's highness has received letters from his ambassadors in Spain, with the Emperor's answer to Sylvester Darius touching the devices proposed for peace. Though Francis may have been informed of them by Darius, now returning home, the King thinks right to communicate the same, and to do nothing without their mutual consent.

News is come, through Jacopo Salviati, that the Pope has been successful in his services with the Emperor, and that there is good hope of peace.

Francis is inclined to send the bailiff of Roan (Rouen) to know further of these purposes. Henry commends his intention; and as Francis has sent a gentleman to the Pope for this matter, the King likewise has despatched Sir Francis Bryan and Vannes to the court of Rome on like commission, &c. Here the ambassadors shall exhibit the answer made in French by the Emperor, through Sylvester, insinuating that it was a crafty device to sow mistrust between the two crowns, as he proposes a particular peace between England and the Emperor, before the former take upon himself the place of moderator, &c.

The King is resolved to do nothing until due notification be sent to Francis. It is thought that the Emperor has advertised his mind to the Pope by the general of the Cordeliers. The King therefore advises that the French agents at Rome should be furnished with a general but sufficient commission. As, however, the Emperor may not be sincere, it will be necessary to be watchful, especially as he may have a purpose of getting the Pope more into his power, his only intention being to establish his affairs in Italy. The Emperor and his Council give ear to a prophecy that there shall be a Pope named Angell, who shall go barefoot. This is the name of the General, whom the Emperor evidently wishes to exalt to the Papacy, and thereby obtain possession of the Church; and he is now engaged in preparing a great army, proposing to pass into Italy.

This thing should be looked to. The King has dispatched Bryan and Vannes to admonish the Pope and put him on his guard, assuring him his safety depends on France and England, and to offer him some contributions for the support of an army. They shall ask the King whether he consents to these proposals, and for his ambassadors at Rome to act with the English.

In the event that the Emperor is only using deceit, and not favorable to peace, the Pope is to be urged to declare him an enemy, using all the efforts he can to promote the peace; in the securing of which the two crowns can so act together that it may appear that their friendship is indissoluble. No intercourse is to take place between England and the Emperor, except such as shall conduce to the French king's purposes; and in England's mediation there will be a marvellous benefit to the French king's affairs, considering the state they are now in. With these precautions the Emperor's overture might be a basis for negotiation. They are to learn the French king's determination.

They shall also show that, since the arrival of the legate Campeggio, little has been done in the matter of the doubt depending on the King's marriage, in consequence of the Legate being marvellously vexed with the gout; and though the King has repaired to a place near the Legate's lodgings, it was ten days after his arrival before he was able to come into the King's presence. Even then he had to be borne in a chair, and has ever since kept his chamber. The King and the Queen have familiarly and apart visited him; so that more knowledge will be had of the validity of the marriage, which the King will communicate to Francis. Bryan and Vannes, residing at Rome, will be ready to execute any orders, and the King will send shortly thither his principal secretary; so that, if the peace be treated of at Rome, there will not lack persons to take part in the negotiations. They shall beg letters from Francis, and deliver their letters to the Queen mother.

Headed by Tayler: "Instructions ab Anglia, 8 Dec. 1528," &c.

Pp. 13. Apostyled by Tayler. Endd.

1528.

8 Dec.

R. O.

5015. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD and SIR RIC. WEYSTON to WOLSEY.

Think it will be superfluous to repeat what has been reported already by Master Daunce, Baron Hales, and Chr. Hales, lately sent to make inquiries at Calais, as well as by my Lord Chamberlain now here, of the damages done to this town. Calais, 8 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

9 Dec.

Le Grand,
III. 231.

5016. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Since Bryant's departure little has occurred here. I expect they will not go on further about the marriage, whatever they say, till they have an answer about his mission. The King goes and comes between this and Greenwich. I think he may make a journey to Hampton Court or Richmond, and the Queen also, who will perhaps not return for some time. Made-moiselle de Boulan is at last come thither, and the King has lodged her in a very fine lodging, which he has prepared for her close by his own. Greater court is now paid to her every day than has been to the Queen for a long time. I see they mean to accustom the people by degrees to endure her, so that when the great blow comes it may not be thought strange. However, the people remain quite hardened, and I think they would do more if they had more power; but great order is continually taken. Among other things, it has been commanded that only ten shopkeepers of each nation shall be allowed to remain in London, which will take away at least 15,000 Flemings.* There has also been a search for hackbutts and cross-bows, and all that have been found in the town have been taken, so that no worse weapon remains than the tongue. In the country also a continual watch is kept, so that it is not apparent that any great trouble will ensue, as the enemy would fain believe; for the King has told the nobles his intention so plainly that they speak more soberly than they did. He is far more irritated against the Emperor than those of his Council pretend, in consequence of the threat held out of ousting him from his kingdom by his own subjects. A short time ago Wolsey reported this saying in the presence of 100 gentlemen, blaming the Emperor's ingratitude and ambition, and asking what they thought of it; yet they all remained so obstinate to the spur that they answered not a word, except one who said that by this word the Emperor had lost the hearts of 100,000 Englishmen, and that if he got hold of his Chancellor, who used such terms, he would kill him. Wolsey uses all the means he can to bring the Emperor into hatred, and Francis into favor; but it is hard work to fight against nature. I know it has been suggested in their most secret council that the Emperor, being more enraged against England than against France, will agree with Francis and leave England in the lurch; to which Wolsey replied, offering to bear the whole blame, if such should be the case. Still their suspicions are not abated.

Yesterday evening I went to Wolsey, who told me of the news they had from Rome, and the great offers made by the Emperor to the Pope to restore Florence, Ravenna, Cervia, Reggio and Modena; to put the duchy of Milan in the hands of some one who would give security not to come into Italy, and not to conclude peace, except through his mediation; and, moreover, this done, to go in person against the Turks, and do everything else that could be asked of him, provided the Pope will enter into alliance with him. In this Wolsey sees very great danger, fearing that the Pope will be led to it, unless his demands are acceded to, viz., that Ravenna and Cervia be placed as deposits in the hands of these two Kings; in which case he promises to remain neutral; and if the Emperor, after being warned by him, refuses to come to peace, he will openly take part with you in an offensive league. Wolsey begs me to signify this again to Francis, in addition to what Master Briant has represented to him. I forbear to tell you all that he said to me upon the subject, and my answers. For the rest, he said, that when news came of the surrender of Saona, they were so far advanced in their understanding with Andrea Doria, that, but for that event, the matter promised a good issue; but this loss has broken his heart.* Wolsey has spoken, and the King even more fully, to the ambassador of Venice, about their matter, having expressly sent for him about it, and promised marvels if they will come to the point, using great threats if they do not agree to it. The ambassador seems not to have taken very ill what was said. The two Cardinals were present.

* So in Le Grand: "qui enlevera bien pour le moins plus de quinze mil Flamens."

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

Campeggio told me in conversation about the Emperor's intention to go to Italy, that at this moment he has a great mind to attempt it, which was matter for serious apprehension, for if he came the Pope would be obliged to take his part. This subject we debated a whole afternoon before Briant's departure; and I showed him there was very little likelihood of the Emperor's doing this, and that, if he did, it would be his total destruction, such order being taken everywhere, as there would undoubtedly be, besides that which exists at present. With this the Cardinal seemed wonderfully satisfied, and at our last conversation told me he had written of it, by Bryant, so fully to the Pope that he hoped that] he had greatly reassured him; but that he had advised him in his letters, that if that took place he should not be obstinate as he was before, but withdraw himself out of danger, whatever force he had at his command. This advice Campeggio thinks the Pope will follow, and that he will remain meanwhile neutral, favoring your affairs to the best of his power; and so he will wager his head that he will do, unless his great disappointment about Ravenna and Cervia cause him to do something unreasonable. He promises to write again to the Pope by Dr. Knight, who is to follow Bryant; and I think he is either in earnest, or he is wonderfully holy.†

The Spaniards, who have so long laid siege to our money, have been encountered off Rye, a short distance from land, by the great galleon of Lartigues, commanded by a gentleman named La Barre, by whom they have been driven to land, and compelled to surrender, though they were six in number and well equipped. Both parties have been arrested by the governor of Kent. The Spaniards have made complaint to Wolsey, demanding justice; in which I have been their advocate, as one whom they the day before caused to lose 100 pieces of wine, and who lost a ship and mariners in trying to escape them. Briefly it has been agreed that both Frenchmen and Spaniards should remain in arrest, and their sails being put in custody they should come hither to plead their cause. But Wolsey will immediately allow the galleon to conduct Dr. Knight till he is out of the Downs, where it may go at liberty, the others remaining in arrest; and he has assured me that they shall remain so long that I shall have plenty of time to hear news from you. I have already secured some of the English to oppose their deliverance, so that I trust that it will be near the end of the truce before their arrest comes to an end; and when that takes place you will have to think about it. For, to say the truth, although the ruffians have done a good deal of injury to the poor merchants, I fear it cannot be proved that they were the assailants; and even if they had been, they will say they ought not to lose their goods, but to be punished by the conservators as violators of the truce. You will think what is to be done, and who should have them. I understand they are six fine vessels, as La Chapelle can tell you, for he has viewed them closely; and I assure you La Barre has behaved

* "luy a creu le cueur." Surely an error for "crévé."

† "ou qu'il y ya de bon pied, ou qu'il est merveilleusement saint."

1528.

so valiantly that he is highly praised here, and the Spaniards greatly reproached; and as the English say it we must believe it. Moreover, he has expressed himself so honorably to the King's officers that both the King and Wolsey are very well satisfied. Also the King's ships laden with his provision of wine returned from Bordeaux two days ago, and both the King and Wolsey desired to thank Francis for the good treatment shown to them at Bordeaux. Of this the King has desired me to write in the absence of Parliament. It must be owned that those who daily come from Rouen, and have to do with the Parliament, are not so well satisfied, and make many complaints to the King and Wolsey, but I cannot believe they are so ill-treated as they say.

Our disputers of Flanders have arrived, but have not yet had audience.
The matter remains as when I last wrote, except that the Queen shows a brief, rather more ample than the bull, and of the same date; but that is not of much consequence. London, 9 Dec.

Fr. Add.

9 Dec.

5017. INIGO DE MENDOSA to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Complains of the detention of certain Spanish vessels at the Camber.
Thinks the reasons for their non-restitution are frivolous, as it is not at all likely that Spanish merchant vessels with a valuable cargo would fire upon French men-of-war. From my house in the suburbs, 9 Dec. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. and sealed. Endd.

5018. BRIAN TUKE to GARDINER.

Tit. B. i. 282.

B. M.

Sends a letter from Vannes to Wolsey, received from Bonvixi, and one from Haket to Tuke, brought by Spanish merchants in London, who say it came yesterday from lady Margaret. The latter mentions another letter, of 6 Dec., in cipher, about a matter of great importance, which Tuke has not received. Sent all he received to Wolsey. In this letter there are certain words in cipher, which Tuke has deciphered; but he does not understand what they mean, unless Haket, by handling the matter so closely, and referring to a former letter not arrived, or perhaps not sent, wants to find a pretext for being sent for; or perhaps there is some peace in practice apart by the king of Portugal. The Almoner in his last letters wrote that a servant of Don Fernando king of Boheme passed into Spain through France, with a Portuguese, vassal to the French king. Has written to Haket to say that he received no such letter in cipher, and does not understand the matter; and asking him to send by a special man a full letter in cipher, and to ask if he hears of any chance of a commission being sent for a truce. If Wolsey wishes anything else to be written, another letter can be sent, and Tuke will pay for this. Wrote also that Wolsey would send Frere West to him, sufficiently instructed touching the heretics, and that answer should be sent about his money by the next. Sends Haket's letters to West, which Wolsey saw on Friday. West knows nothing of them, so Wolsey can do as he pleases with them. Asked Derby to find out whether Wolsey wished him (Tuke) to go to the Emperor's ambassador; for, hearing that letters were come from lady Margaret, he doubted whether it would be of any use going. Derby could not speak with Gardiner about it, and Tuke was loth to go to the ambassador lest he might suspect something, as he has never spoken to him, except once, by Wolsey's order, at the treaty for the last truce. Wishing, however, to know somewhat of him, sent Bawdewyn, his Flemish clerk, to say that Wolsey had ordered letters to be made to Sir Edw. Guldeford and others about the delivery of the Spanish ships, and he wished to know particulars about them; intending afterwards, according to Wolsey's instructions, to show 1528.

BRIAN TUKE to GARDINER—cont.

the ambassador, as of himself, about Vandosme's preparations. As to the Spanish ships, the ambassador answered that letters were come from my Lady, which he had sent on to the Court, and he could say nothing till he had an answer; as to the other matters, he had heard largely of the Frenchmen's brags, "and how hot war they will make, and how rich they be;" but that the French king's mother had sent secretly to lady Margaret, desiring prorogation of the truce; to which she answered that she had no commission, but if she might have a safe-conduct she would send to the Emperor to know his pleasure. This was granted, and Wm. des Barres, with her maistre d'hostel, have passed into Spain, and the ambassador hopes shortly to hear of a good answer. Thinks by this means they have picked as much from him as if he had gone himself, for it is likely my Lady has no power. Whether there is any mystery in sending Des Barres and the maistre d'hostel, who seem too many to go only for knowledge of the Emperor's pleasure, he leaves to Wolsey's wisdom. Does not like the French king's going in person to the Spanish frontiers, though it be to make war, "wherein I will be no more scrupulous than needeth." Will follow Wolsey's directions whether he shall speak to the Emperor's ambassador any further. Is busy with the King's debtors, whom he has sent for to prepare their money against the beginning of this term. London, Monday.

Hol., pp. 4. Add.: To, &c., Dr. Stephens, secretary to my lord Legate.

9 Dec.

5019. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Writes by Florentius (Volusenus). Has suspended his studies to allow him to go to England. Is studying Greek and Latin, the rudiments of mathematics and astronomy, and scholastic questions; which last please him more than any other study, by their ingenious subtilty. Other authors seem to be on the surface, but they to go to the bottom of things. Was talking one day in the King's chamber to the Venetian ambassador, who said that no one would ever be of extraordinary learning in philosophy or theology, without studying the schoolmen, a fact which he said Wolsey knew well. Asks him to direct Florentius as to what he should study. Wishes Wolsey to send him back speedily; for we shall all expect him daily after Christmas. Paris, 5 id. Dec.

Lat., Hol., p. 1. Add.: R., &c., card. Ebor. Angliæ Primati a latere Legato, &c. Endd.: Literæ D. Decani Wellen., 5 idus Dec. Parisiis datis.

9 Dec.

5020. SIR WILLIAM COMPTON.

R. O.

Bill of Wm. Botrye, of London, mercer, to the executors of Sir Wm. Compton, 9 Dec. 1528.

For 12 yds. black camlet, delivered 14 May 1524, at 2s. 8d. 30 Dec. 1524, $\frac{1}{2}$ yd. black sarcenet, 2s. 2d. 15 Feb. 1524, $2\frac{1}{2}$ yds. black velvet, at 12s. 18 Sept. 1525, $\frac{3}{4}$ yd. black velvet, 9s. 11 Aug. 1525, 1 ell black taffata, 10s. 21 Nov. 1525, 2 yds. black damask, 15s. 4d.; 18 March 1528, $\frac{1}{2}$ yd. black velvet, 5s. 6d.; $3\frac{1}{2}$ yds. black buckram, 21d.=5l. 5s. 9d.

The debt of Sir Fras. Cheney, 9 Dec. 1528.

18 June 1511, $2\frac{1}{2}$ yds. crimson satin, 45s.; $4\frac{1}{4}$ yds. camlet with silver, at 40s.; $4\frac{1}{2}$ yds. green satin, at 9s.; 4 yds. plunked satin, at 8s.; 10 yds. crimson velvet, at 14s.=21l. 5s. 3d., as appears by a bill of Avery Rawson, mercer, and Wm. Abery, servant of Sir Fras. Cheney. Cheney also owes Botry 10l., as appears by a warrant dated 12 July 3 Hen. VIII., to his cousin John Cheney, receiver of his lands in the Isle of Sheppey. Compton also owes Botrye 10l. for the debt of Sir John Carr, which he received of Robt. Beniar, his servant, which he ought not to have had.

Pp. 2. Endd.

1528.

9 Dec.

R. O.

5021. WOLSEY to the ABBOT OF ST. MARY'S, YORK.

Commands him to pay, out of the King's money in his keeping, to the earl of Northumberland, warden of the East and Middle Marches, 1,000 marks due for his last year's fee, over and above 500 marks received by him from the Abbot at his entry into the office; and if the Earl wish to redeem any portion of his plate, which is in the Abbot's hands, to deliver it at the value for which it lies to gage. Westm., 9 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add.

10 Dec.

5022. SIR EDW. KNYVET.

His will, 22 Oct. 1528. Proved 10 Dec. 1528. Printed in Nicolas' Testamenta Vetusta, p. 635.

11 Dec.

5023. WOLSEY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
230.

According to the intention expressed to Francis by the English ambassadors, Sir Francis Brian, chancellor,* and Peter Vannes, his secretary, the King is sending to him Will. Knygt, his chief secretary, with Will. Benet, LL.D., who will communicate their charge to Montmorency. London, 11 Dec. 1528.

Fr. Add.: A Monsieur le conte de Beaumont, grant maistre de France.

12 Dec.

5024. RAVENSTON.

R. O.

Grant by Sir Geo. Throkemerton to John Gostewik, Will. Holgill, clk., Thos. Alverd, Thos. Crumwell, and Will. Brabazon, to the use of cardinal Wolsey, of the manor of Ravenston, Bucks, of which Sir John Fitz James, Sir Anth. Fitzherbert and others, recovered seisin against Sir Rob. Throkemerton, deceased, in 4 Hen. VIII. Dated 12 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.

Draft, Lat., p. 1.

R. O.

2. A remembrance for Mr. Cromwell to show unto my lord Cardinal's grace.

Sir Geo. Throkemerton is willing to exchange his manors of Raunston, value 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year, and Townsland and Yellyng, Hunts, value 44*l.* 10*s.* a year, for lands of like commodity, value and title in Warwickshire.

A lordship of Sir Wm. Gasquynes of the North, in Warwicksh., called Omersley; the lordship of Birmingham; any other land in the said shire, so it be ut supra.

P. 1.

12 Dec.

5025. HENRY VIII. to CLEMENT VII.

Add. MS.
15,387, f. 204.
B. M.
Theiner, p. 562.

As the Pope intends to create new cardinals, recommends Jerome, bp. of Worcester, for that honor. London, 12 Dec. 1528.

Lat. Modern copy.

12 Dec.

5026. SCOTLAND.

R. O.

Indenture of the truce of Berwick, signed by William Scot, Adam Rym. XIV. 276. Ottirburne and Andrew Ker, 12 Dec. 1528.

. . Dec.

5027. FRANCIS I. to his AMBASSADORS at ROME.

Le Grand, III.
241.

In behalf of the bearers, the sieur De Brian, and Messire Peter Vannes, ambassadors sent by the king of England to Rome, on his own private affairs, and other matters. As I hold the interests of my brother the same as my own, you are to unite with them in their suit to the Pope, and with

* So in Le Grand, "chancellor." Perhaps "chambellan" was the word intended.

1528.

FRANCIS I. to his AMBASSADORS at ROME—cont.

them to make overtures for a universal peace, as agreed between the king of England and me. On this subject you will previously consult with them. I send you a power for the purpose ; but the matter is of such weight that you are not to conclude anything without first sending me the articles prepared by you and the English ambassadors, with the Pope's opinion and advice.

I hear by different channels that the cardinal general of St. Francis, who went to Spain long ago, and who departed some time since to return to Italy, finesses and puts off his return, by command of the Emperor, waiting for some men-of-war whom the Emperor is sending under cover of his passage to Italy, and writes nothing to his Holiness, except to beguile him. It is to be feared, considering this delay, that the Emperor would give another venue to the Pope, especially as he feels himself at present weak in Rome. You and the English ambassadors had better advise his Holiness to raise some men of war as a guard for the defence of his person ; and if the Pope should excuse himself as being unable to bear the expence, you shall tell him from me that I also have a marvellous expence to bear, as every one knows, but will nevertheless do my best to help him in this, as I believe the king of England will do also. St. Germain en Laye, . . . Dec. 1528.

French.

13 Dec.

5028. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand, III.
224.

As the packets I have sent by the ordinary posts hitherto have been long upon the road, and Wolsey informs me that he is going to despatch Dr. Kenit (Knight) tomorrow, I have determined to send this courier express to give you a summary of his charge, so far as Wolsey has informed me of it, that you may have leisure to consider it before his arrival. Wolsey proposes that we should use all honorable means to draw the Pope to our side, which will be surely accomplished if Ravenna and Cervia be placed in the hands of these two kings, as they would be a sort of guarantee of his faith ; moreover, that you should give him a guard of 1,000 men, under the viscount De Turenne, and the king of England as many, under Gregory de Casalis, to put him in such surety that he will be able to proceed impartially,—which done, his Holiness, if you think fit, will send with diligence to enjoin on all princes a truce of a year and a half or two years, and, when that is concluded, summon a great assembly in Avignon, to which he shall come in person to meet Madame on the part of Francis, Wolsey on the part of Henry VIII., and the Emperor's chancellor on behalf of his master, or perhaps the Emperor himself, to be crowned there by common consent, with representatives from the other powers to conclude a general peace, with deliverance of the children. But if the Emperor cannot be brought to reason, a great expedition should immediately be prepared by all the confederates against Spain, to continue, not for six or eight months like the others, but until the deliverance of the children.

This is the substance of his proposal, for which the Pope's aid is necessary ; and, if followed, he engages by means of his Holiness to make Andrea Doria withdraw, and thus break the whole designs of the Emperor. If the Pope refuse, which is not likely, the expedition against Spain should be got up at once, without any talk about truce. Moreover, he desires to be your counsellor in this, more specially than he has been for some time, in order to spur you on in these affairs, being determined for his own part not to spare his life, honor, or anything that he has. He intends to give you an account, every four or five days, of all that he thinks, and wishes a freer statement of your own opinions than he has had for some time. For this he will send over my lord of Bath, as he did last summer, and for the matter of war Master "feu Guillaume" (Fitzwilliam), the two most sufficient personages here, to be continually with you; and wishes you would send hither, to be with me, some one of Fitzwilliam's quality, that we might continually consult together. When Knight comes you need not pretend to know anything about this.

1528.

Nothing more has occurred since my letters of the 10th, except that I assure you Messire Silvester has done the Emperor as bad service (servy aussi-bien à rebours) as if you had been teaching him all his life. London, 13 Dec.

P.S.—I think, from what Wolsey said, something has been already mooted at Rome about this guard for the Pope, and I suspect that he has already obtained some assurance from his Holiness that he will do what is proposed, and that Andrea Doria can be secured. Campeggio, by his fashion of denying it, tacitly acknowledges that Doria has done nothing without the Pope's consent; but I will not be sure that he was not dissembling (qu'il ne le feist par mine), that the Pope might be held in better estimation.

Fr. Add.

14 Dec.

5029. SCOTLAND.

R. O.

Treaty of Berwick, 14 Dec. 1528.

Rym. xiv. 278.

Lat.

Cal.B.vii. 123.

2. Modern copy.

B. M.

R. O.

3. Another modern copy.

5030. TREATY OF BERWICK.

Cal.B.vii. 205.

B. M.

"Copy of a proclamation devised by the commissioners both for England and Scotland," on their meeting at Berwick, to the effect that they have concluded a peace for five years, and ordered redress to be made for all injuries since the meeting of Norfolk and Arran at the West Ford of Norham. It is appointed, inter alia, that no Englishman or Scotchman inhabit the Debateable Ground of the West Marches, "neither with stub, stake, nor otherwise, but with bit of mouth for pasturing of cattle," from sunrise to sunset, according to old custom. When the Wardens on both sides shall have met for redress for the Middle Marches at Kirsop Mouth, on 11 Jan. next, the next meeting shall be at the West Marches on Thursday the 14th. The day of true for the East Marches shall be at Spilaw, beside Coldstream, 8 January, and at Ridan Borne on the 4th. Signed: Will'us Scott—Androu Ker—Ad. Otturburn.

Copy, the heading in Magnus's hand, pp. 2. Endd.: "A copy of a proclamation," &c.—in a somewhat later hand, "1534."

14 Dec.

5031. SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Has received his letters dated "at your place of Dureham," 9 Dec. Will do his best to execute the King's commands, with the assistance of the mayor of Rye, the customer and controller. Has delivered to the French captain the French ambassador's letter, showing that he had given surety for the captain's making answer to anything that might be objected against them. Sends two of the Frenchmen to Wolsey, one being the captain of the French king's galleon, who has been conformable to everything required of them. His ship was so well furnished that he could not have been taken by force with the loss of 1,000 men. Trusts never to meddle with them again unless ordered by the King to put harness on his back. "They be very unreasonable people, without trusting of any man."

Hopes for the defence of Rye and Winchester that the blockhouse at the 1528.

SIR EDW. GULDEFORD to WOLSEY—cont.

Kevill may be finished with six pieces of good artillery. As it stands on his grounds he could keep it at small cost to the King. Would annoy the King's enemies in the Camer or Podle with 40 persons rather than with 5,000 on land. Rye is in greater danger than ever; the sea goes almost round it, "not lacking at some tides twenty or thirty foot." Ships can lie within a stone's cast from the town wall, and the town would not be able to resist them. The town of Winchelsea has made a bridge over Dynesdale towards the blockhouse. Wishes Sir Will. Fitzwilliam, treasurer of the household, would view the blockhouse, and certify the King as to the expediency of finishing it. Rye, 14 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

15 Dec. 5032. CLEMENT VII. to HENRY VIII.

R. O.

Credence for Francesco Campano. Rome, 15 Dec. 1528.

St. P. VII. 116.
Theiner, p. 562.

Hol. Signed: "J."

15 Dec. 5033. THE SAME to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 163 b.

To the same effect. Same date.

B. M.

Lat.

Burnet, iv. 63.
Theiner, p. 563.

15 Dec. 5034. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Has just seen the chest he has so long looked for. The owner wants 8*l.* Fl. for it, as there is none other of like making, strength and goodliness. Will try and get him to take a lower price; if not, will buy it. Begs to hear from him. Will leave for London a month after Christmas. Begs to be commended to Cromwell's mother, "after you my most singular friend." Barrugh, 15 Dec. 1528. Encloses a letter for John Creke.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c. Maister Crumwell, besides the Fryeres Augustyns, London.

16 Dec. 5035. [TAYLER to WOLSEY.]

Cal. D. x. 366.

B. M.

"[P]leas it your Grace, of the arrival of Mr. Brian [and Mr. Vannes at] the French court, and of their wise demeanour, a[n]d [a]ll things committed to their charges here to be propos[ed] said Mr. Peter by his letters, to the which we have sub hath certified, and informed your Grace that it were sup the same with any other letters concerning this matter that Mr. Peter, discreetly, plainly, and very substantial[ly declared] the articles of his instructions to the King's grace, and ly[kewise] the same to Madame his mother, so that nothing effectual or omitted, to the which the King gave very gracious and mind, as more plainly it appeareth in his letters. And ho[wbeit that at] this time I received no letters, for the urgent and manifold [business with] which your Grace is continually occupied, yet the relation th[e which] Mr. Peter made unto me of the gracious mind and favor [you had] toward me, your Grace committed to him to expound unto m[e doth] marvellously rejoice and comfort me, that I think I can neve[r do any] service, as may deserve, or be equivalent to this your benign [grace and] favour; wherefore in as humble manner and with as good faith [as heart can] think, I thank your Grace, beseeching the same of persevera[nce in the same, and my] service and prayer shall be for the preservation of the pro[sperity of] the same.

"News other than be contained in Mr. Peter his lette[rs there is none] of 1528.

importance, saving that the duke of Ferrara his [ambassador told us] this day, that betwixt Modona and Ferrara in the d[uchy of] there was laid in bushment 300 horsemen and 500 fot[emen to take the] young Duke and his wife Madame Renera, the w[hich design was] disclosed, and they that lay in bushment fled sent a gentleman to the Pope to know whet[her] the Pope had writ pleasant briefes to all receive and cherish * * for urgent causes concerning his Holiness, a . . landinus was out of his said castle, by a buss[hment] he was taken prisoner and another certain numbe[r] where is found 40,000 ducats and more; the which [money, as it is thou]ght, will be the occasion of his death. For the which pra[ctice] tys the noblemen of Lombardy be not well content, [and give evi]ll credence to his fair words.

“[Fur]thermore, the count Saynt Paull hath taken a strong [castle of] the Genues called Seravall, and as the duke of Fe[rarra wr]yteth hither for a certainty there be but 1,500 soldiers [at present in M]illane.” Paris, 16 Dec. 1528.

Mutilated.

5036. [PETER VANNES] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 280.

B. M.

“[R^{me}] atque Ill^{me} Domine, [post humillimas] commendationes. Aliis communibus [litteris scrip]si, quæ digna putavi ut signific[arem]. Hæc pauca] addere volui, quod ubi Regi Chr[istianissimo R. D. V. com-] mendassem exposuissemque princip[em] nullum esse de quo V. R^{ma} D. post r[egem nostrum] cupiat ex animo, quam de illo bene me[reri, dixit] statim et amicissimo vultu: “R^{mi} D. L[egati amorem] ac fidem erga me perinde ac ipsam [perspectis]simam habeo;” habet- que re vera optimi et amantissimi amici loco, consiliariumque sibi inter quos præcipuum primariumque locum [vestræ] R^{me} D. assignaturus. Petit præterea [quod si R. D. V.] quicquam haberet quod seorsum vellet Ro[mano pontifici] et præsertim de quodam episcopatu quibus literis, tum pecuniis ei adesset. Ad quæ [maximas illi] gratias egi, et non recusavi literas qua[s mihi] ultro obtulit, sicque literas in eam s[upradictam] finem scripsit, in quam res propri[æ] Ill^{me} autem Dominæ matris erga R^{mam} D. [vestram] nullis unquam literis possem assequi, cu[jus minime] obscurum indicium futurum, quod vestra fide, quam in se reposuit et tur ad mutuam be[nevolentiam] * * *
 ea D. Bajocensem, v scripsisse ut de negotio s viris ageret, jam ex doct qui et judicio et conscientia rrimi, quod si R^{ma} D. V. dig[naretur] se secreto ad eam prescribere, c secretissime ac diligentissime de [cog]noscat. Rex Chr. putat nisi Italia fuerint superiores futurum n [qu]icquam certi de pontifice sperandum sit.

“[Dom]inus decanus Wellensis† bene valet et [br]evi consuetudine tantum oblectatus es[t] [vir]tutem illi ingentem animum ad literas ca[pescendas] accessisse. Illius vivendi modus stud[iorumque r]atio, sic mihi probatur, ut putem ill[um n]on minus literis quam ipsi literas ornamento deco[r]ique fu[turas. Levavi illum magna sollicitudine quod [suspica]batur, V. R^{mam} D. non esse animo in se [satis pa]cato; ingenuo profecto est animo, et qu[atenus a]uderem, rogarem humillime R^{mam} D. V. [ut eum a]liquanto liberalius enutrirer, dum una h us

1528.

[PETER VANNES] to WOLSEY—cont.

perspexi apud nobiles omnes viros [æ]stimatione haberi, quam rare aut co . . .

. Rex Chr. flor generalem capitaneum honorif Ducis Ferrariæ, qui amici [vi]detur admodum futurus ex eo Huc nuper advenit quidam abas in Regno Neapolitano est optimæ Chr^{mo} nunc nova molitur, videturque velle illius opera uti.

“Ex fido loco intellexi ex impositio[ne] oppidorum ac civitatum assidue collig adeo quod existimetur Regem Chr[istianissimum] . . . Martii exacturum nihilo minus quam auri.

“Ferme omnes periculosissima itinera abrupta, cænoque et aqua omnia obruta interierunt, nonnullos tempestas trans . .
. nostrum tamen iter, quam diligentissime fieri [potest exe-] quemur. Ego Deum testor multo pl ab itinere timeo longe plus quam ol[im] nec aliquid plus solatii afferet, quam xero, v. R^{mo} D. benevolent esse, hanc ego sciens nunquam pe humillime ac devotissime me [R^{mo} D. V. commen]do. Parisiis die”

Hol., mutilated. Add.: My lord Legate's good grace.

16 Dec. 5037. SIR GREGORY CASALE to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Resolved to send to England Vincenzo Casale, his half-brother, to explain respecting the divorce what he cannot so well write. Desires Wolsey to give him credence. Rome, 16 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

17 Dec. 5038. JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 164.

B. M.

Burnet, iv. 64.

When your courier arrived with letters of 2 Nov. to my brother, Sir Gregory, at Bologna, who could not through weakness go to Rome, to avoid delay he sent my brother Vincenzo, and I forthwith went to the Pope, and read and explained to him the letters to the following effect: that he could not doubt the affection of the Cardinal for the Holy See;—with what care the King's cause had been studied in England, and brought to its present point;—whereas Campeggio, instead of proceeding, will not obey the King's commands, nor allow Wolsey to see his commission, though he is his colleague;—did he intend the King to be deluded in this way? Hereupon the Pope, with expressions of anger, laid his hand upon my arm, and forbad me to proceed, saying there was but too good foundation for complaint, and he was deceived by his own confidants; that he had granted the decretal merely to be shown to the King, and forthwith burnt; that he had been drawn to this by the most urgent entreaties to prevent manifest ruin, whereas Wolsey now wished to divulge it; that he had never consented it should be shown to the King's councillors. “And I can show you,” said he, “the letters of the cardinal of York in confirmation of what I say, and produce Sir Gregory as an evidence that Gardiner made no further demands of me, and, if he had, he would not have obtained them: I see how much evil is likely to follow from it, and will gladly recall what has been done, even to the loss of one of my fingers.”

When he spoke thus, contrary to his usual custom, I replied that it was not your desire to divulge the bull, or give judgment according to its tenor, but only to show it to a very few, whose secrecy might be depended on.
Was it not applied for on these grounds? What could induce his Holiness to change his sentiments?

1528.

At this he grew more angry and more excited, saying he saw the bull would be the ruin of him, and he was resolved to make no further concessions. "But," said I, "let your Holiness consider what ruin and what heresy will be occasioned in England upon the alienation of the King's mind by this resolution on the part of your Holiness. If the concession has been evil, it is a less evil to avoid a greater." Then, falling on my knees before him, I begged of him to have some consideration for the King, of the peril of losing his friendship, and of the danger that would accrue to us who had always been his faithful servants.

Hereupon, tossing his arms about, and in the greatest agitation, "I do," said he, "consider the ruin which now hangs over me; I repent what I have done. If heresies arise, is it my fault? My conscience acquits me. None of you have reason to complain; I have performed my promise, and the King and the Cardinal have never asked anything in my power which I have not yielded with the utmost promptness; but I will do no violence to my conscience. Let them, if they like, send the Legate back again, on the pretext that he will not proceed in the cause, and then do as they please, provided they do not make me responsible for injustice."

"Well," said I, "is your Holiness unwilling that proceedings should be taken by virtue of the commission?" He assented. "But then," I said, "Campeggio opposes your wish, and dissuades the divorce." "Well," said the Pope, "I commissioned him to dissuade the King from the divorce, and to persuade the Queen; but he is to execute his commission." "Then we are at one, Holy Father," said I; "and, if so, what harm can there be in showing the decretal, under an oath, to a few of the Privy Council?" He shook his head, and said, "I know what they intend doing, but I have not yet read the letters of Campeggio out of England; therefore come to me tomorrow." Vincenzo was present at the interview.

Next day was held a "signature," at which I was present as referendary; and, as the Pope was tired, I did not like to trouble him. The day following I visited him. Having made a brief of your Grace's letter, I began with that part of it in which it is stated that his Holiness had granted a commission general in the most ample form, with promise to ratify the sentence. He admitted it, but said he had never agreed that the decretal should be submitted to the King's councillors, repeating what he had said before; and that as Campeggio had followed his instructions, the bull ought to have been burnt according to arrangement. He refused to be bound by the bull, or to have it shown to any privy councillors, declining to discuss the subject further.

I then proceeded to another part of your instructions, in which you state that Campeggio had endeavored to dissuade the divorce. The Pope replied that Campeggio told him he had used his endeavors to persuade the Queen to the divorce, but found her adverse to it;—that she had spoken humbly, and asked to have counsellors from Spain, who were denied her, and she was allowed them from Flanders. He said he gave Campeggio letters for the King in his own hand, requesting credence for the Cardinal.

To that part of your letter where it is stated that Campeggio will not proceed to sentence until he has informed the Pope, he replied that Campeggio would proceed whenever it was required. And all that he had enjoined upon him was, that as soon as the process commenced he (the Pope) should be informed of it.

To Wolsey's complaint that Campeggio would not trust him with the commission, the Pope said it was so, and that it was done to avoid publicity. "But," said I, "let your Holiness see that, in the words which are here written, you had granted a commission consenting that it might be shown to certain of the King's councillors." He was angry, and said, "I will show you the letters of Wolsey, and they and my word are as much to be trusted as those which you now produce." I apologised for being so pressing, but alleged the occasion and the dangers that would ensue.

1528.

JOHN CASALE to WOLSEY—cont.

With regard to the arrangement between himself and the Imperialists, through the intervention of the General, he said he had made no promises, nor knew what conditions the General would bring; as stated in my letters of 15 Nov. He has communicated with De Monte and S. Quatuor; but of the decretal he has said nothing to any one, and will have no record of it preserved. He is willing that Campeggio shall proceed to sentence, although some of the cardinals and the Imperial ambassador protest against it, and demand that the cause shall be advocated to Rome.

I talked on another day with him about the Venetian affairs, and what Gardiner had done in the matter of Cervia and Ravenna. He said he was obliged for the King's interposition, but it has done him no service; that it was a condition in the League, if one of the confederates were injured, the others should repel it; and that the Imperialists would persuade him that the Venetians would never have held out, if they had imagined that their opposition was displeasing to the kings of France and England. I endeavored to explain.

When I reverted to the King's cause, and inquired whether some means might not be discovered for exhibiting the bull to some of the King's councillors, the Pope said "No," and forbid me to speak further on that subject. Since then, no efforts have been successful in changing his resolution; and on telling him that my brother Sir Gregory would be in Rome the day following, he said he should be glad to see him, but it would make no change in his resolution. My brother has since arrived, but has not been able to shake the Pope's determination. Sends Vincenzo Casale to explain.

The cardinals are very much offended, seeing how much they have lately suffered, at the remission of fees required by the Cardinal for the expedition of Winchester. I told them that their fees would not be less if your Grace were to take one see and give up another, than if somebody else had Winchester only; and that you did not care much about it. They said there was no doubt that you would prefer Winchester. On referring the matter to a consistory, the Pope proposed to make an abatement, but the cardinals will not consent. Rome, 17 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat. Add.

17 Dec. 5039. GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. IV.

339.

B. M.

*Hear today from the court that John Almain is sent to prison for sending information of the Emperor's doings to the French king. The same thing has been written to the Emperor's chancellor and to the governor of Bresse, who has returned to the court. Thinks the Chancellor will not be sorry, for he and Almain have not well agreed for some time. The words of the letter sent to the bishop of Worcester about Almain are partly Latin, partly Italian, e dicto nel vulgi de omnibus actis et rebus Cæsareis reddebat certio rem Gallum. Can hear nothing more about the Irish matter. By other letters they hear that on the 5th inst. 2,000 men left Valencia for Genoa; that the journey of Italy begins to slack, and the Emperor has been more cold in his purpose since the 10th of the month, though men are still being levied; that the Cardinal late general of the Observants, and another ambassador, who were going to the Pope, are still at Barcelona, and it is thought they will not go. The writer thinks that the reason of the slackening of the Emperor's purpose is because the Chancellor has taken leave to go on a pilgrimage, and without him nothing is done; and he thinks the preparation may be for other purposes. Valladolid, 17 Dec. 1528. *Signed.

P. 1. Lee's hand. Cipher, deciphered by Tuke. Add. Endd.

1528.

17 Dec.

5040. GHINUCCI BISHOP OF WORCESTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

He will understand what has passed by their common letters.
 Forbears to trouble him. Valladolid, 17 Dec. 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. and sealed. Endd.

17 Dec.

5041. [VANNES] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 259.

B. M.

“ et domine, domine
 Decembris, Parisium pervenu[m] m accepissemus, Dominum magnum [qua]sdam suas, non procul a recto nostro iti[nere] ctum illuc usque divertimus, tum quod nonnulli us nos jam salutaverant, tum vero quod putavimus post commendationes ac salut[at]iones summatim dicere, gravissimi momenti que actionibus nos habere in mandatis, ut exponeremus, expedireque ut ejus Dominatio dum, d omnino adsit, multa interim de ejus pru[dentia] Regiæ Majestatis in eum studio addentes, atque ita humaniter excepisset, seque ad aulam promisiss[e infra] biduum venturum, Parisium perreximus, sed ad molestamque noctem. Die sequenti cum Domino omnia contulimus, quæ fidei nostræ credita [sunt]. Die autem xj. ad Poysy ivimus, quod Rex apud S.
 [Germanum] ageret, statimque de nostro adventu certiore[m] [feci]mus, atque ita nunciavit, ut postero die [ad aulam] accederemus, quo sub horam prandii, quum nec adhuc Rex sacro interfuisset, sol[it]as Regis nostri et vestræ reverendissimæ Dominationis commendationes fecim[us] credentiæ literas exhibuit, his lectis habere in mandatis quæ secum age * * * * *
 . . . e gratulatus est, Regiæ M dinem et quantum fraterno illius ciæ Italiæque successibus, hæc postmodum et, Cæsarianos in regno Neapolitano [ci]vitate sævissima peste confici, prima is et viceregem gravissime laborare præsertim Germanos ad exiguum numer[um] esse reduc[tos] et dominum Renzium, in dies magis vene copiis exercitum augere, amissaque recuperare confidat, res illas felicissime gestas iri, e tani, tanto impensius Gallis favebant q[ua]nto gravius in Cæsarianos odium conceperan[t] quorundam nobilium crudelem cædem, co[m]item] S. Pauli ad certa loca expugnanda proce-[dere]. Retulit præterea fratrem Generalem qu[em] Italiam versus expedierat, ubi primum c[og]novit Cæsar suos in Italia successus non tam [pros]- peros esse ut animo conceperat, fuisse reu tum vel subsistere jussum.
 Rex vero Chr[istianissimus] va[lidam] suam classem tum navium tum tri-remi[um] a] Marsilia jam præmiserat, eo quidem con[silio] ut po[st]quam Andream Dorian Genuæ conclusisset et in adventum usque fratris Gene[ralis] * * * * *
 [sum]ptibus aut periculis cum sua classe intercipiat perrexit; nos vero cum admira . . .
 us, viro certe ut conjicere potuim[us]
 prudenti, tum probo et Ser^{mi} Domini [nostri] [d]evotissimo, tantaque humanitate nobiles [n]os excipiebant, ut sui in nos studii [f]acerent, mox statim a prandio acc adivimus, ac post unum aut alterum ver[bu]m hinc et] inde familiariter habitum, ego Petrus e cepi, nostri adventus causam, tanta quanta it, dexteritate adhibita, utque ejus animu[m] haberem faciliorem, nihil ab initio omisi [ejus quod] esset in instructionibus præ-scriptum, vel rim excogitare de constantissimo Regiæ M[ajestatis] animo, de fraterno affectu nodoque amicitia[rum] [indissolu]bili; visusque est Rex Chr^{mus} ad hæc verb[a] imis] præcordiis recreari. Dixi præterea tantum um quo Rex noster invictissimus illum prosequ

1528.

[VANNES] to WOLSEY—cont.

omnes actiones quæ publicam causam quæ concernunt, cum eo velit habere communes ut suum semper his iudicium quod mag Christianissimæ Majestatis causis expedire, diet s atque ita postquam nomine R conatus de rebus pr rmavi, de spe pacis, quam Jacobus Salviatus scripserat de p[re]sidente] Rothomagensi, qui ad decem jam tran [e]x Urbe reversus est, de nostro etiam a effectum ad Urbem itinere, de mittend nibus maximeque necessarium esse et opt dignum ut nihil relinquatur, inexpertum u succedat. Hæc omnia incredibili cura audivit, subjunxitque Regiæ Majestatis iudicium es[se] quod] interim dum de pace agitur, advertatur Cæsaris fallaciam, eoque in loco exposui ing Cæsare suspicionem, sub eo prætextu ferat per Pontificem de pace velle agi et retuli, quæ ejus Sanctitatem continere possint ne . . . fallatur a mellitis Cæsaris ostentationibus mox ad contributionem illam communem ut n [te]neatur Pontifex et neutralis, donec viderit sp[em] aliquam conciliandæ pacis superesse, hic constiti Chr^{mi} Regis iudicium et voluntatem expectans ubi paulisper secum cogitasset, in hæc verb[a] respondit: Vultisne ut ad articulos quos ad omnia vobis respondeamus h responsi genus ejus volun omisisse. Primo de [con]stantia ac fide non minus cer so et sciebat futurum nunquam quod ab quod etiam si præsentibus oculis videret ere posset, et de hoc longiori nulla erat opus. Cetera vero summatim o probavit, sicque laudavit, ut dixerit p nihil aut amantius excogitari potuisse Regiæ Majestatis consilium atque iudicium, sed a per Pontificem componendæ, exiguum ad spem videbat, redierat balivus Rothom[agensis] nil habebat, nisi quod allaturum sperabat generalem et generalibus verbis, tanquam o pater, solum hortatus est Regem Chr. ad monuitque ut interim suis rebus strenue p omnia se facturum obtulit, sed animo, consi[lio et] voluntate, quum vires ad cætera desint ad Pontifice nequeat, plura expectare, et ait semper fidelissima consilia dedisse, et ino Rex Chr. dixit quod in nostris obeundis primum expediens ac necessarium esse u ingenium accurate notetur quod ip modum descripsit. Pontifex in do perculso atque deject[o] gloria quoque pontifici proponatur q animo semper fuerit glorioso et quum antea putaverit prudentia se aliis pr Cui mox rerum eventus non respondit eo omnis existimatio et autoritas ap[ud] Italos et alios omnes imminuta et deje[cta] tunc maxime putabit Pontifex se al et suum honorem instaurari, si viderit a [Regia] Majestate et Christianissimo se magnifieri, præterea Christianissimus quod ita ingenium pontificis explora ut quacunque contributione pro custodia quæ præsidio et quibuscunque demonstratis periculis n obstantibus nunquam adducetur ut quicquam faciat contra Cæsarem, sed ad id opus est indirecto a [m]odo eum allicere, videlicet, Pontifex maxi ata rerum suarum cura atque ita paulati[m] persuaderi ut aliquam injuriam ulcisc[atur] contra] Cæsarem, sed privatim con minus fideret, cogereturque quu[m] aret, ultro in nostrum arbitrium convo postea de rebus publicis ac priva[tis] [v]ellemus, nullo labore obtineremus autem Rex Chr^{mus} omnia communiter eff[ec]tus est quæ velit Regia Majestas, ea tamen [conditione] ne illius prætextu quicquam interim molia[tur] contra confœderatos utpote Venetos [ducem] Fer-1528.

rariorum, Florentinos, etc. et pro ejus S[ancit]ate] si nos et ejus Romae agentes, praesentibus o dire viderimus, satis esse putat numerus peditum, de hac ideo re commis-sionem se promisit ad suos oratores ut nobiscum c[onsulant] prout expedire judicaverimus, porro one pacis Romae tractanda, si sic eve illinc desperata et dolosa omnia eventura dat, omnia concessit que petimus ut m cum Regiae Majestatis voluntate concurrat
 . . . sionem aliis secretis literis se restrict ut Regia Majestate et eo de omnibus inconsultis, nil concludatur [pon]tificem, aliam spem pacis * *
 [re]cuperare quum stantibus termin[is] io bello nec precibus quicquam poss terum Rex Chr[ist]us, quamvis nec sper deatur ut res suae ab alio compon a Regia Majestate vel R[ex] D. V. conten in omnem eventum, omnia experiri verbatim, ut nostra est, commissionem mitte aliis vero literis commendatitiis omnia s [be]nignissime concessit, in eam sententiam volumus, affirmans imprimis se cupere [si via] aliqua demonstrare possit tot vincula qu[ibus] Regiae M[ajestatis] adstringitur, et super hoc m loquutus, adeo ut, quoad ex vultu ac conjicere potuimus, existimemus nihil a posse in optimo, amantissimo et prudentiss[imo] fratre desiderari.

“ [M]ox paucula interjecta pausa, ego Petr[us] literis a Regiae
 Majestatis oratoribus ex Hispani[a] [a] Domino Silvestro ex Bajona allatis, et d[e] respo[n]so misso agere cepi, primoque co verbis et his potissi[mum] * *
 [tran]quillitatis gratia et ejus Chr[ist]i [Regis] itu res aliquando componantur et ta gnorumque destructio sedetur, proinde [S]il. ei forsitan omnia antea exposuisset Majestas inse-quens illam fidem et constanti[am] ac perpetuo stabilitam, omnia secum cons in mandatis nobis dederat ut non solum ex Hispania allatum sed suum de eo judic[ium] Chr[ist]i Majestati referremus. In initio itaque om[nem] suspicio[nem] quae concipi potuisset abjeci, omnemque quae potuisset subrepere, expurgavi, quod facillimum fuit quum Rex Chr. dixerit n Regia Majestate dubitare nec posse nec debere. Hoc in loco responsi exemplar priusquam derer legendum exhibui, quod ille aperui sed tunc non legit, dicens se antea acc vidisse, et ubi diluissem callidas susp[icion]es quae primo aspectu ex Caesaris responso rant, ad conditiones et qualification[es] per Cancel[arium] et Alemandum oblatas deveni culari componenda et distinct * * * ioni ad id deveniri posse, nisi i particulari pace sed bene quali retuli Regiae Majestatis nomine tanquam
 d consultationis gratia ut pote qu maxime necessaria, Regia Majestas esse e et quamvis celeri consultatione et responso egerent, tamen absque unanimi consensu, R[ex] Chr.] nihil decernere aut respondere volebat responsum, hic petii, quae suae Chr. Majestati his foret voluntas, atque sententia. Pri[mum] optimo meo fratri, quam ex corde possum gratias [ago] et tantum illi debeo, quantum nec ego, n[ec] meum regnum nec posteritas queat unquam exol[vere] et eam firmam spem de optimo meo fratre co[n]cepi] ut credam me nunquam ab illo destitutum [fore], quam nos spem uno omnes ore multis ration[ibus] confirmavimus. Mox inquit Rex Chr[ist]us re[rum] omnium difficultas inter me et Caesarem ad duo nctas redacta est. Primo an contentus ess[et] de tractatu Burgensi; secundo an oblat [Si]lvestrum articulos malit admittere
 * * * us ad nihil minus quam

1528.

[VANNES] to WOLSEY—cont.

ad pacem in um id agens, ut ex generali demon[stra-tione] . . . [a]pparatus impediatur, suos, ut facit s eat et in anni initio dormientes n sperantes aggrediatur, necessarium profe huic rei mature invigiletur. De pace [particu]lari, si pacem Cæsar cuperet, non re[cusavi] ut nos etiam in ea comprehenderemur, q tates facile possent resolveri, verum tamen et si quod non auderemus libere remittere, ser[enissi]mi nostri fratris dispositioni, tamen in tra[ctatu] solemni in initio et confirmato, in fide s data et accepta cavetur, ne ulla parti[cularis] pax agatur; quem tractatum ac fidem pot[ius] moriar quam in aliquo unquam violem, sed si [aliquid] in ea parte derogare vellemus, si frat[er noster] de particulari pace vellet agere, posset extrema inde mea destructio, omnino etenim conatus est Cæsar miris o cum Pontifice seorsum tractare, cum Florentinis, cum duce Mediolani * *
 * * tiones quæ in ejus et confœder[atorum] [ben]eficium, Regiam Majestatem movebant ut ce securis conditionibus qualifica [qua]s rationes Chr[ist]us laudavit, probavit e gratias egit, ita tamen ut nunquam dimove[retur] quin insisteret tractatum vigori et co impedimento, atque conclusit quod super hac consul-tationem haberet, et statim post discessum, ad Regiam Majestatem mitteret Dominum d per quem animum suum significaret, tam super h[ac] quam super aliis omnibus. De commissione vero [mittenda] in Hispaniam, casu quo Cæsar ad aliquos ar[ticulos] per D. Silvestrum propositos deveniret, dixit neminem habere, sed iter non esse longum ac [si mini]mum ad id Cæsar venerit statim commission[em] mittet et oratores.

“Distincte postea nobis enarravit res suas [in] Italia in optimo esse statu et res Neapolitana[s] fe[liciter] cedere, classem suam validissimam esse [et] indies fortius augeri; nam cum intelligat Cæ[sar] * * * In Italia a mediocrem velle alere exercitum ad ea conservanda quæ indies occupantur e Italiæ partem conti-nendam in fide, nam fecit ex hostium numero, quantum copiarum sufficiat, ex animoque affirmat hæc duo st ut hoc anno in mari Cæsare omnino s deinde ut valido exercitu ipse personaliter [invaderet] Hispa[niam], ut filios recuperet, pacem deferat . . .
 tissima pace cum Hispanis agat, ita ut Hispaniæ manifestissimum sit futurum, pacem [desidera]ri ac peti, describit etiam Hispaniæ loca oppida munitiora, et morem gentium, qu præ-sentibus oculis antea examinasse, et a exploratissima habere dicit, narravit dum commode illuc per Baionam deduce et quibus militibus ad hanc expediti[onem] * * * [si di]gnetur Regia Majestas pro innata sua [benevolentia et fr]aterno affectu in filios accipere, p[osset] [co]nservator illis esse. Diximus opti[mum] esse et magnanimum res gerendi mod[um] judicabamus magnis nervis et opib[us] esse opus. Respondit de pecuniis pre provisiones ad Hispanicam solummodo expe[ditionem] sibi abunde esse provisum ad octo usque n menses, ante quem finitum terminum sperat Deo duce expeditionem posse finire, nec fo perpetuo fauturam Cæsaris ambitioni etiam hunc pugnandi modum longe diversum [esse] a Cæsaris expectatione vel apparatu, nam nus in Italiam misit milites rerum inexpertos quos multo labore colligere potuit, et quibus u prima stipendia persolvit, et quos dura necessi[tas] e]t oblata spes rapinæ atque depopulationis, illic in [n]utrivit. In Hispania vero cogetur continue [stipen]dia militibus subministrare, non licebit in oppida, Hispanis dare videbunt * * *

1528.

..... iscribis exercitum * * * [co]nsilia convertisse, nam ait paulatim nil aliud hactenus profuisse, quam sine fir pecuniam effudisse, et sperat quum Deu[s] perspectum] habeat, ejus ad pacem animum futurum divina ope, ipsius conatibus faveat, r id rediit perniciosissimum esse, quum res in b sint, quicquam seorsum agere, nisi de con[cordia] universali, præsertim quod Cæsar videtur rerum suarum fundamentum in confœderato[rum dis-jun]ctione constituisse. Interim Rex Chr^{mus} videt aliquos mercatores et subditos R[egis nostri] sic suis in Flandria commerciis esse dedi[ctos ut] illis carere nolint, utque Regia Majestas ab i[psorum] cla-moribus tuta sit, expedire judicat [quod] Domina Margareta prorogantur induciæ petente et instante illa, quamvis Dominus de Be[ures] dicat se etiam dicta Domina renitente [mandatum] habere ut intas inducias abrumpat petiissem, facile id futurum respond xerat hominem quendam m [d]e Islysten qui in * * * ut induciæ prorogare[ntur]
..... recusaret Domina Margareta ducetur vel mediocri timore impu Rex Chr^{mus} nunc jam monuit suos
..... [u]t Flandriæ confiniis invigilent collect intra biduum in Piccardiam mittet Du[cem] ad decem mille pedites recensendos et bo equitum, quod faciet tum ut Dominam Marg[aretam] adigat ad petendam induciarum prorog[ationem] tum etiam ut res suas tueatur et percipiat illum in ejus doloris artibus nequitiam conqui nuper enim molitus est Dominus de Beures repentino quodam impetu per fraudem et d[olum] ...
Moterolum, Corbyes et nescio quæ alia loca oc[cupare]; quibus rebus omnibus,
Rex Chr^{mus} undique dit. Injecit etiam mentionem de Gravellino, [affirmans] illinc facile conjici quo tendant Cæsariani permittantur, et putat Rex Chr. si ita op[us] fuerit pro induciis prorogandis expedire ut [Re]gia Majestas etiam cum jactura quatuor aut [etiam qui]nque millium scutorum aliquam publica ostenta[tione] de conscribendis militibus, vel navibus sequestrandis, aliquid agat tu * * *
..... are decem mille pedites, videlicet [e]x his qui sponte et amico pectore u eosque quorum robur expertissimum habet
..... alis exercitus circa se constituere et tractare, ut illos non pœniteat itineris, et q abunde omnia providere et quorum sit ...
..... præ cæteris præcipuam rationem, deinde etiam videtur stipendia, pro quattuor mille German[orum] ... se brevi de rebus omnibus cum Regia Majestate cum qua ubi omnia bene discusscrit, id exequi communi consilio visum fuerit publicis acti[s] expedire.
De his etiam rebus egimus c cum Domina Matre et magno magistro et ide[m] responsum] ab eis reportavimus, quamvis ex verbis conjici potuerit, de particulari pace non magnam futuram in Rege Chr^{mo} difficultat[em] ... confœderatorum impedimentum, et suspicio ob ...
quos Rex Chr^{mus} conatur omni industri[a] fide, hæc scripsimus ut Chr^{mi} Regis c nibus de illo v. R^{ma} D. sua i judicium faciat. Superest nunc ut nos Regiæ M^{ti} commendare. C
..... r. Parisiis, die xvij. * * *

Hol. Mutilated. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace.

17 Dec.

5042. FRANCIS BRYAN and PETER VANNES to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 172.

B. M.

The French king told them that since the death of Mons. [Lautrec] the Spaniards have behaved so cruelly in Naples that the men of the country are revolting, and have supplied senour Raunce with 7,000 or 8,000 men, so that the King thinks himself stronger there than the Emperor. The prince of Orange, the marquis De Guasto, Alarkyn and John Dwerbytt are ill and likely to die. The plague is as bad with them as it was in the French army. Some Spaniards, with the help of the Colonnese, plundered Matrya (Amatrice) in Labruske, but have been all [killed] by senor [Raunce]. Mountjohn, a captain of Almains under St. Poll, has taken Gowa (Gioja), and slain the garrison of 500 Genoese. Vandosme is setting garrisons in all the towns of Picardy. The King says there will be 800 men-at-arms there. He sends Mons. Dowarte as ambassador to England. Expect to be at Rome before the Friar Cardinal of the Observants.

1528.

FRANCIS BRYAN and PETER VANNES to [WOLSEY]—cont.

The son of the duke of Ferrara is made captain of the Florentines. Paris, 17 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 2.

17 Dec.

5043. Friar JOHN WESTE to [TUKE?]

Vit. B. x. 171.

"Right Worshipful Sir,"

B. M.

The father minister and father William Robinson, warden of Greenwich, went yesterday or today to complain of him to my lord's Grace, that my Lord should take away his commission. They will not let him come to London to inquire where Roy was when he was in England with his mother, and to do the rest of his commission. Many of them are guilty of Lutheranism, and they speak ill of the King and Wolsey, and do all they can to put him to trouble for reproving them. They have taken away his f[ellow who] came with him from beyond sea, and sent him in . . . in a ship alone without a fellow, "and all because that I . . . about none of my business, but they will know it . . . will not obey the King's broad seal." Begs him to a[ssist] him with the dispensation as soon as possible, and if it cannot be done before Christmas, to get him a [letter] of an obedience under my Lord's broad seal for himself and his fellow Cornelius Hewtssam, a Dutchman, whom West intends to take, as he knows little English, so that West will be able to act with more secrecy. He can get the letter of obedience from Mr. Steward, master of my Lord's faculties. They will put him in prison, unless he helps him to see Wolsey at Greenwich. At our convent, 17 Dec. 1528.

Asks him to send a letter of comfort by the bearer.

Hol., pp. 2.

17 Dec.

5044. MAGNUS to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. II. 129.

B. M.

St. P. IV. 541.

Was directed in Wolsey's last letters, if he heard of any parliament in Scotland for sending ambassadors to the Emperor to treat of a marriage for James, to disappoint the same by suggesting that they need not despair of the Princess. The great Lords have been for some time assembled at Edinburgh, and have sent home their horses, expecting to make a long stay there. The archbishop of St. Andrew's has been brought back to court for his counsel in their differences. The parliament is put over for the time, but a number of Lords remain to keep Christmas at Edinburgh. Will. Hamilton has been in France for three causes,—to demand the French king's daughter in marriage, the renewal of the league with France, and to desire Francis to get Albany to deliver Dunbar Castle to James. Answer was made: 1, that the daughter of France was too young; 2, that Francis would not confer about the league without the consent of England; and, 3, that he cannot compel Albany to deliver Dunbar. This has alienated Scotland from France, and they now seek other friends.

Soon after Angus's forfeiture, letters came from Flanders, addressed to Archibald Douglas his uncle, as the King's treasurer and provost of Edinburgh, offering him money to solicit the King's marriage with a sister or kinswoman of the Emperor. The matter has since been taken up by the council, and is being negociated by the lord of Ferre or Camfere in Flanders, and the master of the Scotch merchants in Middleburgh. Knowing, therefore, that a parliament is to be kept at Edinburgh on the 18 Jan., has written to Adam Otterburn. Sends a copy of the letter, and one from the Scotch king to himself, with a credence for Otterburn, by whom James sent him a gold ring for a token. It was to desire Magnus to move the King and Wolsey in James's behalf, expressing his wish to have their counsel in all things. Thinks the Scots would be very glad to have the marriage with my lady Princess, and that James will not contract marriage elsewhere without letting the King know.

1528.

Hearing that the archbishop of St. Andrew's was with the King, and daily waited on by the Council as before, wrote him a letter, of which he sends a copy, with the Archbishop's answer. Hopes the King and Wolsey will declare their pleasure to the wardens how they are satisfied with the indentures for Liddesdaill concluded apart from the treaty. Sir Chr. Dacre should be consulted with, as he was privy to the whole matter. Sends a copy of the treaty passed with the Scotch commissioners. Will leave this immediately, and hopes to be with my lord of Richmond by Christmas eve. Berwick, 17 Dec. Signed.

Add. Endd.

17 Dec. 5045. MAGNUS, UGHTRED and TEMPEST to WOLSEY.

Cal. B. II. 91.
B. M.

Met the Scotch commissioners, Sir William Scotte, of Bawery, Mr. Adam Otterborne, the king of Scots' advocate, and Dan Karre, of Farnehirste, on the 9th,—sat for seven days,—concluded a peace for five years. Send the indentures. Have demanded redress, though there is no great inequality in that behalf between the two realms. Have obtained promise of redress for all the attempts committed by the thieves of Liddersdaill, since the peace concluded by Norfolk and Arran at the West ford of Norham, with a right to invade Liddersdaill, and utterly destroy it if redress be refused. Had hard work to obtain this concession, except the Scots had the same liberty upon Tyndale and Riddesdale. This they refused, but conceded the little country of Leven. Have had the advice of Sir Christopher Dacre with Sir William Evres and Roger Lasselles. As the Scotch commissioners had no power, except to treat for peace, they refused to hear the proposal for Angus. Gave it up after much debating. Enclose a proclamation sent by both sides throughout the Borders. The Scots will be sure to make redress for Liddesdale through dread of its extermination. Will meet again for interchange of communications. Think it will be well Henry should write to his nephew, expressing his satisfaction and hope that the peace will be duly observed. Magnus has written to James by Adam Otterborne. Have had communication with the Scots touching the molestation of the Edinburgh merchants by the town of Berwick, in conveying salmon to England, notwithstanding their letters of safe-conduct. This will drive their merchandise into France and Flanders, and enhance the price of salmon. Otterborne thinks Angus will not be reinstated except by Henry's influence. Berwick, 17 Dec. Signed by the above.

Pp. 5. Add.: Un[to my] lord Legate's go[od g]race. Endd.

18 Dec. 5046. ——— to [WOLSEY].

Cal. D. x. 269.
B. M.

“[R^{me} et] Ill^{mo} Domine, D. mi observandissime, post humillimas commendationes, &c. [Nihil magis cu]pio, R^{me} Domine, quam voluntatem meam erga Ser. Regem [et R. D.] V. quibus possum officiis declarare; quæ quidem animi tam mihi jucunda est, cum jucundissimum sit quam utriusque me meritis, debitam esse intelligo. Itaque ubi literis R^{mas} D. V. [certior fac]tus sum, oratores Ser. Regis ad S. D. N. proficisci litera[s] [non] solum ad patrem meum diligentissime scriptas, sed etiam a Pont. tradidi, quarum exemplum hic addi jussi, non ut off[icium] apud R. D. V. osten-1528.

—— to [WOLSEY]—cont.

tarem, sed ut ea perspiceret : apud me, eo quo par fuit fuisse pondere, meque quod bam M. Ser. Regis et R^{mo} D. V. studiosissimum e[ss]e voluntatem, perpetuam fore de me, R^{mo} D. V. pollice ita vero esse et quando volet et quibus in rebus vo[let] experiri poterit R^{ma} D. V. Cui me studiosissime [commendo]. Ex Poissi, xviii. Dec. M.D.”

*Mutilated.5047. —— to CLEMENT VII.

Cal. D. x. 270.

B. M.

“[Beatissime] pater, post pedum oscula beatorum, humillime com-mendationes etc. Ora[tores quos serenissimus An]gliæ Rex ad Sanctitatem tuam mittit attulerunt ad me proxim eodemque Ill^{mo} Card. Eboracense, quibus ille mecum agit uti [me]dium pacis amplectendum cohorter, et res ipsius regis dilig[entissime] com-mendem, quorum utrumque et si minus necessarium esse vid[etur] rea quod S^{tie} T. animus mihi minime obscurus esset, h tamen studiis amplissimi Regis et Ill. Cardinalis non ita mul quendum esse statui. Quid enim prolixius cum S. T. de pa[ce] agam, cujus voluntas nullius adhortationi locum relinquit nullius orationem requirit, qua pacis commoda ostendantu[r et] istius discordiæ incommoda proponantur. Videt enim tanquam e cernuntur incendium istud quo cuncta nunc ardent ac pleraque
. . . . sunt, non alia ratione restringi posse; videt ac clarius quid teri, tam multa Sedis Apostolicæ et consilii publici membra nefa[rio cru]de-lissimi belli impetu disiecta, non nisi studiis pacis posse res[titui] contra communem hostem jam pridem discordiis nostris ita inva dum ut sit nisi res inter Principes conveniat, ne ad resis[tendum im]becilli futuri simus et si tantis Principum odiis nullus dus, non multis post annis fore ut rempublicam Christian[am] efferri videamus, atque hæc quidem cum apert
. . . . ligit, nullius magis esse tam detestand * * *
. . . . cum S. T. sponte sua facturam esse certo sciam no
. . . . orationem ad inflammandam eam adhibeam, sed eam o
. . . . res Clariss. Regis tibi commendandas potius conferam q
. S. T. nullius commendatione indigere plane video
. tia quadam amoris mei et sanctioris ejus-dam observant[iæ] Ill. Cardinalem non committam ut debitum egregiæ ejus virtuti tes[timonium] reddam, ejus sane animus, cum nullo unquam tempore acommo[dis Sedis A]postolicæ augendis ab-horruerit, tum his gravissimis temporibus enæ funestis magis se patefecit vel potius totum in S. T. se ullum enim clarissimus ille Princeps et Christianæ Religionis [proppug]nator acerrimus, reliquit locum declarandæ voluntatis suæ et . æ erga S. T. nullum est genus officii quo non cum aliis sed
s [ce]rtaverit, cum pristinam pietatem suam et vetera in Apostolicam dign[itatem] merita, novis beneficiis superare contenderet. Ita-que omnem operam [atque s]tudium, diligentiam, gratiam, auctoritatem, opes denique Imperii su[ad S.] T. vel conservandam vel juvandam antea contulit, et nunc ad amp dam conferre paratus est; quam sane optimi Regis voluntatem, qu [S. t]uæ notiore esse existimo quam ut pluribus verbis a me commemoret[ur] to quin parem ad illius causam animum allatura sit et eximie eju[s]
. gratiam, quibus in rebus poterit, relatúra; quod cum faciet re singularis humanitatis et illius meritorum”

* * * * *

Mutilated.

1528.

18 Dec. 5048. NORFOLK to WOLSEY.

R. O.

The customers of Ipswich and Yarmouth complain of the restraint on the exportation of grain and victuals, as lessening the King's customs and impoverishing his subjects, especially in Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex, where more butter and cheese is made than can be spent within the realm, and never more plenty than now, and the same of red herrings and sprats. Told them he thought Wolsey intended only grain to be stopped, and that he would write to ask for the restraint to be taken off butter, cheese, tallow, candle, sprats and herrings. Kennynghale, 18 Dec.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

19 Dec. 5049. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Seems to write too often, considering Wolsey's occupations, but his kindness compels him to do so. Hampton is now going to England, and will tell Wolsey everything about his life and the kindness of Brian [Tuke] and Vannes. The latter has given him good advice from Wolsey, which he will try to follow. Paris, 14 cal. Jan. Asks favor for Hampton's son.

Lat., p. 1. Hol. Add.: R., &c., card. Ebor. Angliæ Primati, a latere Legato, &c. Endd.: Ex D. Decano Wellen., &c.

19 Dec. 5050. WOLSEY to [BRIAN, VANNES and GREGORY CASSALIS].

Vit. B. x. 173.

B. M.

Since their departure, has been considering the King's causes committed to them. The troubles in Christendom, which give occasion to the spread of heresies, spring from lack of grace, by insolence, pertinacity, negligence a[nd] . . . , rather than from any reasonable or lawful ground. If princes and people would study to promote unity, all this might easily be removed. In order to obtain peace the sooner, and to conduce the residue of the King's purpose, his Highness has considered between whom are the chief causes of the discord, what is the quality and moment of the quarrels, demands and pretences, and how and by whom they may be composed. As princes are so alienated from each other, some more special provision should be devised than by sending letters or ambassadors to and fro, who would continually have to consult their princes, so that the desired end would be probably frustrated by delay. They are charged, therefore, to speak to the Pope about negotiating a peace; and in order that he may not be comp[elled to put] himself, his power and states into the Emperor's hands, nor [accept the terms] set forth by the general of the Observants, they must offer him "a convenient presidy" for his person, to be paid by the kings of France and England; so that, remaining neutral till he knows what way the Emperor will take touching peace, he may assist and mediate it. In order to do this, he must be made independent of fair offers or threats, by which he might be drawn to the Emperor, in whom only is the fault that peace is not concluded.

In these overtures they must proceed as follows:—First, in order that the Pope may listen more willingly to the rest of their desires, and to the proposals to be made by them, together with Mr. Secretary and Mr. Benet, when they come, and that he may be removed from any fear of the Emperor, and be a fitter mediator for the peace, they shall say, in that part of their former instructions which concerns the mediation of the peace by his Holiness, that the means devised by the King are, first, to render the Pope secure, as after these great troubles he is probably not able to do so himself. The King is moved by the affection which he bears to the Pope, and his zeal for peace, though he has little interest therein, and may have peace with the Emperor at his pleasure. He has induced the French king to consent to their jointly furnishing 1,500 or 2,000 picked men as a guard for the Pope's person, who will suffice to protect him and the College of Cardinals, and will give great authority to his decisions about the peace.

1528.

WOLSEY to [BRIAN, VANNES and GREGORY CASSALIS]—cont.

They must notice how he takes this overture, and whether he is ready to undertake the conduct of the peace. The first step towards peace must be a cessation of arms, for as long as new injuries are continually being committed, the princes will be provoked to further rancor, and the one that finds himself superior will be intractable. The Pope, therefore, must command all Christian princes to accept a truce of twelve, ten or eight months, under pain of ecclesiastical censures, with power to prorogue it as he thinks fit; during which variances may be composed, peace made, and means found for the extirpation of heresy, and an expedition against the Infidels, who have spread during these dissensions in Christendom, and threaten its total ruin. The truce can be proclaimed through the legates and nuncios in various countries, without the delay of sending new personages. Though princes in times past have shown difficulty in obeying such indictions, the kings of France and England will conform thereto, and the Emperor would doubtless do the same, as the war was made against him for the liberation of the French king's children, whom he still retains. Their example would be followed by other princes. The general of the Observants could execute this commission in Spain, and thus be removed from the Pope, "in avoiding such impeachments as else he pursuits and causes." The truce being thus indicted, the King considering the Pope's offer to go to any place, even to Spain, to further peace, proposes that his Holiness should go to Nice, Avignon, or other convenient place, where both the Emperor and the French king might be near him, and Wolsey will repair to him as the King's lieutenant, fully [knowing] the King's mind, and not needing to send to and fro for instructions. The Emperor could come to Russynian or Papynyon, and the French king similarly to some place in his dominion near the Pope. The Venetians and other Italian potentates would send sufficiently instructed ambassadors. Any difficulties arising during the negotiations could be easily settled, the Princes being so near. When peace is established, the Princes could hold an honorable, friendly and loving convention to devise means for the extirpation of heresy and an expedition against the Infidels. This would be the most meritorious and virtuous thing that ever pope of Rome achieved, and would restore and perpetually secure the dignity of the Holy See. This would more increase the Pope's renown, and his merit toward God, than anything he ever did; but neglect of this opportunity will cause the destruction of Italy, continual war, and the subversion of Christendom.

Though it is not convenient for the King to prescribe what is to be determined in this convention, yet it may be useful to show the Pope what are the demands and desires of the several powers, and what they reasonably ought to demand. As for himself, his Holiness knows best what he may justly demand. The Emperor wishes for the Crown Imperial, and ransom for the French king. The French king desires peace, and the liberation of his children on reasonable conditions. The Venetians wish for the preservation of their estate, and freedom from their fear of the Emperor's exterminating them if he come to Italy. The duke of Milan wishes to enjoy his duchy on reasonable terms, with the Emperor's favor. The duke of Ferrara, the marquis of Mantua, the Genoese and Florentines desire the preservation of their estates, with no danger of captivity from the Emperor. Germany needs to be freed from intestine discord, to be purged from the detestable sects now reigning there, and to remain in tranquillity. The king of Bohemia claims nothing, but would gladly see matters settled, that he might obtain his purpose against the Wayvode; which quarrel, with others in which the Emperor has no part, does not disturb the universal peace, but could easily be settled.

The King's highness desires nothing that would be spoken of in this 1528.

general convention, but universal peace, with the exception of such matters as cannot honorably be denied, as the payment of the Emperor's debts, "and so that the Pope's holiness, regarding the necessity and importance of the King's cause, with the infinite gratitudes and merits of his Highness, do at this time impart unto the same the treasure of Christ's church, with the plenty of his power, after such sort as his Grace, studying peace universal, may also purvey substantially to have and leave here at home peace particular, and in his realm good appearance of surety in his succession, with discharge of his conscience, and remedy of the great scruple now not without good ground resting in the same."

Though there are not a few things which he might demand in a convention for general peace, he will not hinder it for any particular pretences, but further it by all means possible.

The Pope's desire can be easily satisfied. If the Emperor takes his crown imperial at the convention, Italy will be left in sur[ety], and the difficulties arisen for revocation of armies, deliverance of hostages, and of pieces will be removed. "[The] King's highness also, by the Pope's favor and goodness afore consecrated all the things that so near toucheth [him] concerning his marriage, being for any particular th might hinder these matters, except the payment [of his] debts, wherein is no color of refusal, fully con[tent] . . ."; the French king also well satisfied, by having his children on reasonable conditions; the Venetians put out of fear; the duke of Milan restored to the Emperor's favor; the duke of Ferrara and other Italian states brought to reason, and put out of danger. All these things may, without great difficulty, be brought about by these means; and the Pope should fix his whole intent thereupon. Bulls or other writings concerning the truce might be sent out before the spring, so that, if the Emperor refused it, or used crafty delays, the residue might facilely conclude amongst themselves ways to compel him not only to peace, but to much lower terms than are now offered to him. The Pope, being assured of all the rest, might establish a general league with an easy contribution, the Pope being excepted, who would assist with the spiritual sword, and not be further charged.

A perpetual army should be maintained in Spain, drawing their supplies from France, which would so devastate and impoverish the country as to cause the Spaniards "to insurg[e] ne also he perceiving the likelihood and habilit[y of] continuance, and that it will not be possible for him to his own after the same sort, which will not be may with spoil, prey and ruin, as his armies be in other parts, should or would longer demore in his pertinacity," but rather submit to reason, and, even if he did not do that, Italy would be freed from the war, the Emperor being occupied at home. However long the contribution endured, it would not be so great as to hinder the other affairs of the confederates. By attacking Spain alone, and providing substantially for the army, and [making] convenient order for keeping such pieces as they [might take] in Italy, they might live at home in prosperity, and, without great inconvenience to themselves, compel the Emperor to penitence in a short time, so that he would never again be able to bring them into trouble.

What other advantages this scheme might produce for repressing the Emperor and benefiting Christendom cannot be determined; but, if well pondered, it will be seen to be so advantageous that it is rather brought to mind by God's provision than by man's invention. They must declare this to the Pope, either at their first access or soon after, urging him to adopt it, and must write to Wolsey how he seems minded towards it.

While conferring about these matters with the Pope, they must suggest that it would give a great reputation to his affairs, if he appointed viscount Turayne and "you, Sir Gregory de Cassalys," captains of the presidy, as persons in whom he has great confidence. They must, however, be very careful to speak of this so as the Pope shall not conceive any suspicion or think evil of the device. The men chosen shall be such as he can put confidence in, whoever are their captains.

1528.

WOLSEY to [BRIAN, VANNES and GREGORY CASSALIS]—cont.

The acceptance of these overtures by the Pope will much conduce to the particular causes committed to them and to Mr. Secretary and Bennet, who are going to Rome with ample instructions for the King's cause of matrimony, and full commission to conclude the before-mentioned matters. A similar commission is enclosed, that they may enter into the treaty for the presidy, and so gain the Pope that when the others arrive the King's desires may be granted without delay.

For if the Pope will immediately send out the letters for the truce, there is no cause [why he] should not now, before the spring of the year, [conclude the] rest of the matter, exhorting the [princes] and others to repair to the place on which he determines, so that, by the beginning of summer, peace may take effect, or, if it is impossible, the other ways may be tried to bring the Emperor to reason. However the peace takes effect, if the Pope will immediately indict the truce, and, being furnished with the presidy, will go to Nice or Avignon, (whither he might sail in the galleys of the knights of St. John, the kings of England and France contributing to the expence), if then he finds that the [Emperor] is unwilling to come near, or to consent to peace, he can then conclude the perpetual league against the Emperor, and thus reintegrate his own estate, recover his pieces, bring Italy out of danger, and produce other good effects.

They must handle this with great dexterity, for it is not to be doubted that the Pope, if he agrees thereto, will also grant the King's desire about his marriage, which is the thing to which their charge most tends, and, once brought about, it is not to be doubted that the rest will succeed. They must, therefore, compare these letters with their other instructions, and endeavor to gain the Pope before the coming of their colleagues.

Sends instructions for the obtaining of bulls for the conversion of abbeys into bishoprics, and others concerning monasteries and such matters.

The King hears that the Pope intends to create sundry cardinals, and recommends the bishop of Worcester. Letters in his behalf from the King, Wolsey and Campeggio to the Pope are enclosed.

If John Matthew, bishop of Verona, whom, it is said, the Pope will create a cardinal, is returned to the court, they must so behave to him as to show him that the King has more confidence in him than in any other person in the court. Encloses loving letters to be delivered to him from the King and from himself. If he is away from the court, they must persuade him to return and further the King's causes. They may tell him that coming to the convention will be a thing highly honorable and meritorious, and that kindness to the King will be in the best wise coll[ocate] and employed. Desires them similarly to entertain and give him the enclosed letters.

They are to tell the Pope, at their first audience or soon after, that the King, hearing that the Venetians had not restored Ravenna and Cervia, told the Venetian ambassador that he and the French king were no little surprised at their withholding the two cities so long, contrary to their promise, and to the frequent requisitions of the two Kings, and he peremptorily desired the ambassador to write to the Signory for the speedy delivery of the cities, which, if they delayed, both he and the French king would declare them to be enemies. The King himself writes to the duke of Venice, and to his ambassador there, copies of the letters being enclosed to be shown to the Pope. The French king also will do the like. They must send on the letters to the prothonotary De Cassalis.

Desires them, if possible, to conclude with the French king's agents the contribution for the presidy, before the arrival of Mr. Secretary and Bennet, and to make payments, if necessary. They must discover whether the Pope can be kept in the devotion of the two Princes, and drawn from the Emperor, by merely talking of the contribution, leaving the conclusion of it till the coming of the Secretary and Bennet, for the French agents can scarcely receive their instructions until then. But if the Pope hesitates to proceed to the indiction of the truce without the presidy being concluded, they must then perfect it as above, which will be a good foundation for the treaty of peace, and a great "foredeal" for the King's matrimonial cause, for the bringing about of which chiefly all the foresaid things are devised. Desires them to use all diligence and to write often. Trusts that by their politic handling of these instructions they will attain some honorable way how the King may achieve his purpose, and be discharged of the great agony in which he is.

1528.

Sends minutes of three bulls for the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and for the King's indulgence at Windsor, with a letter containing the causes of asking for them, to be shown to the Pope, the cardinal SS. Quatuor, and others. Westm., 19 Dec. Signed.

Pp. 25, mutilated.

Ibid.f. 185*.

P.S. to Vannes.—Wolsey desires him to translate into Italian the passages marked, concerning the presidy and the peace, and to give them to the Pope, that he may read and consider them at leisure. Signed.

P. 1.

20 Dec.

5051. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to WOLSEY.

R. O.

On Wednesday last my lord Chamberlain and Sir Ric. Weston arrived. The King's solicitor has not come. They have surveyed the reparations made. The lieutenant of the Staple had not money in hand sufficient to pay the whole retinue before Christmas. Money is greatly needed. A survey has been taken of provisions, which are very scant. Yesterday the ambassador of the waywood of Hungary arrived. When he will leave is uncertain, for "the seas here seem to have in them such cruelty as hath not been oft seen." There is a report of a truce between the Emperor and the French. Others say that De Rewxe will not consent, and therefore the French king sends the duke of Vendome to the frontiers of Picardy. It is said De Rewxe's son shall marry the duchess of Vendome's daughter. Calais, 20 Dec. 1528.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. and sealed. Endd.

20 Dec.

5052. DR. WILLIAM CAPON to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was informed by Cromwell, on 22 Nov., of Wolsey's pleasure that the farmers of the monasteries of Dodnes, Wykes, Typtree and Horkysley should repair to London to the dean of Wolsey's college, Oxford, to make their accounts before the auditor. They have all done so, except the farmers of Horkysley and Wykes, who would have made their accounts with Capon, but he thought it right to defer it till Wolsey's auditor came to Ipswich. Thirty-seven freemasons have been working here, and hewed a good sort of stone. Have bought a hoy of 30 tons for 25*l.* 10*s.*, and have received from the chancellor of Durham 142 chalders of sea coal, after Newcastle measure = 166 Ipswich measure, for which they have paid 47*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* All your marsh is fully ended, except a piece which Mr. Cavendish says must be deferred till March. The whole cost will be 93*l.*, of which Capon has paid 80*l.* Has also paid Wolsey's priests, conducts, schoolmaster, and usher, and all other officers of his college, wages for one quarter, ending 5 December. We have a great loss by your Grace's sending for Mr. Lentall. He was the key of our choir, "and set everything in so good order, and made us very good children." Will bring the accounts of stone and timber to Wolsey soon after the holidays. Has received nothing of the revenues of Wolsey's college, but only the half-year's rent of the monastery of St. Peter's, amounting scarcely to 50 marks. The other half-year's rent was received by Mr. Cromwell of the tenants before he came. Many of the farmers have old leases under convent seals. My lord Curson has come to Ipswich to spend Christmas at home, to whom we of your Grace's college are much beholden as he is always ready to assist us. Ipswich, 20 Dec. Signed.

1528.

DR. WILLIAM CAPON to WOLSEY—cont.

P. 1. Add.: To my lord Legate. Endd.

20 Dec.

5053. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand,
III. 245.

* * * * *
"faire despense à ce voyaige, ou pour n'y veoir seureté de sa personne, mondict sieur le Legat est d'avis" that if any of these difficulties should appear, rather than that this enterprise should fail, an offer should be made to him (the Pope?), in diminution of the expence of his said voyage, by these two Kings, of 500 men out of the said 2,000, the rest remaining at Rome, with a legate for the surety of the town, if necessary; and for his passage the galleys of Rhodes should be at his command, or, at a pinch, even those of Andrea Doria, both for their mutual friendship, and because good truce subsists at present, and there should also be delivered to him by Francis every security that he could ask to return as often as he pleased. Nevertheless, as my lord Legate says, "que ce seroit le plus fort que de la tenir là, car au demourant on y adviseroit après." These are the difficulties I put to him, and thus he answered them.

Afterwards, talking again about your letter, I said to him that I saw all this came to nothing, and that the general truce, whatever pains might be used, would be concluded in the middle of February; that already garrisons were laid in France, and that everybody cried alarm against the Emperor, and was impatient that the time had not come for fighting; that the Flemings seemed to do the same on their side, not only against us, but even against them (the English); and although it was arranged that the truce should endure till the contracting parties had signified to each other that they wished to break it, yet the fire once kindled there would be no means of putting it out; so that it seemed much better policy,—as the other way, for all he said, was very difficult to set about early,—to deliberate about giving a helping hand (de mettre la main à la paste), rather than to fall asleep in the hope of a doubtful thing, of which no certain answer could soon be had by reason of the distance between this and Rome. After some discussion, he said it was necessary that the surety of the said truce, and especially of the two months additional, should be re-confirmed somehow between the parties by verbal assurance, or in such wise as may be thought best, pending the general pacification (la generale) now in question. As I questioned somewhat whether this proposal were honorable, and said Francis would not consent to it, except to satisfy him, he bid me leave that to him, saying he had already for that purpose sent over the sea the Grand Chamberlain with a body of men and artillery to strike terror into the Flemings, and would see and bring this about by good means without its coming of our request. I mention this in accordance with your letters of the 3rd.

In all these matters I took pains to get at the bottom of what was in his mind (ce qu'il avoit au ventre). He showed me a thousand reasons why this assembly which is spoken of will not separate until peace is made, saying, among other things, that when he regarded in detail the demands made by Francis, the Emperor, England, the Pope, the Venetians and Florentines, and others, he thought they could all be settled in an assembly of such authority, and that he will die if it be not so; but that if by envy, and by the arts of all the devils, the said peace is not made, recourse may still be had to the expedition at the common expence, as set forth in my letters, into which the Pope will have to enter, volens volens, for he will be held by the feet. I asked him to tell me privately if he had any assurance that the Pope would approve of these overtures. He said he had no doubt of it, considering his necessity, and the conduct he has always exhibited, and the great arguments Wolsey himself and Campeggio have impressed upon him, together with the assurance given by Campeggio that the Pope would approve it. And though he acknowledges it is honorable that the proposals of truce towards the Pope come from him, and not from our side, he would like, after he has opened them, that your ambassadors should strive to give effect to them by all indirect and honorable ways, as a thing of very high importance.

1528.

As to this truce, he is much gratified with the contents of Francis's letter of the 3rd, which are quite in accordance with his own views. To that letter I make no answer, the greater part being voidée by my other letter, and by this, "n'estant principalement plus de nouvelle de proposer nouveaux articles de paix, ne faire par ceulx de deçà paix à part à l'Empereur pour myeux pratiquer la vostre." For Wolsey, perceiving that we should never come by this route to the point we have set before us, matters being as they are, says nothing more about it, and talks only for the present of the overture above mentioned. He was glad to see what was said in the above letters of the affairs of Naples, and desired to have the letters to send to the King, who is at Richmond till Saturday, except the days and evenings when he comes to see how people are in this town (comment on se porte en cette ville). Although the King's letter was dated 3rd, I only received it on the 13th. Such delay has been usual, and will be, unless you quicken the posts with money. Du Biez does not allow them to pass at Boulogne without searching all their letters, which makes them all go through Flanders or Artois, and I know if he did not compel the rascals with blows of the halberd "et à bonne basse fousse" to come, they would long ago have ceased coming. As to Bayard (Neufville?) I have perceived nothing here. If anything is said about him I will do as you command me.

When about to close these letters I was sent for by the King, and told that the Queen had brought forward some brief amplifying the dispensation of the marriage contained in the bulls, and dated the same day; which brief not being considered authentic by the Cardinals, she intends to send to the Emperor to ask for the original, and the King has consented that she should send a Spaniard in post, and wishes me to write to get him a safe-conduct through France. I expect he will set out soon. The King expects for many reasons that this brief will be found false; but in any case it must be seen before proceeding further. He has talked to me at great length about the matter, and I promise you he requires no advocate, he understands it so well; but he is very anxious that the opinions of which I spoke to you should be sent him, and if you cannot get them signed soon, I think it would be better to send them unsigned than not at all. He also spoke at great length of the common affairs, and of his regret that they are not now in better condition. I discussed the matter with him, showing all the reasons I could that it was not our fault; but he alleged such a number of things that I knew not how to answer;—among others, that, besides the bad provision for food and money before Naples, which led to the loss and ruin, and besides the error of alienating Andrea Doria at such a time, it appeared that Mons. de St. Pôl had been obliged to disband his army for want of pay, and that all the fine arrangements, which I had so often told Wolsey had been made for Savona, had gone off in smoke, simply for want of foresight. Hence the breaking off of the practice to regain Andrea Doria, which would certainly have succeeded. Also the army which was preparing in Normandy had been broken up for want of timely provision of money. Thus the common cause, which was on the point of triumphing, had fallen to the ground, and even the enemy's council said that they had nothing to do but await their opportunity, for the assurance they had that our own mistakes would undo us without their meddling. He wished me to press Francis to be a little more awake to these things, and abandon his pleasure only for one good year to see to his affairs himself, a thing which he would have hinted to him long ago, but for fear of displeasing him. He had hoped that the experience of so many losses, one on the top of another, would have made it unnecessary to warn him; but at last, seeing the state of things at present, and considering the indissoluble union between them, he could not avoid telling me what he thought necessary, and charging me to signify it to his good brother.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

I give you the substance of his conversation, which lasted two good hours, he keeping me alone in the room with him, and expressing great affection. I do not write to the King. I made all the excuses that I could invent; some of which he found good, but others he rejected, saying that I should do well to excuse my master towards strangers, but towards him, who was his second self, I ought to be more plain, for he knew well the truth how every thing had gone, and did not say those things to me to raise debate about things which he would excuse in strangers, and did excuse every day, as all his gentlemen could bear witness. London, 20 Dec.

P.S.—It is not my fault that my letters are of so many pieces, for I had to wait the departure of the courier. I have been this day with Wolsey about the Spanish ships, about which the Imperial ambassador is in much alarm. I much fear that the Legate will not be able to do all that he would like to do. He says he has changed his purpose about the departure of my lord of Bath, chiefly because, being one of the principal counsel granted to the Queen, they cannot well do without him. For this reason he does not wish me to make mention of his despatch, or of Fitzwilliam's, although as to the latter there is no change, and they mean to send him shortly; nor that I should write to you again to send hither some one, he trusting in my abilities in matters of war as of peace, by reason of which, and of the friendship he bears me, he will speak to me more privately than to any other, thereupon praising me to my face, and recounting my excellent qualities. Not knowing, however, if he wanted to see what I would say, I praised his former purpose, and we remained in suspense. As he desired me not to write this conversation, please to hold it as not written, towards the English ambassadors. I suspect it was my lord of Bath himself who broke off his mission, and at this moment I have learned something of it from him.

Fr. Add.

5054. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand,
111. 263.

You must not be too angry with Wolsey for the remonstrances he has made to me; for, in the first place, he only spoke as he was told by my lord of Bath,* and others coming from France, as I know truly. Moreover, it is only one man he is displeased with; and I do not say it to excuse him, but to inform you of the truth of all things. I assure you they consider Francis the most gentle and honorable prince in the world, and of the best understanding, but they think he trusts too much to his Chancellor, who has been the cause of all his misfortunes, and will be his ruin by putting off everything; that Madame, though she is the most prudent woman in the world, is so blinded by him that she trusts no one else; and that you do all that a faithful servant can, but that the other takes the credit of what you do. It is quite true my lord of Bath said in high quarters (en bons lieux) that the loss of Naples had been owing to the want of timely provision of men and money for the late Mons. de Lautrec, which was in consequence of the Chancellor being continually asleep, or doing other things. That all ambassadors and others who had charge of affairs there were in despair; and for himself, since he had seen matters in this train, he had resolved never to go to him unless compelled, although you often sent to him, so that at last he was forced to tell you that he would go no longer, and that you should not send him there. I assure you all the ambassadors of the confederates here hold such language, even with Wolsey himself, who used continually to break my head with it, until one day I begged him to speak no more about it if he would not estrange me, for reasons which I alleged to him. Nor has he done so, except that in these remonstrances he repeated several times that he knew Francis was the wisest prince in the world, and the faults were not his, but it must be considered whence they arose. I think he was not ill pleased to have this opportunity to delay his thrust (pour delayer à fencer); but I assure you all he said came of perfect good will. I do not say it was founded on truth, but on what he hears from others. I think you will do well not to estrange him, for you have to do with Spaniards, and he is vindictive. Campeggio one day told him that if the divorce took place peace would never be made, the Emperor would be so enraged against them. "Never you mind," said he, "I know well what we shall do about that. He will not take the matter so much to heart as he pretends. I know how to dress up that the best way in the world, and you may trust it to me."

* "Il ne parloit que par la bouche de Monsieur de Bade."

1528.

You will see how the sum I have received has passed, and what I write about my condition. I know you wish me to be comfortable. I assure you I have much need. Francis has so many men of my estate, that if it be found that I serve him well, it will do you no discredit to help me.

Fr.

20 Dec.

R. O.

5055. H. EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND to BRIAN TUKE.

Thanks him for the pains he has taken in his causes. After the capture of Quynntyn Armestrange, Sym Armestrange, otherwise Sym the laird, desired of the Earl's deputy of Tyndale, Sir Ralph Fenwike, that he would bring him to Alnwick to speak with the Earl for reformation of justice. Had a long conference with him by advice of my cousin Tempest, and taxed him severely with his demerits towards God and his king. He replied that "he thought in his time never to see king in Scotland, nor that realm to be kept with justice without the King our sovereign lord had the governance thereof; for their King was all set upon viciousness," and his council of no stability; that his own coming was only to minister justice and obtain it from England, for he and his adherents had "endway laid waste" 60 miles of the Scotch territory, and not a man in Scotland durst remedy the same; and that whatever the Scotch commissioners should conclude at this diet "anenst Lyddersdaill," not an article would be performed. Sent these sayings to the English commissioners to show the Scotch. Finds by their letters that they have concluded a peace, and put in articles "that they will run upon Liddersdaill and destroy them." This is a mere brag, for the Armstrongs muster 3,000 horse. Caused Sym, however, to make such articles as he would be bound to; which he sends to know Wolsey's pleasure on them.

Has been so sick of his old disease that he had all the rites of the Church administered to him, not expecting to live. Topclyf, 20 Dec. Signed

Pp. 2. Add.: Master Bryan Tuke, treasurer of the King's most honorable chamber.

1528.

21 Dec. 5056. PASQUAL SPINULA to [WOLSEY].

Vit. B. x. 185. Asks for the release of alum arrested by D. John Derhans. London,
 B. M. 21 Dec. 1528. Signed.
Lat., p. 1, mutilated.

21 Dec. 5057. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O. Indenture dated 21 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII. between Wolsey and Sir Will. Weston, prior of St. John's, by which the latter engages, at the next chapter of the Order, to make at Wolsey's expence a grant in fee-farm to the dean and canons of Cardinal's college, Oxford, of their manors of Sampford, Horsepath, Lytlemore, and Temple Cowley, Oxon. and Berks, a great messuage with a garden in Chauncellor Lane, in the suburbs of London, late in the tenure of Dr. Taylor, now Master of the Rolls, and now in that of the said dean and canons; at a rent of 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Memorandum indorsed that this indenture was acknowledged in Chancery, 22 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.

22 Dec. 5058. FRANCIS I.

R. O. Confirmation of the arrangement made by John du Bellay, bishop of Rym. xiv. 283. Bayonne, with England, for transfer of the war from Flanders into Italy, and the sums promised therefor. S. Germain-en-Laye, 22 Dec. 1528.
Lat., vellum. Sealed.

R. O. 2. Commission to John du Bellay, bishop of Bayonne, to give acquittance Rym. xiv. 284. to England for certain sums of money. S. Germain-en-Laye, 22 Dec. 1528.
Lat., vellum. Seal broken.

23 Dec. 5059. QUEEN MARGARET to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Requesting him to discharge the arrest made in the Exchequer, at the suit of the town of Berwick, upon certain salmon belonging to Francis Bothwel and Adam Hoppar, merchants of Edinburgh, and Alexander Kaye, their factor. Edinburgh, 23 Dec. Signed.
P. 1. Add. Endd.

23 Dec. 5060. JOHN COOKE to WOLSEY.

R. O. Thanks him for his protection against those who intended "repressing" him for executing Wolsey's commands. Master Norreis, one Wellis, and others, do all they can to bring him into Wolsey's displeasure. Begs him not to believe their untrue surmises. After Norris had been before Wolsey, he said, as it can be proved, that he would not kneel so long before him for an office of 2*d.* a day. Wellis was my old Lord's servant, and is gentleman sumner by patent, an office worth 8*l.* a year. He is, notwithstanding, the marquis of Exeter's servant, and has refused Wolsey's service himself, and persuaded others of my late Lord's servants to do the same. Sends "a poor present of no estimation." Twyford, 23 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To, &c., my lord Card. and Legate of England. Endd.

5061. [BRIAN and VANNES] to WOLSEY.

Cal. D. x. 190. "[Reverendissime] pater et domine, domine d
 B. M. ad vestram Reverendissimam D. scrib rrat, ut tamen de nostri itineris faciamus, has nunc literas dedi[mus] itaque die 24 hujus mensis dum de 1528.

nostro itinere amicos quos a[pud] comperimus iter per Genuam tutissim[um] ipsis Gallis patere, aliud vero per Alexa[ndriam non tam] securum ob quorundam Hispanorum insid[ias, qui] Casellium in medio itinere occupant licere illac transire.
 Si aliquod equi[tatus] nobis adjunxerimus, decrevimus ideo . . .
 diam potius iter facere, quam Andreæ Dori[æ] Præterea non absque ingenti animi moles[tia, ab] Genuensi intelleximus fratrem Generalem mensis Genuam appulisse, una duntax[at navi] et circiter octuaginta viris de Romam esse profectum, ut Hostiam, C et reliqua Pontifici restituat, d Cæsaris copias animandas sec inta millia ducatorum, ut cun[que] tentabimus, ne * * * * *

. unum petimus, ut nostram mo[ram] quam
 Regiæ Majestati molestam boni co[nsulas] ur et ne videamur de ejus ben[evolentia] ere rationes omittam, quæ nostram ta ent excusare. Ego Petrus valeo illis novem trirēibus de quibus jussam tabellarii sermone scripsimus in affirmatur.

“ [Int]elligimus deinde filium D. Renzii in pa[tris] c]astra a Venetiis navigantem cum pecun[iis ad]versa maris tempestate adactum in ma[rchionis de Gu]asti manum et potestatem incidisse.

“ [Dici]tur quoque Pontificem in cardinalem creasse [Andr]iæ Doriæ. Lyons, nica.”

In Vannes' hand; mutilated. Add.: Tho. card. Ebor. ac Apostolicæ Sedis legato, &c.

25 Dec.

5062. GHINUCCI and LEE to WOLSEY.

Vesp. C. IV.
285*.

B. M.

Wrote on the 17th inst. concerning a servant of the earl of Desmond who came hither, and of the committing of John Almayne to prison on suspicion of disclosing the Emperor's secrets to the French king. Has heard no more of these things, except that a subject of the King's, a merchant who has a suit in the Emperor's court, asked the Irishman whom he met at Almayne's house, what he did there? He answered that he came for matter of justice. But, as he went to none but Almayne, and was despatched in three weeks, it is impossible that he came for that purpose. Has written to Badcock to make enquiries at Biscay, and write to Tuke. Valladolid, Christmas Day 1528. Signed.

In Lee's hand; cipher, deciphered by Tuke; p. 1. Add. Endd.

25 Dec.

5063. DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY.

Le Grand,
III. 259.

I was obliged to promise Wolsey to write to you immediately, that you might give orders about the posts of Picardy; for all those he has despatched for some time, both gentlemen and couriers, have excused their delays by want of horses; and the posts say they know not what to do, not having received a single sou of their wages, and will soon be compelled to give up entirely, which would lead to great inconvenience at this juncture, Wolsey being on the terms that I wrote to you by Thade. Nothing new has occurred since then. The whole court has retired to Greenwich, where open house is kept both by the King and Queen, as it used to be in former years. Mademoiselle de Boulan is there also, having her establishment (son cas) apart, as, I imagine, she does not like to meet with the Queen. I expect things will remain in this state till the return of Bryant. This is also Campeggio's opinion, who, I think, has good will to expedite the affair if he find the Pope agreeable. I think they will give him the bishopric of Durham in exchange for that he held in this country, which will be an improvement of 10,000 livres of rent. It is said he has lost as much by coming here, the Emperor having deprived him of a bishopric, which the Pope had given him in Spain, giving him another in its place, with which he is not satisfied. Our doctors from Flanders, of whom one is sealer to Mons. du Liege, the other a Spaniard, who has lived long in Flanders, have been with the King. They began their speech with the same language used by those who were there this summer, saying they wondered that the King would abandon his old friends for his mortal enemies, who only seek to overreach him. He did not fail to answer them, reproaching the Emperor with his great ingratitude, and setting forth the faith he had found in the King his brother. As to the marriage he plainly told them his intention. Till now they have had no dispatch, and I think after they have shown all they know to Campeggio (for they say they are not commissioned to speak to any one else) they will return to their friends. Still, if the opinion of your people is sent it will be welcome, and the explanation, if you have any, of the conspiracies you know about.

1528.

DU BELLAY to MONTMORENCY—cont.

I hear that the bishop of Transylvania crossed the sea yesterday. He has not yet arrived here. I have made enquiry without showing myself much concerned about his voyage to the Ostrelins. I find it will not be possible to cross the sea until March, for until that time it will be frozen up, although they say that he may embark at the end of February, because it will take some time before he can reach the frozen sea. The new ambassador of Venice also came some time ago; he has been with Wolsey, and is appointed to be with the King on Sunday. Wolsey has already greeted him with the matter of Ravenna and Cervia. He speaks highly of the reception given him in France. The other will return shortly, and I think you should give him a good reception; for, so far as I can see, no two persons could be better inclined to France. London, 25 Dec.

Fr. Add.

26 Dec.

Béthune MS.
8539, f. 28.
Paris.

5064. MARY THE FRENCH QUEEN to MONTMORENCY.

Writes again in behalf of Anthoine du Val. Montmorency gave a favorable answer to her former request, and charged Catillon to keep him in mind of it; but this he has been unable to do, having had business which took him to Italy. London, 26 Dec. 1528. Countersigned: De Saint Martin.

26 Dec.

R. O.

5065. JOHN TAYLER, MASTER OF THE ROLLS, to BRIAN TUKE.

Received a letter on the 25th from my Lord by Thadeus, who left Knight and Benet at Calais. Was ordered in the letter to procure from the French king a safe-conduct for a servant of the Queen that should go into Spain, or for any other that the Emperor should send to England. Though I had neither the names nor the number, I went to the King on Christmas Day, who happened to be at Paris, and obtained a blank safe-conduct. Sends letters from Spain. Paris, 26 Dec. 1528. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

26 Dec.

R. O.

5066. KNIGHT and BENET to BRIAN TUKE.

Thadeus arrived here on the 23rd, from whom we received a commission, with other papers. Beg their humble commendations to Wolsey. Tarried here so long because of their dangerous passage. Our horses continued at sea four days and four nights, in storms and tempest. Calais, St. Stephen's Day.

Hol., in Knight's hand; signed by Benet; p. 1. Add. and sealed. Endd.

1528.

27 Dec.

5067. GHINUCCI to WOLSEY.Vesp. C. iv.
286.

B. M.

Wrote last on 23 Nov. Wonders that the Emperor delays so long to give them their answer. The French say that he promised to do so immediately after Bayard's arrival. Delivered the proposals to him a fortnight ago. The Emperor's ministers say that the answer will show his desire for peace, and that he is not the obstacle. Has heard no fresh news about military preparations. The Emperor will raise a loan from churches and from ecclesiastical persons. He has received from this bishopric 500 English marks, and requires a mark of silver from all patrons of churches. Burgos, 27 Dec. 1528.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add. Endd.

27 Dec.

5068. THOS. WYNTER to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Cannot abstain from writing to thank him for his many benefits. Hampton, the bearer, has procured hangings, linen, towels, and other household furniture. At parting, Hampton asked him to request of Wolsey a dispensation for his son to take orders. Paris, 6 cal. Jan.

Hol., Lat., p. 1. Add.: Rmo, &c., Card. Eborum Angliæ primati, Apostolicæ Sedis a Latere legato. Endd.: Decanus Wellen., vj. cal. Jan.

27 Dec.

5069. THOS. CANNAR, Priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Did not send back John Hunt, Cromwell's scholar, as Cromwell wished, as Mr. Dean pretended that he should have the room of a petty canon in my lord's Grace's college. Smith, the auditor, and Cannar, therefore, detained him; but now, as the election for petty canons is over, and Benjamin Digby has written to Mr. Dean about it, sends him up with the bill of his expences at Oxford. Thanks him for having procured for him the benefice of Eesthenrethe by his influence with my lord's Grace. Oxenforde, 27 Dec.

The total of Hunt's expences are 39s. 0½d., including the reward to Master Weston, his overseer and tutor.

P. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Cromwell, dwelling against the Friar Austins in London.

27 Dec.

5070. MAGNUS to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

Had been here 10 weeks to conclude the peace, which has not been brought to pass but with much business, all because "we lene (lean?) so directly as we do, in mine opinion, for want of knowledge and intelligence, with the earl of Angus' causes," the Scots believing that we favor him more than their King. Was on his way homewards, when at Newcastle he received letters from the King and Wolsey, and one from Tuke, dated London, 10 Dec., which induced him to go back. Expects a safe-conduct from the king of Scots next Wednesday, and will forthwith go to visit him, though it will not gain him the most favorable hearing that the causes are touching Angus. Will make what expedition he can, though he is full 65 years old, "wanting power of body, feblished, and made weak with many winter journeys, and otherwise in manner little better of substance but as I had 26 years ago. My heart, will and mind is and shall be good, so long as I may continue; but I assure you this is the sorest winter that I have suffered in my life."

Sends copy of an article contained in his last letters, which Tuke has doubtless seen, touching the merchants of Edinburgh troubled by the poor merchants of Berwick, about the sale of salt salmon; also a letter of the queen of Scots on the subject. Berwick, St. John's Day in Christmas week. Signed.

P. 1. Add. Endd.

iv.

1528.

28 Dec. 5071. CARDINAL SALVIATI to HENRY VIII.

R. O. Compliments him on his services to the Holy See, to which all of St.P. VII. 140. them are so much indebted, especially for their liberty. Recommends to him Latino, who is going to England with letters from the Cardinals at Parma. Paris, 28 Dec. Signed.

Lat. Add. Endd.

5072. SANGA to CAMPEGGIO.

Porcacchi,
p. 27 b.

The Pope has been highly satisfied with your negotiations hitherto, and thinks you have acted very prudently. Considering the offices you have performed with the Queen, the King ought to comprehend that the Pope has every wish to gratify him, but is hindered by powerful reasons from precipitating the result which the King desires; and therefore they ought not to make so much importunity. You write that you cannot long sustain this burden alone; but as an ample reply is about to be sent you as soon as the cavalier (Casale) arrives here, hold out for the love of God, and do not allow yourself to be drawn a step further. The Pope is aware of the good will of the cardinal of York towards the See Apostolic, and knows for certain that he induced the King to request a legate for this cause, although the prelates of the kingdom assured him that he could do without one. But would to God the Cardinal had allowed the matter to take its course, because, if the King had come to a decision without the Pope's authority, whether wrongly or rightly, it would have been without blame or prejudice to his Holiness. It would greatly please the Pope if the Queen could be induced to enter some religion, because, although this course would be portentous and unusual, he could more readily entertain the idea, as it would involve the injury of only one person. The King must see that the Pope is giving him all possible facilities for this purpose.

With regard to the dispensation for marrying the son to the daughter of the King, if, on the succession being thus established, the King will reject his first thought of the divorce, the Pope will be much more inclined to grant it. I will write more diffusely on the return hither of the cavalier Casale.

The cardinal of York is in error if he believes that the Emperor will no more take this matter to heart than anything else which might happen to him; for the Pope has not a mere conjecture, but most certain knowledge, that the case is quite otherwise, and that it would be impossible for the Pope to give him any offence which would affect him more than this; though the Pope would not be influenced by this consideration if the result might be effected without scandal, or if the reasonableness of the King's desire were evident. Nor must the Cardinal imagine that the Pope has become cold in gratifying the King, owing to the successes of the Imperialists, as you write is there suspected; for if the Pope made a thousand agreements with the Emperor, he would never lose the memory of the benefits conferred by the King on himself personally, and on the Holy See. Neither for the Emperor, nor for all the world together, would he do the slightest injury to the King, with whom he is as much satisfied as he is offended with others. So the Pope has not changed his sentiments on account of the Emperor's victory; nor has he, by returning to Rome, declared himself an Imperialist. Rome, ———.

Ital.

28 Dec. 5073. SIR FRANCIS BRYAN and PETER VANNES to WOLSEY.

Vit. B. x. 186.

B. M.

Franciscus Campanus and Vincent Casale arrived here tonight. Casale says that the Pope cannot be induced by reasons or threats to allow Wolsey [to have] the bull which Campeggio has concerning the King's cause, and he would never have granted it if it had not been already granted. To this Gregory answered that the Pope did not consider the King's merits or the importance of the cause, but would rather compel him to provide for himself in another way. The Pope said he did not think he would do that, but if the King did so he must not depart from his duty. He seems to care nothing for threats, and sends this person to excuse his refusal. Gregory also sends Vincent to show the King the real reason which influences the Pope; his fear of the Emperor, who, he thinks, will be soon master of Italy, which certain prophecies also foretell. The archbishop of Capua is at Rome, and does all he can to hinder this matter. He told the cardinal of Mantua that he had advised the Pope not to meddle, lest he should destroy himself and the whole Church. The cardinal of Mayence warned him, that if this divorce took place all Germany and the Lutheran sect would attack him. Jacopo Salviati told Sir Gregory that the Pope feared a general council, lest he should offend the Emperor. He has heard of the answer to Silvester; suspects the Emperor's coming to Italy; thinks that he wishes to disunite the two Kings, and is endeavoring to settle Italian matters according to his own desires. He knows that the General is at Genoa bringing great offers. Many people think the Emperor only wants to squeeze more money out of him. Fear that the mission of the General will strengthen the Imperialists. Write this only from Vincent Casale's report. Have not yet spoken on public matters to Campanus.

1528.

The common people of France seem quite exhausted. The nobles are returning from Italy complaining of the King's neglect to send money, and of the Venetians' delay and cruelty to the French. Tell Wolsey this, that he may see that they rather require to be kept to their word than are ready to help the French. Gregory Casale told the Pope that Vincent was sent on his private affairs, and his Holiness suggested his accompanying Campanus. Gregory assented, but told Vincent to be careful in what he said, and to get as much information from Campanus as possible. He has discovered from his conversation that the principal instructions to Campeggio are to pr[olong] the divorce as long as possible, and advise the Queen to enter a state of religion.

The prothonotary Gambara said to Andrea Casale at Bologna, that the General will demand the creation of four Cardinals and money for the restitution of the cities; that the Emperor will come to Italy, and be friendly to the Pope. Supposes he has heard of the sudden attack on Doria. Bryan writes to the King. Chambrii (Chambery), 28 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Lat., pp. 5. Add. Endd.

28 Dec.

5074. SIR ROB. WINGFIELD to BRIAN TUKE.

R. O.

Wishes him a happy new year. Wrote last on the 21st, and on the 20th to Wolsey. Since the commissioners arrived the weather has been marvellously foul, yet they have spared no pains in surveying and bringing things to perfection. Calais, the Innocents' Day.

P.S.—On Saturday last the Secretary and Dr. Benet departed. Sends a packet of letters from the Master of the Rolls. Robert Fowler and Sir Wm. Skevyngton have arrived.

Hol., pp. 2. Add. Endd.

30 Dec.

5075. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O.

Grant to Wolsey of the site, &c. of Felixstow, Rumburgh, and Bromehill, Norf., with their appurtenances. Westm., 30 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.

Lat., vellum; Great Seal attached.

1528.

CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH—cont.

P. S. 2. The P.S. for the above grant. Del. Westm., 30 Dec.
Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 34.

5076. IPSWICH COLLEGE.

R. O. Drafts, indentures, &c., relating to the endowment of Wolsey's College, at Ipswich :—the following monasteries, rectories, manors, lands, &c., mentioned ; viz.,

Felixstowe, Rumburgh, Bromehill, Walton, Tremeley, Sternefeld, Westerfeld, Kyrton, Boeclesham, Newborn, Helmeley, Faltenham, Alderton, Baudesey, Wyset, South Elmeham, Speksall, Heslingfeld, Cove, Chedstan, Pentney, Holton, Ketilbargh, Syxton, Elkeshall, Bungey, Banham, Cossay, St. Giles and St. Trinity, Norwich, Baroburgh, Willoby, Swaffham, St. Peter's Westminster, Abyngton, Chestane, Ilkesall, Metfeld, Reddysham, Huntingfeld, Denton, Bekylls, Lymburn, Croxston, Routonholme, Estmore, Oteringhithe, Methold, Esthall, Feltwell, Weting, Brandon, Melewade, Hoghold, Downham, Fordham, Bokenham, Codyngton, Ingeworth, Grymeston, Wanford, Fouldon, Dudlington, Colneston, Berton Bendyssh, South Rougeton, Thetford, Ikworth, Myldenale, Sayescourt at Deptford alias Westgrenwych, Chesthunt, Little Horkesley, Hyntelsham, Cleydon, Chettisham, Cardon, Milfeld alias Nether Charlez, Wykes, Wormyngford, Tolshunt, Boxsted, Bedingfeld, Horswade, Haringby, Stokesby, Thirkeby, Rusham, Tunstall, Staleham, Ingham, Brunsted, Hikling, Horsey, Berton, Smalburgh, Beeston, Edingthorp, Wilton, Barton, Paston, Swafeld, Knapton, Wursted, Kessinglond, Rothenhale, Pakefeld, Carleton, Gesilham, Russheimere, Mutford, Hensted, Sutton, Happing, Bursawes alias Burstonhaugh, Typtre, Snape, Maldon, Bracksted, Wyckham, Wytam, Fayrested, Goldanger, Mesrige, Inworth, Stanway, Colchester, Totham Magna, Keldon, Ryvenhale, Falborn, Terling, Swyllond, Tanswellhall, Laneham, Preston, Westbergholt, Wrabnasse, Tendryng, Frating, Mysteley, Bradfeld, Norton, Fordeham, Bylston, Washbroke, Oteley, Wenham, Westowe, Falkenham, Dodnesh, Bentley, Taddeston, Stuston, Capell, Holbroke, Braham, Stratford, Reydon, Ramesden, Scotts, Tastards, Alderburgh, Freston, Hasilwood, Orford, Leigham, Stradbroke, Hachelston, Glenham, Blaksall, Rendham, Saxmundham ; Benhall ; St. Clement Danes and Strond, London ; Stanesgate, Blakamore, Tylingham, Totham, Steple Ramesey, Wodham Mortimer, Mesinge, Gingemargaret, Hormede, Maryborn alias Tyborn, Midd., Wyllinghall, Bowells, Shelow, Wrytell, Southweld, Kelvedon, Stondon, Stoke, Erwardeston, Belstede, Purley ; St. Matthew and St. Mary Kaye of Ipswich ; Thurleston, Akenham, Westerfeld, Burstall, Hemyngston, Gosbeck, Codenham, Brokes, Erwaston, Freston, Washbroke, Chelmundeston, Sutton Parva, Belsted Capell, Leyham, Elmysset, Blakenham, Somersham, Nettelsted, Badley, Stonham, Jernegan alias Jerningham, Mendelysham, Wyllesham, Henley, Thurlston, Rysshmere, Kessegreme, Greetingham alias Cretingham, Clopton, Grundesborough, Haston, Kenbroke, Muston, Lenington, Berham, Branford, Sprowton, Whytton, Nacton, Chatesham, Henyngston, Stoke.

292 broad sheets.

31 Dec. 5077. W. CAPON, Priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Thanks him for the trouble he has taken about making his ring, for which he will recompense him at their next meeting. According to my Lord's commandment they have entered into the barn of corn at Felixstowe, to which the keeper made no resistance. Asks when the auditor will come to Gipswich, for he wishes the account of the college to be done before he comes to London next term. Rushe and his other friends are in good health. Mr. Sub-dean, and Lee and Barbour, the master masons, will 1528.

shortly take my Lord the whole platte of the college, to know his pleasure therein. Gipswicke, 31 Dec. Signed.

P. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Mr. Thos. Cromwell. Endd.

31 Dec. 5078. JOHN HACKETT to FRIAR WEST.

Galba, B. ix.
138.
B. M.

"My ghostly father, Friar West." Has received his letter from Greenwich, 21 Nov., and perceives thereby that Wolsey had no leisure to write in answer to his letters, or to West's declaration touching Ric. Harman. Wishes his Grace had asked Tuke, or some other, to write a few words. Wonders that he has not shown Wolsey the importance of this business; for if Harman escapes, the example will comfort others more to ill than to good. The Council declare that as Harman has been for many years a free burgess of Antwerp, and sworn to the Emperor, the particulars of the treason of which he is accused must be declared by a limited time, which, for lack of instructions from the King, Hacket has caused to be prolonged three times, and the last term expired on the 4th, at which time Harman and his friends thought to have got clear off. It were too long to write the great solicitations and labors made by the lords of Antwerp and Harman's friends for his liberty. Considers this matter of more importance than they seem to think at home, seeing that he has had no answer to his letters for four months. Not without great difficulty has obtained from my Lady and her Council a new term, which expires on the last Friday of Feb. next, by which time he hopes for instructions. Thinks that for the heresy Harman's purse will suffer, but not his body.

Sir Richard Akerston, the apostate priest, who is not a freeman of these parts, lies still in prison at Antwerp. The Governor writes that whenever we will pay his costs, he will deliver him to be sent to England. Wishes him to ask Wolsey what he is to do, for he has no letters, and Legh's attorney, who has charge to receive his money, can get none. Hears that Harman says that his imprisonment has cost him more than 2,000 gyldens, and that he trusts to recover damages, for nothing can be laid to his charge but superstitious and naked Hopes he will miss his meaning in this, if my Lord sends instructions. Has written to Mr. Governor for Mr. Craen, as West desired, but a good word of my Lord's will do more good. Fears that otherwise the company will make some difficulty.

To speak again of Harman, without good information from England it will be hard to bring him to penalty, for he denies his acts of heresy, and there is not sufficient proof here. Besides the most part of Antwerp are as good Christians as they are in Almain, so he has not the less favor. This is the substance of a letter he sent by Mr. Governor on the 24th inst. Encloses a memorandum for Wolsey or Tuke of the money due to him. Maghelyn, 31 Dec. 1528. Signed.

Pp. 4.

31 Dec. 5079. JOHN HACKET.

R. O.

Account of moneys due to John Hacket.

P. 1. Add.: "To the religious father, friar John West, Observant, [at th]e cowent of Greenwich." Endd.: "Letters from Mr. Hacket, of the last day of December."

31 Dec. 5080. The ALDERMAN OF OUR LADY'S GUILD AT BOSTON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Received his kind and loving letter at 7 a.m. on the 30th. Thanks him for delivering his present to Wolsey. As to the cranes and other wild fowl that Wolsey wishes to have provided for him by Saturday night, they are scarce, as so many great men have been in the country. Sends, however, 8 cranes, 6 curlews, 6 mewed knots, 3 gray birds, and one heronsewe. Is sorry his last present was no better carried. Sent it living, thinking it would be more acceptable. Sends this by one of the servants of the Guild. Boston, 31 Dec., 10 p.m.

1528.

THE ALDERMAN OF OUR LADY'S GUILD AT BOSTON to CROMWELL—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To, &c., Master Crumwell, besides the Augustine Friars. Endd.

31 Dec.

Le Glay,
Négociations,
II. 676.

5081. DE ROSIMBOZ and DES BARRES to CHARLES V.

After the late return of Des Barres from England, whither he had been sent by Madame to negotiate the truce, she dispatched him to the king of France, under pretence of conveying to the King her ratification of the said truce, in order to learn the King's disposition, which was said to be very bad. Account of Des Barres' negotiations for peace with Francis and Madame d'Angoulême. On his return Bayart arrived at Malines with fresh overtures to Margaret from the said Madame d'Angosmois. He proposed a conference between those two ladies, as no other persons could arrange matters satisfactorily, and experience of the past proved it would be fruitless to place the affair in the hands of the king of England and the Cardinal, who would prolong the negotiations in order to beguile and injure both Charles and Francis, and would endeavor to impose conditions advantageous and profitable to themselves. Bayart was requested to draw up the proposed treaty in the form of a minute, which was greatly altered by the Emperor's council, who consider it will be beneficial, because (among other reasons) it will cause the English to pay court to the Emperor, without costing him anything, even for the intercourse; and it relieves him from the large offers which he has made to the King and Cardinal, both respecting the marriage of his niece, the princess of Denmark, for whom some better alliance may be made, and other matters; and consequently the Emperor will be better able to remedy the affair of the Queen his aunt. Charles will also obtain a large sum from Francis, which will drain that kingdom of money, so that Francis for a considerable time will be unable to recommence the war; and, should he do so, it would serve to discharge the debts to England, which would then cease to reproach the Emperor.

The report of the commissioners who were sent to England respecting Charles's aunt, the queen of England, is annexed.

Account of the embassy of Rosimboz and Des Barres to France. The English ambassador in France had told Francis that the King his master had been informed that Rosymboz and Des Barres were about to pass through France to Spain on some errand of importance concerning peace, and prayed Francis to declare what he knew of the matter. Francis replied they had not spoken to him, but when he had given them audience he would tell the ambassador all. Madame d'Angosmois therefore proposed they should have audience of Francis in some public hall, in order to remove the suspicions both of the English and of others. To this they consented; but afterwards they had a private interview with Madame. Malines, 31 Dec.

French.

31 Dec.

Royal MS.
14 B. xxix.
B. M.

5082. WINE.

Account of Roger Basyng of money received from the King by way of preest for the provision of 152 tuns of Gascon wine provided by him at Bordeaux in Sept., Oct., Nov., and Dec. 20 [Hen. VIII.], and of the rigging of the Menyon and Mary Gilford, men's wages, &c. Total received, 1,045l. 7s. Bought, 152 tuns. Claret, at 36f. to 66f. 10s. a tun; red wine, 42f. 10s. to 45f. 5s.; and white wine, at 42f. = 8,135f. 8s. 9d.

1528.

Customs at Bordeaux, 12s. a tun; "average," 6s.; barring, 1s. Lost in the payment, wages, &c., 100s.—293*f.* 2s. 6*d.*=618*l.* 19s. 6*d.*

Lighterage from Blackwall to the Crane in the Vintry, 4*d.* a tun; cranage, 2*d.* a tun; winding and rolling, 4*d.* a tun. To the cooper, for filling, hoops, chains, &c., 4*l.* 8s. 2*d.* To the gauger, for gauging 146 tuns, which remained full out of the said 152, 4*d.* a tun. Allowances of Alyn King, for 107 days, and Roger Basyng, from 1 Sept. to 31 Dec., 4s. a day each. Total, 58*l.* 19s. 11*d.*

Victuals, wages, and other necessities of the Menyon, by the account of Wm. Dyson, master, and Wm. Holond, purser, 110*l.* 2s. 5*d.*; of the Mary Gilford, by the account of John Rutte, master, and John Artor, purser, 92*l.* 14s. 4*d.* Lodemanage and premage to the masters and mariners, at 6*d.* a tun a month, 3*l.* 16s. 3*d.*=206*l.* 13s.

Total spent, 884*l.* 12s. 5*d.*; leaving 160*l.* 14s. 7*d.* in Basyng's hands.

A paper roll. Endd.

5083.

GRANTS IN DECEMBER 1528.

Dec.
—
GRANTS.

1. John Uppyington of Carampton, Somers., laborer. Pardon for the death of Geoff. Wattes, for which he was detained in Ilchester gaol, Somers., as appears by record of Sir John Fitzjames and his associates. Westm., 1 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 2, m. 6.

2. Commissions of the Peace.

Kent: Tho. card. of York, W. abp. of Canterbury, John abbot of St. Austin's without Canterbury, Tho. prior of Christchurch, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Hen. marq. of Exeter, Tho. viset. Rocheford, Wm. prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, Geo. Nevell lord Burgevenny, Tho. Broke lord Cobham, Sir John More, Tho. Inglefeld, Sir Hen. Guldeforde, Sir Hen. Wiat, Sir Tho. Nevell, Sir Tho. Cheyney, Sir Edw. Guldeford, Sir Edw. Nevell, Sir Wm. Crowmer, Sir John Fogg, Sir Ric. Walden, Sir Wm. Hawte, Sir John Norton, Sir Alex. Culpeper, Sir Edw. Ryngeley, Sir Edw. Wotton, Sir Wm. Fynche, John Hales, Tho. Willoughby, Christ. Hales, Rob. Sandys, Geo. Guldeford, Jas. Walsyngham, Tho. Woode, John Colman, John Baker, Anth. Seyntleger, Hen. Fane, Wm. Rooper, Jas. Pelham, Edw. Boveton, Wm. Darper, John Crispes, John Crowmer, Edw. Monyn, John Potter, Wm. Waller, Wm. Goldwell, Wm. Martyn and Edw. Thawaytes (sic). Westm., 2 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 3*d.*

Lincoln, Kesteven: Tho. card. of York, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Tho. earl of Rutland, Sir Humph. Conyngesby, Rob. Norwiche, Sir John Husey, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, sen., Sir Gilb. Tailboys, Sir John Thymolby, Edm. Busshe, Fras. Hall, Rob. Browne, Wm. Dysney, Fras. Browne, Christ. Wymbisshe, Rob. Husey, John Busshey, Rob. Brudenell, jun., and Tho. Gildon. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 4*d.*

3. Sir John Alen, Sir Edm. Walsyngham, Sir Wm. Baylye, John Rastell and Ric. Gibson, serjeant-at-arms. Commission to make return in writing of the number of "strangers artificers" and craftsmen, and their servants, being householders within London and two miles, who were born without the realm of England. Also to elect ten of the said strangers of the craft of cordwainers to keep houses if they will, appointing to each two servants strangers. Westm., 3 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 12*d.*

4. Commissions of the Peace.

Herts: Tho. card. of York, C. bp. of London, J. bp. of Lincoln, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Hen. earl of Essex, Tho. earl of Rutland, Wm. Blount lord Mountjoy, Sir John More, Sir Humph. Conyngesby, Tho. Inglefeld, Sir Wm. Say, Sir Wm. Gascoign, Sir Griffin Donne, Tho. Cade, clk., Hen. Barley, Tho. Perient, sen., Wm. Purdewe, John Brokett, Ric. Riche, Rob. Turbeville, John Perient, sen., Humph. Fitzherbert, John Conyngesby, Tho. Knighton, John Gill, Ric. Baron, Rob. Daeres, Phil. Butler and John Bolles. Westm., 4 Dec.

Herefordshire: Tho. card. of York, J. bp. of Exeter, G. bp. of Coventry and Lichfield, C. bp. of Hereford, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Walt. Devereux lord Ferrers, Edw. Sutton lord Dudley, Sir John Porte, Wm. Rudhall, Edmund Frocetter, dean of Hereford, Jas. Denton, clk., Sir Wm. Morgan, Tho. Cornewall, Sir Roger Mynours, Sir Ric. Vaughan, Jas. Baskervilde, Thos. Baskervilde, John Russell, John Salter, Geo. Bromeley, John Skydmore, Tho. Monyngton, Tho. Bodenhams, John Rudhale, Wm. Clynton, John Beryton, Ric. Palmer, Nic. Chippenham and Ric. Warmecombe. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 3*d.*

4. Tho. marq. of Dorset and Sir Francis Bryan. Grant, in survivorship, of the offices of constable of Warwike castle, and constable of the manor, town or borough of Warwike, with a messuage called "le Stewardest place," and fees of 10*l.* a year as constable and 10 marks a year as steward. Also the office of keeper of the manor or lordship of Goodrest, with 1528.

GRANTS IN DECEMBER 1528—cont.

Dec.

GRANTS.

the gardens and waters in Weggenoke park, with fees of 4d. a day; the office of keeper or parker of Weggenoke park, with fees of 6d. a day and the appointment of inferior officers; the said fees to be payable out of the issues of the said manors of Warwike, Snytterfeld, Kyngton, Barkseswell, Moreton, Lyghterne, Claredon and Henley Ardern, as Sir Edw. Belknappe or any other enjoyed the same; also the office of master of the hunt of deer, &c. in Weggenok park, with the usual fees in that office, and the herbage and pannage of the said park at the annual rent of 10 marks. This grant is on surrender of pat. 12 Dec. 15 Hen. VIII., granting the same things to Sir Franc. Bryan and Sir Wm. Compton. Del. Westm., 4 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. (which is imperfect).—Pat. p. 2, m. 13.

5. John Lochard of Grete, Salop. Pardon for the death of Tho. Cornewall. Del. Westm., 5 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 8.

5. John Smyth, haberdasher, of London. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wyngfeld. Del. Westm., 5 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

6. Commissions of the Peace.

Gloucestershire: Tho. card. of York, J. bp. of Exeter, C. bp. of Coventry and Lichfield, C. bp. of Hereford, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Walt. Devereux lord Ferrars, Edw. Sutton lord Dudley, Tho. lord Barkeley, the abbot of Gloucester, J. abbot of Cirencester, Sir John Porte, Wm. Rudhale, Jas. Denton, clk., Sir Wm. Kyngeston, Sir Edm. Tame, Sir Tho. Cornewall, Sir Edw. Croft, Sir Wm. Morgan, Sir Wm. Denys, Sir John Briggs, Sir Christ. Baynham, Anth. Hungerford, John Russell, John Salter, Geo. Bromeley, Tho. Cade, clk., Rob. Chauntrell, Rob. Witney, Wm. Tracy, Leonard Poole, Wm. Throkmarston, John Arnold, Rob. Wye, Tho. Matson, John Palmer, John Pakyngton, Jas. Clifford and Tho. Whityngdon. Westm., 6 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 3d.

Hunts: Tho. card. of York, N. bp. of Ely, J. bp. of Lincoln, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Sir Rob. Brudenell, Sir Ric. Broke, Sir John Husey, Sir John Mordaunt, Sir Wm. Gascoign of Cardyngton, Sir John Sayntjohn, Tho. Cade, clk., Nic. Harvy, Wm. Tanfeld, Anth. Malory, Walt. Luke, Edw. Montagewe, Ric. Sapcote, John Castell, John Hynd, Tho. Hall, Tho. Lowth, Laur. Taillard, Tho. Megge, Tho. Wavton, John Taillard, Pet. Fel-dyng and Tho. Downold. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 3d.

10. Commission of the Peace.

York, West Riding: Tho. card. of York, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Hen. earl of Northumberland, Geo. earl of Shrewsbury, Tho. duke of Rutland, Ric. Nevell lord Latymer, Christ. lord Conyers, Tho. lord Darcy, Sir Anth. Fitzherbert, Ric. Lyster, attorney general, Tho. Magnus, clk., Brian Higden, clk., dean of York, Sir Wm. Parre, Sir Wm. Bulmer, Sir Godf. Fuljambe, Sir Tho. Tempest, Wm. Eures, Wm. Frankeleyn, clk., Wm. Holgill, clk., Wm. Tate, clk., Sir Wm. Gascoign of Cardyngton, Sir Wm. Gascoign of Calthorp, sen., Tho. Fairfax, serjeant-at-law, Hen. Sayvell, John Norton, Stephen Hamerton, Walter Luke, Rob. Bowes, Wm. Babthorp, John Wentworth, Roger Tempest, Wm. Eleson, Wm. Nevell, Rob. Chaloner, John Poleyn, Tho. Grice, Walt. Bradford, Ralph Batty, Tho. Strey and Wm. Langton. Westm., 10 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 2d.

11. Commissions of the Peace.

York, North Riding: Tho. card. of York, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Hen. earl of Northumberland, Geo. earl of Shrewsbury, Tho. earl of Rutland, Tho. lord Darcy, Hen. lord Scrope of Bolton, Ric. Nevell lord Latymer, Christ. lord Conyers, Sir Anth. Fitzherbert, Ric. Lyster, the attorney general, Brian Higden, clk., Tho. Magnus, clk., Sir Wm. Parre, Sir Wm. Bulmer, Sir Godf. Fuljambe, Sir Tho. Tempest, Wm. Frankeleyn, clk., Wm. Holgill, clk., Wm. Tate, clk., Sir Wm. Constable, Sir John Nevell of Snape, Sir Tho. Strangways, Sir Ralph Eure, Sir Wm. Gascoign of Cardyngton, Sir John Bulmer, Tho. Fairfax, serjeant-at-law, Roger Lassels, Wm. Danby, John Pulleyn, Walt. Luk, Rob. Bowes, Wm. Fairfax, Edw. Gower, Wm. Nevell, Ralph Batty, Rob. Menell, Rob. Wyvell and Wm. Rokeby. Westm., 11 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 2d.

Surrey: Tho. card. of York, W. abp. of Canterbury, J. bp. of Rochester, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Chas. duke of Suffolk, Hen. marq. of Exeter, Tho. earl of Rutland, Wm. prior of St. John's of Jerusalem in England, Geo. Nevell lord Bergevenny, John Bouchier lord Bernes, Ric. abbot of Bermondessey, Sir Edm. Haward, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, jun., Sir Ric. Broke, Sir John More, Tho. Inglefeld, Wm. Shelley, Sir Tho. Nevell, Sir Hen. Wiat, Sir Ric. Weston, Sir Nich. Carewe, Sir John Gage, Sir John Aleyn, Edm. Bray, Sir Wm. Gascoign, Sir Matt. Brown, Sir John Gaynsford, Sir Rob. Johns, Brian Tuke, John Scott, Ric. Page, Tho. Hennege, Ralph Pexsall, Rob. Wyntershall, Christ. More, Tho. Lisle, Tho. Stidale, Wm. Westbrook, John Skynnar, Ralph Vyne, John Morys, John Davestre and Wm. Muschampe. Westm., 11 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 4d.

Northamptonshire: Tho. card. of York, J. bp. of Lincoln, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Tho. marq. of Dorset, Wm. prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, Sir John Grey, Sir Rob. Brudenell, Sir Humph. Conyngesby, Rob. Norwyche, Sir Wm. Gascoign, Sir Wm. Parre, Sir Walt. Mauntell, Ric. Knyghtley, Edm. Knyghtley, Anth. Ralegh, Ric. Burton, Wm. Spenser, Tho. Brudenell, Edw. Mountagewe, Edw. Warner, Ric. Humfrey, Tho. Lovet, Wm. Sanders and Rob. Chauntrell. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 4d.

1528.

Dec.

GRANTS.

12. Commissions of the Peace.

Dorset: Tho. card. of York, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Hen. lord Mountague, John Tuchet lord Audley, John Bourchier lord Fitzwaren, Edw. lord Strourton, Hen. lord Dawbeney, John Fitzjames, Wm. Shelley, Sir Giles Strangways, Sir Wm. Strourton, Sir Tho. Trenchard, Sir John Roggers, Sir Tho. Lynde, Ric. Lyster, John Horsey, sen., John Britt, Wm. Uvedale, Ric. Pheppis, John Moreton, Wm. Hody, Nic. Willoughby, John Horsey, jun., Hen. Strangways, John Rogers, jun., Th. Thornell and Hen. Trenchard. Westm., 12 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 1d.

Essex: Tho. card. of York, C. bp. of London, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Tho. marq. of Dorset, John earl of Oxford, Hen. earl of Essex, Tho. earl of Rutland, Rob. viscount Fitzwater, Tho. viscount Rocheford, Wm. prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, John abbot of Colchester, Sir John More, Tho. Inglefeld, Sir Tho. Tirell of Heron, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, sen., Sir Roger Wentworth, Sir John Grene, Sir Tho. Tey, Sir John Raynsford, Brian Tuke, Rob. Norwiche, Humph. Browne, Humph. Wyngfeld, Wm. Pyrton, John Seyntclere, Hen. Barley, Walter Frost, John Smyth, Tho. Audeley, Roger Cholmeley, jun., Wm. Bradbury, Ric. Riche, Barth. Prowes and Pet. Baron. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 1d.

12. Ric. Woleman, LL.D., Wm. Benet, LL.D., and John Vawdy. Next presentation to the parish church of Highhungar, London dioc. Del. Westm., 12 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 1, m. 27.

12. The provost of St. Nicholas' college, in the university of Cambridge. Letters patent prohibiting all persons to withdraw from the said college certain "conductys singing men" and children (10 priests, 6 clerks and 16 children), established by Henry VI. The provost of the college is appointed to furnish the sufficient number, but not from the chapel of the Household, Windsor College, Eton, St. Stephen's Westminster, or the chapel of Tho. card. of York. Del. Westm., 12 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

14. Tho. Palmer, sewer for the Mouth. To be lieutenant of the tower and bridge called Newenhambrige, in the marches of Calais, with a retinue of 16 soldiers from the castle of Hammes, in the marches of Calais, of which lord Mountjoy is captain, in the same manner as lord Sands or Sir Rob. Jernegan held the office. Del. Westm., 14 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.

15. John Byrcom alias Birkoon, of Lyse Sturney alias of Alton, Hants, butcher. Pardon for having received from John Yong of Lysturny, Hants, husbandman, certain cattle stolen by the said John, who is indicted of having on the 10 Sept. 15 Hen. VIII. broken into a place called Rowlands castell, at Warbelyngton, Hants, and carried off the said cattle, which belonged to Tho. prior of Idesworth, Hants. Also pardon of all abjurations of the kingdom and of his return without licence. Bridewell, 10 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 15 Dec.—P.S. Pat. p. 2, m. 24.

16. Commissions of the Peace.

Lincoln (Holand): Tho. card. of York, J. bp. of Lincoln, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Tho. earl of Rutland, John Constable, clk., dean of Lincoln,* Sir Humph. Conyngesby, Rob. Norwiche, Sir John Husee, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, sen., Sir Gilb. Tailboys, Tho. Robertson, John Hennege, sen., Fras. Broun, Tho. Hennege, jun., John Litelbury, Tho. Tempest, Anth. Eyrby, Tho. Holand and Tho. Halgh. Westm., 16 Dec.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 1d.

Lincoln (Lyndsey): Tho. card. of York, Tho. duke of Norfolk, J. bp. of Lincoln, Tho. earl of Rutland, Geo. Hennege, clk., dean of Lincoln, Sir Humph. Conyngesby, Rob. Norwiche, Rob. Dymmock, Sir Christ. Willoughby, Sir Gilbert Tailboyes, Sir Rob. Tyrwhit, Sir Wm. Askewe, Sir Tho. Burgh, jun., Sir And. Billesby, John Hennege, sen., Sir Christ. Askugh, Tho. Hennege, Wm. Skipwith, Wm. Tirwhit, John Mounson, John Seyntpoll, Wm. Sandon, John Goderik, John Topelyff, John Copledyke, Edw. Forman, Tho. Dymmok, John Litelbury, Tho. Missenden, Ric. Clerk, John Hennege, jun., Wm. Dalyson, John Hall and Edw. Forsett. Westm., 16 Dec.

Middlesex: Tho. card. of York, W. abp. of Canterbury, C. bp. of London, Tho. duke of Norfolk, Chas. duke of Suffolk, Tho. earl of Rutland, John abbot of St. Peter's, Westminster, Wm. prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, Sir John More, Sir Ric. Broke, Tho. Inglefeld, Wm. Shelley, Sir Tho. More, Sir John Daunce, Sir Tho. Nevell, Sir And. Wyndesore, Sir Hen. Wiat, Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam, sen., Sir Wm. Gascoign, Sir John Briggs, Sir John Halys, Wm. Elys, Brian Tuke, John Spilman, Tho. Hennege, John Skewes, Ralph Pexsall, John Pakyngton, Hen. White, Hen. Frowik, John Kyrtan, Roger Cholmeley, jun., Rob. Wrothe, Rob. Cheseman, Rob. Elryngton, Ric. Hawkes, Wm. Assheby and John Palmer. As above.—Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 4d.

16. Sutton Coldefylde, Warw. Grant of incorporation to the town, with a warden and fellowship. Wm. Gybons to be the first warden. The fellowship to consist of

* Dean Constable died on the 15th July 1528, and was succeeded by George Henneage.

1528.

GRANTS in DECEMBER 1528—cont.

Dec.	25 men, including warden, who are to be elected yearly by the inhabitants above 22 years of age. Also grants of mortmain licence, market and fair, &c. Del. Westm., 16 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.* Pat. p. 2, m. 21 to 23.	Tholouse woad and Gascon wine. Del. Westm., 20 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B.
GRANTS.	18. John Wagott, clk. Presentation to the parish church of St. George, Exeter, void by death. Westm., 18 Dec.— Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 12.	22. John Chamber, clk., Wm. Thynne, chief clk. of the Kitchen, and John Thynne. Next presentation to the parish church of Stoke Clymslond, Exeter dioc. Del. Westm., 22 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII.—S.B. Pat. p. 2, m. 11.
	20. Christ. Kemp, one of the King's sewers. Licence to import 300 tuns of	22. Wm. Pecke, "carnifex" or butcher, of Northampton. Protection; going in the retinue of Sir Rob. Wingfield. Greenwich, 22 Dec. 20 Hen. VIII. Del. Westm., 22 Dec. —P.S. (with duplicate.)

5084. CORMAC "JUVENIS" MACKARE to HENRY VIII.

Tit. B. xi. 395.
B. M.

The King has given him inexpressible satisfaction in commanding his humble services. He is to assist lord James Butler against James Gerald, pretended earl of Desmond, who, following the bad example of some of his forefathers, has rebelled against the King. But I have learned from some threatening language of the earl of Kildare's servants, that my brother the earl of Ormond, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose, suffers serious disturbances from some of your subjects, and without him I fear I cannot be of much use. I beg, therefore, that you will allow him to visit his own country (ad propria meare).

Lat., p. 1. Add.

5085. THE BORDERS.

Cal. B. iii. 65.
B. M.

"The Counsell in Householde with the Warden."

The chancellor of Durham, 40*l.* Mr. Tempeste, 40 mks. Mr. Bowes, 20*l.* = 86*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

The Lieutenants and Deputies of the East March:—Thos. Percy, lieutenant, 20*l.* Deputies: Sir Wm. Hearone, 20 mks.; Sir Roger Gray and Roger Laissells, 10*l.* each. Two land sergeants, 40*s.* each. = 57*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

The Middle March:—Lieutenant Sir Wm. Evers, with the rule of Rieddesdaill, 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Deputies: Robt. Colyngwode, John Horsey and John Hierone, 10*l.* each; and Sir Rauff Fenwick, with the rule of Tyndaill, 45*l.* Edw. Charleton of Hesilside, under-bailiff in Tyndaill, 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Wm. Charleton of Lee Hall, under-bailiff, 40*s.* = 147*l.*

Gentlemen of Northumberland in fee with the Warden:—Knights: Lord Ogille, 13*s.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sir Edw. Gray, 100*s.* Sir John Delavale, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Sir Wm. Ogile, 100*s.* Sir Wm. Ellercar, 100*s.* Sir John Herone of Chipches, 100*s.* = 40*l.*

Esquires: John Wydryngton, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Lenarde Mousegrave, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Cuthbert Raidcliffe, 100*s.* John Fenewike of Wallington, 5*l.* Nicles Thornewton, 4*l.* Wm. Swinborne of Caiphetone, 66*s.* 8*d.* Rogier Swinborne, 52*s.* 4*d.* John Claveryng, 53*s.* 4*d.* Wm. Carnaby, 53*s.* 4*d.* Gylbert Eryngtone, 53*s.* 4*d.* Thos. Eryngtone, 53*s.* 3*d.* Hugh Rudley, 66*s.* 8*d.* Christ. Mytforthe, 66*s.* 8*d.* = 50*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Gentlemen: Roger Hearon of Meldon, George Urde, Robt. Rames, Matthew Whitfeld, Coutbert Ogle of Chepyngton, John Ogle of Ogle Castle, George Fenwik of Fenewik,

* The bill is not signed by the King, but it is signed by Wolsey at the bottom, where there is also a certificate by Ric. Lyster that John Daunce and John Hales have examined the annual value of the lordship of Sutton Colfield.

1528.

53s. 4d. each. George Tompyn, Ric. Ruderforde, Robt. Thyrlwall, Oswold Mytforde, Gawayne Mytforde, Thos. and Robt. Lawson, Roger Horseley, Percyvall Selbey, Wm. Alder of Prendwik, John Rowdeman, John Clennell, Wm. Hearing, John Harbottell of Preston, Thos. Hebborne, Raiffe Ildertone, George Muschaunce, Rogier Muschaunce, Ric. Strudder, Thos. Holburne, Thos. Cramlynton, Wm. Hearon of Crawley, Edw. Gallen, John Halle of Otterborn, 40s. each. = 66*l.* 13s. 4d.

Norhamshire:—John Care of Hetton, 40s. Coutbert Muschaunce, 53s. 4d. Wm. Selbey, of Brangyston, Robt. and John Selbey, Robt. Maners, Hen. Swynowe, John Hagerstone, Gilbert Swinborne of Cornell, John Burrell of Heltell, Edw. Muschaunce, John Blenkinsoppe, Robt. Thirwalle, John Ridley of Corseley, Coutbert Shaftowe, Meles Craue, Wm. Wallys, Thos. Erryngton, 40s. each. Thos. Scott, 20s. = 37*l.* (sic.)
Total, 486*l.*

Pp. 6. Add.: To my lord Legate's good grace. Endd.: "The namys of the Counsaile in Householde with therle of Northumberland and other, which should receive fees."

5086. THE EARL OF ANGUS.

Cal. B. vii.
f. 79.
B. M.
Pinkerton's
Scotland,
ii. 483.

Declaration of Andro Cayrnis, minister provincial of the Friars Minor in Scotland, that, at the request of the earl of Angus, he presented to the king of Scotland a letter from the Earl, dated Coldingham Abbey, this Wednesday, at night, offering his services, and saying that Temptallon and all he has is at his command, if he may be restored to his honor and heritage, and assured of his life. The King, with the advice of his Council, accepted these offers, and promised to fulfil the Earl's requests if he would observe his promises. Cayrnis sent to the Earl on Friday, and received a reply, dated Coldingham, Friday, on the Saturday, by which the Earl promised to perform the contents of his previous letter, but would only speak for himself. The King, however, promised to receive his kin and friends, if they would make similar offers. Cayrnis made this copy at the request of Gawayne, archbishop of Glasgow, chancellor, the Lords of the council, and the arch-deacon of the East Riding, the English ambassador. Signed.

Pp. 2. Endd.

5087. THE DUKE OF ALBANY.

Add. MS.
28,577, f. 317.
B. M.

Proposal of the duke of Albany to the Pope for a crusade against the Turk.
Ital., pp. 7, modern copy.

5088. GILBERT ECCLESTON to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Will be glad to make acquaintance with Mr. Control'er with my lord's Grace. Wishes to know if he will be Cromwell's guest, or "take a pyke with me in my pore house." "Sir, I am the more importune upon you at this time, for I do fear that my lord's Grace doth not tarry long here at his place. Wherefore, Sir, I beseech you to ascertain me what your pleasure is how I shall order myself in this behalf."

Hol., p. 1. Add.: Maister Cromwell. Endd.: Egleston.

5089. T. TWESELL to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Requests him "to take some pain in preferring of my patent unto my lord's Grace; wherein ye shall have my hearty thanks, and part of such as God hath lent me." If it can be obtained, he may deliver it to John Baydon in Dystaff Lane, to be sent to Winchester in the audit time, which will begin 19 Nov. Assures him "that all petitions extraordinary shall have none effect at my hands at this audit," unless he have a special warrant signed by my lord's Grace.

1528.

T. TWESELL to CROMWELL—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the worshipful Mr. Thomas Cromwell.

5090. SIR WILLIAM COMPTON.

R. O. Lease by Wolsey as guardian of Peter Compton, son and heir of Sir William Compton, to Edward Philipps, clerk, and Edward Pekke, of the manor of Harrold, Beds, during the nonage of the said Peter.

Draft, pp. 3, large paper.

5091. ——— to [WOLSEY].

R. O. Requests him to write to Sir John Bulmer to allow the abbot of St. Mary's officers of his lordship of Spawnton to occupy their offices and farms there, and serve the processes belonging to the liberties of the monastery, without let or disturbance, and that Sir John's servants must not kill the King's deer in the woods of the said lordship. If my lord of Rutland ask for a letter to the abbot for a farm called Wilhows, it may please you to stay therein, and write "to the said Lord as ye think best." Lord Scroope desires the stewardship of Richmondshire, but the Abbot says lord Conyers and his ancestors have had it by convent seal, and fears giving it to Scroope would cause variance between them. He refers the matter "to your good wisdom, counsel and advice." I write accordingly by the Abbot's request, who wishes you to write your mind to him in reply.

P. 1.

5092. THOS., Parson of Wediall, to CROMWELL.

R. O. Was again arrested on Thursday last for the matter about which he spoke to Cromwell. Expects daily more trouble, unless Cromwell speak to my Lord in his favor. Has neither money nor raiment. Desires Cromwell to inform his sister when he should wait on him to go to my lord's Grace, as he has nobody to keep his cure. Is too poor to give him anything but his daily prayers.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To the right worshipful Master Cromwell.

5093. WOLSEY to the KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN IN ENGLAND.

R. O. As their Order is the bulwark of the Christian faith, and they are its chief champions against the Infidels, confirms all their privileges granted by Popes, so far as they are not opposed to the laws of England, with the patronage of all their hospitals, which might go to Wolsey by virtue of his legatine authority. Westminster, ——— 1528.

Lat., pp. 5.

5094. DR. PHILIP FABER (SMITH)* to WOLSEY.

R. O. Thanks the Cardinal for absolving him from his errors at the intercession of cardinal Campeggio. He had confessed to Campeggio the holding heretical communications with one Dynamus, who had come to Calais two or three years ago. Dynamus having asked him to what studies he was most devoted, he replied, "To the Scriptures;" and being again asked what interpreter he chiefly followed, he said, "Johannes Lyranus, because he is esteemed (habetur) in the booksellers' shops above all the books of the Old and New Testament." To which Dynamus facetiously replied, "Dimitte delirum illum Lyram, and take this new preacher of the Gospel," giving him Luther's treatises De Abroganda Missa, Expositio super Visionem Danielis, In octavarum Danielis;—which the writer had never seen before. He also received from him three books which Dynamus had bought at the market of Antwerp, viz., Melancthon on the Epistle to the Romans and on the Gospel of Matthew, and Luther De Servo Arbitrio. Melancthon on the Gospel of John, and on the two Epistles to the Corinthians, with Francis Lambert on the Rule of the Minorites, he had resold to James Yates; and some other volumes in English and German, which he had copied out with his own hand.

* See Sir Robert Wingfield's letter of the 8th Oct. 1528.

1528.

Pp. 2. Add. : R., &c. D. Thomæ Wolse Cardinali et a latere Legato. Endd. : Ex Philippo Fabro.

5095.] JOHN COOKE and CHRISTOPHER NELSON.

R. O.

"The answer of John Cooke to the complaint of Sir Christopher Nelson, priest," stating that he and his brother Edward had interfered to protect a young wife, daughter of a widow at Winchester, against indecent advances made to her by Sir Christopher, which he had reported to the late Bishop, who, on examination of the matter, committed him to the keeper of his convict prison for a season, and afterwards expelled him his diocese. After this Sir Christopher came to his kinsman Dr. Burbanke, about six years ago, to bring "this" charge against Cooke, and sued him "in your Gracis odians;" but Burbank caused the suit to surcease at that time, in consequence of a letter written to him by the late bishop of Winchester, explaining the circumstances.

Pp. 2. Endd.

5096. CONFESSION of WM. STAPLETON, Clerk, to WOLSEY.

R. O.

Was a monk of St. Benett's, in Norfolk. In 19 Hen.VIII. one Dennys of Hoston brought him two books called Thesaurus Spirituum and Secreta Secretorum, a ring, a plate, a circle, and a sword for the art of digging, which he said he had from the vicar of Watton, and for which Stapleton and John Kerver gave him two nobles in pledge. Having been often punished for [not] rising to matins, and doing his duty in the church, asked "my Lord" for licence to sue out a dispensation; which he granted, with six months' time to purchase it. Went that night to Dennys to ask help for purchasing the dispensation, and he introduced Stapleton to two cunning persons who had a placard for treasure trove, who gave him books and other things concerning the art of digging. Went to search a place called Systerne, but were ordered off the ground by lady Tyrre. Went to Norwich, and thence to Fellmyngham, with one Godfrey and his boy, "which Godfrey had a shewer called Anthony Fular; and his said boye did serye unto hym (which said spirytt I had after myselff)." Could find nothing, and returned to Norwich, where they met a person who took them to a house in which he thought there was treasure. Called the spirit of the treasure to appear; "but he did not, for I suppose of a treweth there was noone there." Asked one Ric. Theny for help to get his dispensation, and he and his friends gave him 46s. 8d. Came to London, and purchased in Wolsey's court a dispensation to be a hermit. After his return to Norfolk was again persuaded to continue the science, but he said he would not unless his books were better. Procured from one Leech certain instruments and a book to which the parson of Lesingham had bound a spirit called Androw Malchus. Leech told him that the said parson, Sir John of Leiston and another had lately called up Andrew Malchus, Oberion and Inchubus, and that when Oberion would not speak they asked Andrew Malchus the cause, who answered that it was because he was bound to the lord Cardinal, and they entreated to be allowed to depart, promising to do any service at any future time. The plate which was made for the calling of Oberion has remained with Sir Thos. Moore since Stapleton was before him. Was taken to Walsingham by one Ric. Tynney, to see "the lord Leonard Marques," who spoke to him about the art of digging, and promised that if he would take pains about it he would sue out a dispensation for him to be a secular priest, and make him his chaplain. To try him, money was hid in the garden; but he could not find it. Went after that with Sir John Shepe and Sir Robt. Porter to a place near Creke Abbey, where they thought treasure was. Shepe called the spirit, and Stapleton "showed" to him, but all to no purpose. Went to London, and stayed there ten weeks till Christmas time, and then went into Leicestershire with lord Leonard, who had sued out his dispensation. Returned to Norfolk about the beginning of Lent. Was asked by one Cooke of Calkett Hall to try his art, as there was much money about his place. Wrote to Sir John of Leiston to come and assist, but he would not; so Stapleton and the parish priest of Gorleston tried, but to no effect. Came to London with his brother, and was arrested for leaving lord Leonard without licence. Left his instruments at Sewell's house at Westminster, whence they were taken to Sir Thos. Moore, who still has them. Lord Leonard sent for him to Kew, and finally pardoned him, and caused him to be discharged. Was engaged by Sir John Ratclyff, parson of Wanstrowe, in the West country, to help him in his benefice; but he left Westminster suddenly, without Stapleton.

1528.

CONFESSION of WM. STAPLETON, Clerk, to WOLSEY—cont.

As to the matters concerning the duke of Norfolk, was told by one Wright, servant to the said Duke, that his master was sore vexed with a spirit by Wolsey's enchantment. Answered that it was too high a matter to meddle with. Was sent for by the Duke, who told Wright to inform him of his pleasure. Wright said that the Duke was troubled with a spirit, and he had told him Stapleton could do him good; and he advised Stapleton to feign something, and thereby exalt himself, his brother and Wright. Refused at first; but at last, "soore blynded with covetize," consented, and the next time he saw the Duke told him he had made and sanctified an image of wax to his similitude, but he did not know whether it had done him good. The Duke then asked him if he knew whether the Cardinal had any spirit? Said he only knew what has been already stated about Oberion. The Duke then sent for Dr. Wilson, who examined him. He then ordered him to write down all the premises, and to go to Wolsey.

Pp. 5. Endd.

5097. The BUTLERS.

Lamb. MS.
613, f. 29.

"A note of such lands as Peers Butler erle of Ossorie, and James lord Butler his sonne, tooke by lease for terms of years from Dame Anne St. Ledger, widow, and Dame Margaret Bullen, widow, (daughters and coheirs unto Thomas Butler late erle of Ormond,) Thomas lord Rochford, sonne and heyre to dame Margaret Bulleyne, and Sir George St. Ledger, knight, sonne and heir to Dame Anne St. Ledger, which sayd lands were then in the possession of the sayd ladies and their sonnes aforesayd, in anno 20 regni Henrici Octavi."

P. 1, in a modern hand.

5098. WALES.

R. O.

Orders made in Council, on the petition of the tenants of Breknok, S. Wales, stating that justice was not kept, and that the King's tenants were impoverished and his revenues decayed. These orders were made principally at the prayers of John ap Ll's Havarde, Thos. Walter, bailly of Breknok, Meredith ap Watkyn, Thos. ap D'd ap Morgan, and Walter ap Howell, with the consent of all the other burgesses, as shown by their writings under two great authentic seals, dated Breknok, 16 Oct. 20 Hen.VIII.

1528.

Corrected draft, pp. 20, large paper.

5099. WALES.

Arch. xii. 89.

Extract from a proclamation made, 20 Hen.VIII., for dividing certain lordships and towns to be annexed and knit into divers shires near the Marches of Wales.

5100. The WESTERN CIRCUIT.

R. O.

"Expencys in rydyng the west circute and to the Mownte, by the stward, solicitor and auditor, in the xxth yere of the regne of kyng Henri the viijth."

Shoeing and horse-meat, and mending the auditor's saddle at London, 6s. 8d. Expences at Colbroke and Medonhedd, 8s. 7d.; Henley, 13s. 7d.; Oxford, 11s. 3½d.; Wodestok, 18s. 7d.; Wynchcomb, 8s. 11½d.; Mynchin Hampton, 8s. 8d.; Tyttbery, 8s. 6½d.; Cossham, 7s. 6d.; the Vyse, 12s. 6d.; Hyndon, 11s. 7d.; Shaftesbery, 9s. 4d.; Schurborne, 16s. 1½d.; Glasonbery, 6s. 2d.; Yevyll, 11s. 2d.; Schare (Chard), 17s. 0½d.; Exitor, 22s. 7½d.; Okehamp-ton, 12s. 6d.; Pyperys, 10s.; Lyscard, 11s. 8d.; Lestethiell (Lostwithiel), 8s. 6d.; Trerew, 9s. 0½d.; the Mownte, 11s. 8d.; Markyshew (Marazion), 16s. 5d.; Redruth, 7s. 8½d.; Trerew, 21s. 8d.; Lestethyell, 6s. 8½d.; Lyscarde, 6s.; Pyperz, 8s. 7½d.; Okehampton, 16s. 2d.; Crokernwell, 7s.; Exitor, 31s. 8d.; Otterton, 6s. 11d.; Charmouth, 11s. 1½d.; Wyscomb, 7s. 2d.; Lyme, 6s. 8d.; Marchwode, 9s.; Loderys, 11s.; Dorchester, 18s. 8d.; Blanford, 6s. 11d.; Salysbery, 39s. 9d.; Andover, 9s. 6d.; Basingstoke, 13s. 11½d.; Hertford brege, 8s. 1½d.; Wynsore, 13s. 0½d. = Total, 27l. 17s.

Endd.

5101. SHIPPING.

R. O.

"Anno R. Henrici Octavi xx^{mo} for Yslonde."

From London, 8 ships; Harwich, Ipswich, Maventre (Manningtree), with the aid o Dedam, Sudberre and Colchester, 14 ships; Woodbridge, 3 ships; Alborowe, Sysewell and Thorpe, 6 ships; Dunwiche, Walderswicke, Sewold (Southwold), Easton and Coughyve (Covehithe), 32 ships; Lastoffe, 6 ships; Yarmouth, 30 ships; Claye, Blakeney, and Cromer, 30 ships; Wells, 6 ships; Lynne, 10 ships; Boston, 4 ships = 149 ships.

For the North Seas :—Hastings, 30 crayers; Rye and Winchelsea, 50; Hyde, Holstone and Romney, 20; Colchester, Wyvenowe and Brikelse, 20; Dover and Sandwich, 10; Harwich, Ipswich and Maventrye, 20; Alborowe, 4; Dunwich, Sowolde, Walderswyke, Easton and Coughyve, 8; Laystoffe, 6; Yarmouth, 20; Cromer, Blakeney and Clay, 10; Lynne, 4; Scarborowe and Whitby, 20 = 222 crares.

For Scotland :—London, 6 crares; Harwich, Ipswich and Maventrye, 12; Wood-bridge, 3; Alborowe, Sysewell and Thorpe, 6; Dunwich, Walderswicke, Sowolde, Easton and Coughyve, 8; Laystoffe, 3; Yarmouth, 8; Cromer, Clay and Blakeney, 3; Lynne, 6; Scarborowe, 6; Whytby and Berlington, 8; Sheles at Tynmowth Haven, 8 = 78 crares.

Pp. 3. Endd. by Cecil.

1528.

5102. CALAIS.

"The rate of victaile as shalbe necessary to be provided for the victailling of suche the noubre of persones as is brought in by a booke of reoport of a generall serche made throughout the xij. wardes within the town of Callis, as particularly shalbe declared, every warde by itselff."

1. "The ward of Ric. Chauffer, alderman, and in persons within the same ward," 497. Item, in wheat, at the rate of a peck the week for one man's portion, $769\frac{1}{2}$ qrs. 1 bushel; in malt, at the same rate, 807 quarters 5 bushels, whereof is provided 50 qrs. = 757 qrs. 5 bss.; in beef, at a half ox for one man's portion, $248\frac{1}{2}$ lbs., whereof provided $2\frac{1}{2}$ beefs, and so to be provided $245\frac{3}{4}$; in lings, at 7 ling fishe for 1 man's portion by the year, 3,479, whereof none provided = 3,479; in herring, at a kilderkin to one man's portion, accounted at 240 herrings in a kilderkin, and so for the said whole number of persons, 124 barrells 1 kilderkin; in bacon flitches, at a flitch to one man's portion by the year, 497 flitches, whereof provided 2, and so to be provided 497 (sic); in beans and peasins, at $1\frac{1}{2}$ bushel for one man's portion by the year, 90 quarters 1 bushel (whereof none provided); in wood, at 1,000 for a man by the year - 497[000], whereof provided in billet and logs 209,000, and so to be provided 288,[000]; in cheese, at 20 lbs. to one man's portion, 9,940 lbs. (none provided); in salt, at a bushel to a man, 62 qrs. 1 bushel, whereof provided 129 qrs., and so to be provided, nil; in butter, at 10 lb. a man, (none provided,) 4,970 lb.; in hops, at 4 lb. a man, for his drink, (none provided,) 2,000*l*.

2. "The ward of Hen. Keles, alderman, and in persons within the same ward, 340." In wheat at 13 bushels a man, $552\frac{1}{2}$ qrs. (27 qrs. provided) = 525 qrs.; malt, at the same rate, (none provided,) $552\frac{1}{2}$ qrs.; "beeffes," at $\frac{1}{2}$ beef to a man, (none provided,) 170; ling fish, 7 to a man, (none provided,) 2,380; herring, a kilderkin a man, 85 barrells; bacon flitches, a flitch a man, 340 (4 provided) = 336; beenys and peasins, $1\frac{1}{2}$ bushel a man, (none provided,) $63\frac{1}{2}$ qrs.; "whoode," at 1,000 a man, 340,000 (145,000 provided) = 195,000; cheese, at 20 lbs. a man, 7,600 lb., (provided, 30 waye, at 252 lb. the waye, = 7,560 lb.) = 40 lb.; salt, at a bushel a man, (none provided,) 340 bushels; butter, at 10 lb. a man, 3,800 lb. (400 lb. provided) = 3,400 lb.; candles, at 6 lb. a man, (provided in tallow, 3,400 lb.,) = 2,040 lb.; hops, at 4 lb. a man, 1,360 lb.

3. "The ward of Ric. Brown, alderman, within his warde 369 persons." In wheat, at 13 bushels to one person for his store by the year, 599 qrs. 5 bushels (prd. 14 qrs.) = 585 qrs. 5 bushels; malt, at the same rate, 599 qrs. 5 bushels (none prd.); beefs, at $\frac{1}{2}$ beef a man, $184\frac{1}{2}$; ling fish, at 7 to a man, (none prd.,) 2,583; herring, a kilderkin a man, 92 barrells 1 firkin; bacon, a flitch a man, 369 flitches; "beenys and peasins," 69 qrs. $\frac{1}{2}$ bushel; whoode, 369,000, (prd. $43\frac{1}{2}$ m^{le}) = $325\frac{1}{2}$ m^{le}; cheese, 20 lb. a man, (none prd.,) 7,380 lb.; salt, a bushel a man, 369 bushels (116 bushels prd.) = 253 bss.; butter, 10 lb. a man, 3,690 lb. (280 lb. prd.) = 3,410 lb.; candles, 6 lb. the man, (none prd.,) = 2,223 lb.; hops, at the same rate, (none prd.,) 1,476 lb.

4. "Hen. Planckney, alderman, and within his warde, 202 persons." In wheat, at the rate of 13 bss. a man by the year, 328 qrs. 2 bss. (prd. 22 qrs.) = 306 qrs. 2 bss.; malt, at that rate, (none prd.,) 328 qrs. 2 bss.; beefs, at a halfe beeff a man, (none prd.,) 101; ling fishe, at 7 to a man, (none prd.,) 3,414; herring, a kilderkin a man (none prd.); bacon flitches (none prd.); beenys and peasins (none prd.), 37 qrs. 7 bss.; in "whoode," 202,000 (whereof prd. 50,000,) = 152,000; cheese, at 20 lb. a man, (none prd.) = 4,040 lb.; salt, 202 bss., (prd. 128 bss.) = 74 bss.; butter, at 10 lb. a man, (none prd.,) 2,020 lb.; candles, 6 lb. a man, (prd. in tallow 1,000 lb.) = 1,212 lb.; hops, at the same rate, 808 lb.

5. "Tho. Prowde, alderman, and within his ward, 207 persons." In wheat, at 13 bss. a man by the year, 336 qrs. 3 bss. (22 qrs. prd.) = 334 qrs. 3 bss. (sic); malt, same rate, (none prd.) = 336 qrs. 3 bss.; beefs, at $\frac{1}{2}$ beef to a man, (none prd.,) $103\frac{1}{2}$; ling fishe, 7 to a man, (none prd.); herring, a kilderkin a man, (none prd.,) 51 barrells 3 firkins; bacon flitches, (none prd.,) 207; beenes and peasins, (none prd.,) 38 qrs. $6\frac{1}{2}$ bss.;

1528.

wood, 1,000 a man, 207,000 (36,000 prd.) = 171,000; cheese, at 20 lb. a man (none prd.); salt, a bushel a man, 207 bushels, (104 bss. prd.) = 103 bss.; butter, 10 lb. the man, 2,070 lb. (48 prd.) = 2,022 lb.; candles, 6 lb. the man, (prd. in tallow 5,000 lb.) = 1,242 lb.; hops, at the rate aforesaid, 900 lb.

6. "Jo. Massingberd, alderman, and within his ward 293 persons." In wheat, at 13 bss. to every man's portion for a year, 476 qrs. 1 bs. (prd. 37 qrs.) = 439 qrs. 1 bs.; malt, at same rate, (none prd.) = 476 qrs. 1 bs.; beefs, 146½ (2½ prd.) = 144; ling fische, 7 to a man, (none prd.) 2051; herring, a kilderkin a man, (none prd.), 73 barrels 1 firkin; bacon, 293 flitches (14 prd.) = 279; beennes and peasin, (none prd.), 54 qrs. 7½ bss.; wood, 293,000 (prd. 145,000) = 148,000; cheese, at 20 lb. the man, 5,860 lb., (prd. 152) = 5,708 lb.; salt, a bushel a man, 293 bss., (prd. 936 bss.) = nil; butter, at 10 lb. a man, 2,916 lb. (prd. 884 lb.) = 2,032 lb.; candles, at 6 lb. a man, (none prd.) = 1,758 lb.; hops, after the rate, 1,172 lb.

7. "The ward of Will. Pryseley, alderman, and within his ward 402 persons." In wheat, at 13 bss. to every man's portion, 653 qrs. 2 bss., (prd. 16 qrs.) = 601 qrs. 2 bss.; malt (none prd.), 653 qrs. 2 bss.; beefts, [201, (6 qrs. prd.) = 199½ beefts; ling fische, 2,814 (100 prd.) = 2,714; herring, a kilderkin a man = 100½ barrels; bacon, 402 flitches, (16 prd.) = 386 sides; beennes and peasin, (none prd.) = 75 qrs. 3 bss.; wood, 402,000, (prd. 64,000) = 338,000; cheese, 20 lb. a man, (none prd.), 8,040 lb.; salt, 402 bss. (prd. 80 bss.) = 322 bss.; butter, 10 lb. the man, 4,020 lb. (prd. 618 lb.) = 4,402 lb.; candles, 6 lb. the man, (none prd.), 2,412 lb.; hops, after the rate, 1,608 lb.

8. "The ward of Chr. Conwaye, alderman, within his ward 230 persons." Wheat, at 13 bss. the man, 373 qrs. 6 bss. (prd. 56 qrs.) = 317 qrs. 6 bss.; malt, at the same rate, 373 qrs. 6 bss. (prd. 50 qrs.) = 323 qrs. 6 bss.; beefts, 115 (prd. 2½ beefts) = 112½ beefts; ling fish, 7 to a man, (none prd.), 1,610 lings; herring, a kilderkin a man, 57½ barrels; bacon flitches, 230 (prd. 14) = 216; beenes and peasin (none prd.) 43 qrs. 1 bs.; wood, 230,000 (prd. 82,000) = 138,000; cheese, 20 lb. a man, (none prd.) 4,600 lb.; salt, 230 bss. (prd. 1350 bss.) = nil; butter, 2,300 lb. (prd. 420 lb.) = 1,880; candles, 6 lb. the man, (prd. in tallow, 8,000 lb.) = 1,380 lb.; hops, after the rate, 920 lb.

9. "The ward of Will. Snowdon, alderman, and within his ward 281 persons." In wheat, at 13 bss. to a man, 456 qrs. 5 bss. (prd. 20½ qrs.) = 436 qrs. 1 bs.; malt, after the rate of wheat, 456 qrs. 5 bss.; beefts, at half a beef to a man, 140½, (prd. ¾), 139¾; ling fish, at 7 fish to a man, 1,967 (prd. in salt fish, 125) = 1,842; herring, a kilderkin a man, 70 barrels, 1 firkin; bacon flitches, 281 (prd. 17) = 264; beenes and peasin, 1½ bss. to a man, 52 qrs. 5½ bss.; wood, 281,000 (prd. 113,000) = 168,000; cheese, 20 lb. a man, 5,620 lb. (prd. 756 lb.) = 4,864 lb.; salt, a bushel the man, 281 bss. (prd. 404 bss.) = nil; butter, at 10 lb. a man, 2,810 lb. (prd. 434 lb.) = 2,376 lb.; candles, 6 lb. the man, (none prd.), 1,686 lb.; hops, after the rate, 1,124 lb.

10. "The ward of Henry Lacye, alderman, and within his ward 268 persons." In wheat, 13 bss. a man, 435½ qrs. (prd. 28 qrs.) = 405½ qrs.; malt, after the same rate, (whereof in barley, 20 qrs.,) 435½ qrs.; in beeftes, 134 (prd. 2½ beefts) = 131½; salt fish, 7 to a man, (none prd.), 1,876; herring, a kilderkin a man, 67 barrels; bacon flitches, 268 (1 side prd.) = 267; beenes and peasin (none prd.), 50 qrs. 2 bss.; wood, 268,000 (76,000 prd.) = 192,000; cheese, 20 lb. the man, (none prd.), 5,360 lb.; salt, 268 bss. (prd. 244 bss.) = 24 bss.; butter, 10 lb. a man, 2,680 lb. (prd. 252 lb.) = 2,428 lb.; candles, at 6 lb. a man, (none prd.), 1,608 lb.; hops, at the rate aforesaid, 1,072 lb. (none prd.)

11. "The ward of Will. Briswoode, alderman, and within his warde 599 persons." In wheat, 13 bss. a man, 973 qrs. 3 bss. (prd. 81½ qrs.) = 891 qrs. 7 bss.; malt, at the same rate, 973 qrs. 3 bss. (prd. 145 qrs.) = 828 qrs. 3 bss.; beefts, a half ox the man, (none prd.), 300 beefts; ling fische, at 7 the man, (none prd.), 150 barrels; bacon flitches, a flitch the man, (none prd.), 599; beennes and peasin, 1½ bss. the man, (none prd.), 112 qrs. 2½ bss.; wood, 599,000 (prd. 227,000) = 372,000; cheese, 20 lb. the man, (none prd.), 11,980 lbs.; salt, 599 bss. (prd. 428 bss.) = 171 bss.; butter, 10 lb. the man, 1528.

CALAIS—cont.

(none prd.), 5,990 lb.; candles, 6 lb. the man, (none prd.) 3,594 lb.; hops, at the same rate, (none prd.) 2,396 lb.

12. "Ric. Pontisbury, alderman, and within his ward 398 persons." In wheat, 13 bss. to every man, 546 qrs. 5 bss. (prd. 45½ qrs.) = 501 qrs. 1 bs.; malt, at the same rate (none prd.) = 546 qrs. 5 bss.; beeefs, 199 (prd. 8 beeefs) = 191; ling fische, 7 fish to a man, (none prd.) = 2,786; herring, a kilderkin a man, 99½ barrels; bacon, 398 flitches (prd. 6 flitches) = 392; beenns and peasins (none prd.), 74 qrs. 5 bss.; wood, 398,000 (prd. 133,000) = 265,000; cheese, 7,960 lb. (prd. 252 lb.) = 7,708 lbs.; salt, 510 qrs. 6 bss. (prd. 1,006½ qrs.) = nil; butter, 41,310 lb. (prd. 6,004 lb.) = 35,306 lb.; candles, 24,525 lb. (prd. 19,800 lb. of tallow) = 4,725 lb.; hops, to be provided, 16,344 lb.

Pp. 24. Endd.: "For vitayling of the town of Calais."

R. O.

2. An account of the salaries of the different officers at Calais, with an estimate of the charge for one year:

i. The Council: Sir Rob. Wyngfeld, deputy, for himself, 2*l.* a day, and 20 marks by year in reward; one spear under him at 18*d.* a day, 2 archers on horseback, each at 8*d.* per diem, 19 soldiers, each at 8*d.* a day, and 19 others at 6*d.* Thos. Wyott, Esq., high marshal, at 2*s.* a day, and 20 marks in reward by year; 5 men under him, each at 8*d.* a day, and 11 at 6*d.* a day. Sir W. Husey, controller, at 18*d.* a day; 3 men at 8*d.* and 4 at 6*d.* Sir Chr. Garnyshe, knight, porter, at 12*d.* a day, and 20 marks in reward per annum; 6 men at 8*d.* a day, and 7 at 6*d.* a day. Jo. Rokwode, Esq., under marshal, at 18*d.* a day; and 3 men at 6*d.* a day.

ii. Spears: Fr. Haull, at 18*d.* a day; and 1 man at 6*d.* Hen. Palmer, at 18*d.*; and 2 men at 6*d.* Jo. Coukson, at 18*d.*; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Jo. Middilton, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Geo. Browne, at 18*d.*; 3 men at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Ric. Wodhouse, at 18*d.*; and 2 men at 6*d.* Jo. Browne, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Edw. Browne, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Jo. Anlaby, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Jas. Bourchiere, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Tho. Prowde, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Geo. Ganysford, at 18*d.*; and 1 man at 6*d.* Anthony Pelham, at 18*d.*; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Will. Sympson, at 18*d.*; and 2 men at 6*d.* Rauffe Broke, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per annum; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Will. Gardener, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per annum; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 2 at 6*d.* Jo. Highfeld, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per annum; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Tho. Tate, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per ann.; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Nich. Sampson, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per ann.; 1 man at 8*d.*, and 1 at 6*d.* Jo. Rawlyns, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per ann.; and 1 man at 6*d.* Ric. Long, at 12*d.*, and 20 marks in regard, per ann.; and 1 man at 8*d.*

iii. Archers, 16, at 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* each.

iv. Scuiers [esquires], 4, at 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* each.

v. Sergeants, 6, at 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* each.

vi. Banner watches, 3, 1 at 8*d.* a day, with a man at 6*d.* = 19*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.; 1 at 8*d.*, and 2 men at 6*d.* = 28*l.* 5*s.; and another, 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*

vii. Day watches, 4, at 7*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.* each.

viii. Porters, 12, at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* each.

ix. Le constabulary, 87, of whom 78 are at 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* each, 5 having 1 man at 6*d.* = 19*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* each, 1 having 2 men at 6*d.* = 28*l.* 5*s.*, and 2 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*

x. "Le vynteyn." Jo. Burne, vyntener, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 12 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* each. Jo. Gavyll, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, and 11 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Ric. Agyngworth, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 13 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Will. Gelders, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 13 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Peter Rowse, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 11 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Ric. Sexton,

* It appears they were paid for 339 days in the year, i.e., 313 week days, and half the Sundays.

1528.

vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 11 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Francis Itchyngnam, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 11 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Will. Shakeshaft, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 9 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Th. Morrys, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 8 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Jo. Saxby, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 13 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Sampson Norton, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, and 13 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Will. Marche, vintner, and 1 man at 6*d.* = 16*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, 1 at 5*d.* a day = 7*l.* 0*s.* 7*d.*, and 10 at 8*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*

xi. "Jesu in both churches, 15*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* St. George in both churches, 46*l.* Mr. Treasurer's fee for the payng of souldiors, 56*l.* Summa partis, 210*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*"

xii. Retinue of the treasurer: 4 spears, viz., W. Lambard, Ric. Wyndebank, Hen. Turnay, and Hum. Bourchiere, at 20*l.* each; Peter Brake, archer, at 11*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*; 1 constable at 10*l.*, and 43 others (office not stated), at wages varying from 64*s.* 2*d.* to 17*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

Masons: Jo. Baker, master mason, at 16*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*; Will. Baker, at 11*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.*; 11 at 9*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, and 3 at 7*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

Carpenters: Tho. Jay, master carpenter, at 16*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*; and 21 at 9*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* each.

Jo. Dosyn, master smith, at 16*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*; Edw. Dixon, plumber, at 7*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*; Anthony More, tyler, at 7*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.*

Pension of the Freires, 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Seynt John Baptist, 20*l.* Jesu and St. George, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Vacant watchis and wardys, 7*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

Pp. 23.

R. O.

3. The annual wages of Sir John Wylshir, kt., controller at Calais, (25*l.* 13*s.*, with other emoluments,) and of Sir Rob. Wotton (29*l.* 12*s.* 9½*d.*)

P. 1. Endd.: "A boke of wages of the comptroller and porter of Calais by the yere."

R. O.

4. "A booke of dyverse necessaries to be providede for the towne of Calise, and the marches of the same."

The following items are set out with a blank column for the numbers and quantities:

i. "For provision and safe guard of the town of Calais, if need should require. 1. To be provided in maundes of 8 foot high, and in brede 5 foot. 2. In hurdels for repair. 3. In bering maundes for bering of erth for repaires. 4. In shovils and mattoks. 5. In axes. 6. In wheel-barrows and hand-barrows. 7. In long fagot for repair. 8. In timber and planks for mounts and platt of formes, and in ropes for to haile upp and downe both ordenaunce and timber. 9. It is necessary to be had in this town of gunners more than there be by 70 or 4 score. 10. To be furnished of gunpowder and shot, both iron and lead. 11. To be had both lede and dice of iron, whatsome ever shall nede."

ii. "For defence of assault, if need should be. 1. First, in rosin for fire work, and other things. 2. In saltpeter gruff. 3. In brimstone hole. 4. In merling. 5. In canvas for divers things, both for carte towche and baggs of wildefire, launsis of fire for ballis of fire, and for paper riall for the same. 6. To have packe threde. 7. In peter oile and lyne oile for fyre worke. 7. In sermeniake and camfere for fire worke. 8. In arseneke. 9. In mercurie. 10. In assafteta. 11. In cakebrede. 12. In oile oliff. 13. In casting oile. 14. In grett kettils. 15. In grett ladils of iron, with long steles. 16. In grett trevetts for heting of oile, piche and tarre. 17. In piche and tarre. 18. To have kettels for pich and tarre. 19. Skuppis and ladils for the same. 20. Lyme potts and fire potts. 21. Unslakede lyme for the same. 22. Course ockame and rope yerne. 23. Crose howpes to be providede. 24. Small thorne faggote for firework for to defend the assault. 25. In rede for luminaries for the discovering of the dichis. 26. In old junkys of cabils for cringils (?) for cressetts. 27. To have cressetts for the same. 28. In casting prangs for to cast fyre and faggott. 29. In tallow. 30. In tallow candell. 31. It is necessary to be had in this town a turner for divers things to be made for the defending of the assault. 32. Your gunners to be provided for cases for haile shott of all manner of sortts. 33. Ladders. 34. Mylstonys. 35. Bocketts of lether and woode. 36. Lanternys. 37. Plattes for chardying ladyls."

1528.

CALAIS—cont.

iii. "For reparacions and fortificacions. 1. First, 200,000 bricks to be made. 2. 1,000 chalders of colis to be hade for burnyng of lyme. 3. 500 tons timber for sluices and jutts."

iv. "Reparacions and fortificacions to be done this next yere. 1. Furst to perfourme upp the new worke at Newnam Bridge. 2. The great stone sluice to be made. 3. The bulwark at Bollen gate to be made. 4. The brayes about the town to be mended and heythed and under shadd with stone or brike. 5. For the ordinary reparacions of the town sluices, see works, juttis, the castell of Calise, Risebanke, and the castels of Guysnes and Hampnes."

Pp. 7.

R. O.

5. Calais.

i. A commission of sewers for the marches of Calais, to Sir Rob. Wingfeld, deputy of Calais, Sir Chr. Garnyshe, porter of the same town, William H[ussey ?], controller of the town, Sir Ric. Whetell, Rob. F., sub-treasurer, the Mayor of the town, [Lieutenant] of the staple, Hen. Planckney, Massingberd, and Th. Prowde. Dated Hampton Court, 14 Sept. 20 Hen.VIII.

ii. Another to William lord Sandys, Lord Chamberlain, K.G., [Sir Rob. Wingfeld,] deputy of Calais, Sir Ric. Weston, Sir [John W]allop, Sir Chr. Garneys, Sir Will. Husey, Sir Ric. [W]hetehill, N. Husey, kt. of the Order of St. John, Jo. Hales, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, and Chr. Hales, solicitor [general]. Dated Westm., 12 Dec. 20 Hen.VIII.

iii. "T[hena]mes of [the jury impann]eld of the quest. For the countrey"

Of the lordships of Marke and Oye : Jo. Fourde, Boyte Bell, Marraunt Haynes, Jo. Kemell, Hen. Brasser, Jo. Wynes, Jo. Franck, Hen. Paskyns.—Of the county of Guisnes : Hen. Kinge, Long Tome, Hen. Frowike, Jo. Wynter, Garrett Hubert, Rob. Smythe.—Of the skunage of Calais : Th. Goynes, Mich. Byne, Hugh de Maister, Loy Valentyne.—Of the lordship of Collom : Adrian Skell, Abell Skell, Arnolde the maister, Bowen Scoeman.—Of the lordship of Hamps : Cornelius Gibill, Th. Collyns.

iv. Minute of the proceedings of the commissioners* of sewers above-named (see § i.) 21 Sept. 20 Hen.VIII.

1. They had caused to come before them 24 sufficient and honorable men, viz., out of the lordships of Marke and Oye 8, out of the county of Guisnes 6, skunage of Calais 4, lordship of Collom 4, and lordship of Hampnes [2], who were sworn to make due inquisition, with orders "to begin their view at the great timber sluice at Newnam bridge, and so from thence eastward from Mighell Byne's house, to visit the river that cometh from Marke, called 'th'Old Ryver,' as far as Collom bridge, where the skunage and the lordship of Marke departeth ; and from thence to return to the little stone sluice betwixt Newnam bridge and the castle ; and there to visit the river called the Howlett, unto the place where the said river and the mowre dyke doth meet together ; and that done, to visit the great sluice of timber, and that part of the said river, called the Howlett, which hath issue at the said sluice unto the lazar house at Middleway," and to return a true verdict according to written instructions on the 23rd day following.

2. On the said 23rd day, the before-mentioned quest came before them in the council chamber, and delivered their verdict, showing that the said sluice is in great decay, and must be new made in short time, for if it should be broken by stormy weather or violence of the sea, the country would "lie drowned both with salt water and fresh water."

3. There is a creek coming out of the Plasshe, otherwise called the Goyle, to the said sluice, 120 tailors' yards long, which is dammed up, "whereby the country above is sore

* Their names are here repeated, and among them have been entered that of the mayor of Calais (whose Christian name, Griffith, however, is only visible from the paper being torn,) and Geo. Phewilliam, lieutenant of the staple.

1528.

noyed with water ; howbeit it is to think the same was done because of the weakness of the sluice.

4. In the river at Mighell Byne's house is a great strait of small depth, at the east end whereof is a weir to take fish, and a bridge which is too short by 6 feet. This strait or "sheldner" (?) is in length about 300 feet, "in which there groweth great quantity of reeds" obstructing the river, and they say that the river should be "new dolvyn" at the King's cost, and cleansed, the northern half by the King's tenants in the scunage, and the other by the King's tenants of Millman's brooke. 5. An arrowshot eastward on the said river is a bridge, under which is a great dam of gravel fallen through the said bridge. (In margin, "The said dam of gravel is taken away.") Also, from thence eastward to a river which cometh from Guysnes on the west side of Collom hill must be cleansed, the north side by them of the skunage, and the south by them of Mylman's brooke, in the county of Guysnes. From thence to Collom bridge, which is a mile long and 20 feet in breadth, there be many bridges and dams which been unlawful, and greatly cumbered with wyeds and other filth ; and they say that all the river from the sluice at Newnham bridge ought to be delved by the King, both because he has toll and fishing on it, and principally that part of the county of Guysnes, part of the skunage, and part of the lordship of Marke is drained by the river. 6. A sewer comes down from the castles of Guisnes and Hamps underneath Collom into the before-mentioned [river], which in time of war or danger may serve for the conveyance of all manner things from Calais to those castles ; "by which there cometh down so great abundance of water that may not have the due course westward to the sea by the sluice at Newnham bridge, it reboundeth [eastward, and drowneth 6,000 or 7,000 acres in the lordship of Collom and Marke." It should be cleansed at all times by the King's tenants. 7. There is a decayed bridge upon the Old River, between St. Peter's and Collom, to be new made at the King's cost. (Marg. note. The bridge is not yet made, but must be made at the King's cost.) 8. They have viewed the stone sluice betwixt Newnham bridge and the castell, with the part of the [river] Howlett which joineth the sewer called the Moredyke, which is 4 miles long, scilt. from the lordship of Marke ; but have viewed no further than the grene bank which departeth the lordship of Marke from the skunage. (Marg. note. The said part of the Howlett betwixt the stone sluice and the More dyke is now cast at the King's cost, and the tenants have begun to cast the More dyke, which will cost 50*l*. sterling the dolving.) And they say that the same had great need to be cast this year, from a dyke in the middle way by which the water of a sewer made by Master Deputy doth descend into the said Moore dyke ; which dyke should be made 12 feet broad, and covered with a vault of stone, at the King's cost, where it crosses the highway called the Mydleway. (Marg. note. The vault is not yet done, though it were right necessary, and must be made at the King's cost.) From there down to More dyke it is to be cast till it joins the Howlett, at the tenant's cost, and thence to the said stone sluice, at the King's. (Marg. note. Which is now done at the King's cost.) Also, that on the More dyke is a bridge on the way from Bullon gate to the playne of St. Peter's, which had need to be vaulted. (Marg. note. The said bridge is not yet vaulted.) Also, at the said bridge there would be a "spoye" to be shut with the flood and open with the ebb, to prevent inundation between Newnham bridge and Calais castle. (Marg. note, mutilated.) There is also another bridge upon the More dyke, leading from the Milgate by the windmill to St. Peter's church, which should also be vaulted with stone, for that way is greatly occupied with all manner of carriages ; which bridges and spoye is to be made at the King's cost.

9. Also they have viewed the sluice of timber behind the castle and the river Howlett, that descends from the Lazar house to the same ; which river between those places is half a mile long and 24 feet broad ; and say that the sluice must have cost in calking, because it defends not the water sufficiently. From the said sluice the river must be cast to a little dyke on the south side, going into the More dyke, which little dyke is not more than 300 feet long, and must be now [made ?] 16 feet broad, to the intent that when the stone sluice is overcharged with water it may take course to the timber sluice by the said dyke ; and by that means the great river shall not be dolven the length of 3 furlongs, but shall lie whole to a certain cross dyke which shall not pass 300 feet in length, whereby the river betwixt the Lazar house and that dyke, 3 furlongs in length, being new cast at the King's cost, shall descend into the More dyke. (Marg. note. The river cannot be cast of such breadth this year; but there is a dyke 5 foot broad, cast from the Lazar house at Mydleyway to the sluice behind the castle, so that the water may void by the same through the More dyke, which is now in casting; howbeit, it must needs be cast next summer at the King's cost.)

1528.

CALAIS—cont.

10. At the said Lazar house is a bridge of timber over the river, which is too narrow by one half, and would be made with a wawe of stone; and over the dyke which cometh from the Conduyt House there is a bridge of timber, which, for like consideration, would be made of stone. Out of the great river Howlett, which cometh to the Conduytt House, there would be made a spoye to keep the river at a certain height, otherwise in winter the water will drown the country on the south side of the same. (Marg. note. The said bridges remain as they did. As yet there is no spoye made.)

The commissioners having viewed the verdict, gave the jury a new injunction to inquire and visit all parts of the lordship of Marke and Oye and the lordship of Collom; on which they returned their verdict, 1 Oct. 20 Hen. VIII., as follows:

1. The river which d[escends] from Collom bridge to Newnham bridge, mentioned in the former verdict, is part of the Olde Ryver which descends from Marke castell to Newnham bridge, and is 3 miles long. (Marg. note. The river is now sufficiently cleansed by the tenants, and must be cast next year at the King's cost.)

2. On the south side of the river 3 sewers descend into it; the first called Elfdyke, 3 miles long and 16 feet broad; the second Marlede, and the third Piers Watergang, each 3 miles long and 16 feet broad; wherefore the river is to be digged from Marke Castell to Newnham bridge, at the King's cost, and cleansed by the tenants twice a year, specially from the sewer mentioned in the first verdict, which cometh from the castles of Guysnes and Hamps to Newnham bridge. (Marg. note. The river is cast this year from Marke southward, 4 miles in length and 30 feet broad; by means of which the banks be made so sufficient that no water shall come over to drown the countries, for in default of such banks of late the lordship of Marke hath been destroyed. Also, all fords and drevs betwixt Marke and Calles be dolven up.)

3. There is a river called the Howlett, which beginneth at Boyet's and cometh down to Marke, and thence straight to the Conduyte Howse of Calais; which river is 7 miles long and 24 feet broad, and is alway to be cast at the King's cost, by reason that the King receiveth toll upon the same. (Marg. note. The said river is cast this year.) And the said river is to be kept within the banks by cost of the King's tenants, otherwise there cometh so great abundance of water that wheresoever it breaks over, or upon which side, the country is drowned. Also, by the said river the town of Calais is not only principally furnished with victual, but also with fresh water. There are two bridges on the river, of which the foundations be of stone, and four others, all of timber. All which bridges are to be made at the King's cost; for an those bridges were not, there should be as many fords for the passing of carts and [oth]er carriages, which would create banks of gravel and sand, and stop the course of the water, and make it run over. (Marg. note. All the said [bridges] of stone [are] vaulted over [this] year, and all the bridges of timber new made at the King's cost.) Also, over the said river are two foot-bridges of timber, which arne to be made at the country's cost. (Marg. note. New made this year at the tenants' cost.)

4. There is another river, called the Est Ryver, which beginneth at Marke Castell and descendeth to Graveling ward, which is in length 6 miles; which, as the King takes toll and fishery, should always be cast at the King's cost, and cleansed at the tenants'. And upon the same river there lieth twain bridges of timber, and at the west end of the river a dam, called an overlope, to wind over such boats as come from Graveling to Calais, and from Calais thither. (Marg. note. The river hath [been dol]ven this year [at the K]ing's cost in length, in places where most need was, and the rest must be cast next summer at the said cost. The said bridges of timber and overlope hath been made new this year at the King's cost.)

1528.

5. On the east end of the river there is the sluice called the Seluse of Oye, and another bridge vawted with stone, in which the flood gates of the said sluice open and shut with the tide; and betwixt the said sluice and the west end of the river there lieth eight 'gotes or spoyes of stone in the bank, viz., one against Marke pasture, one against the Chauntryn, one against Hofkirke bridge, one against the nonnery, one against the Southe Watergang, one against the Northe Watergange, one by Twytchitt's house, and the last by Jo. Vaidvel's house. (Marg. note. The said gates been all new made this year at the King's cost.) On the south side of the river are other eight spoyes, whereof a little spoye of stone called Browring's watergang, and another of timber near it for boats to pass through; another spoye of timber at John Pownes' Watergang; another, of stone, at Hofkirck bridge, called Peter Jesse Watergang; another, of stone, at the nonnery; "and another of timber lyeth at Harwaye for botes to passe stone at the estsyde of John spoye of stone, called the Spr lyeng at bothe sides of the said of stone, and iiij. of tymber, all w that when the see water with that by the same the londe water ryver, so that by the same ryver seluse, and so to the see. Wherefor ryvers and spoyes must be made by theym, all the est part of Marke"

6. On the north side of the [river] "is another watergang, called the Southe beginning at the highway from Hofkirche to and stretchid within half a mile of Oye seluse, so that the same is in length 2 miles, and in breadth 16 feet, which is to be cast and cleansed at all times at the tenants' cost." Also over the sewer is a bridge of stone vaulted, which is a principal highway, and is to be made at the King's cost. (Marg. note. Made this year at the King's cost.) The watergang doth issue into the great river by one of the before-mentioned spoyes within half a mile of Oye seluse. Also, there is another watergang more northward, "which beginneth there as a green bank departeth the lordship of Mark and the scunage on the north side of the Howlett, and is called Crowkid Watergang, and descendeth from the said green bank to one of the spoyes before-mentioned within a flight shott of the said sluice;" and is 7 miles in length and 16 feet broad; which must be cast and cleansed at all times at the tenants' cost. Also upon the said watergang lieth twain vawtes of stone, which serve for two principal highways, the one from Marke to Wale, and the other from Oye to the highway to Graveling, which twain vawtes arne to be made at the King's cost. (Marg. note. "All the said twain vawtes of stone ben sufficiently made and repaired this yere.") Also "there is a little sewer which beginneth at the north side of Oye castell, and is conveyed by a little spoye under Calles dampe, and from thence cometh out by another spoye which leadeth on the north side of the sluice, which sewer is an English mile of length, and is to be digged and cleansed at the cost of the tenants that the said three sewers doth lie in the parish they say that on the south side of the grete the Est Ryver there lieth a little sewer brings watergang, which is a mile and a half [in length, and] in brede 12 feet, and descendeth into the [G]rete ryver by one of the spoyes before-mentioned same is alway to be cast and cleansed at the tenants' [cost. Al]so they say that there is another watergang, called utryn, containing 3 myle of length and 18 feet, which watergang descendeth by one of the spoyes before-mentioned into the said great river. [Also] they saye that there is a crosse watergang, called the dyke, which is a mile in length and 16 feet broad;" another called the Gote fleete, of like length and brede; another called Gempe streite dyke, of like length, and but 12 feet broad. Which three thwart sewers descend into the sewer called the Chauntreyn, and by the same descendeth by a spoye of timber before-mentioned into the said great river. All which sewers they say to be in the parish of Gempe. On the south side of the said great river they say there is a watergang, called Pownes watergang, 4 miles long and 16 feet broad, which descends by a timber spoye before-mentioned into the great river, which must always be cast and cleansed at the tenants' cost. And there is another watergang, called Haile Fayers watergang, 4 miles long and 16 feet broad, which descendeth by a spoye of stone at Hofkirk bridge into the said great river, which must always be cast at the tenants' cost. The said twain watergangs lie in the parish of Hofkirche.

1528.

CALAIS—cont.

7. There is another watergang on the south side of the great river, 3 miles long and 16 feet broad, descending out of a spoye of stone into the great river, which must always be digged and cleansed by the tenants; and another called Harwaye watergang, 5 miles long and 18 feet broad, to which there cometh a cross watergang, called the Stakmarte, 2 miles long and 16 feet broad; and over the said watergang be twain vawtes of stone, by one of which the way leadeth to Haile Faires, and the other leads from Gempe churche to Harway. And the said watergang descendeth into the great river by a spoye of timber before-mentioned. And the said watergang and cross watergang must be always cast and cleansed at the tenants' cost. And the said twain watergangs and cross watergang lie in the parish of Herwaye.

8. Also on the south side of the great river is another watergang, called John de Fowler's watergang, 4 miles long and 18 feet broad; also there cometh a cross watergang from Harwaye church, in which there lieth twain gotes of stone, one between the way from Harwaye churche to Jo. Fowler's house, a [mile] and half in length, and 16 feet broad, which descendeth by a spoye of timber at the smith's house into the said great river. "Also there is another watergang on the es[t side of] John Fowler's house, called the Kitting, which is in length . . . mile and in brede 16 foote," which descends by a stone spoye into the great river. There is another watergang in the Sproyere, called the Banys, 5 miles long and 18 feet broad, over which is a vawte of stone for the highway which cometh from Owderkirc to John Van Sotherring's bridge; which watergang descendeth by a spoye of stone at the Sprewery into the great river. All these watergangs "arne alway to be digged and cleansed at the tenants' cost," and are in the parishes of Harway and Owderkirc.

9. Besides the above watergangs, there are in the quarters where the said watergangs lie dykes without number; "for every ground, though it pass not 2 or 3 acres large, is dykyd rownde abowte; by which dykes the waters be conveyed into the before-mentioned watergangs. And out of the watergangs be divers spoyes before rehearsed, into the said great river, by which all descendeth to Oye scluse, and from thense to the see."

10. Also the jury have viewed "the warffs, gittes, and saltwater bancks, beginning at Calais and continuing to Graveling," and find that the last day of August, by force of a spring tide, before the Lantron gate a hole was broken in the wharf which was new repaired last year, and that in searching the bottom of the said hole "it was found to be hollow from the west side of the Lantron gate bridge to the next tower corner westward, containing 150 feet. Wherefore the same is necessary to be ransacked from the bottom and every seam filletted, also rammed with clay and filled up again." (Marg. note. "The said wharf is now sufficiently repaired, as it was devised by the said quest, at all points.")

11. Also by the said spring tide the sea came so high over the wharf at Beauchamp tower that it brake out the ground in many places into the highway; wherefore the wharf of timber must be new repaired, filletted, and rammed with clay from the bottom, and a sea bank of clay turfs set upon the same. The extent of repairs to be made is 6 feet in length. (Marg. note. "The said warffe . . . the mooste . . . aired and made [in all po]incts as was . . . the rest shalbe [made sho]rtely. Also at . . . of the said jette . . . s now digged up [a g]rete nombre of stones whiche was coverd under . . . sands.")

12. Also they "have viewed both the east and west jetty, and find the ends of both to be broken by force of the said spring tide, and divers other parts of the same greatly

1528.

frusshid and ruffild, so that part must be made new and part amended." (Marg. note. "There is now doing upon them as much as can be done before winter, that timber may be [con]veyed for the same.")

13. "Betwixt Beauchamp tower and Gravelling, which is 9 miles in length, there be many great breaches; howbeit, on the south side of the sea, within the land, there is a seabank to defend the sea out of the lordship of Marke and Oye, the west end of which seabank beginneth against Oye castle, and so goeth eastward 2 mile of length, and there turneth a mile of length southward and joyned to Oye escluse."

14. Within the said bank is another, called Calles Dampe, beginning at the west end of the before-mentioned seabank, and going straight eastward to the seabank of Graveling. The seabank next to the sea is to be kept up at the King's cost; and the inner seabank, called Dampe, at the charge of the freemen of Marke and Oye, who have great privileges granted to them for maintaining the same, for though the King's bank should break the said freemen's bank must hold.

15. Also they have viewed the fresh-water banks appertaining to the lordship of Marke, of which the first is a fresh-water bank, whereby the King's ground is departed from the Emperor's, called the Hooke, beginning on the further side of the great river, and proceeding southwards 5 miles. Another "goeth east and west from the said waterb[ank], by which is departed the King's land and the Emperor's, [and is called] Braynard; the east end of which bank beginneth [in] the said Hooke and ends at Boyetts, being 5 miles in length; which banks arne to be maintained at the King's [cost], for they not only do depart the princes' ground before-named, but also defend the water out of the King's ground; for the water of the Emperor's side lieth higher than the King's ground within the said banks by 3 foot winter and summer."

16. "There is another fresh-water bank, called c banck, which stretcheth from Pryks bridge to Collom, which is 3 miles in length, and must also be maintained at the King's cost, for when that bank faileth, all that quarter of Marke goeth under the water, for the water there lieth also higher by 3 feet winter and summer than the land within the said bank doth. Also, they say that there is an ordinance that if any beasts be found upon any of the said banks there is certain sums of money forfeited, which is to be employed upon the said banks, so that before Michaelmas they may be sufficiently repaired to defend the winter's water." (Marg. note. "This bank must be newly cast or repaired where need is.")

17. Also they have viewed the seabank, beginning at the castle of Callis, and so proceeding to a pleshe called the Glewpott, which is right east and west, and so forth southwards to Newnham bridge, also beyond the said bridge westwards a broad arrow shot, where then the said seabank turneth towards the Downs northward; which bank is in length from the castle to the Downs against Dykeland, 2 miles. (Marg. note. The said seabank is now more than half made of the height devised, and work folks continuing upon the same.) In the said seabank betwixt the timber sluice and the little stone sluice behind the castle, there is a great fawte 465 feet long, which must be amended and made with a seabank rey . . . 15 feet, which must needs be made in haste. Betwixt Newnham bridge and the rounde bulwerke of erthe there is a place in the seabank 1,000 feet in length, which, of necessity, must be made new forthwith of 5 feet deep and 3 feet broad, besides the bank, which is now new made already betwixt the said bridge and bulwark of 315 feet in length, in depth 5 feet, and in brede $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet. (Marg. note. "The said see[bank as] well beyond [Newnham] bridge as in [other places] betwixt [the said] bridge and stone sluice [is] now new made that bank which containeth . . . feet in length.") There is a seabank next without Newnham bridge, 195 feet long, which is now new made of sea turf, 4 feet deep and 3 feet broad, and there is another seabank beyond the fore-mentioned bank without Newnham bridge, which is now new made, in length 325 feet, in depth 5 feet, and in breadth $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet. On the south side of the turf bulwark within Newnham bridge, the wharf must be new planked and filleted, "also new lantoyes, ankres, and bynders," which wharf is 105 feet in length, in depth $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet, which must be filled on the inside with sea clay, $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet thick, for defence of the said bulwark.

1528.

CALAIS—cont.

(Marg. note. "The said warffe stondith yet still unrepaired.") And where there was a seluse in the said seabank betwixt the Downs and Newnham bridge, the same was taken up by the King's commandment, so that ever sith the sea hath flowed up to Sandgate, which was thought it should have been a great amendment to the haven. In consideration whereof they say that one of twain things must be done: (1.) To fortify a bank of gravel and stone which goeth straight from Newnham bridge toward Sandgate castle till it come to the end of the great creek, which the bishop of Winchester caused to be digged when the foresaid seluse was first made, and thereto stopped up the said creek with a spoyle in the ss[me, which] shall open to the fresh water and shut to the [salt] water; and from the said stopping to fortify another bank of gravel and stone which goeth from thence to the Downs, which they say may be d[one] with the spence of 100*l.* And if it please the King to take that way, it shall not only amend the haven right largely, but also have much ground which now is lost. (Marg. note. The said bank of gravel is now fortifying.) (2.) The second way is to make the seabank from Martin's Hooke to the Cawsey, which shall be more costlier than the other, for an the sea should have his course so far abroad as it hath now, the bank which shall descend to the cawsey must be of a great thickness, for otherwise it shall not be possible for carriages to pass that way to Calais, for it is every day worse than other.

18. Also there is twain marres grounds, the one called Couswade, and the other the Maynbrooke, in which twain marres there is of "moeten grounde" 4,800 acres, which, with cost, might be sowed to the King's great advantage, whereby the country should not only be much "strenghtith," but also the haven of Calais largely amended; for an the superfluous waters now in the said marshes might be conveyed to the sea, they should not fail to purge the haven of sand.

19. Before the rivers were digged and sewers made with seabanks and fresh-water banks, the revenues of Marke and Oye, temp. Hen.VI., passed not 300*l.*; where sithens, by reason of cost done upon rivers, banks and selusis by king Edward IV. and Hen.VII., the revenues be now betwixt 1,300*l.* and 1,400*l.* Also they say that when the rivers, banks and sluices were maintained by the King's officers, as they ought to be, the King was well paid, and the tenants did prosper both in corn and cattle, being a great surety for the victualling of the town and marches of Calais; where of late, by reason that they have not been repaired, the King's tenants be utterly undone, for they owe unto the King of old rents above 4,000*l.*, besides the debts they owe to men of Calais and other towns, so that now they dare not show their heads. Where in old time it appeareth by inquisition that out of the lordships of Marke and Oye there hath been delivered 20,000 rases of wheat, 30,000 rases of oats, and 10,000 rases of barley, above their own store necessary for horse and man, and for seed; where now this three years past they have been unpurveyed so utterly of all manner of grain, that they have been fain to buy both corn for themselves and their beasts, and to sow their lands, in so much as in the said three years no corn was sown by them which com to prouff; for there could no husbandry help, the country was so overflowed with water, and they who used the greatest husbandry had greatest loss. Signed: John Berners—Edmund Howard—E. Ryngley.

[The margin of this report is worn away in many places.]

ii. A report touching the seabanks, &c. of Marke and Oye. The heading is much mutilated, but the following words are legible:—

" [d]ay of October [f]res-water banks and seebanks, and lordship of Marke and Oye, as hereafter s by eig[ht] substanciall persons of the lordships of Ma[r]ke and Oye, appannellid in quest for the same, and solemp[ly sworn] upon the Evangilz, to bring in a trewe reapporte of the s[ame], here after followthe:—"

1. "Aweved (?) the mayne river from Marke to Oye slews in length 6 miles, which must be cast at the King's cost to the last wardell; and there is to be done on the west side of to be cast 200 rods, which by estimation will cost 6*s.* gret for it is 50 foot brood the ryver."

1528.

2. The rest of the river is on the point of 3,000 rods, which . . . rods of the lordship of Marke and Oye, which by estimation . . . the rod, which river is 30 foot broad.

3. In the said river is a spoye broken by the last rage that was, and must be made again; by estimation will cost 40s.

4. Without the sluice eastward to Grayffling (Gravelines) water must be dolven on the point of 300 rods and 24 foot broad; will cost 2s. 8d. the rod.

5. There is a bridge broken on the said river, called Houffkyrk bryge, and must be made, and will cost 20s, grett.

6. Item, from Pyrkyn bryge southward to Boutts, called the Holleed, contains in length 1,300 rods and 24 foot broad; will cost 3s. the rod, for it is a most hold ground.

7. Pyrkyns brydge must be new made, and will cost 5l. grett.

8. From the Boyut westward to the corner called the Cnoll on the Engglys strett is 5 miles long; which must be cast a counter dyke of 14 foot broad, containing 2,600 rods; will cost 14d. grett the rod. "For there is great need by cause the mill stream breaks so often times into Flanders side, and so comes over our banks . . . from the . . . o the chappell by . . . taysn in length . . . rods w . . . eghttend which . . . by exsdemassion* will cost a sterly . . . a rod."

9. A new seabank from Oye slews northward to the pit past Calleys dam, 200 roods long, will cost a golden crown of the sun a rood; for the old bank is ever so occupied with riding wh . . . cost that . . . it is lost, and every year new to make.

10. "From . . . pyt northward and so westward again Michael Dyk's house, the sea banks is in many gaps, which, 2 miles in length," will cost 200l. grett.

11. "The downs from the east end westward to the gap of walle had need to be looked upon, for fear it should do much harm in time to come. If that should be amended it will cost much money, more than we can esteem."

12. "The west river that goes from Marke to Collome bryge, the King's charges was esteemed 40l."

13. "The fresh-water bank from Perekins bryge along the Cousway[de?] to the chapel to mend where as is need, will cost 20l."

14. "From Marke to the G . . . yke, called the Holled, must be mended on the point of 400 steds, which will cost 8d. gret the rod."

15. All manner of bridges, spoys and sluices, and breaches of fresh-water and sea-water banks, must be viewed once a year, by the law.

16. They find the greatest "dyscropssion" (?) of the east marches [due to] two things; viz., (1.) the great west river from Marke to Newnham bryg; which river lies in three lordships, "that is for to . . . under Gynsse, the Skyvinage, and under Marke; which rivers hath been cast at the King's great charge, and now if it be not cleansed and dams taken up upon such places as in the county of Gynsse and in the Skyvinage, what that we dig or cleanse in Marke it is our undoing, except that it be cleansed afore the water may come to the sluice of Newnambrygge."†

17. "T . . . d faut is that the Skuniage clen[s] . . . Calle[s] . . . leed from the grene dyke to the stone sl . . . the castell."

18. "Also the Cunded Howsse hold up the water that the holl . . . cannot come to the slews, by resson whereof the water ha . . . Holleed can not be made so strong that it may hold sp . . . wynter coms and grett gorse of waterfalls for all th . . . sethe thouroo the Coundded Hows, which is not abell to . . . part of the water when suche water falls; howe be it . . . a consyderassion taken that when the Cunded had as . . . as shold suffys, then was there a lowe plassee made the . . . ployssed of the water shold rone howere, where by the banks . . . Holleed shold be at dangger."

* Estimation.

† The second cause is not specified; perhaps some leaves are missing.

1528.

CALAIS—cont.

19. "Where for as now for this winter for saffying the banks of the Holleed from Perckyns bryge to Bovyts, as grett nede is, which must in . . . be done shortly, or else the banks will run hower; for they of Breyn . . . hath heghttend there banks, whereby it will put our banks to grett dangger, exsep they be shortly a mendded, and there to be sett ij. torpyks apone the said Holleed."

20. "That no horse nor cart should pass in the winter time."

21. "Which Holleed will cost, the mendding for this year, 10*l.* grett."

Signed: "John Berners—Edmund Howard—E. Ryngeley."

Pp. 22.

5103. GUISNES CASTLE.

R. O.

"Reparasyons doen ap[on my] Lordes logyng in anno 20 [H. 8]."

Payments to laborers carrying clay and sand, and plastering the lodge, at 8*d.* a day. For the glazing of three windows, 19½*d.* For two keys of the kitchen door, 5*d.*

Reparations done upon the brew-house houses. Boards at 5*s.* 3*d.* per 100. Lath at 13*d.* the 100. For making a new furnace. Laborers serving masons, at 6*d.* a day.

Necessaries for fortifications and reparations. For cutting reeds in the forest. For "fortifying mandes and hardylls," at 10*d.* the 1,000. For cutting stakes, at 3*d.* the 100. For four sheepskins for sponges for the guns, 13*d.* each. Maunds to bear earth in, at 2½*d.* each. Carts carrying stakes, rods, &c., at 8*d.* the load. Repairs done upon the water mill, 6*l.* 2*s.* 0½*d.* Laborers serving masons, making of the new vall in the broken ward, at 6*d.* the day; others at 5*d.* the day. Tumbrils carrying sand, at 8*d.* a day. Long carts carrying bricks and clay, at 2*d.* a day. Tubs at 10*d.* and 4*d.* each. Buckets at 4*d.* each. Payments for mending wheelbarrows, &c.

Sum total of both these books, 407*l.* 18*s.* 5*d.* gr., whereof allowed by Mr. Treasurer by my Lord Cardinal's warrant, 400*l.* gr. Signed: T. Lourens (?)—Per me, Water James—Per me, John Corson.

Pp. 14.

ii. "The book of the bricks, with the necessaries, reparations, and fortifications done in anno 19 regis H. 8." Bricks moulded and burnt 941,500, of which 41,500 are to be rebated for waste; and so is allowed 900,000 bricks, at 2*s.* 2*d.* g. the 1,000. "Ruters," at 2*s.* 6*d.* g. and 2*s.* 4*d.* the 100. For cutting wood, at 8*d.* a load. For "gloy straw," at 6*s.* the 100. Wheelbarrows, at 20*d.* each. Shovels, 2*d.* each. Moulds, 6½*d.* each. Paid to John à Guisnes for four pieces of "bast" for logs about the kilns, 16*d.* Total of brick, &c., 200*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* g.

Pp. 12.

iii. "The reparations and fortifications of the castle of Guisnes, and of the water mill, in anno 19 R. R. H. 8."

"First, my Lord's log and lodging against my lord Cardinal's coming to Guisnes." Payments to laborers. Two locks with the keys for the lodge gate, 2*s.* 6*d.* Two bolts for the same, 8*d.* Five locks for my Lord's lodging, 5*s.* Two pair of "jemos" for the ewry, 10*d.* For mending the lock of the cellar door, 3*d.* Total, 20*l.* 7*s.* 8½*d.* Signed: Rychard Wes[ton?].

Pp. 7.

5104. EXPENCES OF THE MINT.

R. O.

i. "Costs done upon the Old Mint house in the farther Mint yard, against the coming of the coiners strangers from the parts of beyond the sea, from the 25th day of March, in anno 18 R. R. Henric. VIII."—Payments to carpenters and sawyers, 6*d.* a day; laborers, 4*d.* Carriage of three loads of timber from Newington to the Tower of London, 2*s.* To John Hollonde, of Strettam, Surrey, tileman, for 1,000 of tiles, 5*s.* To Ric. Oliver, of Knyghtes Hill, for a load of tiles, 5*s.* To laborers removing the King's ordnance out of the Old Mint house. Timber bought at 8*s.* a load; bricks at 4*s.* 8*d.* the 1,000; sand, 6*d.* a load; tile pins, 5*d.* a bushel; nails of various prices.

1528.

ii. Costs "done upon the new gold shearing house within the Mint," in the Tower of London, from 21 Nov. 18 Hen. VIII.

iii. "Arrearages of the new gold house, called the new Sheryng house, over and besides the 40*l.* granted for the building of the said house, the 25th day of January anno R. R. Henric. Octavi 18^o." For lime, 5*s.* the cwt. To the King's glazier, for glazing the new sheryng house window, and mending others, 50*s.* 10*d.* To the prior of St. Mary Overy's for boards, at 2*s.* 4*d.* the 100. Lath, at 5*d.* the 100. Twenty-nine yards of evys borde, 1*d.* per yd.

iv. For taking down the Old Receipt House, and setting it up again, from 17 June 19 Hen. VIII. Plasterers and bricklayers at 8*d.* a day. Stone for the ovens at 4*d.* a foot. The dates in this No. extend throughout the year 20 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 52 (numbered), of which 5 are blank.

5105. LORD MONTEAGLE.

R. O.

Petition of [Richard Banke, executor] of Edward Stanley, late lord Monteagle, to the Lord Chancellor.

The said late Lord was afflicted with the gout several years before his death, and kept his chamber; and Thomas lord Darcy and Sir John Husy, knowing him to possess money, jewels and plate of great value, wrote him many flattering letters "of many fair, beautiful words, and exhortations of holy and divine stories of Scripture," pretending great love for his soul; so that he made them his executors, with Sir Alex. Radclyff, Laur. Starky, and the petitioner. He willed that his son Thomas should have his money, jewels and plate, and that with his goods and chattels the executors should buy the wardship and marriage of his son. By an agreement made between the executors, Husy was appointed to obtain the wardship, and to pay "the King's debt" and other bequests; and for that purpose the petitioner paid to Husy 844*l.* He paid many other sums by command of Husy and Darcy, as they were men of great honor, and were commanded by the King to take into their hands the said goods and chattels, but he feared lest the whole should have been wasted by them, as the money was not spent in performing the will. They have taken possession of the plate and apparel, and receive the profits of the lands to their own use, having obtained a patent for the wardship; and they intend to take the profit of the marriage of the young Lord. Thus the debts and legacies cannot be paid, and the waste will be laid to the petitioner's charge. Prays, therefore, for writs of subpœna against Darcy and Husy, to appear in the court of Chancery, and to bring thither the said patent, so that they may have no more profit thereof, and that the young Lord may have the benefit of his marriage and his lands, except the rent paid to the King.

Paper roll. Endd.: "Banke[']s] bill against Sir Husye (sic) and lord Darcy."

R. O.

2. Sums of money, plate, jewels, goods and chattels of the late lord Monteagle, in the hands of Richard Banke. Total, 1,446*l.* 3*s.*

ii. "Parcels of my said late Lord's goods delivered to Thomas lord Darcy by Ric. Banke." (Same as § 3.)

iii. Other parcels delivered to Sir John Husye.—A "pygen" of silver, with a cover, 22½ oz.; 2 round cups of silver gilt, a gilt standing cup, a bason and ewer of silver gilt, 2 pieces of silver with covers chased; a pair of bedes of amber, with gawdies of gold, delivered to lady Anne Grey; a "harte" of gold, of Paris work; jackets; a gown of lady Monteagle's, and other gowns; 2 bonnets of ermines, powdered; a frontlet of green satin, with a caul of gold; a "pillion" of black velvet; a harness of black velvet fringed with gold; a sleeve of cloth of gold; a quarter of new cloth of gold; sleeves of velvet and green tinsel; a horse called Bayard Copeland, for a sumpter; a sumpter sack and a saddle.

iv. Monteagle's bequest to Husye.—A salt of gold set with stones; a grey gelding called Arrowsmyth.

In form of a roll. Endd.: "The inventory of the goods and other books to charge Bankes with."

1528.

LORD MONTEAGLE—cont.

R. O.

3. Goods and chattels of the late lord Monteagle delivered to lord Darcy ; sc., a shaving bason, parcel gilt, 80 oz. ; a girdle of gold, of Paris work, 23 oz. ; a cross of gold with 4 rubies, 5 diamonds, and 5 pearls ; a gold chain, "that my Lord ware daily," 12 oz. ; a great pax of silver and gilt, 12 oz. ; 2 great chalices with patens gilt ; 11 spoons, silver gilt, 14 oz. ; a gold collar of drops, 12 oz. ; a gown of tawney tinsel of 6 threads, furred with martens ; 3 old altar cloths of fine arras ; 100 wethers. Anno 16.

"My Lord's bequest" to Darcy.—A horse litter and two litter horses ; a gold collar of garters, with a George set with diamonds ; 2 garters with pendants and buckles of gold ; 64s. for two black gowns, and as much for Mr. Hussy.

Pp. 2. In Banks's hand.

ii. An inventory similar to the above, with a few more entries.—100 pearls delivered to lady Nevill, at 2s. each. Total value, 334*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O.

4. Sum of the money, plate and stuff of the late lord Monteagle, delivered to lord Darcy, 139*l.* 20*d.*

ii. Estimate of the expences sustained by Darcy in the late Lord's business.—For messages, letters, writings, and rewards to counsel, 20*l.* Sending to court, and making friends there, 10*l.* Darcy's expences at Stepney, London and Westminster, and for indentures and obligations to Mr. Magnus and others of the Council, 53*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* For sundry meetings, at the desire of Richard Bankes, between the executors, tenants, and servants of the late Lord, 20*l.* The boarding of the young lord Monteagle and his servants and horses, 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Costs and charges in the law in anno 19 and anno 20, and for attending at Westminster to answer to feigned bills of Bankes, 80*l.*

Paper roll.

R. O.

5. Accounts of all the "approvements, advantages and profits" belonging to the executors of the late lord Monteagle.

Pp. 6.

5106. CUMBERLAND.

R. O.

Inventory of deeds, charters, &c. delivered to Sir Brian Touke, treasurer of the King's chamber, of various dates, ranging principally between Edward III. and Hen. VII., and relating to lands in Cumberland, principally Cockermouth. The names of most frequent occurrence are of the families of Percy (earls of Northumberland), Lucy, Dacre and Umfravill. The latest date mentioned is 20 Hen. VIII.

A parchment roll.

5107. BEVERLEY.

R. O.

Indenture, dated ——— 20 Hen. VIII., between Wolsey and the town of Beverley, in which the inhabitants of the latter renounce certain rights which they have long usurped against the jurisdiction of the archbishop of York, viz., the appointment of clerks of the market in the borough, the searching of untrue measures and weights, the fines and americiaments of offenders, the correction of persons bringing corrupt victuals or fuel within the borough, of breakers of the assize of bread and ale, and of the insufficiency and unwholesomeness of the same, "the search of all the tanned leather, and the punishment of the offenders thereof." They have also pretended they were not compelled to present before the justices of the peace any riot, rout, or unlawful assemblies within the borough.

Draft in Wriothesley's hand, with corrections by Cromwell ; pp. 5.

1528.

5108. PAULET'S ACCOUNTS.

R. O.

"Here in schoyth all suche mony as hath bene recevyd by me, Rychard Paulet, of my Lord my master, and my brother Sir Wylliam Paulet, knyght, from the fyrst day off May anno xx^{ti} H. V[III.] unto the xxijth day of August anno xx^{ti} H. VIII., towardis my Lordis chargis in the corte, as well as for his provesions and reparacions to be made and done by my Lordis commandment in Horsley, against his Lordshippis commyng thether, and my Ladis, as here after more plainlear yt dothe appere, with the discharge and payment of the same."

Received, 1 May, of my Lord at Greenwich, for his provisions at Horsley, 20*l*. Of my brother, Sir William, 1 July, for my Lord's charges at court, 53*l*. Of John of Kent, 1 July, 10*l*. Of my Lord, by Sir David Hensley, priest, clerk of the kitchen, 20*l*.; by Grygson, my Lord's servant, 13*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. 15 Aug., of my Lord, in the lodge at Endfelde park, towards his provisions at Horsley, 30*l*.

Payments.—20 May, at Dorking fair, to Edw. Clarke, of Billingshurst, for 3 kene (? kine), at 11*s*. a-piece, and 8*d*. over. Other payments for cows, from 9*s*. to 11*s*. To a man for 4 days' labor mending the pale in the new park of Cranmere, at 4½*d*. a day. To 2 men for 6 days, at 5*d*.—12 July, for sugar, at 7*d*. and 6*d*. per lb. Pepper, at 22*d*. per lb. 1 lb. of cloves, 8*s*. 6*d*. 2 lb. ginger, 4*s*. 8*d*. 4 lb. dates, 12*d*. 6 lb. small raisins, 2*s*. 12 lb. great raisins, 15*d*. 6 lb. prunes, 18*d*. For a hamper to carry the spices, 10*d*. For a lock and key to it, 6*d*.—12 July, for a "quartrin" of stock fish, 6*s*. For 2 panniers to pack salt fish in that came from St. Laurence Pountney, 9*d*. For cord and packing, 5*d*. For 6 bushels of bay salt, at 9*d*. the bushel. A hogshhead to carry it in, 8*d*. For hooping and heading the hogshhead, 2*d*. For carriage of the salt from Billingsgate to Queenhithe, 2*d*. For a peck of white salt, 3*d*. For 2½ doz. crewsys, 15*d*. For 4 galle cups, 2*d*. For 3 barrels of beer, bought of the King's brewer at London, 12 July, 11*s*. Carriage from the brewhouse to the barge, 2*d*.; from London to Weybridge, 4*d*.; and from Weybridge to Horsley, 12*d*. White vinegar, at 8*d*. per gall. Red vinegar, at 4*d*. Strainer cloth, at 2*d*. a yard. Wheat, 16*s*. the qr. Cord for packing kitchen stuff that came from St. Laurence Pountney to Horsley, 4*d*. 2 carts from St. Laurence Pountney to Queenhithe, 8*d*. Carriage of 2½ loads from London to Weybridge, 3*s*. 4*d*.; from Weybridge to Horsley, 4*s*. Coal, 3*s*. 4*d*. per load. To the collier, for his costs coming from Horsley to make a bargain, 4*d*. "For the gras, and the making of the same gras in the Custom mede," 5*l*. 1*s*. For 2 quire of paper, and ink, 6*d*. 1 doz. taps for the buttery, 2*d*. Half a beef, 7*s*. To Antony Goddard, for 11 muttons, 21*s*. 8*d*.; for a fresh salmon, 27 July, 3*s*. 4*d*.; for 25 chickens, 2*s*. 4*d*.; for 9 couple of coneys, 3*s*.; for a veal, 3*s*.; a pig, 3*d*.; 2 capons, 2*s*.; 3½ doz. horse bread, 3*s*. 6*d*. Antony Goddard's costs for 12 days riding about these purchases, 4*s*. 2*d*. To Vergis, for baking bread against my Lord's coming, and while he lay there, 20*d*. To the parson of West Horsley's servant, for bringing 2 capons and 12 chickens, 8*d*. To Goddard's costs for himself and his horse, guiding me for 2 days, when I rode for young Hensley, 20*d*. To my Lord, to play at tables with at Horsley with Sir Nich. Carewe, 30 July, 4*s*.—13 July, to Brekenall, the brewer of Guildford, "for 10 kilderkins of single beer for the carters that brought him hay, after the old custom," at 16*d*. the kilderkin. For 10 kilderkins of 1½*d*. beer, at 2*s*. 4*d*., against my Lord's coming. 2 doz. of bread for the carters that brought in the hay, 2*s*. To John Rydforde, for a calf for the said carters, 2*s*. 4*d*. For a mutton for them, 2*s*. 13 July, for driving cattle from the lese to Farnham fair to be sold, "and for their lese there," 2*s*.—19 July, to John Mothe, of Goddellmayne (Godalming), for 4 doz. tallow candles, at 1½*d*. per lb., 5*s*.; for 4 wax torches, weighing 12 lb., at 8*d*. per lb.; for a doz. of supper lights, weighing 5 lb. 1½ qr., at 8*d*. per lb.; 2 lb. of sizes, at 8*d*. per lb.—21 July, to Thomas Duke, draper, of London, for 6 counterpoints of tapestry and varder, 33*s*. 8*d*. A yard of cotton for my Lord's jacket, at 6*d*. per yard. For 6 joined stools, 4*s*. 4*d*. For herbs to lay in my Lord's chamber windows, 2*d*. To 6 women for gathering rushes for 2 days, at 2½*d*. a day each. To a cooper setting 5 hoops upon the vessels in the bakehouse, 2*d*. To 5 women for cleaning the house, and scouring the vessels, for 3 days, at 2½*d*. a day. To 1528.

PAULET'S ACCOUNTS—cont.

Tho. Rogers, of Est Clandon, 21 July, for mowing Habraham's broke and Townsley walshe and Brode, at 8*d.* the acre. To Rich. Franke, for the making and mowing of 30½ acres and 3 furlongs of Woodham mede, at 17*d.* the acre. To John Stompe and John Otway, for the making of Habraham's broke and Townsley, at 8*d.* the acre. To John Rydforde, for making and mowing of Gore mede, at 16*d.* the acre. Payments for the carriage of hay. To 15 maidens and women treading hay, for 5 days, at 2½*d.* a day; to a man for pitching it, 5*d.* a day, finding himself. A load of straw for my Lord's horse, 2*s.* Wages of carpenters, plasterers, sawyers, &c., in July, 13*l.* 7*s.* 3½*d.* for repairs at Horsley.—8 Aug., coal, at 3*s.* 4*d.* a load. To my lord of Winchester's servant that day bringing your Lordship tables, tressles, cupboards and forms, 7*s.* 6*d.* To John Polsted, for the hay and grass of Habraham's broke, 46*s.* 8*d.* 100 load of wood, at 12*d.* the load.—15 Aug., to John Baker, of Wenyshe parish, for 2 oxen, 40*s.*; for 2 more at 16*s.* 8*d.* the ox. To a man of Chedyngfolde, for an ox, 19*s.*; toll of the ox, 2*d.* To Master Dawbeny, for charges of my Lord at court, from 1 June to 22 Aug., 36*l.* 2*s.* 11½*d.*

Pp. 11.

5109. WINE.

R. O.

Account of wines bought at Bordeaux by Edw. Burlace, Roger Tery, Thos. Getens, Thos. Hunt, Jo. Smythe, David Appowell, Thos. Gale, Will. Dykenson, Ric. Justice, Thos. Blowr, and Allen Kyng.

Total bought by these 11 persons, 563 tuns, 1 "terce" 1 "carte." Purchase money, 3,812*l.* 11*s.* 2¾*d.* Average cost at Bordeaux "at the first penny," 4*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* per tun; at London, 6*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* Wine of Orleans, 21 tuns, bought at Roane by Will. Forman, for 112*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* Headed as follows:

" Alen and Sir Will. Bayly, knyght[s] ld Robert Pakyngton, Nicholas St. lard Gybson, Powll Withepow[ll]
 [a]s hath bene bought at B[urdeaux] yere, beyng the 20th [t]he fyrst peny, but also losses sustayned by case"

A roll of paper, mutilated at the top.

5110. For JOACHIM HOEGSTRE.

To be principal surveyor and master of all mines in England and Ireland.

Pat. 20 Hen. VIII. p. 1, m. 37 d.

Tit. iv. 147.

B. M.

2. Proposals of Joachim Hoehsteter to the King, for working the mines discovered in England.

Will go thither in person with six Germans who understand the work, and commence working with 1,000 men. States the best arrangements for paying the men, and deprecates unnecessary expence, to avoid which it would be advisable to adopt the agreement made between the Legate and himself. Advises the building of a foundry at Kumpmartin (Combe-Martin), under the superintendence of Maistre Pierre, and another German. Asks for power to levy men, if necessary, and for a prohibition of the men carrying weapons, on pain of losing a finger.

Fr., pp. 5.

5111. BISHOPRIC OF DURHAM.

R. O.

Grant to Wolsey, as bishop of Durham, of the manor of Hart and town of Hartilpole, Durham dioc., between the Tyne and the Tese, on 1528.

surrender by Henry lord Clifford of two patents granted to his ancestors by Edward I., by virtue of which they have collected the revenues of the said places, although the bishops of Durham have held royal rights there.

Draft, Lat.

R. O. 2. T. Strangways to [Cromwell].

* * * "And for and towards all these charges afore expressed, and in like manner for the charges hereafter to come, for finishing of the said works at Auckland, and also in recompense of my great pain and labor, and for my reward of all my service afore done to my said Lord, I can be content in form following," if his Lordship will agree to it:—1. "To take my Lord's interest of Bowys ward." 2. That my Lord make my kinsman, Dr. Strangways, his chaplain, and give him the benefice of Wearmouth, now in his gift. 3. In return, Strangways will be bound in 1,000*l.* to finish my Lord's buildings at Auckland, and will be always at his service without fee or costs, except if he be sent abroad or to war. Signed.

Pp. 2. Endd.

R. O. 3. "Instructions devised by my lord legate his Grace, for Dr. Strangwysshe, surveyor of Duresme, and Ric. Bellysis, Esq., and to be executed by them within his bishopric of Duresme."

(1.) To survey all lead, coal, and other mines, and make them as profitable as possible. (2.) To finish the new house and furnace which Wolsey has had built for melting and trying lead with sea coals. (3.) To urge the finers who have undertaken to melt the lead with sea coal to proceed as diligently as possible, without waste or loss of time, so that Wolsey may know what the profits and the yearly value will be. (4.) They shall lease the fishings at Berwick, and levy fines for them, including 20 barrels of salmon yearly during his life; (5.) and do the like with any other farms, fishings, or improvements that may lawfully be taken. (6.) Wolsey's ship of Tynmouth may be rigged and made ready. (7.) The finers must not lack any ore or other thing which they could allege as an excuse. (8.) My Lord's wards may be seized, and the profits of their lands taken to his use, and persons found to buy the marriages, word being sent to him who are the most profitable. (9.) No arrearages of farmers or tenants must be left unlevied. (10.) Mr. Bowes must be asked to be my Lord's escheator; (11.) and he must immediately proceed to find offices of all the wards, so that their lands and bodies may be ordered according to law, and my Lord may have all the profits of their lands and marriages. He wishes to be informed if there are any feoffments alleged to the use or performance of wills, or jointures, or if the mothers of any of the said wards are endowed after the customs and laws there. (12.) His attorney and other officers shall certify him, as soon as convenient, of all fines for alienations, amerciaments for nonsuits, fines on the sheriff for not returning or executing process, forfeitures, recognizances, waifs, strays, felons' goods and lands, deodands, &c., for the last six years, that he may know the yearly worth thereof. (13.) Directly his ship arrives, it is to be laden with coals, and sent to his college at Ipswich.

Pp. 4.

R. O. 4. Wm. Frankeleyn's instructions to Rauf Hungate.

(1.) To deliver his letter to Cromwell, showing the trouble he had to borrow money, as the chief part is usually paid at St. Eleinnas. (2.) By the copy of the auditor's letter Cromwell will see how Frankeleyn stands with my lord (Wolsey) on his account ending Michaelmas last. After Easter the auditor will bring up the books, which are not yet ready to send. (3.) The reason why the remainder of money sent is no larger, is that enough lead ore has been provided to make 40 fodder of lead, and a great portion is employed in defending the waters in Howdenshire, without which the country would be drowned. Howdenshire was given to the bishop of Durham for that purpose. (4.) The cost of fining-houses and finers at Gateshead, with other repairs of mills and manor places, and the coals sent to my Lord's college at Ipswich. (5.) Hungate is to ask Cromwell to declare the above to my Lord. If he find fault with the Book of Reparations, the surveyor has perused and signed it. (6.) To cause Mr. Stubbs to sign and seal the acquittance devised by Bentley. None of the money must be used for any arrearages, except for the year ending Michaelmas last. (7.) The country is so poor from failure of corn and death of cattle for the last three years, that the arrearages of the last year of my lord Ruthal cannot be levied without "utterdoing" the country. Will compound with my Lord for it, and pay it himself by selling some of his plate and cattle. If Cromwell advises, will come up shortly to arrange with my Lord. (8.) To show Dr. Marshall the letter from Frankeleyn's brother concerning the corn, and the delivery of the timber at Whitbarne and Darnetone. The dimission of Fytam (?) in Darnton shall be made to him immediately as Frankeleyn promised.

1528.

BISHOPRIC OF DURHAM—cont.

Hol., p. 1. Endd.: Mr. Franklen.

5112. WOLSEY'S COLLEGE, IPSWICH.

R. O. "Re-solutions" of all the lands, &c. belonging to the manor of St. Peter, Ipswich, now named Cardinal's college.

Paper roll.

R. O. 2. Copies of the evidences relating to Wolsey's colleges at Oxford and Ipswich.

Pp. 140, of which 24 are blank.

5113. For the KING'S HIGHNESS.

R. O. 4 graven copper pillars, 9 ft. long. 4 angels to kneel at the head and foot of the tomb, ready gilt and burnished. 4 angels with candlesticks to stand on the said pillars. 4 naked children to stand at the head and foot of the tomb, with the arms. 2 pieces of copper with epitaphs. A tomb of black touch stone, 7 ft. by 4 ft., and 2½ ft. high. 4 copper leaves for the corners of the tomb. 12 pieces of black touch, and 8 of white marble, for the base of the tomb. A step of black touch. 7 pieces of copper wrought like cloth of gold. 4 small pillars for the corners of an altar.

Things to be ordered at the King's pleasure. The image of the Cardinal, gilt and burnished. 2 griphons to be at his feet. The Cardinal's hat, with 12 buttons and strings. 2 scutcheons with his arms. 14 scutcheons with his arms and those of his churches. 12 images of saints. A cross. 2 pillars.

Pp. 3. Endd. in a later hand: Cardinal Wolsey's monument.

R. O. 2. Another list of the same articles as above, and in addition: A white marble "chamynye." 6 clay figures, 7 ft. high, which should have served for Oxford. Jams and mantel for a white marble chimney.

For the above work I have received about 4,250 ducats, at 4s. 6d. a ducat.

"And moreover for to leave an inventory of all that doth appertain to the King's most noble grace, or ever I go to Florence, it rests in the house 4 pillars which was left of the altar of K. Henry VII., which were not sufficient to stand to the weight of the said altar, which Master Peter Torrygan had made of the said pillars, which appertaineth to the King's most noble grace."

Pp. 2.

1528.

5114. JEWELS.

R. O.

List of jewels in certain boxes and coffers.

A finger stall with 13 rings, rubies, emeralds, sapphires, spyneys, &c. ; a blue heart of St. George, full of relics ; a gold tablet of St. Margaret and St. Anne ("delivered to 26 day. . .") ; an I.H.S. of diamonds, with 3 hanging pearls ; a goodly St. George on horseback, set with diamonds, and the dragon in pearl ; a ruby ring the King was sacred with ; 3 gold tergats ; 164 pair of aglets ; 75 Paris rings ; a gold siphus, garnished with 72 pearls ; a ship of diamonds, with a fair hanging pearl ; a hand with a rosebud hanging at a black lace ; a balas set in coletts, enamelled with margarets, a ruby and 3 diamonds, in coletts, a cross with 3 rubies and 2 diamonds, an M of diamonds standing in a flower, rings, a little margaret of gold, and silver gilt harness for a girdle (these were the Princess's tokens) ; a brooch with a gentlewoman luting, with a scripture above it ; 18 bars of gold, and 4 collars of gold to wrestle in ; a gold arrow ; the gold garnishing of a horn ; 11 hawks' hoods ; [two rings] joined together, and an odd ring [sent from] the Bastard ; in a little black coffer, given by the King to my lady Princess ; 2 collars of stole work, with lyalmes of silk and gold ; a leash of stole work, wrought with white roses, with silver and gilt buckles and pendant ; a crimson satin bag, embroidered with H. and K., and a girdle ; 2 white and green silk lyalmes, with collars, embroidered and stole work, gilt tyretts, bracers, and a hawk's hood ; a heart of gold, with a man and an antelope on one side, and a gentlewoman on the other ; a garter, with letters of gold, castles, and pomegranates, a ruby on the buckle, and a turquoise with a hanging pearl on the pendant ; 11 other garters wrought in the stole ; 15 gold coifs ; divers pieces of St. Awdray laces (struck out) ; a heart with St. George on one side, and St. Antony and St. Sebastian on the other ; a leash of red and white silk with a collar ; a white horn hanging at a green ribbon, garnished with gold ; another, at a green corse ; a silver gilt pinner and inkhorn ; a goodly bag, embroidered with an antelope ; a goodly hawk's lure, and 10 hoods ; a goodly prymer, with fair images well limned, and gold clasps with the arms of England ; another covered with crimson velvet ; a buckler dressed with silver and gilt, with the arms of England, castles, roses, and pomegranates ; a dagger, the haft coral, the chape gold ; a gold castle and a hawthorn ; a bundle of silver cramp-rings.

Within the gardevyande. A tergat of the Passion, &c. ; 2 Georges on foot, and dragons ; a George on a red horse on a mount ; a little round brooch, with a George on horseback ; a little token garnished with small pearls ; a carkeyn, with L and K ; a collar of olyvants of gold, with 3 pointed diamonds hanging to it, and Our Lady ; a little gold flagon for rosewater ; a pair of gold snuffers ; an Agnus of "stole" work ; a premer covered with green satin ; a pair of gloves, two pair of knives, and a maser, that were good king Henry's (delivered to the dean of Windsor) ; a silver gilt comb-case, with H and K ; a gentlewoman, holding a leyer in her hand, silver gilt, (delivered to Mr. Wyat) ; a lure, embroidered with a bear on one side, and a fountain, with 2 unicorns on the other ; a horn of glass, flewed with silver and gilt ; a proper shaving cloth ; a green silk leash ; a collar of garters that were the King's when prince ; 22 gold coifs, and 3 black silk and gold ; a coif with gold pipes, garnished with 27 small pearls and 1 great pearl ; a piece of a gown of cloth of gold, lined with crimson sarcenet (for the sacrament) ; a piece of arras of the Passion (delivered to the clerk of the closet) ; a dragon tongue, with a black lace at it (to the cellar) ; 2 greyhound collars with latten tyretts ; a corporax case and a goodly bag ; a gold whistle, with a black lace (delivered to the King) ; a brooch of St. Roche ; 18 hawks' hoods ; 6 garters of goldsmith's work ; 5 coifs, one having 12 pearls ; 9 pair of gold bells ; gold doghooks ; a register of gold ; a dial of latten (struck out); a gold hawk's hood, garnished with 6 rubies and 7 pearls; divers brooches and aglets, which were the King's when his Grace was prince (struck out); divers pieces of broken stuff that were the French queen's (struck out); 2 embroidered doublets; a Spanish purse with gold tassels, delivered to the wardrobe to Jas. Worsley; a carkeyn of gold, with all the King's devices, and a shield with a pillar at it; a painted leather bracer, with gold buckle and pendant; 2 crosses of Henry's making, Our Lady in one, St. George in the other; 2 carkeyns with a blue heart and a syphus; another with a blue heart and H and K; a chain of cable fashion; a gentlewoman's hand of gold, with an enamelled bracelet, set with 8 pointed diamonds and 4 pearls; 3 rings, diamond, emerald, and ruby, on her fingers, holding a red and white rose, with a balas in the midst; a dove standing on a mount, with a crown, and a ruby about her neck; a white greyhound and a dragon standing upon mounts; 7 trefoils with pearls; a silver gilt box, with the ring that married Henry VI. and his Queen (to the King); the keys of king Henry's box of Windsor (to the dean of Windsor); the garnishing that belonged to the King's headpiece, set with 52 "course balas," and 36 pearls; a carkeyn with 2 hands holding a heart, with a hanging pearl, given by the Queen; 2 pearls set in gymmewes; a pomander with ostrich feathers and red roses; 35 long buttons with H and E; a dymysent for a woman, of stole work, with a little chain, the buckle garnished with 12 pearls and 2 rubies; an eagle with a ruby between his feet; a tergat of the Passion, with Our Lady; St. George on foot, with a shield of borall; 3 pieces of gold with white greyhounds upon them; a silver gilt box for green ginger; a lion with divers garnishing, for the King's headpiece; another device for a headpiece, set with 3 square balasses, standing in a white and red rose, with branches of pearls; 7 trueloves of pearls; 2 flagons for rose water, of stone, garnished with stone and pearl; a great fourfold chain, with letters across it, one link wreathed, another plain, with a great whistle, garnished with one ruby, one lozenge diamond, and 5 other diamonds; a collar of the Towzon; a silver standish with H and E upon it; 54 black rolls of gold with a scripture; 53 white and 50 red rolls of gold, and others russet and blue; 5 valentines of goldsmith work; a coffer of borall standing upon open work, garnished with silver and gilt (to my lord Cardinal); (this item is struck out); a tablet of St. John Baptist; St. John's head in a dish; a white velvet bonnet, with a brooch of St. George, and 23 buttons; another of crimson satin, with a brooch of a ship, and 3 pair of aglets; 8th day [ann]o x^{mo}, delivered to Amadas, a buckle and pendant, with enamelled letters and studs, white and red, &c.; 2 crimson velvet bonnets, one with 12 pair of aglets, the other with 36 pair; a Milan bonnet, with 5 pair of aglets, and 3 pair of small buttons; a black bonnet with a brooch of the Maundy; another of russet velvet, with a brooch of the Salutation; velvet and silk hats; a shield with an oak; and many other items. At the end, "Visa." There are marginal notes of the persons to whom many of the articles are delivered; some are marked as "broken stuff," and others are crossed out.

1528.

JEWELS—cont.

Pp. 26, mutilated and defaced.

5115. STEPHEN VAUGHAN to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Since coming to Liesnes, we have surveyed the marsh lands, wood lands, &c., about the late monastery, the parsonages of Raynham and Alve-theley, a marsh called Colherberd in Essex, the manors of Bawdwyngs and Fulhams, and the ground beside Dertford, called Gamlyngams Brokes. None of the tenants of Lesnes can inform them about quit-rents, unless it be Pemsey, who has often refused them information. He and Sir Ric. Walden intend to defraud Cromwell of some lands which Pemsey alone knows about; for it appears by a book of sesse that there should belong to Liesnes 600 acres of 1528.

marsh, and they cannot account for nearly so many. People here are so obstinate, they were four days before they could get a man to show them the lands in Plumsted belonging to the manor of Fulhams. Would have come to Cromwell today, had he not sent for them. Will now depart immediately for Newyngton and Merdin. Ric. Swyft desires to know where Cromwell will stay, that he may prepare for his coming.

Pemsey has made Mr. Draper obstinate by telling him Cromwell loved him not.

Hol., p. 1. Add. : To his right worshipful Master Cromwell. Endd.

5116. CARDINAL'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

R. O.

"The names of the ministers of the chapel of Cardinal College, in the University of Oxford, departed from the said College without licence obtained;" sc., Sir Henry Medow, Chris. Leylond, Ric. Prince, Th. Loovell.

P. 1. Endd.

5117. WOLSEY'S COLLEGES.

R. O.

"Received of the revenues of the late monastery of Wallingford, a^o H. Octavi 20^{mo}."—Of John Purdon, 48*l.*, 16 June, for half-year's farm of Chobingdon parsonage, 53*s.* 4*d.* Of John Burgon, auditor, for a portion of tithe in Hertfordshire, paid by the prioress of Hallywell, 46*s.* 8*d.*

Liesnes : Of Sir John Norton, half-year's rent of the parsonage of Newington and Flashe Marshe, 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Of John Abell, part of fine, 10*l.*

Praye : 8 Oct., of Hen. Jakman, a quarter's rent of the manor and parsonage of Wynges, 8*l.*

Sandwell : Of Will. Gardynere, half-year's farm of Elsburge parsonage, 40*s.*

Thoby : Of Anth. Cavelarye, part of revenues of the monastery, 30*l.*

Tombrige : Of Mrs. Berney, wid., rent in Stokesby, 8*l.*

Wikes : Of revenues, 4*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

ii. Payments by Thos. Cromwell about the business of my Lord's college, from Mich. 19 to 20 Hen. VIII.—Rewards to clerks of Exchequer, and for signed bills, privy seals and patents for Cromwell, Mr. Croke, Mr. Byrton, and others. "For vellum and making great letters for my Lord his patents," 13*s.* For Cromwell's and Croke's costs at Hampton Court, 4 days, with 8 horses, 19*s.* 4*d.*

Expences about the finding of "offices" (inquisitions).—Costs of Cromwell and Croke riding to Oxford, and being there with 10 horses for 11 days, 13*l.* 12*s.* Cromwell's costs, riding with 6 horses for 20 days in Bucks, Beds, Essex, Suffolk, and Herts, 13*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.*

Rewards to escheators, sheriffs, &c. at the finding of the "offices."—To the escheator of Surrey, for finding the office of Rowholt and Godstone, 40*s.* To his clerk, 3*s.* 4*d.* To the undersheriff, 3*s.* 4*d.* To 4 bailiffs, 4*s.* To the escheator of Oxf. and Berks, for offices for Wallingford, Fredyswide's, and Littlemore, 4*l.* To the undersheriff, 20*s.* To the escheator's clerks, 6*s.* 8*d.* To the town clerk of Oxford, 6*s.* 8*d.* To 10 bailiffs "waring th'enquest," 16*s.* 8*d.* To certain criers, 2*s.* To the wife of Graundpounde, 2*s.* To the escheator of Bucks, at finding the office of Wallingford, 40*s.* To the undersheriff, 6*s.* 8*d.*, &c. To the same escheator at finding the office of Pray, 40*s., with payments to his clerk, under-sheriff, &c. To the escheator of Suffolk at finding the offices of "certain omissions," 40*s.*, with minor fees to under-sheriff, town clerk of Ipswich, &c. To the escheator of Essex, at finding "offices of the omissions of Blakamore, Typtre, Wykes, and Liesnes," 40*s.*, &c. To the esch. of Herts, at finding an office for Pray, 40*s.*, &c.

Costs of juries at the finding of the offices :—Dinner of one jury and their horse-meat in Surrey, 31*s.* Same for escheator, sheriffs, under-sheriffs, and 2 juries in Oxfordshire, 4*l.* In Berkshire, 45*s.* 6*d.* In Bucks, 48*s.* 9*d.*, for Wallingford. In Bucks and Beds,

* Originally written "St. Peter's and other."

1528.

WOLSEY'S COLLEGES—cont.

53s. 11d. In Gypswiche, for 2 juries, 4l. 9s. 10d. At Royligh, in Essex, 47s. 6d. In Herts, for Pray, 48s. 11½d.

Hire of horses and men to ride and give notice to the escheator and sheriffs. Horse and man from London to Oxfordshire, with the man's costs. 6s. 8d. Same from London to Bucks, 8s. 4d. To Suffolk, 6s. 8d.

For carriage of evidences from Wallingford to Oxford. Canvas, and maling cord, 14d. Man and horse from W. to O., 14d. Paper, 6d. 1 lb. wax, 8d.

Rewards to Mr. Croke's clerks for correcting my Lord's books, and writing offices.

Fees to clerks of privy signet, privy seal, &c. To Steph. Vaughan, for writing all the evidence and charters of my Lord's college in two great long rolls, 6l. 17s. 9d.

Expences riding down to Oxford, taking possession of the lands of Wyng and Walingforde. For himself, 7 horses and 6 men, for 11 days, 5l. 3s. 2d. To children and others present at taking possession, 17s. 2d. Cheer made to the tenants, 31s. 4d.

Cromwell's expences.—To Hert, for vellum, parchment, and drawing of great letters, 39s. 2d. Payments to Gerarde, Lymsey, Croke, Oxeley, and to Steph. Vaughan, for writing. To Mr. Jude, for silk and gold lace. For 4 lb. wax, 16d. For 18 boxes to put the charters in, 16s. 8d. For 3 baskets left at Ipswich to carry silk to Hampton Court, 5s. To my lord Chief Justice and Mr. Shelley's clerks, for making sure the benefice of Rudby, 20s. Boat hire to Hampton Court, and servant's costs to the More. For Paige's costs divers times to Hampton Court, 3s. 1d. For a car, 8d. For my costs at Hampton Court, 2 Aug., 3s. 4d.

To the prioress of Wykes, 30 Oct. — H. VIII., for her half-year's pension, 5l. To Rob. Joyner, for fines, 38s. For my half-year's fee at Mich., 10l.

iii. Money spent at finding offices for Sir Will. Compton's heir. For half a ream of paper, 2s. 6d. 2 doz. parchment, 7s. 4d. For 22 writs, 56s. To the escheator of London, 40s. To the secondary, 6s. 8d. To 2 serjeants, 5s. 4d. To one of the clerks of the counter, 2s. 4d. To the jury, for their cheer, 26s. 8d. Similar fees to the eschs. and other officers of Essex, Middlesex, Kent, and Bucks.

Pp. 13. With corrections in Cromwell's hand.

R. O.

2. Duplicate of the first two pages of the preceding.

ii. Enclosure in § 2.

To Mr. Cromwell.

24 yds. blue bawdkyn, at 17s. 23 yds. white bawdkyn, "florished" blue, green, and gold, at 14s. 24 yds. 1½ q. rich white bawdkyn, at 17s. 24 yds. white bawdkyn, flourished with red, green and blue, silk and gold, at 17s. 36 yds. coarse white bawdkyn, at 14s. 7½ yds. "satten fugury," at 12s. 28½ yds. cloth of gold, with red velvet church work, at 23s. 4d. = 140l. 7s. 3½d.

P. 1.

R. O.

3. Draft indenture, dated — 20 Hen. VIII., between cardinal Wolsey and Sir William Weston, prior of St. John's, by which the latter grants to the former the manors of Sampford, Littlemore, Horsepath, &c.

Paper roll; corrected.

R. O.

4. Indenture, dated — 20 Hen. VIII., between Lady Anne Seyntleger, widow of James Seyntleger, and daughter and co-heir of Thos. late earl of Ormond, Sir George Seyntleger, s. and h. apparent of the said James and Lady Anne, on the one part, and John Hygdon, dean of Wolsey's college in Oxford, on the other; witnessing that by the mediation of Sir John Fitz-James, chief justice of England, it was agreed that the said Lady Anne and George should acknowledge, by fine, all their rights in the lands of the monastery of Thykford, Bucks, in Thykford, Chechylley, Thykthorn, Newport-Pagnell, and other places named, to be the right of the Dean and Canons.

Draft, pp. 7, large paper.

1528.

5. Bargain and sale by Thomas Crumwell, of London, in the name of Wolsey, to Sir Peter Vavasour, of the manor of Baddisworth, Yorksh., made over to Crumwell for Wolsey, by Will. Bank, by indenture, dated 21 June 20 Hen. VIII. Dated — 20 Hen. VIII.

Pp. 7, large paper.

R. O.

6. Bargain and sale by William Banke, of Baddisworth, Yorksh., to Thomas Crumwell, of London, to the use of Wolsey, of the manor of Baddysworth, for [350 marks ready money].† Dated — 20 Hen. VIII.

Draft in Wriothesley's hand, with corrections by Cromwell; pp. 7.

Cott. App.
XLVIII. 71.

7. The Canons of Wolsey's college to Wolsey. Letter of thanks for his great munificence. Mention of the bishop of Lincoln and Dr. Stubbs.

B. M.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

Ib. 75.

8. Wolsey's college, Oxford, to Wolsey. Celebrating his praises in a high strain. Will use all their efforts that his labors in their behalf be not in vain. "Oxonie ex collagio (sic) tuo . . . [d]ivi Hugonis."

Lat., mutilated, pp. 3. Add.: "R^{mo}, &c. Thomæ card. Ebor. a latere legato.

Ib. 72.

9. The Canons of Wolsey's college to Wolsey. The only return they can make for his great liberality is by the gratitude and respect they show to him.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

Ib. 73.

10. The Canons of Wolsey's college to Wolsey. Everybody concurs in singing his praises. Wolsey's virtues have added glory to England.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

Ib. 74.

11. The Minor Canons of Wolsey's college to Wolsey. If Desiderius Erasmus was afraid, through Wolsey's magnificence, to write to him, or dedicate to him any of his productions, much more should they be. They will veil his praises rather than deteriorate them by their poor abilities.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

Ib. 69 a.

12. — College to Wolsey. Beg that he will not cease to exhort the King to perfect and ornament their college. Thank Wolsey for his singular munificence. As his house is frequented by the nobility and ambassadors of all countries, beg that he will suggest to the King that nothing redounds so much to his honor as the promotion of letters.

Lat., mutilated, pp. 2.

5118. [UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE TO WOLSEY.]

Cott. App.

49 b.

B. M.

" * * * munere sceleratus ille occubuit, cujus necis contra omne fas peracti sunt modo rei procurator noster ejusque commilitones, insatiabili oppidanorum invidia in nos scholasticos tuos." Beg him to protect their innocence. Are sure he will approve when he hears the whole circumstances. Who will be safe if men are allowed to do injury in spite of the magistrates? Who will repel their force, if it is not safe for the magistrates to put to death robbers, "repugnantes a casu," and whom they are unable to arrest alive? Shall those who plot death against the magistrates be allowed to live unpunished? Cambridge, postridie Natalis Subscribed: "[Add]ictiss. scolastici."

Lat., mutilated, p. 1; first leaf wanting.

Cott. App. 48.

B. M.

2. Thank him for his benefits. He is the only person to whom they ever have recourse in their troubles. "Contigit non adeo m R. D'ne, jussu vicecancellarii, excubiis nocturnis dedisse nostrum. A quo suo munere deturbatus est pro Davida hominem latrocinio, † Such were the terms as the draft originally stood. They are, however, crossed out, and a clause is added at the end, in which a blank is left for the consideration money.

1528.

[UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE to WOLSEY]—cont.

furto et homicidio (ut nia non o hunc fovebant cum hospitii ipsius nequam a[liq]uot tum vocant) oppidi, qui in academiæ contur sunt veriti procuratorem illum passim judicare potest Celsitudo tua . . .
qui ad pocula invitasset"

* * *

Lat., mutilated, p. 1. Add.: R., &c., Thomæ card. leg. et cancellario, &c.

Cott. App. 50.

B. M.

5119. The VICE-CHANCELLOR and UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE to WOLSEY.

In praise of his virtues, which have gained him the love of the King and the country, and the fame of which caused pope Leo to confer on him the cardinal's hat. Request his patronage in support of their privileges.

P. 1, mutilated. Headed: Sanctissimo, &c., Thomæ card. Eboracensi archiep. necnon cancellario, &c., vice-cancellarius Cantabrigiæ, &c.

5120. ELYN CAVALLARY to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Thanks him for his letter, and for the kindness he has shown her in her absence. Begs his continuance, for she had never so much need. To-night a servant of my lord's Grace, and a servant of the King, came to sequester such poor goods as her husband left. Knebworth, Thursday night.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To my very trusty friend, Mr. Cromwell. Endd.

5121. JOHN, COMMENDATORY of the MONASTERY of WYGMORE-LAND, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Dr. Marshall is trying to move him to resign, which he cannot lawfully do, as he is a bishop, and his abbey is in perpetual commendam. Is bound by his bull of consecration not to alienate his living without papal licence. Has offered all that is lawful, as the bearer will show. Asks his help in this matter, and also in that about which the bishop of Hereford has written to Wolsey. Sends a copy of his letter. Westminster, Monday morning.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To Master Cromwell.

5122. W. CLAYTON, priest, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Being absent on his Lord's business, requests Cromwell to remember his matter. Wishes Sir Thos. Breworth were named; he was lately in a contempt before my lord's Grace. Sends him a token, and my lord of St. Mary's charter, which he wishes written by Friday night.

Hol., p. 1. Add.: To Master Cromwell, besides the Friar Augustines.

5123. SUFFRAGAN BISHOPS.

Diploma of D.D. to Will. Ynold, of the University of Cambridge, granted by Will. episc. Auriensis (bp. of Oran ?),* vicegerent and commissary of Thos. card of York, legate.

Lat., pp. 3.

* Pegge gives, "Aurensis episcopatus in Africa sub arch. Carthaginensi;" also, "Will'us Howe episcopus Aurensis, 1526."

1528.

5124. SUBSIDY.

R. O.

A volume of receipts of clerical and lay subsidy.

The following is an analysis of its contents.

Lay Fifteenth and Tenth, granted 3 Hen. VIII.—(p. 108) Mich. a° 13. Lancash. 4l. 13s. 4½d.—(p. 180) Mich a° 18. Devon, 20l. Total, 24l. 13s. 4½d.

Receipts signed by More and Wiat.

Lay Fifteenth and Tenth, 4 Hen. VIII.

Mich. a° 10, (p. 21) Beds 13s. 1½d.Easter a° 13, (p. 106) Yorks. 35l. 11s. 1d.Mich. a° 13, (p. 109) Lancash. 6l. 13s. 10d.Mich. a° 17, (p. 188) Yorks. 10l.Mich. a° 18, (p. 179) Lancash. 2l.

Total, 54l. 18s. 0½d.

Receipts by Heron, More and Wiat.

First Clerical Tenth, granted 4 Hen. VIII.—(p. 3) Easter 9 Hen. VIII., Suff. 9l. 11s. 0½d.—(p. 118) Easter 14 Hen. VIII., Kent 5l. 4s. 2d. Total, 14l. 15s. 2½d.

Second Clerical Tenth, 4 Hen. VIII.—(p. 5) Easter a° 9, Suff. 5l. 12s. 2½d.

Third Clerical Tenth, 4 Hen. VIII.—(p. 7) Easter a° 9, Suff. 44l. 16s. 9½d.—(p. 27) Easter a° 10, Suff. 17l. 14s.—(p. 129) Mich. a° 15, Herefordsh. 2l. Total, 64l. 10s. 9½d.

Fourth Clerical Tenth, 4 Hen. VIII.—(p. 30) Easter a° 9, Lincolns. 20l. Warwicksh. 8d. Herefordsh. 18l. Suff. 213l. 5s. Norf. 140l. Shropsh. 40l. Worcestersh. 40l. = 411l. 5s. 8d.—Mich. a° 9, Worcestersh. 203l. 6s. 8d. Herefordsh. 9l. Hunts 78l. Bucks 30l. (p. 39) Middlx. (from the abbot of Westm.) 139l. 3s. 8d. = 460l. 0s. 4d.—(p. 41) Easter a° 10, Bucks 31l.—(p. 34) Mich. a° 10, Worcestersh. 120l. Lincolns. 58l. Suff. 130l. = 308l.—(p. 35) Easter a° 11, Suff. 176l. 6s. 8d.—(p. 36) Easter a° 12, Staffordsh. 10l.—Mich. a° 12, Staffordsh. 10l.—(p. 119) Easter a° 14, Staffordsh. 13l. 10s. 9d.—(p. 129) Mich. a° 15, Kent 7l. Total, 1,420l. 3s. 5d.

Receipts by Heron, Wiat, and More.

The Subsidy granted by the Laity, a° 5, Easter 9 Hen. VIII.—(p. 1) Shropsh. 21l. 10s. (p. 10) Warwicksh. 15l. 2s. 6d. Total, 36l. 12s. 6d.—(p. 1) Easter 10 Hen. VIII. Shropsh. 2l. 0s. 4d.—(p. 11) Mich. 10 Hen. VIII. Lancash. 17l. 3s. 4d. Suff. 12d.—Easter 11 Hen. VIII. Suff. 18d.—Mich. 11 Hen. VIII. Surrey 12d.—(p. 178) Mich. 18 Hen. VIII. Lancash. 2l. 15s. 4d.—Mich. 19 Hen. Suff. 27l. 15s. 4d. Total, 86l. 9s. 4d.

The receipts by Heron and Sir Henry Wiat.

Lay Fifteenth and Tenth, granted 5 Hen. VIII.

Mich. a° 17. (p. 188) Bedfordsh. 4l.

The receipt signed by Sir Henry Wiat.

Lay Subsidy 6 Hen. VIII.—(p. 16) Easter a° 9, Warwicksh. 55l. 0s. 4d. Gloucestersh. 60l. 2s. West Riding of York, 83l. 0s. 8d. Sussex 25l. = 223l. 3s.—Mich. a° 9. East Riding, 15l. 14s. 2d.—(p. 116) Easter a° 13. Suff. 10l. 0s. 4d.—(p. 128) Mich. a° 15. Warwicksh. 9l. 12s. 6d. Total, 258l. 10s.

Receipts by Sir John Heron and Thos. More.

First Clerical Tenth, granted 7 Hen. VIII.—(p. 43) Mich. a° 9. Berks 100l. Hunts 40l. Herefordsh. 13l. 6s. 8d. Worcestersh. 100l. Wilts 31l. = 284l. 6s. 8d.

(p. 45) Easter a° 10. Worcestersh. 40l. Suff. 103l. Bucks 28l. Warwicksh. 20l. Herefordsh. 9l. = 200l.

(p. 46) Mich. a° 10. Dorset 24l. 6s. 6d. Berks 33l. 6s. 8d. (p. 51) Dorset 24s. Suff. 110l. = 168l. 17s. 2d.

1528.

SUBSIDY—cont.

(p. 47) Easter a° 11. Middx. 69*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* Staffordsh. 40*l.* (p. 52) Shropsh. 15*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* Northamptonsh. 20*l.* Suff. 84*l.* Worcestersh. 20*l.* Kent 140*l.* (p. 54) Middx. 69*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* = 459*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.*

(p. 56) Mich. a° 11. Wilts 4*s.* 10*d.* Worcestersh. 40*l.* Hunts 50*l.* Derbysh. 50*l.* Bucks 40*l.* Berks 40*l.* (p. 62) Worcestersh. 120*l.* Suff. 90*l.* Wilts 20*l.* = 450*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*

Easter a° 12, (p. 49) Hunts 10*l.* (p. 64) Wilts 10*l.*

Mich. a° 12, (p. 23) Worcestersh. 86*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Hunts 73*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Kent 20*l.* Southwell 10*l.* = 190*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Easter a° 13, (p. 110) Suff. 30*l.*

Easter a° 14, (p. 123) Suff. 44*l.*

Easter a° 19, (p. 181) North Wales 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Total, 1,860*l.* 6*s.*

Second Clerical Tenth, 7 Hen. VIII. — Mich. a° 11. (p. 57) Suff. 140*l.* Devon 170*l.* 5*s.* (p. 65) Hants 20*l.* = 330*l.* 5*s.*

Easter a° 12, (p. 58) Wilts 40*l.* Essex 5*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* Sussex 16*l.* Suff. 80*l.* Kent 90*l.* Lincolnsh. 40*l.* Warwicksh. 24*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* Hunts 40*l.* = 355*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*

Mich. a° 12, (p. 60) Herefordsh. 12*l.* Northamptonsh. 20*l.* Lincolnsh. 40*l.* Hunts 40*l.* (p. 66) Hants 40*l.* Kent 60*l.* Beds 72*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* Cornw. 51*l.* 15*s.* 6½*d.* Lincolnsh. 20*l.* Berks 100*l.* Worcestersh. 100*l.* = 556*l.* 2*s.* 5½*d.*

Easter a° 13, (p. 112) Northamptonsh. 20*l.* Berks 25*l.* = 45*l.*

Mich. a° 13, (p. 113) Hunts 10*l.* Suff. 20*l.* Norf. 30*l.* London, 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* (p. 114) London 40*l.* = 166*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

Easter a° 14, (p. 122) Chesh. 5*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.* (p. 124) Northamptonsh. 60*l.* Hunts 20*l.* Norf. 39*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* Derbysh. 20*l.* Oxon. 11*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* London 66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* = 242*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.*

Mich. a° 14, (p. 126) Hunts 40*l.* Derbysh. 4*l.* Herefordsh. 14*l.* = 58*l.*

Mich. a° 15, (p. 130) Herefordsh. 5*l.*

Easter a° 16, (p. 132) Devon 3*l.* 13*s.* 9½*d.*

Easter a° 18, (p. 186) Sussex 24*l.*

Easter a° 20, (p. 260) Worcestersh. 46*l.* 19*s.*

Total, 1,833*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*

Receipts by Heron, More, Wiat, John Myklowe, and Sir John Cutte.

Lay Subsidy of 6*d.* in 1*l.*, 7 Hen. VIII.

(p. 68) Easter a° 9, Worcestersh. 77*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Hertfordsh. 40*l.* Lincolnsh. 306*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* Somerset 280*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* Derbysh. 20*l.* Staffordsh. 85*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* Notts 92*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* Bucks 230*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* Wilts 15*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* Norwich 130*l.* Southwark 232*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* Town of Northampton 80*l.* Kent 532*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Berks 217*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* Cambridgesh. 39*l.* Leicestersh. 24*l.* Suff. 220*l.* 10*s.* London 151*l.* Bedfordsh. 26*l.* 3*s.* Sussex 54*l.* 5*s.* Essex 40*l.* = 2,721*l.* 19*s.* 1½*d.*

(p. 73) Mich. a° 9. Hertfordsh. 182*l.* 7*s.* Suff. 46*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Beds 16*l.* 7*s.* Cambridgesh. 62*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* Gloucestersh. 46*l.* 12*s.* Essex 55*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* Sussex 53*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Shropsh. 12*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* Herefordsh. 18*l.* Wilts 40*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Worcestersh. 18*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* Leicestersh. 11*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Somerset 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* = 591*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

(p. 76) Easter a° 10. Northamptonsh. 80*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* Hertfordsh. 15*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.* = 95*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*

(p. 77) Mich. a° 10. Somers. 34*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Essex 53*l.* Yorks. 71*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* = 158*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

(p. 79) Easter a° 11. Yorks. 6*d.* Essex 7*l.* Shropsh. 14*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* = 21*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.*

(p. 18) Mich. a° 11. Suff. 14*l.*

(p. 19) Easter a° 12. Kent 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sussex 20*l.* Essex 9*l.* 10*s.* Gloucestersh. 10*l.* Suff. 27*l.* = 74*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

1528.

(p. 20) Mich. a° 12. Notts 41*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Suff. 19*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, Sussex 37*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Essex 9*l.* = 107*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*

(p. 117) Mich. a° 13. Lancash. 9*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* — (p. 127) Mich. a° 14. Dorset 4*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.*

(p. 131) Easter a° 16. Yorks. 20*l.* — (p. 132) Mich. a° 16. Yorks. 20*l.*

(p. 131) Easter a° 17. Lancash. 2*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* — (p. 187) Easter a° 18. Suff. 11*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

— (p. 185) Mich. a° 18. Lancash. 4*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* Cornw. 5*l.* — (p. 184) Easter a° 19. Cornw. 5*l.*

Total, 3,868*l.* 11*s.* 10½*d.*

Receipts by Heron, More, and Wiat.

Lay Fifteenth and Tenth granted 7 Hen. VIII.

Mich. a° 9, (p. 81) Wilts 439*l.* Kent 80*l.* Hants 148*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.* Norwich 20*l.* Cambridgesh. 409*l.* 17*s.* 3½*d.* Suff. 74*l.* Salisbury, 65*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* Essex 50*l.* Oxon 60*l.* Cambridge town 20*l.* Middx. 49*l.* Norf. 40*l.* = 1,454*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

Easter a° 10, (p. 85) Middx. 40*l.* 16*s.* 7½*d.* Cambridgesh. 46*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* Devon 160*l.* Suff. 25*l.* 7*s.* 0½*d.* Oxon 100*l.* Staffordsh. 140*l.* Kent 140*l.* Lincolnsh. 7*s.* 0½*d.* Hertfordsh. 37*l.* = 708*l.* 11*s.* 10½*d.*

Mich. a° 10, (p. 87) Oxon 57*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Essex 8*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Kent 18*l.* 2*s.* 8½*d.* Sussex 76*l.* Northamptonsh. 98*l.* Berks 40*l.* Norwich 60*l.* 7*s.* Dorset 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Staffordsh. 15*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* Town of Cambridge 33*l.* 5*s.* 7½*d.* Wilts 68*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Lincolnsh. 80*l.* Southampton town 16*l.* Gloucestersh. 72*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.* = 727*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.*

Easter a° 11, (p. 90) Berks 175*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* Sussex 131*l.* 16*s.* 10½*d.* Hants 48*l.* Southampton town 30*l.* 10*s.* Staffordsh. 4*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.* Yorks. 79*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Hertfordsh. 23*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* Essex 68*l.* Warwicksh. 100*l.* Lincolnsh. 98*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* Somerset 60*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Wilts 45*l.* 3*s.* 8½*d.* Notts 48*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* = 636*l.* 9*s.*

Mich. a° 11, (p. 101) Warwicksh. 50*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* Dorset 49*l.* Yorks. 8*l.* Lincolnsh. 40*l.* = 147*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*

Easter a° 12, (p. 102) Gloucestersh. 16*l.* Essex 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* = 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*

Easter a° 13, (p. 104) Yorks. 6*l.*

Mich. a° 17, (p. 188) Gloucestersh. 6*l.*

Mich. a° 19, (p. 179) Yorks. 35*l.* 18*s.*

Total, 3,729*l.* 18*s.* 6½*d.*

Receipts by Heron, More, and Wiat.

The Lay Subsidy granted 14 Hen. VIII,

Mich. a° 15, (p. 133) Hants 1,081*l.* 6*s.* 11*d.* Oxon 63*l.* 6*s.* Kent 762*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Wilts 455*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* Lincolnsh. 295*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Windsor 43*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* Suff. 952*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* Surrey 261*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Anglia (the King's chamber) 310*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Somerset 751*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Norfolk 1,231*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Dorset 249*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* Hunts 158*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* Sussex 546*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Yarmouth 108*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Cambridgesh. 149*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* Berks 73*l.* Northamptonsh. 178*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* Salisbury 375*l.* 4*s.* Derbysh. 74*l.* 1*s.* 7½*d.* Devon 1,642*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* Essex 138*l.* = 10,188*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.*

Easter a° 16, (p. 145) Norfolk 94*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Yorks. 260*l.* 10*s.* Staffordsh. 74*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* City of Gloucester, 130*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* Hants 83*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.* Kent 467*l.* Suff. 398*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* Hereford town 102*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* Lincolnsh. 387*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* Worcestersh. 23*l.* Essex 77*l.* 19*s.* 9½*d.* Bucks 74*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Sussex 176*l.* 16*s.* 2*d.* Anglia (the King's chamber) 36*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.*; (the Queen's household) 7½*d.*; (the King's household) 2*l.* 16*s.* 3½*d.*; (the earl of Northumberland) 146*l.* Salisbury 19*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Berks 191*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* Oxon 130*l.* Nottingham town 49*l.* Surrey 56*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* Hunts 14*l.* 19*s.* Wilts 162*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* Northamptonsh. 272*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.* Rutland 161*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Dorset 48*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* Somerset 100*l.* Leicestersh. 26*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* Stafford town 13*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* Notts 1*l.* 18*s.* = 3,685*l.* 7*s.* 2½*d.*

Mich. a° 16, (p. 156) Essex 272*l.* 4*s.* Kingston-on-Hull 127*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Yorks. 352*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* York city, 187*l.* 4*s.* 2½*d.* Cornw. 22*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* Staffordsh. 45*l.* 9*s.* Hants 34*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* Oxon 72*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Surrey 18*l.* 11*s.* Kent 190*l.* 6*s.* 6½*d.* Lancash. 40*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* Worcestersh. 206*l.* 11*s.* Nottingham town 5*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Devon 268*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Hunts. 13*l.* 18*s.* 9½*d.* Herefordsh. 59*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* Hereford town 16*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Suff. 282*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*

1528.

SUBSIDY—cont.

Norf. 154*l.* 12*s.* 11½*d.* Notts 110*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* Winchester 55*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* Bucks 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Sussex 20*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* Lincolnsh. 94*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.* Wilts 20*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* Northampton town 19*s.* 8*d.* Beds 126*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* Exeter 45*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Anglia (the French queen's household) 11*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Northamptonsh. 57*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* Derbysh. 5*l.* (p. 190.) Middx. 48*l.* 16*s.* 5*d.* Wilts 446*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.* Anglia (the King's household) 200*l.* Cambridgesh. 282*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* Suff. 447*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* Kent 74*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Norf. 1,163*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* Hants 321*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Northamptonsh. 74*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* Anglia (countess of Devon) 53*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Bath 14*l.* Dorset 477*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* Somerset 263*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.* Sussex 315*l.* Town of Northampton 76*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Lincolnsh. 242*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* = 7,377*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*

Easter a° 17, (p. 172) Shropsh. 14*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.* Leicestersh. 6*l.* 10*s.* Northamptonsh. 36*l.* 0*s.* 4½*d.* Kent 51*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Lancash. 24*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Norf. 10*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* Derbysh. 7*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* Oxon 6*l.* 12*s.* Beds 21*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* Exeter 17*l.* 8*s.* Suff. 8*s.* Gloucestersh. 7*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* Staffordsh. 8*l.* (p. 197) Northamptonsh. 564*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* Norwich 400*l.* Notts 228*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* Dorset 448*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* Sussex 790*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* Hants 925*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.* Bristol 264*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.* Yorks. 550*l.* 14*s.* 11*d.* Norf. 857*l.* 8*s.* 11*d.* Leicestersh. 303*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.* Anglia (the King's household) 197*l.* 10*s.*; (Lord Willoughby) 33*l.* 3*s.*; (Sir Arthur Plantagenet) 39*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*; (Lord Audeley) 9*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*; (Lord Dudley) 21*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*; (the Queen's chamber) 90*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; (Lords Thos. Cobham and Edw. Clynton) 12*l.* 4*s.*; (the French queen's household) 13*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Rutland 63*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* Beds 119*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* Berks 707*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* Warwicksh. 50*l.* Wilts 420*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* Gloucestersh. 544*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Gloucester city, 214*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Lincolnsh. 289*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* Rochester 43*l.* 11*s.* Surrey 720*l.* 18*s.* London 821*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Worcestersh. 175*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* Derbysh. 79*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Oxon 168*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Kent 568*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* Suff. 1,233*l.* 19*s.* Somerset 457*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Staffordsh. 34*l.* Devon 268*l.* 6*s.* 10½*d.* Shrewsbury 94*l.* 1*s.* Hertfordsh. 150*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* Essex 533*l.* 18*s.* 11*d.* Middx. 279*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* Hunts 43*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* Bucks 13*l.* 5*s.* Shropsh. 73*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.* = 14,130*l.* 5*s.* 0½*d.*

Mich. a° 17, (p. 175) Yorks. 55*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* (p. 218) Leicestersh. 195*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* Worcester town 125*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* Shropsh. 32*l.* Essex 52*l.* 3*s.* 7½*d.* Kent 226*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* Yorks. 72*l.* Northamptonsh. 30*l.* 4*s.* 10*d.* Sussex 46*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* Surrey 43*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* Berks 19*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Gloucestersh. 135*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* Stafford town 12*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* Norf. 58*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.* Herefordsh. 65*l.* 14*s.* 3*d.* Hertfordsh. 60*l.* Suff. 235*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.* Wilts 115*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* Middx. 5*s.* 1½*d.* Norwich 100*l.* Rutland 42*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* (p. 233) Suff. 41*l.* 16*s.* Bristol 6*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Northamptonsh. 26*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* = 1,399*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*

Easter a° 18, (p. 176) Yorks. 2*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* Lincolnsh. 20*l.* Derbysh. 20*l.* (p. 223) Anglia (Wolsey's household) 48*l.* 15*s.* Hertfordsh. 59*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Lancash. 29*l.* 9*s.* Wilts 42*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* Beds 75*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* Suff. 21*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Norwich 56*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* Somerset 137*l.* Shropsh. 77*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* Essex 49*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* Yorks. 24*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Northamptonsh. 3*l.* 4*s.* 5½*d.* Derbysh. 40*l.* Oxon 87*l.* 2*s.* 11*d.* (p. 234) Surrey 14*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Lincolnsh. 18*l.* Notts 9*l.* 15*s.* Bucks 28*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* Suff. 71*l.* 6*s.* Hants 155*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* Northamptonsh. 31*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Somerset 36*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* Yorks. 43*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* Essex 74*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Sussex 25*l.* 7*s.* York city 3*l.* 18*s.* Norf. 52*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* Shropsh. 8*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* Dorset 4*l.* 11*s.* Derbysh. 13*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* Gloucestersh. 7*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* = 1,393*l.* 17*s.*

Mich. a° 18, (p. 177) Lancash. 81*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* (p. 227) Gloucestersh. 86*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* Somerset 235*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* Leicestersh. 20*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* Bucks 176*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* Warwicksh. 185*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Norf. 34*l.* 19*s.* Yorks. 191*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* Suff. 91*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Derbysh. 5*l.* (p. 238) Anglia (the King's household) 126*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*; (the King's chamber) 18*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.*; (the Queen's chamber) 20*l.* Staffordsh. 5*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Yorks. 13*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Warwicksh. 52*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* Essex 24*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* Hertfordsh. 17*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* Gloucestersh. 54*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* Oxon 17*l.* 11*s.* Wilts 80*l.* Notts 22*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* Herefordsh. 16*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* Norf. 123*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.* Kent 84*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* Suff. 71*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* Rutlandsh. 21*l.* 16*s.* Middx. 14*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* London 95*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* Leicestersh. 40*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.* Worcestersh. 9*l.* 19*s.* Sussex 12*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* (p. 246) Northamptonsh. 14*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Rochester 11*l.* 14*s.* Cornw. 9*l.* 15*s.* Wilts 30*l.* Suff. 34*l.* = 1,250*l.* 17*s.*

Easter a° 19, (p. 196) Berks 8*l.* 15*s.* London 19*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* (p. 230) Norf. 3*s.* 8*d.* Yorks. 18*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Shropsh. 17*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* Derbysh. 3*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* Suff. 86*l.* 13*s.* Somerset

1528.

193*l.* (p. 243) Hunts 12*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* Norf. 4*l.* 19*s.* Gloucestersh. 39*l.* 19*s.* 6*d.* Shropsh. 6*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Wilts 4*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* Kent 43*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* Lincolnsh. 22*l.* 8*s.* Staffordsh. 18*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* Somerset 30*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sussex 15*l.* Derby 20*l.* Anglia (the Queen's chamber) 29*l.* (p. 247) Gloucestersh. 50*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* Northamptonsh. 11*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* Wilts 285*l.* 2*s.* Surrey 39*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* Worcestersh. 14*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Suff. 193*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* Hunts 20*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* Somerset 15*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* Cornw. 21*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Herefordsh. 35*l.* 2*s.* Norf. 27*l.* 15*s.* Warwicksh. 16*l.* 2*s.* Kent 14*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Leicestersh. 5*l.* Middx. 40*l.* York city 28*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* Cambridgesh. 9*l.* 17*s.* = 1,359*l.* 14*s.* 1*d.*

Mich. a° 19. (p. 177) Anglia (the countess of Kent) 4*l.* (p. 232) Yorks. 6*l.* 17*s.* Suff. 90*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Anglia (the King's chamber) 32*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* Norf. 7*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* (p. 245) Suff. 21*l.* 9*s.* Cornw. 82*l.* Canterbury 29*l.* 17*s.* Sussex 10*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* (p. 251) Essex 99*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Suff. 119*l.* 13*s.* Surrey 32*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Kent 101*l.* 2*s.* 7*d.* Hertfordsh. 32*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Leicestersh. 8*l.* 13*s.* Anglia (the King's household) 70*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.*; (the King's chamber) 2*l.* 10*s.* Norf. 85*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* Lincolnsh. 103*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* Yorks. 2*l.* 9*s.* Wilts 31*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Northamptonsh. 1*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* Exeter 17*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Sussex 64*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.* Cornw. 12*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* Chichester 12*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* = 1,081*l.* 9*s.* 8*d.*

Easter a° 20, (p. 255) Norf. 12*l.* 7*s.* Northampton town 9*l.* 15*s.* Gloucestersh. 16*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* Kent 38*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* Norwich 94*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* Cornw. 11*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* Wilts 83*l.* 7*s.* Kingston-on-Hull 17*l.* 13*s.* (p. 261) Essex 8*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* Lincolnsh. 3*s.* 4*d.* Anglia (the Queen's chamber) 7*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* (p. 262) Northamptonsh. 20*l.* Yorks. 15*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* = 342*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*

Mich. a° 20, (p. 257) Colchester 28*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* Wilts 29*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* Kent 7*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.* Oxon 12*l.* 5*s.* Notts 3*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* Derbysh. 8*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* Gloucestersh. 121*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* (p. 260) Suff. 20*l.* Beds 70*l.* = 301*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.*

Total, 42,511*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*

Receipts by Wiat and Tuke.

5125. DEANERY of SOUTHWARK.

R. O.

George Wyndam, rector of St. Olave's, 63*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Christopher Lynam, rector of St. George's, 34*l.* John Farewell, rector of St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey, 14*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* John Farewell, rector of Camberwell, 20*l.* Thomas Martyn, rector of Streatham, 18*l.* Hugh Hudson, vicar of Tooting, 8*l.* John Griffith, vicar of Wandsworth, 19*l.* John Rosse, vicar of Battersea, 13*l.* Henry Robinson, rector of Clapham, 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Dr. Chalner, rector of Lambeth,* 40*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* John Rabone, chanter, at Lambeth, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Gregory Farewell, rector of Rotherhithe, 22*l.*

Lat., pp. 4. Endd.: Archidiaconatus Surrey.

5126. THOMAS CROMWELL.

R. O.

Award of Thos. Crumwell, of London, between Ralph Dodmer, alderman of London, and John Creke, merchant tailor, who have bound themselves in two obligations, dated 28 April 20 Hen.VIII., to abide by his arbitrament in matters touching the will of Will. Moncaster and certain bonds given to the said William by merchants of Bilboa.

Draft in Wriothesley's hand, pp. 7, with corrections by Cromwell.

5127. ACCOUNTS.

R. O.

Fragment of a memorandum book containing legal extracts and portions of accounts for 13, 17, 18, 19 and 20 Hen.VIII.

Pp. 17.

5128. MEDICAL.

R. O.

A posset for heat, and for swelling of the legs.

P. 1.

* Rector from 1527 to 1541.—Allen's Lambeth, 18.

1528.

5129. ST. MARY, WALSINGHAM.

R. O.

Decree of Wolsey, as legate, granting to Ric. Vowell, prior, and the convent of St. Mary, Walsingham, (considering that the universal devotion by which it was first sustained is now cooled by the perverse reviling of some and the pestiferous preaching of others,) the Augustine priory of St. Mary ad Fontes, Flycham, Norwich dioc., which has fallen into decay through neglect, and the possessions of which are adjacent to those of the former. Four resident canons must be maintained for the celebration of divine service. The prior promises to have daily mass performed for Wolsey, and to pay 10s. yearly to Ric. bp. of Norwich and his successors.

Lat., copy, pp. 3. Corrected in one place by Wolsey (?)

5130. YORK HERALD.

R. O.

Warrant to lord Sands, chamberlain, or Sir John Gage, vicechamberlain, and to Sir Thos. Wriothesley, Garter king-at-arms, to give T. B.,* late L[ancaster] pursuivant, his creation as York herald, vacant by the death of N. T.

Draft, p. 1.

5131. JOHN WELLDON, Chaplain, to CROMWELL.

R. O.

Requests him to get Wolsey to write to the bishop of Meath that, on the voidance of the archdeaconry of Kenlys, which Mr. Tigram is likely to resign for a pension, "his Grace will be ordinary ratione suæ legationis," and that it may be given to the writer.

Headed: To the right worshipful Master Crumwell, one of my lord Cardinal's council.

5132. JOHN GOSTWICK to [WOLSEY].

Cotton.
App. XLVIII.
99.

B. M.

Hears that Wolsey is in communication with the duke of Norfolk to purchase the lordship of Wyllyngton, in Bedfordshire, where Gostwick's family have been resident for 400 years. Begg that, when the bargain is concluded, he may for his ready money (sentence not concluded). Has spoken to Wolsey's treasurer, Sir Will. Gascoigne.

Hol., p. 1.

* According to Noble, Thos. Bysley, the only T. B. who appears to have been York herald, succeeded Ralph Lagysse, who died in 1528, and died at Midsummer in 1530. Neither he nor any other T. B. occurs as Lancaster herald.

7855

LONDON:
Printed by GEORGE E. EYRE and WILLIAM SPOTTISWOOD,
Printers to the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.
For Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Government
Publications

BINDING SECT. JAN 31 1979

Government Publications

